The other verdict reached by the jury was: "That Thomas W. Warner, Jr. made marks and interlineations upon Paragraph VI of the Will dated July 2, 1953, with the intention and for the purpose of revoking and cancelling only that portion of Paragraph VI of said Will which is so marked and interlined by him, and that the decedent was mentally competent to do so at that time."

By Paragraph VI of the will of July 2, 1953, decedent gave to Grigsby Stroud, the young son of a friend, $20,000; and to Evelyn Mae Miller (to whom, according to her testimony, he became engaged on Christmas of 1953) his house and furnishings in Reno, and $25,000 in cash.

At the time of the trial, said will had been marked in the following respects. The gift of $20,000 to young Stroud showed the $20,000 had a mark through it and the figure $5,000 was written above it. Also "21st" had been marked out and "30th" written above it to indicate the birthday upon which young Stroud was to receive his gift; and the gift to Mrs. Miller had a large "X" drawn across it.

By said will of July 2, 1953, the residue was left in trust for decedent's son and Jean Warner, his second wife, who divorced him and who is the mother of his son. Those provisions had not been marked in any way.

No verdict was rendered by the jury as to the actual date upon which either document was signed, and none as to testator's mental competence or freedom from undue influence when executing either the will or the codicil admitted to probate and later contested by appellant.

The jury did, however, find that decedent was mentally competent when he made marks and interlineations upon Paragraph VI of the will of July 2, 1953, and that he intended by said marks to cancel or revoke only the portion of said will marked by him.

The evidence is without conflict that decedent marked only the portion making the gift to Stroud, the "X" through the portion of Paragraph VI making the gift to Mrs. Miller having been placed there by Mr. Ruiz at a later date. Decedent so interlined the bequest to young Stroud on the same day that he executed the codicil dated January 27, 1955.

Appellant is mentioned in the will of July 2, 1953, and it is clear from the language thereof that decedent purposely failed to provide for her. Appellant was in no manner prejudiced by the court's revocation of its admission to probate of the gift to Stroud, or the codicil of January 27, 1955. Therefore, in the instant appeal reversal is warranted only in the event the trial court was in error in denying the revocation of the probate of the will dated July 2, 1953.

The jury having failed to reach a verdict as to decedent's mental competency or the exercise of undue influence upon him at the time of the execution of said will of July 2, 1953, the judgment should be reversed if there is in the record any substantial evidence to support a verdict or conclusion that decedent lacked testamentary capacity or was unduly influenced at the time of the execution of said will.

[3] As evidence of decedent's lack of testamentary capacity appellant relies upon the testimony of Evelyn Mae Miller "together with her affidavit in support of the motion for new trial". The affidavit was not before the court when the order denying the motion for revocation of the probate of the will was made and therefore it cannot be considered on the instant appeal from that order. We have carefully read and considered the testimony given by Mrs. Miller at the trial. A fair summary of that testimony follows.

Mrs. Miller once worked in a bar in Phoenix. She first met decedent in the early part of 1951. Thereafter, he remained in her home for about two years.

She accompanied decedent to the office of his attorney, Mr. Ruiz, one of the defendants and respondents herein, on two occasions in 1952—it could have been the early part of 1953; on the first such occasion a will was discussed and prepared while she waited; she was named in it as a beneficiary and it was executed by decedent in her presence; she saw decedent drink an alcoholic beverage in the office and presence of Mr. Ruiz on the second occasion, which was more of a social visit; they all had dinner at the Statler and decedent "drank an awful lot" and in her opinion became very drunk after the second visit to Mr. Ruiz' office.

She went to see the decedent after his accident when he was in the hospital at Needles in May of 1953 and she remained there with him "almost a complete month". At the end of May he was brought back to her home in Phoenix in an ambulance and she followed in her automobile. He was then bedridden in her home. "It was his back and spine which had been injured and his pelvis and one leg * * * His right side was completely paralyzed * * * He couldn't even sit up."

His first trip after the accident was with her when she and the decedent visited her parents in Prescott July 2nd to 5th inclusive of 1953. He was able to leave the automobile only on his crutches and with the aid of her father when they arrived in Prescott. There he spent most of the time in bed at her mother's home. The first time he left the home of the witness and went to Los Angeles after his accident in Needles was on July 30, 1953.

The decedent started a business known as Classic & Custom Cars in Phoenix about September, 1953. Mrs. Miller became secretary-treasurer of the corporation. Decedent was the controlling stockholder and the president. In her presence, he did "drink at the place of business"; he kept "it all over the place, in the body shop, in the sales room, in the offices, even in my office". She attended two meetings at the place of business called and presided over by decedent when he was very drunk some time in the latter part of 1953 or the early part of 1954; during the time that she worked for the company in Phoenix, decedent did not appear to be competent "when he was drinking".

In her home decedent, once when he was "very drunk", threw a sword at her and missed her and hit the door, making "a tremendous hole in it". He "mistook" her "for some one the night he threw the sword" at her. That was in 1952. During the time she knew decedent it would be easier to name the times when he was sober than the ones when he was drunk. When he was drunk he was slovenly, "he was dirty and he had no control over his organs or kidneys or anything and * * * no coordination with his arms or his legs or anything".

"Many times" she took decedent to "alcoholic institutions". She took him to "an institution in Phoenix called Catalina on four different occasions".

Decedent gave her an engagement ring at Christmas of 1953, and a bracelet, watch and another ring in 1954—the bracelet and the watch on a trip they made to Mexico City, March 29, 1954, and the other ring "when he returned from a trip to his home in Pasadena".

She resigned from her work at the Classic & Custom Cars in the latter part of 1954.

The following is copied from Mr. Ruiz' cross-examination of Mrs. Miller:

"Q. Now, do you recall—Apparently you recall the will where Mr. Warner left you his home in Nevada and $25,000 cash, is that correct? A. I believe that was it, yes.

"Q. And do you recall what he said about that will? Did he make any statements to you with regard to it? A. Oh, he merely said that if anything should ever happen to him that I should contact Mr. Trautwein or Mr. Ruiz.

"Q. And did he ever tell you that in that will he was disinheriting Nora Warner (the appellant)? A. No, he did not.

"Q. Now, were you present when that will was signed? A. Yes.

"Q. Was he drunk on that occasion? A. No, I don't believe so.

"Q. Did he appear to have his faculties on that occasion? A. He appeared to.

"Q. Now, I will show you Proponents' Exhibit G, and I will ask you to read the last paragraph of Paragraph VI. A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Have you seen that before? A. Yes."

The will then shown to the witness was the one admitted to probate and dated July 2, 1953. As hereinbefore stated, Mrs. Miller had testified that from July 2nd to the 5th, inclusive, of 1953, decedent was at her mother's home in Prescott and she was with him continuously.

She further testified that, after they returned to Phoenix, decedent took water therapy for about two weeks; that she helped him in and out of the pool and then he could use a cane instead of crutches; that she believed the will she saw executed was witnessed by "a girl that worked in the office" and Mr. Ruiz; and that decedent remained sober "from the time he had his accident (in May, 1953) until the time he left to come to Pasadena" (July 30, 1953).

Further testimony of Mrs. Miller is that she is almost positive that she was with the decedent in Mr. Ruiz' office in the "end of 1952. It could have been the early part of 1953", but she is "almost positive it was in 1952". She is positive that decedent did not "come to Pasadena the first of July, 1953". Her address is given in the will of July 2, 1953. She testified that she owned her home at that address for six years and lived there during both 1952 and 1953.

While there is considerable evidence that decedent was in Mr. Ruiz' law office on July 2, 1953, for the purpose of this appeal it must be assumed that Mrs. Miller's testimony was correct—or at least that the jury could have found it true. Therefore, the will of July 2, 1953, was not signed on the date it bears. Section 50 of the Probate Code of California sets forth the requirements for the execution of a valid will, all of which were found by the jury to exist as to the will dated July 2, 1953. Said section does not require that the will bear the date of its execution.

The testimony of the two witnesses who signed the will and of two lawyers other than respondent Ruiz, who were in the office where the will was prepared and also witnessed its execution, is that the will was so executed on July 2, 1953. Considering the jury's special verdict and presuming the truth of Mrs. Miller's testimony that decedent was in Arizona during the entire day of July 2nd, we infer, as the trial court must have done, that the will was prepared to be executed on that date, executed on a later date, and inadvertently the date was not corrected at the time of execution. The testimony of the witnesses to the execution of the will that decedent was then of sound mind and not acting under undue influence, therefore, remains undisputed.

Appellant, however, insists that she has proved that decedent was incompetent at times before and after the execution of said will, and that therefore it must be presumed that such incompetence continued between the instances proved.

[4, 5] It takes more than "mere guesswork and general conjecture" to support a finding contrary to the presumption that a testator is competent. In re Estate of Teed, 112 Cal.App.2d 638, 647, 247 P.2d 54. Evidence, as in the instant action, that testator was a "chronic alcoholic", that he has been drunk on various occasions, and that he has taken several "cures", some of which consisted of bed rest, massive doses of vitamins, and food, does not tend to prove testamentary incompetence unless it is also proved that the time of decedent's drunkenness coincided with the time of his execution of the testamentary document. In re Estate of Arnold, 16 Cal. 2d 573, 585, 107 P.2d 25; In re Estate of Powers, 81 Cal.App.2d 480, 482, 184 P.2d 319.

Appellant cites and relies upon the decisions in In re Estate of Fosselman, 48 Cal.2d 179, 308 P.2d 336; and In re Estate of Collin, 150 Cal.App.2d 702, 712, 310 P.2d 663, 670, in the latter of which Mr. Justice Fourt, speaking for this court, said: "Proof of testamentary incapacity and of the facts upon which a testator's state of mind depends is not necessarily confined to the exact time or moment of the execution of the will."

In re Estate of Collin, supra, affirmed on appeal a judgment admitting to probate a will dated December 19, 1951, and denying admission to probate a purported will dated October 24, 1952. That decision followed a finding that decedent "was of unsound mind and lacked testamentary capacity and was suffering from insane delusions and hallucinations from February 2, 1952, until his death on November 3, 1952". A reading of the eight-page summary of the evidence in that decision leaves no doubt that the finding of decedent's lack of testamentary capacity on October 24, 1952, is supported.

In Estate of Fosselman, supra, [48 Cal.2d 179, 308 P.2d 337] a judgment denying a petition for probate of a will and codicils was affirmed by the Supreme Court. There the trial court, sitting without a jury, found that at the time said purported testamentary documents were executed and continuously thereafter until the time of her death, decedent was "suffering from senile dementia and was of such mental incompetency as to render her incapable of executing a Will, and was suffering from an insane delusion", that the beneficiary named in the will was "an old family retainer * * * and was a very old friend", when actually she had known her only a few months and only as an employee. The evidence therein summarized supports the court's finding of testamentary incapacity.

No such evidence is called to our attention by appellant in the instant action, and a careful reading of the entire record fails to disclose any evidence of decedent's incompetence beyond his temporary incoherence and instability when drunk. All witnesses who knew him testified that he appeared to be competent when sober. Each of the attesting and other witnesses to the execution of the will dated July 2, 1953, was of the opinion that decedent was then sober and competent.

[6] In the absence of proof that the intemperate use of alcoholic beverages, however long continued the habit is shown to have been, has actually destroyed testamentary capacity, no presumption will be indulged that it has thus been destroyed. In re Estate of Putnam, 1 Cal.2d 162, 165, 34 P.2d 148.

In the instant action, as stated by this court in In re Estate of Garvey, 38 Cal. App.2d 449, 458, 101 P.2d 551, 555, "The evidence of overindulgence in alcoholic liquor as reflected in the record before us falls far short of the quantum required to establish the fact that decedent had become so weakened in his physical and mental powers that he was incapable of the testamentary act. In re Estate of Fisher, 202 Cal. 205, 259 P. 755; In re Estate of Putnam, 1 Cal.2d 162, 165, 34 P.2d 148. Neither does the evidence in the instant case of repulsive or filthy personal habits, ill temper and a disagreeable disposition constitute insanity or unsoundness of mind. (Citations.)."

[7] In the instant action, as in In re Estate of Garvey, supra, there had been interfamily litigation, and the family considered the will unnatural and unjust. As held in the Garvey case, decedent had a right to dispose of his property as he saw fit. Provision for his only son and his son's mother (his second divorced wife) and the disinheriting of his fourth wife, who was supported under a decree of separate maintenance and denied decedent the divorce he frequently requested during the last seven years of his life, is not such an unnatural or unjust will as could be considered any evidence of decedent's alleged testamentary incompetence. In re Estate of Garvey, supra, 38 Cal.App.2d at page 459, 101 P.2d at page 555. In re Estate of McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 33, 30 P. 101; In re Estate of Peterkin, 23 Cal.App.2d 597, 73 P.2d 897.

We have carefully examined the entire record in the instant appeal, and find no substantial evidence of decedent's mental incapacity to make a will. Nor does the record contain one iota of evidence of any attempt to exert undue influence upon decedent, or that he was at any time so influenced by any person.

The order and judgment from which this appeal was taken is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Charlie ANDERS and Clifford Jones, Defendants,

Charlie Anders, Appellant.

Cr. 2880.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 9, 1959.

Defendant was convicted of possession of marijuana. The Superior Court, Merced County, R. R. Sischo, J., entered judgment, and the defendant appealed. The Third District Court of Appeal, Peek, Acting P. J., held that where chief of police, who had stopped defendant's automobile because of traffic violation, saw a package fly out of the automobile, chief of police was justified in searching the automobile for marijuana, and that evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Searches and Seizures ⇐3(1)

Citation for a traffic violation does not justify search of automobile.

2. Searches and Seizures ⇐3(1)

Where chief of police, who stopped defendant's automobile for traffic violation, saw a package fly out of the automobile, chief of police was justified in searching the automobile for narcotics.

3. Arrest ⇐71

A search incident to a lawful arrest extends to person as well as premises under his control.

4. Poisons ⇐9

Actual finding of marijuana debris in clothing of defendant and in his automobile was sufficient to warrant inference of knowledge thereof on part of defendant in prosecution for possession of the marijuana. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

5. Poisons ⇐4

In order to sustain a charge of possession of narcotics, it is necessary to show knowledge on part of defendant. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

6. Poisons ⇐4

In order to sustain a charge of possession of narcotics, possession need not be exclusive. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

7. Poisons ⇐9

In order to sustain a charge of possession of narcotics, possession may be shown by circumstances as well as by direct evidence. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

8. Poisons ⇐9

In order to sustain a charge of possession of narcotics, possession shown may be constructive possession. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

9. Poisons ⇐9

Evidence sustained conviction for possession of marijuana. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

10. Criminal Law ⇐369(1)

Generally, evidence of other crimes is inadmissible.

11. Criminal Law ⇐1169(11)

In prosecution for possession of narcotics, alleged error in admission of evidence that defendant and companion had sufficient marijuana to make about 70 marijuana cigarettes, that price for marijuana cigarette was $1 in the area, and that defendant and his companion had in their possession some $94, $24 of which was in one dollar bills, on ground that the evidence was evidence of the selling of narcotics, was not prejudicial error. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

12. Poisons ⇐9

In prosecution for possession of marijuana, instruction that before defendant could be found guilty of possession, jury must find that he had possession of the marijuana and had knowledge of its presence and the narcotic character thereof was not erroneous. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

Patrick R. Murphy, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PEEK, Acting Presiding Justice.

The defendant Anders and his codefendant, one Clifford Jones, were found guilty of a violation of Section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code. Anders alone has appealed. The attorney who was appointed by this court to assist him on appeal has informed the court and the defendant that he finds no merit therein. The defendant who now appears in pro. per. has made three contentions, (1) that the court erred in permitting the introduction of evidence which defendant charges was obtained as the result of an illegal search and seizure, (2) that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the judgment, (3) that the trial court and the district attorney conspired to commit prejudicial error, and (4) that the court improperly instructed the jury on the elements of the offense charged.

The evidence shows that while Chief Young of the Atwater Police Department was driving in the vicinity of that city he observed defendant's vehicle moving at a very slow rate of speed and weaving back and forth on the highway, thereby impeding the normal and reasonable flow of traffic. Young stopped appellant's vehicle and parked his car behind it. Defendant got out of his vehicle and approached Young, who was standing by the left front fender of the police car. Jones, the codefendant, remained seated in the passenger seat on the right side of the vehicle. While Young was citing appellant for the operation of his vehicle without a permit and for violation of Section 514 of the Vehicle Code, Young observed a brown package leave the right side of defendant's car and fall to the ground. It landed near an oil can approximately four feet from the window on the passenger's side of the car. Young examined the package and discovered three cigarettes rolled in wheat straw paper and some debris which he determined to be marijuana. He thereupon placed appellant and Jones under arrest. The car was then searched and marijuana debris was found in the glove compartment. The search also disclosed a cigarette in a jacket owned by Jones. Upon his arrival at the Merced County jail, Anders was required to disrobe. The pockets of his clothing were then examined and like debris was found.

The basis for Anders' first contention appears to be that since admittedly he was stopped only for an alleged traffic violation and since no felony had been committed there could be no reasonable grounds to believe that defendant was the one who committed it, therefore the subsequent search of his car and his arrest were illegal.

[1–4] The citation for a traffic violation of itself would not have justified a search of the car since that would have had no relation to the traffic violation. But when Chief Young saw the package fly out of the car a situation then was presented comparable to that in People v. Sanson, 156 Cal.App.2d 250, 319 P.2d 422, where the arresting officer saw the two passengers appear to hide something under the seat, or as in People v. Blodgett, 46 Cal.2d 114, 293 P.2d 57, where the officer saw the defendant withdraw his hand from behind the seat. "The real criterion as to the reasonableness of a search is whether or not there has been the commission of a public offense in the presence of a police officer, or whether, under the facts, the police officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant may have committed a felony." People v. Soto, 144 Cal. App.2d 294, 298, 301 P.2d 45, 48. Applying the rule stated to the facts in this case, certainly Chief Young had reasonable grounds to believe that an offense had been committed. Furthermore, as stated in People v. Dewson, 150 Cal.App.2d 119, 130, 310 P.2d 162, 169: "It is well settled that a search incident to a lawful arrest extends to the person as well as the premises under his control." In that case the defendant was arrested under suspicion of dealing in narcotics and narcotics were found in his vehicle. It is also the rule that the actual finding of the narcotics in Anders' clothing and in the automobile owned by him was sufficient to warrant an inference of knowledge thereof on his part. See, People v. One 1940 Chrysler, 77 Cal.App.2d 306, at page 314, 175 P.2d 585.

[5–9] To sustain a charge of possession it is necessary "to show knowledge on the part of the defendant [citation], such possession need not be exclusive, and may be shown by circumstances as well as by direct evidence, and may be constructive as well as physical." People v. Magdaleno, 158 Cal.App.2d 48, 50–51, 322 P.2d 89, 91. Thus the finding of narcotics in and about a room occupied by the accused raises a reasonable inference that the illegal drug is his even though he may share the room with another. People v. Van Valkenburg, 111 Cal.App.2d 337, 244 P.2d 750. A like rule was applied in the Sanson and Blodgett cases, supra, where an automobile was occupied by others as well as the owner driver. It follows that the evidence was amply sufficient to sustain the judgment.

[10, 11] Appellant next contends that it was prejudicial error for the court to allow testimony that he and Jones had sufficient "makings" for about 70 marijuana cigarettes; that the going price in that area was one dollar per cigarette and that he and Jones had in their possession some $94, $24 of which was in one dollar bills, the balance in larger amounts. It is argued that such evidence was inadmissible in that it only tended to prove another crime such as the selling of narcotics, while here defendants were only charged with possession. It is generally true that evidence of other crimes is inadmissible, but even if it be assumed that it was error to admit the evidence, certainly under the facts herein it cannot be held to have been prejudicially erroneous. See, People v. Toms, 163 Cal.App.2d 123, 329 P.2d 90.

[12] Defendant's final contention is that the jury was improperly instructed as to the element of knowledge of the offense charged. The instruction was given in the language of CALJIC 703. It is quite apparent from the reading of that instruction that the court properly instructed the jury that before defendant could be found guilty of possession the jury must find that he had possession of the narcotic and had knowledge of its presence and the narcotic character of the article alleged possessed by the defendant. We find nothing erroneous in said instruction.

The judgment is affirmed.

Jess E. METCALF, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

J. W. SHAMEL, Lite Products Sales, Inc., a corporation, J. G. Moser, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 23223.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 7, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 27, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Action to foreclose pledge securing payment of corporation's indebtedness to plaintiff. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, A. A. Scott, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held, inter alia, that counterclaim, for damages alleged to have resulted from purported diversion of corporate business to organizations owned and controlled by plaintiff, sought, in effect, recovery for benefit of corporation and that proceeding on such counterclaim was therefore in nature of a shareholder's derivative suit, and that counterclaimant had no constitutional right to trial by jury on issues of counterclaim.

Affirmed.

1. Corporations ⇐123(24)
Novation ⇐12

In action to foreclose pledge of corporate shares, securing payment of corporation's indebtedness to plaintiff, evidence would not sustain defendants' contention that letter had modified pledge agreement and changed status of plaintiff from that of a creditor to a shareholder or defendants' alternative contention that a novation had occurred.

2. Corporations ⇐123(24)

In action to foreclose pledge of corporate shares, securing payment of corporation's indebtedness to plaintiff, evidence would not sustain defendants' contention that plaintiff had breached his duty to corporation as a director thereof. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 820, 821, 824, 825, 3901.

3. Corporations ⇐123(24)

In action to foreclose pledge of corporate shares, securing payment of corporation's indebtedness to plaintiff, evidence would not sustain defendants' contention that pledge agreement had been discharged by subsequent inconsistent security agreement.

4. Jury ⇐14(1)

In action to foreclose pledge of corporate shares, securing payment of corporation's indebtedness to plaintiff, counterclaim for damages alleged to have resulted from purported diversion of corporate business to organizations owned and controlled by plaintiff, sought, in effect, recovery for benefit of corporation and proceeding thereon was in nature of the shareholder's derivative suit, and counterclaimant had no constitutional right to trial by jury on issues of counterclaim.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment that there was owing to plaintiff Jess E. Metcalf the principal sum of $51,624.20 plus interest on account of the indebtedness of defendant Lite Products Sales, Inc., (hereinafter called Products); that said indebtedness constituted a lien upon the 49% of the 500 shares of the capital stock of defendant Products owned by the defendant J. W. Shamel; and that said lien and pledge be foreclosed by the sale of all right, title and interest of defendant Shamel in and to said shares of the capital stock of Products or so much thereof as shall be necessary to defray the costs and expenses of sale and costs of suit to satisfy the said indebtedness out of the proceeds thereof, paying the balance of any proceeds to defendant Shamel.

The defendant J. G. Moser is an attorney and the pledgeholder of the capital stock of Products. His answer is in effect a disclaimer, and he is a nominal party only insofar as this appeal is concerned.

Shamel pleaded that the pledge, if ever made, was either invalid or had been terminated or superseded; that no debt was outstanding for said pledge to secure; and that in the transactions surrounding the giving of the pledge, Metcalf had defrauded Shamel and was not in court with clean hands.

The trial court heard considerable testimony (including expert testimony), received into evidence many exhibits, including many documents prepared by certified public accounts, and made extensive findings of fact, the more significant of which are set forth below in a footnote.[1]

[1]. 12. On and subsequent to August 3, 1951, to and including June 1, 1953, Metcalf loaned to Products at various times and in various amounts a total of $298,421.06, evidenced by promissory notes bearing interest at the rate of 4% per annum, compounded annually, as follows:

Date	Amount of Loan
August 3, 1951	$ 10,000.00

14. As of June 29, 1955, Products, for valuable consideration, executed and Metcalf accepted a chattel mortgage of assets of Products to secure the repayment to Metcalf of the last $115,377.12 principal amount of said loans made by Metcalf as aforesaid. Plaintiff has elected to exclude the said portion of said loans from the debt secured by said agreement of August 3, 1951.

15. In accordance with said election, and after deducting all repayments, the unpaid principal amount of said indebtedness, including compounded interest, that is secured by said agreement of August 3, 1951, as of January 31, 1957, is $51,624.20. Said amount bears interest at the rate of 4% per annum compounded annually. Simple interest accrued thereon to and including January 31, 1957, is $2,591.93.

18. That said letter agreement of April 30, 1952 was not intended by either Metcalf or Shamel at the time it was made to take the place of or to amend or modify the said agreement of August 3, 1951, and it did not do so.

19. As between the parties hereto, Metcalf is the owner of 51% and Shamel is the owner, subject to said pledge, of 49% of the outstanding stock of Products and, in like percentages and on said condition, of the preemptive right to any stock of Products or Rental hereafter issued.

44. Separate records and books of account were kept for each of the three corporations in accordance with standard bookeeping and accounting practices and reflect the business transactions of said corporations, including all transactions between and among the said corporations and transactions between each of the said corporations and Metcalf and Shamel. Said records and books of account have at all times from an including March 31, 1953, been kept under the general supervision of Rubin, Rosman & Borak, certified public accountants.

45. The prices charged to Flasher and credited to Products and Rental, respectively, for property of Products and Rental that was purchased, rented or otherwise acquired by Flasher were fair and reasonable. The prices charged to Products and Rental, respectively, and credited to Flasher for property and services acquired or received by Products and Rental from Flasher were fair and reasonable.

52. Said general accounting of January 31, 1956, was properly conducted and the accounts struck as the result thereof were fair to all of the parties involved and accurately reflected the transactions between and among said parties.

Appellants have not contended that the findings of fact and conclusions of law were not sufficient to support the judgment; nor have they contended that there was no legally sufficient evidence to support the findings. In this respect appellants are to be commended because our own independent review of the transcript and exhibits has indicated that as to almost everything which occurred from and after January 1, 1952, the evidence is to some extent and in varying degrees, conflicting.

The Supreme Court in Smith v. Bull, 50 Cal.2d 294, 325 P.2d 463, recently had occasion to consider some problems which are in many respects similar to those involved in the present case. In the Smith case, supra, there was an action by the representative of the estate of a deceased partner against a surviving partner for an accounting and the court said (50 Cal.2d 53. As a result of said general accounting it was determined, and it is the fact, that as of January 31, 1956, Flasher owed the sum of $41,405.45 to Products. Said obligation was discharged by the assumption by Flasher of $41,405.45 of the indebtedness of Products to Metcalf. After said assumption of debt the amount of debt principal owing by Products to Metcalf as of January 31, 1956, was $174,492.17.

55. Neither Metcalf nor the directors of Products or Rental failed to disclose to one another or to Shamel any information relative to the business of Products and Rental or their or his interests therein. All information on those subjects possessed by Metcalf and any of the directors of Products and Rental was at all times available to Shamel.

58. Metcalf discharged fully and did not violate any duty owed by him, as a director or officer of Products or Rental, to either of said corporations or to the shareholders, directors or officers thereof.

59. Neither Metcalf nor Flasher used their relations with Products or Rental, or both, to acquire or exercise any unfair advantage over either or both of said corporations or to deprive either or both of them of any business opportunity.

60. The accounting policies of Products and Rental throughout the existence of said corporations have been reasonable, consistent with good accounting practice and not detrimental to the interests of any defendant or Rental.

63. It is not true that plaintiff wrongfully refused to perform or be bound by any agreement or wrongfully evicted the defendant Shamel or refused to permit him to participate in any manner in the determination of policy or the management or control of any business.

64. It is not true that the defendants, or any of them, were prevented by plaintiff from performing their part, or any part, of any agreement or agreements or from repaying any sum or sums advanced by plaintiff in connection with any business.

65. It is not true that the plaintiff at any time wrongfully or with intent to defraud the defendants, or any defendant, or any person whomsoever, organized several, or any, other business concern or concerns, or with intent to defraud or wrongfully cheat and deprive the defendants, or any defendant, or any person whomsoever, of any income diverted all or any portion of any business income or profit to any other organization or organizations whatsoever.

67. It is not true that plaintiff comes into this Court with unclean hands or contra bones mores or is attempting to use this Court in furthering a design or policy not countenanced or permitted by this or any other court of equity, or that plaintiff is precluded from requesting any relief from this Court.

68. It is not true that on or about April 30, 1952, or at any other time, the plaintiff obtained from defendant Shamel an instrument in writing modifying or changing any previous argeement or agreements between said parties.

70. It is not true that the plaintiff performed any act, or omitted to perform any act, in any transaction or circumstance relevant to this cause, with malice or with fraudulent intent.

71. It is not true that pursuant to any malicious or fraudulent intent plaintiff diverted any business, custom or trade of the defendants, or any of them, or of Rental, to any new business, organization or organizations owned or controlled by the plaintiff.

73. It is not true that as a result of any malicious, unlawful or fraudulent conduct on the part of the plaintiff all or any of the custom or trade of the defendants, or any of them, or of Rental, was lost or transferred to any organization or organizations owned or controlled by the plaintiff.

at page 305, 325 P.2d at page 470), "The weight of the evidence, and the credibility of the witnesses, are matters for the trier of fact. * * * Whether or not defendant was guilty of appropriation and conversion of firm assets, including the goodwill thereof, was a question of fact; * * * The trial court determined the issues here involved adversely to the defendant. When there is substantial evidence or any inference to be drawn from the evidence to support the findings of the trial court, an appellate court will not make determinations of factual issues contrary to those made by the trier of fact. (In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689; In re Estate of Teel, 25 Cal.2d 520, 527, 154 P.2d 384; Ambriz v. Petrolane Ltd., 49 Cal.2d 470, 477, 319 P.2d 1.)"

In their opening brief, appellants have made various contentions including, among others, that the pledge of stock is being held for loans that preceded the pledge agreement and for loans made by Metcalf to companies which he controlled and from which Shamel had been ousted. Finding 12 specifically sets forth the loans made by Metcalf to Products in the total sum of $298,421.06, covering the period from August 3, 1951 (the date of the pledge agreement) to and including June 1, 1953. Finding 14 specifically sets forth that the last $115,377.12 of said loans was excluded by Metcalf from the pledge agreement, leaving the amount of the judgment as the balance secured by said pledge agreement, as set forth in Finding 15.

[1] The appellants further contend that the aforementioned pledge agreement was modified by a letter dated April 30, 1952, which letter it is asserted changed the status of Metcalf from that of a creditor to a shareholder, or, in the alternative that a novation occurred by the letter agreement of April 30, 1952. In Findings 18 and 68 the effect of the letter of April 30, 1952 was determined adversely to appellants' contention and under the circumstances existing in this case we are bound by that factual determination. In addition, Finding 19 determines that, as between the parties to this action, Metcalf is the owner of 51% of the outstanding stock of Products and that Shamel is the owner, subject to said pledge, of 49% of the outstanding stock of Products.

Appellants have protested many items pertaining to the accounting procedures which were used and to the conclusions drawn from the conflicting evidence adduced. In Findings 44, 45, 52, 53, and 60 the trial court, based upon competent evidence, determined that the accounting policies followed were reasonable, consistent with good accounting practice and not detrimental to the interests of any defendant; that the books of account were properly kept and accurately reflected the transactions between and among the parties, and that the prices indicated thereon for properties, goods and services were fair and reasonable. Under such circumstances this Court is not empowered to redetermine such factual matters (even if we were so minded) as to the reasonableness of the accounting policies followed, the accuracy of the books of account in reflecting the transactions between and among the parties, or the fairness or reasonableness of the prices paid for property and services involved.

[2] Appellants also claim that Metcalf breached his duty to Products as a director thereof. In Findings 55, 58, 59, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 70, 71 and 73, it was determined that as to specific matters in issue, Metcalf exercised his powers in good faith and with a view to the best interests of the corporation, as required by Corporations Code, section 821. This court has had occasion in recent cases to comment upon the fiduciary obligation owed by corporate directors to the corporation. See, Crespinel v. Color Corp. of America, 160 Cal.App.2d 386, 325 P.2d 565, and Chase v. Super-Cold Corp., 163 Cal.App.2d 83, 328 P.2d 812. Suffice it to say that the evidence presented in the trial court was conflicting, and that the trial court upon legally sufficient and competent evidence determined that Metcalf exercised his powers in good faith and with a view to the best interests of the corporation.

Appellants also filed a supplemental brief in which it is contended that Metcalf was guilty of such improper conduct that as a matter of law he is without clean hands or any standing in any court of equity. Appellants then argue from an assumed premise, which is directly contrary to the Findings of Fact, that Metcalf clearly violated the protective mandate of Corporations Code, sections 820, 824, 825 and 3901, and appellants then reach the conclusion, denominated as inescapable, that, "as a matter of law, the hands of Mr. Metcalf are rendered 'unclean.'" Appellants in effect are restating their interpretation of the facts, as might have been proper in the trial court. However, they have made no claim that there was no substantial evidence to support the trial court's contrary findings; and we are of the opinion that there was sufficient substantial evidence to sustain them.

[3] In their supplemental brief appellants also contend "the security agreement of August 3, 1951, under which this action was brought, was discharged by the subsequent inconsistent security agreement of April 30, 1952, thereby destroying the right of foreclosure contained in the earlier agreement." With respect to this contention, the contrary findings by the trial court in our opinion are based upon and supported by competent evidence.

Appellants in their supplemental brief further assert "the balance the trial court determined to be due is completely erroneous; it is based upon improper charges; and it exceeds a limiting amount stated in a pre-trial agreed statement of facts." Again, the arguments presented in connection therewith are of a type which properly should have been addressed to the trial court, and we are not at liberty to consider them. After a careful review of the entire transcript we have concluded that even if it were to be conceded that any errors were made by the trial court in the admission of evidence pertaining to loans made, in view of Finding 14, it would necessarily follow that such errors were not of a sufficiently substantial nature to warrant a reversal therefor.

[4] Appellants' final contention is that appellant Shamel "was deprived of his constitutional right to a trial by jury on the issues of the counterclaim." The minutes of the proceedings in the trial court under date of May 7, 1957 (the day the cause was called for trial), indicate "Plaintiff's motion for a trial without a jury or for trial of the equitable issues first and the ruling on the motion for a non-jury trial is deferred until the conclusion of the trial of the equitable issues." As we read the pleading denominated "Amended Counter Claim" which by stipulation was deemed to be a cross-complaint, damages are alleged to have resulted from a purported diversion of corporate business to organizations owned and controlled by Metcalf. In effect recovery was sought for the benefit of the corporation and the action was in the nature of a shareholder's derivative suit. Under such circumstances, appellant Shamel had no constitutional right to a trial by jury on the issues of the counterclaim.

The judgment is affirmed.

Jerome J. LALA and Rose Lala, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Jerome S. MAIORANA and Margaret A. Maiorana, also known as Margaret Becker, State of California, United States of America, Doe I, Doe II, Doe III and Doe IV, Defendants.

State of California and Division of Labor Law Enforcement of the State of California, Respondents.

Civ. 23320.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 5, 1959.

Action for a judicial declaration that plaintiffs owned realty free and clear of all claims and liens asserted by defendants. From a judgment, as modified by the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., so as to declare that realty was subject to liens recorded by creditors of plaintiffs' grantees, plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that where realty was conveyed to a veteran and another in order to obtain loan thereon under Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, § 501 as amended 38 U.S.C.A. § 694a, for benefit of grantors who had never served in armed forces, such realty, though held in trust by grantees for benefit of grantors, was subject to liens recorded by state and division of labor law enforcement as creditors of grantees.

Judgment affirmed.

1. New Trial ⇐164

Statute authorizing court to change or add to the "findings" and modify judgment, in ruling on motion for new trial in cause tried without a jury, presents an innovation in court procedure, and, though it does not expressly provide for correction of conclusions of law, quoted term, as used therein, is reasonably synonymous with the phrase "findings of fact and conclusions of law" and hence authorizes correction of conclusions of law. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 662, 663.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Finding".

2. New Trial ⇐164

Conclusion as to existence of liens upon realty was in effect a finding as to indebtedness of realty for and in the amount of such liens, which, though denominated as a conclusion of law, was the statement of an ultimate fact within purview of statute authorizing court to change or add to the findings in ruling on motion for new trial in a cause tried without a jury. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 662, 663.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1170(10)

Legal effect of finding that conveyance of realty in order to obtain a loan thereon by virtue of status of grantee as a former serviceman was tainted with illegality was a question of law, and hence where cause was tried without a jury, any error in deleting, on motion for new trial, conclusion as to nonavailability of such defense and inserting new conclusion that realty was subject to liens of state and Division of Labor Law Enforcement as creditors of grantees did not result in any miscarriage of justice, since a second trial of cause would necessarily have resulted in a similar judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 662, 663; West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

4. New Trial ⇐164

In action tried without a jury, resulting in judicial declaration that plaintiffs were owners of realty free and clear of all claims and liens asserted by defendants, trial court had authority under statute to modify judgment so as to declare that plaintiffs' title to realty was held subject to liens recorded by state and Division of Labor Law Enforcement. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 662, 663.

5. New Trial ⇐164

Where order denying motion for new trial was signed, filed and entered and expressly specified in what respects conclusion of law, theretofore filed, was corrected, directed that judgment be entered accordingly, and expressly set forth the respects in which judgment, also theretofore filed, was modified, making specified changes in conclusion of law and judgment by interlineation without signing and filing new findings of fact and conclusions of law did not result in any procedural error or abuse of discretion. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 662, 663.

6. New Trial ⇐163(1)

Where original findings and judgment and order denying a new trial and modifying judgment were signed, filed and entered, order denying a new trial was not lacking in formal sufficiency merely because it required reference to original findings. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 662, 663.

7. Trial ⇐395(2)

Findings need not be in any particular form and are sufficient if they can be made certain by reference to either the pleadings or record.

8. New Trial ⇐164

Statute, authorizing court to change or add to the findings, modify the judgment, or grant a new trial in ruling on motion for new trial in cause tried without a jury, is to be liberally construed to achieve the purposes it was designated to accomplish. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 662.

9. Armed Services ⇐101

Servicemen's Readjustment Act was intended to benefit and protect veterans only, and a nonveteran may not be permitted to circumvent the act and secure its benefits by using a true veteran as a mere "straw". Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, § 501 as amended 38 U.S.C. A. § 694a.

10. Trusts ⇐136½

Where legal title to realty was conveyed to a veteran and another without change in possession or payment of consideration in order to obtain a loan thereon under Servicemen's Readjustment Act for benefit of grantors who had never served in armed forces, such realty, though held in trust by grantees for benefit of grantors, was subject to liens recorded by state and Division of Labor Law Enforcement as creditors of grantees, though grantors were not indebted to, and did not intend to defraud, lien claimants. Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, § 501 as amended 38 U.S.C.A. § 694a.

11. Action ⇐4

A party to illegal transaction cannot come into a court of law and set up against either another party to transaction or a third party a claim or defense based on a violation of law or an illegal purpose.

12. Contracts ⇐346(1)

Whatever the state of the pleadings, where evidence shows that plaintiff in substance seeks to enforce an illegal contract, court has both the power and the duty to ascertain the facts in order that it may not unwittingly lend its assistance to the consummation or encourgement of what public policy forbids.

13. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐179(2)

A conveyance in fraud of creditors vests title to property transferred in grantee, except as against creditors of grantor, and while grantee holds title to such property, it is subject to claims of his creditors to the same extent as any other property to which he has title, and neither fraudulent grantor nor grantee can set up the fraudulent character of conveyance as against creditors of grantee.

14. Declaratory Judgment ⇐369

In action for judicial declaration that plaintiffs owned realty free and clear of all claims and liens asserted by grantees and creditors of grantees, to whom plaintiffs had conveyed legal title in order to obtain a loan on realty under Servicemen's Readjustment Act for benefit of plaintiffs, general finding that grantees held the realty in trust for benefit of plaintiffs did not render findings uncertain or inconsistent with finding that realty was subject to liens of grantees' creditors, in view of more specific and detailed findings with respect to nature and unlawful origin of constructive trust under which grantees held title.

Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, § 501 as amended 38 U.S.C.A. § 694a.

15. Appeal and Error ⇐934(2)

Findings must be construed to support the judgment by the reconciliation of seeming ambiguities and uncertainties.

Barry Sullivan, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James E. Sabine, Asst. Atty. Gen., Dan Kaufmann and Jay L. Shavelson, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent State.

Pauline Nightingale, Los Angeles, Conrad Lee Klein, Hollywood, Joseph Abihider, Los Angeles, for respondent Division of Labor Law Enforcement.

LILLIE, Justice.

Plaintiffs instituted this action to secure a judicial declaration that they were the owners, as joint tenants, of certain improved real property free and clear of all claims and liens asserted by the defendants. A disclaimer was filed by defendants, the Maioranas, to whom plaintiffs had conveyed the subject property, after their failure to plead to the complaint. Defendants State of California and Division of Labor Law Enforcement answered, admitting the transfer to the Maioranas and setting forth the amount and nature of their liens against the property as creditors of the Maioranas. An amended answer of the Division of Labor Law Enforcement raised the affirmative defense of laches and further alleged that the plaintiffs had come to court with unclean hands in that they had transferred title to the Maioranas in order to obtain illegal benefits from the federal government.

The trial court, sitting without a jury, rendered judgment in plaintiffs' favor, which judgment and its supporting findings of fact and conclusions of law were duly signed, filed and entered. Thereafter, defendants State of California and Division of Labor Law Enforcement moved the court for a new trial, reasserting the defense of illegality and requesting that the prior judgment be vacated pursuant to section 663, Code of Civil Procedure, as being "against the law." This motion was denied, but "pursuant to the provisions of section 662 of the Code of Civil Procedure" the trial court "modified" the judgment to the extent that plaintiffs' title was declared to be held subject to the liens recorded by the State and its agency. The modification was accomplished by an express provision in the court's order that one of the conclusions of law be changed to reflect the court's views and the corrected conclusion was set forth thereafter and followed by the recital "Let judgment be entered accordingly." No changes were made in the findings of fact. Plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment as modified.

Briefly recounting the evidence relative to the real property transaction in question, the pivotal portion of which by pre-trial order was undisputed, it appears that in April of 1946 plaintiffs acquired title to the subject property and in November of the same year, without change in possession or payment of consideration, conveyed the premises to the Maioranas. The following month the Maioranas executed a trust deed in favor of a Santa Monica lending agency to secure a loan in the sum of $9,500. It further appears that plaintiffs were the real applicants for the loan which was obtained by virtue of Mr. Maiorana's status as a former serviceman. The proceeds of the loan were then used to pay off existing encumbrances against the property, and all payments on the Santa Monica loan were made by plaintiffs, neither of whom had ever been in the armed forces.

The trial court signed findings of fact incorporating in detail what has heretofore been narrated. As a conclusion of law, however, it found that while the conveyance was "part of an illegal transaction" in violation of certain federal statutes, "no creditor nor any of the appearing defendants were defrauded by such illegal transfer" and hence the defense of illegality was unavailable. In its order denying a new trial and modifying the judgment, the trial court directed that the conclusion of law relating to the nonavailability of the defense of illegality be deleted and in lieu thereof there be inserted, as a new conclusion, that the premises were subject to the liens of the State and its agency and that the Maioranas had no interest in the subject property. As already pointed out, the order then related "Let judgment be entered accordingly," after which there was a direction that the judgment itself be modified to provide such changes. These changes, both in the conclusions of law and judgment, were effected by interlineation.

On appeal it is contended that the court erred (1) in changing its conclusions of law, (2) in changing its judgment, (3) in making the aforesaid changes by the procedural method followed and (4) in providing that the property be held subject to the liens recorded by the Maiorana creditors.

[1, 2] While respondents' motion for a new trial was based on section 663, Code of Civil Procedure, the court's order was made pursuant to the provisions of section 662. Having reference to new trials, section 662 reads as follows: "In ruling on such motion, in a cause tried without a jury, the court may, on such terms as may be just, change or add to the findings, modify the judgment, in whole or in part, * * * and grant a new trial on all or part of the issues, or, in lieu of granting a new trial, may vacate and set aside the findings and judgment and reopen the case for further proceedings and the introduction of additional evidence with the same effect as if the case had been reopened after the submission thereof and before findings had been filed or judgment rendered * * *." Appellants argue that the foregoing enactment "does not authorize the Court to change the conclusions of law, it may change the Findings of Fact, add to them, take from them, or modify the judgment, that is all that is authorized by said section." Such a narrow or strict construction of the statute does not accord with the views of our reviewing courts which have consistently declined to limit the scope of the section, since it was amended in 1929 (Moore v. Levy, 128 Cal. App. 687, 696, 18 P.2d 362). Said the Supreme Court in Spier v. Lang, 4 Cal.2d 711, 714, 53 P.2d 138, 140: "The obvious purpose of the statute * * * was to give the court on denying the motion for a new trial the broad power to change its findings and to modify its judgment and thus avoid the necessity of a new trial. This was to subserve the ends of justice and to prevent unnecessary delays in cases where the court deemed itself mistaken as to its previous view of the evidence or in the application thereto of the law." Although the section does not expressly provide for the correction of conclusions of law, we think the term "findings" is reasonably synonomous with "findings of fact and conclusions of law," particularly since the statute "presents an innovation in court procedure" (Roraback v. Roraback, 38 Cal.App.2d 592, 597, 101 P.2d 772, 773, 775), otherwise the trial court would be deprived of the broad power to correct its mistaken application of the law to the findings. Spier v. Lang, supra. Too, the mere omission from section 662 of the words "conclusions of law" does not divest the court of authority to correct both the findings and conclusions of law. So it was declared in Pacific Home v. County of Los Angeles, 41 Cal.2d 855, at page 857, 264 P.2d 544, at page 546: "Upon denying the motion for a new trial, the court was authorized to vacate the prior findings, conclusions and judgment, and to make new findings and conclusions, and to render a new judgment [citing section 662, Spier v. Lang, supra]." To the same effect are Gottbehuet v. Fox, 130 Cal.App. 2d 336, 340, 278 P.2d 925; Rutledge v. Rutledge, 119 Cal.App.2d 112, 259 P.2d 78; Gardner v. Rich Mfg. Co., 68 Cal.App.2d 725, 158 P.2d 23. In the case at bar the trial court declined to change its findings of fact but considered itself mistaken as to the application of the law to such findings. Even should the previously stated implication from Spier v. Lang, supra, be unwarranted, it must be borne in mind that "(T)he line of demarcation between what are questions of fact and conclusions of law is not one easy to be drawn in all cases" (Levins v. Rovegno, 71 Cal. 273, 275, 12 P. 161, 162). Here, the trial court's conclusion as to the existence of respondents' liens upon the property was in effect a finding of the property's indebtedness for and in the amount of such liens. A finding of indebtedness is not a conclusion of law but the statement of an ultimate fact (Nisbet v. Rhinehart, 2 Cal.2d 477, 482, 42 P.2d 71), and it makes no difference that the finding is denominated as a conclusion of law (People v. One 1949 Cadillac, 126 Cal.App.2d 410, 412, 272 P.2d 873; Kramer v. Watnick, 63 Cal. App.2d 308, 310, 146 P.2d 947). To the same effect is Gossman v. Gossman, 52 Cal.App.2d 184, 191–193, 126 P.2d 178.

[3] Appellants' contention is without merit for the further reason that the sole issue is one of law involving the legal effect of the finding that the transaction in question was tainted with illegality; as will hereinafter be pointed out, a second trial of the cause would necessarily have resulted in a judgment similar to that from which this appeal is taken, and hence no miscarriage of justice resulted (Const., art. VI, sec. 4½; Bureau of Welfare, California Teachers' Ass'n Southern Section v. Drapeau, 21 Cal.App.2d 138, 151, 68 P.2d 998).

[4] Appellants' second contention relates to the trial court's claimed lack of authority to correct its judgment and enter a different judgment as modified. Contrary to appellants' assertion that the term "modification" denotes "some minor change in substance," section 662 expressly authorizes the court to "modify the judgment, in whole or in part." (Emphasis added.) The same contention was decided adversely to appellants in Clarke v. Fiedler, 44 Cal.App.2d 838, 847, 113 P.2d 275, 280, where this court said: "Appellants' contention that the trial court was without power to alter its findings and completely to reverse its prior judgment cannot be sustained. Under the broad power conferred upon the court in this regard by section 662 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the trial court was empowered, in ruling upon the motion for a new trial, if it deemed itself mistaken as to its previous view of the evidence or in the application thereto of the law, to set aside the previous findings and the judgment predicated thereon." A similar situation was presented in Wyman v. Monolith Portland Cement Co., 3 Cal.App.2d 540, 545, 39 P.2d 510, 512, where the trial court ordered judgment in favor of the defendant company and upon the denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial rendered judgment for the plaintiff. Affirming the new and different judgment the reviewing court said: "The very purpose of the section is to permit a court to correct its own errors without incurring the delay and expense incident to a new trial or appeal." The same construction of the statute is found in In re Estate of Perkins, 21 Cal. 2d 561, 134 P.2d 231, and In re Estate of Busteed, 105 Cal.App.2d 14, 17, 232 P.2d 881. We do not believe appellants' contention to be tenable.

[5–8] It is next urged by appellants that the procedural method followed by the trial court in modifying its judgment was without sanction of law. They argue in effect that new findings of fact and conclusions of law should have been signed and filed, and that it was error to accomplish the change in question by interlineation. The order denying a new trial was signed, filed and entered; it expressly specified in what respects the conclusion of law, theretofore filed, was corrected, and then recited "Let judgment be entered accordingly." Thereupon the order expressly set forth the respects in which the judgment, also theretofore filed, was modified. The changes in the conclusion of law and judgment were then made by interlineation. Since section 662 authorizes a modification of the judgment "on such terms as may be just," neither procedural error nor abuse of discretion is manifest in the record before us. Furthermore, there is no merit to the implied suggestion that the order denying a new trial was lacking in formal sufficiency because it required reference to the original findings. As stated in Bourke v. Frisk, 92 Cal.App. 2d 23, 32, 206 P.2d 407, 412; "Findings need not 'be in any particular form' * * * Findings are sufficient * * * 'if they can be made certain, either by reference to the pleadings or to the record. * * *'" This principle is particularly applicable to proceedings under section 662, Code of Civil Procedure, the provisions of which "are to be liberally construed to achieve the purposes it was designated to accomplish" (Roraback v. Roraback, 38 Cal.App.2d 592, 597, 101 P.2d 772, 775). Appellants rely on Easterly v. Cook, 140 Cal.App. 115, 123–124, 35 P.2d 164 and Supple v. Luckenbach, 12 Cal.2d 319, 322, 84 P.2d 52, in both of which cases the first of two judgments rendered and based upon unsigned findings was held to be a nullity. Here, as already pointed out, both the original findings and judgment, as well as the order of modification, were duly signed, filed and entered. It is clear therefore neither of appellants' cases is in point.

Appellants' final argument challenges that portion of the modified judgment which decreed that appellants' title be held subject to respondents' liens as creditors of the Maioranas. Since the modified judgment confirmed the court's original finding that the Maioranas at all times in question held the premises "for the benefit of and in trust for the plaintiffs," appellants argue that "trust property may not be taken to pay (the) personal debts of (the) trustee." They admit that their transaction with the Maioranas violated certain federal statutes and was consequently illegal; nevertheless they contend that (1) any defense of illegality was available only to the United States, (2) the evidence was insufficient to establish any intent by appellants to defraud respondents, (3) the transaction being governed by federal statutes, "(T)he State of California could not adjudge the rights of the United States and the lender," and (4) under the pertinent federal legislation the contract in question is voidable at most, and not void. We conclude that each and every one of the foregoing points is without merits.

[9, 10] The loan of $9,500 from the Santa Monica source was sought and secured under the provisions of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act (38 U.S.C.A. § 694a). Discussing that legislation, the court in Diamond v. Willett, La.App., 37 So.2d 338, 341, said: "The acts of Congress herein referred to are designed to give relief to members of the armed forces, of limited means, who honorably served their country during World War II." Hence it is provided in the statute (38 U.S.C.A. § 694a, supra) that the proceeds of the government-guaranteed loan thereunder be used for the payment of property purchased or improved under terms which bear a proper relation to the veteran's present and anticipated income and expenses. The intent to benefit and protect veterans, and veterans only, is plain throughout the statute; accordingly, no more strained construction of the legislation could be conceived than to allow a nonveteran, such as each of these appellants, to circumvent the act and secure its benefits by using, as admittedly they did, a true veteran such as Maiorana as a mere "straw." Other circumventions of the statute, no less censurable, have been properly denounced by our courts as violative of public policy, entirely void and wholly unenforceable (Young v. Hampton, 36 Cal.2d 799, 805–806, 228 P.2d 1, 19 A.L.R.2d 830; Sattler v. Van Natta, 120 Cal.App.2d 349, 352, 260 P.2d 982). To the same effect is Schalow v. Schalow, 163 Cal.App.2d 448, 329 P.2d 592, which involved the purchase of a home pursuant to Military and Veterans Code, sec. 985 et seq.

[11, 12] Appellants' premise that they did not intend to cheat or defraud respondent State and respondent state agency is utterly fallacious and beside the point. As forcefully stated in Lee On v. Long, 37 Cal.2d 499, 502, 234 P.2d 9, 11: "'No principle of law is better settled than that a party to an illegal transaction cannot come into a court of law and * * * set up a case in which he must necessarily disclose an illegal purpose as the groundwork of his claim' (citation). Nor is this established rule limited in its application to parties to the illegal transaction as distinguished from an attempt to set up a claim against a third party based on the law's violation" (emphasis added). The converse, of course, must necessarily be true when, as here, appellants seek to defend against the affirmative allegation of illegality contained in respondents' pleadings. "Whatever the state of the pleadings, when the evidence shows that the plaintiff in substance seeks to enforce an illegal contract * * * the court has both the power and the duty to ascertain the true facts in order that it may not unwittingly lend its assistance to the consummation or encouragement of what public policy forbids" (Lewis & Queen v. N. M. Ball Sons, 48 Cal.2d 141, 147–148, 308 P.2d 713, 717). Nor is it of any moment that appellants were not indebted to respondents and that the latter will thus benefit to the extent of their liens. The claimed injustice to appellants is "outweighed by the importance of deterring illegal conduct" (Lewis & Queen v. N. M. Ball Sons, supra, 48 Cal.2d at page 150, 308 P.2d at page 719).

[13] Since a violation of the pertinent legislation is a criminal offense (Young v. United States, 9 Cir., 178 F.2d 78), since appellants aided and abetted the violation and are equally responsible (Russell v. United States, 5 Cir., 222 F.2d 197) and since our courts have consistently refused to sanction judicial enforcement of claims arising from such an unlawful transaction (Young v. Hampton, supra; Cole v. Ames, 155 Cal.App.2d 8, 12–13, 317 P.2d 662), it follows that appellants may not validly rely upon their "trust" theory to escape the consequences of their acts. Cases cited by appellants (Miller v. Miller, 55 Cal.App. 2d 199, 205, 130 P.2d 438; Murphy v. Clayton, 113 Cal. 153, 161, 45 P. 267, and Breeze v. Brooks, 71 Cal. 169, 9 P. 670, 11 P. 885) all proceed upon the proposition that the beneficiary of the trust has not acted unlawfully. A far different situation is presented when legal title is vested in another for improper purposes. Thus, in Withrow v. National Surety Co., 122 Cal.App. 242, 10 P.2d 83, plaintiff's conveyance was held to have been conceived in fraud and no enforceable trust arose. "A conveyance in fraud of creditors vests title to the property transferred in the grantee, except as against the creditors of the grantor. While the grantee holds such title, the property is subject to the claims of his creditors to the same extent as any other property to which he has title. Neither the fraudulent grantor nor grantee can set up the fraudulent character of the conveyance as against the creditors of the grantee." 122 Cal.App. at page 247, 10 P.2d at page 85. The foregoing principle is followed in Ramirez v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., 29 Cal.App.2d 193, 197, 84 P.2d 172.

[14, 15] Finally, the trial court's general finding that the Maioranas held the subject property "for the benefit of and in trust for plaintiffs" does not render the findings uncertain and inconsistent as to respondents' liens. More specific and detailed findings were made with respect to the nature of the constructive trust mentioned in the above general finding, particularly its unlawful origin. In such an instance, the specific finding prevails (Lobb v. Brown, 208 Cal. 476, 481, 281 P. 1010). Furthermore, it is settled that findings must be construed to support the judgment by the reconciliation of seeming ambiguities and uncertainties (Richter v. Walker, 36 Cal.2d 634, 639, 226 P.2d 593). No reversible error is manifest.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re Max OSSLO and Arthur L. Meyer on Habeas Corpus.

Cr. 6295.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
Dec. 23, 1958.

Habeas corpus proceeding seeking to relieve the petitioners of illegal restraint of probation orders and to require the Superior Court to revoke probation and to sentence the petitioners. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that the record did not establish that the petitioners had accepted probation containing conditions that they as union officials refrain from holding any union office and from accepting any remuneration from any union and that the petitioners could disavow probation and demand sentence.

Judgment in accordance with the opinion.

Carter, J., dissented in part.

1. Habeas Corpus ⚖25.2(4)

Habeas corpus was a proper remedy to effect release from restraint of probation orders and to remand petitioners to Superior Court for sentence. West's Ann. Pen.Code, §§ 1484, 1493.

2. Habeas Corpus ⚖4

Habeas corpus was a proper remedy to effect petitioners' release from restraint of probation orders as against claim that appeal was the proper remedy where question of appealability of the orders had never been decided and petitioners had a vital interest in having sentence imposed as soon as possible. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1484, 1493.

3. Criminal Law ⚖982.1

Defendant has no right to be granted probation, but "probation" is a privilege, an act of grace, or clemency.

4. Criminal Law ⚖982.5(1)

Defendant has a right to refuse probation.

5. Criminal Law ⚖982.5(1)

Petitioners' right to reject probation after conviction was not defeated on the ground that their failure to request a stay of execution of the probation orders evidenced an irrevocable acceptance of conditions of such orders, where such failure was based on petitioners' mistaken belief that their appeal and release on bail effected a stay. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 17, 182, 245, 1237, 1243.

6. Criminal Law ⚖982.6(4)

Probation orders are to be construed favorably to the defendants.

7. Criminal Law ⚖982.5(1)

Provision in probation orders that defendants should resign their union offices effective such date as the judgment may become final prevailed over provision that the defendants hold no office during any part of the period of probation. West's Ann. Pen.Code, §§ 1237, 1243.

8. Criminal Law ⚖982.5(1)

Where under terms of probation order the first installment of fines did not become due until 60 days after the defendants' release from custody and the defendants had been free on bail during most of the time since the entry of the probation orders, so that installments of their probationary fines had not become due, failure of defendants to file the affidavits referred to in the probation orders that payment on the fines should come from their own funds and not the union moneys did not evidence a rejection of probation. 12. Criminal Law ⇐982.9(1)

The mere taking and pressing of an appeal from an order granting probation and seeking reversal of the conviction or a declaration that any of the conditions of the probation are invalid does not merely as such constitute a ground for revocation or modification of the probation. 13. Criminal Law ⇐982.5(1)

The defendant has a right to refuse probation where its conditions may appear to defendant more onerous than the sentence which might be imposed.

14. Criminal Law ⇐982.5(1)

Where union officials were placed on probation after conviction of an offense and one of conditions of probation was that the defendants should not hold any position or receive any remuneration from any union, defendants did not manifest an acceptance of conditions of probation where they immediately appealed from probation orders and obtained release on bail by order of Supreme Court and attacked terms of the probation as unreasonable and beyond the power of trial court and promptly after denial of certiorari asserted in the trial court their rights to reject probation notwithstanding they did not comply with the trial court's direction when it announced the conditions that the defendants tell the court whether they wanted to accept probation.

15. Criminal Law ⇐982.5(2)

The trial court could not as a condition of granting probation to the defendants make their right to reject the offered probation conditional upon their immediate announcement of rejection.

16. Habeas Corpus ⇐113(5½)

Defendants were not entitled to raise the question of the trial judge's alleged bias and prejudice where the question had not been raised in the lower court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 170.

SCHAUER, Justice.

By application for habeas corpus petitioners Osslo and Meyer ask that they be relieved of the assertedly illegal restraint of probation orders and that the superior court be required to revoke probation and to sentence petitioners.[1] The superior court determined that petitioners had "accepted probation" and that the court would not "release them from it." We have concluded that petitioners could disavow probation and demand sentence.

On August 9, 1956, a jury found petitioners guilty of conspiracy to commit assault and of assault by means likely to produce great bodily injury. As is recounted in People v. Osslo (1958), 50 Cal.2d 75, 323 P.2d 397, petitioners are butchers' union officials and the offenses were related to a jurisdictional dispute between petitioners' union and a clerks' union. The physical acts of violence constituting the assault were committed not in person by petitioners but by members of a sailors' union (a union not involved in the jurisdictional dispute) who had been hired by the butchers' union to aid it in that dispute. The condition of probation which resulted in the present controversy requires that petitioners give up their union offices.

On August 27, 1956, the trial court in passing upon petitioners' application for probation stated, "Now, although I am going to grant these defendants probation, of course probation is a privilege and they are going to have to comply with it. If they don't like the terms, of course they don't have to accept probation. When I get through here, I want you to tell me. You can confer with your clients and tell me whether you want to accept probation." (Italics added.) The trial court then stated the conditions upon which it proposed to grant probation. Neither petitioners nor their counsel said anything in open court as to acceptance or rejection of probation. Petitioners were placed in the custody of the sheriff.

As to each petitioner the probation orders of August 27, 1956, provided, among other things, as follows: that imposition of sentence was suspended for ten years; that petitioner be confined (Osslo for six months, Meyer for three months) in a county adult detention facility; that petitioner pay a fine (Osslo $1,500, Meyer $750) from his own funds in monthly installments of $50, the first installment to become due within 60 days from petitioner's "release from custody"; that petitioner annually, on or about December 31, file with the probation officer on a form approved by the court, an affidavit that the payments "have come from his own funds and not from monies received or solicited from any Union or its members"; that "during the period of his probation [petitioner] shall not hold any position * * * in, or receive any remuneration from, any union"; that "effective such date as this judgment may become final, [petitioner] shall resign any [union] position"; and that "this * * * Judge shall retain jurisdiction of this matter throughout the said period of probation and no other * * * Judge shall modify this order without notice to the Judge who tried the case." Petitioners at once appealed to the District Court of Appeal.

On August 29, 1956, there was filed in the superior court a form of affidavit and an order of the trial judge that during probation the probationers shall sign such an affidavit "during * * * January of each year, or more often, if requested." This form of affidavit states, among other things, that affiant has received no funds from any union or union member for the purpose of paying his fine, and "That in accordance with the terms of probation, affiant has held no * * * office in any * * * Union since September 1, 1956, and that all offices held prior to said date by affiant have been terminated by resignation."

1. The petition for habeas corpus named as respondents the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Diego, and the Honorable John A. Hewicker, judge of that court, as well as the sheriff of San Diego county. This court ordered that the sheriff show cause "why the relief prayed for in this [habeas corpus] proceeding should not be granted." Although the superior court and the judge thereof were not ordered to show cause, the "Return and Answer to Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus" was filed on behalf of such court and judge as well as on behalf of the sheriff, and the traverse to the writ again names the three respondents. Therefore, references in this opinion to "respondents" are to the court and judge as well as the sheriff.

On September 13, 1956, this court on an application for habeas corpus ordered petitioners' release on bail. On their appeal in the District Court of Appeal (People v. Osslo (Cal.App.1957), 310 P.2d 1020, 1030–1031) and thereafter in this court (which granted a hearing after the decision on appeal by the District Court of Appeal) petitioners unsuccessfully urged that the trial court was without power to require, as a condition of probation, that they should not hold any union position or receive remuneration from any union. This court ordered that the provision of the probation orders by which the individual trial judge purported to retain jurisdiction of the cause be stricken; in all other respects the orders were affirmed. (People v. Osslo (1958), supra, 50 Cal.2d 75, 103, 104 [29–32], 323 P.2d 397, 412, 413; rehearing denied.)

Petitioners sought certiorari in the United States Supreme Court. On April 28, 1958, this court denied their application for stay of execution of judgment pending the application for certiorari. On April 29, Mr. Justice Douglas of the United States Supreme Court granted bail. On June 9, 1958, the federal supreme court denied certiorari [357 U.S. 907, 78 S.Ct. 1152, 2 L.Ed.2d 1157] and terminated petitioners' release on bail as of June 23, 1958.

On June 18, 1958, petitioners gave notice that on June 23 they would move the trial court for an order "modifying the judgment * * * and modifying the Order admitting [petitioners] to probation."

On June 23, 1958, petitioners for the first time expressed to the trial court their desire to reject probation. They moved for sentence as misdemeanants [2] and urged that "imposition of a substantial fine would serve the interests of justice." When this motion was denied, petitioners explained that they believed that "honor requires that [they] not give up [their] right to employment by a union," and moved that the court "withdraw the order for probation, and if * * * sentence cannot be made a misdemeanor that * * * your Honor pronounce judgment." The court denied this motion and the further motion for modification of the conditions of probation to permit union employment.

The trial court based its denial of petitioners' motions upon the following stated grounds: "I can't in good conscience make it a misdemeanor" because codefendants of petitioners (the members of the sailors' union employed by petitioners) had been sentenced to state prison and were serving their sentences. "Levying a fine in a case of this kind is useless" because the fine would be paid by assessment of union members. "I think it is going to be conducive to peace in the labor movement if these officials have to control their actions to such an extent that they don't become involved with the Penal Code * * * They are responsible to the criminal courts and * * * if they know it and it is certain if they are convicted they won't be turned loose and have the matter made a misdemeanor, I think we will have peace in the labor movement." If petitioners "didn't want to accept" probation when the probation orders were made, they "should have told me so and I would have sentenced [them] at that time. So they have accepted probation * * * [for the 22 months which had elapsed since the making of the probation orders] and I am not going to release them from it." Petitioners were remanded to the custody of the sheriff.[3]

[1] Habeas corpus is a proper remedy to effect the relief sought by petitioners; i. e., release from the restraint of the probation orders and remand of petitioners to the superior court for sentence. (Pen.

2. The offenses of which petitioners were convicted are punishable either as misdemeanors or as felonies. (Pen.Code, §§ 17, 182, 245.)

3. On August 6, 1958, this court ordered petitioners released on bail pending final determination of this habeas corpus proceeding.

Code, § 1484 [on habeas corpus the court must dispose of petitioner "as the justice of the case may require"]; Pen.Code, § 1493 ["In cases where any party is held under illegal restraint or custody, or any other person is entitled to the restraint or custody of such party, the judge or court may order such party to be committed to the restraint or custody of such person as is by law entitled thereto"]; In re Stoliker (1957), 49 Cal.2d 75, 78 [3], 315 P.2d 12; In re Bartges (1955), 44 Cal.2d 241, 247–248 [5–7], 282 P.2d 47; In re McCoy (1948), 32 Cal.2d 73, 76–77 [4], 194 P.2d 531.) [4]

[2] Respondents point out that petitioners have appealed to the District Court of Appeal from the order of June 23, 1958, and urge that appeal is the proper remedy. The order is probably appealable as an order made after judgment affecting the substantial rights of petitioners. (See In re Bine (1957), 47 Cal.2d 814, 817 [6], 306 P.2d 445.) However, since the question of the appealability of such an order has never been decided, since the order to show cause has issued in this proceeding, and since petitioners have a vital interest in having sentence imposed as soon as possible, we shall in this proceeding consider petitioners' right to refuse probation.

[3, 4] The appellate courts of this state have had occasion repeatedly to emphasize that a defendant has no right to be granted probation; probation is a privilege, an act of grace or clemency. (E. g., In re Davis (1951), 37 Cal.2d 872, 874, 236 P.2d 579; In re Trombley (1948), 31 Cal.2d 801, 811 [9], 193 P.2d 734; cases collected in West's Ann.Pen.Code (1956), § 1203, note 3, pp. 310–311, § 1203.1, note 3, p. 337.) It now becomes necessary to emphasize that a defendant has the right to refuse probation, a right of which he cannot lightly be deprived.

[5, 6] The trial court apparently was of the opinion that petitioners' right to reject probation was affected by their failure to seek a stay of execution of the probation orders pending the appeal, for the trial court at the hearing of June 23, 1958, inquired why petitioners "didn't ask for a stay of the probation proceedings so that they wouldn't be governed by the probation orders while the case was up on appeal." [5] We cannot agree that petitioners' failure to request a stay of execution of the probation orders evidenced an irrevocable acceptance of the conditions of those orders. Petitioners' failure to seek a stay of execution was based on their mistaken belief that their appeal and release on bail effected a stay [6] and, therefore, such failure did not

4. Despite petitioners' release on bail, habeas corpus will lie to test the legality of their constructive restraint. (In re Petersen (1958), 51 Cal.2d 177, 331 P.2d 24.)

5. In this connection we note that the trial court is correct in its view that the petitioners did not request a stay of execution. Although in this proceeding counsel for both petitioners and respondents aver that petitioners applied for and the trial court denied a stay of execution, the record on appeal from the probation orders shows only that the trial court denied a stay of execution as to the sailor defendants and that appended to Meyer's notice of appeal is a blank form of order staying execution; it does not show the making in or denial by the trial court of a motion for stay of execution pending appeal as to Osslo and Meyer.

Petitioners do not suggest that they sought a stay of execution in the District Court of Appeal, and they did not seek such a stay in this court while their appeal was pending. Although petitioners in this proceeding allege and respondents do not deny that Justice Douglas of the United States Supreme Court ordered a "stay of execution of judgment," it appears that Justice Douglas ordered only that petitioners be temporarily released on bail (see 357 U.S. 907, 78 S.Ct. 1152, 2 L.Ed.2d 1157).

6. The trial court is correct in its view that petitioners at all times since the making of the probation orders have been subject to probation. At the time petitioners appealed, section 1243 of the Penal Code provided that "An appeal to the Supreme Court or to a district court of appeal from a judgment of conviction stays the execution of the judgment in all cases where sentence of death has been imposed, but does not stay the execution of the judgment in any other case unless the trial or appellate court shall so order." So far as the effect indicate acquiescence in the terms of probation.

Petitioners take the view that they evidenced rejection of probation by resuming their activity in their union offices immediately upon their release on bail (on September 13, 1956) and by failing, while their appeals were pending, to file either the affidavits referred to in the original probation orders or the somewhat different affidavits set out in the order of August 29, 1956. It appears proper to point out that we do not base our decision that petitioners have the right to disavow probation upon this consideration.

[7] The original probation orders provide both that petitioners shall hold no union office "during the period of probation" (i. e., beginning with the entry of the probation orders on August 27, 1956) and that petitioners shall resign their union positions "effective such date as this judgment may become final." Since the probation orders of August 27 are to be construed favorable to petitioners (In re Bramble (1947), 31 Cal.2d 43, 51 [6, 7], 187 P.2d 411), the provision that they resign their union offices "effective such date as this judgment may become final" (that is, when affirmance on appeal became final; see Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Nakano (1939), 12 Cal.2d 711, 714 [1], 87 P.2d 700, 121 A.L.R. 417; Jennings v. Ward (1931), 114 Cal.App. 536, 537 [1], 300 P. 129) prevails over the provision that they hold no office during any part of the period of probation. Thus, petitioners' resumption of union activity on September 13, 1956, was not inconsistent with the original probation orders properly construed.

[8] The original probation orders of August 27 further provide that each petitioner shall file annually "an affidavit that said payments on said fines have come from his own funds and not from [union] monies." Under the terms of probation, the first installment of the fines did not become due until 60 days after petitioners' "release from custody," that is, until they had remained in custody for the periods prescribed by the probation orders. Petitioners have been free on bail during most of the time since the entry of the probation orders; they have not served their probationary terms of custody; and therefore the installments of their probationary fines have not become due. Thus there has been no occasion for them to file the affidavits referred to in the original probation orders and their failure to do so does not evidence rejection of probation.

The terms of the form of affidavit prescribed by the order of August 29, 1956, differ somewhat from those specified in the original probation orders. The August 29 form of affidavit states, among other things, that "affiant has held no * * * office in any * * * Union since September 1, 1956." This later order does not expressly state that it is intended to modify the previously declared terms of probation, but if it is valid such would be its effect. We need not now decide whether the trial court's statutory power to modify the conditions of or revoke probation "at any time during the term of probation" (Pen.Code, § 1203.3) of appeal was concerned, an order granting probation was a "judgment" as to which execution was not stayed, for section 1237 of the Penal Code provided (as it now provides) that "An appeal may be taken by the defendant: 1. From a final judgment of conviction; an order granting probation shall be deemed to be a final judgment within the meaning of this section * * *"; thus a probation order was "deemed" a judgment so far as all the mechanics of appeal were concerned. (In 1957 section 1243 was amended to expressly provide that execution of an order granting probation is not stayed by appeal unless the trial or appellate court so orders.) Petitioners' release on bail while the appeal was pending did not suspend operation of the terms of probation other than the provisions for confinement. (People v. Jennings (1954) 129 Cal.App.2d 120, 122 [2], 276 P.2d 124; cf. In re Davis (1957), 150 Cal.App.2d 790, 791–792, 310 P.2d 1031, where the trial court, when it granted probation, stayed "the judgment and proceedings" pending appeal.) can be exercised while an appeal from the probation order is pending and, if so, to define its extent. But inasmuch as both the trial court and the petitioners indicate views on the subject which should not be understood to have our approval, and as petitioners must be remanded to the superior court for further proceedings, some discussion of the matter is desirable. (See Code Civ. Proc., § 53.)

[9, 10] The trial court here apparently assumed (since it made the order of August 29, 1956) that it could modify (or clarify) the terms of probation while an appeal was pending, but it also indicated the view that it could not revoke probation while an appeal was pending.[7] It is, of course, the general rule that "Pending the appeal the superior court has no jurisdiction to vacate the judgment or make any order affecting it." (In re Johannes (1931), 213 Cal. 125, 130, 1 P.2d 984 [a case not involving an order granting probation].) It is also true that "within the meaning" of section 1237 of the Penal Code (which specifies the judgments and orders from which a defendant may appeal) an order granting probation is "deemed to be a final judgment." But it could well be argued that deeming an order granting probation to be a final judgment within the meaning of section 1237 (i. e., making it an appealable order and making the scope of review the same as though the appeal were taken from a final judgment of conviction) does not preclude any court from recognizing that for purposes other than those of section 1237 there is a substantial and here pertinent difference between an order granting probation and a final judgment as such.

[11] The final judgment and commitment place the defendant in the custody of the warden or penal authority and remove him from the jurisdiction of the trial court. But probation essentially calls for continuing supervision of the probationer and maintaining jurisdiction and power in the trial court to act in respect to such supervision. For example, section 1203.3 of the Penal Code provides that "The court shall have authority at any time during the term of probation to revoke, modify, or change its order of suspension of imposition or execution of sentence." Section 1203.2 declares that "At any time during the probationary period * * * any probation or peace officer may without warrant, or other process, * * * rearrest any person so placed on probation * * * and bring him before the court * * * and [the court] may thereupon revoke and terminate such probation, if the interests of justice so require * * *." Further indicating a legislative plan that the trial court shall have continuing jurisdiction over a probationer, section 1203.2a expressly provides that "If any defendant who has been released on probation is committed to a prison in this State for another offense, the court which released him on probation shall have jurisdiction to impose sentence, if no sentence has previously been imposed," etc.

[12] From what has been said it would appear to follow that while an appeal from a probation order is pending the trial court, if execution of the probation order is not suspended, should have power to require supervision of the probationer, and to punish violation of the conditions of probation by modification of those conditions or revocation of probation. Further support is given this view by the 1957 amendment of section 1243 of the Penal Code to expressly provide that an appeal does not stay execution of an order granting probation unless the trial or appellate court so orders. Certainly the mere taking and pressing of an appeal from an order granting probation, and seeking reversal of the conviction or a declaration that any of the conditions of probation are invalid, should not, merely as such, constitute a ground for revocation or modification of probation. It could also be argued that a trial court should not, while an appeal is pending, make any change in the original conditions of probation other than such as might become necessary or expedient by reason of some act or default of the defendant or some event or circumstance not connected with the appeal from the order. In this case, as hereinabove indicated, we do not need to pass upon the extent of the trial court's jurisdiction over the probationers or the terms of their probation while their appeal was pending, but we expressly do not accept as correct or as controlling in this proceeding either petitioners' assumption that they violated probation pending appeal or the trial court's assumptions that it could modify but could not revoke probation pending appeal.

7. The trial court when it made the probation orders stated, "if an appeal is taken and the case is reversed on appeal, if the union wishes to keep you on as an officer, I can't do anything about it, because the minute you file the notice of appeal, I lose jurisdiction on it." Again at the hearing of June 23, 1958, the trial court expressed the view that "you can't touch them when they are up on appeal."

[13] The statutes concerning probation contain no provision as to its acceptance or rejection. However, it is settled that a defendant has the right to refuse probation, for its conditions may appear to defendant more onerous than the sentence which might be imposed. (People v. Osslo (1958), supra, 50 Cal.2d 75, 103 [30], 323 P.2d 397, 413; In re Hays (1953), 120 Cal.App.2d 308, 310 [4], 260 P.2d 1030; People v. Frank (1949), 94 Cal.App.2d 740, 742, 211 P.2d 350; Lee v. Superior Court (1949), 89 Cal.App.2d 716, 717 [1], 201 P.2d 882; People v. Blankenship (1936), 16 Cal.App.2d 606, 610, 61 P.2d 352; People v. Billingsley (1943), 59 Cal.App.2d Supp. 845, 849 [3], 139 P.2d 362.) [8]

[14] It is unnecessary to determine in this case whether a defendant might in some circumstances so manifest "acceptance" of probation as to lose his right to disavow that privilege with the concomitant burdens of its conditions, and thus be placed in the position of being required to intentionally violate probation in order to obtain its revocation and the imposition of sentence. In any event these petitioners did not so manifest "acceptance." Rather, their conduct has been inconsistent with acceptance of the terms of probation. They immediately appealed from the probation orders. They obtained release on bail by order of this court. Upon appeal and then by application for certiorari they attacked the terms of probation as unreasonable and beyond the power of the trial court. Promptly after denial of certiorari they asserted in the trial court their right to reject probation.

[15] It is true that petitioners did not comply with the trial court's direction, when it announced the conditions on which it proposed to grant probation, that they "tell me whether you want to accept probation." But whatever may be within the trial court's permissible scope of conditions for granting probation it could not make petitioners' right to reject the offered probation conditional upon their immediate announcement of rejection. If petitioners, as soon as the trial court announced the terms upon which it would grant probation, had rejected such offer and demanded sentence, they could not have pressed their contention that the trial court was without power, as a condition of probation, to require them to give up for ten years the union activity which they had chosen as their life's work. Although this contention was legally untenable it was not frivolous. The trial court, in effect, would require petitioners to "accept" the conditions of probation in order to question their legality in the appellate courts.

In People v. Billingsley (1943), supra, 59 Cal.App.2d Supp. 845, 850 [6], 139 P.2d 362, it is said that "Doubtless election to serve the sentence rather than accept probation must be timely made or probation will be deemed to have been accepted." We do not now decide whether a defendant might in some circumstances lose his right to disavow probation by failure to make "timely" manifestation of "election to serve the sentence rather than accept probation." In the circumstances of this case petitioners' assertion of that right, made promptly upon the unsuccessful termination (as to all but one provision) of their attacks on the terms of probation by appeal and application for certiorari, was timely.

8. In the light of the cited cases, it must be considered that it is no longer the law that, as held in the case of In re De Voe (1931), 114 Cal.App. 730, 736 [3, 4], 300 P. 874, a defendant who has applied for probation has no right, before his application is acted upon, to withdraw such application and to be sentenced.

[6] Petitioners seek to raise the question of the trial judge's bias and prejudice. Without suggesting that they have alleged facts showing bias and prejudice, we decline to pass upon the question because it does not appear to have been raised in the superior court (under Code Civ.Proc., § 170).

For the reasons above stated the petition for habeas corpus is granted and the petitioners are remanded to the custody of the sheriff of San Diego county to be brought before the superior court of that county for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion. Upon production of petitioners in the superior court as above ordered, that court as to each petitioner, unless it shall decide to admit him to probation upon conditions acceptable to him, shall revoke and terminate probation, arraign him for judgment and (in the absence of legal cause shown) sentence him to such penalty or penalties within the law as such court in its discretion, in the light of all the relevant circumstances, may determine to be appropriate.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, TRAYNOR, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

I agree with the majority that petitioners must be released from the illegal restraint imposed by the terms of their probation, but the opinion falls far short of granting the relief to which petitioners are entitled, by permitting the trial court to now impose sentence on them. Considering the additional facts revealed at the hearing of petitioners' motions to reject probation, this court has no alternative but to release petitioners from any further restraint, on the ground that they were denied a fair trial in violation of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Denial of a fair and impartial trial in a criminal case, whether the crime charged is a felony or misdemeanor, constitutes a denial of due process of law and is in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment as well as article I, section 13, of the Constitution of California. Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U.S. 86, 91, 43 S.Ct. 265, 67 L.Ed. 543; Chambers v. State of Florida, 309 U.S. 227, 238, 60 S.Ct. 472, 84 L.Ed. 716; Adamson v. People of State of California, 332 U.S. 46, 53, 67 S.Ct. 1672, 91 L.Ed. 1903; see, In re Wells, 35 Cal.2d 889, 221 P.2d 947; In re James, 38 Cal.2d 302, 240 P.2d 596. "A fair trial means a trial before an impartial judge, an honest jury and in an atmosphere of judicial calm." 14 Am.Jur., Crim.Law, § 130; McKay v. Superior Court, 98 Cal.App.2d 770, 220 P.2d 945. Where bias and prejudice at the trial on the part of the trial judge is established, then there has been a denial of due process. See, Kreling v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.2d 305, 153 P.2d 734; In re Jacobson's Guardianship, 30 Cal.2d 312, 182 P.2d 537; People v. Spear, 32 Cal.App.2d 165, 171–172, 89 P.2d 445; In re Steiner, 134 Cal.App.2d 391, 395–396, 285 P.2d 972; see, also, Code Civ. Proc., § 170 et seq.

The degree of bias and prejudice which disqualifies a trial judge is more than a nebulous belief that the judge had some preconceived ideas about a piece of litigation; it is personal bias and prejudice or a bent or leaning either for or against the litigant, which, regardless of the merits of the cause, makes it impossible for the judge to view the case dispassionately. It is a state of mind calculated to impair impartiality and to sway judgment. In re Estate of Friedman, 171 Cal. 431, 153 P. 918; McEwen v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 172 Cal. 6, 155 P. 86; Evans v. Superior Court, 107 Cal.App. 372, 290 P. 662; McKay v. Superior Court, supra. Moreover, the bias or prejudice must be against the complaining party. People v. Sweet, 19 Cal.App.2d 392, 396, 65 P.2d 899; Woolley v. Superior Court, 19 Cal.App.2d 611, 626–627, 66 P.2d 680; People ex rel. Department of Public Works v. McCullough, 100 Cal.App.2d 101, 110–111, 223 P.2d 37.

It is well settled that expressions of opinion uttered by a judge, in what he conceives to be a discharge of his official duties, are not evidence of bias or prejudice. In re Estate of Friedman, supra, 171 Cal. at page 440, 153 P. at page 922; McEwen v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., supra, 172 Cal. at page 11, 155 P. at page 88; Fishbaugh v. Fishbaugh, 15 Cal.2d 445, 456, 101 P.2d 1084; Kreling v. Superior Court, supra, 25 Cal.2d at pages 310–311, 153 P.2d at pages 737–738. Nor does marked disapproval by the judge of unlawful misconduct, disclosed by evidence., amount to a manifest prejudice by the trial judge. In re Steiner, supra, 134 Cal.App.2d at page 391, 285 P.2d at page 972.

As qualified by these principles the criterion for determining bias and prejudice is what the trial judge said or did. McKay v. Superior Court, 98 Cal.App.2d 770, 220 P.2d 945. The allegations showing prejudice must give fair support to the charge of a bent of mind that has prevented or impeded impartiality of judgment and assert facts with particularity from which a reasonable mind might fairly infer bias or prejudice. Wilkes v. United States, 9 Cir., 80 F.2d 285, 288–289.

It is clear that the facts contained in the present affidavit are sufficient to show such bias and prejudice. Although it is unnecessary to refer in detail to the errors that occurred during the trial of petitioners as pointed out in my dissenting opinion (People v. Osslo, 50 Cal.2d 75, 106, 323 P.2d 397, 415), a brief summary of them is required to set the stage for what was to follow. It is sufficient to say that the main thrust of the trial court's errors was manifested in the prosecutor's efforts to inflame the passions of the jury by portraying petitioners as characters harmful to society because they were members and officials of a labor union. The prosecution lacked facts to prove its case of conspiracy, and so resorted to non-legal methods of proof. For the most part the prosecutor was successful, despite vigorous objections by defense counsel. Thus by substituting the labor union movement as defendant and placing it on trial, the prosecutor obtained a conspiracy conviction on the basis of guilt by association.

At the time the appeal of the case was considered on its merits all that could be inferred from the trial judge's rulings, which permitted these tactics, was that they were erroneous. As serious and as prejudicial as I felt these errors were, and still do, our conclusion did not go beyond the observation that the trial judge misapprehended the law. The majority admitted there was error, but held that it was not prejudicial. However, even the majority found unpalatable the trial judge's astonishing provision that he retain exclusive jurisdiction of petitioners during their probation, and this term was stricken from the judgment by the decision of this court (50 Cal. 2d 75, 323 P.2d 397). This provision was a portent of the trial judge's position which was to be made known subsequently. The factual circumstances remained unchanged until the instant proceedings were commenced.

At the hearing on petitioners' motions to reject probation, the trial judge made the following revealing remarks as quoted in the majority opinion: " 'Levying a fine in a case of this kind is useless' because the fine would be paid by assessment of union members. 'I think it is going to be conducive to peace in the labor movement if these officials have to control their actions to such an extent that they don't become involved with the Penal Code. * * They are responsible to the criminal courts and * * * if they know it and it is certain if they are convicted they won't be turned loose and have the matter made a misdemeanor, I think we will have peace in the labor movement.' "

In considering these comments it will be remembered that petitioners were supposedly being tried for a conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor, and not for disrupting the peace in the labor movement. Moreover, as was stated in my dissent, there was not one shred of evidence indicating that petitioners, in their capacity as union officials, or otherwise, demonstrated disrespect for the law. People v. Osslo, supra, 50 Cal.2d at pages 120–124, 323 P.2d at pages 423–425.

Only one conclusion can be drawn from the trial judge's preoccupation with petitioners' union membership. His obvious antipathy to the labor movement and union members in particular, as reflected in his rulings at the trial level, and fully demonstrated by his remarks at the hearing of the motions to reject probation, prevented the exercise of his impartial judgment. He attempted to clasp petitioners within the ambit of his jurisdiction for 10 years to preclude their participation in any labor union activity whatsoever. His punishment was not aimed at the individual petitioners but at labor union members as a whole for the sole purpose of controlling their actions. Again I repeat, neither labor unions nor the labor movement was on trial. But the statements by the trial judge, referring to these elements, coupled with his efforts to punish them, point to a pre-existing bias and prejudice which disqualified the trial judge and rendered the trial before him violative of due process of law.

Habeas corpus is an available remedy where a defendant is denied due process of law at his trial, provided there is no other adequate remedy. In re Wallace, 24 Cal. 2d 933, 938, 152 P.2d 1; In re McCoy, 32 Cal.2d 73, 76, 194 P.2d 531. Where, however, the facts on which the petition for habeas corpus is based, arise or come to light subsequent to the appeal, the existence of a prior appeal will not deter us from granting relief clearly called for. Chessman v. Teets, 354 U.S. 156, 161–162, 164–165, 77 S.Ct. 1127, 1 L.Ed.2d 1253.

Such is the situation in the case at bar. The most convincing statements demonstrating prejudice and bias by the trial judge did not occur until the hearings on the motions to reject probation, a time after the appellate processes had been exhausted.

Nor does the fact that petitioners have not specifically requested this relief militate against granting appropriate relief. "The proponent before the Court is not the petitioner but the Constitution of the United States." Chessman v. Teets, supra, 354 U.S. at page 165, 77 S.Ct. at page 1132. Where the facts warrant relief, as abundantly appears herein, the court, as justice requires (Pen.Code, § 1484), and as vindication of the constitutional guarantee of due process of law, must grant relief. No clearer case for the application of this rule can be found.

This case presents a sorry picture of justice in this state. It is obvious to my mind that if these petitioners had not been engaged in union labor activity, they would not have been prosecuted. There is not one word of evidence in the record connecting them with any crime whatsoever. Their only crime is being a member of a labor union. Such membership was believed by some to be unpopular in San Diego County and even in California before the last election. The atmosphere during the trial was surcharged with prejudice against the defendants because they were engaged in labor union activity. The trial judge did not become prejudiced solely on the probation issue. The record shows that he cooperated with the prosecutor to prejudice the defendants in the eyes of the jury and that the guilty verdict was the result of such prejudice. This result is too obvious to escape the careful scrutiny of the members of this court. The only question is, will it be tolerated. This question must be answered by the individual members of the court.

I have always believed that considerations of justice should rise above prejudice and that persons charged with crime should be judged on the basis of proven guilt, regardless of race, color, creed or occupation. I am convinced beyond doubt that if such rule were applied here, these petitioners would be completely exonerated and discharged from custody.

For the foregoing reasons petitioners should be discharged from custody.

K. WOLEY, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Stanley Philip TURKUS, Defendant and Respondent.

S. F. 20053.

Supreme Court of California,
Dec. 30, 1958.

Action on a judgment. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, Aylett R. Cotton, J., rendered judgment of dismissal and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that where on date to which time for trial and for hearing of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment had been extended by stipulation beyond five year period from commencement of action, defendant served affidavit in opposition to motion, court heard motion and ordered that it be submitted pending receipt of defendant's amended affidavit, and defendant was granted extension of time thereafter, motion was denied, matter was set for trial but was continued because there were no available departments on date for which trial was set, defendant's motion to dismiss, made before case was reset for trial, on ground that case was not tried on date which time was extended, should have been denied on ground that it was impractical or futile to commence trial then and on ground that defendant's conduct estopped him from contending to contrary.

McComb, J., dissented.

Opinion, 328 P.2d 520, vacated.

1. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇐60(1)

The purpose of statute providing for dismissal of action not brought to trial within five years after commencement, except where parties have stipulated that time may be extended, is to prevent avoidable delay in bringing an action to trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

2. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇐60(2)

Under statute providing for dismissal of actions not brought to trial within five years after commencement, except on stipulation of parties, five year delay is deemed unreasonable as a matter of law and a five year period is deemed sufficient to complete preliminary matters in bringing a cause to trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

3. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇐60(3)

Exception to statute providing for dismissal of actions not brought to trial within five years after their commencement exists where a party is unable, from causes beyond his control, to bring case to trial either because of total lack of jurisdiction, in strict sense, on part of trial court or because proceeding to trial would be both impracticable and futile. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

4. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇐60(3)

Whether it is impossible, impracticable, or futile to proceed to trial within judicial exception to statute providing for dismissal of cases not brought to trial within five years after their commencement in absence of a stipulation extending time, is to be determined in light of circumstances in each case, and such circumstances include not only terms of stipulation but acts and conduct of parties and proceedings themselves. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

5. Stipulations ⇐14(11)

Ordinary rules for interpretation of contracts apply to stipulations, extending time to bring a case to trial, entered pursuant to statute providing for dismissal of actions not brought to trial within five years after their commencement in absence of such a stipulation extending the time. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

6. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇐71

For purposes of statute providing for dismissal of actions not brought to trial within five years after their commencement, in absence of a stipulation extending the time, an insufficient stipulation may be material evidence upon an issue of whether it was impossible, impracticable or a futile gesture to bring the action to trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

7. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇐60(6)

Where on date to which time for trial and for hearing of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment had been extended by stipulation beyond five year period from commencement of action, defendant served affidavit in opposition to motion, court heard motion and ordered that it be submitted pending receipt of defendant's amended affidavit, and defendant was granted extension of time thereafter, motion was denied, matter was set for trial but was continued because there were no available departments on date for which trial was set, defendant's motion to dismiss, made before case was reset for trial, on ground that case was not tried on date which time was extended, should have been denied on ground that it was impractical or futile to commence trial then and on ground that defendant's conduct estopped him from contending to contrary. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

SHENK, Justice.

A judgment of dismissal of this action was rendered pursuant to section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The dismissal was ordered on the ground that there had been an inexcusable delay of more than five years in bringing the action to trial. The plaintiff has appealed, contending that under the terms of a written stipulation and the circumstances otherwise appearing the dismissal was not mandatory and that the defendant is estopped to contend otherwise. The defendant contends that the stipulation extended the time only to January 13, 1956; that the plaintiff did not bring the action to trial on or before that date, and that there was no act or omission on the part of the defendant which would prevent him from invoking the mandatory provisions of section 583, the pertinent portions of which read: "Any action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced or to which it may be transferred on motion of the defendant, after due notice to plaintiff or by the court upon its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the plaintiff has filed his action, except where the parties have filed a stipulation in writing that the time may be extended * * *."

The record shows the following: On December 28, 1950, a complaint was filed in the Superior Court in San Mateo County for a money judgment, based on a 1948 Maryland judgment on a promissory note in the principal sum of $1,302 plus interest. The answer was filed February 6, 1951. On December 9, 1955, the plaintiff filed a memorandum to set and a notice of motion to advance the cause for trial. The supporting affidavit pointed out that the cause of action would be barred by section 583 unless the trial was commenced before December 28, 1955, which would be the expiration of the five year period. At the hearing on the motion to advance the cause for trial the defendant requested a continuance on the ground that nothing had been done in the case for almost five years and that the 12 days' notice was inadequate for trial preparation. The request was made with the representation by the defendant in open court that the plaintiff was not to be prejudiced by such a continuance. The court had set December 27, 1955, as the date for the trial and for the hearing on the motion for summary judgment in response to the plaintiff's request to advance the cause for trial before December 28. However, pursuant to the request of the defendant and also pursuant to a written stipulation entered into by the parties the court granted a continuance to January 13, 1956. The stipulation reads as follows:

"Stipulation for continuance of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, and of trial of action, at defendant's request, beyond five year period prescribed by section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"The defendant above named having requested the same, it is hereby stipulated and agreed * * * that plaintiff's motion for a summary judgment, and the trial of the above entitled action * * * be continued to the 13th day of January, 1956 * * * the parties hereto expressly waiving further notice of the time and place of the respective hearing of said motion and of said trial and consenting thereto after the elapse of the five year period prescribed by section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

On January 13 both parties were present in court. The defendant thereupon served and filed an affidavit in opposition to the motion for summary judgment. The court heard the motion and ordered that it be submitted pending the receipt of the defendant's amended affidavit. The trial was ordered continued to February 10, without objection by the defendant. On January 23 the defendant served and filed his amended affidavit and additional points and authorities on the motion for summary judgment. On March 6 the plaintiff served her affidavit in replication. On March 26 the court determined that there were triable issues of fact presented and that it could not determine on the motion for summary judgment the truth or falsity of the statements in the defendant's answer and affidavits. The motion for summary judgment was thereupon denied. Notice of the order denying this motion was served on the plaintiff on April 3. In the meantime the action had been removed to the master calendar department to be reset for trial. When the master calendar was called on April 11 the trial date was set for May 25. There were no available departments on May 25 and the matter was continued to June 28.

On May 28 the plaintiff noticed a motion for an order for the issuance of a commission to take an out-of-state deposition. On June 6 the defendant noticed the present motion to dismiss. It was heard before a judge other than the one who had conducted the former proceedings. In support of the motion the defendant alleged that a written stipulation had been entered into extending the time for trial to January 13, 1956; that the plaintiff did not commence the trial on that date nor at any time thereafter, and that the plaintiff's delay in bringing the cause to trial on January 13 was inexcusable and was not caused by any acts or omissions on the part of the defendant or his attorney. The plaintiff's answering affidavit averred that the defendant and his attorney knew and agreed that the court would first proceed to hear the motion for summary judgment on January 13 before proceeding with the trial and expressly agreed to such order of hearing; that in accordance with this agreement, and independently thereof, the court on that date ordered the motion to proceed; that when the court indicated it was about to grant the motion the defendant asked for an opportunity to present additional defenses by an amended affidavit and additional points and authorities, and that the court granted the defendant's request, giving the plaintiff an opportunity to respond thereto. Both of these motions were noticed for hearing on June 12 and were submitted. The defendant's motion was granted and judgment of dismissal was entered on June 28, 1956. The court concluded that the stipulation of the parties had extended the time to bring the action to trial to the 13th day of January, 1956, and not thereafter, and that it was not brought to trial on January 13, 1956.

A.L.R. 1153. A delay of five years is declared by this statute to be unreasonable as a matter of law (Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 220, 138 P. 1002; Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. Lauffer, 41 Cal.App.2d 725, 729, 107 P.2d 494) and to be sufficient time to complete preliminary matters in bringing the cause to trial.

[3, 4] However, the statute is not designed to arbitrarily close the proceedings at all events in five years. It expressly permits the parties to extend the period without limitation by written stipulation. Christin v. Superior Court, supra, 9 Cal.2d 526, 532, 71 P.2d 205; Continental Pacific Lines v. Superior Court, 142 Cal.App.2d 744, 749, 299 P.2d 417. Exceptions have been recognized by the courts. One arises where a party is unable from causes beyond his control to bring the case to trial either because of a total lack of jurisdiction in the strict sense on the part of the trial court or because proceeding to trial would be both impracticable and futile. Whether it is impossible, impracticable or futile to proceed to trial must be determined in the light of the circumstances in each case. Rose v. Knapp, 38 Cal.2d 114, 117, 237 P.2d 981; Pacific Greyhound Lines v. Superior Court, supra, 28 Cal.2d 61, 68, 168 P.2d 665; cf. Wyoming Pacific Oil Co. v. Preston, 50 Cal.2d 736, 329 P.2d 489. The circumstances include not only the terms of the written stipulation but the acts and conduct of the parties and the proceedings themselves.

[5] The ordinary rules for the interpretation of contracts apply to stipulations extending time entered into pursuant to section 583. Smith v. Bear Valley Mining & Lumber Co., 26 Cal.2d 590, 601, 160 P.2d 1; Bayle-Lacoste & Co. v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.App.2d 636, 641, 116 P.2d 458; Elmhurst Packers v. Superior Court, 46 Cal. App.2d 648, 650, 116 P.2d 487. The stipulation here involved continued the hearing on the motion for summary judgment and trial to January 13. It specifically called the court's attention to the impending bar of section 583. Thus we do not have the situation presented in Boyd v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 185 Cal. 344, 346, 197 P. 58 (where the plaintiff orally acquiesced in continuances beyond the statutory period), in Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 333, 336–337, 219 P. 1006 (where a continuance was granted without objection from the plaintiff), in Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, v. Moore & Harrah, 54 Cal.App.2d 37, 42, 128 P.2d 623 (where the continuance was obtained without the plaintiff's objection), or in Ravn v. Planz, 37 Cal.App. 735, 174 P. 690 (where the continuance was obtained over the plaintiff's objection). In each of those cases it was pointed out that the court's attention was not called to the necessity for a trial date within the time required by section 583.

Here the cause was set for trial within the five year period, and by written stipulation of the parties the trial was postponed and the provisions of section 583 were specifically waived to January 13, 1956. The defendant had represented, in requesting the original continuance, that the plaintiff would not be prejudiced thereby. In the memorandum of points and authorities served and filed on January 13 with the affidavit in opposition to the motion for summary judgment the defendant urged that he "should be entitled to a day in court." He asked for further time to present additional defenses after the court indicated its intention to rule in the plaintiff's favor, and he was given an opportunity to do so. It was not necessary to again call the court's attention to the stipulation on file in these proceedings. It sufficiently appears that both parties were aware of the necessity for expediting the proceedings in order to avoid the mandatory provisions of section 583 and that their activities were carried on with this necessity in mind. The request of the defendant for additional time, as carried out in the minute order of January 13, which ordered the motion submitted after the receipt of the defendant's amended affidavit, is comparable to the situation in Govea v. Superior Court, 26 Cal.App.2d 27, 31, 78 P.2d 433, 434. It was there held that "if * * * a stipulation entered in the minutes of the court does not literally comply with the language of section 583, supra, it does estop the petitioner from thereafter making a motion to dismiss the cause for want of prosecution under said section; that a party to an action cannot be allowed in such manner to play fast and loose with the court, either proposition of which is a bar to the granting of the petitioner's motion to dismiss."

[6, 7] An insufficient stipulation may be material evidence upon the issue whether it was impossible, impracticable or a futile gesture to bring the action to trial. Pacific Greyhound Lines v. Superior Court, supra, 28 Cal.2d 61, 67, 168 P.2d 665. Whether the parties agreed that the motion for judgment should first be heard and determined or whether the court determined to hear the motion first, is not important. It sufficiently appears that the plaintiff was prepared to go ahead with either proceeding. The defendant was present under subpoena and there was documentary evidence before the court which would support the allegations of the complaint. It was practicable for the court on January 13 to first hear and determine the motion for summary judgment before proceeding with the trial. The request for a continuance in order to furnish additional facts by affidavit and points and authorities on the motion for summary judgment carried with it the implied request that the entire proceedings be postponed until the additional affidavits had been submitted and the motion for summary judgment determined. This order of proceeding was acquiesced in by both parties. Upon the submission of further affidavits and the denial by the court of the motion for summary judgment, the action was set for trial by the court for May 25. Through no lack of diligence on the part of the plaintiff the trial was not commenced on that date but was postponed by the court. It was not until after that date that the defendant sought to have the action dismissed on the ground that the written stipulation had extended the time for trial only to January 13. To grant such a motion under these circumstances would clearly not be within the letter and spirit of section 583. The motion should have been denied on the ground that it was impracticable or futile for the plaintiff to have commenced the trial on January 13, that the defendant's oral request for an extension of time, made in open court and granted, as shown by the minute order of January 13, and his conduct after that date, operated as an estoppel against his contention to the contrary.

The judgment is reversed.

Florence RUFO, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

N. B. C. NATIONAL BROADCASTING COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 23057.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 5, 1959.

Action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when she fell after she was pushed or shoved into a tree well on a public sidewalk in front of defendant's premises. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Jesse J. Frampton, J., entered an order granting defendant's motion for nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that in absence of any evidence of prior negligent conduct of persons upon the sidewalk, and in absence of any evidence of boisterous or unruly conduct upon the part of persons on the sidewalk, plaintiff was not entitled to recovery.

Affirmed.

1. Judgment ⇐199(3.15)
Negligence ⇐121(1), 136(14, 25)

In an action for recovery of damages for personal injuries allegedly sustained through the negligence of defendant, burden of proof was upon plaintiff to establish the elements of her case, and where there was no proof of negligence upon the part of the defendant, nor any proof of proximate cause, under such circumstances, a motion for a nonsuit, directed verdict, or judgment notwithstanding the verdict was in order.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇐757(2)

Generally, in the absence of statute, there is no duty resting upon the owner or occupant of premises abutting on a public street to keep the sidewalk in repair.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇐808(1)

Abutting property owners are not responsible for whatever might happen to pedestrians who collide with each other upon the sidewalk in front of owners' property.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇐808(1)

An abutting property owner, such as those, for example, presenting exhibitions or performances in stadiums, sporting arenas, theaters, or stores, do not have a duty to supervise the conduct of people on a public sidewalk.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇐808(1)

Owner of broadcasting studio had no right, power or authority over persons upon public sidewalk abutting its premises.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇐808(9)

In action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff on a public sidewalk, in front of defendant's broadcasting studio, when she fell after she was pushed or shoved into a tree well in the sidewalk, in absence of any evidence of prior negligent conduct of persons upon the sidewalk, and in absence of any evidence of boisterous or unruly conduct upon the part of persons on the sidewalk, plaintiff was not entitled to recovery.

Phill Silver, Hollywood, for appellant.

Moss, Lyon & Dunn, Fulton W. Haight, and Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order granting a motion for a non-suit.

The plaintiff alleged in her complaint that the defendant had its principal place of business in Hollywood, California, and maintained a broadcasting studio at the corner of Sunset Boulevard and Vine Street; that upon said premises it maintained certain doorways to the studio which are the means of ingress and egress of the studio; that at the front of the studio there is a cement walkway with trees planted in basins. She further alleged that on August 10, 1953, at about 4:20 o'clock p. m., she was present upon the premises of the defendant as a guest of the defendant to see a performance and that while she was walking to the end of a line composed of other guests she was pushed and shoved into the basin of a tree well in the cement walkway through the carelessness of the defendant, and that she thereupon fell and received injuries. She also alleged that the negligence of the defendant consisted of the following: (1) the defendant maintained the premises so that there was a sudden drop-off around the tree basin; (2) the defendant failed to warn her of the existence of the drop-off from the sidewalk, and it failed to maintain any supervision over the lineup of people who were waiting to enter the studio, and as a result of which she was then shoved backward with force and violence and fell to the cement near one of the trees where there was a sudden drop-off from the cement to the dirt around the tree.

Appellant's opening brief states, "Plaintiff's complaint was an action for personal injuries sustained on a public sidewalk in front of the defendant's premises."

The answer filed by the defendant denied that the cement sidewalk with trees planted in basins therein was on any premises owned, operated or maintained by it, and denied that there was any negligence upon the part of the defendant, and denied that the plaintiff was injured.

A summary of the testimony is as follows: The plaintiff was with two other persons each of whom had tickets for, and desired to enter a show at the defendant's studio. When they arrived in the vicinity of the studio they saw many people who were to attend the show and observed that such people had already formed into a line. One of the ladies who was with the plaintiff stated that she and the plaintiff started to get into the line, and she also stated that at the start of the line there were two persons abreast, but toward the end of the line it widened to three and four persons abreast across the sidewalk, and that there was space for only one person to pass between the people in the line and the tree where the accident occurred. The witness described the base of the tree and its relation to the sidewalk, and said that the dirt around the tree was about an inch below the level of the sidewalk. The plaintiff and her companions were in no particular hurry because when they arrived at or near the studio it was about twenty minutes before the studio opened for the show. They saw two lines formed, one for those persons with tickets, which extended east on Sunset Boulevard toward Argyle Street, and one for those without tickets which extended west toward Vine Street. The three women became separated. One of the ladies testified that she was walking in front of the plaintiff, and heard someone say, "A woman has fell;" that she then turned around and by that time the plaintiff was on the ground. She further testified that an usher from the defendant's studio, who had been on or near the steps entering the studio prior to that time, went to the plaintiff and the plaintiff was then taken to a restroom in the building. The witness also stated that there had been no usher on the sidewalk supervising the lineup of persons before the plaintiff fell down. The witness indicated that there was a crowd immediately adjacent to the tree, and that it was necessary to walk single file to get through. This witness also stated that the sidewalk where the accident occurred was about nine feet wide.

The plaintiff testified that as she and her companions arrived there was quite a commotion among the people trying to get into the line, and that by the time she got to where the tree was located there was no room left for anybody to walk by the line of people without stepping into the base or basin around the tree, and that a person had to make her way through the crowd. She stated that she was pushed and shoved, and that her foot went into the dirt around the tree and she fell to the cement sidewalk. She did not recall seeing an usher other than the one at the head of the line.

Under section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, a supervising usher of the defendant company was called and he testified that he went to the scene of the accident. He said that it was procedure to have the people who expected to attend the show form in lines on the sidewalk and wait until the studio doors opened. He had instructed the pages working under him to keep the people in the lineup two abreast, to stand close to the inside edge of the sidewalk area rather than close to the curb near the street so as to leave sufficient space for pedestrians to pass to and fro; the pages also were to keep the line straight and orderly, and to see to it that there was no pushing and to see if people had tickets, and further to stop any cutting into the line by unauthorized persons.

It is to be noted that the plaintiff knew of and saw the crowd on the sidewalk, and saw the tree and the basin surrounding it. There was no evidence that the defendant planted any of the trees or had any control over them, or was in any manner responsible for them or for the basin around them. There was no evidence to show that the plaintiff ever knew or was aware that the defendant's ushers ever had come onto the public sidewalk to give any information or make any requests, and there was no evidence that the plaintiff had placed any reliance upon any usher. There was no evidence that the people in the lineup or those on the sidewalk were boisterous, noisy or unruly. Neither of the plaintiff's companions saw the accident.

In the plaintiff's deposition she stated that people were going in both directions on the sidewalk at the time of the accident, whereas, at the trial she testified that they were all traveling in the same direction excepting those standing irregularly in the lineup facing her. She further testified at the trial that she remembered that it was a man who had pushed her, "* * * because as I was trying to get in that line making my way through there. I remember him on my left side here." There is no claim that such man was in anywise connected with the defendant.

After introducing the evidence above set forth, the plaintiff rested her case and the motion for a non-suit was granted.

Appellant now asserts that it was error to grant such a motion, claiming that the defendant was under a duty to exercise reasonable care to protect the plaintiff from injury caused from the wrongful acts of other invitees, and further, that independent of such duty there was a duty to refrain from doing any affirmative act that would render the sidewalk dangerous for public use.

Counsel for the appellant has referred to many cases and many situations, however, a review of such cases convinces us that none of them is in point in the present case. This is not a case where the plaintiff was an invitee of the defendant on its own premises, nor was she hurt by any condition on the premises of the defendant, nor was she hurt by anyone from the premises of the defendant, nor is it a case where a crowd became unruly and boisterous to the defendant's knowledge and defendant failed to do anything about such conduct, nor is it a case where the defendant roped off the sidewalk or placed any obstructions thereon. The plaintiff makes no claim that the condition was a nuisance. Most, if not all, of appellant's citations relate to cases where the injury occurred upon the premises of the inviter, and not in the street or sidewalk area adjoining the premises. For example, Stockwell v. Board of Trustees, 64 Cal.App.2d 197, 148 P.2d 405, was with reference to an episode which occurred upon the Stanford University campus; Sample v. Eaton, 145 Cal.App.2d 312, 302 P.2d 431, involved a patron attending a wrestling match where another spectator threw a bottle within the premises; Winn v. Holmes, 143 Cal.App.2d 501, 299 P.2d 994, involved a patron inside of a restaurant who was assaulted by other patrons; Charonnat v. San Francisco Unified School Dist., 56 Cal.App.2d 840, 133 P.2d 643, was a school ground case where a boy was hurt by another student upon the playgrounds; Conner v. East Bay Municipal Utility Dist., 8 Cal.App.2d 613, 47 P.2d 774, 48 P.2d 982, was a case where the defendant was doing street work and negligently performed such work so as to hurt the plaintiff; Terrell v. Key System, 69 Cal.App.2d 682, 159 P.2d 704, 705, was a case of one passenger being hurt by a "milling, brawling crowd" and the conductor who saw the situation did nothing to prevent the unruly group from hurting the plaintiff; Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen, 27 Cal.2d 802, 167 P.2d 729, involved a dance hostess who was hurt upon the dance floor of the defendant by an obnoxious participant upon the dance floor; Thomas v. Studio Amusements, Inc., 50 Cal.App. 2d 538, 123 P.2d 552, involved a skating rink patron who was hit while upon the floor by a person recklessly cutting in on the skating area; Tschumy v. Brook's Market, 60 Cal.App.2d 158, 140 P.2d 431, involved a market operator who owned a parking lot adjoining the building where the market was operated, and the person injured was on the lot which was a part of the same premises on which the market was operated; Gastine v. Ewing, 65 Cal.App.2d 131, 150 P.2d 266, where a dancer was being interviewed and asked to dance upon the premises and then injured; Johnston v. De La Guerra Properties, Inc., 28 Cal.2d 394, 170 P.2d 5, where the property next door was used in conjunction with the building through a special arrangement.

We believe that the trial court was correct in granting the motion for the non-suit.

[1] The burden was upon the plaintiff to establish the elements of her case. There was no proof of negligence upon the part of the defendant, nor was there any proof of the proximate cause. Under such circumstances a motion for a non-suit, directed verdict or judgment notwithstanding the verdict is in order. Dalrymple v. Hanson, 1 Cal. 125, 127; Ringgold v. Haven, 1 Cal. 108, 117; Holmes v. Moesser, 120 Cal.App.2d 612, 262 P.2d 27; Bolar v. Maxwell Hardware Co., 205 Cal. 396, 402, 271 P. 97, 60 A.L.R. 429. And such is the rule even though the evidence is conflicting. Zito v. Weitz, 62 Cal.App.2d 161, 164, 144 P.2d 409; Nicholas v. Jacobson, 113 Cal. App. 382, 389, 298 P. 505.

It was appropriately stated in Farmer v. Fairbanks, 71 Cal.App.2d 70, at page 73, 162 P.2d 26, at page 28, involving a directed verdict, as follows:

> "The trial court has the power, in a proper case, to direct a jury to render a verdict in favor of the defendant when 'there is no substantial evidence tending to prove all the controverted facts necessary to establish the plaintiff's case. It is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence. To deprive the court of the right to exercise this power, if there be a conflict, it must be a substantial one.' Newson v. Hawley, 1928, 205 Cal. 188, 190, 270 P. 364, 365; Keller v. Markley, 1942, 50 Cal.App. 2d 155, 156, 122 P.2d 614."

And continuing at page 80 of 71 Cal.App. 2d, at page 32 of 162 P.2d, the court said:

> "* * * While all reasonable inferences are to be drawn from the evidence and all conflicts to be resolved in plaintiffs' favor, nevertheless the inferences cannot be based upon speculation or conjectures, but must be based upon 'a fact legally proved.' Code Civ.Proc. secs. 1958 and 1960. To draw from plaintiffs' evidence the inferences which they would have us draw would be to decide a question upon mere speculation and not upon facts 'legally proved.' The mere fact that an accident happened in this case is not sufficient, of course, to establish defendants' negligence. The burden rested upon plaintiffs to establish that some act or omission on the part of defendants was the proximate cause of the accident. This burden, as appears from the foregoing résumé of the evidence, the plaintiffs have failed to sustain and their evidence lacks elements of proof essential to support a determination of negligence on defendants' part. This being true, there was no evidence requiring the submission of the case to the jury."

[2] The tree, the basin around the tree and the sidewalk were all part of the public walkway, and were in no sense the premises of the defendant. There was no evidence that the defendant had anything whatever to do with any of the public walkway or sidewalk. It was stated in Schaefer v. Lenahan, 63 Cal.App.2d 324, at page 326, 146 P.2d 929:

> "The general rule is that, in the absence of statute, there is no common law duty resting upon the owner or occupant of premises abutting on a public street to keep the sidewalk in repair. Consequently, in the absence of statute, it is well settled that such an abutting owner or occupant is not liable to travelers injured as a result of defects in the sidewalk, which defects were not created by the owner or occupant. Eustace v. Jahns, 38 Cal. 3; Martinovich v. Wooley, 128 Cal. 141, 60 P. 760; Bolles v. Hilton & Paley, Inc., 119 Cal.App. 126, 6 P.2d 335; Black v. Southern Pac. Co., 124 Cal.App. 321, 12 P.2d 981."

[3] Certainly it is not the law in this state that abutting property owners are responsible for whatever might happen to two pedestrians who collide with each other upon the sidewalk in front of their property.

In a recent case, Winston v. Hansell, 160 Cal.App.2d 570, 325 P.2d 569, at page 573, the court, in affirming a judgment based upon the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, said:

"In the instant case the appellant seeks to bring the facts within the exception to the general rule by the allegation that the defendants 'did make special use of said sidewalk in that said sidewalk was used as a driveway for automobiles.' * * * All that is alleged is that the sidewalk was used as a driveway by the abutting owners, and that such constituted a 'special use' of the sidewalk by the property owners. Certainly, in this day and age, the use of a sidewalk as a driveway to the abutting property is not a peculiar or unusual use of such sidewalk. It is one of the ordinary and accustomed uses for which sidewalks are designed. Private garages cannot be built to open directly onto the street, but must be set back at least to the property line in order to allow for sidewalks upon which pedestrains may travel. The use of part of the sidewalk as a driveway is imperative in most, if not all, locations. Such use is no more peculiar or unusual than using the sidewalk for pedestrains who desire to visit the owners of the abutting property. The allegations of the complaint clearly bring the case within the scope of the rule (of non-liability) announced in the Martinovich, Sexton [Sexton v. Brooks, 39 Cal.2d 153, 245 P.2d 496] and Schaefer cases.

[4] Appellant suggests that the defendant should have supervised the people in the line on the sidewalk but failed to do so. To impose any such duty upon all of the abutting property owners, such as for example those presenting exhibitions or performances in stadiums, sporting arenas, theatres, schools, stores, etc., would be unrealistic and contrary to law. The defendant had no power over the persons upon the sidewalk and it could not expel them therefrom, and the ordinary American would give quick advice to any abutting owner who attempted to direct his activities while upon the sidewalk, assuming, of course, that during such time he was using the sidewalk he was behaving himself.

As indicated in F. W. Woolworth & Co. v. Conboy, 8 Cir., 170 F. 934, at page 936 (cited in Blodgett v. B. H. Dyas Co., 4 Cal. 2d 511, 513, 50 P.2d 801), crowds are almost a matter of course in metropolitan areas, and it was there stated:

"The crowd on the present occasion seems to have been somewhat more violent than usual. Still such crowds are often found in large stores at times of special sales, and during holiday seasons. They are an unavoidable feature of mercantile life in large cities. The defendant on the occasion in question had no reason to believe that such a sale as it was conducting would lead to any uncontrolled or violent conduct on the part of customers visiting the store, and was not therefore required to maintain its store in an unusual condition of safety to meet such an emergency. It had no reasonable cause to anticipate such violence, but, on the contrary, had a right to believe that patrons would demean themselves with a proper regard to others using the store. It was not, therefore, guilty of any negligence by reason of anything done by the crowd. * * * She [plaintiff] has met with an accident which is quite frequent, and there is nothing in this record justifying the shifting of her misfortune upon the defendant." See also, Pridgen v. S. H. Kress & Co., 213 N.C. 541, 196 S.E. 821.

In the case of Smith v. Epstein Realty Co., 133 Neb. 842, 277 N.W. 427, the plaintiff purchased some groceries in the defendant's store, then left the groceries in the store while she went down the street on another errand, intending to return and pick up the groceries. The court said (277 N.W. at page 428): "* * * plaintiff had left the store and gone a block away to shop at another store. Upon her return, and while still quite a distance away from the door leading into the store, she stepped back into a recess from the sidewalk and opened a door, and fell down a stairway leading to a billiard parlor in the basement. She had not re-entered the premises of the [defendant] and was about 40 feet therefrom when the accident occurred. It is attempted to fasten liability upon this defendant for the accident because the store had a display in the window which caused her to step back into the recess. Since when has it become negligence for a storekeeper to fill his windows with fresh stock so attractively displayed as to cause women to pause and examine it? We fail to find the allegations of negligence against the owner of the * * * store supported by sufficient evidence to require the submission of that question to the jury. (Citing cases.)" See, also, Williams v. New York Rapid Transit Corp., 272 N.Y. 366, 6 N.E.2d 58; Serlin v. City of New York, 291 N.Y. 595, 50 N.E.2d 1009; Snyder v. Salwen, 317 Pa. 531, 177 A. 789; Haley v. May Department Stores Company, Mo. App., 287 S.W.2d 366; Rincon v. Berg Co., Tex.Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 811; Fenasci v. S. H. Kress & Co., 17 La.App. 170, 134 So. 779.

In Miller v. Welworth Theatres of Wisconsin, 272 Wis. 355, 75 N.W.2d 286, the complaint set forth that patrons purchasing tickets were required, because of the contiguousness of the theatre building, ticket window and public sidewalk, to stand on the sidewalk, and after buying a ticket to walk about ten feet upon the sidewalk to the theatre entrance. It was alleged that the sidewalk was cracked and the plaintiff caught her heel in the crack while buying a ticket and was hurt. She asserted that under the circumstances the defendant had appropriated and used the sidewalk as a part of its place of business and failed to maintain it safely for the patrons. The court said (75 N.W.2d at pages 288–289):

"The allegations in the respondent's complaint do no more than claim that, because a patron of the theatre must stand on the public sidewalk adjacent to said building in order to purchase an admission ticket and because it is then necessary for said purchaser to walk approximately ten feet to the north on said public sidewalk to reach the entrance of said theatre, the result is that the sidewalk becomes a part of the theatre's place of business, and the owner is required 'to construct and maintain said area in a condition safe for use by the plaintiff.' The conclusion rests on a non-existing duty. The complaint is demurrable because it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The effort to make it appear that the described area is a place of employment may be prompted by a wish, but it cannot rise above a conclusion on the pleader's part. * * *

"* * * The municipality is responsible for the maintenance and repair of the sidewalk. We hold that the fact that in entering a store or place of business, in stopping to admire an attractive display in a show window, a patron approaches or stands on a public sidewalk does not make that pathway a part of the merchant's place of business or place of employment.

"* * * The facts alleged being inherently insufficient to create or constitute a right in favor of the respondent and against the appellant based on a duty owed by the appellant, the order overruling the demurrer must be reversed." See also, Porter v. California Jockey Club, Inc., 134 Cal.App.2d 158, 285 P.2d 60; Haberlin v. Peninsula Celebration Ass'n, 156 Cal.App.2d 404, 319 P.2d 418.

[5, 6] As we have pointed out, in the present case the event did not take place upon any premises belonging to, or under the control of the defendant. The defendant had no right, power or authority over persons upon the sidewalk, and there was no evidence of any prior negligent conduct of persons upon the sidewalk, and there was no evidence of any boisterous or unruly conduct upon the part of anyone.

The order is affirmed.

Clyde N. PALMER, Jr., Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Errol K. FLEMING and Alexander Patrick Fleming, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5771.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 13, 1959.

Action by purchaser against vendors to recover purchaser's payment under purchase option agreement providing that vendors should retain purchaser's payment in event of purchaser's failure to exercise option. The Superior Court, Riverside County, S. Thomas Bucciarelli, J., rendered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shepard, J., held that evidence warranted implied finding that purchaser never intended his first writing to be an unqualified acceptance of option in that the escrow instructions proffered by purchaser did not conform to option agreement.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1)

The District Court of Appeal views the evidence in the light most favorable to the judgment.

2. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐341(3)

In purchaser's action to recover his payment under purchase option agreement providing that vendors should retain purchaser's payment in event of purchaser's failure to exercise option, evidence warranted implied finding that purchaser never intended his first writing to be an unqualified acceptance of the option in that the escrow instructions proffered by purchaser did not conform to option agreement.

Gray, Glass & Allen, Gardena, for appellant.

Neblett, Walker & Sullivan, Riverside, for respondents.

SHEPARD, Justice.

This is an action to recover $5,000 paid by plaintiff to defendants for an option to purchase realty.

Plaintiff alleges that on May 23, 1955, the parties entered into a written agreement and option whereby for the sum of $5,000 defendants agreed to hold until August 23, 1955, at 12 noon (time being of the essence of the option), subject exclusively to the order of this plaintiff certain described realty for a total purchase price of $102,000 in cash, or secured in accordance with written escrow terms attached to and made a part of the agreement. It was further agreed that if plaintiff elected to exercise the option the $5,000 paid should be credited on the purchase price, otherwise it was to be retained by these defendants in consideration of the granting of the option and the holding of the property for plain-tiff's optional purchase. If defendants were unable to deliver title within 30 days after notice to them of the exercise of the option the consideration was to be returned. All notices were required to be delivered to Errol K. Fleming (one of the defendants herein) at 6190 Hawarden Drive, Riverside, California.

The agreement provides that the date of the opening of the escrow will be the date of the exercise of the option; that the buyer will deposit in escrow $1,000 at its opening, an additional $23,000 within 30 days thereafter, and a trust deed and note for $73,000. The agreement made further provision on the following matters: prorate of taxes as of close of escrow; delivery of title subject to covenants, conditions, restrictions and easements of record; a pipeline easement with appurtenant rights, canal stock and percentage interest in a pumping plant; usual buyer and seller escrow charges; possession to buyer as of close of escrow; usual trust deed form with a prohibition therein against removal of trees; provision for locating a well site and releasing from the trust deed lien sufficient ground to accommodate the well and new pumping plant; a provision for deeding full unencumbered title to buyer of certain lots upon payment of $7,500 (Lots 12, 15 and 16 of Monte Vista Tract, comprising about 2½ acres); provision that there be no subordination of trust deed encumbrance; provision for annual payments of $30,000 with final balance the third year, with interest at 6%; provision that if buyer fully complied with escrow by June 23, 1955, buyer entitled to entire crop with certain other crop advantages if escrow closed before June 13, 1955, otherwise crop to belong to sellers; provision for adjustment by use of second trust deed if first trust deed then on premises could not be released by close of escrow.

Plaintiff's complaint alleges that he complied with all of the conditions of the option agreement, that the defendants breached their agreement, and he is entitled to the return of the $5,000 originally deposited. Defendants' answer denies that the plaintiff ever exercised the option, and denies breach by defendants. After a full trial, the trial court found against the contentions of plaintiff and in favor of the defendants, entered judgment accordingly, and plaintiff appeals therefrom.

[1] This court on appeal is required to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the judgment. Bailey v. County of Los Angeles, 46 Cal.2d 132, 137(4), 293 P.2d 449.

[2] With that rule in mind, the evidence shows that no escrow instructions directly and unqualifiedly conforming to those contained in the original agreement were ever signed by plaintiff; that contrary to the original agreement the escrow instructions which were in fact signed by plaintiff enlarged the acreage to be released without encumbrance by about six acres; that said proffered escrow instructions provided, contrary to the original agreement, that one acre of the land would be released for each $3,000 (plus interest) paid on the balance of the purchase price, and also provided for the direct payment of the real estate broker's fee.

The amended escrow instructions so proffered contained a proviso that, if they conflicted in any way with the original agreement, the original agreement would control. Plaintiff contends that this provision, that is, that the original agreement would control the conditions of the amended proposal, made the escrow document by plaintiff a sufficient acceptance of the escrow. However, the trial court was confronted with evidence that no deed of trust as provided by the original agreement was submitted therewith, or was ever signed at any time by the plaintiff; that the only proffered escrow instructions of which notice was ever given to defendants did not conform to the original agreement; that $6,000 of the money posted in the escrow was conditioned on the execution of a crop and chattel mortgage by plaintiff to a third party covering the current crop then on the trees; that under certain conditions of the original agreement defendants were authorized to forthwith retake possession of the premises; that the original agreement prevented subordination of the seller's lien to that of the crop mortgage; that defendants were never notified of the existence and readiness for signature by them of any escrow instructions conforming to the original agreement anywhere.

> "'An option is a privilege given by the owner of property to another, to buy the property at his election. It secures the privilege to buy and is not of itself a purchase. The owner does not sell his property; he gives to another the right to buy.'" Transamerica Corporation v. Parrington, 115 Cal. App.2d 346, 352(6), 252 P.2d 385, 389.

> "It is elementary that an acceptance is required to be identical with the offer, and must be unconditional and not add any new terms thereto. If the terms of the offer are changed or added to by the acceptance, there is no meeting of the minds and no contract." Robbins v. Pacific Eastern Corp., 8 Cal.2d 241, 276(13), 65 P.2d 42, 60.

From the terms of the plaintiff's counter offer and the character of the negotiations thereafter, we think the trial court was justified in its implied finding that the plaintiff never intended his first writing to be an unqualified acceptance of the option.

The record further shows that after some negotiations and concessions by defendants to part of plaintiff's requested changes, plaintiff himself finally broke off all negotiations and terminated the escrow by his own voluntary act of withdrawing, on September 12, 1955, from further operation of the escrow all money and documents. The evidence shows there was no rejection or refusal by defendants prior to September 20, 1955, which was several days after plaintiff's termination of the escrow.

It is evident that the trial court concluded that the amended proposal under all the circumstances then present involved only a qualified acceptance of the option, and that the option agreement was never sufficiently completed to ripen into an agreement of sale.

Under the record produced in this case we cannot find that the trial court's conclusion was unsupported by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 23182.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 6, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Action by a taxpayer for declaratory relief and to recover public moneys allegedly paid out without authority of law. From an adverse judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arthur Crum, J., the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the ground that defendant serving as an executive assistant county clerk was a de facto employee in the classified service during the period in which he served in such position and that recovery could not be had against the civil service commission and the county auditor for making the payments on the ground that the payroll procedure was illegal.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Counties ⇐196(4)

Where employee was a de jure officer of county and position of executive assistant county clerk was in the classified service and the commission promulgated an eligible list for that position and examination was restricted to employees in the department of county clerk in accordance with the commission's rules and defendant was the only person to file an application for the position and in reliance on certification by the commission the defendant was appointed to the position of executive assistant county clerk and served therein and was paid the salary from the public moneys of the county, taxpayer was not entitled to recover the moneys paid to the defendant on the ground that they were allegedly paid out by the county without authority of law.

2. Counties ⇐196(4)

Taxpayer was not entitled to recover moneys paid out by county to executive assistant to the county clerk on the ground that such payments were without authority of law in that the commission had not certified to the auditor on any county payroll that the defendant was appointed or employed and was performing services during the period of the payroll where the procedure followed conformed to the requirements of the charter and the rules of the commission. County Charter of Los Angeles, §§ 11, 30 et seq., 38, St.1913, p. 1484; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 15.

3. Officers ⇐119

In action against public officer wherein it is sought to hold him personally liable for moneys paid out allegedly without authority of law the complaint must set forth the special circumstances relied on to establish liability.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiff as a taxpayer from a judgment for defendants in an action for declaratory relief and to recover public moneys allegedly paid out without authority of law. Recovery is sought from defendant William G. Sharp of salary paid to him. Liability is sought to be imposed on defendants Clifford N. Amsden, Secretary and Chief Examiner of the Civil Service Commission of the County of Los Angeles, and Joseph M. Lowery, Auditor of the County of Los Angeles, for causing to be paid and paying the salary to Sharp.

The second amended complaint in substance alleges:[1]

1. Plaintiff is a resident and taxpayer of the County of Los Angeles. On June 5, 1946 the Civil Service Commission ordered a promotional examination for the position of executive assistant in the department of the county clerk. On July 1, 1946 Sharp was given a temporary appointment as executive assistant to the county clerk. On July 5, 1946 a bulletin with respect to the examination was published by the commission. The bulletin limited applicants to employees in the department of the county clerk. Defendants, as a part of a common scheme or plan to secure the appointment of Sharp to the position of executive assistant county clerk, a position in the classified service of the county, and to pay or cause to be paid to Sharp the salary for the position, fixed and determined the requirements for participation in the promotional examination for the position. Sharp filed an application for the examination. No written or oral examination was given. On July 30, 1946 the commission promulgated an eligible list for the position which showed that Sharp was the only applicant, that no examination was held, that applicants were restricted to employees in the department of the county clerk, that Sharp was declared eligible for certification for appointment to the position despite the fact the commission determined his grade by investigation and not by competitive examination.

2. On August 2, 1946 the commission certified the name of Sharp to the county clerk as eligible for appointment to the position of executive assistant in the department of the county clerk. On August 5, 1946 Sharp was appointed to the position. He served in it until June 29, 1949 except for a period from October 6, 1948 to March 21, 1949, during which time he served as county clerk under a temporary appointment.

Recovery was sought for the county of moneys paid to Sharp as salary.

[1] The court, after a protracted trial, found: 1. At all times mentioned in the second amended complaint Sharp was a de jure officer or employee of the county. 2. At all times between July 1, 1946 and June 27, 1949 the position of executive assistant county clerk was a position in the classified service of the county. 3. The commission promulgated an eligible list for that position on July 30, 1946. 4. The applicants for the examination were restricted to employees in the department of the county clerk in accordance with rules of the commission. 5. Sharp was the only person to file an application for the position. 6. The grade of Sharp was determined by an unassembled examination based on his professional training and experience and his aptitude and personal suitability in accordance with the rules of the commission. 7. In reliance on the certification by the commission, the county clerk appointed Sharp to the position of executive assistant county clerk on August 5, 1946. 8. Sharp served in that position through and including October 5, 1948, and while so serving was paid salary from public moneys of the county. 9. On March 21, 1949 Sharp returned to the position after a leave of absence during which he held a temporary appointment as county clerk, and served as executive assistant through and including June 26, 1949 and while so serving was paid a salary. 10. It is not true that no person other than Sharp was able to file for the promotional examination for the position; at least ten persons, including plaintiff, were eligible to apply for the position. 11. Defendants are not indebted to the County of Los Angeles in any sum.

Plaintiff contends Sharp was a de facto employee in the classified service of the county during the period in which he served as executive assistant to the county clerk and therefore not entitled to the compensation paid him while serving.

Plaintiff's contention is answered by Wilson v. Los Angeles County Civil Service Com., 103 Cal.App.2d 426, 229 P.2d 406. That was a proceeding in mandamus to compel the Civil Service Commission of the County of Los Angeles to annul its order denying the appeal of the petitioner, Wilson, plaintiff here, from an examination for chief deputy county clerk and from the determination of the efficiency of Sharp; to annul the eligible lists created by the commission for the positions of executive assistant to the county clerk and chief deputy county clerk and for a determination that the appointments of Sharp to such positions on August 5, 1946 and June 28, 1949, respectively, were unlawful and void. The petition alleged substantially the same facts as are alleged in the present case. The trial court denied the writ.

Holding on review that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for relief by writ of mandamus, the court stated (103 Cal.App.2d 432, 229 P.2d 410):

> "Under Article IX of the County Charter establishing civil service, it is incumbent upon the respondent commission to adopt and enforce such rules and regulations as may be proper and necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of such article. As stated in Almassy v. Los Angeles County Civil Service Com., 34 Cal. 2d 387, 396, 210 P.2d 503: 'It is manifest from the provisions of the charter and rules above quoted that subject to the limitation that "all examinations shall be impartial and shall deal with the duties and requirements of the position to be filled", Art. IX, sec. 36; rule VII, § 3, the civil service commission has been given broad discretionary powers in determining the subjects of examination and the qualifications which are to be measured. [Citations.] Judicial interference under such circumstances is unjustified except on a showing of arbitrary, fraudulent, or capricious conduct, or a clear abuse of discretion. [Citations.]'

"Turning again to the allegations of the instant petition, appellant first charges that as to the examination for chief deputy county clerk, the secretary and chief examiner for the commission, 'wilfully, but without lawful authority' changed the five year requirement of 'administering or managing the personnel and activities of a major division of the Department of County Clerk', as set forth in the original bulletin, to 'administering or managing or assisting in the administration or management of the personnel and activities of the Department of County Clerk, or administering or managing a major division thereof.'

"Pursuant to an order of this court granting appellant's application for leave to produce additional evidence, a certified copy of rule V of the respondent commission is now before us. This provides that 'subject to the direction and approval of the Commission', the secretary and chief examiner 'shall have charge of all matters pertaining to the preparation and conduct of examinations', down to the smallest detail, including the preparation and posting of official bulletins.

"Appellant next complains that the examination for chief deputy county clerk was void because limited to employees in the department of county clerk; that such examination should have been an interdepartmental promotional examination. This was a promotional examination and was given in accordance with a rule of the commission providing for two types of promotional examinations: (a) Departmental and (b) Inter-departmental.

"As heretofore stated, appellant's main complaint is that the respondent commission had no right to permit Mr. Sharp to take the examination for chief deputy county clerk based upon a void appointment to the position of executive assistant county clerk. The latter appointment was made from an eligible list, a copy of which is here in evidence. True, it contains only one name. But it shows that its basis was an 'Unassembled examination' and that the candidates were 'Rated on their professional training and experience and their aptitude and personal suitability as evidenced by investigation.' It is a matter of common knowledge that written examinations are often waived in the selection of appointees for positions in the civil service, particularly in those fields requiring special or professional training.

"The respondent commission is vested under the county charter with a high discretion, and the instant petition is insufficient to show an abuse thereof." [2]

2. Various facets of this action have also been considered in Wilson v. Los Angeles County Civil Service Com., 95 Cal.App. 2d 51, 212 P.2d 260; Wilson v. Los Angeles County Civil Service Com., 97 Cal. App.2d 777, 218 P.2d 547; Wilson v. Los Angeles County Civil Service Com., 106 Cal.App.2d 572, 235 P.2d 620; Wilson v. Los Angeles County Civil Service Com., 126 Cal.App.2d 679, 273 P.2d 34, and Wilson v. Sharp, 42 Cal.2d 675, 268 P.2d 1062.

[2] The second amended complaint also alleges that since August 5, 1946 the commission has not at any time certified to the auditor, Lowery, on any payroll of the county that Sharp was appointed or employed and was performing service during the period of the payrolls in accordance with article IX of the charter of the county and the rules of the commission, as the commission was required to do as a condition precedent to the auditor approving any salary by reason of the provisions of section 38 of Article IX of the charter; unless restrained, Lowery will continue to approve for payment the monthly salary warrants of Sharp without the certification required by section 38 of article IX of the charter.

With respect to these allegations the court found: 1. At all times since August 5, 1946 the account for salary and compensation of Sharp has borne the certificate of the commission that Sharp was appointed and employed and was performing services for the county in accordance with article IX of the charter and the rules of the commission established thereunder. 2. The certification was made in the form approved by the auditor and the commission pursuant to discretion vested in them by the provisions of section 85 of ordinance 4099 of the county, added by ordinance 4354 on June 2, 1944. 3. The facts alleged in this connection have been well known to plaintiff since August 5, 1946 but he has, nevertheless, delayed bringing this action for an unreasonable and unnecessary period of time, and the unreasonable delay was prejudicial to the defendants. 4. During this period of delay, Lowery has approved the payment of many hundreds of thousands of payroll warrants to employees in the classified service of the county in amounts totaling many millions of dollars pursuant to administrative procedures which were adopted by the county and which are substantially identical to those pursuant to which payments to Sharp were made. 5. It would be highly prejudicial to Lowery and to the thousands of employees in the classified service of the county to permit plaintiff to attack this procedure at this late date. 6. Since August 5, 1946 plaintiff Wilson has been an employee in the classified service of the county and at all times has received and continues to receive salary warrants for compensation issued and approved by Lowery pursuant to administrative procedures adopted by the county about July 1, 1945. 7. Plaintiff has not at any time refused to accept salary warrants so paid to him as such classified employee and has not questioned the legality of the administrative procedures until the filing of this action on December 3, 1951.

Plaintiff contends the payroll procedure was illegal and that as a result of such illegality the moneys paid to Sharp as salary were unlawfully paid.

Section 38 of article IX of the charter of the County of Los Angeles reads:

> "The auditor shall not approve any salary or compensation for services to any person holding or performing the duties of a position in the classified service, unless the payroll or account for such salary or compensation shall bear the certificate of the commission that the persons named therein have been appointed or employed and are performing service in accordance with the provisions of this article and of the rules established thereunder."

(Stats.1913, c. 5, pp. 1484–1496. Emphasis ours.) The rules of the commission contain an identical provision.

Section 11 of article III of the charter provides the following among the duties of the board of supervisors:

> "To provide, publish and enforce, a complete code of rules, not inconsistent with general laws or this Charter, prescribing in detail the duties, and the systems of office and institutional management, accounts and reports for each of the offices, institutions and departments of the county."

Pursuant to this command the board of supervisors on June 2, 1944 adopted ordinance 4354 which provides:

"Payrolls: How Prepared. The Auditor shall prepare all payrolls in the manner and upon the forms prescribed by him. Each department head shall be responsible for maintaining his departments' personnel and time records and shall certify such information as is necessary in the preparation of the payroll to the County Auditor and the Civil Service Commission at the time and upon the forms prescribed by the County Auditor and approved by the Civil Service Commission."

The procedure for the preparation of payrolls or accounts for salary or compensation of persons holding or performing the duties of a position in the classified service was as follows: When a person was appointed to a civil service position an incoming report was prepared in triplicate by the department in which the person was employed. Two copies of this report were submitted to the Civil Service Commission where the report was checked to determine whether the employee had been appointed in accordance with civil service requirements. The commission then certified one copy and forwarded it to the auditor. From this report a tab card was cut, permitting the mechanical preparation of the payroll or account and of the salary warrant. If there was any change in the civil service status of the employee a change-of-status report was prepared. The change-of-status report was, in turn, certified by the commission, forwarded to the auditor, and a new card prepared for the employee. The certification of the commission consisted of a rubber stamp on the incoming report and on the change-of-status report reading "Approved: Civil Service Commission (date)." The stamp was initialed by an authorized representative of the commission. If an employee's employment was terminated, an outgoing report was prepared, certified by the commission, and sent to the auditor.

The change-of-status report from which the payroll account of Sharp was made up bore the certificate of the commission at all times. It showed his number as an employee, that his position was executive assistant in the department of the county clerk, that his position was permanent, that he had been certified, the beginning date of his employment, his schedule number, his salary rate, his retirement rate, and the retirement amount. It was approved by the commission and dated by a rubber stamp, and initialed by an authorized representative of the commission. There was evidence that all change-of-status reports with the exception of absence reports are certified to the auditor by the commission, certifying that a person has been duly appointed to a particular position, that he is performing the services indicated on the report, that it is unnecessary for the commission to report to the auditor the employee is still performing the services for each salary warrant, and that the commission has so indicated until a new change-of-status report is certified to the auditor by the commission.[3]

3. Mr. Nichols, Chief of the Special Claims Division of the Department of Audit and Controller in the department of Auditor Lowery, testified: "An employee is hired by a department. There is a report called an incoming report that is prepared by the department, or the County Clerk in this particular case. It is submitted to the Civil Service. They check the report, itself, to determine that the employee has been certified to the position as shown on the report. They certify to the Auditor. The Auditor checks it as to salary for the position that has been approved by Civil Service. We then proceed to punch a tabulating card with all of the pertinent information, and that card is then filed in a regular tab card file and is kept there until such time as it is necessary to write a payroll, and that card is used continually, month after month, until such time as there is a change that may come through for the employee. Then that change is reflected, and that is done with all employees within the County Clerk's office, or the entire county service for that matter. That card remains in the file even after the change is made until that employee may be relieved of the county service and then it is removed. Generally speaking, that is a brief summary of how we maintain the records for all employees. * * * As

The change-of-status reports, certified as they were by the commission, constituted certificates of the commission on the account for the employee's salary or compensation that the person named therein had been employed or appointed and was per-

I understand it, Mr. Nichols, when making up a payroll, you refer to the tab card to see if the employee is still employed, is that correct? A. That is correct. * * *

"Q. Now, does the change of status report show that William G. Sharp has been appointed or is employed and is performing services in accordance with the provisions of Article IX of the County Charter? A. That is the object of the approval of Civil Service, that they are making that certification that the services are performed and Mr. Sharp is employed in accordance with that provision. * * * In this particular case, in the case of Mr. Sharp the only report that we have is a change of status report. The last one is dated effective 6–27–49 to the position of Chief Deputy County Clerk. * * * All of the reports, with the exception of an absence report, is certified to the Auditor by the Civil Service, that the person is properly performing, employed, and is performing, the services as indicated on the report. From that point on we feel it unnecessary for the Civil Service Department to report to us that the employee is still performing the services. They have so indicated on the reports from which our records are prepared.

"Q. In other words, once you receive a report, you assume that the employee continues on in that position until you are notified by the Civil Service Commission of a change, is that correct? A. We have no reason to believe otherwise, that he is not. We have some 37,000 county employees, and we have to adopt some— * * *

"Q. By Mr. Davis: Mr. Nichols, in the ordinary course of events since 1949, have these change of status reports been prepared on some specific type of form? A. The form, itself, which you have there, I think, is perhaps the latest design that we are using. The Department prepares the form. It is one that is filled out by the Department. The design of the form originates in Civil Service, in conjunction with our own Department.

"Q. You mean the original design of that form was prepared— A. Drawn.

"Q. Drawn by Civil Service Department and the County Auditor's Department in conjunction with each other, is that right? A. Yes, that is right.

"Q. And then these forms, I assume, are they distributed to every County Department throughout the County? A. That is right.

"Q. Now, if there is a change of status in a particular employee, who fills out the form? A. The affected department.

"Q. I see. Then what happens to the form? A. The form then is routed to the Civil Service Commission for checking as to accuracy, and then—one copy of it reaches the Auditor. If you will notice, the form is so designated, Departments: Auditor, Civil Service. The original remains with the Civil Service and the Auditor gets the second copy, and the third copy is retained by the Department.

"Q. Then those forms are always prepared in triplicate? A. That is right.

"Q. And they are routed from the department to the Civil Service Commission, is that right? A. That is right.

"Q. And then you, in turn, the County Auditor gets the second copy? A. That is right.

"Q. And then after it reaches your department, what happens to it? A. It is checked by our own employees to determine that certain information is correct. It is then sent to our tabulating unit of our payroll section where the pertinent information is either punched originally into a card and then filed or if it is a change of status such as this, the only information that is changed is necessary to be punched into the card, into a new card, and it is then filed for future processing in payrolls.

"Q. Mr. Nichols, I will show you a form here that says 'Incoming Report.' What is that form used for? A. That is for new employees coming into the service or into any department.

"Q. And again, is that in triplicate? A. That is in triplicate, first, second third copies, and they go to the departments as indicated.

"Q. This one has stamped on the bottom, 'Approved, Civil Service Commission' with a date and initial. Is that on the blank form or is that just on this example? A. No, that is just on this example.

"Q. To show the manner in which it is certified? A. That is right. * * *

"Q. By Mr. Davis: I will next show you a form marked 'Outgoing Report.'

forming service. All the auditor needed to do was to check the change-of-status report against the salary ordinance and ascertain that the position was in the ordinance and that the rate of pay was as it was there fixed. Under ordinance 4354 the department head certifies personnel and time records to the auditor and to the commission. The commission and the auditor did everything required of them by the charter, ordinance 4354, and the rules of the commission. Under the procedure followed the records in the auditor's office cannot differ from those in the commission's office. We think it manifest that the procedure followed conformed to the requirements of the charter and the rules of the commission. Cf. In re Smith, 33 Cal.2d 797, 800–801, 205 P.2d 662; Galli v. Brown, 110 Cal.App.2d 764, 781, 243 P.2d 920. It is presumed that official duty has been regularly performed. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 15. Plaintiff's claim that public moneys were illegally paid to Sharp by reason of the payroll procedure is wholly without merit.

[3] On June 27, 1949 Sharp was appointed chief deputy county clerk in the department of the county clerk. There is much discussion in the briefs of plaintiff-appellant with respect to that appointment. That question is not before us. The complaint is silent with respect to that appointment. No facts are alleged and no findings were made with respect to it. The only allegation in the complaint with respect to any period after June 26, 1949 is that defendants are indebted to the County of Los Angeles for public moneys of the county paid to Sharp after June 28, 1949, and the court found that no one of defendants is indebted to plaintiff for public moneys of the county paid to Sharp. In an action against public officers in which it is sought to hold them personally liable, the com-

Can you tell us what that is used for? A. That report is used when employees are leaving the County Service and it, too, is in triplicate and requires a certification of the Civil Service, and on that we show the outgoing earnings of the employee.

It has a pay location number. It has a tax class number. It has a code as to whether or not he is a member of AID, which is a charitable organization within the city to eliminate the necessity for annual solitication for welfare needs. It has the rate of pay. It has the retirement percentage. I believe that is all. * * *

"Q. Mr. Nichols, will you show me on the original change of status report which we have a copy in evidence, Exhibit 30, where the seal of the Civil Service Commission appears? A. The reports do not bear a seal as such. They bear a rubber stamp, 'Approved, Civil Service Commission,' and the date.

"Q. Have you a rubber stamp approval? A. That is right.

"Q. I see. In fact, it is not even signed by an individual, is it? A. It is initialed by an individual. That is this here.

"Q. And it is the rubber stamp of the Commission? A. That is right."

METROPOLITAN WATER DISTRICT OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, a public corporation, Petitioner,

v.

Fred A. HEILBRON, as Secretary of the Board of Directors of The Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, Respondent.

No. 23581.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 19, 1959.

Original proceeding in mandate was brought by metropolitan water district against the secretary of the board of directors of the district to compel the secretary to publish a notice inviting proposals for an issue of waterworks bonds authorized by an ordinance and a resolution adopted by board of directors. The District Court of Appeal, Patrosso, J. pro tempore, held that in determining whether bonds of metropolitan water district, which has been organized under the Metropolitan Water District Act, will create an "indebtedness" in excess of statutory debt limitation set forth in provision of the act that "indebtedness" outstanding at any time shall not exceed 50% of aggregate amount of special taxes thereafter to be levied by district pursuant to authority of the act, interest to accrue on the bonds in the future should not be considered as "indebtedness."

Peremptory writ issue as prayed for.

1. Mandamus ⇐103

Mandamus was an appropriate remedy for metropolitan water district to compel secretary of board of directors of district to publish notice inviting proposals for bonds, if proposed bond issue met requirement of law, since action demanded of secretary was "ministerial." PATROSSO, Justice pro tem.

This is an original proceeding in mandate instituted by the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, hereinafter referred to as the "district," against the respondent, the secretary of its board of directors, to compel the latter to publish a notice inviting proposals for an issue of $26,400,000 waterworks bonds, series 4, authorized by an ordinance and a resolution adopted by the district's board of directors. The respondent has made return by general demurrer.

The district is a public corporation organized under the statute known as the "Metropolitan water district act" (Stats.1927, ch. 429, p. 694) and amendments thereto, West's Ann.Water Code App. § 35–1 et seq., hereinafter referred to as the "Act." On June 5, 1956, a special election was held in the district pursuant to the provisions of section 7.3 of the Act for the purpose of submitting to the qualified voters of the district a proposal, substantially in the language set forth in said section 7.3, authorizing the district to incur indebtedness from time to time for the purpose of constructing or installing additional works or facilities for development, transportation and distribution of water. At said election more than a majority of the qualified voters of the district voting on such proposal at said election voted in favor thereof.

Pursuant to such authorization and in accordance with sections 7.2 (Stats.1955, ch. 1400, p. 2513) and 7.3 (Stats.1957, ch. 1, p. 277) the district prior to October 28, 1958, issued three series of bonds aggregating in principal amount $51,000,000 of which an amount of $48,250,000 will remain outstanding and unpaid on April 1, 1959.

On October 28, 1958, pursuant to said authorization and in accordance with sections 7.2 and 7.3 of the Act the district's board of directors duly adopted ordinance Number 93 authorizing the issuance of $26,400,000 waterworks bonds, series 4, said bonds to be dated April 1, 1959, and payable in 12 equal annual installments commencing April 1, 1960, with interest at a rate to be fixed upon the sale thereof but not to exceed 4½ per cent per annum. By said resolution its secretary, respondent herein, was directed to publish notice inviting sealed proposals for said series 4 bonds. The respondent has refused to publish such notice upon the asserted ground that the ordinance and resolution purporting to authorize the issuance and sale of said bonds are invalid.

The basic question presented is whether or not the series 4 bonds hereinabove referred to will, when added to the other three series of bonds heretofore issued, create an indebtedness in excess of the statutory debt limitation set forth in section 7.2(a) of the Act as amended, to the effect that "such indebtedness so incurred outstanding at any time shall not exceed fifty (50) per cent of the aggregate amount of special taxes thereafter to be levied by the district pursuant to the authority of Section 9."

If the principal or face amount of the bonds constitutes the "indebtedness," as this word is used in the statute, the district is entitled to the relief sought, as the aggregate of all bonds including series 4 will be $74,650,000 and the special taxes to be levied by the district pursuant to section 9 of the Act from and after April 1, 1959, will be $153,623,000. If, however, the interest to accrue on such bonds must be included in "such indebtedness" as well as the principal, the debt limitation will be exceeded as to all fiscal years from 1963–1964 to and including 1970–1971.

The question as to whether the word "indebtedness" as used in constitutional and statutory debt limitation provisions includes or excludes interest to accrue on bonds has never been passed upon by the courts of this state. However, the overwhelming authority elsewhere is to the effect that the word does not include interest to accrue on the bonds. The rationale of the authorities so declaring is well summarized in an annotation in 100 A.L.R. 610, as follows: "The interpretation given to the words 'debt,' or 'indebtedness,' as used in constitutional or statutory provisions governing the limitation of the amount to which a city may become indebted, may be said to be the deciding factor in determining whether interest on its indebtedness is to be considered as a part of the total indebtedness of a municipality.

"Nearly all jurisdictions incline toward the view expressed by the court in Epping v. Columbus (1903) 117 Ga. 263, 43 S.E. 803, that the word 'debt,' when appearing in a constitution, is to be taken in its ordinary, natural, common-sense, popular meaning, unless the context requires that it should be treated as used in a technical sense. 'If a person unversed in the technical niceties of the law is asked what is the amount of his debts, his answer to the question in every instance would be an amount which would represent the present liability that he was under at the moment the question was answered. A farmer who had been so unfortunate as to be compelled to place a long loan upon his farm, if asked what was the amount of the debt upon his farm, would unhesitatingly answer by giving an amount which would represent the principal of the debt and any interest that was past due and payable at the time the inquiry was made. One who, in making a return of his property for taxation, is required to state to the tax receiver the amount of solvent debts due him, would not, in the case of a perfectly solvent debt, consider that he was under a moral obligation to return for taxation the value of the debt at any higher amount than one which would represent the principal and any interest that was past due at the time the return was made. It is useless to multiply illustrations. The "debt" of an individual or a corporation or the public, in its usual and popular sense, means the amount for which the individual or corporation or the public would be presently liable if called upon to discharge the obligation. The law deals at all points with the man of ordinary prudence and average capacity as the standard, for the simple reason that communities and commonwealths are made up of persons of this class.'" [1]

We find nothing in the language of the debt limitation provisions of the statute here to suggest a different result. On the contrary, an examination of the pertinent provisions thereof but serves to confirm the conclusion that the word "indebtedness" as used therein refers to the amount of the debt created by the issuance of bonds and has no reference to the amount of interest which will thereafter accrue thereon.

Section 7.2(a) which contains the debt limitation provision reads in part as follows: "Sec. 7.2(a) Whenever the board of directors, by ordinance adopted by a vote of three-fourths of the total vote of the board, shall find * * * that public interest requires the incurring of indebtedness for the purpose of providing moneys for the construction or installation of such additional works or facilities, such board of directors may authorize the incurring of such indebtedness and may authorize the issuance and sale of notes or other evidence of indebtedness for such purpose either in one block or in installments; provided, however, that all such indebtedness so incurred shall be subject to the following limitations: (1) such indebtedness so incurred outstanding at any time shall not exceed fifty (50) percent of the aggregate amount of special taxes thereafter to be levied by the district pursuant to the authority of Section 9 hereof and annexation proceedings concluded thereunder, or one (1) percent of the assessed valuation of property within the district taxable for district purposes, whichever shall be the lesser; (2) the interest payable on such indebtedness shall not exceed six (6) percent per annum payable semiannually; (3) the term of such indebtedness shall not exceed twelve (12) years; and (4) the whole amount of such indebtedness or of the respective installment thereof, depending upon whether the notes or other evidence of such indebtedness shall be issued in one block or in installments, shall be made payable in substantially equal annual parts during the term of such indebtedness or installment thereof, as the case may be. * * * The proceeds of any borrowing hereunder (other than accrued interest) shall be applied solely to the purpose specified in the ordinance authorizing the incurring of such indebtedness or to the retirement of the principal of the obligation issued pursuant to such ordinance. Any accrued interest received shall be applied to payment of interest on such indebtedness." (Italics ours.)

A reading of the foregoing provision discloses that it contains several distinct limitations, some applicable to the "indebtedness" and others relating to the interest payable thereon which clearly suggests that "indebtedness" has reference only to the principal of the debt created by the bonds issued pursuant to the authority therein conferred upon the district.

Further confirmation of the correctness of this conclusion is found in section 7.2(c) relating to the tax to be levied for the purpose of servicing the bonds which in part reads as follows: "(c) * * * the board of directors shall, at the time of fixing the tax levy and in the manner for such tax levy provided, levy and collect annually until such indebtedness shall be paid or until there shall be a sum in the treasury of the district set apart for that purpose, sufficient to meet all sums coming due for principal and interest thereon, a tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness, or such part thereof as shall not be met from other income and revenues of the district, as such interest becomes due, and also sufficient to pay such part of the principal thereof as shall become due before the time when money will be available from the next general tax levy, or such portion thereof as shall not be met from other income and revenues of the district. The taxes herein required to be levied and collected shall be in addition to all other taxes levied for district purposes, shall not be limited by the provisions of Section 5, subdivision (8) hereof and shall be collected at the time and in the same manner as other district taxes are collected and shall be used for no purpose other than the payment of such indebtedness and interest accruing thereon." (Italics ours.)

[2] Inasmuch as the district is required to levy a tax for the payment of the indebtedness and also for the interest thereon it is evident that the former does not include the latter. Apposite, here, is the following quotation from Wright v. Stapp-Zoe Consol. School Dist. No. 1, 1942, 190 Okl. 289, 123 P.2d 281, 283: "Plaintiffs' third contention raises the question of whether interest on the bonds to be issued may be considered in determining whether the issue exceeds the five per cent debt limit specified in section 26, article 10 of the state constitution, O.S.1941. Plaintiffs contend that interest must be computed and added to the principal of the proposed bonds in figuring the amount of the debt. No case so holding is cited, and we know of none. The law is to the contrary. (Citations.)

"That such is the proper construction of section 26, article 10 is apparent from a reading of the section. After using the term 'indebtedness' it provides for the collection of a sufficient tax annually to 'pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due' and for a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof. This clearly indicates that by the term 'indebtedness' was meant only the amount of the indebtedness at the date it was contracted, and interest thereon to accrue in the future was not included."

We see nothing in Provident Mut. Building-Loan Ass'n v. Davis, 143 Cal. 253, 76 P. 1034, cited by respondent, which would support the conclusion that the word "indebtedness" includes interest to accrue thereon in the future. The sole question there was whether a counterclaim pleaded by the defendant which merely alleged that at the date of the filing of the plaintiff's action the latter was indebted to him in a certain sum stated a cause of action. The language quoted from the opinion by respondent was used by the court in support of its conclusion that the pleading was insufficient because it failed to allege as then required by Code of Civil Procedure, section 438, that the claimed indebtedness was due at the time of the filing of the plaintiff's complaint; the court observing that one may be indebted and yet not obligated to pay because the time for payment had not arrived. This, however, does not suggest that the word "indebtedness" refers to both the amount of the principal of a debt and the interest to accrue thereon in the future. Moreover, as said in Bair v. Layton City Corporation, 1957, 6 Utah 2d 138, 307 P.2d 895, 901: "[T]he terms 'debt' and 'indebtedness' as used in constitutional debt limitations of municipalities 'is [sic] given a meaning much less broad and comprehensive than it bears in general usage.'"

Having concluded that the word "indebtedness" does not include interest to accrue thereon in the future, the bonds proposed to be issued by the petitioner do not violate the debt limitation of the statute and it is the duty of the respondent to publish the notice inviting proposals therefor.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES, a municipal corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 22974.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 19, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 18, 1959.

Action against the city for death of employee of a sewer contractor when a pile-driving rig operated by him toppled over on its side crushing the employee to death when an old sewer lying under the path of the proposed construction collapsed. From an order granting the plaintiffs a new trial in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Frederick F. Houser, J., the city appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that there was no basis in the evidence for charging the inspectors of the city with notice of the dangerous condition and hence the city was not liable for the death of the employee.

Order reversed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐1015(1)

Unless as a matter of law a judgment in favor of movant would find no support in the evidence, granting of a motion for new trial upon the ground of insufficiency of evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇐840

In action for death of employee of contractor engaged in construction of sewer for city, if both the contractor and city were guilty of negligence which contributed proximately to the accident, the negligence of the contractor would not relieve the city from liability. West's Ann.Gov. Code, § 53051.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐991
Municipal Corporations ⇐847

A "dangerous and defective condition" of public property within the statute imposing liability on a city therefor is one that creates an unreasonable hazard, or one from which injury to those coming in contact with it might reasonably be anticipated, and ordinarily the question whether the condition is dangerous is one of fact, not one of law for the reviewing court. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Dangerous and Defective Condition".

4. Appeal and Error ⇐867(2)

An order granting plaintiffs a new trial implied that the trial court determined that all facts essential to the existence of defendants' liability were established by the weight of evidence, and the scope of review with respect to the findings on which the latter was based was the same as it would be if in a court trial findings had been made of all of the essential facts.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐1015(3)

It is the exclusive function of the trial court in ruling on a motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of evidence to determine whether the verdict is supported by the weight of the evidence.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐1015(1)

If any one of the trial court's implied findings of essential facts is without substantial support in the evidence, an order granting a new trial to plaintiffs for insufficiency of evidence was improper and must be reversed.

7. New Trial ⇐65

It is error to grant a new trial unless the evidence would warrant a judgment in favor of the moving party.

8. Municipal Corporations ⇐839

In action for death of employee of sewer construction contractor when drilling rig toppled over because of collapse of an abandoned sewer below the surface of the street, general knowledge of the city inspectors of the manner in which the excavation and removal of the old sewer was being done would not place on the city a duty to warn the employee that the method of operation was unsafe, unless the inspectors knew or by ordinary care should have known that the operation entailed an unreasonable risk. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

9. Municipal Corporations ⇐723, 742(5)

Liability of a municipality is for negligence which is not presumed and under the statutory liability there can be no negligence in failing to repair or to give warning of a condition unless it is one which is known or by ordinary care would be known to impose an unreasonable risk of injury. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

10. Municipal Corporations ⇐723

Municipal liability statute cannot be given an application that would render the municipality an insurer against accidents but knowledge of the dangerous nature of the condition must be shown in order to impose liability on city. West's Ann.Gov. Code, § 53051.

11. Municipal Corporations ⇐723

Under the municipal liability statute, it is the obviously dangerous character of the defect and not alone its size which the municipality must take notice of and repair. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

12. Municipal Corporations ⇐723

A municipality is chargeable with knowledge of conditions which would be disclosed by reasonable inspection and conducted in the exercise of ordinary care. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

Appeal by the City of Los Angeles from an order granting plaintiffs a new trial in an action under the Public Liability Act (Government Code, § 53051), for the wrongful death of Treva Ellis. The verdict of the jury was in favor of the defendant; upon a former trial the jury had disagreed.

In October 1953, the city entered into a contract with Ellis' employer, Peter Kiewit & Sons, Inc., and another firm for the construction of a new sewer. The contractors also undertook to remove an old abandoned 54-inch segmented tile and cement sewer lying directly in the path of the proposed sewer construction. The old sewer extended underneath the paved surface of Jefferson Boulevard between Rodeo Road and Higuera Street, a distance of approximately 1,100 feet. As Ellis was operating a pile-driving rig on Jefferson at a point midway between Rodeo and Higuera, the old sewer caved in and the rig toppled over on its right side, crushing him to death. At the location of the accident the sewer was 3½ feet below the surface of the street.

Plaintiffs are the widow and two minor children of Ellis. Their theory of recovery was that the existence of an abandoned sewer 3½ feet below the surface of the street constituted a dangerous and defective condition of public property, that the city had knowledge of the condition, and that it was liable to them in damages for failing to warn Ellis of the danger. Gov. Code, § 53051. Plaintiffs made a motion for new trial, which was granted upon the ground that the verdict was clearly against the weight of the evidence.

[1] We have examined the transcript in the light of the well-established principle that unless, as a matter of law, a judgment in favor of the moving party would find no support in the evidence, the granting of a motion for new trial upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence will not be disturbed on appeal. Brooks v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 27 Cal.2d 305, 163 P.2d 689; Richardson v. Ham, 44 Cal. 2d 772, 285 P.2d 269.

Jefferson Boulevard between Rodeo and Higuera was a heavily travelled thoroughfare, having a normal black-top surface and no noticeable defects or depressions. The city withdrew from public use and assigned exclusively to the contractors a 12-foot strip running along the north side of Jefferson from Rodeo to Higuera. Before work commenced, employes of the city had marked on the pavement within the 12-foot strip the center line of the proposed sewer as a guide for the contractors' employes.

The excavation of the old sewer and installation of the new proceeded as follows. First, two parallel slit trenches, each 18 inches wide and 10 feet deep, were dug along the outer edges of the 12-foot strip; dirt was removed from the trenches. Next, Ellis drove his rig along the strip and drove 36-foot steel pilings into the trenches along the outer walls. He backed along the strip, setting five pilings on one side, then moved forward and backed up over the same area, setting an equal number of pilings on the other side. An excavating rig operated by Ellis' co-worker, Kinsey, then removed the dirt and other materials between the two rows of pilings; steel was set and concrete poured for the new sewer; the excavation was then back-filled, the pilings extracted and the street re-surfaced.

Ellis' rig, together with its attachments, weighed approximately 71 tons and was 11 feet 6 inches wide. It operated on 15-foot tracks, each 33 inches wide. The rig had 8,400 pounds of counterweight. The pilings dropped of their own weight to the bottom of the trenches and were driven into the ground further by means of a steam hammer which struck between 85 and 130 blows per minute, exercising a force of 13,500 pounds. Vibrations caused by the hammer blows could be distinctly felt by persons standing several hundred feet away from the rig.

As we have said, the old sewer was found to be 3½ feet below the surface at the place where the accident occurred. According to the plans furnished to Ellis' employer by the city, the sewer was between 3 and 3½ feet deep along Jefferson Boulevard to a point 600 feet west of Rodeo. The plans were kept in the Kiewit office at the job site. Ward White, Kiewit's project superintendent, had checked them before work started and knew what they disclosed about the location of the old sewer. He gave this information to Brigance, the pile superintendent, but he did not disclose it to Ellis or to Wampler, Ellis' foreman and immediate superior. Wampler and Kinsey both testified that they had no knowledge of what the plans disclosed about the depth of the old sewer.

Workmen excavating at the corner of Higuera and Jefferson some time before Ellis' accident discovered that the old sewer was 11 feet below the surface. About a week before Ellis' death, Kinsey was excavating on Jefferson at a point approximately 75 feet west of Rodeo. His rig, which was somewhat lighter than Ellis', sank into a segment of the old sewer which had collapsed due to trenching operations undertaken to run off some excess water; the exposed sewer was found to be between 8½ and 9 feet below the surface at that location. Kinsey told Ellis what had occurred. In order to prevent a recurrence, Kinsey was told by his superiors to operate his rig across rather than lengthwise of the 12-foot strip.

John Bannister and Albert Anderson were city inspectors employed full-time at the job site. The former was senior engineer for the Board of Public Works, the agency charged with the maintenance of streets and sewers in Los Angeles, and the latter was his assistant. Both men were familiar with the equipment and methods used in sewer construction; according to Bannister, Ellis' employer used normal methods and equipment. The inspectors testified that their duties consisted in making sure that the work proceeded in accordance with the plans and specifications; they had no authority to direct the contractors as to the manner of doing the work and it was established that they gave no directions. The inspectors were familiar with the maps kept in Kiewit's office and knew that the sewer was 3½ feet below the surface of Jefferson Boulevard at the point where Ellis later had his fatal accident. They were also familiar with the circumstances of Kinsey's accident. Bannister attended weekly safety meetings held for Kiewit's foremen at which times measures for the protection of the general public were discussed. Although it took Ellis approximately two weeks to drive pilings from Rodeo to the location of the accident, a distance of 525 feet, and although they observed him daily, the inspectors did not inform him of the depth of the old sewer and did not suggest to his superiors the possibility that the sewer might collapse under the rig.

Ward White testified that although he had seen the maps and knew that the sewer was deeper at both ends on Jefferson than the maps indicated, he made no effort to test their accuracy. This was for the reason that the sewer was a gravity-flow sewer, and he assumed that its depth would vary between 8½ feet at Rodeo and 11 feet at Higuera. White testified, as did Bannister and Anderson, that the possibility that the sewer might give way under Ellis' rig had never occurred to him.

Thomas C. Shields, an expert witness called by plaintiffs, gave his opinion that the weight of Ellis' rig, if distributed evenly over the ground, would be about 2,900 pounds per square foot on the surface; if only one-fourth of the area of the treads rested on the ground, the weight per square foot would be 11,600 pounds on the surface. In his opinion, a rig would not tip over unless only one-fourth to one-third of its treads rested on the ground. He also stated his opinion that the trenches cut by the contractors tended to deprive the sewer of lateral support. In White's opinion, the pressure per square foot exerted by the rig when only one-fourth of its tread area rested on the ground would be approximately 130 pounds at a point 4 feet below the surface of the street. If a rig is properly counterweighted and if an excessive weight is not placed on the boom, the tracks will remain flat on the ground and the weight of the rig will be evenly distributed over the area occupied by the machine.

[2] The city contends that the method employed by the contractor was the sole cause of the accident and that it cannot be held liable for the negligence of an independent contractor. Plaintiffs do not contend that the city would be liable for the contractor's negligence but correctly assert that if both were guilty of negligence which contributed proximately to the accident the negligence of the contractor would not relieve the city of liability. Irvin v. Padelford, 127 Cal.App.2d 135, 141, 273 P.2d 539; Bady v. Detwiler, 127 Cal.App.2d 321, 333, 273 P.2d 941, and cases cited. The question is whether the city was negligent.

If liability existed on the part of the city it was by virtue of its duty under the Public Liability Act. Under section 53051 of the Government Code, a city is liable for personal injuries resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of public property if the legislative body, board or person authorized to remedy it had knowledge or notice of the dangerous or defective condition and for a reasonable time after acquiring knowledge or receiving notice, failed to remedy the condition or to take action reasonably necessary to protect the public against the condition.

[3] A dangerous and defective condition of public property is one that creates an unreasonable hazard or one from which injury to those coming in contact with it might reasonably be anticipated. Gentekos v. City & County of S. F., 163 Cal.App.2d 691, 329 P.2d 943. Ordinarily, the question whether a condition was dangerous is one of fact, not one of law for a reviewing court. Sandstoe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 28 Cal.App.2d 215, 218–219, 82 P.2d 216, and cases cited.

[4–7] The order granting plaintiffs a new trial implies that the trial court determined that all facts essential to the existence of liability on the part of the city were established by the weight of the evidence. The scope of our review of the order with respect to the findings on which it was based is the same as it would be if in a court trial findings had been made of all of the essential facts. It is the exclusive function of the trial court in ruling on a motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to determine whether the verdict is supported by the weight of the evidence. Considering the implied findings in this light, each of them having substantial support in the evidence and the reasonable inferences, is binding upon us on the present appeal. But if any one of the court's implied findings of essential facts is without substantial support in the evidence the order granting a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence was improper and must be reversed. It is, of course, error to grant a new trial unless the evidence would warrant a judgment in favor of the moving party. Roscoe Moss Co. v. Jenkins, 55 Cal.App.2d 369, 130 P.2d 477.

In ruling upon the motion the court found in effect that it was established by a preponderance of the evidence that the city had knowledge that the sewer was only 3½ feet below the surface where Ellis was working, that Ellis did not have knowledge of that fact and that the inspectors knew or should have known that this fact created a dangerous condition, due to the manner in which the work was being done. There was nothing inherently dangerous in the installation and maintenance of the sewer line, although at places it was only 3½ feet below the surface of the street. Plaintiffs say that the mere occurrence of the accident was sufficient proof that Ellis was working under dangerous conditions, and this, of course, is true. But the crucial question which we shall discuss is whether there was any evidence that the agents of the city knew, or in the exercise of ordinary care, would have known that the conditions were dangerous.

It is not, nor could it be reasonably contended, that the city, with knowledge of the manner in which the work was being carried on, had a duty to relocate the sewer, place barricades in the area, or stop the work. Plaintiffs' sole contention is that Ellis was working under dangerous conditions due to the fact that the sewer was but 3½ feet below the surface, that fact was known to the inspectors, but unknown to Ellis, and that it was the duty of the inspectors as responsible agents of the city to inform Ellis of the location of the sewer at the place where he was working.

[8] Due to the theory upon which plaintiffs presented their case at the trial and seek to sustain the order, we shall assume for the purposes of our discussion that if the inspectors had knowledge of a dangerous condition which was unknown to Ellis the city had a duty through the inspectors to warn Ellis of the danger, even though it had furnished drawings to the contractor which showed the location of the sewer and even though the danger of the operation was due solely to the manner in which the work was being done. If knowledge of the precise manner in which the work was carried on was brought home to the city it could only have been through the city's inspectors who were watching the work. The inspectors had general knowledge of the manner in which the excavation and removal of the old sewer was being done. That fact would not have placed the city under a duty to warn Ellis that the method of operation was unsafe unless the inspectors knew or in the exercise of ordinary care would have known that the operation entailed an unreasonable risk.

[9, 10] The liability of the municipality is for negligence, which is not to be presumed. Under the statutory liability there can be no negligence in failing to repair or give warning of a condition unless it is one which is known, or in the exercise of ordinary care would be known to impose an unreasonable risk of injury. If this were not so a municipality would be subject to liability without fault by force of the statute alone, whereas an individual in similar circumstances would be held blameless. The liability statute cannot be given application that would render the municipality an insurer against accidents. Knowledge of the dangerous nature of the condition must be shown. Howard v. City of Fresno, 22 Cal.App.2d 41, 70 P.2d 502.

With respect to the question of knowledge of a dangerous condition in the present case there were many factors to be considered. There was the weight of the equipment, the strength of the old sewer line, the carrying capacity of 3½ feet of pavement above the sewer, the lateral support furnished by the earth surrounding the sewer and the vibration of the earth caused by the hammering and its weakening effect. Another important consideration was the manner in which the boom might be operated. As its weight would be thrown to one side or the other so would the weight of the equipment be increased on one or the other of the treads, thus materially increasing the per square foot pressure. It was shown by photographs in evidence that the support for the right tread gave way and it fell deep into the hole with the cab resting on the ground and the opposite tread high in the air. There was also the negative fact that Ellis had driven piling for over 500 feet, operating in the same manner and without incident. While it was not incumbent upon the city to prove that the inspectors believed the operation to be a safe one, the safety of it up to the time of the accident, was some justification for their having no fear that it might be dangerous. Although plaintiffs say "the very fact that the rig broke into the abandoned sewer is in itself evidence of a dangerous condition", they merely assume that the inspectors should have recognized the danger, due to the fact that the old sewer was only 3½ feet below the surface. The inspectors were present only to see that the work was done according to contract. They had no authority to direct the operations and no duty to undertake the solution of the difficult engineering problem which would determine whether the location of the sewer created a dangerous condition. All the factors we have mentioned created an engineering problem for which there was no ready answer, even by competent observers.

Two expert engineering witnesses testified, one for the plaintiffs, the other for defendant. Neither witness testified to the weight per square foot of the equipment at a point 3½ feet below the surface if the treads rested wholly on the surface. Each testified as to the increased weight that would be cast upon one-third or one-fourth of the rig if the remainder of the treads should be tipped off the ground. This was a purely speculative supposition since there was no direct evidence of the position of the rig on the ground at the time its support collapsed. Nor was there evidence that during the operation two-thirds or three-quarters of the weight of the rig was lifted off the ground. Obviously, none of the engineers on the job suspected that an accident would occur. There had been no similar accident and, in fact, the operation under the physical conditions was an unusual one in which the engineers were not shown to have had any previous experience.

Although the implied findings of the court in granting the motion are entitled to every consideration they cannot be regarded as conclusive on the appeal. If they are without any substantial support in the evidence they must be denied effect.

In many cases the courts of review have been obliged to reverse judgments which imposed liability under the Public Liability Law for insufficiency of the evidence to establish knowledge on the part of the municipality or other public body of the existence of a dangerous or defective condition.

There have been many cases of defects in sidewalks and streets which, because of their "trivial" character, placed the municipality under no duty to make repairs or give warning. Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 361, 54 P.2d 725; Barrett v. City of Claremont, 41 Cal.2d 70, 71–73, 256 P.2d 977, and cases cited; Ness v. City of San Diego, 144 Cal.App.2d 668, 301 P.2d 410; Beck v. City of Palo Alto, 150 Cal. App.2d 39, 309 P.2d 125.

[11] The rationale of such cases is that it appeared from the evidence, as a matter of law, that the defect was not one that rendered the condition dangerous to an extent that would subject the users to an unreasonable risk, and the failure of the municipality to discover and repair it was not a breach of duty. Although a defect has sometimes been called "trivial" because it was small, it was not the size of the defect but the likelihood of its causing accidents that determined whether it should have been discovered and repaired. It is the obviously dangerous character of the defect, and not alone its size, which the municipality is required to take notice of and repair. A small hole in a walkway may be more dangerous than a large one. Blumberg v. M. & T. Incorporated, 34 Cal. 2d 226, 209 P.2d 1.

The record is devoid of any evidence that Ellis' work was being carried on under dangerous conditions, other than the mere fact that an accident happened. So, too, accidents happened in a multitude of the "trivial" defect cases in which it was held on appeal that since knowledge of the danger was not brought home to the defendant no liability was established. Mr. Prosser says, Second Edition, Section 30, page 121: "The culpability of the actor's conduct must be judged in the light of the possibilities apparent to him at the time, and not by looking backward 'with the wisdom born of the event.' The standard must be one of conduct, rather than of consequences. It is not enough that every one can see now that the risk was great, if it was not apparent when the conduct occurred. Citing Cardozo, C. J., in Greene v. Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Co., 257 N.Y. 190, 177 N.E. 416."

Plaintiffs have advanced no theory of the evidence under which the inspectors would be chargeable with knowledge of a dangerous condition and it is significant that two juries failed to find that they had or should have had such knowledge. Moreover, it was not shown that the inspectors knew that Ellis was less informed than they were of the working conditions. To be sure there had been an accident to the equipment of Kinsey due to trenching in order to dispose of an excess of underground water at one point, a condition which did not exist elsewhere, but Ellis was familiar with that occurrence and it was as well known to him as it was to the inspectors.

[12] A municipality is chargeable with knowledge of conditions which would be disclosed by a reasonable inspection, one conducted in the exercise of ordinary care. Only if held to the highest degree of care would the inspectors have been required to make a scientific analysis of the factors which bore upon the safety of the methods employed in the work.

[13] There was, in our opinion, no basis in the evidence for charging the inspectors with notice. They were therefore under no duty to warn Ellis, and absent such duty upon their part the city must stand absolved of liability for the accident.

The order is reversed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Louis J. SPIVAK, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6234.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 7, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 26, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Prosecution for armed robbery and kidnapping. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Leon T. David, J., entered judgment of conviction and denied defendant's motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that evidence, including testimony of a witness other than an accomplice that witness, a day or two before the robbery, accompanied defendant and another person to an area near home of persons who were robbed, along with testimony that defendant left town shortly after the robbery, even though he had paid a week's rent in advance, was sufficient corroboration of accomplice's testimony to sustain conviction.

Judgment of conviction and order denying new trial affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐511(1)

Evidence required by section of the Penal Code, providing that a conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it is corroborated, may be sufficient, even though slight, and entitled to but little consideration when standing alone. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1111.

2. Criminal Law ⇐511(5)

In prosecution for robbery, evidence, including testimony of a witness other than an accomplice, that a day or two before the robbery he accompanied defendant and other person to an area near home of persons who were robbed, along with testimony that defendant left town shortly after the robbery, even though he had paid a week's rent in advance, was sufficient corroboration of accomplice testimony to sustain conviction.

3. Criminal Law ⇐406(7)

Denials of a defendant in a criminal prosecution of material facts established by other evidence show a consciousness of guilt from which a jury can deduce that defendant had a connection with the crime charged.

4. Criminal Law ⇐361(1)

In robbery prosecution, where the state had already introduced evidence to the effect that before the robbery a witness, defendant and an accomplice had driven into an area overlooking scene of the robbery, testimony of an officer explaining his actions in taking a trip with the witness to determine the exact area in question was admissible.

5. Criminal Law ⇐417(1)

Extrajudicial statements are, under certain circumstances, admissible to show why a person did certain acts.

6. Criminal Law ⇐448(3), 1186(4)

In robbery prosecution, testimony as to whether a police officer had some idea that a place he was attempting to have a witness identify was in the area of residence of people who were robbed was not inadmissible as calling for a conclusion, since such testimony merely went to the state of the mind of the officer at the time he took the trip, and in any event, even if the question were improper, it was not prejudicial. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

7. Criminal Law ⇐508(1)

Direct testimony of a coconspirator is admissible and is competent to establish the facts to which it relates.

8. Criminal Law ⇐422(6)

In robbery prosecution, in view of fact a conspiracy between codefendants was established by testimony of codefendant and by corroborating evidence, conversations between the codefendants were admissible against one defendant, as a coconspirator, even though such conversations took place outside the presence of such defendant.

9. Criminal Law ⇐655(1)

In robbery prosecution, judge would not be deemed to have erred in stating to the jury, when he granted motion of the district attorney to dismiss the matter as against a codefendant under provision of statute authorizing discharge of a codefendant to be a witness for the people, that discharged defendant proposed to fully and freely testify before the court. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1099.

10. Criminal Law ⇐1035(2)

Where defendant was charged with robbery in a first indictment along with three other defendants, and in second indictment he was charged with robbery by himself, and the two indictments were consolidated for trial, defendant would not be deemed to have been erroneously tried under two indictments, and in view of fact defendant made no objections and stated in effect, through his counsel, that the procedure adopted was satisfactory to him, he could not make such complaint on appeal.

Joseph M. Rosen, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., S. Clark Moore, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from the judgment and from the denial of the motion for a new trial in the causes wherein the defendant was convicted of two counts of armed robbery in the first degree, and one count of kidnapping.

In an indictment returned by the grand jury of Los Angeles county Louis J. Spivak, Richard McFall, Wayne Burke and Alfred J. Pope were charged in count I with robbery, in that they did, on or about June 18, 1957, by force and fear, take from the person of Lauritz Melchior certain personal property in violation of section 211, Penal Code.

In count II the same defendants were indicted for the crime of robbery for taking personal property at or about the same time from Mrs. Lauritz Melchior.

In count III the same defendants were charged with kidnapping for the purpose of robbery, in that they seized one Willa Huber while armed with deadly weapons, with intent to hold and detain her for the purposes of committing robbery.

Spivak was charged with five prior convictions, having started to serve prison terms in about 1942 in New York state, and continuing down to 1954, when he started serving a term in the California prison system.

In the indictment it was also alleged that Burke had two prior convictions, one for robbery and one for escape. The indictment above referred to was numbered 192,-231, and was filed on June 25, 1957.

On August 26, 1957, the appellant moved to dismiss the indictment numbered 192,231 under section 995, Penal Code. That motion was continued to September 12, 1957, and on that date it was continued to September 25, 1957.

On September 13, 1957, an indictment numbered 194,773 was returned, wherein Spivak alone was charged with the same three counts heretofore listed and the five prior convictions. The motion made under section 955 was withdrawn. On the second indictment Spivak pleaded not guilty and denied the prior convictions.

The defendant McFall changed his plea to guilty as to count I of robbery, and waived a jury trial as to the five prior convictions charged against him.

The defendant Pope changed his plea to guilty as to count I of robbery.

Severance of Spivak and Burke was granted as to the first indictment, which indictment was to be tried with the second. The causes were consolidated for trial, which started on or about November 21, 1957.

Spivak and Burke waived formal re-arraignment, and Spivak, as to both indictments, admitted the alleged second, third and fifth prior convictions, and denied the alleged first and fourth prior convictions. Within due time, and during the presentation of the prosecution's case, the district attorney moved, pursuant to section 1099, Penal Code, that Burke be discharged for the purpose of becoming a witness for the prosecution. The motion was granted. Spivak's motions for a dismissal, and then for a mis-trial, were denied.

The jury found the defendant guilty as charged in all three counts, and of having been armed at the time of the commission of all three named offenses. Further, the jury found the robbery to be that of the first degree.

Spivak moved for permission to file an application for probation and for a new trial. The court permitted him to file the application for probation although it was obvious that he was not eligible for probation under the law (Penal Code, § 1203). The court found the allegations with reference to the second, third and fifth prior convictions (pursuant to Spivak's admission) to be true, and denied the application for probation. The application for a new trial was denied, and appellant was sentenced to the state prison, the sentences to run concurrently.

This appeal is from the judgment of conviction and the denial of the motion for a new trial.

Because of the contentions of the appellant hereinafter set forth, a résumé of the facts in general is given, and thereafter a résumé of the particular testimony of certain witnesses.

Spivak, McFall and Burke all met in Folsom prison while each was serving a term therein. Spivak was released in 1956, and came to Los Angeles county. He moved into the Bristol hotel in May, 1957, where he registered under the name of Joseph Stearns. On June 13, 1957, Spivak met McFall on the street in downtown Los Angeles. On June 15, 1957, Spivak and McFall met again by arrangement. Spivak apparently had been writing bad checks, and had written one for his hotel rent and wanted to move therefrom without attracting much attention. Spivak and McFall entered into an agreement whereby Spivak would purchase television sets with worthless checks and McFall would sell them.

Howard L. Nichols, an ex-convict, knew Spivak and McFall while in prison. Several days before June 18, 1957, Spivak, McFall and Nichols drove in an automobile into the Hollywood Hills, and at one place parked in a wide spot on the road where they could overlook what appeared to be the San Fernando Valley.

The location just referred to was later determined to be about 100 yards from the residence of Lauritz Melchior. Either while riding in the vicinity, or while parked there, Spivak stated to those who were with him that he formerly had an orchestra and had played in that area, and also that he had been a house guest in that area.

Lauritz Melchior met Spivak at an encampment of the Bohemian Club (San Francisco) in 1947, and thereafter, in August, 1947, Spivak worked for Melchior in and about his estate in Los Angeles county for about two weeks. Spivak apparently stole something from the Melchior residence, and left the employment without Melchior's knowledge or consent. During the time he was employed in the Melchior household, Spivak had access to all of the rooms in the house, and resided there. The buildings at the estate at the time of the trial were about the same as they were when Spivak was employed there.

On June 18, 1957, Willa Huber and Charles Luscher lived and worked in the Melchior household, which consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Melchior and the mother of Mrs. Melchior. Shortly after ten o'clock p. m., Willa Huber was awakened in her apartment by a noise at her door. McFall and Burke, both armed, entered and said, "This is a holdup." Upon learning that she did not have a key to the main part of the house, they directed her to dress and then forced her to go to the main house, which was about 100 feet from her apartment, and to ring the doorbell. The doorbell was answered by Charles Luscher and Mrs. Melchior. When the door was opened the two robbers forced Willa Huber into the house and required her to lie down upon a couch. Both men pointed their guns at Mrs. Melchior. Burke stated that it was a holdup and asked "Where is your big diamond?" Mrs. Melchior was then forced to locate and to press the button which would electrically actuate and open the front gate. Alfred J. Pope then entered the front gate and drove an automobile from the street up the driveway to the house. Burke told Mr. Melchior it was a holdup and forced him to go to the basement and open the fur safe located there. Melchior and Burke then went to the trophy room, where Burke inquired of Mrs. Melchior, "Where is the ring and other stuff?" She said she would show it to him. The particular ring referred to was one which she had owned and worn when Spivak had worked there. They then went into a bathroom, where Burke removed several pieces of jewelry from a drawer. At that time Burke's stocking mask broke and Mrs. Melchior was able to see his face. Burke then struck her. They returned to the living room and Mrs. Melchior was then taken to the safe located in the library, and she gave Burke $300 and some more jewelry and some furs. They went back to the living room and Burke inquired, "Where is the pistol?" Burke then got Mr. Melchior's pistol. The robbers then left. During the course of the robbery money in excess of $500, and other personal property, including jewelry and furs insured for over $100,000 were taken.

McFall

McFall pleaded guilty to count I, the robbery of Lauritz Melchior, and at the time of testifying was awaiting a hearing upon his application for probation and sentencing. In brief, McFall testified as follows: That he met and knew Spivak in Folsom and San Quentin prisons. He was released from Folsom prison in 1955, and had resided in Los Angeles county since that time. Further, that he and Spivak met for the first time since his release, in downtown Los Angeles on about June 11, 1957, where they exchanged addresses and telephone numbers. Spivak was then residing at the Bristol hotel under the name of Stearns. The two of them later met at the Bristol hotel where Spivak told McFall that he had a "good score" (which, in their parlance, meant that Spivak knew where they could make an illegal gain). That Spivak stated to him that he was familiar with the Melchior residence, and that knowing that Melchior had a very substantial amount of money and jewelry there, he would like to see him, that is McFall, and one or two others, rob the place and divide the proceeds with him. Spivak stated that he formerly had been a house guest at the Melchior home. That night, at the Alibi Room, a bar on Crenshaw Boulevard, McFall spoke to Burke about the proposed robbery. On June 14th or 15th, 1957, he met with Spivak at the Bristol hotel, where he told Spivak that he had secured one man to go on the robbery, and perhaps one other. They discussed the grounds of the Melchior estate and some of the personal property which might be obtained; Spivak specifically mentioning a large emerald ring and a large diamond ring, each valued at about $20,000, and a large sum of money. Spivak told him that he would draw a diagram of the grounds and another of the house. Spivak further stated, however, that he did not want to be involved by having his name mentioned to any of the persons who were to participate in the robbery.

McFall also testified that Spivak wanted to leave the Bristol hotel because he had given a bad check to the hotel for the rent. Spivak and McFall came to an understanding that a false telegram would be sent to Spivak at the hotel which would falsely set forth that some relative of Spivak's was ill and that his presence was needed. McFall further testified that he sent such a telegram to "Joe Stearns," the name Spivak was using at the hotel.

On Monday, June 17, 1957, McFall helped Spivak move to McFall's hotel, the Harvey, on Santa Monica Boulevard in Los Angeles. Before arriving at the Harvey hotel they talked about the floor plan of the Melchior house, and Spivak gave McFall maps and drawings of the premises and the house. These drawings showed the electrically controlled gate which Spivak had told McFall operated from a button or buttons within the house. McFall testified further that three or four days before the robbery, McFall, Spivak and Nichols had been in the vicinity of the Melchior estate, having gone there in McFall's automobile. Nichols was a passenger. McFall did the driving and Spivak directed McFall where to go. After several attempts they located the entrance to the estate (the gate of the Melchior residence), but they did not, at that time, get out of the car. McFall never had been there before. Later, McFall, Burke, and perhaps Nichols, drove to the same location.

Spivak was to get one-third of any proceeds of any robbery of the Melchior establishment. McFall or his accomplice was to sell the jewelry.

McFall told Spivak that he was "dubious as to the condition of two of the tires on my car." Spivak said he would issue a worthless check to buy "a couple of tires for the car." They went to Sears, near Western and Santa Monica, and there Spivak issued a check for the tires, tubes and an air seat for McFall's automobile. The robbery was talked of and discussed on the afternoon of the robbery by Spivak and McFall.

McFall further testified that he and Burke and Pope, on the day of the robbery, drove to the Melchior residence and arrived there about 10:30 o'clock p. m. That Burke and McFall climbed the fence and went onto the grounds, Pope remaining outside in the car. Burke and McFall each had a pistol and wore a mask. They entered the maid's room with guns pointed at her, and directed that she take them to the main entrance, which she did. They were let in and then told the Melchiors that it was a holdup. They stayed about twenty minutes, and during this time, McFall asked Mrs. Melchior if she had a diamond ring and an emerald ring, each worth $20,000, and she answered that she had such. Burke pressed the button opening the gate entrance and Pope entered. McFall got some jewelry from a dressing room and a gun from Mrs. Melchior, which latter he kept, and he gave his own gun to Pope. McFall got "the two rings of value" plus other things. Burke and McFall and the Melchiors went to the safe, where Mrs. Melchior got $300, which Burke took. McFall later got approximately one-half of this, and subsequently gave $10 or $20 to Spivak. They also took various furs. Burke and McFall then tied up the Melchiors, and the three robbers left in Pope's car. Burke and McFall then left the Pope car and got into McFall's automobile, leaving some of the jewelry and furs in Pope's car. They agreed to meet at the apartment of John Heath the bartender of the Alibi Room bar. McFall and Burke got to the apartment first and divided the money. They agreed that Burke was to dispose of the jewelry, however, in the event he was unable to do so, McFall was to attempt to dispose of it. Pope took the furs. McFall then drove Burke to the Alibi Room and he went on to the Harvey hotel. He met Spivak and Nichols there at the hotel, and McFall gave Spivak some money. McFall told Spivak and Nichols about the robbery. They then listened to a radio to hear of the robbery. On the next day Spivak and McFall talked of the robbery and Spivak was told that two other men had participated in the robbery with McFall. McFall went to San Francisco and then on to Montana, in which state he had previously served in the state prison, and he was arrested in Montana on August 10, 1957.

Burke

The charges against Burke were dismissed under section 1099, Penal Code. A résumé of Burke's testimony is as follows: He first knew McFall in Folsom prison. He met Pope at the Alibi Room a few days before the robbery. McFall had told Burke that Spivak had a good "score." Later in another talk McFall told Burke that Spivak had been a guest at the Melchior home and that Spivak was the brother of Charlie Spivak. McFall had said that Spivak knew the layout of the Melchior house and where the safes were located. They discussed the electrically controlled and operated gate. Later, he, McFall and Nichols drove up Mulholland Drive and located the Melchior residence, and examined the place. McFall had said there was $300,000 in jewelry and $60,000 in cash to be had, and that he had secured this information from Spivak. On Monday, June 17, 1957, he, Burke, agreed to go on the robbery. On Tuesday, June 18, 1957, McFall and Burke met at the Alibi Room where McFall showed Burke maps of the grounds of the Melchior estate. McFall stated that one-third of the returns from the robbery were to go to Spivak. Burke told Pope, who was at the bar, of the proposed robbery, and Pope agreed to go with them. They agreed to, and did meet at 8:30 o'clock that evening near the Alibi Room. Before this McFall (also called Murf) told Burke there was a $20,000 ring and furs to be had. They went to within about a half-mile of the Melchior estate in two cars, parked the McFall car and all continued to the Melchior estate in Pope's car. They were armed with two pistols. McFall and Burke went over the fence at the estate. The door to the Melchior residence was locked, so they went to the maid's room where the door was open, awakened her and stated that it was a robbery. They pointed a gun at her and told her to get dressed. Upon their instructions she then went with them to the Melchior house where she knocked on the door or rang the buzzer, and the door was then opened. Burke told Charles Luscher, and Mr. and Mrs. Melchior that it was a robbery. Mrs. Melchior showed them the location of the button that was used to open the gate and Mrs. Melchior pressed it. Pope then drove in. Burke told Melchior to take him to the fur vault which he, Burke, knew about because McFall had told him. Burke and Melchior did go to the fur vault in the basement and got the furs. Burke had been told of two other safes in the house and he asked Melchior where they were and Melchior told him where the safes were located. They went to the safe in the library and then returned to the living room. Burke went back to the safe in the library, joining, McFall and Mrs. Melchior who handed Burke an envelope containing $300. Burke then went with Mrs. Melchior into the bedroom and got a fur coat; McFall and Burke then tied up the victims while Pope put the furs into his car. The robbers then left. Burke and McFall went to Heath's apartment. McFall emptied a brief case of jewelry. Burke gave Pope $60, and McFall and Burke took the remainder. Pope took the furs and Burke took the big jewelry and "stashed" it. The next day McFall and Burke met, and the former wanted to dispose of the jewelry at once but Burke refused. Burke was fearful of what McFall might do because Burke was of the opinion that McFall was a narcotic addict. Later, Burke and Officer Jokisch recovered the jewelry and they then went to Pope's apartment and recovered the furs.

Spivak

Spivak stated that he had worked for the Melchiors in 1947 for two or three weeks as a chauffeur and gardner, however, that he was not allowed inside of the house; that he did no house cleaning nor making of beds, nor was he informed as to the location of any safes. He said he was only in the house twice, and then only as far as the kitchen. Further, he said that the entrance gates were manually operated, and not electrically operated; that he had no knowledge of the telephones in the house, and that he never took a ride into the Hollywood hills with McFall and Nichols. He knew McFall in Folsom prison, and while there discussed with McFall and a man by the name of Baker the jewelry belonging to Mrs. Melchior. Spivak had come to Los Angeles in September, 1956, after his release from Folsom, and in May, 1957, moved into the Bristol hotel under the name of Joseph Stearns. He was using a fictitious name because he had written bad checks. He met McFall in Los Angeles on Thursday, June 13, 1957, and had spoken to him about having written a bad check in payment of his hotel rent, and stated that he, Spivak, would have to leave by Monday, June 17th. They arranged to meet at the Bristol hotel on the next day. On Saturday, the 15th, McFall and Spivak met at the latter's hotel, and McFall agreed to send Spivak a false telegram that would, on its face, give a reason for Spivak's leaving the hotel. They also made an arrangement whereby Spivak would issue worthless checks to purchase television sets which McFall would sell, and they would then divide the proceeds. They then went to the Harvey hotel, joining Nichols. They talked of the Melchior residence and how it appeared. No mention was made about "scoring" on the place. The three went to a drive-in to eat. On Monday McFall sent a telegram to Spivak stating that Spivak's mother was ill. Later McFall appeared and they agreed to, and did move Spivak to the Harvey hotel where McFall was staying. They also agreed to secure some more television sets. They went to the Hollywood Music City store and Spivak issued a worthless check for a television set. Spivak, McFall and Nichols went to Sears, where they purchased with a worthless check another television set, and also bought some tires under the same plan. Spivak stated that McFall had agreed to give Spivak $10 each for two tires for his car. After leaving there, McFall sold one of the television sets, but was unable to sell the other. They returned to the Harvey hotel, where Spivak put the remaining television set in his room. McFall gave Spivak $20 and told him that he had sold the first television set for $80, and had collected $35 or $40 of such amount, and was to get the balance the next day. The next day Nichols, McFall and Spivak had breakfast together and he, Spivak, demanded the remaining money due him for the television set and for the tires. Later

Spivak went to the races. That night Nichols came by and watched television with Spivak. At about 11:00 or 11:30 o'clock Nichols left and Spivak went to bed. The next morning at about 2:00 or 2:30 o'clock a. m., Spivak was awakened by Nichols who told him that McFall wanted to see him, and Spivak and Nichols went to McFall's room where Spivak again demanded his money from the television set sale and for the tires. McFall told Spivak that he would get the money for him the next day, and then asked Spivak to drive him to Lancaster, which Spivak refused to do.

The next morning Spivak, Nichols and McFall had breakfast together and again Spivak asked McFall for money, and the latter promised to get it for him. McFall and Nichols left together and later on Spivak went to a movie. That day Spivak read in the newspapers of the Melchior robbery and wondered if McFall could have done it, remembering that they had spoken of the Melchiors a few days before. Spivak said he decided that McFall had not done it, and on Thursday morning he, Spivak, checked out of the hotel. He had waited for McFall but McFall had not returned, and as Sears was across the street from his hotel, he had decided it was time to leave, but that he did not leave because of the Melchior robbery. Before leaving the hotel Spivak sold the remaining television set for $75 to a man in the restaurant. Spivak and Nichols went downtown and checked into another hotel, and on that day Spivak saw the names of Morgan and Pope in the newspapers, and on Friday night Spivak left Los Angeles. At that time Spivak's name also appeared in the Los Angeles papers. On August 3, 1957, Spivak was arrested in San Francisco. Spivak stated that he had never discussed the Melchior robbery with McFall, nor did he draw any map of the Melchior's house or premises.

Spivak, the appellant, now contends that there was (1) insufficient corroboration of accomplice testimony; (2) that errors occurred in the admission of evidence, and (3) in the remarks of the trial court, and (4) in prosecuting Spivak under two indictments.

Section 1111, Penal Code, provides as follows:

> "A conviction can not be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof.
> "An accomplice is hereby defined as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given."

The Supreme Court of California has recently had occasion to speak on the problem involved in this case. In People v. MacEwing, 45 Cal.2d 218, at page 225, 288 P.2d 257, at page 261, it was said:

> "The decisions applying section 1111, relating to accomplices, hold that the corroborative evidence required by that provision must be considered without the aid of the testimony which is to be corroborated and that it is not sufficient if it requires the interpretation and direction of such testimony in order to give it value. (Citing cases.) There are two opinions which, although not clear, indicate that a similar rule applies with respect to section 1108. See People v. Crain, 102 Cal. App.2d 566, 579, 228 P.2d 307 * * *; People v. Murphy, 60 Cal.App.2d 762, 772, 141 P.2d 755 * * *. In our opinion both statutes must be construed to mean that corroboration is not adequate if it requires aid from the testimony of the person to be corroborated in order to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense charged. The instruction is therefore erroneous."

And in People v. Brown, 49 Cal.2d 577, at page 584, 320 P.2d 5, at page 9, it is set forth:

"The People rely also upon the testimony of Dr. Randall, who treated Clara on January 30, 1956, as corroboration. The doctor's testimony does not meet the test of connecting defendant with the abortion which Clara underwent. People v. Ramsey, (1948), 83 Cal.App.2d 707, 713, 717 [4] 189 P.2d 802, is inconsistent with People v. MacEwing (1955), 45 Cal.2d 218, 255 [7], 288 P.2d 257, supra, insofar as it suggests that testimony which does not itself connect the defendant with the criminal abortion is sufficient corroboration; in this respect the Ramsey case does not represent the law and, to avoid possible confusion, is to that extent disapproved."

In People v. Santo, 43 Cal.2d 319, at page 327, 273 P.2d 249, at page 253, the court said:

"The accomplice need not be corroborated as to every fact to which he testifies. The evidence which corroborates the accomplice need not be direct; it may be circumstantial. Although the corroborating evidence must do more than raise a conjecture or suspicion of guilt, it is sufficient if it tends in some degree to implicate the defendant. (Citing cases.) To be sufficient the implicating evidence 'must relate to some act or fact which is an element of the offense.' People v. Gallardo, (1953), 41 Cal.2d 57, 63, 257 P.2d 29 * * *."

In People v. Lyons, 50 Cal.2d 245, 324 P.2d 556, at page 562, the court said:

"The evidence need not corroborate the accomplice as to every fact to which he testifies but is sufficient if it does not require interpretation and direction from the testimony of the accomplice yet tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense in such a way as reasonably may satisfy a jury that the accomplice is telling the truth; it must tend to implicate the defendant and therefore must relate to some act or fact which is an element of the crime but it is not necessary that the corroborative evidence be sufficient in itself to establish every element of the offense charged. [Citing cases.]"

[1] The evidence required by the section in question may be sufficient, even though slight and entitled to but little consideration when standing alone. People v. Wayne, 41 Cal.2d 814, 822, 264 P.2d 547; People v. Walker, 88 Cal.App.2d 265, 198 P.2d 534.

In People v. Perry, 123 Cal.App.2d 74, at page 80, 266 P.2d 515, at page 519, the court said: "Therefore, unless we can say that the corroborating evidence is either incompetent or is of such a character that it could not tend to connect appellant with the commission of the crime and could not reasonably support an inference of such connection, the finding of the jury on that issue cannot be disturbed on appeal. People v. McNamara, 103 Cal.App.2d 729, 738, 230 P.2d 411. * * *" "The entire conduct of the parties, their relationship, acts, and conduct during and after the crime, may be taken into consideration by the jury in determining the sufficiency of the corroboration." People v. Griffin, 98 Cal.App.2d 1, 25, 219 P.2d 519, 534.

[2] Applying the rules just set forth to the testimony in this case, we are convinced that there is ample corroboration of the accomplice testimony.

Nichols stated that he and Spivak and McFall drove to the Hollywood Hills to a location overlooking the San Fernando Valley. Nichols said the place where they parked had a "wider shoulder;" he said Spivak claimed to have been a house guest there; that the location was near a white gate. Later on Nichols went to the location with Officer Vietti, Sergeant Buckley and another person, and parked at the same location where he had previously parked. Nichols told the police officers that it was the same location. Officer Vietti testified that the location, in fact, was on Mulholland drive about 100 yards down hill from the Melchior home. Spivak denied making any such a trip. The jury could very well have drawn the conclusion that Spivak was at the location in question and that he was there with McFall for the purpose of showing McFall the Melchior premises to the end that McFall could assist in committing the robbery. The testimony certainly corroborates the story which McFall related, and relates to acts or facts which are elements of the offense. Furthermore it is the type of corroboration which does not require aid from McFall's testimony in order to connect Spivak with the commission of the crime.

Further, by his own admissions, Spivak left the hotel where he was staying two days after the robbery and moved into a new hotel. On the next night he went to Santa Monica and then to San Francisco. He left the hotel even though he had paid a week's rent in advance. "Flight is a factor tending to connect an accused with commission of an offense." People v. Hoyt, 20 Cal.2d 306, 313, 125 P.2d 29, 33. And further, "* * * 'corroboration need not be by direct evidence, but the entire conduct of the defendant may be looked to for corroborating circumstances and if, from those circumstances, his connection with the crime may be fairly inferred, the corroboration is sufficient.'" People v. Hoyt, 20 Cal.2d at page 313, 125 P.2d at page 33, supra.

The jury very well could have determined that the flight of Spivak was because of his involvement in the Melchior robbery.

It is also true that Spivak made statements as to material facts which were wilfully untrue. Spivak said he did not go to the Hollywood Hills, Nichols said he did. The Melchiors stated that Spivak worked inside of their house and had been in it on several occasions and had access to the rooms. Spivak denied having worked in the house. Mr. Melchior stated that the gate worked electrically when Spivak worked there. Spivak said that it worked manually, and that he did not know that it operated electrically and was actuated by any buttons.

> "'* * * But where a material fact is established by evidence and it is shown that a defendant's testimony as to that fact was wilfully untrue, this circumstance not only furnishes a ground for disbelieving other testimony of this defendant [citations], but also tends to show consciousness of guilt or liability on his part and has probative force in connection with other evidence on the issue of such guilt or liability. Such false testimony is in the nature of an admission from which with other evidence guilt or liability may be inferred. [Citations.]'"

The denials of Spivak show a consciousness of guilt from which the jury could deduce that he had a connection with the robbery.

There are various other circumstances which by themselves, perhaps, would not supply sufficient corroboration, but when taken together do, in our opinion, make the appellant's contentions of little worth. Spivak worked for the Melchiors and had a knowledge of the house and grounds; while in prison he talked with McFall of the Melchiors and their jewelry; Spivak bought tires for McFall's automobile shortly before the robbery, and that automobile was used in the robbery, and further, Spivak was involved with McFall in a scheme to secure television sets illegally, to sell them and to divide the proceeds with McFall.

The jury could, and undoubtedly did take into consideration the relationship of the parties and their acts and conduct. See People v. Ross, 46 Cal.App.2d 385, 395, 116 P.2d 81; People v. Griffin, 98 Cal.App.2d 1, 219 P.2d 519.

Furthermore, the jury could properly have considered the fact that Spivak and McFall were arguing about money. The jury could well have believed that the money which brought about the disputes between them was not the money from the sale of the television sets, but rather was that secured from the robbery.

[4] Appellant's next contention is that the court erred in admitting certain testimony of Officer Vietti. The question put to the officer was:

"Q. (By Mr. Amstutz) Had you been informed that Mr. Nichols had gone to a certain location around the area of the Mulholland Drive?

"Mr. Rosen: I will object to that, again, as calling for hearsay.

"The Court: Overruled.

"The Court: Purely foundational."

The prosecution had already introduced evidence to the effect that Nichols, Spivak and McFall had driven into an area in the Hollywood Hills. Nichols had described the area, but he had not located it precisely. Later Nichols took a trip with Officer Vietti and others to the same location. The prosecution put the officer on the witness stand to tell of the location of the area where he and Nichols had gone. To explain the actions in taking the trip it was necessary and proper for the officer to state the circumstances giving rise to it. See Daniels v. United States, 9 Cir., 17 F.2d 339, 344; Coleman v. State, 43 Ga.App. 350, 158 S.E. 627, 628; Fitzpatrick v. Commonwealth, 210 Ky. 385, 275 S.W. 819; State v. Rotolo, 39 Wyo. 181, 270 P. 665, 667.

[5] Extrajudicial statements are, under circumstances such as in the present case, admissible to show why a person did certain acts.

[6] The second question put to Officer Vietti objected to by Spivak was:

"Q. (By Mr. Amstutz) Did you have some idea, Mr. Vietti, that the place where you were attempting to reach was up or in the area of the Melchior residence?

"Mr. Rosen: Object to that as calling for a conclusion.

"The Court: Overruled.

"Mr. Rosen: Hearsay.

"A. Yes."

In our opinion the question did not call for a conclusion as such term is used in discussing the law of evidence. The question really goes to the state of mind of the officer at the time he took the trip. He either thought he was going to the area of the Melchior house, or he thought to the contrary.

In any event, assuming the questions were improper, the testimony complained of did not bring about a miscarriage of justice. Calif.Const. Art. VI, § 4½.

[7, 8] The next contention of Spivak is that the court erred in admitting the conversations between the accomplices Burke and McFall. McFall, by his testimony, disclosed that a conspiracy existed, and such was corroborated. Burke told of the talks between himself and McFall. The direct testimony of a co-conspirator is admissible and is competent to establish the facts to which he testifies. See People v. Steelik, 187 Cal. 361, 377, 203 P. 78. Once the conspiracy has been established, the extrajudicial declarations of a conspirator against his co-conspirators are admissible. Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 6.

We find no error in permitting Burke to testify to the statements of McFall made out of the presence of Spivak under the particular circumstances of this case.

[9] Appellant's next contention is that the judge erred in making a statement to the jury when he granted the motion of the district attorney to dismiss the matter as against Burke under the provisions of section 1099, Penal Code. The judge simply and properly explained the procedure to the jury. Any juror or layman might very well have wondered about the legality of such a procedure had there been no explanation in the first instance. The judge explained the matter fairly and correctly and that is all that we can find in his statement. A Texas court stated the matter succinctly in

Camron v. State, 32 Tex.Cr.R. 180, 22 S.W. 682, at page 682, wherein it said:

"From the earliest times it has been found necessary, for the detection and punishment of crime, for the state to resort to the criminals themselves for testimony with which to convict their confederates in crime. While such a course offers a premium to treachery, and sometimes permits the more guilty to escape, it tends to prevent and break up combinations by making criminals suspicious of each other, and it leads to the punishment of guilty persons who would otherwise escape."

The judge said, in so many words, "I am informed by the People and counsel for the defendant Burke that he proposes to fully and freely testify before this Court now concerning the same circumstances."

[10] Lastly, Spivak contends that it was error to be tried under two indictments. In the first indictment he was indicted with three others, and in the second indictment the proceeding was against Spivak by himself. The two indictments were consolidated. See People v. Follette, 74 Cal.App. 178, 189, 240 P. 502, 507, wherein the court said: "* * * The strict rules prevailing prior to these amendments often hampered prosecuting officers in their attempts to enforce the law, and resulted in many miscarriages of justice. In view of the more liberal rules now prevailing in the institution and conduct of criminal proceedings and after a consideration of the above authorities, we are of the opinion that there is nothing in the law of this state which affects the regularity or validity of the second indictment presented against the defendant."

In the present case the indictments were identical insofar as Spivak was concerned. Furthermore, Spivak made no objections and stated, in effect, through his counsel that the procedure adopted was satisfactory to him. He cannot now complain. Spivak was not prejudiced in any way.

A thorough reading of the entire transcript leaves no doubt in our minds that the appellant was fairly tried and properly convicted. Any error, if there was such, was not prejudicial to the appellant.

The judgment of conviction and the order denying a motion for a new trial are, and each is, affirmed.

W. W. COWLES, as Trustee In Bankruptcy of the Estate of A. G. Eldred & Co., a copartnership consisting of Arthur Gordon Eldred and Genevieve I. Eldred, Bankrupt, and as Trustee in Bankruptcy for the Estate of Arthur Gordon Eldred, Bankrupt, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Joseph K. ZLAKET, doing business as Cal-Properties, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 5753.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 8, 1959.

Action to recover for alleged usury. Judgment for the plaintiff in the Superior Court of Orange County, Robert Gardner, J., and the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, P. J., held that evidence was sufficiently clear and convincing to establish that transactions which were in form of a sale and an option back were in fact simply loans from the defendant to the plaintiff and that usury was exacted and paid and that plaintiff was entitled to recover therefor.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Usury ⇦113

There is a presumption of law that transactions are legal and not usurious.

2. Appeal and Error ⇦1011(1)

Mortgages ⇦38(2), 39

Where a conveyance is absolute in form with an option to repurchase, one asserting that it is a loan must establish that fact by evidence which is clear and convincing, and whether the evidence received is such is usually a question of fact for the trial court and upon conflicting evidence it is not ordinarily open to review on appeal.

3. Mortgages ⇐32(3)

Conveyances absolute on their faces may be shown to be in fact loans or security transactions.

4. Usury ⇐117

Evidence was sufficiently clear and convincing to establish that transactions which were in form of a sale and an option back were in fact simply loans from the defendant to the plaintiff and that usury was exacted and paid and that plaintiff was entitled to recover therefor.

5. Usury ⇐117

Evidence established that trust deeds and notes originally in the possession of borrower were assigned by him to the lender by virtue of ostensible authority for the purpose of securing money, and that the consideration was paid to the borrower and not to the trustors, so as to entitle the borrower to recover for usury exacted by the defendant in the transaction. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1916, 1916–2, 1916–3.

Rutan, Lindsay, Dahl, Smedegaard, Howell & Tucker, and Milford W. Dahl, Santa Ana, for appellant.

Carl C. Cowles, Santa Ana, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff and respondent W. W. Cowles, as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of A. G. Eldred & Co., a copartnership consisting of Arthur Gordon Eldred and Genevieve I. Eldred, bankrupt, and Arthur G. Eldred, an individual, a bankrupt, brought this action against Joseph K. Zlaket, doing business as Cal-Properties, to recover $17,889.51 claimed due under alleged usurious transactions.

The complaint is long but the allegations are more or less simple. It sets out 16 separate causes of action. Each is essentially based on very similar facts and circumstances. All of the transactions involved took place in 1953 and 1954 between Arthur G. Eldred (hereinafter referred to as Eldred) on the one hand, and Joseph K. Zlaket (hereinafter referred to as Zlaket) on the other hand. After the transactions complained about transpired, Eldred filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy and was adjudicated as such. Thereafter Cowles was appointed trustee in bankruptcy of the Eldred estates and brought this action in his capacity as trustee.

Eldred owned or had control of 16 separate promissory notes secured by deeds of trust on real property situated in Orange County. (Exhibit 4.) For the purpose of separately identifying them, at the trial they were referred to in the record and will hereinafter be referred to as the Sandcamp, Bartee, Solis, Abernathy (1), Abernathy (2), Johnson, Gardea, Flores, Gaspar-Porath, Pluneda, Mendoza, Moss-White, Plasencia, Pokyn, Robinson and Cernich notes and deeds of trust. All were first liens on real estate in Orange County with the exception of the Bartee note and trust deed which was second to a very small balance remaining unpaid on a first deed of trust and for this reason it also was, for all practical purposes, a first deed of trust. The real estate covered by each of said deeds was of ample value to fully secure the notes.

On or about June 22, 1953, Eldred assigned and transferred to Zlaket the Sandcamp note and deed of trust. The principal was $7,500, and nothing had been paid on it. At the same time Zlaket delivered and transferred to Eldred $6,000 in cash and gave Eldred a so-called 90-day written agreement to reassign. About September 28, 1953, Eldred delivered and turned over to Zlaket cash in the sum of $6,240, and at the same time Zlaket reassigned and delivered back to Eldred the Sandcamp note and deed of trust. This transaction was not directly involved in the 16 causes of action set forth in the complaint but was put into evidence as being the first of a series of transactions between the parties and bearing on their subsequent actions and transactions.

About December 14, 1953, Eldred again assigned and delivered back to Zlaket this same Sandcamp note and deed of trust, and at the same time Zlaket delivered to Eldred $5,200 and gave to Eldred the written instrument entitled "Ninety Day Agreement", being the second of the group of written agreements (Exhibits 1 and 2). They were typed upon mimeographed forms prepared by Zlaket, and read in part as follows:

"This Agreement, entered into this ——— day of ——— by and between A. G. Eldred (or A. G. Eldred for the assignor) hereinafter referred to as the Assignor/s and Cal-Properties, Joseph K. Zlaket, hereinafter referred to as the Assignee, Witnesseth:

"That Whereas; On this ——— day of ——— 195— the aforementioned Assignor/s did sell, transfer and assign to the aforementioned Assignee, all right, title and interest to and within the following instruments of record, to wit:"

(Then follows a detailed description of the note and trust deed and the balance due, as indicated on said note.)

"And Whereas: That for and in consideration of the aforementioned right, title and interest to and within the ——— secured by ——— above described, and as the full purchase price therefor, the said Assignee did pay to the said Assignor/s the sum of ——— (net), lawful money of the United States, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged by the said Assignor/s.

"Now Therefore: it is mutually agreed and understood by both the Assignor/s and the Assignee, that at any time prior to the expiration of Ninety (90) Days from date of this agreement, the said Assignor/s shall have the right and privilege to repurchase and have reassigned back to them the right, title and interest to and within the instruments hereinbefore described upon their performance and fulfillment of the acts and conditions as hereinafter stipulated, to wit:

"1.—That within the time limit of Ninety (90) days from date of this agreement, the said Assignor/s, for the purpose of repurchase, shall repay to the said Assignee the full sum above stipulated as the purchase price, which sum is $———, plus a sum of $——— (about 10 per cent of the purchase price), which sum constitutes a charge for services rendered or paid for, plus a sum equal to Six (6%) Percent per annum on the stipulated remaining Principal Balance as of date of this assignment from date of this agreement to the date that repayment be made to the Assignee.

"2.—That upon the payment by the Assignor/s to the Assignee of the total sums or a sum equal to all sums designated in paragraph numbered One (1) of this agreement in lawful money of the United States, the said Assignee agrees to resell and to reassign back to the said Assignor/s the right, title and interest to and within the instruments hereinbefore mentioned.

"It Is Further Mutually Understood And Agreed, that in the event the said Assignor/s shall fail to repay to the said Assignee the sum of money herein agreed upon and above stipulated, then at the expiration of the Ninety (90) Day period, the right and privilege of the said Assignor/s to repurchase or repay shall cease and no further obligation or duty shall rest upon the Assignee to the Assignor/s and this agreement shall be construed as null and void * * *

"Joseph K. Zlaket
"Cal-Properties (Assignee)"

About April 26, 1954, Eldred delivered to Zlaket cash in the sum of $5,740.26, and Zlaket again transferred and reassigned the said Sandcamp note and deed of trust back to Eldred.

About December 16, 1953, Eldred transferred and assigned to Zlaket seven of the trust deeds mentioned in Exhibit 4. At the same time Zlaket delivered to Eldred cash in the sum of $13,700, and Zlaket executed and delivered to Eldred seven separate written "Ninety Day Agreements", as above described, covering each of the respective aforesaid notes and deeds of trust. About December 21, 1953, Eldred transferred and assigned to Zlaket the remaining deeds of trust included in the group mentioned in Exhibit 4. At the same time Zlaket delivered to Eldred cash in the sum of $12,050, and Zlaket delivered to Eldred eight separate written "Ninety Day Agreements" similarly prepared. Thereafter, and prior to April 1, 1954, Eldred delivered to Zlaket the so-called "option price" mentioned in said "Ninety Day Agreements" covering five of that group and Zlaket reassigned and delivered back to Eldred said five notes and deeds of trust. All sixteen notes and deeds of trust set forth in the complaint were similarly and eventually reassigned and redelivered by Zlaket to Eldred, and Eldred paid the amount demanded by Zlaket.

Throughout the testimony given by Zlaket he referred to said transaction as a sale from Eldred to him and a repurchase by Eldred from him under the terms of an option agreement. On the other hand, Eldred, throughout his testimony, referred to said transactions as loans and the repayment of loans. The whole case revolved about and depended upon the interpretation to be placed on these transactions in the light of the entire record. Plaintiff's theory of the case was that while the papers evidencing these transactions were in form a sale with an option back, yet they were in truth and in fact simply loans from Zlaket to Eldred, and that casting the transactions in the form of a sale with option to repurchase does not insulate them from the usury laws, citing Orlando v. Berns, 154 Cal.App.2d 753, 316 P.2d 705; Rosemead Co. v. Shipley Co., 207 Cal. 414, 278 P. 1038; Milana v. Credit Discount Co., 27 Cal.2d 335, 340, 163 P.2d 869, 165 A.L.R. 621; and Wood v. Angeles Mesa Land Co., 120 Cal.App. 313, 317, 7 P.2d 748.

The trial court found that these transactions were in fact loans masquerading under the cloak of sales and resales under an option to repurchase; that usury was exacted and paid, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover in accordance with the judgment entered.

Zlaket has appealed from the trial court's decision on two grounds: first, that the evidence does not support the trial court's findings; that the transactions could not be loans as there was no promise to repay; and second, that in any event plaintiff was not entitled to recover as to certain of said transactions for the reason that the evidence and the record shows that Eldred was not the owner of the securities which were pledged for certain of the loans.

[1] It is further argued that there is a presumption of law that the transactions were legal and not usurious, citing Rose v. Wheeler, 140 Cal.App. 217, 220, 35 P.2d 220; Lindsey v. Campbell, 132 Cal.App.2d 746, 282 P.2d 948; and 91 C.J.S. Usury § 11, p. 579; and that the documents themselves create and support the presumption of validity.

As will be noted, there is a direct conflict between the testimony of Eldred and Zlaket as to their interpretation of the nature of the transactions. In Eldred's deposition, taken while he was serving a prison term for conviction on three counts of theft involving two forgeries in connection with certain assignments herein involved, he testified generally that he was engaged in the real estate and mortgage loan business in Orange County; that Zlaket was also there engaged in a similar business; that he entered Zlaket's office and while sitting at his "loan desk" he said to him: "I see you are making a lot of loans", and that Zlaket replied "Yes"; that Zlaket then said he had a "new wrinkle" in loaning, i. e., he could charge above the legal rate of interest on loans; that he told him about these "Ninety Day Agreements" herein set forth whereby he purportedly purchased the notes and trust deeds with an option to repurchase, and accordingly on the repurchase he would receive 10 per cent of the amount advanced plus two per cent service charge plus six per cent interest on the unpaid balance on the trust deed; that he asked Zlaket if this form of an agreement was not more or less of a sham or an invasion of the law, and Zlaket said "No, his lawyer had prepared the document" and as far as he was concerned it was perfectly legal. Zlaket denied any such conversation. Throughout Eldred's testimony he referred to the transactions as loans and said his first approach to Zlaket was that he wanted to borrow money on these notes and trust deeds and would repay him in a week or within two or three months at the most; that he told him the lump sum he wished to borrow and furnished Zlaket with a list of the trust deeds he had to place as security for the loan; that Zlaket examined the property and after some discussion, agreed to loan him the total sum sought; that it was agreed that Eldred would continue accepting the amounts of interest and principal on the notes in his office and then later turn them over to Zlaket, which he did; that he gave no notice to the trustors of the sale of the trust deeds or notes to Zlaket; and that he held assignments from the trustors to him. Cancelled checks of Eldred were received in evidence corroborating the fact of purchase by Zlaket and repurchase by Eldred in the amounts and at the times indicated.

Zlaket testified generally that he was in the real estate and opportunity brokerage business and had made some loans; that in the original transaction in reference to the Sandcamp trust deed, he bought it at the price of $6,000 and it was assigned to him by Eldred; that he drew up an original "Ninety Day Agreement", as described; that he and Eldred agreed therein that he should have the right to repurchase it within 90 days after payment of his usual profit of 10 per cent plus two per cent plus interest accrued, and that he resold said trust deed to Eldred for $6,073.15; that he bought it again at $5,200, and Eldred reassigned it to him with a second "Ninety Day Agreement" to repurchase, and that the other trust deeds and notes were similarly handled. He claims, however, no discussion was had about these transactions being for the purpose of securing a loan but they were absolutely an out and out sale with the right to repurchase. He testified Eldred asked him not to notify the trustor and not to collect the interest and payments for him; that he did tell the trustor in the Sandcamp transaction he had acquired the trust deed and note by assignment from Eldred and that Eldred was "peeved" because he did so; that on many occasions he visited Eldred's office for the purpose of obtaining the interest and payments but found nothing but evasive answers. He said, in buying the several trust deeds and notes, he specifically told Eldred if he repurchased them he would have to pay Zlaket the usual 10 per cent of the purchase price as profit, plus two per cent service charge, plus 6 per cent interest carried by the notes on the unpaid balance.

Defendant called Eldred's former secretary as his witness. She testified Eldred told her he was "selling" to Zlaket a series of trust deeds and asked her to type up the assignments. She testified, however, that he never showed her the "Ninety Day Agreements" executed in connection therewith. His secretary in charge of collections testified she received several irritating telephone calls from Zlaket wanting to know if Eldred had collected certain payments of interest and principal on the notes held by him, and wanted to know why Eldred was accepting payments from them and why Eldred had not sent out notices to them of the assignments to Zlaket; that she told Eldred of the calls and he said nothing.

It appears to us that the question of the veracity of the parties to these transactions was one for the determination of the trial court and it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the testimony of Eldred was inherently improbable, as contended by defendant, even though it was impeached by proof of a conviction of a felony.

[2] It is true that it has been held in certain cases that where a conveyance is absolute in form with an option to repurchase, the one asserting that it is a loan must establish that fact by evidence which is clear and convincing. Cannon v. Seattle Title Trust Co., 1927, 142 Wash. 213, 252 P. 699; O. A. Graybeal Co. v. Cook, 111 Cal.App. 518, 529, 295 P. 1088; Milana v. Credit Discount Co., 27 Cal.2d 335, 163 P.2d 869, 165 A.L.R. 621; Terry Trading Corp. v. Barsky, 210 Cal. 428, 433, 292 P. 474.

Whether or not the evidence received is clear and convincing is usually a question of fact for the trial court and upon conflicting evidence it is not ordinarily open to review on appeal. Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 334, 27 P. 186; Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 686, 96 P. 357; Beeler v. American Trust Co., 24 Cal.2d 1, 147 P.2d 583; Beckman v. Waters, 161 Cal. 581, 119 P. 922; Garrick v. J. M. P., Inc., 150 Cal. App.2d 232, 309 P.2d 896.

After reviewing the entire evidence there are also many circumstances to be considered in connection with the testimony of Eldred in support of the court's findings. (1) All of the notes provided for monthly payments of principal and/or interest and after the assignments to Zlaket Eldred continued to collect the monthly payments and turned them over to Zlaket. (2) There was great disparity between the value of the individual notes and deeds of trust, as reflected by an exhibit in evidence. It also showed the consideration passing from Zlaket to Eldred on acquiring them, and from Eldred to Zlaket upon Eldred reacquiring them, which might well indicate Eldred would undoubtedly repurchase them within the term period required. Lynch v. Lynch, 22 Cal.App. 653, 135 P. 1101; Husheon v. Husheon, 71 Cal. 407, 12 P. 410; Orlando v. Berns, 154 Cal. App.2d 753, 316 P.2d 705; Beeler v. American Trust Co., 24 Cal.2d 1, 147 P.2d 583; 17 Cal.Jur. 788, sec. 88; 33 Cal.Jur.2d sec. 49; 90 A.L.R. 953, 963. (3) In no case did Eldred allow Zlaket to retain the notes and trust deeds, but in all 16 cases he did obtain a reconveyance. (4) The "Ninety Day Agreements" provided that the trust deeds were to be reconveyed to Eldred upon payment to Zlaket of the precise amount Zlaket had paid, plus interest, plus 10 per cent of the purchase price and 2 per cent service charge. Farmer v. Grose, 42 Cal. 169; Hickox v. Lowe, 10 Cal. 197; Lee v. Evans, 8 Cal. 424. (5) Zlaket knew that persons other than Eldred were or might be interested in the title to the deeds of trust, thus showing he expected Eldred to redeem.

[3, 4] Conveyances absolute on their face may be shown to be in fact loans or security transactions. 17 Cal.Jur. 735, sec. 41, et seq.; 33 Cal.Jur.2d 421, sec. 1, et seq.; Beckman v. Waters, 161 Cal. 581, 119 P. 922; Sec. 2925, Civ.Code. The court was justified in finding that the essential elements of usury, as set forth in Shelley v. Byers, 73 Cal.App. 44, 238 P. 177; and 165 A.L.R. 628, relied upon by defendant, had been sufficiently established.

[5] One other question raised by defendant involves the ownership of the security pertaining to about five of these notes and trust deeds in which Eldred assigned or attempted to assign the notes and trust deeds and a "Ninety Day Agreement" to repurchase, which recite "A. G. Eldred for ———", the trustors named. It appears that these trust deeds and notes were originally in the possession of Eldred either by purchase or assignment and he did attempt to assign them to Zlaket by virtue of such ostensible authority for the purpose of securing money, either as a loan or as a sale. The consideration was paid to Eldred and not to the trustors.

They were repurchased by Eldred and he paid the repurchase price demanded. There is no evidence that anyone else paid the amount claimed to be usurious. There is no merit to defendant's claim that the evidence established a direct sale by the trustors to Zlaket.

Certain exhibits were before the trial court and a compilation of them is set forth in respondent's brief. It shows the original principal amount of each note, the balance due thereon, date of transfer to Zlaket, consideration paid by him, date Eldred repaid Zlaket on the repurchase, amount he paid, amount Zlaket gained by the transaction, and the period his money was used. The court made findings as to the amount due on each of the transactions respecting usurious interest, and no complaint is made in the briefs as to this computation, or in fixing the amount due in accordance with the usury law, secs. 1916, 1916–2, and 1916–3 of the West's Annotated Civil Code.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Alex Lopez AYALA and Richard Gilbert Garcia, Defendants, Richard Gilbert Garcia, Appellant.

Cr. 6319.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 9, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Prosecution for unlawful possession of heroin. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. Howard Ziemann, J., entered judgment of conviction, and denied defendant's motion for a new trial, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held, inter alia, that it is not necessary that one have narcotics in his possession, in the sense that that term is used in statute proscribing possession of narcotics, in order to be under the influence or addicted to their use, and therefore a defendant who was charged with and convicted of addiction to unlawful use of narcotics was not in jeopardy for the offense of unlawful possession of a narcotic, even though both charges arose out of one transaction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Ashburn, J., dissented.

1. Indictment and Information ⇐191

Where an offense cannot be committed without necessarily committing another offense, the latter is a necessarily included offense.

2. Criminal Law ⇐200(1)

It is not necessary that one have narcotics in his possession, in the sense that that term is used in statute proscribing possession of narcotics, in order to be under the influence or addicted to their use, and therefore a defendant who was charged with and convicted of addiction to unlawful use of narcotics was not in jeopardy for the offense of unlawful possession of a narcotic, even though both charges arose out of one arrest. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11500, 11721.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1209

Although applicability of statute providing that offenses punishable in different ways by different provisions of Penal Code may be punished under either of such provisions, but in no case under more than one, is not limited to necessarily included offenses, such section is not applicable where separate and distinct transactions are established, and each case is to be decided by a consideration of the particular facts involved. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 654.

4. Criminal Law ⇐29

Drug addiction, as a physical state, is distinct from unlawful possession of a drug both in point of time, manner of accomplishment, and physical relationship between the individual and the contraband, and therefore, where there is possession of a drug not incidental to addiction, a defendant may be convicted of both addiction, and unlawful possession, even though both offenses are charged as the result of one transaction. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11500, 11721; West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 654.

5. Criminal Law ⇐200(1)

In prosecution for unlawful possession of heroin, even though possession of heroin in question might have been incidental to a continuation of defendant's habit, in view of fact it was not incidental or necessary to a commission of addiction for which defendant was convicted, conviction for addiction, under such circumstances, did not preclude punishment for possession. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11500, 11721; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 654.

6. Criminal Law ⇐29

Addiction to drugs is a chronic rather than an acute offense, and, as such, once use has reached the state of addiction, the offense of addiction is complete, and, once addicted, it cannot be said that subsequent unlawful possession of a drug was incidental thereto, for the crime of addiction under such circumstances was fully consummated without regard to the subsequent possession. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11500, 11721; West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 654.

William A. Drake, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

Defendant Garcia was convicted of possession of heroin in violation of section 11500, Health and Safety Code. He has appealed from the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial.

On the evening of November 26, 1957, Officer Woodring, of the Monterey Park Police Department, observed three young men emerge from a car that he had had under intermittent surveillance and enter a restroom of a service station. They remained there some 35 minutes. In the meantime, Officers Hoiten and Kraft joined Woodring in response to his request for assistance. When the young men drove away, Officer Woodring followed their car closely, clocking it at a speed of 53 miles per hour in a 35 mile zone and ordered it to stop. One Contreras was driving. Appellant and defendant Ayala were also in the front seat. The other officers arrived immediately. The occupants were ordered out of the car and were questioned by Officer Woodring as to whether they had been drinking, to which they replied that they had been drinking beer. Contreras was informed that he would be cited for speeding. During the conversation, Officer Hoiten observed appellant remove his hand from his trouser pocket and toss backhanded a Pall Mall cigarette package that landed on the parkway a few feet behind him. Hoiten recovered the package, opened it and discovered that it contained a white powder which upon analysis proved to be heroin. Appellant and the other two men were arrested and searched. A hypodermic needle was found on Ayala.

As an outgrowth of the interrogation of appellant and information subsequently obtained, a criminal complaint was filed in the municipal court of Alhambra charging appellant with "the misdemeanor offense of: violation section 11721, Health and Safety Code (Addicted to unlawful use of narcotics)." Appellant was convicted of addiction and sentenced to 180 days in the county jail.

In the instant case, appellant pled the above municipal court conviction and judgment in bar of this prosecution for unlawful possession. This defense, however, was overruled and appellant was found guilty of possession as charged.

In seeking a reversal appellant argues that (1) he had been once in jeopardy, and (2) the sentence herein constituted double punishment for the same act, in violation of Penal Code, section 654. There is no merit in either of these contentions.

Appellant's first contention is based on the theory that a violation of section 11721 for addiction cannot be committed without necessarily committing a violation of section 11500 (possession). His position, however, is not sound.

[1] The test in this state of a necessarily included offense is simply that where an offense cannot be committed without necessarily committing another offense, the latter is a necessarily included offense. In re Hess, 45 Cal.2d 171, 174, 288 P.2d 5.

[2] It is not necessary that one must have narcotics in his possession, in the sense that term is used in section 11500, in order to be under their influence or addicted to their use, since another person could administer the narcotics to the user without his ever having possession thereof prior to their injection into his system. Thus a person may at a given moment have narcotics coursing through his veins and have an unconsumed narcotic in his pocket or in his hand. Such possession is independent of the fact that other narcotics have been consumed and have been assimilated into the blood stream of the user and he is then under the influence of narcotics or perhaps addicted to the use thereof.

It is therefore clear that appellant has not been once in jeopardy for the offense which is charged herein, viz., possession of a narcotic. Rather he has been charged and convicted of two separate offenses consisting of entirely different elements: one being possession, dominion and control; the other the addiction to narcotics.

Appellant's argument that he has been subjected to double punishment is based on the theory that "the evidence shows but one criminal act was committed"; that "the 'possession' was merely incidental to the 'addiction' * * *." In support of his position appellant relies on section 654, Penal Code, and quotes as follows from People v. Johnson, 163 Cal.App.2d 58, 328 P.2d 809, at page 811: "That code section [§ 654, Pen.Code] embodies a rule of law somewhat broader than the double jeopardy rule and its corollary of included offenses. It provides that 'An act or omission which is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of this code may be punished under either of such provisions, but in no case can it be punished under more than one'. Under the rule of this section, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, a single criminal act, whether it gives rise to included offenses or not, can only be punished once. By this section, it is indispensable in order to impose separate punishments that there be evidence of separate and divisible acts that are not incidental to each other."

[3] While it is true that the applicability of section 654 is not limited to necessarily included offenses (People v. Brown, 49 Cal.2d 577, 591, 320 P.2d 5; People v. Knowles, 35 Cal.2d 175, 187, 217 P.2d 1), this section is not applicable where separate and distinct transactions are established, and each case is to be decided by a consideration of the particular facts involved. In People v. Brown, supra, 49 Cal.2d at page 591, 320 P.2d at page 14, the court states the rule as follows: "Section 654 has been applied not only where there was but one 'act' in the ordinary sense [citation], but also where a course of conduct violated more than one statute and the problem was whether it comprised a divisible transaction which could be punished under more than one statute within the meaning of section 654. Where the question is whether a transaction is divisible or indivisible, each case must be resolved on its facts. [Citations.]"

In the Brown case, supra, death resulted from the commission of an unlawful abortion, and it was held that section 654 precluded convictions for both abortion and murder. In that case, there was but one act. In People v. Knowles, supra, the defendant was convicted of both armed robbery and kidnapping for the purpose of robbery. Our Supreme Court held that as the seizure and confinement were an inseparable part of the robbery, section 654 precluded punishment for both, distinguishing cases where the acts that formed the basis of the kidnapping conviction were separate from those that involved the actual taking of property. See People v. Dorman, 28 Cal.2d 846, 172 P.2d 686; People v. Brown, 29 Cal.2d 555, 176 P.2d 929. In People v. Kehoe, 33 Cal.2d 711, 204 P.2d 32, People v. Clemett, 208 Cal. 142, 280 P. 681, and Schroeder v. United States, 2 Cir., 7 F.2d 60, where it was clear that more than one crime was committed by the defendant's conduct, it was held that only one conviction could be upheld in that separate and distinct acts were not established.

[4] There is no question in the instant case that there was more than one criminal act involved. Addiction, a physical state, is distinct from possession both in point of time, manner of accomplishment and the physical relationship between the individual and the contraband. Therefore, we are here only concerned with the question of whether the possession was incidental to addiction so that it may properly be said both were part of one transaction. This question was raised and discussed in People v. Tenney, 162 Cal.App.2d 458, 328 P.2d 254, where the defendant was convicted of unlawful possession, sale and transportation of narcotics. On appeal, the judgment was affirmed as to counts charging unlawful possession and sale. At page 463 of 162 Cal.App.2d, at page 258 of 328 P.2d the court stated: "Keeys' testimony, however, does support both the sale and possession charges. As to the sale count this is obvious. As to the possession count, while the possession obviously existing in appellant prior to the sale was incidental to the sale, that is not true of the possession subsequent to the sale. Under the evidence, Keeys only purchased a portion of the heroin possessed by appellant. When appellant left Keeys' hotel room after the sale was complete, he took the remainder of the heroin with him. While that subsequent transportation cannot be separated from the subsequent possession, and so cannot support a separate transportation charge, it does support a separate possession charge. The subsequent possession by appellant was in no way incidental to the prior sale. * * *" (Emphasis added.)

[5, 6] The facts of the instant matter establish that defendant was convicted of addiction, the validity of which is not challenged. The possession here involved was not incidental to his addiction, and the mere fact that evidence of possession was received in the municipal court case does not alter this fact. While possessing the instant heroin may have been incidental to a continuation of appellant's habit, it was not incidental or necessary to a commission of the first offense (addiction) for which appellant was convicted. The crucial point is that "addiction is a chronic rather than an ordinary acute offense" (People v. Jaurequi, 142 Cal.App.2d 555, 560, 298 P.2d 896, 900) and as such, once use has reached a state of addiction, the offense of addiction is complete. Once addicted, it cannot be said that subsequent possession was incidental thereto, for the crime of addiction was fully consummated without regard to the subsequent possession.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

ASHBURN, Justice (dissenting).

Judicial philosophy which weakens efficient enforcement of the laws, especially those aimed at suppression of the sale and use of narcotics, is to my mind a deplorable development of recent years. But I cannot acquiesce in what I believe to be double punishment for a single indivisible transaction wherein an addict is in possession of a narcotic.

Section 654, Penal Code,[1] while it speaks in the singular of an act or omission, has not been construed so narrowly, and has been applied in such manner as to accomplish its benign purpose of punishing a wrongdoer but once for a single wrong consisting of a combination of immediately related acts. The questions involved in application of § 654 to a given case are distinct from those of former jeopardy and included offenses. People v. Kehoe, 33 Cal.2d 711, 713, 204 P.2d 32. People v. Clemett, 208 Cal. 142, 144, 280 P. 681, says: "As early as People v. Shotwell, 27 Cal. 394, and People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507, it was held that co-operative acts constituting but one offense, when committed by the same person at the same time, when combined, charge but one crime, and but one punishment can be inflicted as one offense." At page 145 of 208 Cal., at page 682 of 280 P.: "That the rule announced in said earlier decisions is the settled law of this state is confirmed by many subsequent cases." People v. Roberts, 40 Cal.2d 483, 491, 254 P.2d 501, quotes with approval and applies the foregoing language. People v. Brown, 49 Cal.2d 577, 591, 320 P.2d 5, says: "Section 654 has been applied not only where there was but one 'act' in the ordinary sense * * * but also where a course of conduct violated more than one statute and the problem was whether it comprised a divisible transaction which could be punished under more than one statute within the meaning of section 654. Where the question is whether a transaction is divisible or indivisible, each case must be resolved on its facts." People v. Tenney, 162 Cal.App.2d 458, 328 P.2d 254, 257 (hearing denied), quotes People v. Branch, 119 Cal.App.2d 490, 495, 260 P.2d 27, as follows: "In determining this question the courts have refused to dissect the evidence minutely in an attempt to find separate offenses, but, on the contrary, have held that a broad transactional approach should be made." That we have at bar a single indivisible transaction, or "co-operative acts constituting but one offense, when committed by the same person at the same time" seems clear from the record.

Alerted by somewhat suspicious movements of an automobile occupied by defendant Garcia and his co-defendants Ayala and Contreras, Police Officer Woodring "staked out" the vehicle which was parked in a service station. The three occupants went into the rest room where they remained for 35 minutes. They came out together and drove off. The officer followed, clocked their speed at 53 miles in a 35 mile zone and stopped them. All three got out of the car. Asked if they had been drinking, all said they had been drinking beer. Woodring saw Garcia remove an article from his left pants pocket, make a backward throwing motion with his left arm, and Sergeant Hoiten picked up a Pall Mall cigarette package which contained heroin and an eye dropper. Search revealed in Ayala's pocket a paper match book with a hypodermic needle in it. This was on November 26, 1957. The three men were arrested and on the next day one D. La Penna, of the narcotic detail of Los Angeles County Sheriff's office, filed in the municipal court of Alhambra Judicial District a complaint charging appellant with a misdemeanor committed on November 26, 1957, a violation of § 11721, Health and Safety Code, namely, addiction to unlawful use of narcotics. On the same day La Penna filed in the same court a complaint charging appellant with a felony committed on November 26, 1957, a violation of § 11500, Health and Safety Code, possession of narcotics. On December 12th appellant was tried upon the misdemeanor charge, found guilty and sentenced to 180 days in jail; commitment was issued. At that trial the witnesses were Officer Thomas E. Woodring, Officer Stanley G. Fletcher and Charles Avila; the heroin and paraphernalia taken from the three men at the time of arrest on the 26th were introduced in evidence. On December 16th a preliminary hearing was had upon the felony charge and Woodring, Fletcher, Sergeant Hoiten and Officer Klein (a forensic chemist) testified; the same exhibits were received in evidence which had been received in the misdemeanor trial and appellant was held to answer in the superior court. When that trial was reached he entered a plea of former jeopardy and it was stipulated that defendant "be deemed to have testified if he was called and sworn he would testify that the prosecution for the narcotic addiction as reflected in that docket arose out of an arrest in this case involving the possession of heroin." There was no evidence to the contrary. The same exhibits were placed in evidence and the case was submitted upon the preliminary transcript plus the stipulation just mentioned and a transcript of the docket of the Alhambra Municipal Court in the misdemeanor case. Officer Woodring testified that while the three men were in the rest room he suspected a felony was in progress: "I didn't feel that they were in there to do things that people normally do in restrooms." The magistrate at the close of the preliminary hearing in the felony case said: "Well, as to Ayala, he had paraphernalia in his presence which is ordinarily used by heroin users. He is found in the immediate presence of someone who has heroin in his possession and also has a kit. He also spent 45 minutes, which up to now is unaccounted for—or 35 minutes, excuse me, in a men's toilet, and although we didn't have any expert testimony on the subject matter, I believe that there is a reasonable inference that they were there for something other than washing their hands." After conviction in the superior court and upon the hearing of application for probation the subject of addiction was discussed but probation was denied.

Certainly the possession and the addiction were contemporaneous in this instance. The addiction conviction rested upon the incidents above recited, not some earlier or later episode. It is not necessary to the application of § 654, Penal Code, that the one act be an integral part of the other. There need be only "co-operative acts constituting but one offense * * * committed by the same person at the same time, [which] when combined, charge but one crime * * *." What is a single offense is to be determined under People v. Brown, supra, 49 Cal.2d 577, 591, 320 P.2d 5, by solving the question whether "a course of conduct" violating more than one statute "comprised a divisible transaction." I think it highly technical to hold that this addiction and possession form parts of a severable transaction. There is nothing in the record to raise an inference that defendant's possession had any purpose other than satisfying his craving for the drug. For aught that appears he is a victim of narcotics, not a "pusher." In reality this appellant offended society but once on this occasion, and he should not be punished for a misdemeanor and then punished again for a felony where both convictions are based upon the one episode, a single indivisible series of events. The instant situation is factually analogous to People v. Roberts, supra, 40 Cal.2d 483, 491, 254 P.2d 501, People v. Branch, supra, 119 Cal.App. 2d 490, 496, 260 P.2d 27, and People v. Tenney, supra, 162 Cal.App.2d 458, 328 P.2d 254, in which it was held that possession and transportation for purpose of sale and the sale itself are but a single offense and punishable but once.

Section 654, Penal Code, not only forbids double punishment but also precludes a second prosecution in a situation such as we have here; it says: "[A]n acquittal or conviction and sentence under either one bars a prosecution for the same act or omission under any other. * * *" Appellant was convicted and sentenced upon the misdemeanor charge and it was thereafter unlawful to prosecute him in this felony case.

The judgment at bar should be reversed with instructions to dismiss the information.

Muriel M. BROWN, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Ralph I. GUY, doing business as Rigko Offices, and The Rig Company, Defendants.

Ralph I. Guy, Respondent.

Civ. 23388.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 20, 1959.

Action for alleged permanent and disabling injury allegedly caused by one defendant's negligence. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, John J. Ford, J., rendered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed and one defendant moved to dismiss appeal. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that where two trials of cause were at great length, appellant alleged that poverty, coupled with permanent and disabling injury caused by defendant's negligence, necessitated her assumed right to file settled statement, and difficulty was encountered because of inability of reporter to locate several key items of testimony in voluminous transcript, although appellant's bringing up a record, part of which was transcript and part of which was settled statement, was a departure from prescribed rule, it was excusable under the circumstances and appeal would not be dismissed.

Motion to dismiss denied.

1. Statutes ⇐207

Parts of a statute must be construed together and harmonized as far as possible to avoid repugnancy.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐573, 607(1)

Rule on appeal with reference to record on subsequent appeals in same case does not authorize bringing up a record, part of which is transcript and part of which is a settled statement. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rule 11(a, b).

3. Appeal and Error ⇐801(1)

There is strong public policy in favor of hearing appeals on their merits and not depriving party of right of appeal because of technical noncompliance where he is attempting to perfect appeal in good faith, but respondent is entitled to have appellant proceed with expedition and, if appellant fails to comply with the Rules, to have appeal dismissed, but such right of dismissal is not absolute, except for failure to file notice of appeal. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 11(a, b), 53(b).

4. Appeal and Error ⇐607(1)

In determining whether an appellant should be relieved from default in preparing record, length of default, circumstances surrounding default, relative injury that will flow to either party by granting or denying relief, and nature of default must be considered, each case must turn on its own facts, and precedents are of little value. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 11 (a, b), 53(b).

5. Appeal and Error ⇐573, 607(1)

Where difficulty was encountered in preparing settled statement of oral proceedings because of inability of reporter to locate items of testimony in voluminous transcript and respondent contended that settled statement was neither fair nor complete as to him, but respondent would have been in no better position had appellant correctly proceeded under rule with respect to reporter's statement authorizing trial court to prepare settled statement of missing portions, or rule with respect to court's transcript and original papers, respondent was not entitled to dismissal of appeal. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 4 and subd. (e), 5, 7.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐573

Where respondent seeking dismissal of appeal did not point out a single particular in which settled statement of oral proceedings was deficient in content and trial court certified record as correct, in view of such certification, appeal would not be dismissed on ground of alleged insufficiency to reflect oral proceedings. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 4 and subd. (e), 5, 7.

7. Appeal and Error ⇐573, 607(1)

Where two trials of cause were at great length, appellant alleged that poverty, coupled with permanent and disabling injury caused by respondent's negligence, necessitated her assumed right to file settled statement, and difficulty was encountered because of inability of reporter to locate several key items of testimony, although appellant's bringing up record, part of which was transcript and part of which was settled statement, was a departure from prescribed rule, it was excusable under circumstances and appeal would not be dismissed. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 4(a), 7 and subd. (a), 11 and subd. (b).

8. Appeal and Error ⇐607(1)

Document containing notice to prepare transcripts and notice of intention to proceed by settled statement constituted a notice of election under rule providing that notice of election to proceed by narrative statement must be given within 10 days after filing of notice of appeal. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 7 and subd. (a).

9. Appeal and Error ⇐607(1)

Purpose of rule requiring that notice of election to proceed by narrative statement must be given within 10 days after filing notice of appeal is to enable parties to prepare condensed statement of oral proceedings while evidence is fresh in memories of counsel. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 7 and subd. (a).

10. Appeal and Error ⇐607(1)

Where appellant gave unequivocal notice of her intention to proceed in part by settled statement within 10 weeks after motion for a new trial was argued and respondent's counsel had personally participated in both trials, appeal was not subject to dismissal because appellant filed notice of intention to proceed by settled statement 34 days after she filed her notice of appeal rather than 10 days as required by rule. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 7 and subd. (a).

11. Appeal and Error ⇐607(1)

Even though appellant secured or took a total of 104 days' extension in preparation of record for appeal in violation of rule providing that extensions granted by superior court for doing of any act involved in preparation of record shall not exceed 90 days in aggregate, in view of rule to effect that reviewing court for good cause may relieve party from default occasioned by failure to comply with rules, appeal would not be dismissed. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 45(b), 53(b).

Elmer Patrick Friel, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Carl B. Sturzenacker, DeForrest Home and Albert Hampton, Los Angeles, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Respondent has moved to dismiss the pending appeal on the ground of certain defects in the record heretofore filed, and noncompliance with pertinent time provisions of the Rules on Appeal.

The cause was previously before this court which affirmed an order granting a new trial (144 Cal.App.2d 659, 301 P.2d 413). Following a second adverse judgment and the denial of her motion for a new trial, appellant seasonably filed her notice of appeal. Thirty-four days later, on November 26, 1957, appellant filed a "Notice to Clerk of the Superior Court to Prepare Clerk's Transcript and for Preparation of Reporter's Transcript on Appeal." Therein reference was made to the previous appeal and to a stipulation entered into by counsel prior to the second trial, and approved by pre-trial order, "whereby * * * testimony and exhibits introduced at the first trial of said cause could be introduced by both parties at the second trial of said cause by designating, one to the other, such portions of the said testimony desired to be read at the second trial from the said reporter's transcript on appeal * * *." Such testimony was introduced at the second trial in this manner.

Specifying her reliance on Rule 11, Rules on Appeal, appellant then designated in the foregoing "Notice" the portions of the prior record which she desired incorporated by reference, including the oral testimony at the first trial read into evidence by stipulation as aforementioned, and the entire contents of the clerk's transcript in the first case. She further requested a clerk's transcript of the proceedings on the second trial, designating the papers and records desired; and "(p)ursuant to Rule 7, Rules on Appeal" gave notice that "plaintiff will prepare and set forth the oral proceedings by a settled statement of all of the rest of the oral proceedings at said second trial * * * the said statement to be in the form of a condensed narrative statement of all the foregoing." The narrative statement was not served on respondent until the following June and was settled by the trial court on August 12, 1958. After securing an extension of time therefor, appellant filed her opening brief on November 3, 1958; thereafter, on November 25, 1958, respondent made this motion to dismiss. Written opposition to the motion was filed by appellant, including a request that she be relieved from any default found to exist.

Respondent contends that (1) Rule 11(b), added in 1951, does not authorize the filing of a record partially in the form of a settled statement and partially in the form of a reporter's transcript incorporated by reference; (2) appellant's notice of election to proceed by settled statement was not served within the time required by Rule 7(a); and (3) contrary to Rule 45 (b), time extensions for preparation of the record in excess of the 90-day aggregate limit were granted by the trial court.

Rule 11 is entitled "Record on Multiple Appeals" and subdivision (a) thereof provides in part that in the case of cross-appeals "a single record * * * shall be prepared * * * in accordance with Rules 4 and 5 unless all appellants give notice of intention to proceed under Rule 7, or unless the parties stipulate to proceed under Rule 6." Subdivision (b) added in 1951, governs subsequent appeals in the same case and allows the use of an abbreviated record in the second or subsequent appeal, incorporating by reference the necessary material in the record on the earlier appeal. Unlike subdivision (a), however, there is no positive provision as to the method of preparation of the record on the second or subsequent trial.

[1, 2] Respondent argues that there are but three recognized types of record on appeal (Russi v. Bank of America, 69 Cal. App.2d 100, 101, 158 P.2d 252); (1) the transcript; (2) the settled statement; and (3) the agreed statement; that by bringing up a record, part transcript and part settled statement, appellant is actually urging that a fourth method of appeal was created by Rule 11(b). It is a cardinal rule of statutory construction that parts of a statute must be construed together and harmonized as far as possible to avoid repugnancy (People v. Moroney, 24 Cal.2d 638, 642, 643, 150 P.2d 888); therefore, in the absence of any positive and controlling provision in the subdivision to the contrary, we must agree with respondent that a "fourth method of appeal" was not created by the adoption of Rule 11(b) and that records of second or subsequent trials must be brought up as provided in Rule 11(a).

Presented to us now is the query whether this court should relieve appellant from her default and permit a hearing on the merits. As it involves Rule 11(b), the issue presented appears to be without precedent. Rule 53(b), supra, provides that the reviewing court may for good cause relieve a party from default occasioned "by any failure to comply with these rules, except the failure to give timely notice of appeal."

[3, 4] This court's attitude, in connection with relief from defaults generally, is set forth in Jarkich v. Badagliacco, 68 Cal.App.2d 426, 431, 156 P.2d 969, 971: "In determining whether to relieve from default we are faced with two conflicting policies. There is, of course, a strong public policy in favor of hearing appeals on their merits and of not depriving a party of his right of appeal because of technical noncompliance where he is attempting to perfect his appeal in good faith. On the other hand, a respondent is likewise entitled to consideration. He is entitled to have the appellant proceed with expedition, and if the appellant fails to comply with the Rules, to have the appeal dismissed. But this right to a dismissal is not absolute, except for failure to file the notice of appeal. Under the Rules, the trial court may grant extensions not to exceed 90 days, the appellate court may grant additional extensions (Rule 45(c), and the appellate court may relieve from default (Rule 53(b). In determining whether an appellant should be relieved from default, various factors must be considered such as the length of the default, the circumstances surrounding the default, the relative injury that will flow to either party by granting or denying the relief, the nature of the default and other factors. Each case must turn on its own facts, and precedents are of little value."

[5] It appears from the affidavits filed herein that both trials of the instant cause were of great length, appellant's counsel specifically averring that the second trial lasted one month. Appellant's affidavit further states that her poverty, coupled with a permanent and disabling injury assertedly caused by respondent's negligence, necessitated her assumed right to proceed under Rule 7 and that "(i)f appellant is considered to have been in default, it is by sheer inadvertence and mistake."

From the affidavit of respondent's counsel, it appears that difficulty was encountered in preparing a settled statement because of the inability of the reporter to locate several key items of testimony in the voluminous transcript, and that for this reason, in addition to the allegedly dilatory tactics of appellant, the settled statement is neither fair nor complete as to the respondent. This does not appear to be of substantial import because in such a state of the record, it seems to us, respondent would have been in no better position had appellant correctly proceeded under Rules 4 and 5. The reporter being unable to transcribe certain portions of the oral proceedings (Rule 4(e), appellant would have been authorized to move the trial court for leave to prepare a settled statement of the missing portions (Rule 4 (e), supra), thus placing the parties in substantially their present situation.

[6] Respondent's chief complaint seems to be directed not so much to the manner in which the record was brought up as to its alleged insufficiency to reflect the oral proceedings below. In this regard respondent concedes that the trial court conducted "six sessions" lasting "over a period of several months" and made "great and sincere efforts" to settle the statement to the satisfaction of both parties. Furthermore, respondent has not pointed out a single particular in which the statement is deficient in content; and the trial court has certified the record as correct. Respondent's contention must give way in the face of such certification.

[7] While disapproving appellant's departure from the procedure provided in Rule 11(b), we nevertheless believe it to be excusable under the peculiar circumstances here existing. The instant case does not present the flagrant violation of the rules and time provisions thereof which confronted the court in Russi v. Bank of America, supra, relied on by respondent. In that case, a far different situation appeared, appellant first electing to proceed on the judgment roll alone and after all briefs had been filed, then sought a transcript under Rule 4(a).

[8] Respondent's next point relates to appellant's failure to give timely notice of election to proceed by narrative statement under Rule 7, which provides that such notice must be given "within 10 days after filing the notice of appeal" (Rule 7(a). Appellant filed her notice of appeal on October 23, 1957, and, as heretofore pointed out, she took no further action respecting the prosecution of her appeal until November 26, 1957, some thirty-four days later, when she filed, as one document, a notice to prepare transcripts pursuant to Rule 11 and a notice of intention to proceed by settled statement under Rule 7. Through her counsel's affidavit, she seeks to justify this delay by referring to an order of the trial court, not appearing in the record, extending time for the preparation and filing of the notice for incorporation of the prior record (Rule 11). It is alleged that such order had to be secured because of the additional time required for the segregation of testimony read into evidence at the second trial (to be incorporated by reference under Rule 11) from the remainder of the oral proceedings. According to a further averment by her counsel, such order "had the effect, it was understood, of extending time for Notice of Election under Rule 7." These averments are not denied by respondent, who first contends, without arguing the point, that the document dated November 26, 1957, does not in fact constitute a notice of election. Under Rule 53(a), we are enjoined to liberally construe the requirements governing the appellate process, and find such contention without merit.

[9, 10] A more serious problem is presented by the departure from the time provision prescribed by Rule 7. As stated in Brock v. Southern Pacific Co., 74 Cal.App. 2d 806, 809, 169 P.2d 402, 404: "The obvious purpose of this time limitation is to enable the parties to prepare the 'condensed statement of the oral proceedings' while the evidence is fresh in the memories of counsel." Respondent relies heavily on this and other pronouncements in the Brock case, in which a motion for relief from default was denied and the appeal dismissed on motion. Unlike the situation in the case at bar, appellant Brock initiated his appeal solely under the method authorized by Rules 4 and 5, and five months later, after securing extensions of time to prepare his record, gave notice of election to proceed under Rule 7. The court properly observed that respondent was unfairly imposed upon since there was nothing in the record to show that the second method was contemplated by either party until long after the time had expired. The record before us is otherwise. Appellant herein unequivocally gave notice of her intention to proceed in part by settled statement within ten weeks after the motion for a new trial was argued. As appellant observes, the evidence should then have been reasonably fresh in the memory of respondent's counsel who personally participated in both trials. Furthermore, an "entirely different form of record" was not here involved. We are persuaded that the reasoning of the Brock case is inapplicable to the instant motion, and accordingly relieve appellant from the additional default herein discussed.

[11] Respondent's final contention concerns appellant's claimed violation of Rule 45(b) which provides that time extensions granted by the superior court for the doing of any act involved in the preparation of the record "shall not exceed 90 days in the aggregate, and no single extension shall be for a period in excess of 30 days." According to respondent, although the record is silent on most of such matters, appellant secured an extension of 25 days on October 28, 1957, and an additional 28 days on December 20, 1957, and still another additional 28 days on January 21, 1958; furthermore, says respondent, appellant took an extension of 23 days without benefit of court order, "making a total of 104 (sic) days." Since we have already relieved appellant from defaults of an equally serious nature, we are disposed to accord her further relief as we are empowered to do under rule 53(b). We believe that the cumulative effect of these rule violations is outweighed by the fundamental principle that appeals, wherever possible, should be heard on their merits.

For the foregoing reasons the motion to dismiss is denied.

LATCHFORD-MARBLE GLASS CO., a corporation, et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 23247.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 20, 1959.

Action for breach of contract and for accounting. From an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kenneth N. Chantry, J., changing the place of trial from Los Angeles County to City and County of San Francisco, the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that the evidence did not establish that the trial judge abused his discretion in granting the motion to change the place of trial.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐965
Venue ⇐51, 52(1)

A change of venue for the convenience of witnesses and the promotion of justice is essentially within the sound discretion of the trial judge and his ruling will not be disturbed unless it appears as a matter of law that there has been an abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐965

As respects ruling of the trial judge on a change of venue for the convenience of witnesses, the question on appeal is whether the trial court abused its "discretion", that is, whether it exceeded the bounds of reason, all the circumstances before the court being considered. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Discretion".

3. Affidavits ⇐17

An affidavit wholly devoid of probative facts necessary to be stated is insufficient.

4. Venue ⇐66

An affidavit in support of a motion for change of venue for the convenience of witnesses was not insufficient as consisting of mere conclusions and hearsay statements. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

5. Venue ⇐67

Affidavits on a motion for change of venue for the convenience of witnesses was not insufficient as failing to state the names of the witnesses though the affiant did not state that any particular person would actually be a witness since such an affirmative declaration was unnecessary and it was sufficient if the proposed witnesses were identified by name and it was stated that they would be necessary witnesses. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

6. Venue ⇐68

On a motion for change of venue for convenience of witnesses, the movant has the burden of showing the relevancy and materiality of the proposed witnesses' testimony. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

7. Venue ⇐67

Affidavit in support of a motion for change of venue for the convenience of witnesses was not insufficient for failing to set out the substance of the testimony of any alleged witness where the affidavits did state the subjects upon which the testimony would be given by four former employees and also stated they would be called under the statute. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. §§ 397, subd. 3, 2055.

8. Venue ⇐67

On motion for change of venue for convenience of witnesses, there is no requirement that the movant show the relevancy and materiality of the proposed witnesses' testimony where adverse witnesses are involved and the statute respecting the calling of such witnesses will be relied upon. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2055.

9. Venue ⇐67

Affidavits in support of a motion for change of venue were not insufficient on ground of failure to demonstrate that both the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the transfer. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 397, subd. 3, 1989, 2055.

10. Venue ⇐67

Where affidavits on motion for change of venue to San Francisco did not state why it would be inconvenient for the named witnesses to attend trial in the county of suit or that such witnesses would in fact object to attending trial there, affidavits were not insufficient where the trial court was justified in drawing reasonable inferences from the evidentiary facts stated in the affidavits and could reasonably infer that it would be inconvenient for the witnesses to travel over 400 miles from their places of employment and residence to a trial of indefinite duration and it was inferable from the facts that it would be inconvenient for the corporation witnesses to transport their books and records from San Francisco to Los Angeles. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 397, subd. 3, 1989, 2055.

11. Venue ⇐52(2)

While generally the convenience of employees of either party will not be considered on a motion for change of venue for convenience of witnesses when such employees are being called by an adverse party, the court may properly consider their convenience. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 397, subd. 3, 1989, 2055.

12. Venue ⇐70

Where action was transferred to Los Angeles because individual defendants resided there and plaintiffs made a motion to change the place of trial to San Francisco for convenience of witnesses and to promote the ends of justice, evidence supported order transferring cause to San Francisco on ground that the ends of justice would be better subserved by such transfer. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 397, subd. 3, 1989, 2055.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

Defendants appeal from the order granting plaintiffs' motion to change the place of trial from Los Angeles County to the City and County of San Francisco.[1]

Plaintiffs commenced this action for breach of contract and for an accounting in San Francisco. Defendants moved for a change of venue to Los Angeles since the individual defendants resided there. The superior court of the City and County of San Francisco denied defendants' motion. On appeal the order was reversed[2] and the action was then transferred to Los Angeles. Thereafter, plaintiffs made a motion to change the place of trial to San Francisco for the convenience of witnesses and to promote the ends of justice. Said motion was supported by an original and supplemental affidavit of Leon A. Blum, attorney for the plaintiffs. In substance, Mr. Blum deposed as follows:

"The First Cause of Action, as stated in paragraph XI thereof, alleges that defendants (who had previously employed plaintiffs as their agents for the sale and distribution of glass bottles and other goods in Northern California, and thereafter—and while their agreement with plaintiffs was still in effect, organized and incorporated subsidiary corporations to compete with plaintiffs in that same business) 'with the intent of competing unfairly with plaintiffs, enticed several employees of plaintiffs to leave their respective employment with plaintiffs and to accept employment

1. As a precautionary measure, defendants have appealed from both the minute order and the subsequent written order transferring the case to San Francisco.

2. J. C. Millett Co. v. Latchford-Marble Glass, 144 Cal.App.2d 838, 301 P.2d 914.

with the said subsidiary corporation defendants'.

"The employees above referred to include: Frank Toso, Jr., who is now the general manager of the Latchford Package Co., one of the defendants; Kenneth H. Hoffman, who is now office manager of the Latchford Package Co., one of the defendants; Clarence Coulter and Edward H. Norman.

"All of said employees are employed by the defendant corporations in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and reside in said City and County or in the immediate vicinity thereof, and will be needed as witnesses at the trial of this action to prove the allegations in paragraph XI of the First Cause of Action in said Amended Complaint.

"All of said employees, being currently employed by defendants, will have to be subpoenaed and examined as adverse witnesses under the provisions of section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and cannot be compelled to attend the trial at a place more than 150 miles out of the county in which they reside under the provisions of section 1989 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"The Second Cause of Action of said Amended Complaint, paragraph II thereof, alleges that (after so enticing plaintiffs' said former employees) 'all of the said defendants, thru the instrumentality of said subsidiary corporation defendants and the plaintiffs' said former employees, and in violation of business ethics and the rights of plaintiffs, did offer for sale and sold and made deliveries to customers of plaintiffs in Northern California—in direct competition with plaintiffs and without plaintiffs' consent, wine, liquor and beverage bottles, and continued to do so until the expiration of the said written agreement on December 31, 1952.'

"The customers of plaintiffs to whom such sales and deliveries are alleged to have been made, include but are not limited to the following:

Regal Amber Brewing Co.	currently located at	3250–20th St., S.F.
Italian Swiss Colony	"	615–4th St., "
Haas Bros.	"	2400 Army St., "
Lewis Westco Co.	"	222 Front St., "
Alexander-Balart Co.	"	455 Allan St., "
California Wine Co.	"	221–14th St., "
Lucky Lager Brewing Co.	"	2061 Newhall "
Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co.	"	640 Valencia "

"The testimony of said customers, and of several other customers in Northern California will be required to prove the allegations of the Second Cause of Action of said complaint, and to prove the dates, amounts and circumstances under which the said alleged sales and deliveries were made.

"Said customers cannot be compelled to attend the trial at a place more than 150 miles out of the county in which they reside or have a place of business according to the provisions of section 1989 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

The above was supplemented by Mr. Blum to include the following: "Supplementing paragraph I of my said affidavit with particular reference to former employees of plaintiffs who have been employed by defendants or one of them, Frank Toso, Jr., Kenneth H. Hoffman, Clarence Coulter and Edward H. Norman, each of them presently employed by the defendants and formerly employed by the plaintiffs, should testify as to the following facts within their own knowledge and recollection: (a) how long each of them had been employed by plaintiffs during and prior to year 1952; (b) the acquaintance of each of them with each of plaintiffs' customers and customers' employees, purchasing practices, needs and preferences and the information and knowledge of each of them of plaintiffs' customers' lists and lists of preferred customers; (c) the date when each of them left the employ of the plaintiffs; (d) the date when, and circumstances under which, each of them became employed by defendants; and (e) what each of them did or was requested to do by the defendants during the period from June 19, 1952 to December 31, 1952, and the information and acquaintance with plaintiffs' business and relationship with plaintiffs' customers used and employed in defendant's behalf, which tended to be a benefit to defendants and a detriment to the plaintiffs; and (f) any other related matters which will tend to establish a course of conduct and conspiracy on the part of the defendants as alleged in paragraph XI of the Amended Complaint.

"Supplementing paragraph II of my said affidavit with particular reference to former customers of plaintiffs Regal Amber Brewing Co., Italian Swiss Colony, Haas Bros., Lewis Westco Co., Alexander-Balart Co., California Wine Co., Lucky Lager Brewing Co., Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co., through their respective officers, employees or purchasing agents, should testify and produce records of the following facts: (a) as to any conversation with and solicitation by defendants or defendants' agents or employees relating to making future purchases from defendants instead of from plaintiffs; (b) dates and amounts of purchases made by each of said business firms from defendants pursuant to such solicitation (if any) between June 19, 1952 and December 31, 1952 when plaintiffs' contract with the defendants expires; (c) whether such solicitation on behalf of defendants, if any there was, was made by a former employee of plaintiffs, who had accepted employment with defendants during said period; and (d) similar and relevant matter tending to show a course of conduct and conspiracy on the part of the defendants, as alleged in paragraph II of the Second Cause of Action of the Amended Complaint; that each of said business organizations last above named is a substantial business organization employing corporate executives, managing and purchasing agents, accountants, receiving and shipping agents, and billing clerks engaged in their employers' dealings with plaintiffs and with defendants and the identity of each of such employees of said organizations and the scope of the testimony of each cannot be fully anticipated at this date."

[1, 2] Section 397(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure empowers a trial court to change the place of trial when the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change. A change of venue made pursuant to this section lies essentially within the sound discretion of the trial judge and his ruling will not be disturbed unless it is made to appear as a matter of law that there has been an abuse of that discretion. Wrin v. Ohlandt, 213 Cal. 158, 159, 1 P.2d 991; Scott v. Stuart, 190 Cal. 526, 527, 213 P. 947; Edwards v. Pierson, 156 Cal.App.2d 72, 76, 318 P.2d 789; Chaffin Const. Co. v. Maleville Bros., 155 Cal.App.2d 660, 662–663, 318 P.2d 196. As stated in Wrin v. Ohlandt, supra, 213 Cal. at page 159, 1 P. 2d at page 991, "[i]t is well settled that a motion for a change of venue grounded upon the convenience of witnesses rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, the exercise of which will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a showing of its abuse."

The question presented on this appeal is whether the trial court abused its discretion, that is, whether it exceeded "the bounds of reason,—all the circumstances before it being considered." Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 48, 16 P. 345, 366; In re Guardianship of Kiles, 80 Cal.App.2d 751, 755, 182 P.2d 639.

Defendants anchor their argument that the trial court abused its discretion in granting plaintiffs' motion upon asserted deficiencies in the affidavits filed in support of the motion. It is to an examination of the affidavits that attention will now be directed.

[3, 4] Defendants first argue that an affidavit in support of a motion for change of venue which consists of conclusions and hearsay statements should be disregarded and cannot support an order based thereon. While it is true that an affidavit wholly devoid of the probative facts necessary to be stated is insufficient (see Baird v. Smith, 21 Cal.App.2d 221, 224, 68 P.2d 979; Pacific States Corp v. Shepardson, 105 Cal. App. 747, 751, 288 P. 714), it is obvious that more than mere conclusions were set forth in the instant affidavits. For example, Leon Blum deposed, not on information and belief (Pacific States Corp. v. Shepardson, supra), but based on facts within his own knowledge, that defendants induced four named individuals to leave plaintiffs' employment and thereafter employed these named persons themselves. That these former employees reside in or near San Francisco and will be needed as witnesses to testify to specified matters. The above involves neither conclusions nor hearsay. From the foregoing it is apparent defendants' argument is not well founded factually.

[5] Defendants' contention that plaintiffs' affidavits failed to state the names of the witnesses is without merit. The affidavits in support of plaintiffs' motion lists the names and addresses of eight of plaintiffs' former customers and the names of four former employees and states such customers and employees will be needed to testify at the trial in order for plaintiffs to prove their case. It is true that Blum did not state that any particular person would actually be a witness, but such an affirmative declaration is unnecessary (see Wood v. Silvers, 35 Cal.App.2d 604, 610, 96 P.2d 366, 97 P.2d 265) and it is sufficient if the proposed witnesses are identified by name and it is stated they will be necessary witnesses (see Wood v. Silvers, supra). Furthermore, the fact that the eight former customers named by plaintiff may be corporations rather than individuals does not, contrary to defendants' belief, mean they cannot be deemed a "named" witness. Furthermore, their books and records are subject to subpoena.

[6–8] Defendants next argue that the affidavits in support of the motion failed to set out the substance of the testimony of any alleged witness. While it is no doubt true that the moving party has the burden of showing the relevancy and materiality of the proposed witnesses' testimony (Edwards v. Pierson, supra, 156 Cal. App.2d at page 75, 318 P.2d at page 791; Juneau v. Juneau, 45 Cal.App.2d 14, 17, 113 P.2d 463; Art Frost of Glendale v. Hooper, 130 Cal.App.2d Supp. 903, 905, 280 P.2d 229), there is no requirement, where adverse witnesses are involved and section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure will be relied on, that the precise testimony be anticipated in the supporting affidavits. This would be impossible in many cases. Under such circumstances, the trial court should be able to pass on the relevancy and materiality of the proposed testimony where the affidavits state the subjects to which the proposed testimony will relate. In the instant case, the affidavits did state the subjects upon which testimony would be given by the four former employees and also stated they would have to be called under 2055.

There is language in some California cases which indicates that the moving party must show that the witnesses' testimony will be favorable to his position. See, e. g., Chaffin Const. Co. v. Maleville Bros., 155 Cal.App.2d 660, 318 P.2d 196; Ennis-Brown Co. v. Long, 7 Cal.App. 313, 316, 94 P. 250. However, such is not a rigid requirement. Even when a friendly witness is involved in a case where the substance of what he might testify to is not spelled out and it is therefore impossible to forecast whether his testimony would be favorable or unfavorable to the moving party, the trial court is not thereby precluded from exercising its discretion.

This court, in Edwards v. Pierson, supra, 156 Cal.App.2d at page 75, 318 P.2d at page 791, commented on the question as follows: "In the present instance the moving affidavits state the subjects upon which the witnesses are expected to testify but fail to reveal the substance of what any of them would say, and it is impossible to tell whether their testimony would be favorable or unfavorable to plaintiff. However, as the object of the stated requirement of the affidavit is to enable the court 'to determine the materiality of the evidence or the necessity of testimony from such witnesses' (citation), the vagueness of the affidavits at bar cannot be said to vitiate although it does present a situation which properly may be considered by the trial judge in exercising his discretion." (Emphasis added.)

[9] Finally, defendants argue that Blum's affidavits failed to demonstrate that both the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by a transfer of the instant action from Los Angeles to San Francisco. We are of the opinion that plaintiffs satisfied the double burden of showing that both the convenience of witnesses and ends of justice would be advanced by such a transfer as is required by law. See Peiser v. Mettler, 50 Cal.2d 594, 328 P.2d 953; Prewitt v. Prewitt, 128 Cal.App.2d 344, 346, 275 P.2d 63; Rios v. Lacey Trucking Co., 123 Cal. App.2d 865, 867–868, 268 P.2d 160.

[10] The affidavits do not state why it would be inconvenient for the named witnesses to attend a trial in Los Angeles or that such witnesses would in fact object to attending trial there. Nevertheless, a trial court is justified in drawing reasonable inferences from the evidentiary facts stated in the affidavits. Harden v. Skinner and Hammond, 130 Cal.App.2d 750, 753, 279 P.2d 978; Dick v. La Madrid, 82 Cal.App.2d 450, 452, 186 P.2d 149. In Dick v. La Madrid, supra, 82 Cal.App.2d at page 452, 186 P.2d at page 151, the court stated that "[c]onsiderable discretion is vested in the trial court by section 397, Code of Civil Procedure. When such a motion is made, the burden of proof necessarily rests upon the moving party. While inferences may be drawn from facts presented, there must be some evidentiary showing in order to justify the drawing of such inferences." In the case at bar, the names and addresses, or at least city residence and place of employment, were stated. From this, the trial court could have reasonably inferred that it would be inconvenient for these individuals to travel over 400 miles from their place of employment and residence to a trial of indefinite duration. Furthermore, it was inferable from the facts stated that it would be inconvenient for the corporation witnesses to transport their books and records from San Francisco to Los Angeles.

[11] While generally the convenience of the employees of either party will not be considered (Chaffin Const. Co. v. Maleville Bros., 155 Cal.App.2d 660, 663, 318 P.2d 196; Willingham v. Pecora, 44 Cal. App.2d 289, 293, 112 P.2d 328), when such employees are being called by an adverse party, the court may properly consider their convenience. Harden v. Skinner and Hammond, 130 Cal.App.2d 750, 751, 279 P.2d 978.

[12] As pertains to a showing that the ends of justice will be promoted, Harden v. Skinner and Hammond, supra, 130 Cal. App.2d at page 755, 279 P.2d at page 980, states that "[t]he trial court may rely not only on the direct facts set forth in the affidavits, but also on any reasonable and relevant inference arising therefrom." In the instant action there are several logical and valid inferences arising from the averments in the affidavits to support the trial court's conclusion that the ends of justice would be better served by transferring the trial closer to the witnesses. In the first place, the witnesses would be readily accessible for immediate recall if further testimony was desirable, thus preventing needless delays. The obvious saving in the witnesses' time and expense in traveling to Los Angeles and returning to San Francisco also promote justice. Furthermore, as four of the witnesses are adverse, it would be necessary for plaintiffs to obtain their testimony by deposition if trial were held in Los Angeles, and the ends of justice are better served by representing to the trier of fact oral testimony rather than submitting the same through depositions. Bartholomae Oil Corp. v. Associated Oil Co., 203 Cal. 176, 179–180, 263 P. 516; Carr v. Stern, 17 Cal.App. 397, 408, 120 P. 35. As stated in Carr v. Stern, supra, 17 Cal. App. at page 408, 120 P. at page 40, "[i]t is true, of course, that, should the trial be had in San Francisco, their depositions could be taken, if their personal attendance could not be secured, still it is manifestly always more satisfactory and desirable, in jury cases in particular, to present the testimony first hand to those who must determine the questions of fact, than to submit the same through depositions, which, in practical effect, is always a sort of hearsay way of adducing the proofs."

It is true that defendants' counsel in his affidavit "pledged" the attendance of the four employees at a trial in Los Angeles. However, the trial court was warranted in rejecting this pledge in that defendants themselves had no way of assuring their attendance at the time of trial and, in any event, the process of court would be more effective than a personal pledge.

Therefore, it cannot be said that the trial judge abused his discretion in granting plaintiffs' motion to change the place of trial. Under all the circumstances it does not appear that the trial judge exceeded the bounds of reason in concluding that the testimony of specified witnesses would be material and relevant and that the ends of justice and the convenience of these witnesses would be promoted by a change in the place of trial.

Civ. 5793.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 16, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 11, 1959.

Action by motorcyclist for injuries sustained in an intersectional collision with an automobile. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Orange County, Ronald Crookshank, J., the motorcyclist appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, Acting P. J., held that where affidavits in support of motion for new trial indicated that a juror had made certain statements to cojurors, but such juror filed an affidavit denying such assertions, reviewing court must assume that trial court, which denied the motion for new trial, found that juror had not made the statements attributed to her.

Judgment affirmed.

1. New Trial ⇐142

Affidavits of jurors are admissible which relate to occurrences during trial and deliberations of jury tending to establish bias of a juror or other prejudicial circumstance existing at time of his impanelment which he concealed during the voir dire examination directed to that particular point.

MUSSELL, Acting Presiding Justice.

This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when a motorcycle which he was operating in a westerly direction on Second Street at or near its intersection with Campo Walk, in the city of Long Beach, collided with an automobile being driven by one of the defendants. A jury trial resulted in a verdict in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff. Judgment was entered in accordance with the verdict. Plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied and he appeals from the judgment, claiming that irregularities occurred in the proceedings of the jury which denied appellant a fair trial as a matter of law; that the matters complained of consist of concealment of certain prejudices and attitudes on voir dire examination, reception of evidence outside of court and use of unauthorized sources of law; that the same acts constituted misconduct of jurors which denied appellant a fair trial. Insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and judgment is not specified as a ground of appeal.

In support of his motion for a new trial and of his contention that irregularities occurred in the proceedings of the jury, appellant filed several affidavits. It is stated in the affidavit of Evelyn Sutherland that she was a juror at the trial; that during the deliberations in the jury room a co-juror, Mrs. Brock, stated to the group that she had gone to the intersection where the accident occurred three times during the trial; that the curve was very dangerous; that Mrs. Brock then read from a summary of the Vehicle Code which she had brought with her into the jury room. Matilda Smith, another juror, stated in her affidavit that Mrs. Brock stated that she had gone to the scene of the accident and had experimented with her car in making the turn, as the defendant had done, and that the defendant could not have done anything besides what he did; that Mrs. Brock read to the jury from a pamphlet which she said was the Vehicle Code of the State of California; that subsequent to the trial Mrs. Anderson, forewoman of the jury, stated to affiant that she was against awarding substantial amounts as damages for pain and suffering because it made her insurance premiums go up.

The affidavit of Ida May Roberts states, in substance, that Mrs. Brock stated she had gone to the scene of the accident and experimented with her car and that Mrs. Brock read from a Vehicle Code summary. The affidavit of juror Zelma Bosshard was to the same effect as those of the other jurors concerning the statements made by Mrs. Brock. Zelma Bosshard further stated in her affidavit that Mrs. Anderson had stated to her that she did not believe in awarding much in damages because it would cause her insurance rates to be raised. Affidavits were also filed by Hazel L. Moody and Atha D. Merriman to the effect that Mrs. Anderson had stated in another case in which she was a juror that she was against large verdicts because they caused insurance rates to be high.

> "I was selected and sat as a juror in the trial of the above entitled matter.
>
> "No questions were asked of me at the trial of this action during the time the jurors were being questioned by the lawyers as to whether I had any belief that a large judgment in favor of the plaintiff in this action might affect my insurance rates.
>
> "I at no time stated to Zelma Bosshard that I 'did not believe in awarding much in damages because it would cause my insurance rate to be raised.'
> "At no time did I state to Matilda Smith that I, 'was against awarding substantial amounts as damages for pain and suffering because it made my insurance premiums go up.' I have at all times stated to whoever asked me concerning my frame of mind concerning the award of damages in personal injury actions that I would at all times follow the Court's instructions to the best of my ability and base any award for damages which I might make on the evidence before me and the instructions of the court. This has always been my frame of mind and still is my frame of mind concerning damages in accident cases. Had it been my decision to award damages in this case, which it was not, I would have voted to award plaintiff a sum of money which would fair [sic] and adequately compensate him under the evidence in the case and under the Court's instructions, whether that sum might be large or small, and without allowing anything to be taken into consideration other than what I heard in Court and the Judge's instructions.

"I have at all times had a fair and open mind concerning this or any accident case and there has at no time been any statement of mine on my part which would prevent me from returning a fair and impartial verdict based upon evidence and the law as given to me by the Court. My decision in this case was based upon evidence and the law as I saw it."

In Kollert v. Cundiff, 50 Cal.2d 768, 329 P.2d 897, 899, it is held that it is the general rule in California that affidavits may not be used to impeach a verdict (citing many cases) and that "An exception to the general rule is made by statute where 'any one or more of the jurors have been induced to assent to any general or special verdict * * * by a resort to the determination of chance. * * *' Code Civ.Proc., § 657, subd. 2. Another exception, recognized by judicial decision, is that affidavits of jurors may be used to set aside a verdict where the bias or disqualification of a juror was concealed by false answers on voir dire. E. g., Williams v. Bridges, 140 Cal.App. 537, 35 P.2d 407.

"Subdivision 1 of section 657, which provides that a verdict may be vacated for 'irregularity in the proceedings,' does not refer to jurors' affidavits and may not be regarded as permitting the use of such affidavits in situations where they would not otherwise be proper. Cf. People v. Evans, 39 Cal. 2d 242, 250, 246 P.2d 636 [rejecting a similar argument made with respect to Pen.Code, section 1181, subd. 2]. The statements to the contrary in Shipley v. Permanente Hospital, 127 Cal.App. 2d 417, 424, 274 P.2d 53, 48 A.L.R.2d 964, are disapproved."

In Watson v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 157 Cal.App.2d 112, 116, 320 P.2d 890, 893, it is said:

"A juror cannot impeach his own verdict, nor may a dissenting juror impeach the verdict of his fellow jurors, by affidavit except where the verdict was reached by lot or chance. Code Civ.Proc., § 657, subd. 2; McWilliams v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 100 Cal.App.2d 27, 29, 222 P.2d 953; Woods v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 91 Cal.App.2d 572, 576, 205 P.2d 738.

"An additional exception has been recognized whereby affidavits of jurors may be considered which relate to occurrences during the trial and the deliberations of the jury tending to establish the bias of a juror or other prejudicial circumstance existing at the time of his impanelment which he concealed during the voir dire examination directed to that point. Forman v. Alexander's Markets, 138 Cal.App.2d 671, 674, 292 P.2d 257. It must be shown that the bias or other prejudicial circumstance existed at the time of the voir dire examination and was concealed by the juror. Shipley v. Permanente Hospital, 127 Cal.App.2d 417, 424, 274 P.2d 53, 48 A.L.R.2d 964, distinguishing between that which had origin after the impanelment and before the discharge of the jury from that which had origin before the impanelment and continuing until the discharge of the jury. Williams v.

In Maffeo v. Holmes, 47 Cal.App.2d 292, 117 P.2d 948, two of the jurors had, during the trial, visited the scene of the accident involved and reported their observations during deliberations. The court cited the general rule announced in the Watson case, supra, and held that on the motion for a new trial affidavits or testimony or extrajudicial statements offered to disclose the behavior of a juror should be rejected upon considerations of public policy. See also McWilliams v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 100 Cal.App.2d 27, 29, 222 P.2d 953.

[1] Affidavits of jurors are admissible which relate to occurrences during the trial and the deliberations of the jury tending to establish the bias of a juror or other prejudicial circumstance existing at the time of his impanelment which he concealed during the voir dire examination directed to that point. Forman v. Alexander's Markets, 138 Cal.App.2d 671, 674, 292 P.2d 257.

The record shows that the following took place during the voir dire examination of juror Edith Anderson:

"Q Is there anything about the amount of $147,000, just in and of itself, before you have heard any of the evidence in this case, which would affect you one way or the other? A No, I wouldn't think so.

"Q In other words, you'd be willing to wait until the evidence is all in and from the evidence and the Judge's instructions you'd be willing to see what the evidence justified? A I understand that is the way we are supposed to do.

"Q That's right, and if it did justify a verdict for that amount, you would be willing to bring a verdict in for that amount? A Yes, sir. * * *

"Q I should make this clear, that all of these things which I am discussing with you are to test out your attitude and your open mindedness on the subjects and the Court is the one that will give you the law and you will take the instructions from the Court, and should you happen to have any ideas of your own, either as to what the law is or should be, you will be willing to lay those aside and follow the court's instructions? A Yes, sir.

"Q Do you know of any reason why you could not be fair and impartial in this case? A No, sir, I don't."

[2] While the affidavits in support of the motion for a new trial indicate that juror Edith Anderson made certain statements to co-jurors, her affidavit contains a denial of these assertions. We therefore must assume that the trial court found that she had not made the statements attributed to her. This supports the implied finding of the trial court to the same effect. Bates v. Newman, 121 Cal.App.2d 800, 812, 264 P.2d 197.

In Sharp v. Keating, 13 Cal.App.2d 637, 640, 57 P.2d 539, 541, the court said:

"Plaintiff assails the action of the trial court in denying the motion for a new trial, but we are of the opinion that such order should not be disturbed on appeal, because the weight of authority seems to be that where, as in this case, such motion is based on affidavits in support thereof, opposed by counter affidavits fully denying all the material allegations contained therein, the order denying the motion for a new trial will be affirmed on appeal. Diller v. Northern California Power Co., 162 Cal. 531, 123 P. 359, Ann.Cas.1913D, 908; Patterson v. Keeney, 165 Cal. 465, 132 P. 1043, Ann.Cas.1914D, 232."

[3] An order denying a new trial will not be disturbed if the record shows any basis upon which it may be upheld. Landrum v. Severin, 37 Cal.2d 24, 28, 230 P.2d 337.

Action by sublessee against lessee for wrongful eviction from premises upon default by lessee under her lease. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. F. Moroney, J., in favor of the sublessee, and from an order denying lessee's motion for new trial, the lessee appealed and the sublessee cross-appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that where sublessee leased a portion of the premises for $90 a month for about 24 years and erected a $7,000 restaurant thereon which was to belong to owner of land at end of term, and he in turn subleased restaurant to another for two year term at a rental of $250 a month, and lessee defaulted while sublease still had 19 years 3½ months to run and while there was still 17 months to run on sublease of restaurant and sublessee was forced to vacate premises and lost his building, award of $9,786.50 to sublessee against lessee was neither excessive nor inadequate.

Judgment affirmed and attempted appeal from order denying new trial dismissed.

1. Landlord and Tenant ⇐178

ASHBURN, Justice.

Defendant appeals from the judgment and attempts to appeal from an order denying her motion for new trial. Plaintiff takes a cross-appeal from the judgment. The court awarded plaintiff $9,786.50 as damages for wrongful eviction from premises held by him under a sublease from defendant Irvine.

Defendant had leased certain premises from James R. Palmer and Carrie Palmer for a term ending on December 31, 1971, at a rental of $200 a month. Defendant subleased a portion of the premises to plaintiff at the rate of $90 a month for a term beginning January 27, 1948, and ending on December 30, 1971, the sublessee to pay the taxes upon improvements placed upon the subleased parcel. Plaintiff was required by his lease to erect a building upon the premises, which would belong to the landowner at the end of the term. He erected a restaurant building at a cost of $7,000, also installed fixtures and restaurant equipment at an additional outlay of $12,000. In 1951 plaintiff subleased to Pete Buzas for a two-year term beginning November 16, 1951, at a rental of $250 a month for the building and all its equipment. On or about May 5, 1952, the Palmers served upon defendant as their lessee, and plaintiff as sublessee, a notice of default upon the main lease in that the rent due on May 1, 1952 in the sum of $200 was unpaid, and taxes amounting to $481.83 were delinquent. Said notice required payment of said items within 30 days, failing which the lease would be terminated and the landlord would reenter the premises. Mrs. Irvine made no payments and the lease was terminated, the Palmers taking possession on June 3, 1952. After receiving his notice of default plaintiff went to see defendant several times and offered to take over any deal she could make with Palmer. But she was trying to get a lower rent and no deal with Palmer was ever made. When plaintiff offered her his rent for May defendant said, "I am giving up my lease"; "I am defaulting in my lease"; and "I can't take this check because I am defaulting in my lease." Plaintiff also went to see Mr. Palmer who said that Mrs. Irvine had defaulted and if the sums due were not paid by June 3rd, "you all have to move out." After Palmer had sent plaintiff to see his attorney an arrangement was made by which plaintiff rented from Palmer on a month to month basis the same portion of the premises which he had held under the sublease, but at a rental of $110 a month; this lasted until September when Buzas, who was in possession, was required to surrender the premises. Plaintiff then moved his fixtures and restaurant equipment to another location, but the building had reverted to the Palmers and remained on the premises.

[1] Defendant plainly defaulted upon her obligation to plaintiff as her sublessee, and counsel are agreed that plaintiff's renting for a period of four months from the Palmers on a different basis did not and could not restore his sublease or the right to possession thereunder. See, 30 Cal.Jur. 2d, § 132, p. 275; Wheelock v. Warschauer, 34 Cal. 265, 269; Kansaburo Ohsaki v. Ahern, 61 Cal.App. 787, 790, 215 P. 714; Hawley Corporation v. West Virginia Broadcasting Corporation, 120 W.Va. 184, 197 S.E. 628, 629–630, 118 A.L.R. 120. Plaintiff was not required to await physical eviction, nor did he waive his right to damages by accepting a new tenancy under the owner of the land. In the Kansaburo Ohsaki case, supra, 61 Cal.App. at page 790, 215 P. at page 715, the court said: "Under such circumstances, one who has received possession of property under a contract from a person who has no title or who has subsequently lost the same may yield it to the true owner without waiting for the latter to take it forcibly or by legal proceedings. Jeffers v. Easton, Eldridge & Co., 113 Cal. 345, 354, 45 P. 680."

[2] The main question presented on appeal is the measure of defendant's liability. Indeed, all arguments presented by both sides converge upon this central controversy. Defendant says the damages awarded are excessive and even speculative. Plaintiff says they are inadequate and opposed to uncontradicted expert evidence upon the subject.

The trial judge rightly criticized counsel for both sides because of inadequacy of their presentation, reopened the case and heard additional evidence, submitted the matter and later awarded $9,786.50 without any explanation of the method of arriving at that amount. Counsel for each side asserts inability to explain the court's figure. We find ourselves in the same position but we are able to determine whether it is within a permissible range of probabilities. First we approach the matter from the standpoint of defendant's claim that the damages are excessive.

Buzas had a sublease from plaintiff extending two years from November 16, 1951, at $250 a month, thus yielding a net sum of $160 a month less taxes of about $10 a month to plaintiff. At the time of eviction on June 3, 1952, his unexpired term covered a period of one year and five months. Plaintiff thus lost $150 a month for 17 months, or $2,550; for four months he had to pay $110 (rather than $90) to Palmer and thus lost an additional $80. He had made an initial rent deposit to defendant and $275 of that amount remains owing to him; it cost him $275 to move his fixtures. The total of these items is $3,180. In addition thereto he lost his building which, according to his testimony, had cost him $7,000; it was about four years old and the record is silent as to the amount of depreciation it had suffered. Treating it as worth $7,000 when plaintiff was evicted, his damages aggregated $10,180 or thereabouts. Therefore, it cannot be said that the award of $9,786.50 was excessive or speculative.

[3, 4] Cross-appellant Dimas bases his claim of inadequate damages upon the testimony of one witness who assumed as an expert to value the lease through capitalization of net income, using $150 a month as the basis. He assumed that this profit would continue for the balance of plaintiff's lease term, or 19 years and 3½ months, although Buzas' tenancy at $250 a month was for two years only, included the use of restaurant fixtures and equipment as well as land and building, and the Palmers exacted only $110 a month for the use of the premises for the four months following the eviction. The result of this expert's computation was $19,873, which included $1,000 gratuitously assessed by the witness as a penalty for termination. There is no basis in the record for estimating the rental value of the premises some five, ten, fifteen or nineteen years hence. True, there was no witness that swore to the contrary, but that does not establish, as cross-appellant claims, an obligation to accept the expert's testimony regardless of its credibility. The testimony of an expert witness is worth no more than the reasons he gives for it. Gazzera v. City and County of San Francisco, 70 Cal.App.2d 833, 838, 161 P.2d 806; People v. Martin, 87 Cal.App.2d 581, 584, 197 P.2d 379; 19 Cal.Jur.2d, § 309, at p. 39. See, also, People v. Cole, 47 Cal.2d 99, 105, 301 P.2d 854, 56 A.L.R.2d 1435. When he bases his opinion upon hypotheses which are obviously unsupported by the evidence no trier of facts is duty bound to accept it. Such is the situation at bar.

The judgment is affirmed and the attempted appeal from order denying new trial is dismissed.

Action involving boundary line dispute between adjoining property owners. The judgment of the Superior Court of San Bernardino County, Jesse W. Curtis, Jr., J., entered judgment for defendants and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, Acting P. J., held that there was substantial evidence to establish that there had been an uncertainty as to the true boundary line, that there had been an agreement between defendants and plaintiffs' predecessor in title to establish common boundary line, that a fence was built up to agreed boundary and that defendants occupied realty to such line and parties acquiesced in boundary line thus established for period equal to statute of limitations.

Boundaries ⇐37(5)

In action involving disputed boundary line between adjoining landowners, there was sufficient substantial evidence to support finding that there had been an uncertainty as to true boundary line involved, that between defendants and plaintiffs' predecessors in title there was an agreement to establish a common boundary, that a fence was built thereon and defendants occupied realty to such line and parties acquiesced in boundary line thus established for period equal to statute of limitations.

Frank Aspinwall, Fontana, for appellants.

Robert Ritchie, Fontana, and Knauf, Henry & Farrell, San Bernardino, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Acting Presiding Justice.

This is an action involving a boundary line dispute between owners of real property in lots 181 and 188, Etiwanda Vineyards Tract, in the Township of Fontana, San Bernardino county.

It is alleged by appellants in their first amended complaint that they are owners of the west one-half of the east one-half of each of said lots; that respondents are the alleged owners and in possession of property adjacent to the west side of the appellants' property; that prior to September 21, 1955, respondents placed and maintained a large board fence, running in a northerly and southerly direction along and upon the west side of appellants' property and extending inside of it approximately 13.75 feet; that appellants had demanded that respondents remove said fence and that they refused to do so. The prayer of the complaint was that appellants have judgment for the encroachment and trespass on their property, for damages, and that respondents be required to remove said fence.

Respondents, in their answer, admitted ownership of the property adjacent to the west of that of appellants'; admitted placing and maintaining the fence; admitted a demand was made for its removal, and that they had refused to comply with said demand. In addition to their answer, respondents filed a cross-complaint in which they alleged that they were the owners of the west one-half of said lots 181 and 188; that appellants claimed an interest therein adverse to respondents and had unlawfully erected a fence upon the east side of respondents' west one-half of lot 181; that appellants were unlawfully in possession of a 13 foot strip of respondents' property on the east side of their west one-half of said lot 181; and that appellants had refused to give up said strip, although requested to do so. Respondents prayed for judgment quieting title, for removal of appellants' fence, and for damages.

It is admitted by the parties hereto that the record title of the west one-half of the east one-half of lots 181 and 188 is in appellants and that the title to the west one-half of lots 181 and 188 is in the respondents; that the respondents have erected a fence along what they claim to be the east boundary line of their west one-half of lot 188; that appellants have erected a fence along what they claim to be the boundary line dividing the east and west halves of lot 181; that appellants claim that the fence on lot 188 is approximately 14 feet east of the true boundary line; that respondents claim that the fence on lot 181, which is directly to the north of lot 188, is approximately 13 feet west of the true boundary line and that the respondents' fence on lot 188 is 13.75 feet west of the true survey line.

The principal question involved herein is whether the fence erected by respondents on lot 188 and the northerly extension of the line thereof through lot 181 constituted the agreed boundary line.

Respondents have been the owners of and in possession of the west one-half of said lots 188 and 181 since May, 1946. In that year these lots were unimproved and there were no markers of any kind thereon with respect to the east boundary line of the west one-half of said lots. Respondents did not have their property surveyed before they bought it and in 1946 and early 1947 they were not certain as to the location of the east boundary line of their property. In the early summer of 1947 they established what they determined to be the east boundary line by measuring 330 feet easterly from the center of the first street west of their property. On this line they dug post holes and erected a board fence. In 1947 the property to the east of that of respondents' was owned by Carl T. Hogan and Alva Marks and when Harder and Babcock were digging holes for the fence posts and building a fence, Hogan and Marks were present. Thomas Harder testified in this connection that Hogan wanted an explanation of what they were doing and they told him what they had done and informed him as to the measurements taken; that he (Hogan) looked at the stakes to satisfy himself that they were right; that Hogan then said, "Everything lines up, so I think we are all right.", and "Well, looks all right to me.", or words to that effect.

Hogan testified that he walked out to the border line at the property line where they were beginning the fence; that he asked Harder what was going on and Harder said they were building a fence; that he (Hogan) said "Are you in the right spot?", and Harder replied that he thought so; that Hogan checked and, as far as he could see, Harder was in the right spot; that neither he nor Hendrickson (husband of Alva Marks) objected to the location of the fence then or at any other time.

Respondents occupied the property up to this fence from the time it was built in 1947 and all the predecessors in interest of appellants Ball and the successors in interest of Hogan and Hendrickson accepted such fence as the true boundary line.

In 1949 or 1950 a Mr. Gribble extended the fence northerly on lot 181. George Pavlick, the immediate predecessor in interest of appellants, considered the fence built by Harder to be the true boundary line, and the first time it was questioned was after Pavlick had opened an escrow for the sale of his property to appellants Ball in 1953.

The trial court found that the true east boundary line of the west halves of lots 181 and 188 was fixed by agreement between the respondents and the predecessors in interest of appellants more than five years before appellants acquired title to the east halves of said lots; that with reference to lot 188, the true boundary line between the east and west halves thereof is marked upon the ground by the wooden fence erected by respondents and, with reference to lot 181, the true boundary line is a prolongation of said fence; and that said boundary line is a distance of 343.38 feet east from the center of Lime Avenue, as said center is shown on the record of survey of Etiwanda Vineyards Tract, Map Book 17, page 29, San Bernardino County records. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendants and cross-complainants and plaintiffs and cross-defendants were ordered to remove the fence which they had erected on the east side of the west one-half of lot 181.

In Nutting v. Hulbert & Muffly, Inc., 155 Cal.App.2d 464, 468, 317 P.2d 1007, 1010, the court said:

> " 'When owners of adjoining lands have acquiesced for a considerable time, at least equal to the period prescribed by the statute of limitations, in the location of a division line between their lands, although it may not be the true line according to the calls of their deeds, they are thereafter precluded from saying it is not the true line.' Martin v. Lopes, 28 Cal.2d 618, 622, 170 P.2d 881, 884, citing Sneed v. Osborn, 25 Cal. 619, 627. Further, in Martin v. Lopes, supra, the statement is made that in order to invoke the doctrine of agreed boundaries all that need be shown is lack of knowledge by both parties where the fence line should be drawn.
> "The fact that an accurate survey is possible is not conclusive of the question of whether a doubt exists as to the location of the boundary. The doubt may arise from the believed uncertainty which may be inferred from the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time the agreement was deemed to have been made and if, in good faith, the parties resolve their doubt by fixing the location of the common boundary it will be considered the boundary called for in the deed. Mello v. Weaver, 36 Cal.2d 456, 224 P.2d 691; Madera School District of Madera County v. Maggiorini, 146 Cal.App.2d 390, 303 P.2d 803."

In Mello v. Weaver, 36 Cal.2d 456, 460, 224 P.2d 691, it is held that an agreement to locate a boundary line need not be express, but it may be implied from long acquiescence; that the implied agreement must have been based on a doubtful boundary line; that a dispute or controversy is not essential but it may be evidence of the existence of a doubt or uncertainty; that it is not required that the uncertainty should appear from the deed or from an attempt to make an accurate survey from the calls of the deed; that a doubt may arise from a believed uncertainty which may be proved by direct evidence or inferred from the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time when the agreement is deemed to have been made, and if in good faith the parties resolve their doubt by the practical location of the common boundary it will be considered the boundary called for by the deed.

In York v. Horn, 154 Cal.App.2d 209, 212, 315 P.2d 912, 915, the court said: "The fact that an accurate survey is possible is not conclusive of the question of whether a doubt exists as to the location of the boundary."

We conclude that, under the rules stated in the cases cited herein, there is sufficient substantial evidence to establish that there was an uncertainty as to the true position of the boundary line herein; that there was an agreement to establish such a common boundary line; that a fence was built up to the agreed boundary; that respondents occupied their real property to such line and that the parties acquiesced in the boundary line thus established for a period equal to the statute of limitations.

Civ. 9369.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 19, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 18, 1959.

Action by widow of deceased against deceased's brother to obtain decree that whatever apparent interest deceased brother had in certain realty be held in trust for widow and brother cross-complained. The Superior Court, Yolo County, C. C. McDonald, J., entered decree for widow and deceased's brother appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that under records showing that brothers had purchased as partners farm land for which they equally contributed to down payment but after a few years the partnership was dissolved with deceased and his widow carrying on farm operations alone and making all payments due under the contract as well as all taxes and costs of improvement, there was substantial evidence to support finding that deceased's brother had abandoned interest in land.

Affirmed.

1. Abandonment ⇦5

In widow's action against her deceased husband's brother for a decree that whatever apparent interest brother had in certain real property be held in trust for widow, where record disclosed that brothers had, as partners, purchased farm land for which they equally contributed to the down payment but after a few years partnership was dissolved with deceased and his widow carrying on farming operations alone and making all payments due under contract for purchase of land as well as paying all taxes and costs of improvements, evidence sustained finding that brother had abandoned his interest in realty.

2. Abandonment ⊂2

"Abandonment" of property is the voluntary relinquishment thereof by its owner with intention of terminating his ownership, possession and control and without vesting ownership in another person.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Abandonment".

3. Abandonment ⊂6

Intention to abandon is generally a question of fact and may be inferred from conduct.

4. Abandonment ⊂2

Under common law any title to or interest in land other than a fee simple may be abandoned, and equitable rights in land may also be abandoned.

5. Abandonment ⊂7

Where brothers, as partners, had contracted to purchase farm land and both contributed equally to down payment therefor, but after a few years partnership was dissolved and deceased and his widow carried on farming operations alone and made all payments under contract as well as paying all taxes and costs of improvement, and there was substantial evidence that brother had abandoned interest in farm, even though on final payment under contract vendor executed a deed to widow and brother as their interests might appear, brother had no interest in property except a bare legal right which he held in trust for widow. VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This action was brought by Amaryllis L. Carden, hereinafter called "Amaryllis", against Morris Carden, hereinafter called "Morris", to obtain a decree that whatever apparent interest Morris had in certain real property he held in trust for Amaryllis. Morris cross-complained, asking that it be decreed he was the owner of one-half interest in the property and that Amaryllis should account to him for its use. The trial court decreed that Amaryllis was the sole owner of the property and from that judgment Morris appeals.

On January 6, 1934, R. E. Carden, hereinafter called "Robert", and appellant, who were brothers, entered into a contract with P. N. and Mamie C. Ashley, whereby they agreed to purchase the real property involved in this action. Amaryllis, through the death of Robert, her husband, has succeeded to Robert's interest. Robert and Morris made an initial payment of $1,750, each contributing one-half. At that time they were and for several years had been partners in rather extensive farming operations. Morris has claimed herein that they contracted to purchase the property as partners and that their interest therein was a partnership asset. Amaryllis has disputed this and the trial court found in her favor on that issue. In the latter part of 1937, the brothers dissolved their partnership and divided the partnership assets between themselves save that there was no express agreement distributing whatever interest each may have had in the subject real property. Robert continued to occupy and to farm the property until his death in 1951, after which Amaryllis occupied and farmed it. She and Robert made all the payments on the contract purchase price after the partnership dissolution and she alone made the payments after Robert's death. Full payment having been made, the Ashleys executed a deed to Amaryllis and to Morris "as their interests may appear." Thereafter, Amaryllis began this action.

The trial court made the following findings of fact: The purchase price of the property was $35,000, payable $1,750 upon execution of the agreement and the balance, together with interest on deferred payments at 6%, was to be paid in the following manner: The contract required of Robert and Morris that they crop the land in 1934 to sugar beets and deliver to the Ashleys one-fourth of the amount received upon sale of the crop, to be credited first on interest due and second on principal. Robert and Morris were bound after 1934 to crop the land each year and pay over one-fourth of the amount of the crops. The buyers had the right to cover crop and the sellers agreed to waive interest as to the acreage planted to cover crop up to a full year's interest. The entire purchase price was to be paid in 20 years. Robert and Morris took possession of the land and farmed the same together through the year 1937. During that period they paid on principal and interest $4,777.59, of which $919.77 was credited on account of principal. At the end of 1937, Morris quit possession of the property and thereafter did not perform any of the obligations of the contract. After 1937 he never went upon the property, never participated in any way in the farming or management of it, never paid anything on taxes, principal or interest, nor for farming expenses. He paid no cost of the leveling done by Robert. From the time he quit possession, Morris considered the responsibility for the performance of the terms, conditions and obligations of the contract, together with the responsibility for carrying on farming operations, to be that of Robert alone. Robert, from 1937, and until he died December 1, 1952, remained in the sole actual possession of the property, performed all the terms and conditions of the contract, paid all taxes and carried on and conducted all farming operations. From 1937 until he died, Robert paid on the purchase price, without any contribution from Morris, $14,327.22 and $10,017.77 interest. Amaryllis, as successor to Robert after his death, remained in the sole actual possession of the property, carried on the farming operations, managed and supervised the property and paid on the principal $17.038.24 plus interest in the sum of $321.66. Robert expended on leveling the property the sum of $9.279.46. Robert and Amaryllis paid in taxes the total sum of $9,441.49. On January 17, 1955, Amaryllis paid the Ashleys $6,494.76, which was the final payment for the property and on January 24th following the Ashleys executed their deed as heretofore stated. The reasonable market value of the property as of October 30, 1956, was the sum of $125,000. The increase in the market value resulted from the work, labor and efforts of Robert and of Amaryllis and from changes in economic conditions subsequent to 1937 and was not attributable to anything done by Morris. The partnership was finally wound up and dissolved in 1938. During the winding up proceedings Robert and Morris divided the partnership property and assets then remaining between themselves, but did not enter into any agreement concerning their respective rights and obligations in and to the said contract of purchase or in and to the real property described therein. From 1937 until the death of Robert, Morris asserted no claim to the property, never offered to pay to Amaryllis one-half of the amounts put out by Robert and herself in acquiring the property and, more specifically, had never offered to repay one-half the taxes or one-half the cost of leveling the property. He did, however, offer to pay her one-half the amount of the final payment she made on the purchase price. That was the only offer he made to share in the cost of acquisition. This offer Amaryllis refused. Morris, from the year 1937, knew that up to the time of his death Robert had been in the sole actual possession of the property and had during all of that time farmed and managed the same and carried on the farming operations thereon by himself alone. He knew or could have ascertained that after the death of Robert, Amaryllis had been in the sole actual possession of the property and by herself alone had managed it and carried on all farming operations. Morris, from 1937 until the death of Robert, had never demanded any accounting of the farming operations from Robert. Thereafter, he never demanded from Amaryllis any account of payments she had made to acquire the property. The foregoing findings are substantially supported by the evidence.

By his answer and cross-complaint Morris pleaded that when the partnership had been dissolved he and Robert had orally agreed Robert would perform all the obligations of the contract of purchase in consideration of Morris's relinquishing to Robert his one-half share of the profits in excess of the payments that had to be made; that all payments made by Robert on the contract were to be made for the benefit of both. The court found no such agreement had been made. This finding, too, is supported.

[1] The court concluded from the foregoing findings that Amaryllis was the owner in fee of the real property; that Morris had no right or interest therein or claim thereto and that whatever apparent title or interest he acquired by the deed and from the Ashleys he held in trust for Amaryllis with the obligation to convey to her; that he had released, relinquished, or abandoned whatever interest he had; that the deed from the Ashleys to Morris and Amaryllis did not operate to vest any title in Morris; and that Morris ought to be decreed to convey the property to Amaryllis, failing to do which the clerk of the court should convey for him. Judgment was entered accordingly.

The course of reasoning appearing in the trial court's memorandum of decision whereby the trial judge arrived at his conclusion that Morris had abandoned his interests is so cogent we wish to quote therefrom even at the expense of some repetition:

"Let us not forget that the contract for the purchase of the property in question was entered into between R. E. and Morris Carden with Mr. and Mrs. Ashley on January 6, 1934, which was right at the worst of the depression. Money was scare and farm products were very cheap. After the contract was executed and the purchasers had made their down payment of $1,750.00 they must have decided that they made a bad bargain for on the same day they prevailed upon the Ashleys to execute a supplemental agreement providing that the purchasers should have until the 15th day of August 1935 to cancel and rescind the contract by giving written notice to the Ashleys of their election to rescind. In the event of such rescission the purchasers were to deliver one-fourth of the crop grown on the property and could recover the $1,750.00 made by them as a down payment.

"The plaintiff testified that the property had been planted year after year for so long to grain without crop rotation that the land had lost its fertility. Her statement is corroborated by a provision in the contract of purchase which provides: 'It is further understood and agreed between the parties hereto that when, as and if a cover crop is put in all or a part of this land then in that event the interest will be waived by parties of the first part as acreage planted to said cover crop bears to the total interest due until a full year's interest has been waived by parties of the first part, and the one-fourth return from the crops as herein described shall be applied to the principal of said indebtedness.'

"The plaintiff's testimony that the land was not productive is further corroborated by the small amount the purchasers were able to pay on the purchase price of the land during the four years they farmed it together. It will be remembered that they farmed it together in the years 1934, 1935, 1936 and 1937. Under the terms of the contract they were to farm the land and deliver one-fourth of the crop of sugar beets or one-fourth of such other crops as they may grow on the property to the sellers' account and pay the taxes assessed against the land. From the proceeds derived from their one-fourth of the crops the sellers were to credit the purchasers first on the interest which had accrued at six per cent and the balance on the purchase price.

"The exhibits of both parties in evidence show that from the farming operations by the purchasers for the four years up until the time they dissolved and terminated the partnership they were only able to pay on the purchase price the sum of $1,839.54. Add to that the $1,750.00 paid on the purchase price and you have the total sum paid on the purchase price at the time the partnership was terminated. The total sum paid was $3,589.54. One-half of that sum is $1,794.77 or the value of the defendant's equity when he abandoned the property and ceased to perform under the contract of purchase. At that time there was still a balance owing on the purchase price of $31,410.46. During the four years R. E. and Morris Carden farmed the land they paid the interest which amounted to $7,715.65. In addition to that the purchasers were required to pay and did pay the taxes levied against the land. Under the terms of the contract the purchasers were required to pay the entire principal within 20 years from the date of the contract.

"For the four years the purchasers farmed the land they were only able to pay on the purchase price at the rate of $459.88 per year. After deducting the down payment of $1,750.00 from the purchase price of $35,000.00, we have a balance of $33,250.00. To pay that sum at the rate of $459.88 per year would have required 72.33 years. Morris Carden could plainly see that with the yield the land was producing and with the prices the produce was bringing they could not possibly pay for the land in 20 years from the date of the contract and there was no provision in the contract for an extension of time for performance. In addition to the requirement to pay interest at six per cent and the taxes, the purchasers were required to keep the well on the premises in good condition, state and repair at their expense and keep the premises free from noxious weeds at their expense.

"The foregoing evidentiary facts is not only corroborative of the plaintiff's testimony that the land had lost its fertility but it is conclusive evidence not only of the fact that the defendant waived and relinquished his rights in the land under the contract with the Ashleys to R. E. Carden but why he did so.

"The defendant testified that after the year 1937 he never set foot on the property; that he never made any recommendations to R. E. Carden as to how the land should be farmed; that he made no objections to R. E. Carden as to the way he was farming the land; that he made no recommendations to R. E. Carden as to how he should comply with the Ashley contract; that he did not pay one cent of the taxes, one cent of the interest, one cent of the principal, and that he did absolutely nothing toward complying with the terms of the contract of purchase. He testified that he considered those matters Bob's responsibilities.

"The defendant testified that they were Bob's responsibilities because of the agreement he had with Bob after the dissolution of the partnership. This agreement has already been set forth. Of course it is fantastic. He knew only too well that there would be no profit for Bob from the farming operations after Bob had complied with the terms of the contract of purchase and he knew only too well that owing to the condition of the land and other prevailing conditions that Bob could not comply with the terms of the contract of purchase. Moreover, he knew that Bob was as well aware of those facts as was he.

"The plaintiff testified that R. E. Carden (Bob) realized that in order to restore fertility to the soil and make it more productive it was necessary to plant the land to alfalfa. In order to do this successfully it was necessary to level and check the land so as to make it irrigable. This he proceeded to do at a cost to him of $9,279.46, which he paid. It was stipulated at the trial that from 1938 to date R. E. Carden and the plaintiff expended in the payment of taxes on the land in question the sum of $9,441.49. The evidence shows that to complete the purchase of the land, R. E. Carden and the plaintiff expended the total sum of $66,124.41, whereas subsequent to the year of 1938 the defendant expended nothing.

"R. E. Carden died December 1, 1952. The defendant, in 1938, had the same right to enter upon the real property in question and perform under the contract of purchase and acquire by purchase an undivided one-half interest in the property as did R. E. Carden. Yet by his own testimony he did nothing toward that end. He testified that he made no claim on the property until after R. E. Carden's death. Thus for 15 long years he did not move a finger insofar as effort is concerned nor did he expend one cent to acquire his one-half interest in the land.

"Under the terms of the contract of purchase with P. N. and Mamie C. Ashley the defendant could not be compelled to perform or be held liable for any more than he had expended prior to 1938. The only recourse the Ashleys had under the contract was to retain what had been paid them as rent, terminate the contract and repossess the property.

"It is very apparent from the evidence in the case that the defendant considered that he had made a bad bargain; that acquiring the land by performance of the Ashley contract was not worth the effort and that rather than put forth any further effort or expenditure he would sacrifice what he had expended toward the purchase of the land prior to 1938.

"It was stipulated at the trial that the present value of the land is $125,000.00. This is due solely to the efforts of R. E. Carden subsequent to the year 1938 and the change in economic conditions. It is not due to any effort of the defendant."

In addition to the matters commented upon by the trial judge in the foregoing quotation, it appeared in the testimony that, although asserting at the trial he at all times had an equal interest with Robert in the real property being purchased, Morris never at any time reflected such claim in his income tax returns. He never called upon either Robert or Amaryllis for information as to what amount, if any, he should return as income and pay a tax upon. It also appeared that at the dissolution of the partnership Morris tried to sell to Robert his interest under the contract, but Robert would not buy.

[2–4] We think the trial court properly found that Morris abandoned his interests and that Robert took over. Abandonment of a right or property is the voluntary relinquishment thereof by its owner with the intention of terminating his ownership, possession and control and without vesting ownership in another person. 1 C.J.S. Abandonment, § 1 p. 4. Intent to abandon is generally a question of fact (Wiltsee v. Utley, 79 Cal.App.2d 71, 77, 179 P.2d 13), and may be inferred from conduct. 1 C.J.S. Abandonment § 4 p. 12. Under the common law any title to or interest in land other than a fee simple may be abandoned. 1 C.J.S. § 4 p. 12. Equitable rights in land may be abandoned. (Id.) The facts amply support the trial court's conclusions.

[5] The result of what has been said is that the equitable title to the land was in Amaryllis when she completed the payments, but by virtue of the existing written contract an apparent title rested in Morris. Reasonably enough, the Ashleys would not assume the risk of conveying to Amaryllis alone lest they be subject to the claims of Morris, which by that time he was asserting. Amaryllis was compelled to accept from them the form of conveyance they were willing to execute, that is, a deed conveying to her and to Morris "as their interests may appear" or to litigate with the Ashleys and Morris. She elected to accept the deed and to establish her rights as to Morris. The situation then was that she was entitled to the equitable decree she received. Morris was by then a mere interloper seeking to capitalize on a bare legal title. It makes no difference whether the theory of the decision be that of a "purchase money trust" (Civil Code, Sec. 853; Bogert on Trusts and Trustees, Vol. 2A, p. 419, et seq.) or of a constructive trust (Civil Code, Sec. 2223, Bogert, Vol. 3, p. 3, et seq.) The technical differences between the two are immaterial here. It is equally immaterial if we assume, as argued by counsel for appellant, that the purchase of the land was a partnership venture, for the evidence would support a finding that Morris's interest after dissolution was abandoned. The judgment is based on abandonment.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Shelby LOEPER, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 1193.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 8, 1959.

Defendant was convicted of the unlawful sale of narcotics and from a judgment of the Superior Court of San Bernardino County and from an order denying a new trial, Edward F. Fogg, J., the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, P. J., held that an instruction on intent was adequate; that reference by the prosecutor to a tape recording of a statement made by codefendant as a confession was not prejudicial; and that evidence of other sales by codefendant did not require reversal in view of cautionary instructions.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐823(4)

In narcotics prosecution, general instruction on intent was adequate where it was followed by another instruction on intent of the defendant to commit the crime charged making it apparent that before the jury could find defendant guilty, he must have had knowledge that the substance transferred was a narcotic, and where defendant's defense was that he made no sale to the purchaser under any circumstances. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Poisons ⇐9

In prosecution for the unlawful sale of narcotics, when jury found that a sale was made by the defendant, the transaction under the circumstances implied knowledge by the defendant of the narcotic nature of the substance sold. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

3. Criminal Law ⇐729, 730(3)

Where a tape recording was made of statements attributed to codefendant out of the defendant's presence and the prosecution unsuccessfully sought to introduce the recording in evidence as to the codefendant, fact that the prosecutor referred to the recording as a "confession" was not prejudicial error where prosecutor withdrew the remark and the trial court gave cautionary instructions. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

4. Criminal Law ⇐673(5)

In prosecution for the unlawful sale of narcotics, where the charged sale was made on December 9, evidence of other sales made by codefendant to the same purchaser on different dates did not require a reversal where the court instructed the jury that such evidence was not admissible against the defendant and did not involve him. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

5. Criminal Law ⇐370, 371(12), 372(1)

In prosecution for the unlawful sale of narcotics, evidence of other sales is admissible against the defendant who sold it, to prove a material fact, or when the question of that defendant's knowledge or familiarity with the substance sold becomes involved, or for the purpose of showing a motive, or system, and the admission of such offenses generally depends upon the particular factual situation. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

Robert P. Lawton, La Habra, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Arthur C. deGoede, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Presiding Justice.

Defendant-appellant Loeper, together with one Vincent Quintero, were charged in an amended grand jury indictment that on December 9, 1957, they did feloniously sell a narcotic (marijuana) in violation of Health and Safety Code section 11500. Appellant was charged with two prior convictions of felonies (burglary and escape from state prison). He pleaded not guilty to the charge and later admitted the prior convictions. A motion for a separate trial was denied. The jury returned a verdict of guilty as to Loeper and not guilty as to Quintero. Appellant's motion for a new trial was denied.

The questions raised on this appeal are (1) whether it was prejudicial error for the trial court to fail to give an instruction on its own motion, that knowledge of the narcotic character of the substance allegedly sold, was an essential ingredient of the offense charged; (2) was it prejudicial error to instruct the jury on the subject of confessions? and (3) was it prejudicial error to admit into evidence offenses pertaining to defendant Quintero other than the offense charged?

A special deputy sheriff, without pay (Hobbs, otherwise regularly employed as a machinist), acted as an undercover investigator. He met appellant's codefendant Quintero at a parking lot in La Habra on December 8, 1957, about 6 p. m. There, other persons were present, including appellant Loeper. Quintero asked Hobbs if he wanted to buy a "pound" or a "tin". (A tin is equivalent to one tobacco can full of marijuana.) Hobbs agreed to buy a "tin" for $15, but wanted to see "Dick" (a fictitious person) to see if he would want to buy one. Quintero inquired when he would return and Hobbs replied "about midnight". Quintero and Hobbs then returned to the lot, and at Hobbs' suggestion they went to see "Dick" to show it to him. Both left in separate cars and parked in front of a bar. There they walked over to a black Buick car where appellant Loeper was seated. Quintero tapped on the windshield and appellant rolled down the window. Quintero told appellant "This is the guy", and appellant then asked Hobbs if he would buy a tin and he said he would if Dick liked it but he wanted Dick to see it over in Carbon Canyon, about six miles away. Appellant said he would have to go down by the tracks to get it. Appellant walked down the tracks and returned in about five minutes, got in appellant's car, and Quintero drove his own car to the spot. En route, appellant stated to Hobbs that he was going to quit "pushing weed" (marijuana), and start "pushing hard stuff" (heroin). They parked in a lot by a cafe and Quintero parked nearby. Hobbs told appellant he would pay for and take one "tin" but he would have to show it to Dick and then return in about 20 minutes. Appellant Loeper held out three brown sacks and told Hobbs to take his pick. He said a "lid" (tin) would cost $12.50. Hobbs took one bag and paid appellant $12.50. Hobbs then walked to his residence, telephoned the sheriff, and related the facts. About 20 minutes later Hobbs returned to the car and appellant and Quintero were seated in it. Hobbs told them that the marijuana was pretty "stemmy" and it was a "short tin" but they would take it anyway. He said Dick wanted a pound and wanted to know what that amount would cost. Appellant replied he would have to see another fellow about that much. Quintero was to let Hobbs know. Defendants left and their arrest followed. The lot Hobbs bought proved to be marijuana.

Appellant testified he was there at the parking lot on December 8th at the time but did not talk to Hobbs; that Hobbs and Quintero did have a conversation which he did not hear; that when Hobbs left Quintero did come over to him and said Hobbs wanted to buy some narcotics but appellant did not offer to obtain it for him; that he was asleep in his car in front of the bar when Quintero awakened him by tapping on the windshield; that Hobbs was there; that he and Hobbs drove to the canyon to see Dick; that Hobbs then left for a few minutes, returned and talked to Quintero, as though he "was mad about something" and they drove away. He denied ever selling any marijuana to Hobbs and claimed he did not walk down the tracks to obtain marijuana as indicated by Hobbs.

[1, 2] The attorney general concedes that section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code requires a knowledge of the narcotic character of the substance in question. The jury was instructed that "To constitute criminal intent it is not necessary that there should exist an intent to violate the law or to do a wrong. Criminal intent exists whenever a person intentionally does that which the law declares to be a crime, even though he may not know that he is committing a crime or that his act is wrong". It is claimed that this general instruction is proper in alleging crimes where specific intent follows the unlawful act but not in charged narcotic offenses. However, this instruction was followed by another which read in part: "An essential element of the crime of which the defendant is accused is intent. * * * The intent to do the forbidden thing constitutes the criminal intent. The law requires that to be guilty of crime, one must intend the conduct that fits the description of the crime and must engage in that conduct knowingly and wilfully." (Italics ours.) The offense charged here was that defendant did wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously sell a narcotic, to wit, marijuana. In People v. Odom, 19 Cal. App.2d 641, 646, 66 P.2d 206, 209, it was said: "An information which charges that a person 'willfully and unlawfully' performed an act is equivalent to alleging that he knowingly did so, and thus supplies the element of knowledge of the unlawful act where that element is necessary to be alleged in the pleading", and "To do a thing willfully is to do it knowingly." Citing People v. Swiggy, 69 Cal.App.2d 574, 581, 232 P. 174; Words & Phrases [2d Ser.] p. 1304; and Penal Code, sec. 7, subdivisions 1 and 5. See also 23 Words and Phrases, Knowingly, p. 572. From the instruction given, it clearly appears that before the jury would be authorized to find defendant guilty of the charge, he must have knowledge that it was a narcotic. The appellant's defense was not that his innocence was predicated upon lack of knowledge that it was a narcotic, but he claimed he made no sale to Hobbs under any circumstances. No instruction on this subject was proffered by appellant, as was done in People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 293 P.2d 40, relied upon by appellant. Even though such an instruction was not offered, it was argued that it was the duty of the court, on its own motion, to give such an instruction. Appellant relies upon People v. Putnam, 20 Cal.2d 885, 890, 129 P.2d 367, involving sex offenses under Penal Code section 288. In such cases it was held that it was the duty of the court to give, on its own motion, certain cautionary instructions, because of the nature of the charge. The instant case involves the sale of a narcotic and is thus differentiated. Had appellant offered such an instruction, which was refused, and there were no other instructions given on the subject, a different question might here arise. When the jury found that a sale was made by appellant, under the circumstances related, the transaction would necessarily imply knowledge by appellant of the narcotic nature of the substance sold. People v. Sanders, 163 Cal.App.2d 132, 328 P.2d 825. In effect the jury was told that if appellant sold a substance without the knowledge that it was a narcotic he could not be convicted. We are convinced that the jury was not misled by the instructions given and that no prejudicial error resulted. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 299 P.2d 243.

The court gave an instruction to the effect that "Evidence has been received in this case tending to show that on an occasion other than this trial the defendant Quintero himself made a statement tending to prove his guilt of the alleged crime for which he is on trial", and that "A statement thus made * * * may be either a confession or an admission." The court then followed this statement with a definition of confession and of an admission. It was followed by an instruction that the mere fact that the court had admitted into evidence the alleged confession did not bind the jury to accept the court's conclusion, but the jury, before it considered it, must conclude that it was a voluntary confession, but that this rule did not apply to an admission.

[3] The contention is that the court instructed the jury there was in fact a confession in the case to be considered by the jury when in fact no confession of either defendant existed. Apparently there was a tape recording made of certain statements attributed to defendant Quintero, out of the presence of appellant. During the trial there was an unsuccessful attempt by the prosecution to admit this tape recording in evidence as to Quintero. The trial judge believed that certain statements made therein by Quintero involved this appellant and in fairness to him felt that an instruction to the jury not to consider those statements as to this appellant would not be entirely effective, and if admitted, might prejudice the rights of appellant. In the presence of the jury the prosecution referred to the recording as a confession. Quintero, on cross-examination, was questioned as to whether or not he made certain statements therein. (Apparently for the purpose of impeaching his present testimony.) It appears that appellant's counsel first referred to the recording as a "supposed admission or confession by Mr. Quintero." No objections were made at the time, to the district attorney's reference to it as a confession. Later, when counsel for Quintero objected to the use of the word "confession", the district attorney withdrew the remark and apologized for his "slip". The court especially instructed the jury to disregard the reference and told the jurors they would be the judge as to the nature of its contents. The tape recording was not in evidence and is not before us. There is no indication that the jury inferred that either Quintero or appellant therein confessed to this charge.

On rebuttal the prosecution placed the officer on the witness stand and apparently, after refreshing his memory from the tape recording, he testified that Quintero did make certain statements which Quintero denied he made during his cross-examination by the prosecutor. Complaint is now made of this procedure, claiming that the prosecution was trying to get before the jury the alleged statements which the court had previously rejected as inadmissible, citing People v. Rodriguez, 58 Cal.App.2d 415, 136 P.2d 626. The officer's recollection as to the statements made by Quintero were admissible against him, at least for the purpose of impeachment, and the trial court limited their application to this purpose. The trial judge was more than fair to appellant in rejecting the admission of the tape recording into evidence as to Quintero so that it would not operate to the detriment of appellant. No prejudicial error appears in this respect.

[4, 5] Lastly, appellant complains of evidence of two separate sales of marijuana by Quintero to Hobbs on December 7th (five marijuana cigarettes in evidence), and on December 10th (four such cigarettes in evidence). The charged sale in the instant case was on December 9th. Appellant did not object to evidence of the sale to Quintero on December 7th. The defendants objected to the introduction of the sale on December 10th, and the court sustained the objection by this appellant and the jury was instructed that evidence of the sales of December 7 and December 10 was not admitted as to appellant but could only be considered as against Quintero. Evidence of other sales has been held admissible against that defendant who sold it, to prove a material fact, or when the question of that defendant's knowledge or familiarity with the substance sold becomes involved, or for the purpose of showing motive, scheme, plan, or system. People v. Bean, 149 Cal.App.2d 299, 308 P.2d 27; People v. Freytas, 157 Cal.App.2d 706, 321 P.2d 782; People v. Sanders, 163 Cal.App.

2d 132, 328 P.2d 825. The admission of such offenses generally depends upon the factual situation of the particular case. Since the court instructed the jury that this evidence was not admissible against appellant and did not involve him, no prejudicial error resulted from its admission. People v. Watson, supra.

Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

Lincoln E. DELL'ORTO, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Carl J. DELL'ORTO et al., Defendants,

Carl J. Dell'Orto, Appellant.

Civ. 9499.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 7, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Action by promisee against promisor for specific performance of alleged contract for sale of realty. The Superior Court, Calaveras County, Ross A. Carkeet, J., entered decree ordering specific performance and directing partition by sale of other realty, and promisor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that conflicting evidence sustained Superior Court's finding that one of promisor's offers had been accepted by promisee, and that issues of ability to perform and tender were no longer issues in the case.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Specific Performance ⇐121(4)

In action by promisee against promisor for specific performance of alleged contract for sale of realty, conflicting evidence sustained trial court's finding that one of promisor's offers had been accepted by promisee.

2. Trial ⇐9(1)

Where, in action for specific performance of alleged contract for sale of realty, issues of ability to perform and tender were not raised at pretrial conference or listed in pretrial conference order as issues remaining in dispute, they were no longer issues in the case. Superior Court Rules, rules 8.2, 8.6, 8.8.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

This is an appeal from a decree ordering specific performance of a written contract for the sale of real property and from an order directing partition by sale of other real property. The issue of partition appears to have been abandoned because no reference is made to it by appellant.

Appellant Carl J. Dell'Orto and respondent Lincoln E. Dell'Orto are brothers. Some years prior to the commencement of this action their father devised real property to Carl, Lincoln and a third brother, Earle. The three brothers had been attempting to reach an agreement for the division of the property. On Sunday, October 23, 1955, a meeting was held to discuss the matter. An offer was made by Carl to Lincoln. The next day Carl wrote a letter to Joseph S. Huberty, an attorney which read:

"Sunday evening a meeting at Earle's residence was held, attended by Lincoln and Earle and myself.

"He would not go for a division on the Hatcher line nor an offer for me to buy his interest in the ranch for 23,000.

"However, he was to consider:

1st—to pay me 22,000 for my interest in the ranch, 800 acres, or 2d—23,000 for my interest in the 800 acre ranch and Lot 2 in Block 17, or 3d—25,000 for all my interest in the 800 acre ranch—together with Lot 2 Block 17 and Lot 1 Block 1.

"As he has not accepted any of the plans I am withdrawing plan number 3, desiring to hold for my own use Lot 1 Block 1, however will go along with either plan Number 1 or 2, if he so chooses."

On October 25, 1955, Mr. Huberty had a conference with Lincoln and afterwards he wrote a letter to Carl on Lincoln's behalf in which Carl was advised that plan 2 was accepted. The letter concluded: "Please advise us as to how you would wish to have the matter concluded."

In April, 1956, Carl and Lincoln released their interest in certain property to Earle; and Earle, in turn, released his interest in other land to Carl and Lincoln. In April, 1957, Lincoln brought this action to compel specific performance of the alleged agreement to sell. Paragraph V of the complaint read: "That subsequent to said written agreement to purchase, the plaintiff tendered the purchase price thereunder to said defendant, and demanded a conveyance of said interest in said real property; that defendant has not executed a conveyance of title to said property, and has refused to sell and convey said interest in said property to the plaintiff; that the plaintiff is still ready and willing to pay the purchase money of the said property to the defendant and hereby tenders the same." This allegation was denied by Carl in his answer.

A pre-trial conference was held and a pre-trial conference order filed. So far as important upon this appeal, said order provides:

"The Court further finds and it is ordered that plaintiff's contentions are as follows:

"1. That plaintiff is entitled to specific performance of the contract alleged in the Complaint, * * *

* * * * * *

"The Court finds and it is ordered that defendant, Carl Dell'Orto's contentions are as follows:

"1. He concedes that an offer of sale was made, but contends that it was withdrawn before acceptance and that therefor there was no contract."

The cause then proceeded to trial. The defense was that no contract existed because the offer made on October 23, 1955, was for twenty-four hours only, that the offer had been revoked and that the acceptance which was to have been given to Earle was not proper. The trial court found:

"[T]he terms of said written offer and acceptance to be as follows: The defendant, Carl Dell'Orto, agreed to sell to the plaintiff for Twenty-three Thousand ($23,000.00) Dollars cash, his undivided one-half interest in the approximately 800 acre ranch formerly belonging to the father of said parties, and also his undivided one-half interest in Lot 2 Block 17 * * *; that plaintiff was to deposit said sum in cash in escrow in a responsible title company, or some other mutually agreeable escrow agent, to be delivered to the defendant Carl Dell'Orto in exchange for a grant deed from said defendant in good and sufficient form to convey his title therein to plaintiff, including all improvements, appurtenances, easements, and other hereditaments; that said defendant was to pay the costs of preparation of said deed, and one-half the fee of such escrow holder; that plaintiff was to pay all other costs in connection with said transfer."

[1] Appellant Carl contends that the above finding is not supported by the record and that there was no meeting of minds and hence no contract. This argument is one which goes merely to the weight of conflicting evidence, for there was ample evidence to support the court's finding that plan 2 in appellant's offer was accepted by respondent. Indeed, this contention is only given brief mention in appellant's brief, and the principal contention urged by appellant is that Lincoln failed to prove: (1) that at the time of the commencement of the action he was ready, willing and able to perform, and (2) that he ever tendered the purchase price to Carl.

Respondent makes two answers to this contention. He first contends that formal tender of the purchase price is excused by the seller's repudiation of the contract of sale. He points out that in the acceptance letter the following appeared: "Please advise us as to how you would wish the matter concluded." Mr. Huberty testified that this meant that Carl was to advise them how he wanted the matter closed, i. e., where the money should be paid and where the deed would be delivered. Respondent also points out that the record shows appellant repudiated the contract shortly after it was entered into, and that throughout the litigation the defendant has taken the consistent position that there was no contract either because the time limit in the offer had expired or the offer was revoked before acceptance.

Respondent quotes from the case of Ray Thomas, Inc. v. Cowan, 99 Cal.App. 140, at page 146, 277 P. 1086, at page 1088:

> "* * * The law is well settled that, where a vendor repudiates the terms of a contract and indicates that he will be no longer bound thereby, a further tender of performance before beginning suit by the vendee is unnecessary. In support of this we may refer to the long list of cases cited in a note appended to the case of Bateman v. Hopkins, as reported in Ann.Cas. 1913C, pp. 642–648, being a case also reported in 157 N.C. 470, 73 S.E. 133. To the same effect is the rule stated in 23 Cal.Jur., p. 499; see, also, Buckmaster v. Bertram, 186 Cal. 673, 200 P. 610. Where the vendor has absolutely repudiated his agreement to sell, it is sufficient, on the part of the vendee, to set forth in his complaint that he is ready, willing and able to perform his part of the contract. Such appears to be the case at bar. The complaint contains the necessary allegations which was followed by the necessary proof introduced upon the trial. * * *"

Respondent also cites Beverage v. Canton Placer Mining Co., 43 Cal.2d 769, at page 777, 278 P.2d 694, at page 700, where the court said:

> "Defendants further contend that plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree of specific performance because of their failure to allege payment or tender of the balance of the purchase price, a condition precedent to plaintiffs' right to demand its conveyance. They rely on the rule that 'to entitle a party to specific performance, he must have (a) performed, (b) offered to have performed, or (c) proved a sufficient excuse for not performing, all the conditions required by him' by the agreement. Reyburn v. Young, 11 Cal. App.2d 476, 477, 54 P.2d 87; Civ.Code, § 3392. However, where a vendor repudiates a contract and indicates that he is not bound thereby, a tender is unnecessary. Ray Thomas, Inc. v. Cowan, 99 Cal.App. 140, 146, 277 P. 1086. While the language of the complaint seems to preclude an allegation of tender, it is not inconsistent with an allegation of repudiation of the contract by the defendant company as vendor. Thus, plaintiffs alleged the company's continued refusal to execute a conveyance of the property despite plaintiffs' repeated demands therefor, and that plaintiffs stand 'ready, willing and able' to pay the balance due. The law does not require the performance of an idle act, and a formal tender of performance is excused by the refusal in advance of the party to accept the performance owing. Civ.Code, §§ 1440, 1511, 3532; Woods-Drury, Inc. v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.App.2d 340, 348, 63 P.2d 1184."

Respondent's second answer to appellant's contention that respondent failed to prove that at the time of the commencement of the action he was ready, willing and able to perform or that he ever tendered the purchase price to appellant is that no issue was raised at the pre-trial conference as to tender or ability to pay on the part of the respondent and that this was not considered one of the matters at issue during the actual trial. He points to the pre-trial conference order, hereinbefore quoted, and cites Rule 8.8 of Rules Relating to Pre-trial Conferences, which reads: "When filed, the pre-trial conference order becomes a part of the record in the case and, where inconsistent with the pleadings, controls the subsequent course of the case unless modified at or before trial to prevent manifest injustice * * *"

We agree with respondent that the issues of ability to perform and tender were not raised at the pre-trial conference and were not listed in the pre-trial conference order as issues. What was said in Baird v. Hodson, 161 Cal.App.2d, 687, 327 P.2d 215, 217, is applicable:

> "A review of legal history reveals innumerable rules, regulations, laws and processes introduced into the law by which there is a more efficient and effective handling of cases. In each instance not only was it necessary, but progress in the law demanded it. Another of such progressive steps is now part of California law, which may be referred to as Pre-trial Procedure. A review of the rules for pre-trials clearly reveals the reasons behind them. Obviously, the rules were designed to relieve the members of the legal profession and the members of the judiciary from legal technicalities, trivia, details, unessentials, and to have the case tried at an early date upon the real and substantial issues in the case. This is a most laudable and meritorious purpose. In Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 67 S.Ct. 385, 388, 91 L.Ed. 451, in discussing federal court pretrial, it is said:
> " 'The new rules, however, restrict the pleadings to the task of general notice-giving and invest the deposition-discovery process with a vital role in the preparation for trial. The various instruments of discovery now serve (1) as a device, along with the pre-trial hearing under Rule 16, to narrow and clarify the basic issues between the parties, and (2) as a device for ascertaining the facts, or information as to the existence or whereabouts of facts, relative to those issues. Thus civil trials in the federal courts no longer need be carried on in the dark. The way is now clear, consistent with recognized privileges, for the parties to obtain the fullest possible knowledge of the issues and facts before trial.'
>
> "To satisfy the purposes and obtain the full effectiveness of pre-trial procedures it is necessary not only that the practitioner observe the rules, but that the courts observe them. In the instant case, the pre-trial conference order reflects the contention made by all parties to the action and definitely and numerically sets forth the 'Issues' as '(1) The dates of execution and the due delivery of the documents in evidence; and (2) whether or not the document Exhibit 2 is an option or an offer to purchase.' Further, the order states: 'All discovery proceedings are complete, and the issues are joined.' No action was taken by defendant as allowed to him under Rule 8.7(b).
> "This pre-trial conference order then controlled the subsequent course of the case in accordance with Rule 8.8 and the issues raised by the pleadings were superseded. The pre-trial judge, the trial judge and plaintiffs had the right to rely upon that posture of the case. Particularly is this true because defendant did not request a modification of the pre-trial conference order, which he had a right to request under Rule 8.7."

The rules as to pre-trial procedure adopted by the Judicial Council provide that each party "shall be prepared to state orally the factual and legal contentions to be made as to the issues remaining in dispute" (8.2), and Rule 8.6(a) provides: "The pre-trial conference judge shall prepare and sign a pre-trial conference order * * * This order shall contain: (1) A concise and descriptive statement of: * * * (iii) the factual and legal contentions made by each party as to the issues remaining in dispute; * * *"

[2] As hereinbefore set forth, rule 8.8 provides that the pre-trial order controls where inconsistent with the pleadings unless modified at or before the trial, and in the instant case appellant made no request for a modification of the pre-trial conference order. We, therefore, conclude that the issues of ability to perform and tender, not being raised at the pre-trial conference, and not being listed in the pre-trial conference order as issues remaining in dispute, were no longer issues in the case. To hold otherwise would, in our opinion, not be in conformity with either the letter or the spirit of the Rules Relating to Pre-trial Conferences.

No other points raised require discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 5790.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 12, 1959.

Tenants' suit, to rescind lease and recover damages, was consolidated for trial with landlord's action in unlawful detainer. The Superior Court of San Bernardino County, R. Bruce Findlay, J., rendered judgment adverse to the landlord, and the landlord appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shepard, J., held that where tenants faithfully managed and cared for premises and faithfully paid rent until it became evident that landlord was not performing his obligations and that there was a serious question as to whether he ever would or even intended to so perform, tenants were entitled to hold up payment of rent for a reasonable time, to find out just what landlord would do about his unfulfilled promises.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1)

On appeal, reviewing court is required to resolve all conflicts in testimony in favor of judgment and to view evidence in light most favorable thereto.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇐213(1)

Where tenants faithfully managed and cared for premises and faithfully paid rent until it became evident that landlord was not performing his obligations and that there was a serious question as to whether he ever would or even intended to so perform, tenants were entitled to hold up payment of rent for a reasonable time, to find out just what landlord would do about his unfulfilled promises.

3. Equity ⇐75

Equity is reluctant to impose rule of laches against party who in good faith tried to settle troubles of parties without resorting to court assistance.

4. Fraud ⇐35

Before an offended party in a fraud case may be effectively charged with waiver or estoppel there must have been full knowledge on part of offended party of all facts relating to fraud.

5. Election of Remedies ⇐9

Where there had been no decision on merits and defendant had been in no way prejudiced or harmed, plaintiffs, who had refiled a few days after their dismissal of first action, would not be deemed to have made such election of remedies as would bar their recovery in subsequent action based on some of same allegations contained in prior action.

6. Fraud ⇐59(3)

In tenant's suit to rescind lease and recover damages, it was not error to use the "out-of-pocket" rule in calculating judgment.

SHEPARD, Justice.

On November 21, 1955, plaintiffs Phillip R. Warfield and his wife Nancy Jeanette Warfield (hereinafter called plaintiffs) and Jack C. Richey (hereinafter called defendant) entered into a lease agreement whereby defendant leased to plaintiffs a hotel and motel at Needles, California, for a term of five years from December 1, 1955, at a rental of 25% of the gross income. The lease contained a deposit requirement of $5,000 as lease security and $3,000 in escrow to be spent in improvements (in the case of neither deposit does the lease say where the deposit shall be made nor does it prescribe conditions of control). Lessor agrees to give lessees access to lessor's books for the preceding year to verify income and operating expenses. Lessor further agrees to make repairs to the marquee and outside of the building, to keep the roof and other parts of the building in good repair, and to cause inspection and put into good operating condition the air conditioning and heating units.

On July 5, 1956, plaintiffs brought an action (85923) alleging violation by defendant of the agreement and on information and belief that the alleged statement by defendant that there had been $25,000 gross income during the year preceding date of lease was false, and asked for cancellation and damages. After filing an answer and some intermediate proceedings defendant, on September 12, 1956, filed notice of motion for permission to file an amended answer and cross-complaint, and on September 14th plaintiffs filed notice of motion for permission to file an amended complaint. On September 24th, the trial court denied permission to file the amended complaint on the ground that it attempted to state a new cause of action, and granted defendant's motion to file an amended answer and cross-complaint. On the same day, plaintiffs caused said action 85923 to be dismissed, and on October 2, 1958, filed this action (86834) alleging false representations as an inducement to the making of the lease, refusal to permit inspection of books, refusal to make agreed repairs, the expenditure of $1,600 on improvements, notice of rescission, offer by plaintiffs to restore everything of value received, with a prayer for cancellation of the lease, return of $5,000 deposit, return of $1,600 expended on improvements, and $5,000 for services rendered in operating the hotel and motel.

On August 16, 1956, the defendant filed an action (86409) in unlawful detainer against these plaintiffs, alleging breach by nonpayment of rent and asking restoration of premises, etc.

After issue joined in both actions, causes were consolidated for trial, tried, and the court found generally in favor of plaintiffs on the allegations of false representation and of promises made without intent to perform; that defendant failed and refused to give plaintiffs access to defendant's books for verification of income during the year preceding the agreement; that defendant failed to repair the marquee and other damaged portions on the outside of the hotel or its roof, and other parts of the hotel; that defendant failed to keep the property in good repair; that defendant failed to have the air conditioning and heating units put in good operating order; that the deposits of $5,000 and $3,000 required to be made by plaintiffs were made; that $1,600 was expended by plaintiffs on improvements; that notice of rescission was duly given; that the reasonable value of the use and occupation of the premises during the period occupied by plaintiffs under the circumstances of the occupation was $3,884.56; that the equitable time proportionate refund value of the $1,600 expended by plaintiffs for improvements is $1,217.88; that the $5,000 deposit plus the refund of $1,217.88 totals $6,217.88, and decreed this to be owed from defendant to plaintiffs; that the amount owed from plaintiffs to defendant is the reasonable value of the use and occupation of the premises or $3,884.56, making a balance of $2,333.32 adjudged to be paid by defendant to plaintiffs; that the lease be cancelled and rescinded; and that defendant's action in unlawful detainer was unjustified.

[1] This court has reviewed the entire testimony and the exhibits presented in the cause. There is considerable conflict in the testimony, but on appeal this court is required to resolve all such conflicts in favor of the judgment and to view the evidence in the light most favorable thereto. Donato v. Lopopolo, 20 Cal.App.2d 409, 66 P.2d 1256; Jones v. Lewis, 35 Cal.App.2d 398, 95 P.2d 698; Gould v. Escondido Valley Poultry Ass'n, 56 Cal.App.2d 681, 682, 133 P.2d 448.

Viewing the evidence in this light, the record contains testimony of the bad condition of various and sundry parts of the buildings at the time the lease was entered into, which explains the reason for the special provision for repairs to be made by the lessor. There is also evidence of repeated requests from the lessee for performance in this respect for several months after the commencement of the lease down to March, 1956, and perhaps later into the warm months, and also there is evidence of defendant's failure to make such repairs and of his refusal to allow plaintiffs to inspect the books covering the year preceding the commencement of the lease for verification of income and expenses.

The evidence also shows that the $5,000-deposit for lease rental security was made with defendant, and that the $3,000-deposit for use in making improvements was made at a bank in Needles. This "improvement" deposit was apparently in the name of plaintiffs and segregated from other deposits. A review of the whole record indicates that said $3,000-deposit was used from time to time for the making of improvements; that defendant was consulted each time the improvements were made, was aware of the circumstances of the deposits, and made no objection whatever either to the method of deposit or to the course and manner of expenditure. In view of the fact that the lease makes no provision as to where the deposit shall be made and does not purport to set up any system of controls or manner of expenditure, it is apparent that the deposit and its expenditure was in accordance with defendant's understanding of the meaning of the contract and was in substantial compliance therewith.

[2] The evidence shows further that the plaintiffs faithfully managed and cared for the premises, and faithfully paid the rent until it became evident that defendant was not performing his obligations and that there was a serious question as to whether he ever would or even intended to so perform. Under such circumstances the plaintiffs were entitled to hold up the payments of rent for a reasonable time, to find out just what defendant would do about his unfulfilled promises.

> "But the defrauded vendee has another and alternative remedy. He may elect to rescind the contract for fraud, restore possession to the vendor, and recover the purchase money paid less the fair rental value for the use of the property during his occupancy. This right of rescission is available to a vendee in default." Kent v. Clark, 20 Cal.2d 779, 128 P.2d 868, 871, 142 A.L.R. 576; Graham v. Los Angeles First Nat. Trust & Savings Bank, 3 Cal.2d 37, 45(7), 43 P.2d 543.

[3] During the month following the making of the contract the plaintiffs hopefully made frequent requests for defendant to show his books and for the making of repairs, etc. We think that they did not unduly delay their action. Equity is reluctant to impose the rule of laches against an offended party where the offended party is in good faith trying to settle the troubles of the parties without resorting to court assistance.

> "A delay in rescinding a contract on the ground of alleged false representations which is the result of indulgence shown to the party perpetrating the fraud is not available as a defense in an action for rescission." Graham v. Los Angeles First Nat. Trust & Savings Bank, 3 Cal.2d 37, 44(5), 43 P.2d 543, 547.

In Lobdell v. Miller, 114 Cal.App.2d 328, 339(10), 250 P.2d 357, 364, the court, quoting from Williams v. Marshall, 37 Cal.2d 445, 455, 235 P.2d 372, said:

> "'The courts have frequently declared that there is no artificial rule as to the lapse of time which will justify the application of the doctrine of laches. Each case must be determined upon the basis of its facts, and in the absence of a palpable abuse of discretion the trial court's finding upon the issue will not be disturbed upon appeal.'"

[4] It must be further noted that before an offended party in a fraud case may be effectively charged with waiver or estoppel, there must be full knowledge on the part of the offended party of all the facts relating to the fraud. It is apparent in the case at bar that the facts in their total effect were coming to the plaintiffs piecemeal, and the full disclosure of defendant's false representation respecting the prior year's income did not actually arrive until the trial of this cause.

> "It is the general rule, within which the case here obviously falls, that there can be no estoppel in pais where the party against whom the attempt is made to invoke such estoppel does not know the full truth of the facts to which his conduct, declarations, or representations constituting the basis of the alleged estoppel relate." Bisconer v. Billing, 71 Cal.App. 779, 783(1), 236 P. 329, 330; Chung v. Johnston, 128 Cal.App.2d 157, 163(3), 274 P.2d 922.

[5] The defendant claims that plaintiffs made an election of remedies and that they cannot now, by this action, proceed in rescission. Action 85923 was commenced July 5th, 1956, and was based on some of the same allegations of fraud and breach contained in the case at bar. It is entirely possible that plaintiffs were confused as to their remedy, the pleading was not satisfactory to the court nor to the plaintiffs, and after some legal maneuvering plaintiffs apparently believed they were forced to abandon that case and file over. They refiled just a few days after the dismissal. There was thus no decision on the merits, and we are unable to discern that defendant was in any way prejudiced or harmed thereby except, of course, that his case finally did get to the court on its real merits.

> "'When a case is dismissed without evidence having been offered, it is error to render judgment on the merits. There is nothing before the court on which to base any findings determinative of the issues. The absence of proof on either side could not involve a judicial determination of the merits of the controversy. Freedman v. Sirota, 109 App.Div. 874, 96 N.Y.S. 812. * * * 'If the record of a judgment of dismissal fails to show that the judgment was given upon a consideration of the merits of the controversy, it is not available as an estoppel.' * * * Under well-settled principles of the doctrine of estoppel, the disadvantages caused the other party by a change of remedy must be a real injury, such as would, in the contemplation of law, amount to an estoppel, and when it is of this character the doctrine of election of remedies will be applied by the courts. (Citing cases.)" Campanella v. Campanella, 204 Cal. 515, 520, 521, 269 P. 433, 435.

"The doctrine of election of remedies is but a specific application of the equitable doctrine of estoppel, and it has been frequently held that a change in remedies does not bring about an election of remedies unless the change involves a prejudice to the opposing party." Commercial Centre Realty Co. v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 121, 129(5), 59 P.2d 978, 982, 107 A.L.R. 714.

[6] The defendant complains of the method used in calculating judgment. It would appear that the trial court used the "out-of-pocket" rule as approved in many cases in California. Many states have used the "benefit-of-the-bargain" rule, and this latter rule was sometimes used in California, but since 1935 the "out-of-pocket" rule appears to have been followed with fair consistency. Bagdasarian v. Gragnon, 31 Cal.2d 744, 760, 192 P.2d 935; Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Greenbach, 98 Cal.App.2d 220, 240, 219 P.2d 814.

"In the rescission action a plaintiff is entitled to recover the consideration he gave on restoration or offer of restoration of that which he received. He is also entitled to recover compensation for whatever consequential damages he may have suffered by reason of having entered into the contract. In the latter case, a plaintiff is entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of that with which the defrauded person parted and the actual value of that which he received together with additional damage arising from the particular transaction." Lobdell v. Miller, supra, 114 Cal.App. 2d at page 343(17) (18), 250 P.2d at page 367.

"As long as there is available a satisfactory method for obtaining a reasonably proximate estimation of the damages, the defendant whose wrongful act gave rise to the injury will not be heard to complain that the amount thereof cannot be determined with mathematical precision." Noble v. Tweedy, 90 Cal.App.2d 738, 746, 203 P.2d 778, 782.

From an examination of the entire cause it appears that the court properly took into account all those factors that could benefit defendant in endeavoring to accomplish justice between the parties, stayed satisfactorily within the rules of equity, and that the judgment is fair and just.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

James HOWARD, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 3495.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 31, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, C. Harold Caulfield, J., for first-degree burglary, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that evidence that one of reasons police went to apartment where stolen goods were found and defendant was arrested was that woman occupying apartment with defendant had complained to them of defendant's felonious sexual conduct toward her was relevant, and that reference thereto in argument was proper.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1081

Period fixed by rule requiring notice of appeal to be filed within 10 days of rendition of judgment is jurisdictional, and appellate court has no power to relieve defendant from his default in event he files notice beyond period specified. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1081

Where defendant is in custody, so that he has no personal access to proper clerk's office, his notice of appeal will be deemed to have been constructively delivered within prescribed time if he places notice in hands of proper prison officials within such time that it can be mailed to clerk's office and reach that office before 10-day period has elapsed. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1081

There is no legal requirement that notice of appeal be typed. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1081

Affidavits, tending to show that after rendition of judgment, on October 18, defendant had been sent to reception center at Vacaville, that he had delivered a handwritten notice of appeal to proper prison officials on October 23 and had been told that notices of appeal had to be typed, that on October 25 his notice of appeal had been returned to him with statement that it could not be typed, and that handwritten notice which was ultimately mailed had been delivered to prison officials on October 27, justified finding that notice of appeal had been constructively delivered within prescribed time. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

5. Prisons ⇐4

Prison rules and regulations cannot be used to impair an inmate's important and constitutional right to appeal.

6. Witnesses ⇐350

Even when defendant denies committing felony, he may be impeached by questions as well as by introduction of record of his conviction; but in asking questions prosecutor should not inquire into details and circumstances of offense or constantly reiterate questions concerning denied felony, though he may, if witness equivocates, properly ask such questions as may be reasonably necessary to develop fact of conviction. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

7. Criminal Law ⇐1030(1)

Unless error is so flagrant that prejudice necessarily resulted, objection is normally a prerequisite to urging error on appeal.

8. Criminal Law ⇐369(2)

Where conversation is inquired into, it is not error to elicit entire conversation even though such conversation incidentally reveals commission of another offense.

9. Criminal Law ⇐1137(5)

Where it was defendant's counsel who had first asked for conversation, defendant could not complain that full conversation had been brought out.

10. Criminal Law ⇐369(1, 2)

Evidence of commission of prior, independent, unrelated offenses, having no tendency to prove any material fact in prosecution's case, may not be admitted; but whenever case is such that proof of one crime tends to prove any fact material in trial of another, such proof is admissible, and fact that it may tend to prejudice defendant in minds of jurors is no ground for its exclusion.

11. Criminal Law ⇐369(2)

Evidence to explain arrest of defendant and circumstances surrounding it is admissible, even if other crimes are thereby disclosed.

12. Criminal Law ⇐369(2), 720(8)

In burglary prosecution, evidence that one of reasons police went to apartment where stolen goods were found and defendant was arrested was that woman occupying apartment with defendant had complained to them of defendant's felonious sexual conduct toward her was relevant, and reference thereto in argument was proper.

13. Criminal Law ⇐1036(1), 1037(1)

That defense counsel had made no objections to evidence of another offense or to argument with regard thereto was not conclusive, but was worth noting, on issue of whether prejudicial error had resulted.

14. Criminal Law ⇐394.4(1)

Evidence secured in an illegal search is not admissible.

15. Searches and Seizures ⇐7(27)

If defendant or someone with apparent authority consents to entry, and entry is made in good faith, it is not unlawful.

16. Searches and Seizures ⇐7(27)

Anyone in joint occupancy of house has authority to permit an entry without a warrant.

17. Arrest ⇐63(4)
Searches and Seizures ⇐7(27)

Where woman who had been living in apartment with defendant for several months told officers that defendant had committed a felonious act upon her and that he had some stolen property at apartment and asked their protection while she removed her belongings, and it was she who admitted officers to apartment, their entry was lawful, and search which they made after observing some of stolen property in plain sight was legal; and discovery of stolen property, together with information received from woman that defendant had committed felony and corroboration of part of her story from bruises on her body, justified arrest of defendant without a warrant.

Nathan S. Smith, San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., John S. McInerny, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was charged and convicted of two first-degree burglaries. From the judgment entered on this verdict he appeals.

[1] The attorney general contends that this court lacks jurisdiction to consider the appeal because, so it is urged, the appeal was filed beyond the 10-day period permitted by Rule 31 of the Rules on Appeal. That rule requires that, in criminal cases, the notice of appeal must be filed within 10 days of the rendition of judgment. The period fixed by this rule is jurisdictional, and the appellate court has no power to relieve the defendant from his default in the event he files the notice beyond the period specified. People v. Lewis, 219 Cal. 410, 27 P.2d 73; People v. Riser, 47 Cal.2d 594, 305 P.2d 18; People v. Cato, 136 Cal. App.2d 503, 289 P.2d 119.

In the instant case, judgment was rendered October 18, 1957. The notice of appeal is dated October 27, 1957, but was not filed in the proper county clerk's office until October 29, 1957. Thus, on its face, the notice of appeal was filed one day too late.

[2] Although the appellate court is without power to relieve a defendant from his default in filing the notice beyond the 10-day period, it is now well settled that where a defendant is in custody, so that he has no personal access to the proper clerk's office, his notice of appeal will be deemed to have been constructively delivered within the prescribed time if he places the notice in the hands of the proper prison officials within such time that it can be mailed to the clerk's office and reach that office before the 10-day period has elapsed. People v. Slobodion, 30 Cal.2d 362, 181 P. 2d 868.

In an attempt to bring himself within this rule the defendant has filed affidavits with this court in which it is averred that, after the rendition of judgment on October 18, 1957, he was sent to the Reception Center at Vacaville, where he was received on October 21, 1957; that on October 23, 1957, he delivered a handwritten notice of appeal to the proper prison officials and was told that notices of appeal had to be typed before being placed in the mail;[1] that on October 25, 1957, this notice of appeal was returned to him with the statement that it could not be typed; that on October 27, 1957, he delivered another handwritten notice of appeal to the proper inmate clerk.

The Superintendent of Vacaville avers that the prison records show that defendant delivered his notice of appeal to the proper prison officials "on or before Monday, October 28, 1957," and that it was mailed on the 28th to the proper clerk's office;[2] that the records of the prison do not show the precise date on which the notice was delivered to the prison officials, but that he has been informed by defendant that it was on the 27th, a Sunday; that under procedures then in effect at Vacaville such notices were normally processed and mailed the same day they were received by the prison officials if delivered on any week day; that because the facility operates with a reduced staff on Saturdays and Sundays, such notices were not processed on such days and, if received after 4:30 p. m. on Fridays, were not mailed until the next Monday. It is also averred that in October, 1957, the Reception Guidance Center was just being moved to Vacaville so that "procedures were not very well established."

[3, 4] It is our opinion that defendant has brought himself within the spirit of the rule of the Slobodion case. Under the most limited interpretation of the affidavits, it is apparent that the notice of appeal was properly delivered by defendant on October 27th. Had it been mailed that day it would have reached the county clerk's office in San Francisco on October 28th. Had this been done, the notice of appeal would have been filed in time. According to Howard's affidavit, which is not contradicted, he properly delivered a handwritten notice on October 23rd, was told that it had to be typed, and on the 25th was told that it could not be typed. There is, of course, no legal requirement that notices of appeal must be typed, and, in fact, the notice of appeal that was ultimately mailed was in handwriting. Had the notice of appeal been mailed on the 23rd or 24th, it would, obviously, have reached the clerk's office in San Francisco well before the 28th.

[5] A prison must, of course, have rules and regulations governing the conduct of inmates. But such rules and regulations cannot be used to impair an inmate's important and constitutional right to appeal. In People v. Tenney, 162 Cal. App.2d 458, 328 P.2d 254, 255 (petition for hearing denied) it was stated: "It is now well settled that, if the defendant is in custody, and makes a good faith effort to file the required notice within the statutory period, but is prevented from doing so by the acts of the prison authorities, the appeal will be considered as having been filed in time. The theory is that, if the notice of appeal is delivered to the prison officials within the statutory period with a request to mail it, such delivery is a constructive delivery to the appropriate county clerk, and the subsequent failure of the prison officials to prepare and mail the notice within time cannot adversely affect the rights of defendant." That case held that if the notice of appeal was delivered to the prison officials on the 9th day after rendition of judgment, mailing time between Vacaville and San Francisco being one day, it was filed in time. This principle was reaffirmed in People v. Griffin, 162 Cal.App.2d 712, 328 P.2d 502 (petition for hearing denied).

The attorney general argues that these cases should be overruled. Attention is called to the fact that, according to the affidavits of the prison officials, the notice was delivered to them on October 27th, and, although if then mailed it would have been received in time on the 28th, the 27th was a Sunday, and, under prison procedures, no mail is processed if received after 4:30 p. m. on Friday, until the following Monday. Thus, so it is urged, the defendant was negligent in not delivering his notice before 4:30 p. m. on Friday, October 25th, and the delay was chargeable to him and not to the prison officials. Aside from the fact that defendant avers that he first delivered the notice for mailing on October 23rd, and assuming that it was not delivered for mailing until Sunday the 27th, the argument of respondent misinterprets the basic theory of the Slobodion case, and of those cases following it. Those cases recognize that a person in custody is hampered in protecting his legal and constitutional rights. As long as he acts promptly and the delay in mailing is not his fault, the notice will be deemed to have been constructively delivered. The rule is not predicated upon a showing that the prison officials were fraudulent or negligent in not mailing the notice sooner. As long as the defendant has not caused the delay and has acted within time, the notice will be deemed to have been constructively delivered whatever was the cause of the delay. However reasonable it may be to adopt a rule that notices of appeal must be typed, or a rule that no mail will be processed from Friday after 4:30 p. m. until Monday, such rules cannot be used to cut down the defendant's very limited time in which to appeal. As long as he acts promptly and in time, the prison rules cannot be used to deprive the defendant of his constitutional right of appeal. Thus, the rule of the Tenney and Griffin cases is sound and is reaffirmed. Under that rule the notice of appeal here involved was filed in time.

1. The Associate Superintendent of the Reception Center avers that the rules of the institution then in effect required that notices of appeal be typed before being mailed, and that typing work for the inmates was normally done at the typing pool staffed by inmate clerks.

2. The notice of appeal, received in the clerk's office on October 29th, was in handwriting, and had been mailed on the 28th, which was a Monday.

We turn to a consideration of the appeal on its merits. On the evening of July 12, 1957, the home of the Wolfsohns on Florence Street in San Francisco was burglarized. Among the property taken, most of which was subsequently found in the possession of defendant and identified by the Wolfsohns or others, were certain cultured pearls, a matching cigarette case and compact, gold earrings, a suit of clothes and a dress.

On the evening of July 19, 1957, or the early morning hours of July 20th, the apartment of the Bernsteins on Montgomery Street in San Francisco was burglarized. Among the property taken, all of which was subsequently found in the possession of defendant and identified by the Bernsteins, was a grey cabinet containing a strong box filled with papers, and a woman's raincoat. The Bernsteins also identified a tan corduroy jacket found by them in their apartment after the burglary and which did not belong to them.

There were no eyewitnesses to the above crimes. No one saw defendant make the unlawful entries, nor did anyone see him near or about the burglarized premises on the nights in question. The evidence first connecting defendant with these crimes came from one Marlene, a 21 year old married woman, who had been living with defendant as his mistress for some time prior to the burglaries. She testified that on the evening of July 12, 1957, defendant, accompanied by a man named Paul, came to the apartment she occupied with defendant sometime between 10 and 11 p. m.; that they were then carrying certain items of property which they proceeded to divide; that among the property were the matching compact and cigarette case, the pearls, the gold earrings and the dress, all later identified by the Wolfsohns. Marlene also stated that defendant had the suit stolen from the Wolfsohns and identified by them which, defendant took to a tailor for alterations and from whom it was later recovered.

Marlene also testified that around 5 a. m. of July 20, 1957, defendant returned to their apartment carrying a grey cabinet wrapped in a woman's raincoat. These items were later identified by the Bernsteins as articles stolen from their apartment. Marlene also testified that defendant then told her he had stolen the property "up on Telegraph Hill" from a house where he had seen a boy sleeping with the covers over his face and where the occupants must have had a party because the place was messed up. Mrs. Bernstein testified that her son frequently slept with the covers over his head, and that on July 19, 1957, there had been a wedding and reception at their home.

Marlene also testified that defendant searched the grey cabinet, and, finding that the strong box it contained had nothing of value in it, grew angry and stated that he was going to return to the apartment where he had gotten it in order to pick up a purse he had seen there; that he then left and later returned without his coat, telling Marlene that his coat caught in a door and that he had left it there. Marlene identified the tan corduroy coat found by the Bernsteins as the coat defendant was wearing that night. The coat was also identified as belonging to defendant by several independent witnesses.

Marlene also testified that about two weeks after defendant was arrested he telephoned to her. Marlene was then staying at the home of her father. Her father listened in on the conversation. Marlene testified that the conversation was as follows: "He said, 'Why do you want to do this to me?' * * * He said—He says, 'Don't you know I can get five to life for this?' And I said, 'Well, you did it.' And he said: 'Sure, I did it.' And he said, 'Did you go before the Grand Jury last night?' I said, 'I did.' And he said, 'Well, don't you know I am out on bail and,' he said, 'I'm going to kill you.'"

The father of Marlene, who had answered the telephone and then listened in on the same phone while defendant was talking, testified that he heard the conversation and that he had taken notes of it. Using the notes to refresh his recollection, he recounted the conversation as follows: "Well, this is what he said. He said, 'Why do you want to do this to me? Don't you know I can get five to life?' 'Well, you know,'—this is what she said—'Well, you know you did it.' He said, 'Sure, I did,' and, he said, 'Don't you know I'm out on bail and you better not come out of the house, because I'm going to kill you.'"

A police officer at the City Hall testified that at the time in question he had permitted defendant to make a telephone call and saw him do it, but did not hear the conversation. Defendant, on cross-examination, admitted telephoning to Marlene on the day in question, admitted some of the conversation as testified to by Marlene and her father, but denied admitting that he had committed the crimes, and denied making the threat to kill Marlene.

The police found defendant in possession of the stolen property and arrested him as the result of Marlene coming to them and complaining about how defendant had treated her. She testified that she had lived with defendant since May of 1957; that she grew to dislike the relationship because she did not like the idea of defendant having committed the crimes here involved, and because defendant refused to "let her go" and "kept beating her." Defendant, also, she said, had committed sodomy upon her. Defendant kept insisting that she become a prostitute. At first she refused, but finally consented on condition he let her go out alone for a few hours. Defendant agreed. Marlene then voluntarily came to the police department and reported some of the facts to Officer Marionetti. On cross-examination of this officer by the defense, the following occurred, the first question being by defense counsel:

"Q. Am I—And as I understand it, you handled the complaint of Mrs. Garcia. Well, isn't it true that the only thing she told you at the Central Station was that she had been living with Howard; that they had a quarrel; that he wouldn't let her into the—let her in to get her things and she merely wanted some officer to go with her and get her own things and move them out of the place? A. Oh, no, she told me a lot more than that.

"Q. Well, what did she tell you? A. Well, she told me that the man had forced his attentions on her that particular night.

"Miss Schnacke [the Prosecuting Attorney]: Would you describe—You used a rather delicate phrase, officer. Relate what she told you the Defendant had done to her.

"The Witness: Well, she told me the Defendant had committed an immoral act, sodomy was one, and when we arrived at the scene there was blood on the mattress and everything. And she stated the man had struck her and blacked her—hit her about the face.

"Mr. McNamara: Q. Now, these things were mentioned at the Central Police Station, Officer? A. Yes, they were.

"Q. Well, did she tell you she had been living with the man for several weeks? A. Yes, she told me longer than that. She stated—

"Q. Well, you went there, then, I take it, to give her some protection and to allow her to get her personal things, is that right? A. No, not necessarily. She also revealed the man had committed burglaries. She didn't know where. She didn't give the exact places, but she stated it was in the Telegraph Hill area and Nob Hill area. Received stolen property—He had stolen property, rather, on the premises."

On redirect, this officer testified that, from his observation, Marlene appeared to have been beaten.

After the officer had been told that defendant had beaten Marlene, had tried to force her into prostitution, had committed sodomy on her person, had committed robberies and that some of the stolen property was in their apartment, and after Marlene had asked for protection while she removed her possessions from the apartment, Officer Marionetti and another officer accompanied her to the apartment she occupied with defendant. Upon arrival Marlene attempted to open the door with her key, but the door was apparently bolted on the inside. Marlene then found an open window through which she climbed. She then let the officers in the front door, which she opened. Officer Marionetti observed, in the front part of the apartment, the grey cabinet stolen from the Bernsteins. The officers then searched the apartment and found other stolen property and also found the defendant who was hiding in one of the rear rooms. Defendant told the officers a story about just having disposed of some narcotics. After questioning the defendant, and after finding some of the property stolen from the two homes here involved, defendant was arrested and booked on suspicion of burglary.

Defendant, at the trial, denied any connection with either of the crimes. He admitted that he had been living with Marlene, and testified that on July 12, 1957, he and Marlene were out together until after midnight, but he could not remember where. He denied seeing a man by the name of "Paul" that night, and denied knowing such a person. He testified that some of the stolen property belonged to Marlene and that some of the rest of it he had either purchased from a man named "Les," or "Les" had left it in the apartment. He denied that he had ever possessed the tan corduroy coat found at the Bernsteins. He denied most of the telephone conversation testified to by Marlene and her father. On cross-examination he admitted having committed the unnatural sex acts of which Marlene complained, testifying that she had consented thereto.

No attack is made on the sufficiency of the evidence. The appellant first complains that the prosecutor committed prejudicial error in questioning him about a prior felony conviction. The examination on this point was as follows: "Q. Incidentally, you have been previously convicted of a felony, haven't you, Mr. Howard? A. Have I?

"Q. Haven't you? I am asking you. A. No.

"Q. No? Weren't you, in 1953, convicted of forging a government check? A. That was no felony. I was a minor during that time.

"Q. In 1953? You were born in 1934, weren't you? A. Correct.

"Q. And 1953, you would have been 19? A. No, I had just—

"Q. Or, 18, going on 19— A. During that time, when that check was cashed—

"The Court: Wait a minute, wait a minute. Wait until the question is finished.

"Miss Schnacke: Q. You were 18, going on 19, weren't you, in June of '53? A. Correct.

"Q. And you went to a Federal prison at El Reno, Oklahoma, is that correct? A. Correct.

"Q. For the crime? A. Correct.

"Q. And you did 18 months there? A. But, not for forgery.

"Q. Well, it was a felony conviction, wasn't it? A. Well, time when the check was cashed, I was 17 years old.

"Q. At that time, you were convicted and you were 18 and you did go to a Federal prison and do 18 months, which I think even Mr. McNamara will stipulate was a felony. Isn't that right? A. To my knowledge, I don't know it was a felony."

[6] No objection was made at the trial to these questions, but it now is contended that once the defendant denied committing a felony the only way he could be impeached was by the introduction of the record of his conviction. The point is without merit. Under section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure the defendant may be impeached by showing that he has been convicted of a felony by "examination of the witness, or the record of the judgment." Thus the section recognizes that the defendant may be impeached by questions as well as by introduction of the record. In asking the questions the prosecutor should not inquire into the details and circumstances of the offense (People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 P. 697; People v. Darcy, 101 Cal. App.2d 665, 226 P.2d 53) nor should he constantly reiterate questions concerning the denied felony, but if the witness equivocates, the prosecutor may properly ask such questions as may be reasonably necessary to develop the fact of the conviction. People v. Chenault, 74 Cal.App.2d 487, 169 P.2d 29.

The cross-examination here involved was well within permitted limits. The witness equivocated and bickered about his age. The further questions were necessary in order to show that the offense was "punishable * * * for a term exceeding one year" and so was a felony under federal law. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1.

[7] It should also be noted that the defense did not interpose an objection to the questions. Such an objection is normally required before the error can be raised on appeal (see cases collected 3 Cal.Jur.2d 634, § 156) unless it is so flagrant that prejudice necessarily resulted. People v. Wynn, 44 Cal.App.2d 723, 112 P.2d 979. Certainly, no such error appears here.

The next contention of defendant is that several references by the prosecuting attorney to defendant having committed unnatural sexual acts with Marlene constituted prejudicial error.

As already pointed out, in cross-examining Officer Marionetti defense counsel pressed the witness for details of the conversation he had with Marlene when she first came to the police station. The officer replied that Marlene, among other things, told him that defendant had "forced his attentions on her." The prosecutor interrupted the examination and asked the witness to relate the facts as to what Marlene had stated defendant had done. Marionetti replied: "Well, she told me the Defendant had committed an immoral act, sodomy was one."

During the cross-examination of defendant, the prosecutor asked defendant if he had heard the officer testify of Marlene's complaints. The defendant stated that he had heard the testimony, whereupon the prosecutor asked: "Did you commit those acts?" to which defendant replied: "Yes, I did and if I am guilty of it, she is as guilty as I am."

Then in his opening argument to the jury the prosecutor made the following statement:

"He admitted committing improper sexual acts upon her. He seems to think it is all right, because his testimony was that that was all right with her. Maybe Mr. Howard doesn't know it, but he admitted the commission of a serious felony on the witness stand and he admits having done that, because the law provides it doesn't make any difference whether the person is a willing victim or not. You do not commit acts such as Mr. Howard was talking about and he knew what he was talking about, the act of sodomy she told the police officer about, either willing or unwilling victim.

"Mrs. Garcia told you that—The officer told you, rather, that Mrs. Garcia said she was an unwilling victim and that was her original complaint when she came down to complain to him about that. She told him about the stolen property. She told him about how he had been beating her up and he wouldn't let her out of the premises."

[8, 9] So far as the examination of Officer Marionetti is concerned there was certainly no error. It is settled law that where a conversation is inquired into it is not error to elicit the entire conversation even though, in this fashion, such conversation incidentally reveals the commission of another offense. 18 Cal.Jur.2d 585, § 137; People v. Masters, 133 Cal.App. 167, 23 P. 2d 774. It was the defendant's counsel who first asked for this conversation and he, therefore, cannot complain that the full conversation was brought out.

[10] As to the cross-examination of defendant, and the argument to the jury, a different problem is presented. It is clearly the law that evidence of the commission of prior, independent, unrelated offenses, having no tendency to prove any material fact in the prosecution's case, may not be admitted. See cases collected 18 Cal.Jur. 2d 583, § 136; People v. Albertson, 23 Cal. 2d 550, 145 P.2d 7; People v. Channell, 136 Cal.App.2d 99, 288 P.2d 326; People v. Baylor, 47 Cal.App.2d 34, 117 P.2d 425. However, the converse of the rule is also true, that is, "whenever the case is such that proof of one crime tends to prove any fact material in the trial of another, such proof is admissible, and the fact that it may tend to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jurors is no ground for its exclusion." People v. Lyon, 135 Cal.App. 2d 558, 578, 288 P.2d 57, 70.

[11, 12] The evidence here involved falls within the exception. During the trial many articles of property were introduced into evidence. The prosecution contended that such articles had been stolen, and that they had been found in defendant's possession. The manner in which that property came into possession of the police was before the jury. The jury had been properly told that Marlene had complained to the police about defendant's conduct toward her, had told them of the alleged thefts, and had led the officers to the apartment she occupied with defendant, and admitted them. The officers found the property and arrested defendant. They had neither a search nor an arrest warrant. One of the reasons the police went to the apartment with Marlene was because she had complained of defendant's felonious sexual conduct toward her. Thus, this fact was relevant to explain the entry on the premises and defendant's subsequent arrest without warrants. Evidence to explain the arrest of the defendant and the circumstances surrounding it, even if other prior crimes are disclosed, is admissible. People v. Brite, 9 Cal.2d 666, 72 P.2d 122; People v. Craig, 152 Cal. 42, 91 P. 997. Since the validity of the arrest and entry were relevant, the defendant's prior misconduct was also relevant. If relevant, the reference to it in the argument was also proper.

[13] It should also be noted that defense counsel made no objections to any of this evidence, or to the argument. While this fact is not conclusive (People v. Newson, 37 Cal.2d 34, 230 P.2d 618; People v. Dabb, 32 Cal.2d 491, 197 P.2d 1; People v. Hampton, 47 Cal.2d 239, 302 P.2d 300) it is worth noting on the issue of whether prejudicial error resulted.

found in the apartment were not admissible in evidence because they were secured as a result of an illegal search and seizure, it being urged that Marlene had no legal right to admit the officers to the apartment.

It is of course, the law that evidence secured in an illegal search is not admissible. People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, 50 A.L.R.2d 513. However, it is also the law that if the defendant or someone with apparent authority, consents to the entry, and the entry is made in good faith, it is not unlawful. Thus, defendant's mother can give consent to the entry (People v. Michael, 45 Cal.2d 751, 290 P.2d 852); as can the owner of a house in which defendant rents a room (People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 291 P.2d 469; People v. Caritativo, 46 Cal.2d 68, 292 P.2d 513); or the wife of defendant (People v. Dominguez, 144 Cal.App.2d 63, 300 P.2d 194). In People v. Silva, 140 Cal.App.2d 791, 295 P.2d 942, it was held that the brother of defendant's mistress, who lived at the house, could grant consent to an entry. Under these cases, anyone in joint occupancy of the house has authority to permit an entry without a warrant. In the present case, Marlene had told the officers that she was living at the premises with defendant and had been so living for several months. This is admitted by defendant. Marlene told the officers that defendant had beaten her, proposed that she enter a life of prostitution, committed a felonious act upon her, and had stolen property at the apartment. She asked protection while she removed her belongings. She led the officers to the apartment, and, after finding the front door bolted, climbed through the window and admitted the officers. There was no evidence that any duress was practiced upon her—in fact, it was at her insistence that the officers were there. Under such circumstances the entry was lawful. Once in the apartment some of the stolen property was in plain sight. This aroused the reasonable suspicions of the officers, a further search was made, and other property and the defendant were found. Thus, the search was legal. People v. Roberts, 47 Cal.2d 374, 303 P.2d 721. The information from Marlene that defendant had committed a felony, the corroboration of part of her story from the bruises on her body, and the discovery of the stolen property in defendant's apartment justified the arrest without a warrant. People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, 290 P.2d 535; Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 294 P.2d 36.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Willie JACKSON, Danny Hool and Robert Horton, Defendants, Robert Horton, Appellant.

Cr. 6347.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 21, 1959.

Prosecution for burglary. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Edwin L. Jefferson, J., entered judgment of conviction and denied defendant's motion for new trial. Defendant appealed and filed motion for mandate of dismissal. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that record established that defendant's waiver of jury trial was clear and unambiguous, that there was no indication that there was any lack of understanding on defendant's part in reference to such waiver, and that evidence sustained conviction.

Motion dismissed. Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐260(11)

Upon appeal from a criminal conviction, all evidence and all inferences tending to support finding of guilt are to be accepted as true and sufficiency of evidence tested upon that assumption; the question of reasonable doubt is for trial court, not appellate tribunal.

2. Burglary ⇐41(1)

Evidence sustained conviction for burglary. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 459.

3. Jury ⇐29(6)

In prosecution for burglary, record established that defendant's waiver of jury trial was clear and unambiguous and that there was no indication of any lack of understanding on defendant's part. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 7.

4. Criminal Law ⇐792(3)

In prosecution for burglary, trial judge's expression of law as to aiders and abetters was proper. West's Ann.Pen.Code § 459.

Ernest L. Graves, Wilmington, for appellant.

Stanley Mosk, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Appellant Horton, who was represented by counsel throughout the trial and motion for new trial, appeared originally in propria persona upon this appeal, presenting a brief which is built upon the assumption that he is entitled to a re-weighing of the evidence by this court and that it should recognize as pertinent asserted facts which find no reflection in the transcript; a further assumption is that appellant's own evidence and inferences favorable to innocence should be accepted in preference to the proof showing guilt. In this appellant is fundamentally mistaken.

[1, 2] Upon appeal all evidence and all inferences tending to support the finding of guilt are to be accepted as true and the sufficiency of the evidence tested upon that assumption; the question of reasonable doubt is for the trial court, not the appellate tribunal. People v. Newland, 15 Cal. 2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778; People v. Poindexter, 51 Cal.2d 142, 330 P.2d 763. Thus viewed the evidence leaves no doubt about the necessity of affirmance.

The charge upon which appellant was convicted was burglary (Pen.Code, § 459) committed by him, Danny Hool and Willie Jackson, through entry into the residence of Andrew Coleman with intent to commit theft. Convicted of burglary in the first degree the crime was reduced to second degree upon request of the prosecutor. Appellant Horton was also charged with prior felonies, namely, burglary in Texas in 1939 and robbery in California in 1946; the court made no finding thereon. Defendant was sentenced for the term prescribed by law.

On the morning of December 12, 1957, the front doorbell of the residence of Andrew Coleman, at 200 West 54th Street, in the City of Los Angeles, rang three times. Mr. Coleman, 86 years of age, was alone in the house and not fully dressed. He went to the door, looked through the venetian blinds and saw no one. Turning to go back to the bedroom he was confronted by defendant Hool who waved a gun (or what appeared to be one) at him and said, "Give up." "Don't say a G—— d—— word." Coleman said, "Who is you? Why you come in?" and drew his cane back. Hool then turned toward the kitchen. Coleman started for the front door to give an alarm. Before he could do so Hool returned with Horton. They tripped Coleman, had him down on his back, one held his feet and the other beat him with his fists in the mouth and elsewhere on the face, knocking out two teeth; they also tried to choke him. While one of them sat on him and held him down the other said, "You hold him down, I'm going to see what I can pick up." Soon this defendant returned, saying he had picked up what he could get and called the other one off. Coleman saw them no more. While these things were going on Coleman called his next door neighbor and she heard his voice, "Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Jones." She was already on the alert, for her dog was barking and she was looking out the window. When Mrs. Jones heard Coleman's voice it looked to her like he was being beaten but she could not see clearly. However, there was such "a fuss" she could not stand it and started to get help from another neighbor. Seeing two men across the street in an automobile and another getting into it, she told them someone had beaten the old man and asked them to come over and see what they were doing to him. As the three men (Echols, Hicks and Graves) approached, they saw two men, Horton and Hool, come from the rear of Coleman's house. Graves yelled, "You live back there?" One of them said "Yes" and both kept going. Echols and Hicks started after them and they began to run; one of them went "through some houses" but Horton ran until he reached a Mercury automobile (later identified as that of Jackson), put something into it and took something out, and then continued to run up Broadway. Echols and Hicks caught him and one of them held him until the other brought the police. Meantime, Graves, inside the Coleman home, was keeping the police informed. There he saw Mr. Coleman who was bleeding from the mouth and had blood all over the chest and stomach of his underwear. As Coleman expressed it, "The law taken me to the doctor" and the hospital. Before his arrest Graves asked Horton where he was going and he said "I'm going to get a job." Also, "You know me"; but he was a stranger to Graves. Coleman, Mrs Jones, Echols, Hicks and Graves positively identified appellant Horton as a participant in the incidents above related.

Mrs. Mary Edwards, the daughter of Coleman, lived with him but was absent on the morning of the 12th of December. Upon her return she saw her injured father and made an examination to see if her money, some $54 to $60, was gone. She kept it in a canvas bag in a locked trunk in her room at the back of the house. The money was there two or three days before the 12th. On this occasion she found the lock broken and twisted, torn off and hanging on the trunk which was open. The bag was there but the money was gone.

Horton's story as given to the police officers and repeated on the witness stand was that he was with one Appleberry at a certain coffee shop when Hool and Jackson drove up and asked him to go with them to help unstop a sink, which they had been trying to do all morning without success. He agreed to do so. They drove in Jackson's Mercury to 54th Street between Main and Broadway, parked and walked between houses to the rear of the Coleman home. A dog was barking. Hool and Jackson entered the enclosed porch of the Coleman home, told Horton to wait outside which he did. Soon he heard "Oh! Oh!"; Hool ran out the back door, grabbed him, said "Let's get out of here." Appellant ran for the Mercury automobile but it was gone. He was stopped by two men who took him into custody. He says that he at no time entered the Coleman house or porch. In effect he said he had no intent to commit theft there and did not know that Hool and Jackson had that in mind. Appellant's brief assumes that the court can and should accept his testimony in preference to that of the prosecution witnesses. The trial judge rejected most of it and that fact ends the inquiry into credibility of witnesses. Moreover, appellant's testimony was impeached by his admission that he had been convicted of burglary in 1939 and robbery in 1946. There is no merit whatever in appellant's claim that the evidence should be resolved in his favor in this court.

[3] Appellant's other point on appeal is that he did not waive a jury in the manner required by § 7 of Article I of the Constitution, i. e., "by the consent of both parties, expressed in open court by the defendant and his counsel, * * *." The transcript shows the contrary. Appellant, Hool and Jackson were tried jointly. At the beginning of the trial respective counsel made motions for trial without a jury: "Mr. Martin: May the Court please, on behalf of the defendant Danny Hool, we wish to waive our right to a trial by jury and try the matter before the Court. Mr. Wilson: The same motion will be presented on behalf of the defendant Jackson and the defendant Horton." Jackson then formally waived a jury in person and through counsel. Hool did the same thing. Appellant was present throughout. Then the following occurred:

"Mr. Finnerty: Robert Horton is your true name?

"Defendant Horton: It is.

"Mr. Finnerty: On Count II, the burglary count, you are entitled to a jury trial. Your attorney, Mr. Wilson, has said you want to waive your right to a trial by jury and be tried by the Judge without a jury. Is that what you want?

"Defendant Horton: That is.

"Mr. Finnerty: Mr. Wilson, do you join?

"Mr. Wilson: I join.

"Mr. Finnerty: The People join.

"The Court: The Court accepts the waiver."

The clerk's transcript also shows that "the defendant(s) personally and all counsel waive jury trial." The waiver at bar was clear and unambiguous, made by both defendant and attorney, and there is no indication that there was any lack of understanding on appellant's part. The law requires no more than this. People v. Bastio, 55 Cal.App.2d 615, 618, 131 P.2d 614; People v. Beckworth, 151 Cal.App.2d 842, 843, 312 P.2d 270; People v. Huerta, 148 Cal. App.2d 272, 274, 306 P.2d 505.

This claim of non-waiver of a jury is incorporated in a document entitled "Motion for Mandate of Dismissal" which was served with appellant's opening brief and is physically attached thereto. It concludes with the following: "The defendant moves that the Honorable Court vacate and set aside the verdict and sentence against this defendant on the above grounds." Manifestly, the motion does not lie.

[4] Through counsel recently appointed by the court appellant has filed a supplemental brief urging error in denial of his motion for new trial. Though it is said that the trial judge at that point discounted the testimony of the victim, who had positively identified appellant as one of those who assaulted him in his house, and mistakenly concluded that he could not grant a new trial, we do not find this to be a correct interpretation of the record. This is also true of the claim that the judge expressed and followed a mistaken view of the law as to aiders and abettors. There was no error in the denial of a new trial.

Motion dismissed. Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Action for personal injuries sustained in fall on stairs in defendant's store. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Lloyd S. Nix, J., defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that even though defendant's store manager had theretofore denied that he had directed, after accident giving rise to action, that abrasive stripping be applied to steps on which plaintiff had slipped, and even though section manager of store had testified that steps had not been slippery, it had been error to overrule objection to questioning section manager as to whether abrasive strips had been added to steps shortly after accident; and held that in view of fact that trial judge had theretofore been fully apprised of respective contentions of parties with respect to admissibility of evidence in question, objection that evidence sought to be adduced by question would be "immaterial" had been sufficient to preserve for review ruling on objection to question.

As a general rule, evidence of repairs or alterations or precautions taken after an accident is not admissible, but in appropriate circumstances evidence of subsequent precautions or repairs may properly be admitted if it tends to impeach testimony of witness. Impeachment by evidence of precautions taken after an accident may be proper where witness himself authorized, recommended, approved, directed, or supervised the making, or himself made, subsequent repairs, alterations or changes of procedure; but fact that after accident some unidentified person other than the witness directed or authorized alterations affords no basis for utilization of that method of impeaching witness who testified that condition existing before change was safe or free from defect. HERNDON, Justice.

Appeal from a judgment awarding plaintiff damages for personal injuries suffered in a fall on stairs in defendant's store. Defendant's sole contention is that the trial court committed prejudicial error in admitting evidence that subsequent to the accident the terrazzo stairs on which plaintiff fell were changed by the installation of adhesive or abrasive strips across the surface of the steps. Plaintiff's position is that (1) the evidence was admissible for the purpose of impeaching defendant's witness, and (2) assuming there was error, the form of objection made by defendant in the trial court was not sufficient to preserve the right to a review of the ruling in question.

The facts are not in dispute: On October 12, 1956, plaintiff was a patron in defendant's Westchester store in Los Angeles. After making a purchase, plaintiff slipped and fell down a stairway suffering serious injuries. The steps on which she fell were constructed of terrazzo, a form of concrete composed of marble chips and cement which is ground down and polished to a smooth surface.

Plaintiff testified that the steps "felt sort of slick." Referring to the terrazzo surface of the stairway landing, she said: "* * * it seemed kind of slick under my feet * * ." After plaintiff had completed her testimony, Mr. Scheufele, defendant's store manager, was called for examination under section 2055 Code of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff's counsel asked Mr. Scheufele whether he had noticed prior to the time of the accident " * * that these steps were very slippery, very hard surface and shiny?" The witness answered in the negative. Counsel then inquired: "Well, isn't it true, Mr. Scheufele, that shortly after this accident occurred that you directed that stripping be—directed that an abrasive stripping be applied to these steps?" Defendant objected to this question on the ground that it violated the rule of law which renders inadmissible any evidence of changes made or precautions taken after the occurrence of an accident.[1] The court overruled the objection, pointing out that if the witness answered the question in the affirmative, the answer would be admissible as being "in the nature of impeachment" and that plaintiff could then ask what was done. But the witness answered the question in the negative, and stated that he neither directed that such abrasive stripping be applied nor supervised the installation of such stripping. The court thereafter sustained defendant's objections to three different questions designed to elicit testimony from Mr. Scheufele that such abrasive stripping had been installed subsequent to the accident.

Defendant called as its own witness a Mr. Lammers, section manager of the store, who went to the scene of plaintiff's fall immediately after it occurred, and inspected the steps. He testified that there was no foreign substance on the steps and that they were not slippery. The transcript of plaintiff's cross-examination of the witness Lammers reads as follows:

"By Mr. Anderson: Q. Mr. Lammers, you testified that in your opinion the steps were not slippery; is that correct? A. Yes.

"Q. Well, isn't it a fact, Mr. Lammers, that adhesive strips were added shortly after the accident to these steps?

"Mr. Birnie: I object to that, your Honor, as being immaterial.

"The Court: Overruled.

"The Witness: Will you repeat the question. (Question read.)

"The Witness: Yes."

In the course of his argument to the jury, counsel for plaintiff stated: "And Mr. Lammers, the last man up, said, 'No, it is not slippery, it is not slippery,' but his testimony is to be disbelieved by you because afterwards there was a change made." The jury was instructed to the effect that the evidence of the subsequent alteration was not to be considered as evidence of negligence on the part of defendant, but was admitted "for the purpose of impeaching the witness giving the testimony."

[1-4] Thus, there is presented to us the clear-cut question of law whether evidence of precautions taken or changes made after the happening of an accident is admissible to impeach a non-expert witness who testified concerning his observations as to the appearance or condition of the premises at the time of the accident, but who had nothing whatsoever to do with the making of the changes or the taking of the precautions thereafter.

"The general rule which is supported by the overwhelming preponderance of authority is that evidence of repairs or alterations or of precautions taken after an accident is not admissible either to prove antecedent negligence, or as an admission of negligence. Early cases in several states, notably, California, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, New York, Pennsylvania, Utah and Washington held to the contrary, but these cases were overruled by later ones in all of these jurisdictions. In Kansas alone is the admissibility of such evidence settled." Annotation: "Admissibility of evidence of repairs, change of conditions, or precautions taken after accident", 170 A.L.R. 7, 8, 9; See also 20 Am.Jur. 267–268, § 282; 31 C.J.S. Evidence § 291, p. 1054.

1. Counsel in this case anticipated the issue of law here involved, and made it a subject of discussion with the judge in chambers prior to the beginning of the trial. In the course of this conference in chambers, the respective positions of the parties were fully stated and there was a discussion of the decisions in Daggett v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 48 Cal.2d 655, 313 P.2d 557; Inyo Chemical Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 525, 55 P.2d 850, and Hatfield v. Levy Brothers, 18 Cal.2d 798, 117 P.2d 841.

California's adherence to the prevailing general rule and the considerations of policy which underlie it are indicated by the following from Daggett v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 48 Cal.2d 655, 660–661, 313 P.2d 557, 560: "It is the general rule in this state that evidence of precautions taken and repairs made after the happening of the accident is not admissible to show a negligent condition at the time of the accident. Helling v. Schindler, 145 Cal. 303, 78 P. 710; Church v. Headrick & Brown, 101 Cal.App.2d 396, 413, 225 P.2d 558. The reason for the rule was well stated in Sappenfield v. Main St. etc. R. R. Co., 91 Cal. 48, 62, 27 P. 590: 'It would be unjust to hold that because the employer seeks by all the aid he gets from the light of experience to make the implement free from danger he is therefore to be charged with negligence in the use of all prior appliances, even though they were adopted with the best light then at his control. * * * He may have exercised all the care which the law requires, and yet in the light of a new experience, after an unexpected accident has occurred, he may adopt additional safeguards. To hold that the adoption of such new appliances which experience has demonstrated are more efficient than those previously in use, or which invention has developed from observing the defects in those originally adopted, shall be an admission that he was negligent prior thereto would prevent the very conduct in employers which they should be urged to follow.'"

It is well recognized by all the authorities that there are certain valid exceptions to the general rule above stated. McCormick, Evidence, 544, § 252; Annotation: "Evidence of precautions after accident", 170 A.L.R. 36. An exception to the general rule of inadmissibility recognized in California is that in appropriate circumstances evidence of subsequent precautions or repairs may properly be admitted when it tends to impeach the testimony of a witness. Daggett v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., supra, 48 Cal.2d 655, 661, 313 P.2d 557; Hatfield v. Levy Brothers, 18 Cal.2d 798, 809–810, 117 P.2d 841; Inyo Chemical Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 525, 543–544, 55 P.2d 850.

As justification for the ruling presently under review, respondent seeks to invoke the last mentioned exception to the general rule, that is to say, she contends that in the instant case the evidence of subsequent changes or precautions tended to impeach the testimony of the witness Lammers.

The generally recognized grounds of impeachment and the methods by which a witness may be impeached are well known. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1847, 2051 and 2052; see Witkin, California Evidence, 685, § 640; McCormick, Evidence, 62, § 33 et seq.; 3 Wigmore, Evidence, 362, § 874 et seq. The instant case requires a consideration of only two of the recognized methods of impeachment since no other has been invoked, either in the arguments of respondent or in any of the decisions cited by her: (1) by proof that at some other time the witness has made statements or has conducted himself in a manner evincing a belief inconsistent with the fact or belief asserted on the witness stand; (2) by contradictory evidence. We are unable to perceive how any other method or form of impeachment could possibly be involved or be asserted to be applicable here. Accordingly, let us separately consider these two recognized methods of impeachment and inquire whether either of them was properly utilized by respondent when she offered the evidence in question for the purpose of impeaching the witness Lammers.

(1) Impeachment by evidence of previous conduct inconsistent with the fact or belief asserted by the witness on the stand. Impeachment by evidence of precautions taken after an accident has been held proper in cases where the witness himself authorized, recommended, approved, directed, or supervised the making, or himself made the subsequent repair, alteration or change of procedure. It is readily apparent that the trier of the facts might reasonably consider such conduct on the part of the witness to be inconsistent with his testimony that in his opinion, or according to his observation, the condition existing before the change was safe or free from defect. As we shall demonstrate shortly, this was the nature of the impeaching evidence held admissible in the cases relied upon by respondent. Hatfield v. Levy Brothers, supra, 18 Cal.2d 798, 809–810, 117 P.2d 841; Inyo Chemical Co. v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 5 Cal.2d 525, 543–544, 55 P.2d 850; Daggett v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., supra, 48 Cal.2d 655, 313 P.2d 557, with respect to one of the two witnesses involved in Daggett.

But, manifestly, the fact that after the accident some unidentified person other than the witness directed or authorized alterations affords no basis for the utilization of the method of impeachment now under consideration. The witness Lammers had absolutely nothing to do with installing or ordering the installation of the abrasive strips. There was no evidence of conduct on his part which was in the slightest degree inconsistent with any observation or belief to which he testified.

Although it seems clearly to beg the question, the following statement from respondent's brief confirms our observations in regard to the matter presently under discussion: "The purpose of impeachment in the instant case was not to show prior inconsistent acts or statements, but rather to impeach his testimony." (Emphasis added.) And the following expressions of respondent's counsel in the course of a discussion in chambers of the trial judge are illuminating: "He [Lammers] has testified that in his opinion it wasn't slippery. Now, if that is a fact that that is his opinion, then whether or not his opinion is entitled to any weight I think that we are entitled to show for impeachment purposes that his opinion was not substantiated by others and therefore is of little weight. Now, this is a common method of impeachment, and if you will look at the Inyo case, Inyo v. City of Los Angeles, I think that's exactly what happened in that case." (Emphasis added.)

That the last quoted statement of respondent's counsel betrays a misconception of the basis for the ruling in the Inyo case is apparent from the following language of that decision holding that the trial court did not commit reversible error in connection with plaintiff's cross-examination of defendant's witness Van Norman (5 Cal.2d 525, at page 543, 55 P.2d 850, at page 858): "This witness was employed in the construction of the aqueduct and was in charge of maintenance and operation. On direct examination he testified to his inspection in 1921 of the territory surrounding the canyon where the break subsequently occurred, and declared that it was his opinion at that time that no overhead or underground drainage was necessary. On cross-examination he was asked whether he had authorized the construction of a large number of spillways after the break, and defendant's objection to the question was overruled. Defendant points to the settled rule that changes made or precautions taken after an accident are not admissible to show negligence at the time of the accident. Counsel for plaintiff, however, made it clear that this questioning was not directed to the issue of negligence, but was for the purpose of weakening the testimony of defendant's expert witness by showing that he had subsequently changed his opinion as to the necessity of drainage." (Emphasis added.)

(2) Impeachment by contradictory evidence. As Wigmore[2] and McCormick[3] have pointed out, impeachment by contradiction may be accomplished either by eliciting a contradictory fact on cross-examination or by calling other witnesses in rebuttal. The contradictory evidence may be either direct or circumstantial. But all the authorities seem to take for granted the truism that the contradictory evidence must be competent evidence.

Applying these principles specifically to the instant problem, the fact that abrasive strips were applied to the steps after the accident can be regarded as admissible to contradict the observation of the witness Lammers only if we accept the premise that proof of this fact constitutes competent evidence tending to prove that before the abrasive strips were applied, the steps were slippery, that is to say, unsafe.

But the authorities agree that, absent special circumstances justifying an exception, evidence of subsequent precautions is not competent to prove lack of safety in the antecedent condition. While Wigmore seems to rest the exclusionary rule largely on the ground of lack of relevancy,[4] McCormick treats it as a rule of privilege, emphasizing "* * * the very urgent policy against discouraging the taking of safety measures."[5] The language of Sappenfield v. Main St. etc. R. R. Co., 91 Cal. 48, 27 P. 590, quoted with approval in Daggett v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 48 Cal. 2d 655, 660–661, 313 P.2d 557, seems to ground the exclusionary rule upon considerations of policy as well as upon lack of probative value or materiality. And Witkin[6] puts the matter as follows:

"(1) Rule and Theory of Exclusion. In a negligence case the question at issue is whether the defendant exercised due care at the time of the injury to plaintiff, in the light of existing knowledge or notice of the circumstances. When an accident occurs, new knowledge is gained of possible risks, and the defendant may, to avoid future harm, make repairs or improvements or practice additional safety measures. Taking such subsequent precautions in the light of knowledge later acquired may not be relevant on the issue of negligence at the earlier time; and, even if its relevancy is conceded, the effect of allowing the evidence would be to discourage persons from engaging in such highly beneficial activity. Accordingly, either on grounds of irrelevancy or public policy, the evidence is excluded on the issue of negligence. (Helling v. Schindler, 1904, 145 Cal. 303, 312, 78 P. 710; Gorman v. Sacramento, 1928, 92 Cal. App. 656, 268 P. 1083; Unif. Rule 51; 2 Wigmore, § 283; 9 Hastings L.J. 316; 170 A.L.R. 7.)"

It seems perfectly obvious that to affirm the admissibility of the evidence of subsequent changes and precautions to impeach (contradict) testimony of the character given by the witness Lammers in this case would be completely to nullify the general rule and reduce it to nothing more than an empty shell. If the present ruling were to be sustained, then the clearest dictates of logic would require a holding in the next case that the same impeaching (contradictory) type of evidence here elicited on cross-examination may properly be elicited from witnesses called in rebuttal. Such a holding would mean that whenever a defendant in this type of case calls any witness to testify to any observation tending to prove the safety of, or the lack of danger or defectiveness in, his premises at the time of an accident, the door is automatically opened to plaintiff to prove (by way of impeachment) every subsequent repair made or precaution taken. Indeed the defendant could not avoid this result merely by refraining from calling any witness for the purpose of proving the safety of his premises, because plaintiff could call his employees for cross-examination under section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, and thereafter impeach them in the same manner.

4. 2 Wigmore, Evidence, 151 § 283.

5. McCormick, Evidence, 543 § 252; 159, § 77.

6. Witkin, California Evidence, 187, § 167.

As we have seen, the general rule is almost universally followed. We regard it as sound and salutary. We decline to nullify it by giving our sanction to any such exception as the instant case would require us to embrace. If the exclusionary rule is to be abolished, it ought to be done forthrightly rather than by the slow and painful "whittling" process of extending and attempting to justify illogical exceptions. We are in accord with the view expressed by McCormick in the following passage:

> "As suggested above, the extrinsic policy of encouraging remedial safety measures is the predominant reason for holding evidence of such measures to be privileged. It is apparent that the free admission of such evidence for purposes other than as admissions of negligence is likely to defeat this paramount policy. It is submitted that before admitting the evidence for any of these other purposes, the court should be satisfied that the issue on which it is offered is of substantial importance and is actually, and not merely formally in dispute, that the plaintiff cannot establish the fact to be inferred conveniently by other proof, and consequently that the need for the evidence outweighs the danger of its misuse." McCormick, Evidence, 545, § 252.

We have shown that respondent's position is not sustained by the decision in Inyo Chemical Co. v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 5 Cal.2d 525, 55 P.2d 850. There sanction was given to the impeachment of the opinion of an expert witness by proof of conduct on his part which could be construed as indicating that he entertained a different opinion at another time. Likewise, in Hatfield v. Levy Brothers, supra, 18 Cal.2d 798, 117 P.2d 841, it was the act of the witness in ordering discontinuance of the practice of waxing certain floors which was regarded as having a tendency to impeach his testimony that there was nothing wrong with the floor. Similarly, in Daggett v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., supra, 48 Cal.2d 655, 313 P.2d 557, 560, one of the witnesses sought to be impeached was an expert witness who had voiced a rather extravagant opinion that the signal in place at the time of the accident "was the safest type of a signal." It was there held proper to impeach such an opinion by showing that the defendant had acceded to a request of the Public Utilities Commission in replacing a single wigwag signal with flashing light signals of a different type.

The second of the witnesses in Daggett, supra, was the motorman who was operating the train at the time of the accident. During the course of an intensive and comprehensive examination by plaintiff's counsel the witness was understood to testify that the railroad speed limit was 90 miles per hour at the time of the trial. Daggett, supra, 48 Cal.2d at pages 659–660, 313 P. 2d 557. Counsel for plaintiff was then permitted to question the witness and establish that in fact the speed limit at the time of trial had been lowered from 90 to 50 miles per hour. In Daggett, this questioning was held proper as impeachment in the form of contradiction by showing that "* * * the facts testified to by such witnesses were not the true facts. * * *" Daggett, supra, 48 Cal.2d at page 665, 313 P.2d at page 563. In the instant case Mr. Lammers never suggested that repairs had not been made; he merely testified that he had not ordered or installed the adhesive strips, and the question asked of him by plaintiff's counsel would not show that the witnesses had testified incorrectly.

The holding in Daggett, supra, with respect to the latitude properly allowed in the cross-examination of an expert witness stands upon much the same footing as the holding in the more recent case of Laird v. T. W. Mather, Inc., 51 Cal.2d 210, 331 P.2d 617, 622, 623. In the last cited case, defendant's expert witness volunteered the broad statement that in his opinion the stairway in question conformed to standard engineering practice "anywhere in the world." The Supreme Court held that "The trial court did not err in permitting the plaintiff to inquire into the basis for this opinion nor to counter the effect of the witness' broad statement by attempting to show that it was not correct." Thus, it is clear that the facts involved in the Laird and Daggett cases were entirely different from those here presented.

Finally, we must reject respondent's argument that the form of objection made by appellant in the trial court was insufficient to preserve its right to a review of the ruling. Prior to the time when appellant's objection to the particular question was interposed, there had been a thorough discussion of the matter both in chambers and at the bench. Thus, the trial judge had been fully apprised of the respective contentions of the parties with respect to the admissibility of the evidence in question and the specific grounds of the objection.

v.

Henry Victor PREWITT, Defendant and Respondent.*

Cr. 6393.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 12, 1959.

Hearing Granted March 11, 1959.

Proceeding on motion by defendant to dismiss indictment on ground that he had been indicted without reasonable or probable cause. From an order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Mark Brandler, J., setting aside the indictment, the state appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where police officer, who had on three previous occasions received information by telephone from an unknown person whose voice he recognized, and on each occasion information proved to be reliable, officer, who received a telephone call from such unknown person informing officer that bookmaking was being conducted in a certain apartment, had reasonable cause for believing that a felony was being committed although officer did not know informant but only recognized his voice as that of a person from whom he had received such prior reliable information, and arrest made in reliance on such information was valid, and evidence procured in course of search was sufficient to sustain indictment.

Order reversed and defendant's motion to augment the record denied.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an indictment returned by the Grand Jury of Los Angeles County, defendant was accused in Count I of violating subdivision 1, Section 337a of the Penal Code in that he unlawfully engaged in poolselling and bookmaking on horse races. Count II alleged the violation of subdivision 2 of the aforesaid section of the Penal Code, in that defendant occupied an apartment for the purpose of recording bets on horse races. Upon his arraignment, defendant made a motion under Section 995 of the Penal Code to set aside the indictment on the ground that he had been indicted without reasonable or probable cause. The motion was granted and the case dismissed. From the order setting aside the indictment, the People prosecute this appeal.

[1] We regard the following as a fair epitome of the evidence presented to the Grand Jury and upon which the indictment herein was returned. Joseph S. Deiro testified he was a police officer of the city of Los Angeles, attached to the Administrative Vice Division. That in January or February of 1958 he received a telephone call and talked to a man with whom he had spoken on the telephone before. The officer recognized the voice of his caller and had previously had telephone conversations with him, although he did not know the person's name, nor had he ever known it, but he had talked to him on three previous occasions. We deem it unnecessary to detail the three previous conversations had by the officer with this unknown person. Insofar as here pertinent and as affecting the reliability of information given to Officer Deiro, we quote the following from his testimony before the Grand Jury:

"Q. (By Mr. Ritzi, Deputy District Attorney): So, in other words, in four separate cases, (presumably including the instant one) this informant whom you don't know but whose voice you recognize over the telephone has given you information that has resulted in arrests, is that correct? A. That is correct.

"Q. All right. Now, let me ask you this, sir: At the time that you received the telephone call in the latter part of January or the early part of February of this year, did you feel that that was reasonable for believing a person subsequently arrested to have committed a felony? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And did you feel that this person had committed a felony? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. I see, and is that what you relied on, sir? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. All right. And you felt that was a charge made on reasonable cause, is that correct, sir? A. That is correct."

With regard to the arrest of defendant herein, Officer Deiro testified that in the aforesaid telephone call received in the latter part of January or early part of February, 1958, his informant advised him that bookmaking was being conducted in Apartment 401 at 248 South Western Avenue, in the city of Los Angeles, that this was what is called a "back office", wherein a person on the telephone was calling "relay spots" and "taking off" bets from the relay spots and permanently recording them at this so-called back office. On February 20, 1958 the officer went to the aforesaid premises where there was located a four-story, multiple unit apartment house; it is a large brick building with entrances on Western Avenue. At approximately 1:25 p. m., Officer Deiro and his partners, Sergeant May and Sergeant Bennett, went to this location. Sergeant May was directed to go to the door of Apartment 401 and to stand by there until Officer Deiro arrived. Officer Deiro and Sergeant Bennett then went to the manager's apartment which was located on the second floor. The officer contacted a Mr. Hooker, identified himself and advised him that he (the officer) was about to make an arrest in Apartment 401. The officer asked Hooker if he had a key to this apartment so that they could enter without damaging the door and Mr. Hooker gave him the key to Apartment 401. The officer then went up to the fourth floor and after arriving at Apartment 401, they inserted the key into the lock, turned the key, and opened the door slowly. The door opened approximately two inches where it was restrained by a night latch. The officer "then forced the latch and entered the apartment", and immediately entered the room to his right where he observed a male Caucasian standing in the middle of the room. This person was defendant Henry Victor Prewitt.

As Officer Deiro entered this room, he observed to his left on a table a professional type bookmaking rack, a photograph of which was marked Grand Jury Exhibit 1, and in the photograph is a table with a rack on it, a phone and a television set, together with numerous "betting markers". This was the condition of the premises at the time Officer Deiro entered, with the exception of the bundles which appeared on the table. Those bundles were found in a metal box and placed upon the table for the purposes of identification in the photograph. Other than that, the rack with the professional type betting markers, the telephone and the scratch sheet were at this location as "this picture signifies".

In regard to "these" other bundles of professional betting markers, this particular box was to the right of the chair or between the chair and the television set; was opened up and was plainly visible at the time of entry.

Upon entering, Officer Deiro identified himself to Mr. Prewitt and placed him under arrest for suspicion of bookmaking. He asked the defendant, "How long have you been making book here?" and he stated, "Just a little while". He then stated, "I don't want to answer any more questions until I see an attorney as they might incriminate me". The officer asked him if he had a federal wage and tax stamp and the defendant stated, "No". He was asked why he registered at this location under the name of Roy Rose, but did not answer, and when asked where he lived, he stated at 729 Verdugo Road in Glendale.

Officer Deiro had been on the vice squad for approximately three years and during that time had made approximately two to three hundred bookmaking arrests. He is familiar with the way bookmaking is carried on in the city of Los Angeles.

The officer described the aforesaid term "back office" as follows: It would have either one, two or more front offices. In this front office they would hire a person to answer the phone. The bookmaker or agent would give the telephone number of the front office, or relay spot, to the bettor and the bettor would call this number, giving an identification code; the person at the relay spot will accept the wager and make a temporary recordation of it. Just prior to post time of each race, the back office will call the front office, or relay spot, and will accept all the wagers that the person in the front office has accepted to that time. The back office will then make a permanent recordation of these wagers and the clerk in the front office will then erase the recordation from the front office. This operation is used so as not to lose the records of wagers for that day inasmuch as many relay spots are "taken" by the police department. The type of operation shown by Grand Jury Exhibit I was a "back office" to a relay spot or a group of relay spots, in the opinion of the officer.

Officer Deiro searched Mr. Prewitt and found a key, which was marked Grand Jury Exhibit No. II, in his pocket with some other keys. His key, Exhibit II, was tried in the door of Apartment 401 and it locked and unlocked the same.

Grand Jury Exhibit III appears to be a rack that is commonly referred to as a professional type betting marker. The bookmaker at the back office will insert cards into these slots (indicating) with the identification of the bettors and the agents, and upon receiving the information from the relay spot will pick out the card pertaining to that particular bettor, record the bets, and insert it back into the slot. Exhibit III was found by the officer on the table to his left as he entered the premises. It was opened up and about three-quarters filled with betting markers.

In the photograph (presumably Exhibit I) there appears to be some bundles. Those bundles were betting markers for the prior day's bettings. Officer Deiro had with him nine bundles, each of the bundles wrapped in a National Daily Reporter. All of these bundles were marked as Grand Jury Exhibit IV.

The National Daily Reporter is a publication which is published daily except Sunday which lists the horses, jockeys, probable odds, post positions, and handicaps of horses of various tracks throughout the United States for that day. "Scratch sheet" is the common name used for this publication in bookmaking circles.

Each of "these bundles" contains professional type betting markers and from these bundles, which are Grand Jury Exhibit No. IV, the officer tallied the betting that was taking place. There would be "hundreds and hundreds" of bets recorded every day and on the majority of days the amount of the bets would range in excess of $5,000. The officer described and explained the use of other bookmaking paraphernalia found in the room and which testimony need not be here narrated.

Defendant told the officer that he had rented this apartment some two and a half years ago.

Police Officer Jerry L. May, also attached to the Administrative Vice Division, identified Grand Jury Exhibit IX as a little black address book which he took off of the person of defendant Prewitt. The latter told him that it was his personal notebook and, among other things, stated that it was his personal book and that he had written all the names and addresses in the book. The officer also identified Grand Jury Exhibit X which had two handwriting cards. At the time, Officer May requested that the defendant make the cards out. He refused to do so, stating that he felt that this would be detrimental to whether he would be found guilty or not in the bookmaking case. He was then asked to just fill out the pertinent information and he refused to fill out the capitals and the small letters of the alphabet, and the numbers. He was of the opinion if he filled this portion in this would be incriminating to himself. The defendant wrote on the front of both cards "the information is from one to ten". He filled them in in his handwriting on the two cards and all of the handwriting on the two cards except the name "J. L. May" and the inked notations are in his handwriting.

The officer was present with Officer Deiro when the arrest was made at 248 South Western Avenue, Apartment 401.

Lawrence W. Sloan is an Examiner of Questionable Documents employed by the Los Angeles Police Department. After testifying to his qualifications, which include studies and testimony before other courts and grand juries approximately nine hundred fifty or sixty times, he was shown Grand Jury Exhibit No. X, which appears to be two handwriting cards and two professional type betting markers which are a part of Grand Jury Exhibit V and a small black notebook which is Grand Jury Exhibit No. IX together with a group of five ABC type betting markers which compose Grand Jury Exhibit No. VIII. The witness testified that he had examined them before on the 17th of March, 1958; that the main examination of the writing on these various exhibits was to determine whether or not Exhibits V and VIII were written by the same person who wrote the penciled writing on the two handwriting cards, Exhibit X, on lines one through fifteen, and the penciled writing appearing in Exhibit IX. As a result of that examination, it was the opinion of the witness that the penciled writings appearing on the two yellow pieces of paper marked Exhibit V, the penciled writing appearing upon the five pieces of paper marked Exhibit VIII were written by the same person responsible for the penciled writings found in Exhibit IX and on the two handwriting exemplar cards, Exhibit X. The witness further testified as to a portion of Exhibit VIII, which was bound by an elastic band, that they appear to be a portion of approximately 100 such instruments that he examined beginning March 17, 1958. He had the opportunity to glance over them and without going particularly through each one he was fairly certain that they are the same group and in all probability were written by the same person responsible for the writing on Exhibits IX and X.

The primary question presented to us on this appeal is whether a police officer has reasonable cause to believe that a felony is being committed in an apartment at a designated address, when prior to the arrest of the person at such place, the officer received information by telephone from a person, who on three previous occasions gave information to said officer by telephone, which information on each occasion proved to be reliable, although the officer did not know the informant, but recognized his voice as that of the person from whom the officer had received such prior information. It is conceded that the question is one of first impression. It is, however, the contention of the People that such information was received from a reliable informant, and established reasonable cause for the arrest of defendant in the case at bar. That therefore, the search and seizure being incident thereto, was valid.

[2, 3] Reasonable cause has been defined by our Supreme Court as such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe, or entertain an honest, strong suspicion, that the person in question is guilty of a crime (People v. Kilvington, 104 Cal. 86, 92, 37 P. 799). Probable cause has been defined as a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true (People v. Brite, 9 Cal.2d 666, 687, 72 P.2d 122; Bompensiero v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 178, 184, 281 P.2d 250; United States v. Bell, D.C., 48 F.Supp. 986; Cook v. Singer Sewing Machine Co., 138 Cal.App. 418, 422, 32 P.2d 430). "There is no formula for the determination of reasonableness. Each case is to be decided on its own facts and circumstances." Go-Bart Importing Co. v. United States, 282 U.S. 344, 357, 51 S.Ct. 153, 158, 75 L.Ed. 374.

[4] In considering the question of reasonable or probable cause upon the part of the officer to arrest respondent, we are to look only at the facts and circumstances presented to the officer at the time he acted.

Applying the foregoing rules to the facts of the case now engaging our attention, we think it must be held that Officer Deiro had reasonable cause to believe that respondent may have been engaged in the commission of a felony.

[5, 6] It is true, as urged by respondent, that the Supreme Court in the case of Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 294, 294 P.2d 36, 38, in discussing the subject of search and seizure without benefit of a warrant, said: "Although information provided by an anonymous informer is relevant on the issue of reasonable cause, in the absence of some pressing emergency, see People v. Kilvington, 104 Cal. 86, 92–93, 37 P. 799, 43 Am.St.Rep. 73, an arrest may not be based solely on such information, (citing cases), and evidence must be presented to the court that would justify the conclusion that reliance on the information was reasonable. See, People v. Boyles, supra, 45 Cal.2d 652, 656, 290 P.2d 535." However, in the cited case it was held (46 Cal.2d at page 295, 294 P.2d at page 38) that evidence to justify the conclusion that reliance on the information was reasonable may be supplied by past experience with the informer. The Willson case is dissimilar to the case at bar in that in the former the San Diego police had had no previous experience with the unknown informer, while in the instant case there was presented to the grand jury evidence of Officer Deiro's successful past experience with the informer. A reliable informant has been defined as a person whose information has in the past led the police to valid suspects (People v. Dewson, 150 Cal. App.2d 119, 128, 310 P.2d 162). As was said in People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, 656, 290 P.2d 535, 537: "* * * reasonable cause to justify an arrest may consist of information obtained from others and is not limited to evidence that would be admissible at the trial on the issue of guilt."

In the case of People v. Penson, 148 Cal. App.2d 537, 539, 307 P.2d 24, 25, it was held that a valid arrest may be made solely by reason of information communicated by a reliable informant as above defined herein. In the case just cited, the court stated: "* * * The officers' appraisal of the informant's reliability was based upon the truthfulness of prior reports from this person which they had verified upon investigation." And in Trowbridge v. Superior Court, 144 Cal.App.2d 13, 23, 300 P.2d 222, 229, this court said: "* * * that it is not the number of informers involved but the reliability of the informant and reasonableness of the information supplied which should count the most with the officer in making up his mind what to do." Under the facts and circumstances here present we entertain no doubt that the reliability of the informant was established.

[7] That the officer's recognition of the informant's voice is competent evidence and a circumstance to be considered in the matter of identification is firmly established. "Identity of a person is permitted by evidence solely of recognition of a voice" (People v. Glab, 15 Cal.App.2d 120, 123, 59 P.2d 195, 197). "It is universally recognized that the voice as well as the physical appearance of a person, is a means by which identification is made possible * * * Therefore testimony relating to the identity of the voice is competent, its probative value being a question of fact for the jury" (People v. Mullins, 145 Cal.App.2d 667, 670, 303 P.2d 58, 60).

The apprehension of respondent that to justify his arrest would open the door to police officers to utilize fictitious informants in order to perpetrate illegal searches and seizures is answered by the court in Lorenzen v. Superior Court, 150 Cal.App.2d 506, at page 510, 310 P.2d 180, at page 183, wherein it is stated: "An additional contention made by petitioner is answered in People v. Garnett, supra, 148 Cal.App. 2d 280, at page 284, 306 P.2d 571, at page 574: 'Appellant assumes that police officers would, to suit their convenience, make use of fictitious informants as bases for illegal searches and seizures. Such assumption is unauthorized and is contrary to statutory presumptions that official duty has been regularly performed and that the law has been obeyed. * * * When an officer has in good faith testified that he had acted upon the information of an unnamed person and that such informant was reliable, he has thereby established a firm basis for his search of a suspect's premises. Pen. Code, sec. 836. * * * So long as the good faith of the arresting officer with respect to the reliability of his informant satisfies the scrutiny of the trial judge, he is in substantially the same position as if he had come with a warrant of arrest.'" See also, People v. Boyd, 162 Cal.App.2d 332, 327 P.2d 913.

Respondent relies heavily upon the case of Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39. To us it appears that this case does not aid him. In the Priestly case, an "information" charged defendant with possession of narcotics. At the preliminary examination, an officer testified that acting solely on the information from two informers, he and another officer went to defendant's apartment and knocked on the door. After some ten minutes defendant opened the door, whereupon the officers placed him under arrest and searched his person and the apartment. They found narcotics upon his person and in a dresser drawer. The arrest and search were made without a warrant. Defendant contended "this testimony was not competent since he objected to it, demanding that the identity of the informers be disclosed or the officer's testimony be struck." The Supreme Court held that the communications of the informers was material to the issue of reasonable cause to make the arrest and search. Defendant's motion that the identity of the informant be disclosed or the officer's testimony be struck was denied by the magistrate and he was held to answer. When arraigned in the superior court defendant moved to set aside the "information" on the ground that the evidence against him was obtained by illegal search and seizure. Upon the denial of his motion defendant sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from further proceedings on the "information". The writ was granted.

In the case now before us, it is not an "information" but an "indictment" which accuses respondent Prewitt of the offense of bookmaking. The latter moved to set aside the "indictment" under Section 995 of the Penal Code and his motion was granted.

In the Priestly case, supra, what the Supreme Court held was, as stated by respondent, "* * * that it was error to deny the defendant the right to learn who the informant was". Since we are here concerned with an "indictment", and not an "information", we consider as pertinent to the question confronting us, the following language of Mr. Justice Spence in his dissenting opinion in the Priestly case, supra, 50 Cal.2d at page 824, 330 P.2d at page 47: "If the above-mentioned testimony had been introduced before a grand jury and petitioner had thereafter been charged by indictment, there would be no question concerning the jurisdiction of the superior court to proceed with the trial of petitioner. In that case, petitioner could not have complained because he had not been present when the testimony was taken before the grand jury and, of course, he would have had no opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses or to demand the disclosure of the names of any informers." (Emphasis added.)

[8, 9] As was said in Lorenson v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 49, 55, 216 P.2d 859, 863, "An indictment is but an accusation, presented by the grand jury to a competent court, charging a person with a public offense. (Cases cited.) The duty of determining whether or not an indictment should be found is lodged exclusively in the grand jury and not in the courts. The Legislature has stated that duty as follows: 'The grand jury ought to find an indictment when all the evidence before them, taken together, if unexplained or uncontradicted, would, in their judgment, warrant a conviction by a trial jury.' Pen.Code, sec. 921; emphasis added. A court may not substitute its judgment as to the weight of the evidence for that of the grand jury. 'If there is some evidence to support the indictment, the courts will not inquire into its sufficiency [cases cited].'" (Emphasis added.)

[10] It has been held that when an indictment does not rest upon arbitrary action, and some rational ground is revealed by the evidence adduced affording some rational ground for the possibility that the person named in the indictment is guilty, the courts will not act to prevent a trial of the accused (Mold v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 73, 75, 216 P.2d 874).

We are not here concerned with an appeal from a judgment of conviction following a trial. We of course do not know what evidence may be presented at the trial, if one is held—whether the officer will then know the identity of his informant and disclose or refuse to disclose the same, but we do hold that upon return of the indictment herein the superior court had jurisdiction to proceed with a trial thereon, and the ultimate decision on the admissibility of the officer's testimony can be made at the trial on the basis of all of the evidence bearing on the issue.

Motion to Augment the Record

[11, 12] Respondent has filed a motion to augment the record herein by adding thereto the minutes of the Municipal Court of Los Angeles Judicial District in Case No. 143900 entitled People of the State of California v. Henry Victor Prewitt, and to further add to the record on appeal a certified copy of the complaint filed in the aforesaid court on March 3, 1958, wherein respondent was accused of violating Section 337a of the Penal Code. The motion is accompanied by an affidavit of Russell E. Parsons, Esq., one of counsel for respondent, wherein it is set forth that the defendant named in the municipal court action is respondent herein, and that the charge contained in the indictment in the instant case is the identical charge contained in the aforesaid complaint filed in the municipal court. That after a preliminary examination, at which time substantially the same evidence was presented to the judge presiding at said preliminary examination, "said case was dismissed by reason of the fact that the evidence had been unlawfully obtained, in violation of the rules laid down in the case of People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, 50 A.L.R.2d 513."

We are satisfied that respondent's contention that the doctrine of res judicata is applicable to the instant proceeding cannot be sustained and that the records of the municipal court are not germane to the issues presented on this appeal. While it is true, as urged by respondent, that the doctrine has been applied to criminal cases in this state, it was always under different circumstances (People v. Joseph, 153 Cal.App.2d 548, 551, 552, 314 P.2d 1004, and cases therein cited). In effect, respondent argues that after an accused is discharged at the preliminary examination, unless new and different evidence is offered before a grand jury or another committing magistrate, the decision of the magistrate becomes, as it were, the law of the case and is res judicata. The same contention was advanced in the case of People v. Joseph, supra, 153 Cal.App.2d at pages 550, 551, 314 P.2d at pages 1005, 1006, and rejected. The factual background present in the case just cited is strikingly similar to that in the case at bar and we are persuaded that the holding in that case is determinative of respondent's contention herein. In the Joseph case, supra, following the dismissal of two complaints filed against the accused, the same evidence was presented to the grand jury and an indictment was returned. In that case this court said (153 Cal.App.2d at page 551, 314 P.2d at page 1006): "* * * We are satisfied that the doctrine of res judicata applies to prevent the relitigation of issues determined by a final judgment in a prior action between the same parties. In the case now engaging our attention, however, appellant's argument for application of the doctrine of res judicata fails for two reasons. First, the orders of dismissal entered by the municipal court judges were not appealable (Pen.Code, secs. 1237, 1238). Secondly, in an unbroken line of decisions in this state it has been held that the results of proceedings prior to trial in criminal actions are not res judicata." (Citing cases.) See also People v. Beltran, 94 Cal.App.2d 197, 202–205, 210 P.2d 238.

Respondent relies heavily upon the case of Coffey v. United States, 116 U.S. 436, 6 S.Ct. 437, 441, 29 L.Ed. 684, which was a case involving a judgment of acquittal in a criminal prosecution for a violation of Internal Revenue laws, and the court held it was conclusive in favor of the defendant as claimant of the property involved in a subsequent suit in rem, when, as against him, the existence of the same act or fact involved in a criminal prosecution is in issue as a cause for the forfeiture of such property. That case, however, in our opinion, does not aid respondent, because therein it was held that, "(T)he judgment of a court of concurrent jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, as a plea, in bar, or as evidence, conclusive, between the same parties, upon the same matter directly in question in another court; and the judgment of a court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, in like manner, conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another court for a different purpose. In the present case the court is the same court, and had jurisdiction, and the judgment was directly on the point now involved, and between the same parties." (Emphasis added.) In the case here under consideration we do not have a prior judgment by a court of concurrent jurisdiction. As was said in People v. Brite, supra, 9 Cal.2d 666, 683, 684, 72 P.2d 122, 131: "A justice of the peace, when acting as a court, is given the power of trying causes and rendering judgments of imprisonment upon conviction, but, when acting as a magistrate in the preliminary examination of a person accused by deposition of a public offense, he has no such power. The full limit of his power is, after examination, to hold the accused to answer at trial, unless from the examination it appears that no offense has been committed or there is not sufficient cause to believe the defendant guilty of a public offense, in which event the magistrate must order the accused discharged." (Emphasis included.)

An examination of other cases cited by respondent reveals nothing in conflict with what we have herein stated.

The motion to augment the record is denied. The order from which this appeal was taken is reversed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Thomas Julius TOPHIA, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6318.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 9, 1959.

Prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon and murder. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, LeRoy Dawson, J., entered judgment of conviction of manslaughter and order denying motion for new trial and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that under record disclosing that defendant was carrying a loaded revolver which he used, in a crowded tavern, as a bludgeon in self-defense and gun fired sending bullet through tavern wall and killing deceased, there was no inconsistency in verdicts exonerating defendant on count charging assault with a deadly weapon, but finding defendant guilty of manslaughter.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐878(3)

In order for statute providing that an acquittal on one or more counts shall not be deemed an acquittal of any other count where prosecution has charged two or more offenses or the same offense in different counts to control, there cannot exist in the findings supporting verdicts any real factual inconsistency. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 954.

2. Homicide ⇐34

"Manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and to be involuntary it must have been done in commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or in commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner or without due caution or circumspection. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 2.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Manslaughter".

3. Homicide ⇐34

Where deadly force is threatened and deadly force is used by way of self-defense, requirement of involuntary manslaughter statute that killing be in commission of lawful act which might produce death is met. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 2.

4. Homicide ⇐34

Where defendant in crowded tavern was advanced upon by party carrying a knife and defendant used loaded gun as a bludgeon to strike advancing party, in using loaded gun as a defense weapon defendant acted "without due caution and circumspection" within manslaughter statute defining as involuntary manslaughter the killing of another while doing a lawful act without due caution or circumspection. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 2.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Without Due Caution or Circumspection".

5. Homicide ⇐16

A loaded gun is so dangerous an instrument that a high degree of caution and circumspection is required of person handling it, and degree of care is even greater where weapon is handled in a crowded place, even though person carrying gun has no intention of using it. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 2.

6. Homicide ⇐16, 268

A "deadly weapon" is one likely to produce death or great bodily injury, but deadly character of weapon may depend upon manner in which it is used and in that case the determination of a weapon's character as deadly or not is one for the jury under proper instructions. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 245.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Deadly Weapon".

7. Homicide ⇐268

In prosecution for murder, question of whether or not defendant's use of loaded gun not as a firearm but as a club or bludgeon in self-defense constituted use of a deadly weapon was for the jury. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 245.

8. Assault and Battery ⇐50, 51

Where defendant, in order to protect himself from person advancing upon him, pulled out loaded gun which he used as a club, defendant upon pulling out gun had the "present ability" to commit a violent injury on person within assault statute, and when defendant used butt of gun to strike advancing person, a wrongful act committed by means of physical force against person of another occurred within battery statute. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 17, 192, subd. 2, 240–243.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Present Ability".

9. Homicide ⇐276

In prosecution for murder question of whether defendant in using loaded gun as a club to strike advancing person acted in self-defense presented a factual question for jury.

10. Criminal Law ⇐878(4)

In prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon and for murder, where record disclosed that defendant carrying loaded gun in crowded tavern, pulled the gun out in order to use the same as a club upon person advancing toward defendant, and upon striking such person with butt of gun, gun fired and bullet passed through wall of tavern and across street, where it killed deceased, there was no inconsistency in verdicts which acquitted defendant of assault with a deadly weapon but found defendant guilty of manslaughter. West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 187, 245.

Ellery E. Cuff, Public Defender, Richard F. Bird, James P. Nunnelley, Deputy Public Defenders, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Defendant was acquitted of assault with a deadly weapon upon James Wallis and convicted of manslaughter upon a charge of murder of Lela Glenn, for which he was sentenced to the state prison. It is from the judgment of conviction and order denying motion for new trial, defendant appeals.

The information charged defendant in two counts, the first alleging assault with a deadly weapon upon one Wallis, a felony, in violation of section 245, Penal Code; and the second, the murder of one Lela Glenn, as defined in section 187. Acquitting him on the first count, the jury on the second count found defendant guilty of manslaughter, a lesser but necessarily included offense in that of murder.

Appellant's sole ground for reversal is the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the conviction of manslaughter. He argues that since the jury acquitted him on count one charging assault with a deadly weapon, the two verdicts are inconsistent in that the verdict of not guilty nullified the element of assault necessary to sustain the guilty verdict on the manslaughter charge; and in view of this inconsistency, the conviction of manslaughter, if it is to stand, must be sustained by sufficient evidence apart from that bearing upon the charge of assault with a deadly weapon. He claims such evidence does not exist in the record before us.

Respondent contends that the verdicts are not inconsistent, and even viewed from appellant's position, the evidence is sufficient to support the conviction of manslaughter.

The record discloses that on a Sunday evening Lela Glenn was killed by a gunshot while praying in Mount Calvary Holiness Church. The bullet killing her was fired from a beer tavern across the street, and was discharged from a revolver in defendant's possession when he used it to strike Wallis on the side of the head.

Defendant had acquired the gun three weeks before as security on a loan. Two days before the homicide, the owner told defendant he could not pay him the money and authorized him to dispose of the gun to satisfy the debt. On Sunday, November 10, 1957, defendant decided to sell it, and being familiar with the kind of persons who frequent Bob's Place, a beer tavern, he went there between 12 and 1:30 p. m. for the purpose of finding someone to buy the gun.

When defendant first acquired the gun, he noticed it was loaded but did not touch it except to carry it home in a paper sack, in which it remained until he removed it to his pocket, on Sunday, and later to his belt, concealed by his coat, where he kept it until it was fired.

Defendant had known Mr. and Mrs. James Wallis for some years. At approximately 4 p. m., Mrs. Wallis entered the tavern. When her husband came in around 5:30, he approached his wife who was dancing with Sam Johnson, "snatched" her from him and "flung" her into defendant's arms. Defendant told him to let her alone and Wallis retaliated that it was none of his business. Words were exchanged among the four and Wallis left, saying he would be back. In about 35 minutes he returned and sat at the counter in the rear. The tavern was crowded. As defendant and a third man started to leave, Sam Johnson and Mrs. Wallis followed them. Wallis intercepted defendant approximately 5 feet from the door and said: "I told you that were my wife I were talking to." An argument ensued wherein defendant and Wallis called each other a "damn fool." Defendant testified Wallis approached him, opening a knife. Defendant said, "Negro, I will blow your brains out," and drew the gun from his belt, holding it by the handle. As Wallis came nearer, defendant swung the gun, hitting him on the left side of the head with the butt. As it struck Wallis it discharged, the bullet going through the boarded window of the tavern in a straight line across the street, through a wooden screen shielding the open doorway of the church, and entered Mrs. Glenn's head, killing her. Only one shot was fired. Immediately thereafter, defendant walked out of the tavern, backing out of the door, pointing the gun at the people inside. Outside, he threw the gun over a fence and was arrested a short time thereafter.

Defendant had been in the army and was familiar with army firearms, revolvers and pistols. He knew the gun was loaded but at no time opened it, took out the bullets, examined it, or tested it. He had no license to carry it.

At the trial, defendant testified he took the gun into Bob's Place for the sole purpose of selling it; he used it on Wallis only to defend himself against a deadly attack and neither cocked the gun, put his finger on the trigger, nor intended to fire it or use it other than as a club.

Appellant claims that since the jury, in acquitting him on count one, found the assault with a deadly weapon on Wallis did not occur, and since at the same time in convicting him of manslaughter the jury must have found that the assault did occur, the two findings are necessarily factually inconsistent. To remedy the situation appellant would have this court ignore the evidence he believes was rejected by the jury in finding him not guilty on count one and reverse the manslaughter conviction on the ground that the remaining evidence is insufficient to support it. He cites a variety of cases in which the reviewing court in one way or another refused to permit concurrent inconsistent decisions of fact and inconsistent verdicts to stand. In support of his argument he invokes the general principles underlying the doctrines of double jeopardy and res judicata.

Respondent cites section 954, Penal Code, which permits the prosecution to charge two or more different offenses, or the same offense in different counts; and which provides that "(a)n acquittal of one or more counts shall not be deemed an acquittal of any other count." It relies upon this section; People v. Ranney, 123 Cal. App. 403, 11 P.2d 405 and People v. Derenzo, 46 Cal.App.2d 411, 115 P.2d 858, involving various counts based upon separate transactions; and a line of cases beginning with People v. Amick, 20 Cal.2d 247, 125 P.2d 25, holding generally that under section 954, Penal Code, "an apparent inconsistency of verdicts arising from different interpretations of the same facts afford no basis for reversal of a conviction."

[1] It is obvious from the authorities cited that for section 954 to control in a situation such as the one at bar, there can exist in the findings supporting the verdicts no real factual inconsistency. In the cases in which the court has found a factual inconsistency, rules apart from that laid down in section 954 appear to have been applied. An example is found in the case of In re Johnston, 3 Cal.2d 32, 43 P. 2d 541, involving a conspiracy situation. Respondent therein argued that section 954 controlled. The court rejecting this contention and citing People v. Koehn, 207 Cal. 605, 279 P. 646, stated at page 36 of 3 Cal.2d at page 543 of 43 P.2d: "The section was manifestly adopted for the purpose of enabling the prosecutor to designate or name the offenses by two or more names or designations and of making it impossible for the defendant to escape by reason of an error in designation of the crime. The proviso was written into the section for the purpose of declaring the law that a verdict apparently inconsistent shall afford no basis for reversal where the evidence is sufficient to support the conclusion that defendant is guilty of the offense of which he stands convicted."

Appellant relies mainly upon People v. Novo, 12 Cal.App.2d 525, 55 P.2d 915, 56 P.2d 560, and People v. Bales, 74 Cal.App. 2d 732, 169 P.2d 262, holding that when two findings of fact are in irreconciliable conflict the one less favorable to defendant must be set aside. In People v. Novo, supra [12 Cal.App.2d 525, 55 P.2d 916], defendant was originally charged with burglary and assault with intent to commit rape and was convicted of both second degree burglary and the assault. Since a necessary element of first degree burglary was "an assault on any person" and he was exonerated of first degree burglary by the conviction of second degree burglary, and since the same assault was involved in the second count, the court held the conviction on the latter could not stand. In People v. Bales, supra, the court held a conviction of forcible rape to be inconsistent with an acquittal of kidnapping, in which a verdict of "not guilty" nullified the element of fact (force) necessary to sustain the verdict of guilt.

In determining whether the verdicts are inconsistent, in that the findings upon which they are based are in irreconciliable conflict as in the Bales and Novo cases; and if so, whether apart from the evidence rejected by the jury in acquitting defendant of assault with a deadly weapon, there was sufficient evidence to sustain the conviction of manslaughter, we resort to the entire record before us. Defendant herein was charged with two separate offenses involving two separate victims, there being no reason apparent on the face of the information why he could not be convicted on both counts. Defendant was acquitted of assault with a deadly weapon and convicted of involuntary manslaughter.

The "assault" element of the offense of assault with a deadly weapon as defined by section 245, Penal Code, consists of "an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another" (Sec. 240, Penal Code); and the weapon in such a felony assault must be a "deadly" one. Sec. 245, Penal Code.

[2] Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice and to be involuntary it must have been done "in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to a felony; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution or circumspection" (Sec. 192, subd. 2, Penal Code).

In acquitting defendant on the felony charge of assault with a deadly weapon, the jury could have found that he did or did not use a deadly weapon but that there was no assault, he having acted in self-defense; or the jury could have found that defendant did not act in self-defense, there being an assault, but that he did not use, as to Wallis, a "deadly weapon."

Regardless of its finding in connection with the kind of weapon used, if the jury predicated its acquittal upon the finding defendant acted in self-defense and hence there was no assault, inherent therein is also the finding that the act of defendant in defending himself was lawful. If, therefore, there is sufficient evidence in the record to justify a further finding that the act was such as might have produced death and that defendant acted "without due caution and circumspection," the conviction of involuntary manslaughter under section 192, subd. 2, Penal Code, must be upheld.

[4, 5] That defendant in using the loaded gun as a defense weapon, acted "without due caution and circumspection" is clear from the record, under the general rules governing the sufficiency of evidence to support a conviction. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681–682, 104 P.2d 778. It has repeatedly been held that a homicide resulting from the negligent handling of firearms may be manslaughter (People v. Carmen, 36 Cal.2d 768, 776, 228 P.2d 281). It is universally accepted that a loaded gun is so dangerous an instrument that a high degree of caution and circumspection is required of the person handling it. People v. Freudenberg, 121 Cal.App.2d 564, 263 P.2d 875, 885. "From the time of the common law, firearms were recognized as a dangerous instrumentality because of their great potential harm and in the interest of the preservation of human life and safety, a high degree of care was demanded of those who use them. (Citations.)" People v. Freudenberg, 121 Cal.App.2d at page 580, 263 P.2d at page 885, supra. The degree of care is even greater where the weapon is handled in a crowded place (People v. Sidwell, 29 Cal.App. 12, 21, 154 P. 290). This is true even though the person carrying the gun has no intention of using it (People v. Carmen, 36 Cal.2d 768, 228 P.2d 281). In the Carmen case, the court said at page 776 of 36 Cal.2d, at page 286 of 228 P.2d: "Accepting defendant's testimony that he stumbled, and the gun went off, and that he did not intend to shoot or injure anyone, yet he was carrying the gun with a cartridge in the firing chamber, with the gun pointed forward, approaching a car occupied by persons, the jury would have been justified in concluding that he did not act with 'due caution and circumspection.'"

Knowing the gun to be loaded, defendant herein intentionally took it out of a place of comparative safety (a paper sack), putting it in his belt where it would be easily available to his use, and carried it into a crowded beer tavern, one of the most likely places in which an altercation could start. The defendant stayed approximately five hours in the tavern, a place which became increasingly crowded, and in which people were drinking. Defendant was familiar with Bob's Place and the type of people frequenting it and went there purposefully to seek out the type of persons who would be interested in buying a firearm. Defendant, after a preliminary verbal skirmish with Wallis, did later actually become engaged in an altercation with him, at which time the tavern was crowded with people. Defendant had often been to Bob's Place and knew its location and proximity to occupied premises. Under these circumstances, a man carrying a heavy, loaded revolver, which he knew or should have known was ready to fire, into a crowded beer tavern across from an occupied church, created a high risk of death to persons in and out of the tavern, who were within firing range. His subsequent use of the loaded gun which he had made easily available to himself, even in self-defense and as a bludgeon rather than a firearm, in the crowded room, created even a greater risk of death or injury to innocent persons. Clearly these circumstances justified any finding of the jury that the defendant's acts were committed "without due 'caution and circumspection'." People v. Penny, 44 Cal. 2d 861, 285 P.2d 926, 931.

Defendant, having been in the army, was familiar with firearms and had the gun three weeks but at no time inspected it, tested it, or removed the bullets. He did, however, know it was loaded. He denied it was cocked but the jury could well have believed otherwise. To have fired, it must either have been cocked or defective. He had never examined the gun.

If, on the other hand, the jury found there was no self-defense and an assault existed but the use of the gun on Wallis in the manner indicated by the record was not such as to constitute it a "deadly weapon" within the meaning of section 245, Penal Code, the record likewise supports the conviction, on the theory the killing occurred in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to a felony.

[6] A deadly weapon is one likely to produce death or great bodily injury. People v. Fuqua, 58 Cal. 245, 247. However, the deadly character of the weapon may depend on the manner in which it is used, in which case the determination is one for the jury under proper instructions (People v. Fuqua, 58 Cal. 245; People v. Simpson, 134 Cal.App. 646, 651, 25 P.2d 1008).

[7] Defendant did not use the gun as a firearm but as a club or bludgeon. Whether it constituted a deadly weapon as to Wallis was for the determination of the jury. If the jury under the instructions given did not believe the revolver, as used in connection with Wallis, constituted a deadly weapon as to him then, if the evidence is sufficient to support a finding of unlawful assault, the killing of Mrs. Glenn constituted involuntary manslaughter. Sec. 192, subd. 2, Penal Code.

An assault is "an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another" (Penal Code, Sec. 240), and constitutes a misdemeanor (Sec. 17, 241, Penal Code). A battery, also a misdemeanor (Penal Code, Sec. 17, 243), is a wilful and unlawful use of force or violence on the person of another. Penal Code, Sec. 242.

[8] The "present ability" existed when defendant pulled out a heavy weapon in the course of his altercation with Wallis; and the attempt to commit a "violent injury," "any wrongful act committed by means of physical force against the person of another" (People v. Bradbury, 151 Cal. 675, 676, 91 P. 497; People v. McCoy, 25 Cal.2d 177, 191, 153 P.2d 315), occurred when defendant used the butt of the gun to strike Wallis, a successful attempt to use "physical force" on Wallis. And as to the "unlawfulness" of the assault, if defendant did not act in self-defense his acts with respect to Wallis were unlawful (People v. Lynch, 101 Cal. 229, 35 P. 860; Penal Code, section 693) not amounting to a felony. This applies also to the battery (Penal Code, Sec. 692) and his wilful use of force on Wallis satisfies every element of battery.

[9, 10] As to whether defendant acted in self-defense, the issue was a factual one for the jury. Two witnesses testified defendant and Wallis swore at each other and then defendant said, "Negro, I will blow your brains out," and drew his gun. Under the rules set out in People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778, we believe the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that defendant drew and used the gun not in self-defense but in the course of a deliberate assault on Wallis. Of all those who testified, only the defendant claimed Wallis advanced on him with a knife just before the time defendant drew his gun. The only witnesses to the altercation testified they saw no knife in Wallis' possession, and no knife was offered in evidence. The jury might well have rejected defendant's testimony and concluded he struck Wallis under no circumstance of self-defense. Since, then, the killing of Mrs. Glenn occurred in the course of this assault, an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, the conclusion of involuntary manslaughter follows (Sec. 192, subd. 2, Penal Code; People v. Le Grant, 76 Cal.App.2d 148, 172 P.2d 554.)

A careful examination of the record convinces us that there exists no inconsistency in the verdicts, the evidence is sufficient to support the conviction of manslaughter and the jury was justified in returning such a verdict.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order denying motion for new trial are and each is affirmed.

VINNELL COMPANY, Inc., a corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

PACIFIC ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY, a corporation, et al., Defendants.

Pacific Electric Railway Company, a corporation, Appellant.*

No. 23260.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 19, 1959.

Hearing Granted March 18, 1959.

Proceeding to determine whether railroad was entitled to be indemnified by contractor, which performed work for flood control district, for injuries sustained by railroad's employee and whether railroad was entitled to recover from contractor for damage to railroad's property. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Emil Gumpert, J., rendered judgment for contractor, and railroad appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Patrosso, J. pro tem., held that where railroad granted, without charge, an easement to flood control district to construct storm drain below surface of its property, granted contractor license to go on railroad's property and derived no benefit other than that received by every real property owner within district, and license agreement required contractor to indemnify railroad against all claims resulting directly or indirectly from performance of any work upon property, contractor was liable for railroad's property damage and injuries suffered by railroad employee resulting from negligence of railroad's employees, who, after contractor began work, lined switch in such fashion as to direct train along a track that terminated at an excavation.

Reversed and trial court directed to enter judgment in favor of railroad.

PATROSSO, Justice pro tem.

This action was submitted to the trial court upon an agreed statement of facts from which the following appears:

The Los Angeles County Flood Control District undertook the project of constructing a storm drain system to service a portion of the city of Long Beach, the terminal end of which was to lie underneath the Fairbanks Yard of the defendant and cross-complainant Pacific Electric Railway Company, hereinafter referred to as "railroad," and its outlet to be at the Los Angeles County Flood Control channel which borders the westerly side of the railway yard.

On or about the 21st day of October 1954 the plaintiff and cross-defendant Vinnell Company, hereinafter referred to as "Vinnell" or "contractor," entered into a contract with the flood control district by the terms of which Vinnell agreed to construct, among other things, that portion of the storm drain project which was to lie below the surface of the railroad's Fairbanks Yard and to terminate at the Los Angeles Flood Control channel.

On or about the 28th day of December 1954 the flood control district entered into an agreement with the railroad whereby the railroad gave the flood control district the right to enter upon the Fairbanks Yard to construct a storm drain below the surface of the railroad tracks and an easement was granted to the flood control district for the use of the railroad's land for the described project. This right of entry and easement was granted by the railroad to the flood control district without charge.

On or about April 26, 1955, Vinnell and the railroad entered into an agreement whereby the railroad granted Vinnell the right to enter upon its Fairbanks Yard for the purpose of constructing the described storm drain. This agreement, after reciting that the railroad had entered into an agreement permitting the district to construct and maintain a storm drain under railroad's tracks located at its Fairbanks Yard and that Vinnell had entered into a contract with the district covering the work to be performed in connection with construction of said storm drain, in consequence of which it would be necessary for Vinnell, its agents and employees and subcontractors and the agents and employees of such subcontractors, to enter upon railroad's property and the premises adjacent thereto, provides that the railroad in consideration of the faithful performance of the promises and covenants contained in the agreement grants permission to Vinnell to enter upon its property. Among other things, Vinnell covenants and agrees to procure, in advance of performing any work upon the railroad's premises, contractors' public liability insurance with a limit of liability of not less than $200,000 for all damages arising out of bodily injuries to or death of any one person with a total limit of not less than $400,000 for all damages arising out of bodily injuries to or death of two or more persons in any one accident or occurrence. Also contractors' property damage liability insurance with a limit of not less than $50,000 for all damages arising out of injuries to or destruction of property in any one accident or occurrence with a total limit of not less than $100,000 for all damages arising out of injury to or destruction of property during the policy period and also "without limitation as to the generality of the foregoing * * * Public Liability and Property Damage Insurance in amounts not less than $200,000/400,000 Public Liability and $50,000/100,000 Property Damage Insurance, insuring the contractual liability of Contractor under the provisions of Section 8 hereof." Section 8 of the agreement last referred to reads as follows:

"8. Contractor hereby releases and agrees to indemnify and save Railroad harmless from and against any and all injuries to and deaths of persons, claims, demands, cost, loss, damage and liability, howsoever same may be caused, resulting directly or indirectly from the performance of any or all work to be done upon the property and beneath the tracks of Railroad and upon the premises adjacent thereto under said agreement between District and Contractor, also from all injuries to and deaths of persons, claims, demands, cost, loss, damage and liability, howsoever same may be caused, either directly or indirectly, made or suffered by said Contractor, Contractor's agents, employes and subcontractors, and the agents and employees of such subcontractors, while engaged in the performance of said work."

This agreement was prepared by the railroad and submitted to Vinnell on April 18, 1955. At no time prior to the accident in question were the provisions of section 8 of said agreement discussed by the parties thereto. The agreement was executed by Vinnell with no modifications being made in the agreement and returned to the railroad on April 26, 1955. Thereafter, Vinnell entered upon the railroad's Fairbanks Yard and commenced its operations under its contract with the flood control district.

The nature of the construction by Vinnell was such that the railroad took up its tracks in stages and constructed detours, after which Vinnell excavated the required ditch and laid the storm drain conduits. The railroad's employees engaged in operating a frieght train through the yard mistakenly lined a switch in such fashion as to direct a railroad train along a track that had been terminated at the excavation rather than along a track that had been used as a detour. It is admitted by the railroad that such action on the part of the railroad's employees amounted to negligence. As a result the locomotive and train ran off the end of the track and into the excavation in which work was proceeding, damaging Vinnell's work in progress in the agreed sum of $1,591.55. The railroad's property was damaged in the agreed sum of $2,872.19. An employee of railroad suffered personal injuries as a result of this accident and has made a claim for damages against both Vinnell and the railroad.

The question presented is whether the provisions of section 8 of the agreement above quoted operate to exculpate the railroad from liability for its own negligent actions and whether by reason thereof Vinnell is required to indemnify the railroad for the damage to its locomotive and hold the railroad harmless from liability to its employee for his injuries suffered as a result of the accident in question.

The trial court held that by their agreement the parties did not intend that Vinnell should indemnify the railroad against liability for damage caused by the railroad's sole negligence or release the railroad from liability to Vinnell for damages sustained by it as a result of the railroad's negligence. From the ensuing judgment so declaring railroad appeals.

[3, 4] That the language of the agreement here is sufficiently comprehensive to indemnify the railroad against loss or damage occasioned by its own negligence was directly held in Southern Pac. Co. v. Fellows, 1937, 22 Cal.App.2d 87, 71 P.2d 75. In ascertaining the intention of the parties to a contract resort is to be had to "the circumstances under which it was made, including the situation of the subject of the instrument, and of the parties to it." Code Civ.Proc. § 1860; Civ.Code, § 1647. Thus, the inquiry in each case is whether the language of the particular instrument when viewed in the light of the circumstances under which it was executed and the situation of the parties is such as to manifest that the parties intended this result. Basin Oil Co. of California v. Baash-Ross Tool Co., supra; Sproul v. Cuddy, 1955, 131 Cal.App.2d 85, 280 P.2d 158.

[5] Construed in the light of the foregoing principles we are of the view that the language of the contract here in question clearly evidences the intention of the parties that Vinnell is required to indemnify the railroad against any loss or damage sustained by it as the result of the negligence of its agents and employees resulting directly or indirectly from the performance of any work done by Vinnell upon the railroad's property.

First, let us look at the situation of the parties at the time the agreement was executed. The railroad had granted, without charge, an easement to the flood control district to construct a storm drain below the surface of its property and railroad tracks, following which it, by the agreement in question, granted Vinnell a license to go upon its property in order to perform the necessary work required to construct the storm drain under Vinnell's contract with the district. The railroad derived no benefit from the construction of the terminal end of the flood control project beneath the surface of its property other than the incidental benefit which every owner of real property within the flood control district receives as the result of the construction of flood control projects therein. Thus, without any commensurate benefit to itself, the railroad granted Vinnell a license to go upon its property and conduct operations thereon which, to say the least, could reasonably be anticipated by the parties as creating a hazard to the railroad's operations. Under the circumstances, it is only reasonable to assume that the parties intended that the railroad should be protected against such hazards, for unless the purpose of the execution of the agreement by the railroad and Vinnell was to afford protection to the former there was no occasion for its execution for no benefits were thereby conferred upon the railroad as it would remain liable for the negligence of its agents and employees.

In the light of this situation we direct our attention to the provisions of the license agreement. In the first place, as previously noted, Vinnell was required to procure and maintain in full force and effect contractors' public liability insurance for all damages arising out of bodily injuries to or death of any person and contractors' property damage liability insurance for all damages arising out of injuries to or destruction of property. It is apparent that the liability which Vinnell was required to insure against by this provision was for loss or damages to persons and property occasioned by the acts of its agents and employees and necessarily included loss or damage so occasioned to the railroad's property and employees. If the parties contemplated that this was the extent of Vinnell's liability to the railroad the agreement could well have stopped here. Additionally, however, Vinnell was required to procure and maintain in full force and effect public liability and property damage insurance "insuring the contractual liability of Contractor under the provisions of Section 8 hereof," which is the indemnity provision which we have hereinabove quoted at length.

Here we have a clear recognition by the parties that the contractual liability assumed by Vinnell under the provisions of section 8 comprehends something other and in addition to liability for loss or damage resulting from the acts of Vinnell, its agents and employees and for which in any event it would be responsible even though there were no express agreement to that effect. And what could this be other than for loss or damage resulting from the acts or conduct of the railroad's employees or agents for which it might be responsible?

As pointed out in City of Cleveland, Ohio v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 6 Cir., 1934, 71 F.2d 89, to hold, as respondent contends and the trial court determined, that the provisions of the agreement above referred to were intended to indemnify the railroad only against the acts of Vinnell and its agents is to render the same meaningless. The railroad needed no protection against the negligence of Vinnell or its employees for it could in no event be responsible therefor. Vinnell was not engaged in performing any work for the railroad and it and its employees were in no sense the agents or employees of the railroad.

The case last cited in its factual aspect is strikingly similar to the case at bar. There the railroad company had granted an easement to the city of Cleveland to construct a sewer under the railroad's right of way under an agreement which among other things contained a provision reading as follows (at page 90): " 'To indemnify and save the Railroad free and harmless from any and all damages to person or persons (including employees of the Railroad) or property (including that belonging to or in the custody of the Railroad), by reason of or in any way connected with the erection, construction, reconstruction, maintenance, alteration and/or repair of said sewer at such crossing, with the Railroad track by the City and/or its contractors, agents, employees or the sub-contractors thereof.' "

As the result of the railroad's negligence an injury was caused to an employee of the contractor performing the work of constructing the sewer for the city. The injured employee commenced an action against the railroad which was settled by the payment of $8,000 by the railroad, which thereupon instituted an action against the city for reimbursement under the terms of the indemnity clause of the contract quoted above. In affirming judgment in favor of the railroad the court said (at page 91): "Contracts must be construed with reference to the situation and surroundings of the parties. The sewer was appellant's project. It desired the easement and appellee was willing to grant it but upon the express provision that the work should be at the sole cost and expense of appellant. Appellee naturally desired that it should itself protect and support its track during the construction work and agreed to do so and to furnish the labor, material and work necessary thereto but upon the condition that the cost should be paid by appellant. * * * Further than the privilege of connecting with the sewer the agreement conferred no benefit upon appellee. Under such circumstances it was but natural that appellee should demand protection from the consequences of its own acts in doing its part of the work. It had the right to require such an obligation. * *

"To hold that the agreement indemnifies against the acts of appellant and its agents only is to destroy its value. Appellee needed no protection against the misconduct of appellant or those acting for it for the law could not hold appellee responsible therefor, since appellant, its contractors and employees were in no sense the agents of appellee."

In Rice v. Pennsylvania R. Co., supra, 2 Cir., 1953, 202 F.2d 861, the action was brought by the owner of a scow for damages resulting from the negligent manner in which it had been loaded, the loading having been done by the United States Government under a contract with a purchaser of the cargo. The contract of purchase contained among other provisions, the following (at page 862): "The contractor [purchaser] agrees to keep and hold the Government safe and harmless from any and all claims of whatsoever nature or kind for damages for injuries to person or property, occurring during the removal of the said material." The trial court held that the provision did not protect the government from damage caused by its own negligence. The court of appeals reversed and, in the course of its opinion, said (at page 862): "With the generally accepted rule that contracts will not be construed to indemnify a person against his own negligence unless such intention is expressed in unequivocal terms, we are in complete accord. * * * In the case at bar, however, the damage was caused by negligence in the way the scrap iron was dropped on the deck of the scow; and the covenantor agreed to save the covenantee harmless from claims of damages 'for injuries to person or property occurring during the removal' of the scrap. The scrap was in the possession of the United States and it had agreed to load it. No one else had anything to do with the loading. It is impossible to conceive how any valid claim could arise against the Government for injuries 'occurring during the removal' unless its employees were negligent. Consequently we see no way to interpret the covenant otherwise than as an unequivocal expression of intent to indemnify the United States against the negligence of its own employees. Where such is the clear intention of the parties the agreement will be enforced." Citing among other cases, Southern Pac. Co. v. Fellows, supra, 22 Cal.App.2d 87, 71 P.2d 75.

We see no merit in respondent's contention that to construe the agreement here as indemnifying the railroad against loss or damage occasioned by its own negligence would result in requiring Vinnell to indemnify the railroad for damages resulting from "an accident hundreds of miles from the work site between two of its trains occasioned solely by the negligent rerouting of the trains by the railroad itself." Obviously such an accident could not reasonably be said to result directly or indirectly from the performance of any work by the contractor upon the railroad's premises; and we do not understand the respondent to contend that the damage here was unrelated to a condition created by Vinnell upon the railroad's premises.

None of the California cases relied upon by the respondent is factually in point with the instant case. In the first of these, Pacific Indemnity Co. v. California Electric Works, 29 Cal.App.2d 260, 262, 84 P. 2d 313, the facts were these: The Standard Oil Company was engaged in constructing a building in the city of San Diego at a total cost of $30,000. In connection therewith, they entered into a contract with the defendant Electric Works for the furnishing of material and labor in the sum of approximately $3,700. This contract contained an indemnification provision somewhat similar to that here involved. An employee of Electric Works was injured on the job and brought suit against the Standard Oil Company in which he recovered a judgment of $5,594.03. Pacific Indemnity Co. had insured Standard Oil on the construction of the building and thereafter it and the oil company instituted an action claiming indemnification under the terms of the contract. At the outset of its opinion the court, after observing (29 Cal.App.2d at page 272, 84 P.2d at page 320) that "[t]he language used in the contract would seem to be sufficiently broad to indemnify the Standard Oil Company against its own negligence if there exists no extrinsic ambiguity therein,"[1] proceeded to say (29 Cal.App.2d at page 273, 84 P.2d at page 320): "The rule, therefore, is that if there is any reasonable room for doubt as to what the contract means or as to what the exact words thereof apply to, then parol evidence is properly admitted. In the instant case we think there is ample room for doubt as to whether or not the contract was meant to apply to the indemnity of the Standard Oil Company against its own wrong." The court then proceeded to hold that the trial court did not err "in the admission of evidence to explain what the parties intended by what they said in the contract," and concluded as follows (29 Cal.App.2d at page 275, 84 P.2d at page 321): "As we understand the record, the appellants [plaintiffs] have no complaint as to the finding of the trial court herein, if it was proper to admit evidence other than the contract itself. That is to say, when the evidence was admitted, it was legally susceptible of the interpretation placed on it by the learned trial judge," to the effect that the provisions of the contract did not operate to indemnify the Standard Oil Company from liability for damage occasioned by its own negligence.

The opinion does not disclose what the extrinsic evidence therein referred to consisted of and the decision would seem to stand for no more than that the language of the contract there involved when construed in the light of the extrinsic evidence did not evidence an intent upon the part of the Electric Works to indemnify the Standard Oil Company from damage occasioned or loss sustained by it as the result of its own negligence.

In Basin Oil Co. of California v. Baash-Ross Tool Co., supra, 125 Cal.App.2d 578, 271 P.2d 122, the plaintiff instituted the action to recover damages sustained by it as a result of defective suspension plugs manufactured and sold to it by the defendant. The latter sought to escape liability for its negligence in the manufacture of the plugs by reason of provisions contained in the invoices, sent by the defendant to the plaintiff following the deliveries of the plugs, reading in part as follows (125 Cal.App.2d at page 589, 271 P.2d at page 128): "All goods and materials are carefully tested and inspected before leaving point of manufacture, but as it is impossible to always detect imperfections, the only guarantee that is given by us, or for which we are in any way liable, is to replace such goods as prove defective when used for the purpose for which manufactured, f. o. b. at point of delivery to carrier of goods being replaced, or allow credit for such goods at our option. All replaced goods are to be returned to us transportation prepaid. Under no circumstances are we responsible for any damages beyond the price of the goods. No damages or charges of any kind, either for labor, expenses or otherwise, suffered or incurred by the customer in repairing or replacing defective goods, or occasioned by them will be allowed."

1. While this case was decided more than a year after the decision in Southern Pac. Co. v. Fellows, supra, 22 Cal.App.2d 87, 71 P.2d 75, seemingly the latter case was not called to the court's attention for it is not mentioned in the opinion and it is stated therein that (29 Cal.App.2d at page 275, 84 P.2d at page 321) "[i]n California, so far as we are aware, the question has not been directly passed upon."

Speaking of the effect of the foregoing language the court said (125 Cal.App.2d at page 596, 271 P.2d at page 132): "Examined in their entire context, it is patent from an analytical reading of the documents in question that they go no further than to limit Baash-Ross's liability for breach of warranty. Their language indicates that it is fundamental that reasonable care in relation to the manufacture of the product will be used. But a seller's obligation to a buyer for breach of a warranty is one of strict and absolute liability. (Citations.) Where a breach of warranty is established, liability is imposed entirely independent of the question of negligence on the part of the seller. (Citations.) The sense of the conditions on the documents indicates a dominant purpose to escape from the full consequences of such strict liability. The language quoted plainly shows that Baash-Ross, asseverating that it would carefully test and inspect its products, was seeking exculpation not from its own affirmative negligence as a manufacturer and supplier of goods but from liability that might be fastened upon it from sales of goods which might prove defective despite its exercise of reasonable care. In short, its liability was limited in the event of a breach of any warranty upon which the sales were made and not in the event of a breach of its duty of care to its customers."

It is at once apparent from a reading of the terms of the contract there involved that it differs materially from that with which we are here concerned. As the court in its opinion points out, the language of the agreement, far from indicating an intent that the defendant was to be absolved from liability for its own negligence, affirmatively asserted that it had exercised due care and inspection in the manufacture of the products which produced the damage.

In Sproul v. Cuddy, supra, 131 Cal.App. 2d 85, 280 P.2d 158, the defendant leased an invalid walker to the plaintiff which toppled over throwing plaintiff to the floor and injuring her. The lease agreement provided as did the invoices in the Basin Oil Company case that the defendant had used great care to have all of its equipment in good order and repair but gave no warranty express or implied as to the condition or quality thereof and would in no way be responsible for damages resulting from the use thereof. Speaking of the language of the contract there involved, the court said (131 Cal.App.2d at page 95, 280 P.2d at page 164): "Measured by the above criteria, it is at once apparent that not only does Exhibit 'A' contain no reference to negligence, nor any clear and explicit indication that defendants were attempting to relieve themselves of their duty of using due care with reference to their rental of the 'invalid walker,' but the exact contrary appears from the opening asseveration that the licensor 'uses great care to have all its equipment in good order and repair.' This statement, even if attenuated so as to relate to reasonable care rather than 'great care,' permeates the entire limitation notice and is the pre-condition for the operation of the comprehensive exculpatory declarations which follow. It qualifies and limits, at least to the extent there announced, the ensuing language. Such an interpretation is plainly dictated by the principles to which we have hitherto adverted. It seems also to give all the language used a harmonious construction and avoids perverting the notice into nothing more than a semantic trap for the unwary." And continuing at page 96 of 131 Cal.App.2d, at page 164 of 280 P.2d, the court said: "Similarly, here, it cannot be reasonably contended that a party who announces that he uses great care to have his rental equipment in good order and repair was attempting to exculpate himself from liability if the facts should show that he used no care whatsoever, or indeed, was grossly negligent."

It will be noted that in each of the foregoing authorities upon which respondent relies the contract in which the claimed covenant of indemnification appeared was one under which the party claiming indemnification derived a direct benefit and the covenant was merely incidental to the principal object of the contract. Here, on the contrary, as we have previously pointed out, the appellant derived no benefit whatsoever from the work performed by the respondent under its contract with the flood control district, and the sole purpose of the agreement between the parties was to afford protection to the railroad from loss or damage howsoever caused resulting directly or indirectly from the performance of the work by the contractor upon its premises pursuant to Vinnell's contract with the flood control district. Moreover, the language of the agreements involved in the Basin Oil case and in the Sproul case was, to say the least, equivocal and in nowise comparable to that found in the agreement here.

City of Oakland v. Oakland Unified School Dist., 141 Cal.App.2d 733, 297 P.2d 752 also relied upon by the respondent, is even less in point. There the plaintiff had leased to the defendant the arena of its municipal auditorium building in which to hold a music festival. The lease contained a provision reading as follows (141 Cal.App. 2d at page 735, 297 P.2d at page 753): " 'That the lessee will hold the lessor free from any liability or claim for damages or suit for or by reason of any injuries to any person or property, of any kind whatsoever, from any cause whatsoever arising out of the use and occupation of the premises by the lessee; and the lessee hereby covenants and agrees to indemnify and save harmless the lessor from all liability or damage on account of or by reason of any such injuries or damages.' (Emphasis added.)"

A patron who had attended a performance in the auditorium after leaving it and while walking on a walkway in front of and adjoining the auditorium building stepped in a hole and sustained injuries. The court after stating that there was no question "but that the indemnity provision is a valid one" held that it did not operate to indemnify the plaintiff from liability for the reason that the damage sustained by the patron did not occur upon the leased premises.

[6] While it is true that the agreement here, having been prepared by the appellant, is to be strictly construed against it and all ambiguities are to be resolved in favor of the respondent, where the meaning is clear and the intention of the parties apparent this salutary rule cannot operate to change the nature of the contract or the obligations assumed by the parties thereunder. It must still be interpreted according to the intention of the parties as expressed in the instrument. Baine v. Continental Assur. Co., 1942, 21 Cal.2d 1, 5, 129 P.2d 396, 142 A.L.R. 1253.

We find it unnecessary to review the other authorities from other jurisdictions cited by the respective parties. Admittedly, they are not entirely harmonious but the decision in each case must of necessity depend in large measure not only upon the language of the particular instrument involved but as well upon the situation of the parties and the purposes and objects thereof.

For the reasons hereinabove set forth we are of the view that the parties to the agreement here intended that the appellant should be indemnified against loss and damage resulting directly or indirectly from the performance of work by the respondent upon the appellant's premises, including such as may have been occasioned by the negligence of appellant's agents and employees.

The judgment is reversed and the trial court is directed to amend its findings of fact and conclusions of law and enter judgment in favor of the appellant in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Civ. 5911.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 9, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Proceeding for stay of dissolution of corporation and for purchase of stock of persons seeking dissolution. The Superior Court, Riverside County, Hilton H. McCabe, J., entered order staying dissolution and directing sale of stock, and the person seeking dissolution appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Coughlin, J. pro tem., held that where the three directors adopted resolution authorizing president to apply to corporation commissioner for a permit to issue 50 shares of capital stock to president who was a director, and 50 shares to another director on certain terms and president moved for stay of proceedings, instituted by such director and his wife, who was the third director, to dissolve corporation and for purchase of such director's stock, and thereafter permit was granted and stock was issued, the procedure of filing additional affidavits relating to granting of permit and issuance of stock, after service of copies thereof upon the opposing counsel, without obtaining prior permission to do so based on notice and motion, although irregular, was not prejudicial.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐931(5)

On appeal from order staying proceedings to dissolve corporation and directing sale of stock, it would be presumed that trial court accepted the evidence which would support its order. West's Ann. Corp.Code, § 4658.

2. Motions ⇐19

The purpose of statute requiring the moving party, in his notice of motion, to designate the papers upon which he will rely, and to accompany such notice with copies thereof unless previously served on the opposing party is to enable the party served with notice to prepare a defense to the proposed motion if he so desires. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1010.

3. Motions ⇐30

An affidavit filed with court after submission, without notice to opposing party, cannot be considered in support of motion even though court granted permission to file the same. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1010.

4. Motions ⇐30

Affidavits filed after submission upon consent obtained at the hearing of motion properly may be considered by the court.

5. Trial ⇐70

A trial court may set aside an order of submission and permit introduction of additional evidence relevant to a pending issue of fact, either upon request or upon its own motion.

6. Motions ⇐30

When additional evidence in support of motion is to be produced by affidavits, the proper method for the presentation thereof is upon notice and motion requesting permission to file the same, and if such affidavits are filed without permission they may be disregarded. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1010.

7. Corporations ⇐607

The sections of the Corporations Code providing for a stay of proceedings to dissolve a corporation and the purchase of the shares held by those seeking its dissolution are mandatory, and when the prescribed conditions are met the court must recognize the right thus clearly given and must stay the proceeding and proceed to ascertain and fix the value of the shares. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 4658 et seq.

Where three directors adopted resolution authorizing president, who was a director, to apply to corporation commissioner for a permit to issue 50 shares of capital stock to president and 50 shares to another on certain terms and president moved for stay of proceedings, instituted by such director and his wife, who was the third director, to dissolve corporation and for purchase of such director's stock, and thereafter permit was granted and stock was issued, the procedure of filing additional affidavits relating to granting of permit and issuance of stock, after service of copies thereof upon the opposing counsel, without obtaining prior permission to do so based on notice and motion, although irregular, was not prejudicial. COUGHLIN, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff Alvak Enterprises, a California corporation, brought this action to enjoin the defendants Philip C. Phillips and Edith Phillips from interfering with the operation of a hotel owned by the corporation. The defendants answered and eventually, as directors, filed a second amended cross-complaint seeking dissolution of the corporation; a Milton Niemetz joined with them as cross-complainants; the corporation and its president, Alfred Spivak, were named as cross-defendants. Thereupon, Mr. Spivak, as owner of 50 per cent of the shares of the corporation, by notice and motion, initiated proceedings under section 4658 of the Corporations Code to avoid dissolution of the corporation by the purchase of the remaining 50 per cent of said shares which he alleged were owned by the cross-complainants. His notice recited that the motion would be based on "all the papers, records and files in the action". Prior to this time motions with respect to a preliminary injunction and for the appointment of a receiver had been heard by the court. Voluminous affidavits had been filed in connection with these hearings. In addition, the original complaint, an answer thereto, the original cross-complaint, an amended cross-complaint and a second amended cross-complaint with an answer thereto, all verified, were on file in the action. There was a great deal of conflicting evidentiary matter thus presented to the court on the motion to stay proceedings and avoid a dissolution under section 4658 et seq. of the Corporations Code.

[1] On appeal it will be presumed that the trial court accepted the evidence which will support its order. Reviewing the record pursuant to this rule, the following is a fair statement of the facts: In 1957, Mr. Spivak, who was president of the plaintiff corporation, which then was dormant, engaged in negotiations with Mr. Phillips culminating in an agreement resulting in the purchase of a hotel; the vesting of title thereto in the corporation which had been reactivated; a reorganization of the board of directors by the election of Mr. and Mrs. Phillips as directors; and the election of Mr. Phillips as secretary-treasurer. Pursuant to their agreement, Mr. Spivak and Mr. Phillips made the financial arrangements incident to the purchase of the hotel and, in return, each of them was to receive 50 shares of the capital stock of the corporation for a cash consideration of $400 per share or, in lieu of cash, the cancellation of promissory notes which the corporation had executed in their favor covering money advanced in connection with the purchase of the hotel. The board of directors adopted a resolution authorizing the president to make application to the Corporation Commissioner for a permit to issue such shares of stock to Mr. Spivak and Mr. Phillips upon the terms indicated, and instructing the President and Secretary to issue such shares, for the consideration stated, upon the granting of such a permit. However, no permit had been obtained and no shares of stock had been issued up to November 8, 1957, when the motion to stay dissolution of the corporation and proceed under section 4658 of the Corporations Code was taken under submission. Thereafter, the Corporation Commissioner granted the requested permit and thereupon 50 shares of the corporation's capital stock were issued to Mr. Spivak, and 50 shares to Mr. Phillips; certificates of stock evidencing these shares were placed in escrow in accord with the terms of the permit.

On November 21, 1957, an affidavit setting forth a copy of the permit, and on November 25, 1957, a further affidavit relating the facts with respect to the issuance of shares of stock pursuant thereto were filed with the trial court. Copies of these affidavits were served upon the attorneys for the defendants and cross-complainants. On December 23, 1957, the court made its order granting the motion. In the meantime no objection to the filing or consideration of these affidavits, nor any reply thereto had been made. The order granting the motion recited that the "affidavit filed on November 25, 1957, is hereby incorporated within the papers and pleadings considered by the court * * *" The court found that Mr. Spivak was the holder of 50 per cent of the shares of the corporation and that Mr. and Mrs. Phillips were the holders of the remaining 50 per cent; appointed a commissioner to appraise the fair value of the Phillips shares; and ordered Spivak to post a bond as required by law. A notice of appeal from this order was filed by the "defendants and cross-complainants".

Appellants contend that the provisions of section 4658 of the Corporations Code cannot be invoked if the subject corporation has no stock issued and outstanding; that at the time the motion was submitted the evidence did not establish the existence of any such stock; that the subsequently filed affidavits establishing the issuance of stock should not have been considered by the court; and, consequently, the order should be reversed.

Respondents contend that the affidavits in question were properly considered; that, in any event, the evidence established that Mr. and Mrs. Phillips had subscribed to stock of the corporation; that section 4658 applies to subscribed stock, as well as to issued stock; and, therefore, the order should be affirmed.

[2–6] Section 1010 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a notice of motion shall state "the grounds upon which it will be made, and the papers, if any, upon which it is to be based" and requires that a copy of any such paper shall accompany the notice, if not previously served on the party to be notified. The obvious purpose of the statute is to enable the party served with notice to prepare a defense to the proposed motion if he so desires (Broderick v. Cochran, 18 Cal.App. 202, 204, 122 P. 972). As a consequence, an affidavit filed with the court after submission, without notice to the opposing party, cannot be considered in support of the motion even though the court granted permission to file the same (Forrest v. Knox, 21 Cal.App. 363, 131 P. 894). Nevertheless, the rule prescribed by said section 1010, requiring the moving party, in his notice of motion, to designate the papers upon which he will rely, and to accompany such notice with copies thereof unless previously served on the opposing party, is not without exception. Affidavits filed after submission upon consent obtained at the hearing of the motion properly may be considered by the court (Salsberry v. Julian, 98 Cal.App. 638, 643, 277 P. 516). Under well-settled principles, a trial court may set aside an order of submission and permit the introduction of additional evidence relevant to a pending issue of fact (Badover v. Guaranty Trust & Savings Bank, 186 Cal. 775, 777, 200 P. 638; Land v. Johnston, 156 Cal. 253, 257, 104 P. 449; Broder v. Superior Court, 103 Cal. 121, 37 P. 143), either upon request or upon its own motion (Rutledge v.

Barger, 82 Cal.App. 356, 360, 255 P.2d 537; In re Estate of Hunsicker, 65 Cal. App. 114, 118, 223 P. 411); and in some instances it is error to refuse to do so (Sulloway v. Sulloway, 160 Cal. 508, 514, 117 P. 522; Metropolis Trust & Savings Bank v. Monnier, 169 Cal. 592, 599, 147 P. 265.) That the issue of fact to be decided arises out of the hearing of a motion, based on affidavits, rather than out of a trial, does not foreclose the application of the foregoing general principles. However, when additional evidence is to be produced by affidavits, orderly procedure dictates that the proper method for the presentation thereof is upon notice and motion requesting permission to file the same (Hecq v. Conner, 203 Cal. 504, 506, 265 P. 180.) If such affidavits are filed without permission they may be disregarded. (State ex rel. King v. Second Judicial District Court, 25 Mont. 202, 64 P. 352; Jacoby v. Mitchell, 19 Neb. 537, 26 N.W. 255.)

The procedure followed in the case at bar, of filing additional affidavits after service of copies thereof upon the opposing counsel, without obtaining prior permission to do so based on notice and motion, although irregular, was not prejudicial under the circumstances.

[7, 8] The sections of the Corporations Code providing for a stay of proceedings to dissolve a corporation and the purchase of the shares held by those seeking its dissolution are mandatory, and "when the prescribed conditions are met the court must recognize the right thus clearly given and must stay the proceeding and proceed to ascertain and fix the value of the shares" in question. Merlino v. Fresno Macaroni Mfg. Co., 64 Cal.App.2d 462, 464, 148 P.2d 884, 885. "Under section 4–½, article 6 of the Constitution, the appellate courts cannot set aside a judgment rendered in the Superior Court for any error * * * in procedure, unless the court, upon examining the record, shall be of the opinion that the particular error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." Parker v. Swett, 188 Cal. 474, 484, 205 P. 1065, 1069. "The burden rests upon the party complaining not only to show error but also to show that the error is sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal." Coleman v. Farwell, 206 Cal. 740, 741, 276 P. 335, 336. Copies of the supplemental affidavits filed in this case admittedly were served upon appellants' attorneys; they had notice of the contents thereof; the first supplemental affidavit was filed on November 21, 1957, and the second on November 25, 1957; the court did not render its decision until December 13, 1957, at which time it made its order that the affidavit of November 25, 1957, should be incorporated within the papers considered on the motion. In the meantime appellants took no countermeasures; no motion to strike or other objection was made, and no reply affidavits were filed. Appellants cannot dispute the fact that the corporation's board of directors adopted a resolution authorizing and directing Mr. Spivak, as its president, to apply for a permit to issue the shares of stock in question; Mr. and Mrs. Phillips, as directors, voted for this resolution, which could not have been adopted without their approval; they consistently have contended in their pleadings in this case that Spivak was derelict in the discharge of his duty because he had not diligently prosecuted said application; the permit was granted after the motion under consideration had been submitted for decision; shortly thereafter, in accordance with a resolution previously adopted by the same board of directors, 50 shares of stock were issued to Mr. Spivak and 50 shares to Mr. Phillips. Appellants contend that they were deprived of the opportunity to present to the court "such points as" the permit was void, the stock had been improperly issued in the wrong amount or wrong number of shares, "and so on". This contention is purely academic. A further hearing would produce the same result. The only directors of the corporation were Mr. Spivak, Mr. Phillips and Mrs. Phillips; all of them wanted 50 shares of stock issued to Mr. Spivak and 50 shares to Mr. Phillips. No shares of stock were to be issued to Mr. Niemetz. Mrs. Phillips participated by virtue of her community property interest in the shares issued to Mr. Phillips. All of these facts appeared from the evidence before the court at the time the motion was submitted. The affidavits subsequently filed were proof only of events subsequently occurring, i. e., actual issuance of the stock, which the appellants wanted to take place. We find no miscarriage of justice in the procedure followed by the trial court.

The foregoing conclusion renders unnecessary a consideration of the other contentions made by appellants.

The order is affirmed.

Civ. 23167.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 15, 1959.

Action for malicious prosecution. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Leon T. David, J., sustained demurrer without leave to amend complaint, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment dismissing the action. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that even though the allegation in amended complaint that criminal prosecution against plaintiff was dismissed after trial thereof and that plaintiff's bail was exonerated was insufficient allegation that such prosecution terminated favorably to plaintiff, demurrer should not have been sustained without leave to amend and plaintiff should have been given leave to file a second amended complaint, where it did not appear that plaintiff could not have amended his complaint to allege the fact, if it be a fact, that evidence was introduced at the trial, that he was placed in jeopardy and that the case was dismissed for insufficient evidence.

Reversed.

1. Malicious Prosecution ⇐51

In malicious prosecution action, allegation in complaint that criminal prosecution against plaintiff was dismissed after a trial thereof and that plaintiff's bail was exonerated was insufficient allegation that such prosecution terminated favorably to plaintiff.

2. Malicious Prosecution ⇐16

The elements of a cause of action for malicious prosecution are: (1) a judicial proceeding favorably terminated; (2) want of probable cause; and (3) malice.

3. Malicious Prosecution ⇐51

Where the complaint alleges no facts from which it can be concluded that the prior proceedings terminated favorably to the plaintiff, the complaint fails to state a cause of action for malicious prosecution.

4. Malicious Prosecution ⇐35(1)

If dismissal of criminal proceeding is of such a nature as to indicate innocence of accused, there is a favorable termination sufficient to satisfy rule requiring favorable termination in order to entitle accused to maintain malicious prosecution action; if, however, the dismissal is on technical grounds, for procedural reasons, or for any other reason not inconsistent with his guilt, there is not a "favorable termination."

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Favorable Termination"

5. Pleading ⇐254

In malicious prosecution action, even though the allegation in amended complaint that criminal prosecution against plaintiff was dismissed after trial thereof and that plaintiff's bail was exonerated was insufficient allegation that such prosecution terminated favorably to plaintiff, demurrer should not have been sustained without leave to amend and plaintiff should have been given leave to file a second amended complaint, where it did not appear that plaintiff could not have amended his complaint to allege the fact, if it be a fact, that evidence was introduced at the trial, that he was placed in jeopardy and that the case was dismissed for insufficient evidence.

6. Criminal Law ⇐633(1)

A "trial" of a criminal prosecution may consist of a determination of issues of fact or of law.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Trial".

7. Malicious Prosecution ⇐35(1)

Dismissal of charge against accused would have been tantamount to an acquittal and would have satisfied rule requiring favorable termination in order to entitle accused to maintain malicious prosecution action if, at the close of People's evidence, the court was convinced that it was insufficient to establish defendant's guilt and the dismissal was ordered on that ground.

8. Malicious Prosecution ⇐35(1)

A dismissal of information by committing magistrate because of insufficiency of evidence to warrant holding accused for trial constitutes "favorable termination" within ruling requiring favorable termination in order to entitle accused to maintain malicious prosecution action.

9. Pleading ⇐225(1)

It is error to sustain a demurrer without leave to amend unless it is clear that a complaint cannot be amended to state a cause of action.

10. Pleading ⇐216(1)

On demurrer to malicious prosecution complaint alleging that defendant had filed a complaint and had instituted a criminal prosecution against plaintiff for misdemeanor or offense of operating vehicle on highway in unsafe condition in violation of state law, trial court should not have judicially noticed that defendant was city attorney and should not have ruled that defendant instituted the criminal prosecution against plaintiff in defendant's official capacity and should not have determined that defendant was immune from liability for malicious prosecution, where it did not appear on face of malicious prosecution complaint that defendant had initiated the prosecution in his official capacity. West's Ann.Veh.Code, § 679; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 740; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 72193; St.1933, p. 2743, § 42.

11. Criminal Law ⇐88

The jurisdiction of municipal courts in misdemeanor cases arising out of violations of state law, as distinct from violations of city charter or city ordinance, is not limited to cases which had been instituted by complaint issued by the city attorney. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 740; West's Ann.Gov. Code, § 72193.

John G. Oppenheimer, in pro. per., for appellant.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., and William B. Burge, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Action against W. D. Tamblyn and others for malicious prosecution. Following the sustaining of a demurrer interposed by defendant Roger Arnebergh with leave to amend, plaintiff filed an amended complaint against Arnebergh only. Arnebergh demurred to the amended complaint. The court sustained his demurrer without leave to amend and entered judgment in his favor. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment dismissing the action as to Arnebergh.

The amended complaint alleges: On or about February 15, 1955, defendant maliciously and without probable cause "filed a complaint and instituted a criminal prosecution in Los Angeles, California, against the plaintiff herein, charging that plaintiff had purportedly violated section 679 of the California Vehicle Code, in said city." Defendant "acted with oppression, fraud and malice" toward plaintiff. Plaintiff posted bail and paid $50 for the services of an attorney in defending against the charge. Plaintiff also alleges: "[A]fter a trial thereof, it was dismissed, and plaintiff's bail was exonerated in December, 1955." The prayer is for recovery of the attorney's fee and substantial general and exemplary damages.

[2–4] The elements of a cause of action for malicious prosecution are: (1) A judicial proceeding favorably terminated; (2) want of probable cause; and (3) mallice. Jaffe v. Stone, 18 Cal.2d 146, 114 P. 2d 335, 135 A.L.R. 775. Where the complaint alleges no facts from which it can be concluded that the prior proceedings terminated favorably to the plaintiff, it fails to state a cause of action. Roos v. Harris, 203 Cal. 201, 263 P. 225; Prentice v. Bertken, 50 Cal.App.2d 344, 123 P.2d 96; Barrier v. Alexander, 100 Cal.App.2d 497, 224 P.2d 436. And, as the Supreme Court said in Jaffe v. Stone, supra, 18 Cal.2d 146, at page 150, 114 P.2d 335, at page 338: "It is not enough, however, merely to show that the proceeding was dismissed. The theory underlying the requirement of favorable termination is that it tends to indicate the innocence of the accused, and coupled with the other elements of lack of probable cause and malice, establishes the tort * * *. [I]f the criminal proceeding goes to trial, it is ordinarily necessary, as a foundation for a malicious prosecution suit, that the plaintiff should have been acquitted. (Citations.) The same fundamental theory is applied in testing a dismissal or other termination without a complete trial on the merits. If it is of such a nature as to indicate the innocence of the accused, it is a favorable termination sufficient to satisfy the requirement. If, however, the dismissal is on technical grounds, for procedural reasons, or for any other reason not inconsistent with his guilt, it does not constitute a favorable termination."

Oppenheimer v. Tamblyn, 162 Cal.App.2d 293, 327 P.2d 574, 575, was an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of dismissal based upon an order sustaining, without leave to amend, the demurrer of defendant Wayne S. Vance to the original complaint in the present action. Plaintiff alleged therein that: "After due proceedings had in said criminal prosecution, it was dismissed." We held this allegation deficient as a pleading of favorable termination but we also held that although the complaint was subject to demurrer the court erred in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend as it did not appear that the complaint could not have been amended to allege the fact that the charges against plaintiff had been dismissed on some ground which established or tended to indicate his innocence.

[5, 6] Plaintiff's allegation that the prior criminal prosecution was dismissed after a trial is little better than his superseded allegation that it was dismissed after "due proceedings." The amended complaint was vulnerable to demurrer for uncertainty. But it does not follow that the demurrer should have been sustained without leave to amend. A trial may consist of a determination of issues of fact or of law. It does not appear that there was not a trial of the factual issues.

[7–9] Dismissal of the charge against Oppenheimer would have been tantamount to an acquittal and would have satisfied the requirement of a favorable termination if, at the close of the People's evidence, the court was convinced that it was insufficient to establish defendant's guilt and the dismissal was ordered on that ground.[1] This conclusion is consistent with the rule that a dismissal of an information by a committing magistrate because of the insufficiency of the evidence to warrant holding the accused for trial constitutes a favorable termination. Jaffe v. Stone, 18 Cal.2d 146, 151, 158, 114 P.2d 335, supra, and cases cited. It does not appear that plaintiff could not have amended his complaint to allege the fact, if it be a fact, that evidence was introduced at the trial, that he was placed in jeopardy, and that the case was dismissed for insufficient evidence. Since it is error to sustain a demurrer without leave to amend unless it is clear that a complaint cannot be amended to state a cause of action (39 Cal.Jur.2d 244), plaintiff should have been given leave to file a second amended complaint.

1. Upon the oral argument appellant stated "* * * After trial of said action it was dismissed for lack of sufficient evidence and plaintiff's bail was exonerated in December 1955" etc.

[10] The second question requiring discussion is whether the court erred in taking judicial notice that defendant is the City Attorney of the City of Los Angeles, in ruling that defendant instituted proceedings against plaintiff in his official capacity, and in determining that he is immune from liability for malicious prosecution.

A violation of Vehicle Code, section 679 (operating a vehicle upon a highway in an unsafe condition) is a misdemeanor. Defendant argues that it is the function of the city attorney to initiate misdemeanor proceedings, and that since it is alleged that he filed a complaint charging plaintiff with a misdemeanor, he could only have done so while acting in that capacity. We are not persuaded by this reasoning.

[11] Except as otherwise provided by law, all public offenses triable in inferior courts must be prosecuted by written complaint under oath subscribed by the complainant. Pen.Code § 740. It is the duty of the City Attorney of Los Angeles to draw complaints and to prosecute all misdemeanors committed within the city and within the jurisdiction of the municipal court of the district in which the city is located. Los Angeles City Charter § 42(8), Stats.1933, p. 2743; Gov.Code § 72193. But the jurisdiction of municipal courts in misdemeanor cases arising out of violations of state law, as distinct from violations of city charter or city ordinance, is not limited to cases which have been instituted by a complaint issued by the city attorney. People v. Barnhart, 37 Cal.App.2d Supp. 748, 94 P.2d 411.

Furthermore, it does not appear upon the face of plaintiff's amended complaint that defendant initiated the misdemeanor prosecution in his official capacity on the basis of information received by him in the course of his official duties. For aught that appears, defendant might have himself been the complaining witness and have verified the complaint and thus initiated proceedings against Oppenheimer as a private citizen. Defendant urges the contrary in reliance upon Norton v. Hoffmann, 34 Cal.App.2d 189, 93 P.2d 250. But that case is not in point. Chesebro and Hoffmann were sued for the malicious prosecution of an attorney who was charged with practicing law without a license; the complaint alleged that Chesebro was City Attorney of the City of Los Angeles and that Hoffmann was his deputy. The question arising upon their demurrer was whether the acts committed by them were within the scope of their official duties as prosecuting officers of the city and it was held that they were. The plaintiff contended that they were acting in their official capacities and it was alleged that they prosecuted the case. The court said, at pages 194–195 of 34 Cal.App. 2d, at page 253 of 93 P.2d: "It would appear from the complaint that what they did was under color of what was treated as authority derived from the public offices which they held." Such a conclusion does not follow from the amended complaint in the present case. It did not allege that Arnebergh prosecuted the case against plaintiff.

It should be a simple matter to obtain a determination upon a motion for summary judgment whether plaintiff can show that the dismissal amounted to an acquittal and that Arnebergh instituted the prosecution, if at all, in any capacity other than as city attorney. This would determine whether plaintiff is prosecuting the present action in good faith or is merely trifling with the court.

The judgment is reversed.

Actions by owners and occupants of homes in close proximity to a grain mill to enjoin operation of mill on ground that noise and dust therefrom constituted an abatable nuisance. The actions were consolidated for trial. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Tehama County, Albert F. Ross, J., the owners and occupants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem., held that evidence sustained finding that there was not sufficient noise and dust from plant to interfere with rest and peace of mind of persons of normal health, condition and sensibilities and that plaintiffs' real property had not depreciated materially, if at all, in rental or sale value or otherwise, insofar as their right to injunctive relief was concerned.

[1] A general statement of the facts of these cases may be found in McCarty v. Macy & Co., 153 Cal.App.2d 837, 315 P.2d 383, 384, and are as follows:

"For many years respondents have operated a grain mill in Red Bluff. The old plant was destroyed by fire in October, 1951, and was replaced by a new one which opened for operation in 1953. Appellants are the owners and occupants of homes in close proximity to respondents' mill. Four separate actions were filed by appellants in which they sought to enjoin the operation of the mill on the ground that the noise and dust therefrom constitute an abatable nuisance and to recover damages. The four cases were consolidated for trial, and apparently by stipulation of the parties the issue as to whether appellants were entitled to damages was expressly reserved for separate trial before a jury, and the court proceeded to try the equitable issue presented by the pleadings. At the conclusion of the trial the court adopted findings of fact and conclusions of law in each case, finding in substance that there was some noise and dust from the plant but not sufficient to interfere with the rest or peace of mind of persons of normal health, condition and sensibilities; that appellants' properties had not substantially depreciated in value as a result of respondents' operation; and that the issue of damages having been reserved for determination by the jury at a separate trial the court made no determination on that issue. On the basis of the facts found the court concluded that the plaintiffs had plain, speedy and adequate remedies at law; that there had not been shown sufficient cause for injunctive or other equitable relief; that such relief should be denied and that the several plaintiffs should be allowed to pursue their remedies at law if so advised. The court stated that immediately following the conclusion of trial of issues of law or abandonment of such issues, then judgment would be entered denying equitable relief."

Following the determination of the former appeal, appellants in the four companion cases moved the court for leave to amend their complaints by abandoning the claim for money damages set forth therein by striking therefrom those portions relating to alleged damages. The motions were granted and judgments were then entered denying appellants' injunctions or other equitable relief.

[2, 3] Appellants contend that the findings are unsupported by and are contrary to the evidence. There is no merit in this contention. The record shows that twelve disinterested witnesses testified for respondents. Eleven of them were people either residing or working in the immediate vicinity of the respondents' plant. All of them testified that little or no dust or noise or other disturbance emanated from respondents' plant at any time. Their testimony was in direct contradiction to that of the appellants and their witnesses. When two or more inferences can reasonably be deduced from the facts the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court. The weight and effect of the evidence was a matter for the trial court to determine. Crawford v. Southern Pacific Company, 3 Cal.2d 427, 45 P.2d 183.

[4] Appellants contend that under the pleadings they were entitled to a full and express finding as to whether they suffered damage. We do not agree with appellants for the reason that appellants have eliminated from this action the question as to what damages they actually suffered, if any. As hereinabove stated, the trial court found, in substance, that there was some noise and dust from the plant, but not sufficient to interfere with rest or peace of mind of persons of normal health, condition and sensibilities and with reference to the appellants' real property specifically found "that plaintiffs' said real property has not depreciated materially, if at all, in rental or sale value or otherwise. It is true that there are numerous residences in the vicinity of defendants' plant, but it is also true that both said plant and plaintiffs' home and premises are located immediately adjacent to the railroad right of way of Southern Pacific Company, and that the area in which defendants' said plant and plaintiffs' home are located is to a large extent used for commercial and business purposes and has been so used continuously for many years." (Italics ours.) We are of the opinion that the findings are amply sufficient on the issue of damages in so far as appellants' rights to injunctive relief are concerned.

> "* * * 'When an injunction to restrain a nuisance will produce great public or private mischief, a court of equity is not bound to grant it merely for the purpose of protecting a technical unsubstantial right.' 2 Beach on Injunctions, § 1067. 'The court may properly be guided by the consideration of the relative convenience of the parties; and if it appears that the benefit resulting to the plaintiff from the granting of the writ will be slight as compared to the injury to the defendant, the relief may be denied, and the plaintiff left to the pursuit of his remedy at law.' [Citing cases.]"

The trial court having found that there was some noise and dust from the plant, but not sufficient to interfere with rest or peace of mind of persons of normal health, condition and sensibilities, and that appellants' real property has not depreciated materially, if at all, in rental or sale value or otherwise it is obvious that any benefit resulting to the appellants from the granting of the writ would be slight as compared to the injury to the respondents. Consequently, appellants should be left to pursuit of their remedy at law. Further, as stated by the Supreme Court in the case of Anderson v. Souza, 38 Cal.2d 825, 843–844, 243 P.2d 497, 509:

> "* * * 'Contiguous property owners must to a reasonable degree yield their desired privacy to the general welfare which is contributed to by the operation of legitimate business. Were it not so, railroads could not operate near residences, and factories could not be established without the necessity of purchasing prohibitively large areas of property. That reasonable inconvenience must be suffered by owners whose holdings are contiguous to commercial enterprises is too well decided to require citation of authorities.'"

The judgments are affirmed.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an action to recover the value of merchandise allegedly sold by plaintiffs to defendants on an open book account. At the close of plaintiffs' case, defendants' motion for a nonsuit was denied. At the conclusion of the trial, plaintiffs moved for a directed verdict which likewise was denied. Following the entry of judgment on the verdict of the jury in the sum of $4,402.76, plaintiffs moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial. The court granted both motions, but by its order granting a new trial provided that it should be effective only if on appeal the judgment notwithstanding the verdict was reversed and the order granting a new trial was not appealed from, or, if appealed from, was affirmed. Thereafter judgment pursuant to said order granting judgment n. o. v. was entered in the sum of $7,977.07 and the defendants now appeal.

By their original complaint plaintiffs alleged that while doing business as the Petaluma Milling Company they sold and delivered feed and dairy supplies to defendants in the sum of $7,870.82, which sum included interest at 6% per annum to February 7, 1955. By their amended complaint said amount was increased to $9,043.63 including interest; and that said sum was now due and unpaid, with interest thereon at the rate of 6% per annum. Defendants answered, denying generally the allegations of the complaint. At the trial there appeared to be no question but that defendants were indebted to plaintiffs. The issue related not so much to the amount of the principal of the debt as it did to the interest, if any, to be charged.

In this regard, from the evidence adduced, the jury could have found that interest had been charged on the account for the period covered in the complaint with the exception of a period of time from May 1, 1947 to December 31, 1948; that there was an oral agreement that no interest was to be charged; that interest was waived for the period of May, 1947 through December, 1948 only; or that any waiver of interest was conditioned upon payment of the balance due and keeping the account current. In regard to this last possibility, it could have been found that the condition failed and that the plaintiffs were thereafter entitled to charge interest for the full period covered by the complaint.

Defendants' first contention is that the trial court erred in granting plaintiffs' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict in that the evidence was in conflict and that the trial court in granting the motion weighed the evidence and substituted its own conclusions for those of the jury.

[1–4] It would appear unnecessary to quote the rather lengthy provisions of Section 629 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is sufficient to note that the power of the court to order a judgment n. o. v. is predicated primarily upon an unlawful denial of a motion for a directed verdict or, stated otherwise, if, under the facts of the case, a motion for a directed verdict could not have been granted, then it follows that the court could not order a judgment n. o. v. Tracey v. L. A. Paving Co., 4 Cal.App.2d 700, 41 P.2d 942. Whether or not a motion for judgment n. o. v. should be granted must be determined in light of the rules relative to a directed verdict, i.e., conceding as true the evidence most favorable to the adverse party and giving to it all reasonable inferences which may be drawn therefrom, it must appear that there is no substantial evidence to support a verdict in his favor. Applying such rule to the evidence presented in the present case, it it quite apparent that the jury could have returned various verdicts, all supported by substantial evidence. Necessarily, therefore, under such circumstances, the court was without power to grant plaintiffs' motion for a directed verdict and thus was equally without power to order a judgment n. o. v.

[5, 6] Additionally, section 629 provides that a motion for a judgment n. o. v. may be made with the alternative reservation of the right to move for a new trial and that the court shall pass upon both. But that is not to say that the court may "weigh the evidence and resolve conflicts, and, as a consequence, substitute its conclusions on the facts for that of the jury" and order judgment n. o. v. Tracey v. L. A. Paving Co., supra, 4 Cal.App.2d at page 706, 41 P.2d at page 945, for as the court also noted in the Tracey case if that were permitted it "would have the effect of depriving the aggrieved litigant of his constitutional right to a trial by jury. Upon such a hearing, unless the court is satisfied that error was committed in denying the motion for directed verdict, its power is limited to granting the motion for a new trial * * *." Of course evidence that might justify a new trial would not necessarily justify a directed verdict.

[7] Defendants' next contention is that the granting of plaintiffs' motion for a new trial upon the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence was error since there was ample evidence to support the verdict of the jury. But such is not the rule. "* * * [I]t is only in rare cases showing abuse of discretion that an appellate court will interfere because the trial judge must weigh all the evidence and determine the just conclusion to be drawn therefrom. [Citing case.] It cannot be held that a trial court has abused its discretion where there is a conflict in the evidence or where there is any evidence which would support a judgment in favor of the moving party." Hames v. Rust, 14 Cal.2d 119, 124, 92 P.2d 1010, 1012.

In the instant case the evidence was definitely conflicting and, as previously noted, would have sustained any one of several conclusions. Under such circumstances, and absent any showing of an abuse of discretion, the order of the trial court granting the new trial must be affirmed.

[8–11] Defendants also contend that plaintiffs failed to prove an open book account and, having so failed, defendants' motion for a nonsuit should have been granted. The bookkeeping system introduced into evidence by defendants was for all practical purposes the same as used in the case of Thompson v. Machado, 78 Cal. App.2d 870, 178 P.2d 838, where the court held that such a system was sufficient proof of an open book account. The denial of defendants' motion for a nonsuit not being an appealable order, the same must be dismissed. Here it also should be noted that defendants' appeal from the verdict of the jury, which is not appealable, must be dismissed as must be their appeal from the judgment on the verdict, since that was vacated by the subsequent order of the court. Further, the order granting the motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, not being an appealable order must likewise be dismissed.

We find nothing in the further contentions made by defendants which warrant further discussion.

The appeal from the order denying defendants' motion for nonsuit, the appeal from the verdict of the jury, the appeal from the judgment on the verdict, and the appeal from the order granting the motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict are dismissed. The judgment notwithstanding the verdict is reversed and the order granting a new trial is affirmed.

Action for rescission of contract under which defendants were to purchase and operate bail bond business with money advanced by plaintiffs for a compensation of $100 per week plus all expenses and 10% of all premium charges received in such bail bond business and a bail bond business conducted by plaintiffs, which premium was ultimately to be used for purchase by defendants of an interest in both bail bond businesses, and for declaratory relief respecting ownership of the businesses. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Orange County, Claude M. Owens, J., the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shepard, J., held that evidence sustained finding that defendants failed to deposit receipts of business operated by them in trustee account as agreed, that they failed to keep accounts as agreed, that plaintiffs failed to pay amounts agreed to be paid to defendants and to furnish defendants with an accounting of premiums, and that an independent agreement separate from original agreement had been negotiated with ultimate purpose of defendants buying both businesses, and that such subsequent agreement had not been completed therefore entitling defendants to return of payments made pursuant thereto.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Contracts ⇐322(3)
Money Received ⇐18(3)

In action for rescission of contract under which defendants were to purchase and operate bail bond business with money advanced by plaintiffs for $100 per week plus all expenses and 10% of all premium charges received in such bail bond business and a bail bond business conducted by plaintiffs which premiums were ultimately to be used for purchase by defendants of an interest in both bail bond businesses, and for declaratory relief respecting ownership of the businesses, evidence sustained finding that defendants failed to deposit receipts of business operated by them in trustee account as agreed, that they failed to keep accounts as agreed, that plaintiffs failed to pay amounts agreed to be paid to defendants and to furnish defendants with an accounting of premiums, and that an independent agreement separate from original agreement had been negotiated with ultimate purpose of defendants buying both businesses and that such subsequent agreement had not been completed, entitling defendants to return of payments made pursuant thereto.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1010(2)

Party claiming that evidence is insufficient to support the findings must affirmatively show that there is no competent evidence to support the findings and mere recital of evidence favorable to complaining party is of no avail, even though reviewing court may believe that preponderance of evidence is contrary to trial court's finding.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1008(1, 3)

Where construction of oral contract or of an uncertain written agreement is, with aid of testimony, not unreasonable or inconsistent with the evidence, conclusion of trial court will not be disturbed.

SHEPARD, Justice.

[1] In May, 1955, Henry and Mildred M. Williams (hereinafter called plaintiffs) made a contract partly in writing and partly oral with John G. and Maryesther Denver (hereinafter called defendants) by which defendants were to purchase and operate a bail bond business, which we will hereinafter call the "Webb" business. The purchase was made with money advanced by plaintiffs. Ostensibly, the business was to be owned by defendants but actually defendants were to act as the agents of plaintiffs, both in the purchase and operation. Plaintiffs were already operating another bail bond business in their own name, so that with the new purchase they became the owners of two bail bond businesses. The one which they operated under their own name we will hereinafter refer to as the "Williams" business.

Defendants agreed to deposit all receipts of the Webb business with Elliott and Murray, as trustees, and all business expenses and disbursements were to be made from such trust account. Defendants were to receive as compensation $100 per week plus all expenses, plus 10% of all premium charges received in both the Webb and the Williams businesses. One half of this percentage was to be deposited in a special trust savings account, also in the name of Elliott and Murray as trustees, to be held by the trustees for use by defendants in the ultimate intended purchase of an interest in both businesses.

Disputes resulting from alleged failure to pay into the trust fund, failure to pay compensation to defendants, failure on the part of both parties to render accounts, and other dissatisfaction resulted in the filing of this action for rescission, for an accounting, and for declaratory relief respecting the ownership of the businesses. After hearing extensive evidence the trial court rendered judgment denying an accounting and covering other matters not the subject of this appeal, adjudging plaintiffs the owners of both businesses, and decreeing that an independent agreement separate and different from the original agreement had been negotiated with the ultimate purpose of defendants buying both businesses from plaintiffs; that $6,000 had been paid thereon but that this last separate agreement was never completed and, therefore, the $6,000 paid thereon should be returned by plaintiffs to defendants. Plaintiffs have appealed from the portions of the judgment last above noted.

The court found, among other things, that defendants failed to deposit the receipts of the Webb business in the trustee account as agreed; that defendants failed to keep accounts as agreed; that plaintiffs failed to pay the amounts agreed to be paid to defendants and failed to furnish defendants with an accounting of premiums collected in the Williams business. After an examination of the entire record we are satisfied that there is substantial evidence to support these findings. In this connection, it must be particularly noted that plaintiff Henry Williams in his own testimony placed the reason for his failure to pay into the trust account and failure to account on the ground that he had no such obligation, and not on the ground of prior default by defendants.

As a result of these findings the trial court apparently found that the plaintiffs had not come into equity with clean hands and were, therefore, not entitled to an accounting. DeGarmo v. Goldman, 19 Cal.2d 755, 765(6), 123 P.2d 1; Richman v. Bank of Perris, 102 Cal.App. 71, 82, 83(4) (5), 282 P. 801.

[2] Since the plaintiffs have taken the position that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, the plaintiffs must affirmatively show that there is no competent evidence to support these findings. Their recital of evidence favorable to them is of no avail. Nichols v. Mitchell, 32 Cal.2d 598, 600, 197 P.2d 550; Zainudin v. Meizel, 119 Cal.App.2d 265, 270(9), 259 P.2d 460. This is true even though an appellate court should believe that the preponderance of the evidence is contrary to the trial court's findings. Freeland v. Jewel Tea Co., 118 Cal.App.2d 764, 768(2), 258 P.2d 1032.

[3] A second cause of action asks for declaratory relief as to the ownership of the "Webb" business. The court found on sufficient evidence that there had been negotiations and an incomplete effort by defendants to buy the businesses from plaintiffs; that $6,000 had been paid thereon by defendants to plaintiffs and that this sum should be returned because the transaction was never completed; and that the defendants are not the owners of either of the businesses. This order for the return of the $6,000 is based on an action for declaratory relief, which is entirely different from the cause of action in rescission and accounting, and is one in which the court is not mandatorily controlled by the same rules as those involved in an action for rescission and accounting. It must be noted that if this court took the view of the evidence that is taken by plaintiffs then all of the matters subject to this portion of the action were inextricably interwoven and a reversal of any part would compel the reversal of the whole judgment, and the whole matter would have to be sent back for an entirely new trial. American Enterprise, Inc. v. Van Winkle, 39 Cal.2d 210, 217(4), 246 P.2d 935.

However, as we view the evidence, it was entirely reasonable to conclude that the payment of $6,000 was pursuant to separate negotiations by which the parties unsuccessfully sought to bridge over all their troubles with an entirely new contract. We, therefore, cannot disturb the trial court's conclusion.

"When the construction of an oral contract or of an uncertain written agreement is with the aid of testimony not unreasonable or inconsistent with the evidence, the conclusion of the trial court will not be disturbed." In re Estate of Guasti, 117 Cal.App.2d 612, 617(4b), 256 P.2d 629, 633.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Edwin B. ROBERTS, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6298.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 20, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 18, 1959.

Defendant was convicted of knowingly issuing a check with insufficient funds, and with intent to defraud, and of grand theft of an automobile. The trial court, Clement D. Nye, J., entered judgment, and defendant appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that failure of trial court, on its own motion, to give instruction embodying principle that to justify conviction on circumstantial evidence, facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with theory of guilt, but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, was not prejudicial error, where trial court gave instruction that where evidence is susceptible to two constructions that appear reasonable, jury must adopt construction in favor of defendant's innocence, and instruction that when case rests chiefly on circumstantial evidence, each fact, which is essential to complete chain of circumstances that will establish guilt, must be proved beyond reasonable doubt, and where jury rejected defendant's version of the transaction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

4. False Pretenses ⇐39

In prosecution for knowingly issuing a check with insufficient funds and with intent to defraud, intent to defraud could be inferred from conduct of defendant or from circumstances surrounding transaction. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 476a.

5. Criminal Law ⇐829(15)

In prosecution for knowingly issuing a check with insufficient funds and with intent to defraud and for grand theft of automobile, failure of trial court, on its own motion, to give instruction embodying principle that to justify conviction on circumstantial evidence, facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with theory of guilt, but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, was not prejudicial error, where trial court gave instruction that where evidence is susceptible to two constructions that appear reasonable, jury must adopt construction in favor of defendant's innocence, and instruction that when case rests chiefly on circumstantial evidence, each fact which is essential to complete chain of circumstances that will establish guilt must be proved beyond reasonable doubt, and where jury rejected defendant's version of the transaction. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 476a, 487, subd. 3.

6. Criminal Law ⇐1037(1, 2), 1044

Failure of defendant to make any objection or assignment of misconduct or to move for mistrial or to seek any instruction admonishing jury to disregard allegedly improper argument of deputy district attorney precluded reversal of judgment of conviction because of allegedly improper argument.

7. Criminal Law ⇐829(3)

In prosecution for knowingly issuing a check with insufficient funds and with intent to defraud and for grand theft of automobile, failure of trial court, on its own motion, to give instructions covering general definition of theft, intent in theft cases, definition of larceny by trick and device, or definition of theft by false pretenses was not prejudicial error under circumstances, where trial court instructed jury that every person who shall feloniously steal, take, or drive away the automobile of another is guilty of grand theft regardless of the value of the automobile. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 476a, 487, subd. 3.

8. Criminal Law ⇐824(5)

In prosecution for knowingly issuing a check with insufficient funds, and with intent to defraud, and for grand theft of automobile, failure of trial court on its own motion to instruct jury that an oral extrajudicial admission of defendant should be viewed with caution was not error, where the only statement claimed to be an extrajudicial admission by defendant was the statement that he opened a bank account the latter part of February or the first of March, and it was uncontradicted that defendant opened his account with bank in latter part of March. West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 476a, 487, subd. 3.

9. Criminal Law ⇐824(1)

In a criminal case, trial court is required to instruct jury of trial court's own motion on law relating to facts of the case and on matters vital to a proper consideration of the evidence, but reviewing courts will scrutinize with great care any claim of prejudicial error predicated solely on omission of trial court to give of its own motion an instruction, the propriety of which is indicated solely by the condition of the evidence.

Harold J. Ackerman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Arthur C. deGoede, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

HERNDON, Justice.

After a jury trial, appellant was convicted of (1) knowingly issuing a check with insufficient funds and with intent to defraud (Penal Code, § 476a) and (2) grand theft of an automobile (Penal Code, § 487, subd. 3). He had admitted a prior felony conviction of incest. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

In the early part of March, 1956, appellant went to Mike McCarthy Lincoln-Mercury Co. (hereinafter referred to as McCarthy) and after discussion with a salesman signed an order for a new car with specified accessories for the stated price of $3,700 "plus". When appellant suggested making a deposit of $100, the sales manager stated that he wouldn't order such a car from the factory without a larger deposit. The following day appellant made a deposit of $425 whereupon McCarthy ordered the car from the factory.

On March 26, 1956, having received notice that his car had arrived, appellant went to the McCarthy agency to take delivery.

He informed the sales manager that he was going to finance the car with the Automobile Club to the extent of $2,500 and that he would make up the difference with a down payment. Advised that the required down payment would be $1,037.52, he made out, signed and delivered to McCarthy's sales manager a counter check in that amount drawn on the Bank of Encino. At the same time he signed in blank a conditional sales contract bearing the notation "Until check arrives, $2500 from Auto Club due 4–1–56." He indicated that he would go to the Automobile Club and make arrangements to finance the $2,500 and that this amount would be sent to McCarthy in due course. The sales manager testified that he relied on the validity of the check in allowing the appellant to take the automobile.

The records of the Bank of Encino disclosed that on the date the check was issued, appellant had no account, but that on March 28, 1956, he opened an account with a balance of $661.08. Appellant had no other account with the bank at that time, and had made no arrangements for the extension of credit. A $500 check which was a part of the opening deposit was dishonored and returned on April 2, 1956. As of April 20, 1956, the balance in the account had declined to $12.11. McCarthy received no word from either appellant or the Automobile Club after March 26. The check given by appellant to cover the down payment on the automobile was returned to McCarthy dishonored after about five days. During the next three weeks representatives of the McCarthy Agency went to appellant's residence ten or twelve times in an effort to locate appellant, but found no one at the address, although furniture was observed therein. Messages left at appellant's address were unanswered. McCarthy repossessed the automobile in Fresno, California, sometime in May, 1956.

Appellant testified in substance: that the check for $1,037.52 was to be used only after appellant notified McCarthy that it might be cashed; that he told the sales manager that he did not have the money at the time, but would be getting some within a few days; that the sales manager said: "* * * give me a check for it * * * and I will hold the check until you give me an o:k to put it in the bank. And in case in the event that you don't, we'll finance it through our own financing institution"; that when the appellant told the sales manager he did not have a bank account, the latter stated "* * * surely you will have a bank account"; that it was appellant's understanding that the blank conditional sales contract was signed so that if the check could not be covered, or the Automobile Club loan was not realized, financing would be completed through the use of the conditional sales contract; that appellant was employed and had reasonable expectations of receiving sufficient funds to cover the check; that he never intended to defraud McCarthy, but fully intended to make the check good when he issued it.

[1–4] Our recital of the facts sufficiently refutes appellant's contention that the evidence is insufficient as a matter of law to sustain the judgment. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778. Implicit in the verdict of the jury is a rejection of appellant's testimony that he issued the check in good faith and upon the understanding that its delivery and use were conditional upon further authorization. Cf. People v. De Paula, 43 Cal.2d 643, 649, 276 P.2d 600. Intent to defraud is a question of fact. People v. Leon, 163 Cal.App.2d 791, 329 P.2d 996. Such intent may be inferred from the conduct of the accused or from the circumstances surrounding the transaction. People v. Leon, supra; People v. Markos, 146 Cal.App.2d 82, 85, 303 P.2d 363.

A more serious question is presented by appellant's contention that the trial court erred in failing upon its own motion to give "* * * an instruction embodying the principle that to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence the facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with the theory of guilt but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion." People v. Yrigoyen, 45 Cal.2d 46, 49, 286 P.2d 153; See CALJIC Number 27. Appellant was represented at the trial by counsel, at whose request the court gave CALJIC Number 26, which reads as follows: "If the evidence in this case [as to either count] is susceptible of two constructions or interpretations, each of which appears to you to be reasonable, and one of which points to the guilt of the defendant, and the other to his innocence, it is your duty, under the law, to adopt that interpretation which will admit of the defendant's innocence, and reject that which points to his guilt. You will notice that this rule applies only when both of the two possible opposing conclusions appear to you to be reasonable. If, on the other hand, one of the possible conclusions should appear to you to be reasonable and the other to be unreasonable, it would be your duty to adhere to the reasonable deduction and to reject the unreasonable, bearing in mind, however, that even if the reasonable deduction points to defendant's guilt, the entire proof must carry the convincing force required by law to support a verdict of guilt" and CALJIC Number 28, which reads as follows: "When the case which has been made out by the People against a defendant rests entirely or chiefly on circumstantial evidence, and in any case before the jury may find a defendant guilty basing its finding solely on such evidence, each fact which is essential to complete a chain of circumstances that will establish the defendant's guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Counsel made no request for CALJIC Number 27 in either form or substance.

Appellant relies on People v. Yrigoyen, supra, 45 Cal.2d 46, 286 P.2d 1 [a prosecution for issuing a check with insufficient funds] and People v. Neel, 151 Cal.App.2d 1, 310 P.2d 986 [grand theft of an automobile] in which judgments of conviction were reversed on the ground that the trial court committed prejudicial error in failing sua sponte to give an instruction to the effect that to find the defendant guilty on circumstantial evidence alone the proved circumstances must be irreconcilable with any other rational conclusion than that of guilt.

In both of these cases, however, the trial court had failed to give any instruction to the jury on the interpretation of circumstantial evidence, although the People's evidence as to the defendant's criminal intent was necessarily circumstantial. The instant case presents quite a different situation. Assuming that an instruction embodying the substance of CALJIC Number 27 should have been given the jury, the question before us is whether the appellant was prejudiced by the trial court's failure to act on its own motion to give more complete instructions to supplement those requested by the defendant. In considering this question we note that the instruction which appellant now contends should have been given (CALJIC Number 27) is found in the one-volume text under the heading "Circumstantial Evidence" from which counsel for appellant presumably selected and requested CALJIC Numbers 26 and 28, which were given the jury. The failure of appellant's counsel to request CALJIC Number 27 indicates to us that he consciously and purposefully rejected that instruction, possibly under the belief that the other instructions requested and given would better serve his client's interest. CALJIC Number 26 required the jury to give the defendant the benefit of any reasonable interpretation of the evidence which was favorable to his innocence, and CALJIC Number 28 informed the jury that each fact essential to an incriminating chain of circumstances must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Cf. People v. Webster, 79 Cal.App.2d 321, 328–329, 179 P.2d 633.

Precisely the contention now made by appellant was rejected in the recent case of People v. Barkoff, 163 Cal.App.2d 639, 329 P.2d 1005 (hearing denied). In that case the defendant was convicted in a jury trial of two counts of abortion. The facts were not involved: the defendant admitted inserting a pessary (a contraceptive device which may induce abortion) in the body of the prosecution's female witness, and

"* * * the main issue was the intent with which he did it—was it for purposes of abortion as claimed by the prosecution, or for contraceptive purposes as claimed by the defendant?" 163 Cal.App.2d at page 643, 329 P.2d at page 1008. At the defendant's request the court gave CALJIC Number 26, but did not give Numbers 27 or 28 on circumstantial evidence. On appeal, as in the instant case, the defendant contended that the court sua sponte should have given CALJIC Number 27 or a similar instruction. After a comprehensive review of the applicable precedents, the court concluded that the failure to give CALJIC Number 27 was not prejudicial to the defendant. In affirming the judgment of conviction the court remarked: "While CALJIC No. 27 should have been given, the failure to do so under the circumstances here was not prejudicial. The court did give CALJIC No. 26 which while not as strong as CALJIC No. 27 did require the jury to give the defendant the benefit of any reasonable interpretation of the evidence favorable to his innocence. In the second place and more important, the evidence of defendant's guilt, although circumstantial, is overwhelming. It just is not reasonable to expect any reasonable person to believe under the circumstances of this case that defendant, having been told that the women were pregnant, inserted the pessaries for contraceptive purposes. It is inconceivable that had the jury been given CALJIC No. 27 in addition to CALJIC No. 26, any different result would have followed." People v. Barkoff, supra, 163 Cal.App.2d at page 645, 329 P.2d at page 1009.

[5] In the instant case the jury refused to believe the defendant's testimony as to the circumstances under which he gave a check on a non-existent bank account and found him guilty as charged. Since the jury rejected defendant's version of the transaction, it is inconceivable that the giving of the additional instruction on the subject of circumstantial evidence would have had any effect on the result. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 836, 299 P.2d 243; People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 163 P.2d 8; see People v. Williams, 153 Cal.App.2d 5, 9, 314 P.2d 161.

Appellant's third contention is that the deputy district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in arguing to the jury that on the basis of defendant's admission of the prior felony conviction of incest he was an immoral person. The following are the portions of the argument of the district attorney of which the appellant now complains: "That man [the defendant] has been convicted of a felony. Now, it's very rare that this is allowed to be shown; only in cases of impeachment can a man's past record be brought up, and only in regard to felonies can it be brought up. But it is permissible to show it. In this felony, true it is not connected in any way with this case; but that's a felony that violates every written law and every moral law, and yet, that man sat upon this witness stand and has taken an oath to God, and Mr. Stanton wants you to believe that man over these other people and over the physical facts and physical evidence. Well, that can be done.

"Now, there's a little bit more about Mr. Roberts. He's not only been convicted of a felony, which violates, as I said, the moral and written law; but he's told you some things up on the witness stand that I don't think are quite what he wanted you to believe. * * *

"Before I close, let me just say this. The case actually really boils down a lot to the matter of credibility; boils down to who you are going to believe. And it boils down to what type of character, what—is this man a savoury character or unsavoury character? I think you can consider that in deciding. And again you can consider the man's prior conviction of incest."

[6] Conceding, arguendo, that the comments of the deputy district attorney might have exceeded the bounds of propriety, the failure of appellant to make any objection or assignment of misconduct or to move for a mistrial or to seek any instruction admonishing the jury to disregard the allegedly improper argument should preclude a reversal on this ground. See People v. Moore, 143 Cal.App.2d 333, 338, 299 P.2d 691. Moreover, each of the deputy district attorney's statements concerning the prior conviction was made solely in reference to the question of appellant's credibility. Cf. People v. Brain, 17 Cal.App.2d 141, 143, 61 P.2d 806.

[7] Appellant's fourth contention is that the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury upon the elements of the crime of theft. The trial court instructed the jury that "It is the law of this state that every person who shall feloniously steal, take or drive away the automobile of another is guilty of grand theft regardless of the value of the vehicle." Appellant points out that the court failed to give instructions covering the general definition of theft, intent in theft cases, the definition of larceny by trick and device or the definition of theft by false pretenses. However, appellant made no request for any of these instructions, and it does not appear that the failure of the court to give them sua sponte should be regarded as prejudicial error under the circumstances of this case. The cases cited by appellant do not appear to sustain his contention.

[8] Finally, appellant argues that the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury that an oral extrajudicial admission of the defendant should be viewed with caution. The only statement alluded to in appellant's brief as constituting an extrajudicial admission is the following attributed to appellant in the testimony of the arresting officer: "He was asked when he opened that bank account, and he stated that he opened it approximately the latter part of February or the first of March * * *."

There seems to be no merit in this contention for two reasons. In the first place, appellant did not request the instruction, and, in the second place, the quoted statement attributed to appellant did not constitute any admission of guilt. It is uncontradicted that appellant opened his account with the drawee bank in the latter part of March.

[9] It should be observed that many of the questions presented on the instant appeal revolve about appellant's contentions that the trial court, on its own motion, should have given certain instructions even though the defendant did not request them. Appellant was represented by counsel in the trial court, and his failure to request any of the instructions now asserted as grounds for reversal should be regarded as significant. Of course, "[i]n a criminal case the trial court is required to instruct the jury of its own motion upon the law relating to the facts of the case and upon matters vital to a proper consideration of the evidence." People v. Yrigoyen, supra, 45 Cal.2d 46, 49, 286 P.2d 1, 3; People v. Putnam, 20 Cal.2d 885, 890–891, 129 P.2d 367. However, "[r]eviewing courts will scrutinize with great care any claim of prejudicial error predicated solely upon the omission of the trial court to give of its own motion an instruction, the propriety of which is indicated solely by the condition of the evidence." People v. Davis, 43 Cal. 2d 661, 674, 276 P.2d 801, 808; see People v. Richardson, 74 Cal.App.2d 528, 533, 169 P.2d 44.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MOHAWK PETROLEUM CORPORATION (a Corporation), Appellant.

S. F. 19960.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Jan. 23, 1959.

Action by invitee against owner of gasoline station for personal injuries sustained when customer of owner used air hose to blow out gasoline line and caused stream of gasoline from tank to strike the invitee. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, A. K. Wylie, J., entered judgment for the invitee and the owner appealed. The Supreme Court, McComb, J., held where the customer had for six or seven hours been repairing his truck on the owner's premises but there was no evidence that he had done anything negligent until using the air hose, and there was nothing to put owner on notice that he might act negligently, the owner was not liable for the invitee's injuries.

Reversed.

Carter, J., dissented.

Opinion, 322 P.2d 551, vacated.

1. Negligence ⇐48, 50, 52

Possessor who holds land out to public for entry for his business purposes is liable to members of the public on the land for business purpose for their injuries sustained by accidental, negligent, or intentionally harmful acts of third persons if the possessor by exercise of reasonable care could have discovered the third person's acts were being or about to be done and the possessor could have protected the public by controlling the third person's conduct or by warning the public.

2. Negligence ⇐68

In absence of conduct to put person on notice to contrary, a person is entitled to assume others will not act negligently or unlawfully.

3. Negligence ⇐48

Where owner operated self-service gasoline station and customer pushed vehicle aside on the station property and tried for six or seven hours to repair it, and then proceeded to blow out gasoline line to gasoline tank with air hose, and thereby caused stream of gasoline to be ejected from the tank in face of another invitee, but there was no evidence that the customer had done anything negligent before this nor evidence of anything to put the owner on notice that customer might act negligently, the owner was not liable for the invitee's injuries.

McCOMB, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff after trial before a jury in an action to recover damages for personal injuries received while plaintiff was a business visitor on defendant's property.

Facts: Defendant owned a self-service gasoline station in San Francisco, on a lot approximately 100 feet square. Gasoline was dispensed from pumps located in the center of the lot. Air and water facilities were located along a side of the lot for use by customers desiring to service their own vehicles. On the same edge of the lot and near the air and water outlets, a large blackboard was maintained by defendant for posting winning numbers in drawings of tickets previously given purchasers of defendant's gasoline.

On July 7, 1953, Mr. Paris, a customer, bought some gasoline for his pick-up truck. Being unable to start the motor, he pushed his truck over to the area where the air and water fixtures were situated. He worked on the battery and motor for six or seven hours.

The station attendant paid no attention to Mr. Paris' activities, and did not offer to assist him or render any aid. Mr. Paris finally decided that the pipeline leading to the gasoline tank on his truck might be plugged. He then proceeded to blow it out with the air hose provided to inflate tires. Instead of the usual metal cap on the intake hole of the gasoline tank, there was simply a rag stuffed into the vent. Mr. Paris did not remove this rag, but disconnected the main gasoline line from underneath the car and attached the air hose to it to blow out the line.

In the meantime, plaintiff and her husband drove into the station. While her husband was purchasing gasoline, plaintiff got out of the car and went to the blackboard to see whether she held any winning tickets in the drawing. She was standing immediately at the rear of Mr. Paris' truck when suddenly a stream of gasoline from the truck's tank hit her in the face, causing serious burns on her face, chest, arms and neck. Her eyesight was materially impaired.

The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $5,000.

[1] This is the sole question necessary for us to determine: Does the mere fact that a business visitor has for some time been working on his vehicle on property owned by defendant constitute substantial evidence in and of itself to put the defendant-owner on notice that other business visitors are thereby threatened with danger, and is such "possibility" sufficient to impose liability on the owner where an injury arises out of a momentary, isolated, negligent act by the business visitor working on his vehicle?

No. The rule is correctly stated thus in Restatement, Torts, section 348:

"A * * * possessor of land who holds it out to the public for entry for his business purposes, is subject to liability to members of the public while upon the land for such purpose for bodily harm caused to them by the accidental, negligent or intentionally harmful acts of third persons or animals if the possessor by the exercise of reasonable care could have

(a) discovered that such acts were being done or were about to be done, and

(b) protected the members of the public by

(i) controlling the conduct of the third persons, or

(ii) giving a warning adequate to enable them to avoid the harm without relinquishing any of the services which they are entitled to receive from [him]."

[2] This rule presupposes that the owner of the land by reasonable care could have discovered that the act which caused the harm was being done or was about to be done.

In Porter v. California Jockey Club, Inc., 134 Cal.App.2d 158, 160 [2], 285 P.2d 60, 61, the rule is stated thus: "It is axiomatic that in the absence of conduct to put him on notice to the contrary a person is entitled to assume that others will not act negligently or unlawfully. (Citation.)" (See also Mawhiney v. Signal Trucking Co., 132 Cal.App.2d 809, 813 [3], 283 P.2d 27.)

[3] Applying the foregoing rule to the facts of the present case, there is no evidence in the record that Mr. Paris had been behaving negligently, nor is there any evidence of any fact which could possibly have put defendant on notice that he might act negligently. Under the circumstances and the authorities cited above, defendant was not liable for the injuries sustained by plaintiff. (See Guild v. Brown, 115 Cal.App. 374, 381, 1 P.2d 528.)

Raber v. Tumin, 36 Cal.2d 654, 226 P.2d 574; Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen, 27 Cal.2d 802, 167 P.2d 729; Johnstone v. Panama Pacific I. E. Co., 187 Cal. 323, 202 P. 34; Sample v. Eaton, 145 Cal.App.2d 312, 302 P.2d 431 [hearing denied by the Supreme Court]; Goldsmith v. Mills, 130 Cal.App.2d 493, 279 P.2d 51; Thomas v. Studio Amusements, Inc., 50 Cal.App.2d 538, 123 P.2d 552; Basye v. Craft's Golden State Shows, 43 Cal.App.2d 782, 111 P.2d 746 [hearing denied by the Supreme Court]; and Szasz v. Joyland Co., 84 Cal.App. 259, 257 P. 871 [hearing denied by the Supreme Court], relied on by plaintiff, are not in point, for the reason that in each of the cases there was either an allegation (as in the cases decided on demurrer), or proof (as in the cases decided after trial) of facts putting the owner of the property on notice of negligent conduct which threatened the safety of a business visitor.

As pointed out above, in the present case there was an absence of any such evidence; therefore, the cited cases are not authority for plaintiff's position.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

Plaintiff was a business invitee of defendant, the operator of a self-service gasoline station. Plaintiff left her automobile to check a large blackboard maintained by defendant to notify customers of the winning numbers of tickets previously distributed to them. The blackboard was located near the air hose. While checking the numbers, she was injured by a stream of gasoline which was produced by the negligent acts of another invitee, Mr. Paris, who was blowing out the gas line of his truck. Mr. Paris was repairing his truck on the station premises with the permission of defendant and had been doing so for several hours. He was permitted by defendant to use the facilities made available by defendant for motorists.

Plaintiff contended that defendant did not exercise reasonable care in protecting her from the danger created by Mr. Paris in the use of said facilities, and that this negligence proximately caused her injuries. A jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff, thus determining defendant's liability for the injury suffered by her.

There is no dispute as to the applicable rules of law. A landowner is under a duty of reasonable care to protect business invitees from harmful acts of third persons where he actually knows of a danger, or where, in the exercise of reasonable care, he should know a danger might exist. It is also conceded that there is no evidence that defendant had actual knowledge that Paris was engaging in negligent activities. Thus, the sole issue is whether there is any evidence from which a jury could infer that defendant, in the exercise of reasonable care, should have known that Mr. Paris might create an unreasonable risk of harm to other invitees by the negligent use of the available facilities. In other words, was there a fact question for the jury to determine?

An important factor in this case, which is entirely ignored by the majority of this court, is that Paris was using facilities provided by defendant when he inflicted the injury upon plaintiff and that he was using these facilities in a careless and negligent manner. In other words, it was the negligent use of defendant's facilities which was the proximate cause of the injury suffered by plaintiff. Of course, defendant knew that Paris was using its facilities, and it obviously owed a duty to plaintiff, and all others similarly situated, to see that such facilities were not so used as to cause them injury. If the injury had resulted from conduct by Paris without the negligent use of defendant's facilities, a different question would be presented, as such conduct would be beyond the control of defendant. Here it may be said that defendant knowingly permitted Paris to negligently use defendant's facilities and thus cause injury to plaintiff. There should be no question of liability in such a case, as it falls clearly within the rule stated in section 348 of the Restatement of Torts quoted in the majority opinion.

The evidence on this point was clearly and succinctly summarized by Mr. Presiding Justice Peters, who wrote the opinion when this case was before the District Court of Appeal, which affirmed the judgment. It is as follows: "* * * appellant [defendant] furnished a place for customers to work on their cars. Appellant knew, or should have known, that persons using the facilities furnished by it might include amateurs, hot-rodders, and other do-it-yourselfers. It is certainly a reasonable possibility that such persons working on an instrumentality such as an automobile might create a dangerous situation. Yet appellant made no effort at all to discover what Paris was doing or how he might be doing it. He invited other customers to come to the area by maintaining the blackboard in the immediate vicinity of the area where Paris was working. No warning signs were posted to warn invitees of the possible danger. Appellant knew, or should have known, that Paris was working on his car for many hours. Appellant knew that the trouble was not battery trouble because appellant's employee had sold Paris a new battery and the employee knew that this did not start Paris' car. Certainly the attendant knew, or should have known, * * * that Paris might be engaged in any one of several activities that could create a danger to those nearby. He knew, or should have known, that among these possibilities was that if the person working on his car believed the gasoline line was stopped up he might use the air pressure to blow it out. He knew, or should have known, that the gasoline tank was capped with a rag stuffed in the vent. Paris was working on his car where the air hose was located. The possibility that the air hose might be used for this purpose was not so unlikely that it was unforeseeable as a matter of law." (Hunter v. Mohawk Petroleum Corp., Cal.App., 322 P.2d 551, 555.)

From this evidence the District Court of Appeal concluded that the jury could infer that defendant had notice of the possible danger to customers in the area of the blackboard. I wholeheartedly agree with this conclusion and can see no escape from the fact that the inferences to be drawn from this evidence were within the province of the jury. Therefore, the jury verdict cannot be disturbed by this court unless it again usurps the function of the jury and takes another excursion into the fact finding field.

For the foregoing reasons I would affirm the judgment.

Reno J. BELLI, as Special Administrator of the Estate of Caterina Bonavia, Deceased, Plaintiff, Cross-Defendant and Respondent,

v.

Anthony BONAVIA, Defendant, Cross-Defendant and Appellant, and

Leon Belli, Sr., as Administrator of the Estate of Anita Belli, etc., Deceased, Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Respondent

Civ. 18120.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 22, 1959.

Action by administrator of grantor's estate to quiet title to land and cross action by administrator of grantor's daughter's estate to quiet title to the land and for accounting of rentals, from the land, taken by grantor's son. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, William T. Sweigert, J., gave judgment that the son and daughter each, by reason of deed made by grantor in 1933 to them and delivered to the daughter, acquired undivided one-half interest in the land, and the son and the daughter's administrator appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, P. J., held that evidence sustained finding that the grantor delivered the deed of 1933 to the daughter with intent to pass title, and although the son in open court disclaimed any interest in the land under deed of 1933 and relied on gift deed from grantor to the son executed in 1954, son acquired undivided one-half interest in fee under deed of 1933.

1. Deeds ⇐208(1, 7)

In action to quiet title to land, evidence sustained trial court's finding that mother's deed to daughter and son was delivered to daughter with intent to pass present title. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1054.

2. Deeds ⇐194(2)

Possession of deed by grantee gives rise to presumption of delivery.

3. Deeds ⇐194(3)

Delivery of deed is presumed to take place at time of execution of the deed. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1055.

4. Deeds ⇐194(2, 3, 5)

Presumptions of delivery arising from grantee's possession of deed and that delivery took place at time of execution of the deed are applicable, although grantor exercises control over property, and deed is not recorded until after death of grantor.

5. Deeds ⇐194(1)

Where prima facie case of delivery of deed is made out or presumption established, burden of going forward with the evidence shifts to party attacking validity of the deed.

6. Deeds ⇐194(1)

Nothing but most satisfactory evidence of nondelivery should prevail over presumption of valid delivery.

7. Deeds ⇐56(2)

Payment of taxes and keeping up of insurance by grantor are consistent with intent to pass title.

8. Deeds ⇐67, 88

Validity of deed is not affected by failure of grantee to record or take possession from grantor.

9. Deeds ⇐56(2)

Lack of knowledge by one grantee of existence of deed or intent of grantor to pass title has no bearing on grantor's intent to divest himself of title.

10. Deeds ⇐57

Delivery of deed to one joint owner is delivery to both.

11. Deeds ⇐194(4)

Where a grant is beneficial, although grantee has no knowledge of deed, acceptance by the grantee is presumed.

12. Deeds ⇐211(1, 4)

In action to quiet title to land, evidence sustained finding that the 87-year-old mother was incompetent and gift deed from her, executed four days before she died, to son, was given by reason of son's undue influence.

13. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1)

On appeal, all conflicts in testimony must be resolved in favor of conclusion reached below.

14. Deeds ⇐211(4)

In action to quiet title involving validity of deed from mother to son, evidence sustained finding of existence of confidential relationship between grantor and her son.

15. Deeds ⇐196(3)

Presumption of undue influence arises from proof of existence of confidential relationship between grantor and grantee, coupled with activity on part of grantee in preparation of document.

16. Adverse Possession ⇐85(1)

Where grantor deeded property to her two children but remained in possession for 21 years after delivering the deed, grantor's possession was presumed subordinate to legal title. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 321.

17. Adverse Possession ⇐63(4)

To acquire title by adverse possession against his own conveyance, grantor must make disclaimer by assertion of adverse title with notice to owners.

18. Adverse Possession ⇐63(2)

Where close and affectionate relationship in family existed and grantor deeded property to her two children, payment of taxes, possession, and management of the property by grantor were family transactions and were consistent with legal title in grantees.

19. Estoppel ⇐71

Where mother's deed to son and daughter had been validly delivered to daughter and son disclaimed his interest under deed and claimed entire property under deed subsequently executed under undue influence, the son rather than the mother's estate was owner of the one-half interest.

Ferrari & Ferrari, San Francisco, for appellant Bonavia.

Joe L. Casalnuovo, San Francisco, for respondent Leon Belli, Sr.

Charles P. Molinari, San Francisco, for respondent Rino J. Belli.

KAUFMAN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, Reno Belli, as special administrator of the Estate of Caterina Bonavia, commenced this action to quiet title to an improved parcel of real property at 1730–32 Filbert Street in San Francisco, and to certain shares of stock, and for an accounting of rentals and dividends. Defendant, Leon Belli, Sr. administrator of the Estate of Anita Belli, answered and cross-complained to quiet title to the real property and asked for an accounting of the rentals from the real property by the defendant and cross-defendant Anthony Bonavia. Anthony Bonavia answered and asserted complete ownership of the real property under a deed dated September 1954, and complete ownership of the stock. The court below found that by reason of a deed dated August 19, 1933, Anita Belli and Anthony Bonavia each owned an undivided one-half interest in fee in the real property, and that Anthony Bonavia owned the shares of stock. The sole issue on appeal is the validity of the deeds to the Filbert Street property.

On appeal, Anthony Bonavia contends that: 1) The 1933 deed was not delivered with the intent to pass present title, but with the intention that title should not pass until the death of the grantor; 2) The evidence was insufficient to support the trial court's finding that the 1954 deed was invalid because the grantor lacked mental capacity to execute the deed and because it was the result of the undue influence of Anthony Bonavia; 3) Even if the 1933 deed was validly delivered and passed title, such title was lost by the continuous adverse possession of the grantor from 1933 to 1954.

The Estate of Caterina Bonavia argues that as Anthony Bonavia did not accept his interest under the 1933 deed and the law does not force any one to take title to real property against his will, it is proper for this court to reverse the finding of the court below as to the one-half interest of Anthony Bonavia and hold that the Estate of Caterina Bonavia is the owner thereof.

Caterina Bonavia, the mother of Anthony Bonavia and Anita Belli, was the owner of the property as 1730–1732 Filbert Street. On August 19, 1933, Caterina Bonavia executed and acknowledged a deed of gift to her two children, Anita and Anthony. The deed was signed and delivered and acknowledged in the presence of Anita Belli, her husband Leon Belli, Sr., Rosa Curlo and a notary public, Joseph Pensa, the entire transaction taking place in the office of Mr. Pensa. Anita accepted the deed, and she and her husband deposited it in their safe deposit box. Anthony testified that neither his sister nor his mother ever mentioned the 1933 deed to him and that he never accepted it.

After the 1933 deed, as before, Caterina Bonavia continued to live on the Filbert Street property which consisted of an improved lot with two cottages. Anita helped her in the management of the property by paying taxes, collecting rents, calling repairmen, etc. The expenses were paid indirectly by Caterina who received the benefit of the rents. Insurance was carried in the name of Caterina Bonavia. In the early 1940's, Anthony Bonavia moved in with his mother. Anita Belli died on July 13, 1941, survived by her sons, Reno Belli (Plaintiff herein) and Leon Belli, Jr., and her husband Leon Belli, Sr. The 1933 deed was not recorded until after the death of Caterina Bonavia in 1954.

On April 16, 1953, Anthony Bonavia went to the City Hall in San Francisco, and asked a Mr. Howard to draw up a gift deed granting the Filbert Street property to Anthony. Anthony took the deed home and placed it away until September 30, 1954, when his mother told him that she was ready to sign it. Anthony called Mr. Colapietro, a notary public, and another witness to acknowledge the deed. Caterina was taken out of bed and propped up at a desk and chair to sign the deed. The entire transaction took only three to five minutes. Caterina Bonavia died a few days later on October 4, 1954. She was 87 years old. The cause of death was coronary thrombosis. For several months before her death, Caterina had been ill and failing. One week before her death, a close friend moved to the rear cottage on the property to take care of Caterina. Caterina had been unable to manage her own affairs. Anthony managed her affairs from 1952 on. Several witnesses testified that during the period before her death, Caterina was listless, forgetful and unresponsive and otherwise showed signs of advancing age and senility.

[1] As to appellant Anthony Bonavia's first contention that the 1933 deed was not delivered with the intent to pass present title, the record reveals ample evidence to substantiate the trial court's finding to the contrary. Civil Code, § 1054; Osborn v. Osborn, 42 Cal.2d 358, 267 P.2d 333; Hitch v. Hitch, 24 Cal.App.2d 291, 74 P.2d 1098. When she executed the deed, Caterina gave the deed to Anita and said, "Take this". Anita accepted the deed and placed it in a safe deposit box where it remained until her death in 1941. At the time of Anita's death, Leon Belli, Sr. had forgotten about the 1933 deed. He removed all the documents from the safe deposit box and kept them in his possession. Thus, Anita Belli had possession of the deed from 1933 until her death in 1941. After her death, her husband continued to hold it with his other papers.

[2–4] A presumption of delivery arises from the possession of the deed by the grantee. Stewart v. Silva, 192 Cal. 405, 221 P. 191; Severn v. Ruhde, 58 Cal.App. 2d 704, 137 P.2d 466. There is a further presumption that the delivery took place at the time of execution. Civil Code, § 1055; Marple v. Jackson, 184 Cal. 411, 193 P. 940. These presumptions are applicable even if the deed is not recorded until after the death of the grantor, who in the meantime exercises acts of control over the property by collecting rent, paying insurance in his own name etc. Merritt v. Rey, 104 Cal.App. 700, 286 P. 510; Shaver v. Canfield, 21 Cal.App.2d 734, 70 P.2d 507; Drummond v. Drummond, 39 Cal.App.2d 418, 103 P.2d 217; In re Estate of Schmidt, 49 Cal.App.2d 86, 121 P.2d 104; Lewis v. Burns, 122 Cal. 358, 55 P. 132; Lewis v. Brown, 22 Cal.App. 38, 133 P. 331.

[5–11] Possession of the deed by the grantee also creates prima facie evidence of valid delivery. Labadie v. Labadie, 57 Cal.App.2d 456, 134 P.2d 858. Once a prima facie case is made out, or the presumption established, the burden shifts to the party attacking the validity of the deed. California Trust Co. v. Hughes, 111 Cal. App.2d 717, 245 P.2d 374. "Nothing but the most satisfactory evidence of nondelivery should prevail against the presumption". Stewart v. Silva, 192 Cal. 405, 221 P. 191, 192. Payment of taxes and keeping up insurance by the grantor are consistent with the intent to pass title. Hitch v. Hitch, 24 Cal.App.2d 291, 74 P.2d 1098. The validity of the document is not affected by the failure to record or change possession. Knox v. Kearney, 40 Cal.App. 290, 180 P. 661. The fact that one of the grantees has no knowledge of the deed or intent to pass present title, has no bearing on the grantor's intent to divest himself of title. Green v. Skinner, 185 Cal. 435, 197 P. 60. Delivery to one joint owner is delivery to both. Smith v. Lombard, 201 Cal. 518, 258 P. 55; Eshleman v. Henrietta Vineyard Co., 102 Cal. 199, 36 P. 579. Ac-

[12, 13] As to appellant Anthony Bonavia's contention relating to the validity of the 1954 deed, there was sufficient evidence to sustain the trial court's finding that Caterina Bonavia was incompetent and that the deed was executed by reason of Anthony Bonavia's undue influence. Appellant Anthony Bonavia makes much of the conflicts between his testimony and that of the other witnesses. On appeal, all conflicts must be resolved in favor of the conclusion reached below. Ahern v. S. H. Kress & Co., 97 Cal.App.2d 691, 218 P.2d 108. There is uncontroverted evidence that at the time of the 1954 deed, Caterina Bonavia no longer recalled whom her family consisted of and what persons had claim upon her bounty. In re Estate of Dunne, 130 Cal.App.2d 216, 278 P.2d 733. The doctor testified that Caterina was in a semi-comatose condition for the period of time before her death. She had to be propped up in order to sign the deed. On the evidence presented, the trial court was justified in finding that Caterina Bonavia was generally mentally incompetent by reason of illness, old age and increasing senility. Hughes v. Grandy, 78 Cal.App.2d 555, 177 P.2d 939.

[16–18] As to appellant Anthony Bonavia's final argument relating to adverse possession, there is no evidence of adverse possession by Caterina Bonavia after 1933. Her occupation is presumed to be subordinate to the legal title. Code of Civil Procedure, § 321. If a grantor is to acquire title by adverse possession against his own conveyance, a disclaimer by an assertion of adverse title with notice to the owners is necessary. Madden v. Alpha Hardware & Supply Co., 128 Cal.App.2d 72, 274 P.2d 705; Oglesby v. Hollister, 76 Cal. 136, 18 P. 146. The evidence indicates that there was always a close and affectionate relationship between Caterina Bonavia and her two children, her son-in-law, Leon Belli, Sr. and her grandsons. In family transactions, possession, payment of taxes, management of the property are all consistent with the legal title. Merritt v. Rey, 104 Cal.App. 700, 286 P. 510; Tully v. Tully, 137 Cal. 60, 69 P. 700; Reed v. Smith, 125 Cal. 491, 58 P. 139; Allen v. Allen, 159 Cal. 197, 113 P. 160. In the somewhat similar case of Merritt v. Rey, supra, the grantor lived on the property for 17 years after the execution and delivery of the deed, mortgaged the property in her own name, paid taxes, repairs, expenses and insurance, and was repaid by income from the property.

[19] We turn now to the sole contention on appeal made by the Estate of Caterina Bonavia. The estate argues that since Anthony Bonavia never accepted his interest under the 1933 deed and subsequently disclaimed it in open court, it is proper for this court to reverse the lower court's finding as to one-half interest of Anthony Bonavia and hold that the Estate of Caterina is the owner thereof. As we have pointed out above, acceptance of benefits will be presumed and knowledge of the grantee is not essential in a situation such as this one. The intention with which a grantor puts a deed in the hands of a third person is a question of fact to be determined from all the circumstances surrounding the transaction. Hotaling v. Hotaling, 193 Cal. 368, 224 P. 455, 56 A.L.R. 734; Kimbro v. Kimbro, 199 Cal. 344, 249 P. 180. As we stated above, the record supports the finding of the trial court that the 1933 deed was delivered with intent to pass title at that time. Nor can we attach a great deal of significance to Anthony Bonavia's disclaimer of the 1933 deed in open court during the course of this litigation, in which he based his position on the validity of the 1954 deed.

We conclude that the judgment finds ample support in the record before us.

Judgment affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 14, 1959.

Action for dissolution of a partnership and for accounting in receivership. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, George Francis, J., an executrix and cross complainant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held, inter alia, that where decedent and his legal secretary were co-owners of interest in oil well proceeds, the portion of such interest belonging to the secretary was never a part of decedent's estate, and hence the dead man's statute was not applicable, and secretary's testimony that portion remaining from such interest after certain litigation would be divided equally between such secretary and decedent was properly admitted since the action was not against an executor upon a claim.

Affirmed in part and in part reversed and remanded with directions.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐907(2)

The Court of Appeal could not presume that evidence not in the record was considered by trial court.

2. Mines and Minerals ⇐100

Where one of owners of oil wells, who dealt with lessee in obtaining for all owners quitclaim deeds from lessee and his assignees in consideration of their becoming owners of 5% of proceeds of production subject to operating costs, was also the general partner of limited partnership which subsequently entered into oil lease with owners, and had account of lessee and his assignees placed upon partnership books, and there was no evidence indicating when or how error crept into partnership books causing only 5%55ths of its distributable income to be credited to such account in lieu of 5%55ths of the proceeds from sale of oil from wells subject only to operating costs, lessee's recovery upon dissolution of partnership and appointment of receivers was not limited to such erroneous amount credited to such account upon the partnership books.

3. Estoppel ⇐116

Frauds, Statute of ⇐158(1)

Limitation of Actions ⇐195(3)

Mines and Minerals ⇐100

Where oil well lessee and his assignees executed quitclaim deeds to owners and lessors in consideration of 5% of proceeds of oil wells less pro rata share of operating cost, a limited partnership of which one of owners was general partner thereafter entered into oil lease with owners and had lessee's account placed upon partnership books, there was no evidence that lessee and his assignee even knew of existence of amendment to certificate of partnership whereby lessee and his assignee were admitted as "additional" limited partners, and there was no evidence indicating when or how error crept into partnership books causing only 50/855ths of distributable income to be credited to lessee's trust account in lieu of 50/855ths of proceeds from sale of oil from wells subject only to operating costs, under circumstances, affirmative defenses of statute of limitations, statute of frauds, laches and equitable estoppel were inapplicable in suit by lessee's executrix against receivers of dissolved partnership.

4. Mines and Minerals ⇐100

Where oil well lessee executed quitclaim deeds in consideration of "5% of production subject to operating costs only", lessee's interest in assets of limited partnership which thereafter executed a lease with well owners must be construed in light of circumstances then existing and expressed intention of the parties at time of execution of the quitclaim deeds.

5. Mines and Minerals ⇐99(3)

Where limited partnership as additional consideration for oil lease agreed to pay well owners' obligation to former lessee and his assignees amounting to "5% of production subject to operating expenses", it could not be presumed that owners or former lessee intended that quoted phrase would be treated as synonymous with 50/855ths or 5.84% of the distributable income of partnership created after former lessee's agreement.

6. Mines and Minerals ⇐101

Where oil well lessee executed quitclaim deeds in consideration of ownership of 5% of production subject to operating costs only, while lessee's interest was expressly limited to "the next two wells to be drilled" and was to be "subject to operating costs", in absence of evidence of any other limitation, items to be charged against lessee's interest were only those contemplated by the agreement.

7. Mines and Minerals ⇐98, 100

Where oil well lessee executed quitclaim deeds in consideration of ownership of 5% of production subject to operating costs only, before formation of limited partnership which executed a lease with full knowledge of lessee's interest, the 5% interest of such lessee and his assignees was not limited to term of lease or life of partnership, but constituted a perpetual interest in oil and other hydrocarbon substances to be produced from the wells drilled by the partnership under their lease, and such interest in production was not a partnership asset and could not be sold by receivers of partnership.

8. Witnesses ⇐133

Where decedent and his legal secretary were co-owners of interest in oil well proceeds, the portion of such interest belonging to the secretary was never a part of decedent's estate, and hence the dead man's statute was not applicable, and secretary's testimony that portion remaining from such interest after certain litigation would be divided equally between such secretary and decedent was properly admitted, since the action was not against an executor upon a claim. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3.

9. Mines and Minerals ⇐101

Evidence, including testimony of deceased oil lessee's legal secretary regarding an agreement whereby the portion of interest under oil lease remaining after certain litigation would be divided equally between lessee and secretary, warranted finding that secretary's portion in proceeds was equal to that of the lessee.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant is the executrix of the estate of Charles W. Fourl, deceased, and a defendant and cross-defendant in the action. The appeal is from a portion of the interlocutory judgment that "the limited partnership of Massey and Associates was dissolved"; that receivers appointed by the court are in possession of all of its business and are managing and operating the same; that the respective interests of the members of the dissolved partnership and their successors and assigns are in accordance with the list therein, which includes Margot M. Mayo 27.5/855ths, L. A. Wagner 11.25/855ths, and appellant herein 11.25/855ths; that two accounts of the receivers are correct; that the receivers hold in trust (and not as partnership property) the following items: for Margot M. Mayo $1,430; for L. A. Wagner $5,821.87; and for appellant $5,821.88, each as of March 8, 1956; that the receivers shall sell all partnership assets at public auction and distribute the proceeds of operation and sale of the partnership property in accordance with the said list showing the respective interests of the partners and their successors and assigns.

The appeal must be considered in two parts: (1) appellant's claim that her interest is not 11.25/855ths or any other portion of the limited partnership, but instead is an "overriding interest" in certain oil wells drilled by the partnership on the Taylor land; and (2) appellant's claim that the court erred in its division of such "overriding interest" so as to award appellant only 11.25/855ths instead of 17.25/855ths of the proceeds from said oil wells.

Attorneys Brooks, Asher and Bullis represent 28 respondents who were members of the dissolved limited partnership and answer only the appellant's first point; while Attorney Kupfer represents respondent Wagner, who was a co-owner of the claimed "overriding interest" (with appellant's decedent and defendant Mayo who has not appeared in the instant appeal) and answers only the second point.

The two portions of the appeal will be separately considered. The following is a summary of the evidence pertinent to appellant's claim that the court erred in deciding that Fourl's interest in the two oil wells drilled by Massey and Associates is to be computed in the same manner as though it were the interest of a limited partner in Massey and Associates.

May 13, 1927, W. W. Taylor and Lottie L. Taylor, his wife, as owners and lessors, and Fourl (appellant's decedent) entered into an oil lease, under which four wells were drilled. As to those wells and their continued production there is no controversy.

Lessors, the Taylors, wanted more wells drilled. A disagreement arose as to the rights of Fourl and his assignees (Wagner and Mayo) under the Fourl lease in such proposed additional wells, or in the land upon which the owners proposed to drill them.

In 1937, an action to quiet title against the 1927 Fourl lease was commenced by the owners.

January 28, 1938, Attorney Cree, representing Lottie L. Taylor, Lees W. Taylor, and Jessie Taylor Reedy, the widow, son and daughter of W. W. Taylor, and the then owners of said land, wrote Fourl that, in return for "quitclaim deeds sufficient to clear the said premises of the oil and gas lease", Fourl and his assignees (Mayo and Wagner) would become the owners of "five percent (5%) of the proceeds, less the pro rata share of the operating costs, hereafter realized from the sale of all oil and gas produced and saved from the first two (2) wells drilled by the undersigned and associates on the undrilled portion of the said ten acres".

The witness Luther Mayo, assignor or Margot Mayo, testified that before he, Fourl and Wagner executed the quitclaims, Lees Taylor (deceased at the time of the trial), acting for himself and the other owners of the land, promised that Fourl and his assignees would receive as consideration for their quitclaim deeds 5% of production subject to operating costs only.

Respondents, in their brief, state that "no evidence whatever was presented by the appellant to negative the effect of defendants' Exhibit 'O' or the testimony of Wagner that Fourl had received this offer before the execution of the quitclaim deed".

Defendant's Exhibit "O" was offered and introduced in evidence by appellant. It is the letter from Attorney Cree's files in which Fourl was offered five percent of the proceeds, less the pro rata share of the operating costs. It mentions no partnership. At that time, Massey and Associates had not been formed. The land was then subject to no oil lease other than Fourl's lease because of which the landowners were seeking quitclaim deeds. Respondents concede that the only consideration offered for the execution of the quitclaim deeds was the 5% interest in the production of the next two wells to be drilled on the land as stated in said letter, and that on February 7, 1938, the quitclaim deeds were executed by Fourl, Wagner and Mayo.

June 16, 1938, the three owners of the land became partners in Massey and Associates, Lees W. Taylor a general partner and the others limited partners. In all there were about 30 partners, two general and the remainder limited.

September 1, 1938, Massey and Associates entered into an oil lease with the owners, by which the partnership agreed to drill two wells, from the production of which the owners would receive 12.5%, their attorney Brooks 1%, and their geologist or engineer 1% "off the top", leaving 85.5% of the selling price of such production to be paid by the respective purchasers to Massey and Associates.

October 28, 1938 and December 29, 1939, the wells "spurted in". In May, 1940, the first distribution of income was made to the partners.

September 23, 1940, is the date of an amendment to the certificate of partnership of Massey and Associates. It recites that "it is desired to admit" Mayo, Wagner and Fourl as "additional" limited partners. Margot Mayo, assignee of Luther Mayo whose interest was the consideration for his quitclaim to the owners, signed the certificate. Fourl and Wagner did not. There is no evidence that they even knew of its existence. From May, 1941 to the beginning of the receivership, Margot Mayo was paid the same as the limited partners of Massey and Associates. Fourl and Wagner received no payment.

August 10, 1950 Fourl died.

April 17, 1951 and June 26, 1953, Taylor and Massey, the general partners, died. Massey and Associates, according to its certificate of limited partnership, was dissolved by the death of the last general partner on June 26, 1953. Irma L. Taylor, one of the limited partners and the widow of Lees W. Taylor, one of the general partners, seeks by the instant action to have the partnership assets sold and distributed in accordance with the partnership agreement.

January 22, 1954, receivers were appointed to operate and sell the partnership business and distribute its income and assets.

The portion of the judgment which gives rise to appellant's first claim of error on the part of the trial court is that "by whatever name they may be called", the interests of Fourl, Wagner and Mayo are to be sold by the receivers along with the partnership assets and the interests of Fourl, Wagner and Mayo in the proceeds of the sale "are to be computed in the same way as the interests of the Limited partners".

Fourl, Mayo and Wagner were not members of Massey and Associates. There is no evidence that the original agreement between the owners and Fourl, Mayo and Wagner was every modified with respect to the consideration for the quitclaim deeds, or otherwise, or that they agreed to look solely to Massey and Associates for payment of the 5% due them.

Although the interests of Fourl, Wagner and Mayo are not mentioned in the Massey oil lease, it is conceded that Massey and Associates, when entering into their lease for the drilling of two wells, knew of such interest and agreed with the owners that the 5% would be paid to Fourl, Wagner and Mayo out of the portion of the proceeds from the oil to be paid to them by the purchasers.

On the books of Massey and Associates, during its entire existence, 5%55ths of the partnership's distributable income was credited to Fourl, Mayo and Wagner. We note, however, that 5%55ths is not 5% (but is 5.84%) of the 85.5% of the production. In other words, 5%55ths is 5% of the entire production before payment of the 14.5% royalties "off the top". Without conflict the evidence is that against such 5% or 5%55ths of the entire production credited to Fourl, Mayo and Wagner, Massey and Associates charged, not only 5%55ths of the cost of operating its two wells, but also 5%55ths of about $80,000 expended for drilling said wells, the amounts of partners' salaries, other items of expense of partnership administration, and reserves to repay the contributions of the various partners.

No evidence that Fourl was ever told or knew anything of the bookkeeping methods or entries of Massey and Associates has been called to our attention and we have found none.

Respondents, in their brief, state that some further explanation "seems to be required for the trial court's finding that the interest in question should be determined 'in the same way as the interests of the limited partners' * * *

"The interest in question always has been so computed; and this without objection or question on the part of any one of the three interested parties (Mayo, Wagner or Fourl). No concealment was practiced by the management of the limited partnership. It would require the most extreme credulity to hold that Fourl, 'the principal negotiator for the quitclaiming lessees' was ignorant of the manner in which the interests were being computed; or that he would allow the statute of limitations, each year, successively to bar a claim for a greater share of the annual earnings of the partnership than was being impounded for the three quitclaiming lessees, collectively."

Respondents, in their brief, urge that, assuming a share of the production greater than that credited to Fourl and his assignees on the partnership books was once owed to them, it has been lost and cannot now be collected because of laches, equitable estoppel and the statute of limitations, all of which issues were pleaded and presented in the trial court.

[1] Those matters were mentioned by counsel during the trial, at the end of which it was stipulated by all counsel at the suggestion of the trial court that appellant's answer may be "deemed a cross-complaint" and respondents may be deemed to have denied the allegations thereof and "to have raised the affirmative defenses of the Statute of Frauds, Statute of Limitations, estoppel and laches". Nowhere in the record or briefs on appeal is there any mention of the specific statute or statutes so relied upon. Under the peculiar circumstances of this case, however, we have presumed that any statute or statutes lending support to the judgment was pleaded as an affirmative defense. We cannot presume that evidence not in the record was considered by the trial court.

Respondents call attention to Fourl's delay until the witnesses to the agreement, as well as the setting up of the accounts, were dead. Also, it is noted by this court that Fourl, himself, was dead when this action was instituted not by his representative but by one of the surviving partners.

[2] From the evidence, it appears without conflict that Lees Taylor, the owner who dealt with Fourl in obtaining for all the landowners the quitclaims of Fourl, Mayo and Wagner, was also the general partner in Massey and Associates who had the account of Fourl, Mayo and Wagner placed upon the books of Massey and Associates. There is nothing in the record showing that any payment or statement of that account was ever offered to or requested by Fourl. The trial court found and concluded that the amounts so credited to the accounts of Fourl, Mayo and Wagner and at the time of the trial remaining in the hands of the receivers of the partnership property appointed by the court were not partnership property, but were held by the receivers in trust for Fourl, Mayo and Wagner.

There is no evidence in the record indicating when or how the error crept into the partnership books causing only 5/855ths of its distributable income to be credited to this trust account in lieu of 5/855ths of the proceeds from the sale of the oil from its two wells subject only to operating costs. Nor is there any evidence that Taylor, Fourl or the partnership bookkeeper suspected that an error had been made in the account. Appellant's recovery is not limited to such erroneous amount credited to Fourl upon the books of Massey and Associates. Jefferson v. Pietroroia, 5 Cal.2d 222, 54 P.2d 7.

[3] Respondents, while apparently taking it for granted that the statute of frauds, laches and equitable estoppel preclude a recovery by appellant of any larger sum than the amount credited to Fourl upon the books of Massey and Associates, have not stated in their brief either logic or citations of authority for their application in support of the judgment from which the instant appeal was taken. Considering the record and all the circumstances in this case, we deem respondents' affirmative defenses of the statute of limitations, statute of frauds, laches and equitable estoppel inapplicable.

Respondents, presumably as further justification for the court's finding that Fourl's interest was to be computed in the same manner as that of a limited partner, state in their brief that "substantial and uncontradicted evidence rebuts" appellant's "contention that Fourl was entitled to an overriding royalty interest; and that the most that he ever could have been entitled to receive is a participating interest."

While there is some confusion in the record and briefs surrounding the use of the terms "overriding" and "participating" interests, our attention has been called to no testimony or documentary evidence tending to show that either of those terms was used by either Fourl, Taylor (one of the owners and agent for the others), or Cree (the owners' attorney) while negotiating their agreement that the consideration for the quitclaims to the Taylors would be 5% of production subject to operating costs only; nor is there any evidence that those terms were used by the parties in later discussing said 5% interest. Fourl's interest not having been named by the parties to the agreement, we deem the naming of such interest unnecessary to this decision.

[4] Fourl's interest, designated by the parties to the agreement at the time of its creation as "5% of production subject to operating costs only", must be construed in the light of the circumstances then existing and the expressed intention of the parties at that time. Dabney-Johnston Oil Corp. v. Walden, 4 Cal.2d 637, 651, 52 P.2d 237.

The two oil wells from which Fourl's 5% of production was to be received were to be drilled on the same ten acres on Signal Hill on which there were already six producing wells, four of which had been drilled under the Fourl lease then being cancelled.

[5] Massey and Associates, as lessees under a lease made some months after Fourl's agreement with and quitclaim to the landowners, drilled the two oil wells. The funds used for the drilling were contributed by the general and limited partners of Massey and Associates in return for agreed portions of the partnership's distributable income. The lease to Massey and Associates expressly required payment "off the top" of the 14.5% royalties hereinbefore referred to. While not mentioned in the lease, all parties to the instant action concede that Massey and Associates, as additional consideration to the owners for the oil lease to them, agreed to pay the owners' obligation to Fourl and his assignees amounting to 5% of the proceeds from the production of the proposed two oil wells subject to operating expenses only. It cannot be presumed that either the Taylors (the landowners) or Fourl intended that "5% of production subject to operating expenses" would be treated as synonymous with 5%55ths or 5.84% of the distributable income of a partnership not yet created, to be earned by such partnership as the lessee in an oil lease not yet executed.

[6] An interest in oil production created by the landowners, as was the Fourl interest in the instant action, unless expressly limited is "generally regarded in Southern California as an unlimited, permanent interest". While the evidence is without conflict that Fourl's interest here being considered was expressly limited to "the next two wells to be drilled" and was to be "subject to operating costs", there is in the record no evidence of any other limitation upon it. The items to be charged against Fourl's interest are only those contemplated by the agreement. Dabney-Johnston Oil Corp. v. Walden, supra, 4 Cal.2d 653, 657, 52 P.2d 245, 247.

[7] Fourl was not a successor or assignee of the partnership. His interest in the oil produced by Massey and Associates was never owned by the partnership. That interest was granted to Fourl by the landowners before the formation of the partnership. Massey and Associates leased the land with full knowledge of Fourl's interest. Therefore, the 5% interest of Fourl and his assignees was not limited to the term of the lease or the life of the partnership, but was and is a perpetual interest in the oil and other hydro-carbon substances to be produced from the two wells drilled by Massey and Associates under their lease. Callahan v. Martin, 3 Cal.2d 110, 114, 125, 43 P.2d 788, 101 A.L.R. 871; Beam v. Dugan, 132 Cal.App. 546, 549, 553, 23 P.2d 58; Standard Oil Co. of California v. John P. Mills Organization, 3 Cal.2d 128, 133, 43 P.2d 797; Dabney-Johnston Oil Corp. v. Walden, 4 Cal.2d 637, 648, 52 P. 2d 237. The interest of Fourl in the production of said two wells is not a partnership asset and may not be sold by the receivers in the instant action.

A fair epitome of the record concerning appellant's second claim of error follows.

Respondent Wagner was a legal secretary employed in Fourl's law office for about 20 years. She also loaned money to him. In 1940 the law office was closed.

She testified that Fourl agreed that the portion of the 5% remaining after payment to Mayo (when his interest was determined in a then pending court action for that purpose) would be divided equally between Fourl and Wagner; that on several occasions he promised to go with her to the office of Massey and Associates and sign a paper to that effect; that he always said he would do so, but he never did. Respondent also calls the court's attention to the presumption that co-owners' interests are equal when not expressly otherwise stated.

Appellant contends that the 5% being the consideration for the quitclaims of the former oil lease must be divided in the same ratio as their interests in the former oil lease. He urges that testimony as to the fractional co-ownership of the oil lease quitclaimed as consideration for the 5%, and the presumption that the 5% should be divided in the same manner, requires reversal of the judgment giving to appellant and Wagner equal portions.

[8] Appellant insists that the oral testimony of Wagner must be disregarded by the court because of the Dead Man Statute (Code Civ.Proc. § 1880, sub. 3) which provides that a person cannot be a witness in an action or proceeding prosecuted "against an executor * * * upon a claim, or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter or fact occurring before the death of such deceased person." The instant action is not "against an executor * * * upon a claim". It is conceded by all parties that decedent and Wagner were co-owners of the 5% interest involved herein. The portion of said 5% interest belonging to Wagner is not and never was a part of Fourl's estate.

Consequently, the statute so relied upon by appellant is not applicable, and the testimony of Wagner was properly admitted over appellant's objection on that ground.

[9] Considering that testimony together with the other evidence, admissions, and stipulations in the instant appeal, we are not convinced that, as a matter of law, the finding and conclusion as to Wagner's portion being equal to that of Fourl is without sufficient support.

The judgment as to defendant and cross-complainant L. A. Wagner is affirmed. In all other respects the judgment insofar as it affects the appellant herein is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to the court below to retry the cause as to such appellant and render judgment as to her in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Armando Raul CONTRERAS, Defendant.

Cr. 3459.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 22, 1959.

Prosecution for selling heroin. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, William F. James, J., after jury's verdict, entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, P. J., held that where evidence that defendant knowingly sold heroin was direct and not circumstantial, failure of trial court to give instruction to the effect that if the evidence was susceptible of two constructions, one which pointed to defendant's innocence and the other to defendant's guilt, jury must adopt interpretation which admits of defendant's innocence and reject that which points to his guilt, was not error.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐814(17)

In prosecution for selling heroin, wherein evidence that defendant knowingly sold heroin was direct and not circumstantial, failure of trial court to give instruction to the effect that if the evidence was susceptible of two constructions, one of which pointed to defendant's innocence and the other to defendant's guilt, jury must adopt interpretation which admits of defendant's innocence and reject that which points to his guilt, was not error. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1173(2)

Failure of a trial court to instruct on circumstantial evidence is prejudicial only when it is improbable that the jury would have reached the same result had instruction been given.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1137(3)

Defendant cannot complain on appeal of an instruction given at his own request even if trial court committed error in giving such instruction.

4. Criminal Law ⇐778(5)

In prosecution for selling heroin, wherein evidence that defendant knowingly sold heroin was direct and not circumstantial, instruction to the effect that if there was any single fact proved which was inconsistent with defendant's guilt, jury had duty to acquit him, did not violate rule that an accused is not required to prove his innocence. KAUFMAN, Presiding Justice.

A jury found defendant guilty of selling heroin in violation of Health and Safety Code section 11500. He appeals from the judgment of conviction, claiming that the trial court erred in failing to give an instruction on circumstantial evidence and an instruction on reasonable doubt.

The facts, which are not in dispute, are as follows: On Sunday, July 21, 1957, Officers Juarez and Lopez of the San Jose Police Department, were instructed to go to Post Street and purchase narcotics from anyone who would sell to them. They were given $20 in marked bills to use. The officers saw the defendant in front of Rusty's Cafe on Post Street. Defendant asked Officer Juarez if he was going "to connect". Juarez answered that he wanted to buy heroin. Defendant said a man by the name of Tommy would be around later. Juarez gave the defendant $10. Later the defendant returned with a small rubber balloon. Defendant handed the balloon and a $5 bill to Officer Juarez. Upon examination a gelatin capsule inside the balloon was found to contain one gram of heroin.

The first question is whether the trial court erred in failing to give the following instruction proferred by the defendant.

> "If the evidence of this case is susceptible of two constructions or interpretations, each of which appears to you to be reasonable, and one of which points to the guilt of the Defendant and the other to his innocence, it is your duty, under the law, to adopt that interpretation which will admit of the Defendant's innocence, and reject that which points to his guilt."

[1] Defendant, citing People v. Yrigoyen, 45 Cal.2d 46, 286 P.2d 1; People v. Zerillo, 36 Cal.2d 222, 223 P.2d 223; People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 163 P.2d 8, relies on the well-established rule that when circumstantial evidence is received to prove a fact necessary to convict, the trial court should, on its own motion, give an instruction concerning circumstantial evidence. The record discloses that the evidence produced by the People was all direct evidence, not circumstantial. Hence, the failure to give the instruction was not error.

[2] Also, the fact that instructions on circumstantial evidence were not given is prejudicial only when it is improbable that the jury would have reached the same result had the instruction been given. People v. Goldstein, 139 Cal.App.2d 146, 293 P.2d 495; People v. Bardin, 148 Cal.App.2d 776, 307 P.2d 384; People v. Candiotto, 128 Cal.App.2d 347, 275 P.2d 500. In all the cases cited by the defendant, there was conflicting evidence or some facts or circumstances inconsistent with guilt. The same is not true of the instant case. The circumstances relied upon by the prosecution point to defendant as a person who knew what he was selling and wilfully did so. We can only conclude that under the circumstances of this case the failure to give the requested instruction on circumstantial evidence did not result in a verdict different from that which would have been rendered had the instruction been given.

[3, 4] Defendant next complains of the following instruction:

> "If you find there is any single fact proved to your satisfaction by a preponderance of the evidence, which said fact is inconsistent with the defendant's guilt, that, in and of itself in your minds is sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt of said defendant's guilt, then the defendant would be entitled to the benefit of such reasonable doubt and it will be your duty to acquit him."

Defendant argues that the giving of this instruction was reversible error, as the instruction violated the rule that the accused is not required to prove his innocence. The contention is without merit. The instructions as a whole well state that the burden of proving defendant's guilt is on the prosecution. Furthermore, the record reveals that the instruction complained of was given at defendant's own request. Even if the court had committed error in giving this instruction, defendant cannot complain on appeal of an instruction given at his own request. People v. Williams, 128 Cal.App.2d 458, 275 P.2d 513.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record before us, the judgment must be affirmed.

Civ. 23210.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 21, 1959.

Hearing Granted March 18, 1959.

Action for injunction restraining defendants from diverting water from spring on plaintiffs' property, and for damages. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs after nonjury trial and judgment was later modified in ruling on defendants' motion for new trial. Plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where judge who did not preside at trial did not in any respect change or add to findings of trial judge whose findings supported original judgment, judge did not have authority, on motion for new trial, to modify original judgment.

Parts of modified judgment reversed and original judgment reinstated.

* Opinion vacated 343 P.2d 257.

1. New Trial ⇐9, 164

Purpose of statute providing that judgment rendered in nonjury case may be modified or vacated, in whole or in part, by court in ruling on motion for new trial, and that new trial may be granted on all or part of issues, is to afford trial court the right to correct its own errors. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 662.

2. New Trial ⇐164

On motion for new trial, judge who did not preside at trial may not modify judgment which is based on findings by trial judge on conflicting evidence without changing the findings or making new and different findings unless the original findings do not support the original judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 661, 662.

3. New Trial ⇐164

Where judge who did not preside at trial did not in any respect change or add to findings of trial judge whose findings supported original judgment, judge did not have authority, on motion for new trial, to modify original judgment. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 661, 662.

4. Damages ⇐142

Special damages not alleged in complaint cannot be recovered.

5. Damages ⇐157(1)

A general allegation of damages will authorize proof of all damages necessarily resulting or which may be legally implied from act complained of.

6. Damages ⇐5, 157(1)

Damages which necessarily result from act complained of are denominated "general damages," and may be proved under the ad damnum clause or general allegation of damage; while those which are natural consequences of act complained of, and not necessary result of it, are termed "special damages".

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "General Damages" and "Special Damages".

7. Waters and Water Courses ⇐107(3)

Loss of eucalyptus trees which died due to lack of water caused by diversion of water from spring on plaintiffs' property constituted general damages, and plaintiffs were not required to specifically plead such loss. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 658, 660.

8. Waters and Water Courses ⇐107(3)

In action to restrain defendants from diverting water from spring on plaintiffs' property, and for damages, evidence supported trial judge's findings that drilling of well by defendants caused spring upon plaintiffs' property to cease to flow.

9. Appeal and Error ⇐843(2)

Where part of modified judgment denying plaintiffs relief against defendant was to be reversed and original judgment which awarded damages against defendant was to be reinstated, cost bill filed by defendant fell with reversal of part of modified judgment and it was unnecessary to consider plaintiffs' appeal from order denying their motion to retax costs.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiffs from parts of a modified judgment. The judgment was modified by the court in ruling on defendants' motion for a new trial. Code Civ.Proc. § 662.

There were two actions below, which were consolidated. They prayed for an injunction to restrain defendants from diverting water from a spring on plaintiffs' property and for damages. One judgment was rendered in the consolidated actions.

A Mr. and Mrs. Barton owned about 19 acres of land, known as the Eden property, in Topanga Canyon from about 1931 to 1954. During that time and for many years prior there was a spring on the property which supplied water for domestic and irrigation uses. During the time the Bartons occupied the property there never was a shortage of water. In early 1954 the Bartons conveyed the property to plaintiffs. Adjoining and below the Eden property there was about an acre of land known as the Moldenhauer property. In July 1954 Raymond Sparling, now deceased, purchased about 3,200 square feet of the Moldenhauer property for the purpose of drilling a water well and, if it proved productive, conveying it to Sparling Water Company of which he was president for the sale of water to consumers outside the watershed.

The trial court found: 1. In September 1954 and for many years prior thereto there was a spring on the Eden property which produced water at the rate of 2,304 gallons a day (1.6 gallons a minute). 2. The spring had its source from underground water-bearing strata underlying the Eden and Moldenhauer properties and had no surface flow. 3. The waters from the spring were collected in a concrete-lined gathering basin on the Eden property and did not flow off of it. 4. The gathering basin was located about 485 feet upslope from the Moldenhauer property. 5. The water collected in the gathering basin was used for many years to serve the Eden and Moldenhauer properties. 6. In August and September 1954 Sparling drilled a well, known as the Sparling well, on the Moldenhauer property to a depth of 310 feet. 7. In drilling the Sparling well, four or more water-bearing strata were entered or passed through. 8. In so doing the water-bearing strata which were the source of the water in the spring on the Eden property were entered, resulting in lowering the water in those strata and causing the spring to cease to flow and the surrounding marshy terrain to dry up.

The trial court further found: 1. Immediately on the Sparling well being put into operation, Sparling conveyed the land on which the well was situated to Sparling Water Company, now Hillside Water Company. 2. Since that time Sparling Water Company, called "the company," has produced from the well and sold to its customers in excess of 14,000,000 gallons of water. 3. None of the water produced from the well has been used on the land on which the well is situated, and there is no beneficial use to which the water could be put on that land. 4. By reason of the drilling of the Sparling well and the drying up of the spring, 14 eucalyptus trees on the Eden property having a reasonable value of $100 each were caused to die, to plaintiffs' damage in the sum of $1,400.

The trial court also found: 1. Plaintiffs now reasonably require and can put to beneficial use on their land for domestic and irrigation purposes 45,000 gallons of water a month, and no more. 2. Plaintiffs could drill a well on their land to the same water-bearing strata as are tapped by the Sparling well at a cost to them for the drilling and equipment of the well of $2,500. The drilling of another well to the strata from which the Sparling well is producing would be likely to cause an economic waste of water and continued litigation between the parties. 3. There is a shortage of water in the occupied areas of Topanga Canyon.

The court concluded plaintiffs were entitled to judgment against defendant Maurice C. Sparling, as executor of the estate of Raymond Sparling, deceased, in the sum of $1,400 for the loss of the 14 eucalyptus trees; to judgment for damages against Sparling Water Company, now known as Hillside Water Company, in the sum of $600, the cost of purchasing water; and that Sparling Water Company should be ordered to plug the Sparling well and to cease producing water therefrom until such time as the water levels in the underground strata again have risen so that the spring on the Eden property again flows at the rate of 2,304 gallons a day (1.6 gallons a minute), and should be enjoined from thereafter producing from the well to any extent which will reduce the flow of the spring below that amount, provided that these injunctions should be stayed so long as the water company shall deliver to plaintiffs in the reservoir upon their land 45,000 gallons of water each month with not less than 1,000 gallons each day, and that the court should retain jurisdiction to fix the amount of water which can be economically used upon the Eden property up to but not to exceed 2,304 gallons a day (1.6 gallons a minute). Judgment was entered accordingly.

Defendants moved for a new trial. A judge other than the one who presided at the trial heard the motion. The motion for a new trial was denied. However, in so ruling, the court modified the conclusions of law and the judgment. It did not modify or add to the findings in any respect. The modifications of the conclusions of law were: 1. Plaintiffs are not entitled to judgment for the loss of the 14 eucalyptus trees, "not having plead any special damages." 2. Plaintiffs are entitled to judgment against defendant Sparling Water Company, ordering said defendant at its election either: (a) to pay plaintiffs $3,000, being the cost of drilling and equipping a well upon the Eden property and of obtaining water from Sparling Water Company at its established rates for a reasonable period until the well is drilled and equipped; or (b) to do the things provided by the original judgment.[1]

1. The other elections as stated in the modified judgment were either to: "(b) Plug the Sparling Well and cease producing water therefrom until such time as the water levels in the underground strata again have arisen so that the spring upon the Eden Property again flows at the rate of two thousand three hundred and four (2304) gallons per day (1.6 gallons per minute) or until a well is drilled upon the Eden Property, and be enjoined from thereafter producing water from the Sparling Well to any extent which will reduce the flow of the spring upon the Eden Property below two thousand three hundred and four (2304) gallons per day (1.6 gallons per minute) or until a well is drilled upon the Eden Property; or (c) Deliver to plaintiffs in the reservoir now

The modifications of the conclusions of law further concluded that in the event Sparling Water Company elected to pay the $3,000 to plaintiffs for the drilling and equipping of a well, plaintiffs should have the right to produce as much water therefrom as reasonably might be required from time to time for a reasonable overlying use on the Eden property. A modified judgment was entered accordingly. Plaintiffs appeal from the parts of the modified judgment which (1) deny plaintiffs relief against the executor of the estate of Raymond Sparling for the loss of the eucalyptus trees; (2) give Sparling Water Company, now Hillside Water Company, an election to pay them $3,000, the cost of drilling and equipping a well, and of obtaining water from the company until the well is drilled and equipped; and (3) awards costs to such executor.

The principal specifications of error are that in ruling on the motion for a new trial the court erred (1) in adding to the judgment the alternative giving the company an election to pay plaintiffs $3,000, the cost of drilling and equipping a well upon the Eden property, and of obtaining water from the company until the well is drilled and equipped; (2) in striking that part of the judgment awarding plaintiffs $1,400 for the eucalyptus trees on the ground the loss was special damages which had not been pleaded; and (3) awarding costs to the executor.

[1] The cause was tried without a jury. In ruling on a motion for a new trial in a cause tried without a jury the court may, on such terms as may be just, change or add to the findings, modify the judgment in whole or in part, vacate the judgment in whole or in part, and grant a new trial on all or part of the issues. Code Civ.Proc. § 662. The purpose of section 662 is to afford the trial court the right to correct its own errors in ruling on a motion for a new trial. Solorza v. Park Water Co., 86 Cal.App.2d 653, 663, 195 P.2d 523.

[2] As we have indicated, the judge who heard and ruled on the motion for a new trial and who modified the judgment was not the one who presided at the trial, who saw, heard, and evaluated the testimony, who judged the credibility of the witnesses, who weighed the evidence, who obviously believed and accepted the testimony of some witnesses and who disbelieved and rejected the testimony of others; who heard the arguments of counsel, and on conflicting evidence made findings. No affidavits were filed in support of the motion. It is said that the judge who ruled on the motion did not have a transcript of the oral proceedings before him. He took no evidence. He manifestly ignored the findings. A judge who did not preside at the trial but who is designated under section 661 of the Code of Civil Procedure to hear a motion for a new trial may not modify a judgment which is based on findings made by a trial judge on conflicting evidence without changing the findings or making new and different findings unless the original findings do not support the original judgment. The original findings at bar support the original judgment.

maintained by plaintiffs upon the Eden Property, at its own expense and without cost to plaintiffs, forty-five thousand (45,000) gallons of water each month with not less than one thousand (1,000) gallons to be delivered each day so long as water is produced from the Sparling Well or until a well is drilled upon the Eden Property. In the event said defendant exercises this election, the court shall retain continuing jurisdiction to fix the amount of water which economically could be used in the future upon the Eden Property, up to, but not to exceed, two thousand three hundred and four (2304) gallons a day (1.6 gallons per minute). Provided, however, that should said spring in the future resume production and water become available therefrom the obligation of Sparling Water Company, now known as Hillside Water Company, to furnish water to plaintiffs, as hereinabove or hereafter in the future fixed, shall be reduced by the amount of water available to plaintiffs from said spring and in no event shall exceed the different between the water available from said spring and two thousand three hundred and four (2304) gallons per day (1.6 gallons per minute)."

City of Long Beach v. Wright, 134 Cal. App. 366, 25 P.2d 541, was an appeal from an amended judgment. One judge presided at the trial; another was designated to hear the motion for a new trial. The judge who ruled on the motion for a new trial increased the amounts awarded to condemnees. The court held (134 Cal.App. at page 370, 25 P.2d at page 542):

"Respondents urge that a judge who did not preside at the trial, but who is designated under section 661 of the Code of Civil Procedure to hear a motion for new trial, may exercise all the powers of the court in connection therewith as provided in section 662 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 661 provides that in case of the inability of the judge who tried the case to hear such a motion it shall be heard and determined by any other judge.

"It has long been the law of this state that 'a party litigant is entitled to a decision upon the facts of his case from the judge who hears the evidence, where the matter is tried without a jury,' and that 'he cannot be compelled to accept a decision upon the facts from another judge.' Guardianship of Sullivan, 143 Cal. 462, 467, 77 P. 153, 155; De Mund v. Superior Court, 213 Cal. 502, 505, 2 P.2d 985; Hughes v. De Mund, 96 Cal.App. 365, 368, 274 P. 405. In the last-cited case it was urged that a judge other than the one hearing the evidence may weigh the evidence and decide according to its preponderance in determining a motion for a new trial. With this contention the appellate court was in accord, but said (96 Cal.App. at page 370, 274 P. at page 406): 'If the motion is denied, however, an appeal may be taken from the original judgment, rendered by a judge who heard the evidence. If a new trial is granted, the case will be decided again by a judge who hears the evidence. But in this case the judgment was rendered by a judge who did not hear the greater and more important part of the evidence.' In the award of damages as changed and made in the instant case the judge who made the changes heard none of the evidence and yet made a very substantial increase in the award, on extremely conflicting evidence, over that made by the judge who heard all of the evidence. * * *

"[134 Cal.App. at page 372, 25 P.2d at page 543.] In our opinion it was not the purpose of such section [Code Civ. Proc. § 662] to authorize a judge who did not hear the evidence to change the decision of one who did, by weighing conflicting evidence as to values and selecting the values which in his opinion are the best, even assuming that such decision is not supported by the evidence.

"The decision on a question of fact of one judge in a trial court composed of more than one is the decision of the court, and in our opinion to hold that the action of the Legislature does what respondents claim for it would in effect be holding that the Legislature has the power, without constitutional authority so to do, to vest a superior court judge with powers not contemplated by section 5, article 6, of the Constitution, and more akin to the jurisdiction of courts of appeal, though greater even, extending, as they would, not only to the reviewing of conflicting evidence but to the modifying of decisions reviewed in accordance with the judgment reached by the reviewing judge."

In David v. Goodman, 114 Cal.App.2d 571, 250 P.2d 704, 706, the appellant contended that "a trial court is without power to enter a judgment based upon findings made by another judge." Upholding the contention, the court stated (114 Cal.App. 2d at page 574, 250 P.2d at page 706):

"The leading case in this state on the subject is Guardianship of Sullivan, 143 Cal. 462, 77 P. 153, an incompetency proceeding. There it appears that 'The evidence was all taken and the examination of the alleged incompetent had before one judge, who has never given any decision in the matter. The matter was subsequently argued and submitted for decision to another judge, who never heard any of the witnesses testify, and before whom * * * no report of the testimony was ever produced. He orally decided * * * that letters of guardianship should issue. The only order of judgment ever entered was signed by still another judge, who had never heard either evidence or argument.' In reversing the order the court said: 'A party litigant is entitled to a decision upon the facts of his case from the judge who hears the evidence, where the matter is tried without a jury * * *. He cannot be compelled to accept a decision upon the facts from another judge * * *.' That case has been followed in In re Williams, 52 Cal.App. 566, 199 P. 347; Hughes v. De Mund, 96 Cal.App. 365, 274 P. 405; City of Long Beach v. Wright, 134 Cal.App. 366, 25 P.2d 541; McAllen v. Souza, 24 Cal.App.2d 247, 74 P.2d 853, and Reimer v. Firpo, 94 Cal.App.2d 798, 212 P.2d 23. See, also, De Mund v. Superior Court, 213 Cal. 502, 505, 2 P.2d 985, and Foss v. Commissioner of Int. Rev., 1 Cir., 75 F.2d 326, 329."

[3] As stated earlier, the judge who ruled on the motion for a new trial did not in any respect change or add to the findings of the judge who presided at the trial. The findings of the judge who presided at the trial stated that the drilling of another well on the Eden property to the strata from which the Sparling well is producing would be likely to cause an economic waste of water and continual litigation between the parties. In view of this unchanged finding, the judge who denied the motion for a new trial was without power to give Sparling Water Company the election to pay plaintiffs $3,000 to drill and equip a well upon the Eden property.

It is appropriate to observe that the modified judgment makes no provision for the eventuality that plaintiffs might find a dry hole or might drill two or more dry holes before producing sufficient water for their domestic and irrigation purposes. Further, it does not appear how the judge who ruled on the motion for a new trial arrived at the figure $3,000 as the cost of drilling and equipping a well upon the Eden property when the trial judge found it to be $2,500.

Plaintiffs did not plead the loss of the 14 eucalyptus trees as special damages. They alleged general damages in an amount in excess of that awarded to them in the original judgment. The trial judge found that by reason of the drilling of the Sparling well and the drying up of the spring, the 14 eucalyptus trees were caused to die, and concluded that plaintiffs are entitled to judgment against defendant Maurice C. Sparling, as executor of the estate of Raymond Sparling, in the sum of $1,400. This conclusion was omitted from the modified conclusions of law but the finding remained. In view of the unchanged finding, it was not within the power of the judge who denied the motion for a new trial to strike that part of the original judgment which awarded plaintiffs $1,400 for the loss of the trees unless the damages for the loss were special damages as a matter of law.

Defendants contend the loss of the eucalyptus trees was special damage; and that since they were not pleaded specifically, they may not be recovered. If the loss of the eucalyptus trees constitutes general damages, the judge who ruled on the motion for new trial erred in striking that part of the original judgment which awarded plaintiffs damages for their loss.

[4, 5] Special damages not alleged in the complaint cannot be recovered. Bonde v. Bishop, 112 Cal.App.2d 1, 5, 245 P.2d 617. A general allegation of damages will authorize proof of all damages necessarily resulting or which may be legally implied from the act complained of. Morris v. Allen, 17 Cal.App. 684, 688, 121 P. 690;

[6] Damages which necessarily result from the act complained of are denominated general damages, and may be proved under the ad damnum clause or general allegation of damage; while those which are the natural consequences of the act complained of, and not the necessary result of it, are termed special damages. Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 579, 22 P. 266, 5 L.R.A. 498; Stoltz v. Converse, 75 Cal.App.2d 909, 914, 172 P.2d 78; 14 Cal.Jur.2d 650, § 22.

Zvolanek v. Bodger Seeds, Ltd., 5 Cal.App.2d 106, 42 P.2d 92, was an action for damages for injuries to land and sweet peas growing thereon resulting from flooding by water. The defendant so negligently flooded its land in irrigating that water ran into and over the land of the plaintiff and the sweet peas growing thereon and damaged them. Holding the damage to the sweet peas was general, the court stated (5 Cal.App.2d at page 108, 42 P.2d at page 93):

> "The measure of damages arising from tort, such as the one herein pleaded, is the amount which will compensate for all detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could be anticipated or not. (Civ.Code, § 3333.) The damage alleged herein was that which necessarily resulted from the flooding of the land and the sweet peas thereon."

[7] We are of the opinion that the judge who presided at the trial was warranted in concluding that the loss of the trees was general damage. The trees were "quite big" and had been planted some years before the Bartons purchased the property on marshy ground near the spring "with the object of sucking off and disposing of a lot of the water from the overflow of the spring." This evidence was elicited without objection:

"Q. After the well was drilled by Mr. Sparling, what was the condition around the eucalyptus grove? A. The eucalyptus trees began to dry up, and the place dried up.

"Q. Have any of the eucalyptus trees since the Sparling well was dug died? A. About fourteen of them.

"Q. Can you describe those trees for us? A. The largest one that died first was right across the drive from the spring, and it stands about 100 feet in height, and it died first and is just standing there dead. Then subsequently small ones began to die."

The trees were real property and were a part of the land. Civ.Code §§ 658, 660; Peterson v. Gibbs, 147 Cal. 1, 7, 81 P. 121; City of Los Angeles v. Hughes, 202 Cal. 731, 736–737, 262 P. 737. They were growing in marshy terrain. They were nourished by the water in the strata in which the Sparling well was drilled. Drilling of the Sparling well caused the spring to cease to flow. The drilling of the well caused the marshy terrain to dry up and the trees to die. A reasonable inference is that the death of the trees necessarily resulted from the drilling of the Sparling well.

[8] Defendants contend that plaintiffs are not hurt by the modified judgment for the reason they were not entitled to any judgment. They claim, in effect, there was no evidence that they took any water from plaintiffs and therefore plaintiffs were not prejudiced by any error in modifying the judgment. No purpose would be served in reviewing the extensive evidence received by the judge who presided at the trial. We have examined the record and are satisfied the evidence supports his findings in all respects and particularly the finding that the drilling of the Sparling well caused the spring upon the Eden property to cease to flow and the surrounding marshy terrain to dry up.

[9] Since that part of the modified judgment denying plaintiffs relief against the executor of the estate of Raymond Sparling must be reversed and the original judgment which awards damages against him reinstated, plaintiffs are entitled to costs from him. The cost bill filed by such executor falls with the reversal of that part of the modified judgment. (13 Cal. Jur.2d 276, § 54.) It is therefore unnecessary to consider plaintiffs' appeal from the order denying their motion to retax costs.

The parts of the modified judgment entered November 5, 1957 are reversed. The judgment entered August 28, 1957 is reinstated as rendered.

v.

Earl Leon MALONE, also known as Earl Maxwell, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 2909.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 27, 1959.

Defendant was convicted of grand theft and from a judgment and order denying his motion for new trial in the Superior Court, Tehama County, Curtiss E. Wetter, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that whether a witness connecting defendant with the crime was an accomplice was a question for the jury and that the evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐507(5)

A thief and receiver of stolen property generally are not accomplices of each other with respect to corroboration except that when the thief and receiver conspire together to steal with a prearranged plan for one who actually steals to deliver the property to another they are "accomplices" of each other. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 1111.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Accomplices".

2. Criminal Law ⇐507(5)

Unless a thief and receiver of stolen goods conspire together in a prearranged plan for one to steal and deliver to the other, the rule is that the thief and receiver are not "accomplices" with respect to corroboration. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1111.

3. Criminal Law ⇐742(2)

In prosecution for grand theft where there was no evidence that an alleged accomplice knew that the pipe was stolen until after it was unloaded and he denied complicity in the crime the question of whether he was an accomplice was one of fact for the jury. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1111.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1144(14)

Where instructions given by the court are not in the record, the appellate court must assume that the jury was properly instructed.

5. Larceny ⇐65

In prosecution for grand theft, evidence sustained conviction where the jury determined on proper evidence that the testimony of a witness connecting defendant with the crime was not that of an accomplice whose testimony was required to be corroborated. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1111.

Edward J. Allen, Red Bluff, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Robert K. Puglia, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Defendant above named was found guilty of the crime of grand theft. His motion for a new trial was denied, and he has appealed from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The principal and in fact the only contention of appellant is that there is no evidence to connect him with the offense charged, except the testimony of Ray Hill and Dorothy Andrada, both of whom appellant asserts are accomplices. Before discussing this contention, we shall give a brief summary of the evidence as shown by the record.

Approximately 600 feet of rigid electrical conduit pipe was taken without the owner's permission from a construction project at the Red Bluff High School about 10:00 p. m. the evening of May 5, 1958. The night watchman saw a man who had a bundle of conduit in his hand throw it into the rear of a pickup truck and then enter the cab of the truck where another person was seated and drive away. The night watchman was unable to identify the thief. About 11:00 p. m. Ray Hill saw the defendant in the living room of the home of Hill's grandfather. The defendant told Ray Hill that he had some pipe to deliver to his father's home. Ray Hill then directed the defendant to his father's home, and subsequently, with Ray Hill's assistance, the pipe was unloaded. After the pipe had been unloaded Ray Hill was told, "Gee this stuff is hot, will you cover it up?" The next morning Ray Hill determined that the pipe which was unloaded was ¾ inch conduit. Twenty hours later Hill notified the police who came and got the conduit. At the trial Hill testified that he saw another person in the truck who he thought was Dorothy Andrada. She testified that she accompanied the defendant to the jobsight where he got out of the pickup and loaded the pipe into it. They then drove off and went out to Dan Hill's place (Ray's father) with the pipe where it was unloaded.

Appellant did not testify at the trial and called no witnesses in his defense.

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain his conviction of grand theft because both Ray Hill and Dorothy Andrada are accomplices and there is no other evidence to connect him with the crime. It is conceded that Dorothy Andrada was an accomplice; and that if it must be held as a matter of law that Ray Hill also was an accomplice, the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment.

Appellant argues that since the testimony of one accomplice can not be corroborated by the testimony of another accomplice (People v. Clapp, 24 Cal.2d 835, 151 P.2d 237, 238), the conviction is repugnant to California Penal Code, section 1111, which states: "A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof. An accomplice is hereby defined as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given."

[1–5] A thief and the receiver of the stolen property generally are not accomplices of each other. People v. Lima, 25 Cal.2d 573, 154 P.2d 698; People v. Raven, 44 Cal.2d 523, 282 P.2d 866; People v. Conrad, 125 Cal.App.2d 184, 270 P. 2d 31. However, there is an exception to the foregoing rule. When the thief and receiver conspire together to steal with a prearranged plan for the one who actually steals to deliver the property to the other, they are accomplices of each other. People v. Lima, supra; People v. Raven, supra; People v. Hamilton, 143 Cal.App.2d 305, 299 P.2d 716.

There is no evidence in the record from which it may be inferred that Ray Hill conspired with the defendant to steal the pipe. The most that could be inferred is that Hill took possession of the pipe knowing that it was stolen. Unless the thief and the receiver conspire together in a prearranged plan for one to steal and deliver to the other, the rule is that the thief and the receiver are not accomplices. People v. Lima, supra. There is no evidence in the record which indicates that Hill knew that the pipe was stolen until after it was unloaded. Hill denied complicity in the crime. Upon the record in the instant case the question of whether or not Hill was an accomplice was one of fact for the jury to determine under proper instructions. People v. Griffin, 98 Cal.App.2d 1, 219 P. 2d 519. The instructions given by the court are not in the record, and we must assume that the jury was properly instructed. The jury by its verdict of guilty determined that Hill was not an accomplice of appellant, and inasmuch as the testimony of Hill connects appellant with the crime charged the evidence is sufficient to sustain the judgment.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Preston PERSKY, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 2873.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 14, 1959.

Prosecution for grand theft. The Superior Court, Mendocino County, Hale McCowen, J., entered judgment of conviction on three counts, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that where defendant was charged in one count with taking equity of prosecuting witness in an automobile, and in another count was charged with taking legal title to the automobile, and under a third count defendant was charged with taking the proceeds from the sale of a second automobile, and under a fourth count was charged with taking such other automobile, such counts were in the alternative, and there was no inconsistency in verdict of jury finding defendant guilty of taking of both automobiles, but finding defendant not guilty of taking of the equity in one automobile, and the proceeds of the sale of the second automobile.

Judgment and order affirmed, appeal from order denying probation dismissed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1023(12)

An order denying probation is nonappealable, and a purported appeal therefrom would be dismissed.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1144(13)

On appeal by a defendant from a judgment of conviction, District Court of Appeals, in summarizing the evidence shown by the record, must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the state, and conflicts in the testimony must be disregarded.

3. Larceny ⇐55

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for unlawful taking of two automobiles, and for unlawful taking of money.

4. Criminal Law ⇐665(2)

In prosecution for unlawful taking of money from owner of an automobile agency, by defendant-manager, in view of fact the state's case involved many accounting records, and in view of fact owner of the business was familiar with many aspects of the case, trial judge would not be deemed to have abused his discretion in permitting such two witnesses to remain in the courtroom during the trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2043.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1170½(5)

In prosecution for theft of personalty by defendant who was manager of an automobile agency of complaining witness, trial court would not be deemed to have committed prejudicial error in not permitting cross-examination of prosecuting witness as to statements made by him in a complaint filed in a civil action against defendant dealing with the same matter as the criminal prosecution, where record disclosed that trial court told counsel for defendant that if he would explain to the court how the proposed questioning was relevant to anything in the direct examination he would hear him, but no explanation was ever offered.

6. Indictment and Information ⇐128

An accusatory pleading may charge different statements of the same offense under separate counts. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 954.

7. Criminal Law ⇐878(4)

Where defendant was charged in one count with taking equity of prosecuting witness in an automobile, and in a second count was charged with taking legal title to the automobile, and under a third count defendant was charged with taking the proceeds from the sale of a second automobile, and under a fourth count was charged with taking such second automobile, such counts were in the alternative, and there was no inconsistency in verdict of jury finding defendant guilty of taking of both automobiles, but finding defendant not guilty of taking of the equity in one automobile, and the proceeds of the sale of the other automobile.

8. Criminal Law ⇐384

In prosecution for grand theft, wherein defendant was charged with taking certain automobiles while manager of an automobile agency owned by prosecuting witness, trial court did not err in excluding evidence of asserted sales tax regulation dealing with over allowances and discounts on theory that it was a common practice in the industry that special discounts, over allowances and fictitious down payments are listed on conditional sales contracts for automobiles, in view of fact offered evidence was too remote to have any materiality, and even if it were a practice of the automobile industry to give over allowances, proof of asserted sales tax regulation was entirely collateral to any issue in the case.

Timothy J. Crowley, Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Doris H. Maier, Dep. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

[1] Defendant was charged with five counts of grand theft. Pen.Code, § 484. In count one defendant was accused of taking "* * * an equity of the value of $456.00 in a 1955 Studebaker automobile, and of the personal property of L. J. Downing." In count two defendant was accused of taking "* * * one 1955 Studebaker automobile of the personal property of L. J. Downing." In count three the defendant was accused of taking "* * * One Thousand Four Hundred Ninety-five and no/100ths ($1,495.00) Dollars, in money, lawful money of the United States, and of the personal property of L. J. Downing." In count four the defendant was accused of taking "* * * one 1953 Lincoln automobile of the personal property of L. J. Downing." In count five the defendant was accused of taking "* * * in excess of Fifteen Hundred ($1500.00) dollars, in money, lawful money of the United States, and of the personal property of L. J. Downing." A jury found defendant not guilty of counts one and three and guilty of counts two, four and five. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, probation was denied and judgment was pronounced. Defendant appeals from the judgment, from the order denying his motion for a new trial and from the order denying probation. The latter order, being non-appealable, the appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

Appellant makes a multifold attack upon the judgment and order. He urges that: 1. The evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdicts; 2. The court erred in denying appellant's motion to exclude all witnesses from the courtroom; 3. The court erred in limiting the cross-examination of the witness, Downing; 4. The verdicts on counts one and two and the verdicts on counts three and four are inconsistent; and 5. The court erred in refusing to admit testimony concerning the State Board of Equalization sales tax regulations.

[2] Before discussing these contentions, we shall summarize the evidence as shown by the record, bearing in mind the familiar rule that the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the respondent and that conflicts in the testimony must be disregarded.

On October 1, 1956, Preston Persky was employed by Loren Downing, an automobile dealer, to manage his business located at Fort Bragg, California. The parties agreed that Persky was to manage the business and that he was to be paid as a salary fifty per cent of the net profit of the business. The agreement further provided that Persky would be entitled to draw on such profit at the rate of $100 per week. Persky began his duties. Downing continued to sign all the contracts which were discounted at the bank and to sign all checks. In all other respects, except for a few deals, all transactions in automobiles were by or under the supervision of Persky. A used car lot was established in Windsor, near Santa Rosa, in the back yard of one Clifford Turner. Cars were kept there and transactions were entered into there. Persky introduced certain records referred to as "Whiz Tickets", which were the sales tickets, from which the bookkeeper obtained the necessary information to post his books. The accounting records of the establishment were posted from these tickets. Persky continued to operate the business until the latter part of March, 1957, and finally about March 31, 1957, he discontinued his participation in the business. Some months later an audit of the business was had. This revealed discrepancies existed between the amounts listed on the sales tickets and the amounts listed on the contracts of sale which were discounted with the bank. It also revealed that certain automobiles were missing. As a result of the audit, Downing filed a civil action against Persky. He also made a complaint to the district attorney who, after certain preliminary proceedings, filed an information charging Persky with five counts of grand theft as hereinbefore set forth.

Counts one and two involved the same transaction and were merely alternative methods of charging the same crime. Counts three and four also involved the same automobile and were alternative methods of charging the same crime.

In February, 1957, Persky purchased a 1955 Studebaker from the business for $1,456. He traded a 1952 Mercury for which he was allowed the sum of $456. Persky did not have title to the Mercury, but he informed Downing that he would get title. This was never done. The Mercury was registered to a Raymond Arbizu. The legal owner was a Henry Rondoni who testified that the Arbizu contract was in default, that he had been approached by a man who said he knew where the Mercury was and who offered to deliver it to Rondoni for $100 or buy it for $200. Rondoni sent this man to talk to the dealer who had sold the car and who was contingently liable on the contract. Since the incident no one had attempted to purchase the car. Downing has never received title to the Mercury.

In March, 1957, one H. D. Burnett purchased an Oldsmobile from the firm. The sale was negotiated by Clifford Turner. Burnett traded a 1953 Lincoln valued at $1,495 as a down payment. The records of the business do not reveal what happened to the car. Persky testified that he sold the car for $939 at an automobile auction. He also testified he paid a few bills which were owed by Downing and that he retained the balance of the funds. He figured that he had more than that due him.

The evidence to support count five of the information is a little more complex. During the audit it was discovered that the figures on the contracts which were discounted with a bank did not correspond with the figures on the sales or "Whiz" tickets. The auditor accepted the figures that appeared on the contracts because they were signed by the purchaser while the sales tickets were not. The contracts indicated cash payments, which the sales tickets did not. In several of the cases the customer testified that a cash down payment was made or that a larger cash down payment was made than was reflected in the sales tickets. From these computations a shortage of over $1,500 was determined to exist. One Ruth Wassalino purchased a 1953 Ford. The contract indicated that $369.80 was paid down. The sales ticket which was in Persky's handwriting indicated that $25 was received down and that $119.80 was due. Mrs. Wassalino testified that she made a down payment of $250. She gave a check of $250 to Clifford Turner. One Florence Valentine purchased a 1949 Chevrolet from Persky for $349. She paid $325 down. The sales ticket indicated that the total price of the car was $193 and that a deposit of $75 had been made. James Thomas testified that he purchased a car from Persky and paid $100 in two installments. He had a receipt signed by Persky for $54 and a receipt signed by a William Sartain for $46. Thomas testified "it was understood that it was okay to pay him, to give him the money and he was going to give it to Mr. Persky."

We are satisfied that the evidence is sufficient to support the conviction on count two. If Persky falsely represented that he would get title to the Mercury which he traded in on the Studebaker he purchased, he would be guilty of theft. Persky made no effort to obtain title to the Mercury except by writing the Department of Motor Vehicles the latter part of March, 1957, to learn the registered and legal owner of the car. It is rather strange for a person to trade in an automobile that he does not have title to and to state that he will get title and then do nothing to actually obtain title. We believe that the jury could find that Persky obtained the Studebaker through false representations and that Persky never intended to get title to the Mercury when he purchased the Studebaker.

We believe also that the evidence is sufficient to support the conviction on count four. Persky, by his own testimony, admitted that he sold the Lincoln and retained the proceeds. This was not an open claim of title to the car. This was an unlawful disposition of the property of Downing to satisfy an alleged debt Downing owed Persky.

The evidence to support count five consists of the evidence which shows that Persky collected sums which were not reported to the firm. The evidence clearly establishes that Persky personally received the sum of $304 which was not reported. (Florence Valentine $250, James Thomas $54.) In addition Persky testified that he had received $150 from a Mr. Harmon. This would show the sum of $454 actually received by Persky. Even the lesser amount satisfied the requirement of grand theft.

Appellant has made a lengthy, earnest and able argument in support of his contention that the record does not support the conviction on any of the counts. However, his argument points out testimony which appellant contends is favorable to appellant, and merely accentuates the conflict in the testimony. It was the province of the jury to weigh the evidence, and we are convinced that the evidence supports the conviction on counts two, four and five.

[3] Appelant's second contention is that the court erred in not excluding all the witnesses during the trial. Before any testimony was received counsel for appellant made a motion to exclude all witnesses. The prosecution was permitted to have Mr. Downing and the certified public accountant who made the audit remain. The case involved many accounting records, and it is understandable that the district attorney would need an accountant at his side to advise him on the accounting aspects of the case. Mr. Downing was the owner of the business, and he would be familiar with many aspects of it. Under such circumstances we do not believe we would be justified in holding that the trial judge abused his discretion in permitting the two witnesses to remain. The rule is that the exercise of the power which is provided for in section 2043 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to the exclusion of witnesses is discretionary with the trial court. Witkin California Evidence, sec. 568; People v. Lariscy, 14 Cal.2d 30, 92 P.2d 638; People v. Garbutt, 197 Cal. 200, 239 P. 1080.

[4] Appellant next contends that the court committed prejudicial error in not permitting cross examination of Mr. Downing as to statements made by him in a complaint filed in a civil action against Persky which dealt with the same matter as the criminal prosecution. Appellant contends that this was admissible for the purpose of testing the credibility of Downing. The record shows that the following occurred: "Mr. Crowley: However, it would go to show, first of all, test his credibility, his veracity, which is certainly heavily under attack in this matter, and I think successfully so, and it would go also to his motive for instituting these criminal proceedings. If the court wishes, I could abandon the question along that line for today, because we won't be going too much longer anyway and perhaps I could supply some authority to show the relevancy of these questions tomorrow. The Court: Well, you will have the opportunity to do so, but the objection is sustained at this time."

The record does not show that appellant's counsel sought to pursue the matter further, but the record does show that the complaint was later introduced in evidence and was before the court and jury.

Appellant was, of course, entitled to impeach the witness by showing that statements in the complaint filed in the civil action were inconsistent with the testimony of the witness in court. However, appellant did not point out to the trial court and has not pointed out in his brief filed in this court anything in the complaint which was inconsistent with the testimony given at the trial. The record discloses that the trial court told counsel for appellant "if you will explain to me how that is relevant to anything in his direct examination I'll hear you." In view of the fact that no explanation was ever offered, the ruling of the trial court was not erroneous.

[5, 6] Appellant contends further that the verdict of guilty on count two is inconsistent with the verdict of not guilty on count one, and that the verdict of guilty on count four is inconsistent with the not guilty on count three. The information charged appellant in count one with the unlawful taking of Downing's equity in the 1955 Studebaker. In count two appellant is charged with the taking of the Studebaker automobile, personal property of Downing. Both charges are for grand theft. Similarly, count three charges appellant with the taking of $1,495 which was the value of a 1953 Lincoln, and count four charges appellant with taking the 1953 Lincoln automobile. An accusatory pleading "may charge * * * different statements of the same offense * * * under separate counts * * *." Pen. Code, § 954.

[7] The jury was instructed that if they found the defendant guilty as charged on either counts one or two, they must find him not guilty as charged in the other, and if they should find defendant guilty as charged in either of counts three and four, they must find him not guilty as charged in the other. The court went on to say, "That is, Counts One and Two relate to the same set of circumstances charging the crime in a little different language, and you can't find him guilty on both Counts One and Two. If you construe the evidence such that you are convinced to a moral certainty that he is guilty of Count One, you must find him not guilty on Count Two. I'm using that simply as an illustration, and the same thing applies to Three and Four." A similar instruction has been approved for situations as in the present case where the facts charged in two counts are merely different statements of the same offense. People v. Hiden, 102 Cal. App.2d 655, 660, 228 P.2d 95; see People v. Breyer, 139 Cal.App. 547, 34 P.2d 1065, 1067. Such an instruction does not state or imply that the jury should bring in a guilty verdict on either or any of the offenses charged.

The finding of not guilty of counts one and three cannot be deemed an acquittal of counts two and four. Pen.Code, § 954. As stated in People v. Nye, 38 Cal.2d 34, at page 39, 237 P.2d 1, at page 4: "An indictment or information may charge 'different statements of the same offense or two or more different offenses of the same class of crimes or offenses, under separate counts' and a verdict of acquittal on one count is not an acquittal on any other count. (Pen.Code, § 954.) Thus, whether or not Counts II and IV charged different statements of the same offense or two offenses of the same class of offenses, the dismissal of Count II was not tantamount to an acquittal on Count IV. People v. Codina, 30 Cal.2d 356, 360, 181 P.2d 881."

The elements of the corpus delicti of the offenses charged in count one are different from the elements charged in count two and the offense charged in count three is different from the offense charged in count four. In count one appellant is charged with taking an equitable right, and in count two appellant is charged with taking the legal title to the car. Under count three appellant is charged with taking the proceeds from the sale of the automobile, and under count four appellant is charged with taking the automobile.

It is apparent that these counts are in the alternative and that the jury would have had to find that Downing had either an equity in the car or was the legal owner. Apparently they found the latter. There was no inconsistency in such a verdict.

[8] The court did not err in excluding evidence of the asserted sales tax regulation dealing with over allowances and discounts. Counsel for appellant sought to prove that "it was common practice in the industry, and as a matter of fact, the sales tax people themselves, the people themselves, recognized the fact that special discounts, over allowances and fictitious cash down payments were listed on conditional sales contracts and prior to January 9, 1956, the rule and regulation in the industry was that the sales tax would be computed on what was actually received by the dealer and not what was shown on the conditional sales contract." The court excluded the offered evidence on the ground that it was immaterial and collateral testimony, and we think the ruling was correct, as it was too remote to have any materiality in the instant case. Appellant testified that the contracts were drafted to show that an adequate down payment was received so that the bank's minimum down payment requirements would be met, and that the contracts which were prepared by appellant did not correctly state the amount of the down payments. Even if it were a practice of the automobile industry to give over allowances, which would in effect be a practice of committing fraud, we believe that proof of the asserted sales tax regulation was entirely collateral to any issue in the case and was properly excluded.

We are convinced from a study of the entire record that the appellant received a fair trial, that there was ample evidence that he was guilty of the counts of which he was found guilty, and that no prejudicial errors were committed.

The judgment and order are affirmed. The appeal from the order denying probation is dismissed.

Eunice GARBUTT, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Harry SCHECHTER and George Schechter, copartners, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of 4-Star Mills, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 23282.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 27, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when a chair on which she sat upon in defendant's store rocked and caused the plaintiff to fall to the floor. Verdict and judgment for the plaintiff in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Emil Gumpert, J., and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence justified judgment against the defendants on the ground that the chair created an unreasonable risk for customers and that defendant knew or by reasonable care should have known of that fact.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐996, 1001(1)

If upon the evidence reasonable minds might differ as to the answers of a jury on the facts, the appellate court is concluded by the implied findings of the jury, and only where the Appellate Court can say that an affirmative answer to the questions would be unreasonable would it be justified in holding the evidence insufficient to support the verdict for the appellee.

2. Negligence ⇐44

Owners of a store were required to furnish chairs for their customers' use that would provide them with reasonable safety, and alleged fact that a smaller or more nimble person than plaintiff would not have fallen or might not have been hurt as result of construction of a chair would not acquit the defendants of negligence.

3. Evidence ⇐14

It is a well-recognized fact that big persons fall harder than small ones.

4. Negligence ⇐32(1)

Defendants as owners of a store owed a duty towards all invitees, not merely to a selected few, and a large woman was as much entitled to a safe chair to be furnished by defendants, as a small one.

5. Negligence ⇐134(4, 7)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff, a large woman, who seated herself on a chair furnished by defendants in their store and the chair tipped forward and caused the plaintiff to fall to the floor, where the design of the chair was a wide departure from common standards of chair construction and it was so designed that it rocked forward when weight was applied to the front part of the seat, evidence justified judgment against defendants on the ground that the chair created an unreasonable risk for customers and that defendant knew or by reasonable care should have known of that fact.

Robert Silver, Beverly Hills, Eugene E. Glushon, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

In a jury trial Eunice Garbutt was awarded verdict and judgment in the amount of $25,000 for personal injuries sustained in a fall from a chair in a place of business of defendants Schechter. Defendants made a motion for new trial which was denied and they have appealed from the judgment, contending there was no evidence that the chair from which plaintiff fell was unsafe for patrons to sit upon and that they were not guilty of negligence.

Plaintiff and her husband entered defendants' place of business for the purpose of purchasing some lace. They were shown into a small showroom by a receptionist where plaintiff stood at the end of a table looking at a lace sample book. Mr. Garbutt seated himself on a chair. Harry Schechter came in to wait upon them, plaintiff selected some lace and as Harry Schechter was leaving to have the lace packaged he asked plaintiff to be seated and plaintiff sat on an "S" shaped chrome chair that had no arm rest.

Plaintiff was 5 feet, 4 inches in height and 200 pounds in weight. She had had surgery in her lower spine. As she seated herself the chair tipped forward and went out from under her, causing her to fall to the floor. Due to her condition it was necessary for her to get onto her knees to arise from that position. As she fell, her left foot went out from under her but she was able to arise and stood waiting Mr. Schechter's return. As a result of the fall she was required to undergo surgery; she had not worked since the accident and the business she had conducted was sold at inventory prices. After her first surgery she would seat herself as follows: "I would sit down very carefully, then move myself back, because I had no bottom spine, so I would sit down on the chair * * * like this and then move myself back into the chair." She had seen the same type of chair many times and had seen them in use, but did not recall whether she had previously sat on one of them.

The chair was introduced in evidence as an exhibit and is before us as a part of the record. The frame of the chair is composed of 1-inch aluminum tubing and the seat is supported only by legs in front which are directly in line with the front of the seat and are curved backward near the bottom. The framework which serves the purpose of legs commences to curve backward at a point 4 inches above the floor and it reaches the floor 4 inches to the rear of the front edge of the seat. Beyond that the base of the frame is flat and sufficiently well designed to prevent the chair from tipping backward, but due to the curve of the legs it has a tendency to roll forward. The seat of the chair measures 14 inches from front to back and its center of gravity was determined by experiment to be 5 inches forward of the back of the seat and the point of support furnished by the front legs to be about 3¼ inches from the front edge of the seat. Also it had been determined by experiment that the chair would overturn forward upon the application of different weights at different points on the seat forward of the point of support, whereas weight placed behind the point of support would not cause it to overturn. It was an obvious fact that when the chair overturned more of plaintiff's weight rested forward of the point of support than behind it. Equally obvious is the fact that the plaintiff's weight would be shifted to the front or the rear of the point of support as she might have leaned forward or backward.

[1] The questions for the jury were whether the chair created an unreasonable risk for customers and whether defendants knew or in the exercise of reasonable care would have known that fact. If, upon the evidence, reasonable minds might differ as to the answers, we are concluded by the implied findings of the jury. Only in case we could say that an affirmative answer to either of these questions would be unreasonable would we be justified in holding the evidence to be insufficient to support the verdict. Counsel for defendants, of course, do not question that the power of a reviewing court is thus limited.

Defendants say "There is nothing inherently dangerous in such chair. Perhaps, there is no more simple or ordinary appliance than a chair. Persons using chairs do not ordinarily place themselves thereon in the manner described by plaintiff as being the manner in which she placed herself upon this chair. To place one's weight on the forward end or edge of a chair is extremely unusual and not to be expected. There is no evidence that defendants or either of them had the slightest inkling that plaintiff here would do so." They contend that an unusual combination of circumstances contributed to the accident, namely, plaintiff's weight and her physical condition, which made it necessary for her to rest her weight at first upon the front part of the seat and to attempt to move backwards on the seat. They then argue that they had no duty to anticipate this unusual combination of conditions and apparently contend that in any other circumstances the chair would not have toppled over. They say that chairs of this type are in common use, but if this be granted, it is nevertheless a fact that the design is a wide departure from common standards of chair construction. This chair is so designed that it rocks forward when weight is applied to the front part of the seat. As a chair it is an oddity in which safety has been sacrificed to the convenience and economy of using metal tubing with easy bends at the bottom of the front legs, which give the seat the only support it has. It is of the type of newfangled creations that are called modern, and which are designed more to please the eye than to provide the stability one expects to find when reposing the anatomy upon a chair in a place of business.

[2, 3] Although defendants were not required to anticipate that someone might use the chair in the identical manner in which plaintiff attempted to seat herself upon it, they were required to furnish chairs for their customers that would provide them with reasonable safety. Werkman v. Howard Zink Corp., 97 Cal.App.2d 418, 218 P. 2d 43, and cases cited. It is quite likely that a smaller or a more nimble person would not have fallen or might not have been hurt, but if this were true it would not acquit defendants of negligence. The well recognized fact that big persons fall harder than small ones is relevant only to the extent of plaintiff's injuries which, admittedly, were serious.

[4] Defendants owed a duty toward all invitees, not merely to a selected few. A large woman is as much entitled to a safe chair as a small one and is much more in need of it. Robinson v. Pioche, 5 Cal. 460.

[5] It is inherent in the verdict that the jury believed it to be a practice reasonably to be anticipated that women are likely to sit on the edges of chairs, and are especially prone to do so when examining samples at dress goods counters. We think that was a fair and reasonable conclusion. Also it was demonstrated that the chair will go out from under one who sits forward on the seat, although a conventional chair, used in the same manner, would provide safety.

Inasmuch as we are of the opinion that the implied findings of the jury upon the material issues have ample support in the evidence the judgment must be and is affirmed.

Robert THOMAS, Defendant and Appellant.*

Cr. 6355.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 26, 1959.

Hearing Granted March 25, 1959.

Defendant was convicted of possession of heroin. From an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Edward R. Brand, J., denying the defendant's motion to vacate the judgment, the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeals, Fox, P. J., held that where illegal restraint had been imposed upon defendant by reason of the sentence, court was thereafter without jurisdiction to vacate the sentence originally pronounced and that defendant's appeal was not dismissable on the theory that the question might have been raised upon appeal from the judgment.

Reversed and sentence vacated and sentence to county jail reinstated.

Herndon, J., dissented.

* Opinion vacated 342 P.2d 889.

1. Criminal Law ⇐996(2), 998

If the sentence has been entered in the minutes of the court or if defendant has begun serving the sentence or has been restrained by it, court is without jurisdiction to vacate or modify the sentence originally pronounced.

2. Criminal Law ⇐998

In narcotics prosecution alleging that defendant had suffered a prior conviction where defendant was sentenced and left the courtroom and was in the custody of a deputy sheriff pursuant to the county jail sentence that had been returned, a "legal restraint" had been imposed upon the defendant by reason of the sentence and the trial court was thereafter without jurisdiction to vacate the sentence originally imposed in order to impose punishment on the defendant in the state prison because of a prior conviction. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1131(4)

An appeal from order denying defendant's motion to vacate judgment sentencing him to state prison based on a prior conviction and to reinstate the county jail sentence was not dismissable on the ground that the question might have been raised upon appeal from the judgment where such appeal would not have presented the question involved and where the motion to vacate the prior judgment was an appropriate procedure to develop the factual situation to show that the court lacked jurisdiction to pronounce the second judgment and that it was therefore void. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1237, subd. 3.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1023(12)

Where an order denying defendant's motion to vacate judgment and sentence was made after final judgment and it affected the substantial rights of the defendant, the order was appealable. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 1237, subd. 3.

Spiegel, Turner & Wolfson, Santa Monica, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was charged with violating Health and Safety Code section 11500 (possession of heroin). It was also alleged that he had suffered a prior conviction for violation of this same code section and that he had served a term of imprisonment therefor in the state prison. At the trial in the Santa Monica branch of the superior court, defendant was found guilty of possession and evidence was received with respect to his alleged prior conviction, but determination of that question was continued until the hearing on defendant's application for probation and sentence, which was set for April 7, 1958. In the meantime defendant was in the county jail. On the morning of April 7th defendant was transported to the Santa Monica court from the county jail in the custody of a deputy sheriff. Defendant's case was heard shortly after 10:00 o'clock. Probation was denied. He was sentenced to six months in the county jail, and remanded to custody. However, no mention was made of the alleged prior conviction. The clerk made notes of the judge's disposition of defendant's case but did not then make a formal entry thereof in the minutes. After defendant and the deputy sheriff who had him in custody left the courtroom the clerk discovered that the judge had failed to dispose of the alleged prior conviction. The clerk called the matter to the attention of the deputy district attorney and the deputy public defender who represented defendant, and the three of them held a conference with the judge in his chambers with respect to this matter. As a result, the judge directed the clerk to have the defendant brought back into court that afternoon. The clerk telephoned the sheriff's office in Los Angeles before going to lunch that the defendant was to be returned immediately to the superior court in Santa Monica. Defendant was returned to the jail at 3:15 p. m.; he was checked out for return to the Santa Monica court at 3:35. The order remanding defendant to the county jail for a period of six months was stamped as having been received there at 3:39 p. m.

When defendant was notified that he must return immediately to the Santa Monica court "[h]e was in the process of receiving his cell clothes." Defendant and his attorney appeared again in the Santa Monica court at 4:50 that afternoon. The judge explained that in view of the heavy calendar that morning he had inadvertently overlooked the alleged prior conviction. No objection was raised by defendant's counsel to this hearing, during the course of which defendant admitted the prior conviction (sale of Marijuana) and that he was presently on parole. The judge thereupon vacated the previous sentence of six months in the county jail and imposed a sentence in the state prison.

Soon thereafter new counsel for defendant filed a motion to vacate the last judgment and to reinstate the county jail sentence. An affidavit of defendant's aunt was filed in support of the motion to the effect that upon the jail sentence being pronounced the deputy sheriff took defendant out of the courtroom. At the hearing on the motion to vacate the judgment there was testimony of the court clerk and a deputy sheriff covering the above procedural matters. Defendant's motion was denied. He has appealed from that order.

Defendant contends that the second judgment is void on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction to vacate the sentence originally pronounced. Defendant's position is well taken.

[1] The rule here applicable is stated in People v. McAllister, 15 Cal.2d 519, at pages 526–527, 102 P.2d 1072, at page 1075, as follows: "If the sentence has been entered in the minutes of the court, or if the defendant has begun serving said sentence or has been restrained by the sentence imposed, then the court is without jurisdiction to vacate, add to, or in any manner modify the sentence originally pronounced. On the other hand, if the sentence pronounced has not been entered by the clerk in his minutes, and no legal restraint has been imposed upon the defendant by reason of said sentence, then it is proper for the court to change the sentence originally pronounced."

[2] When defendant in the instant case left the courtroom in Santa Monica in the forenoon he was in the custody of a deputy sheriff pursuant to the county jail sentence that had been pronounced. When he was returned to the county jail he was handed his prison garb in furtherance of the execution of that sentence. There can be no doubt that "legal restraint" had been imposed upon him "by reason of said sentence." It therefore follows that the instant case comes squarely within the latter portion of the rule quoted from People v. McAllister, supra. Hence, under the authority of that case, the court was thereafter "without jurisdiction to vacate * * * the sentence originally pronounced." See also People v. Reimringer, 116 Cal.App.2d 332, 343, 253 P.2d 756; People v. Ysabel, 28 Cal.App.2d 259, 261, 82 P.2d 476; In re Daniels, 119 Cal.App. 350, 6 P.2d 549. From this it follows that the sentence in the afternoon to the state prison was void. People v. McAllister, supra.

[3–4] The People suggest that defendant's appeal should be dismissed upon the theory that the question presented might have been raised upon an appeal from the judgment and that therefore an appeal from the order denying defendant's motion does not lie. That theory, however, is not here applicable. Subsection 3 of section 1237 of the Penal Code provides that an appeal may be taken from any order after judgment, affecting the substantial rights of the party. The record before us indicates that an appeal from the judgment would not have presented the question here tendered for our consideration. The clerk's minutes show that defendant was sentenced to the state prison. They do not reveal that a county jail sentence had first been pronounced. It was therefore necessary for an appropriate record to be made which would show the initial jail sentence, the fact that defendant was legally restrained by reason of its imposition, and that he was thereafter returned to the court at which time the prior sentence was set aside and a more severe sentence imposed. A motion to vacate the prior judgment was an appropriate procedure for developing the factual situation as a basis for showing that the court lacked jurisdiction to pronounce the second judgment, and that it was therefore void. This was the procedure that was used in People v. McAllister. See also People v. Stratton, 133 Cal.App. 309, 314, 24 P.2d 174; People v. Walker, 132 Cal. 137, 64 P. 133; People v. Paraskevopolis, 42 Cal. App. 325, 183 P. 585. As it is manifest that the order in question was made after final judgment, and that it affected the substantial rights of the defendant, the right to appeal from the order is clear. People v. Godfrey, 100 Cal.App. 91, 279 P. 1030.

The order is reversed, the sentence to the state prison is vacated, and the sentence to the county jail for six months is reinstated.

HERNDON, Justice.

I dissent.

Through an understandable inadvertence shared by the trial judge, the deputy district attorney and defense counsel, there was a failure at the time of rendering the original judgment to notice and dispose of the charge that appellant previously had been convicted of a felony involving the sale of narcotics. This prior, if found true, made mandatory the imposition of a state prison sentence. The trial judge acted with such promptness to correct the oversight that appellant was recalled from the county jail to the courtroom within twenty minutes after he had arrived at the jail following the imposition of sentence and before the remand order was received there.

The original judgment had not been entered in the minutes of the court. And in a technical sense appellant actually had not begun to serve the jail term because he was ordered back to the courtroom before the remand order, or mittimus, had reached the jail. Cf. Hynes v. United States, 7 Cir., 35 F.2d 734. Appellant suffered no prejudice whatsoever by reason of any restraint imposed upon him during the brief interval between the pronouncement of the original sentence and the correction thereof. He would have been under precisely the same restraint in any event. I do not agree that the decision in People v. McAllister, 15 Cal. 2d 519, 102 P.2d 1072, reasonably interpreted, compels us to accord appellant the completely undeserved benefit of such an inconsequential and technical irregularity. It is to be remembered that in McAllister the Supreme Court affirmed the order denying a motion to vacate the alternative provision of the sentence, which was added by way of modification.

I would affirm the order presently under review.

Civ. 23407.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 20, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 18, 1959.

Action by member of Los Angeles County Employees Retirement Association alleging that Board of Retirement of Association violated its duties in purchasing certain securities with funds of the retirement system. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kenneth N. Chantry, J., granted defendant's motion for judgment on pleadings and member appealed from judgment entered thereon. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that under statute authorizing county employees retirement associations to invest in securities which are legal for savings bank investments, it was not improper for Board to purchase securities at a premium.

John J. Guerin, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Edward H. Gaylord, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondents.

HERNDON, Justice.

Appellant instituted the instant action as a member of the Los Angeles County Employees Retirement Association and also as a taxpayer of said county, alleging that respondent Board of Retirement of said Association violated its duties in purchasing certain securities with funds of the retirement system. The complaint is in three counts: the first is for declaratory relief; the second (based on the allegations of the first) sounds in assumpsit for the sum of $2,090,770.65 allegedly owed the County and the retirement system by virtue of the unlawful purchase of bonds at a premium; and the third seeks a judgment for the difference between $4,000,000 paid for securities of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the market value of such securities at the date of the filing of the complaint, and also certain incidental declaratory relief. Plaintiff moved for a summary judgment and defendants moved for a judgment on the pleadings. Plaintiff appeals from the adverse judgment entered upon the granting of the latter motion.

Appellant correctly points out that there is no dispute concerning the facts and that the issues presented by this appeal are purely legal in nature.

The factual background necessary to an understanding of appellant's contentions may be briefly summarized as follows: Since January 1, 1938, all permanent employees, certain elected officials, and the employees of the several districts of Los Angeles County are members of the Los Angeles County Employees Retirement Association, under the statutory authorization of what are now sections 31450 et. seq. of the Government Code. The funds of the Association are substantial; as of December 31, 1957, the total assets of the retirement fund exceeded $179,000,000. These funds are carried upon the books of the county auditor and treasurer (Government Code, section 31588) and the funds are in the safekeeping of the county treasurer. Government Code, section 31594. The respondent Board of Retirement is vested with the management of the retirement system (Government Code, sections 31520–31532) and with the management and control of the retirement fund. Government Code, section 31594. It is agreed that the following provisions of section 31595 of the Government Code limit the authorized investments available to respondent board:

"All funds received by the county treasurer not required for current disbursements shall be invested only in: (a) Securities which are legal for savings bank investments in the State * * *."

Section 1372 of the Financial Code[1] deals with the construction of statutes (other than those codified in Chapter 11 of the Financial Code) authorizing investment in securities which are legal for savings banks, and provides in effect that such investments as were authorized by the Bank Act (now repealed) are legalized thereby. This section also provides that

1. "Other laws authorizing investment in securities legal for savings banks; construction. The provisions of this chapter govern the investment of funds by savings banks but wherever by any law of this State it is now provided that the moneys of any pension fund, retirement plan, trust fund, or the moneys of any special fund the investment of which is governed by law, or the funds of any political subdivision or public corporation may or shall be invested in securities which are a legal investment for savings banks, then such law shall be deemed to authorize or require, as the case may be, that such moneys be invested in securities in which savings banks were authorized to invest their funds by the provisions of the Bank Act as it read prior to January 1, 1949, including securities authorized for investment by paragraph (f) of subdivision 5 of Section 61 of the Bank Act (for which purpose said paragraph (f) shall be deemed to have been re-enacted on December 31, 1948), or by any other law of this State or in which savings banks are authorized to invest their funds by the provisions of Sections 1350 to 1366, inclusive, of this chapter; provided, that the provisions of said sections limiting the amount which a savings bank may invest in securities to a specified percent of its paid-up capital and surplus, or savings deposits, shall not apply to investments authorized by the terms of this section."

paragraph (f) of subdivision 5 of Section 61 of the Bank Act "* * * shall be deemed to have been re-enacted on December 31, 1948. * * *"

The pertinent portions of section 61 of the Bank Act, to which reference has been made in the statute above, are found in Stats.1909, chapter 76, page 87, and as amended by Stats.1941, chapter 795, page 2332–2334, and read as follows:

"Sec. 61. Any savings bank may purchase, hold or sell real or personal property, as follows:

* * * * * *

"5. Irrespective of the provisions of Subdivision 6 of this section, bonds and other securities of the following classes:

* * * * * *

"(f) Bonds legal for investment by savings banks in the State of New York or the State of Massachusetts;

* * * * * *

"6. Bonds and other securities of the following classes; provided, that such bonds or securities shall first have been certified by the Superintendent of Banks after an investigation as provided for under Section 61a of this act * * *."

It is not disputed that prior to the institution of this action the named respondents paid the sum of $2,090,770.65 as "premiums" on securities purchased with the funds of the retirement system; however, the parties agree that the word "premium" means and was intended to mean "* * * that part of the purchase price other than accrued interest in excess of the par value of the security purchased." In other words, the parties agree that prior to the institution of this action the respondents purchased bonds for the retirement fund at prices which in the aggregate exceeded the total par value of the bonds by $2,090,770.65. See Estate of Gartenlaub, 185 Cal. 648, 650, 198 P. 209, 16 A.L.R. 520. The parties also agree that the respondents have credited sufficient of the interest received on these securities to the "premiums" paid to amortize the premiums prior to maturity of the respective bonds. Finally, it is agreed that prior to September 11, 1957, the respondents purchased $4,000,000 par value bonds of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development with the funds of the retirement system.

Appellant's theories, on which his complaint was framed, are (a) that respondents had no authority to purchase securities above par, and that the Retirement Board improperly deducts an amount each year from interest received on the premium securities to amortize the premium paid for them; and (b) that prior to September 11, 1957, bonds of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development were not authorized as legal investments for the Retirement Fund, and that on the date the suit was filed the market value of such securities was less than the price paid for them.

The prayer is for declaratory relief, an accounting, a judgment in the sum of $2,090,770.65 with interest and penalties, judgment for the difference between the price paid and the market value of the International Bank's bonds and for interest, penalties, costs of suit and attorney's fees.

Initially, appellant argues that the respondents had no authority to purchase securities above par. He says: "* * * the Retirement Law of 1937, read as a whole forbids the payment of premiums to private persons, firms, or corporations with funds of the retirement system when purchasing securities; forbids the use of interest earned on the retirement fund to amortize interest so paid, and, further, any premiums so paid from the retirement fund would be an unlawful gift of public moneys. * * *"

"* * * the respondents herein are public officers administering the funds of a public trust, and that the acts of such public officers must find specific authority under the Retirement Law of 1937 for their acts in relation to purchasing securities with funds of the retirement system; and unless there is such specific statutory authority, and concededly there is none under the Retirement Law of 1937; or unless the case law determines that said respondents have such authority, then they are not lawfully authorized to pay premiums with funds of the retirement system when purchasing securities, or to recoup the premiums so paid from interest earned on the retirement fund."

Both appellant and respondents cite and rely on Estate of Gartenlaub, supra, 185 Cal. 648, 198 P. 209, as being determinative of the question whether a trustee may purchase securities at a premium. Appellant concedes that where the purchase at a premium is proper, Gartenlaub, supra, requires the trustee to amortize the premium paid from the interest received on the bond. But appellant contends that "* * * in the absence of a specific direction in the trust instrument or the statute authorizing the purchase of a security at a premium such payments are improper and the amortization of such premiums paid from interest is equally improper."

Appellant's contention finds no support in Gartenlaub, supra. In that case there was no specific provision in the trust instrument authorizing the trustee to purchase bonds at a premium, and the Supreme Court affirmed the order settling the accounts of the trustee who had purchased bonds at a premium and then amortized the premium paid from the interest received. See 2 Scott, Trusts, 1335–1336, § 239.2; 4 Bogert, Trusts and Trustees, 314, § 831; 1 Nossaman, Trusts Administration and Taxation, 177–179, § 15.02. As respondents illustrate with extensive citations, the practice of purchasing bonds for trust estates at prices exceeding their face value is well-known if not common. See 4 A.L.R. 1249; 16 A.L.R. 527; 48 A.L.R. 689; 101 A.L.R. 7; 131 A.L.R. 1426; Edgerton, Premiums and Discounts in Trust Accounts, 31 Harv.L.Rev. 447, 461. Respondent cites section 24 of Title 12, United States Code, and the federal regulations thereunder (12 Code of Federal Regulations, page 25, Title 12, Part 1, section 1.2, 3 Federal Register 1619) which authorizes national banks to purchase investment securities above par provided the premium paid is amortized, and respondent quotes extensively from an accounting treatise, Finney, Principles of Accounting (third ed., 1946) in which the propriety of the accounting procedure by which the amortization of the premium is effected is discussed.

[1–4] Appellant concedes that it is a fact of which we may take judicial notice that it has been customary for banks to invest in bonds purchased at a premium. Cf. Graddon v. Knight, 138 Cal.App.2d 577, 583, 292 P.2d 632; see 18 Cal.Jur.2d 462, § 41. However, appellant contends that in such activity "* * * private banks are dealing with private funds in a commercial enterprise carried on for profit, * * *" and that the same rules as to investment practices do not apply to the custodian of a fund such as is involved in the instant case. Appellant's contention must be rejected. Legislative and judicial limitations on investment practices of banks and trust estates have the same object—the stability of the investment. Treating the powers and duties of respondents as those of the trustee of a trust, the law is established that the respondents have the power to purchase securities at a premium for the trust corpus. Estate of Gartenlaub, supra, 185 Cal. 648, 198 P. 209; see Civil Code, section 730.08. And treating the powers and duties of respondents as solely derived from the statutory provisions of Government Code, sections 31450 et. seq., the explicit authorization therein to invest in "Securities which are legal for savings bank investments in the State * * *" (Government Code, section 31595) clearly indicates that the Legislature intended to establish a common standard of legality for the investments of savings banks and of funds of the character here involved. Thus, we must hold that there is nothing improper, in itself, in the purchase by respondents of securities at a premium. The indicated practice of amortizing such premiums must be sanctioned as being in accord with California law.

[5] As stated in Gartenlaub, supra, 185 Cal. at page 652, 198 P. at page 210: "* * * where a premium is paid, the ostensible interest yielded by the bond cannot be considered entirely as interest on the face value of the bond, for a sum in excess of the face value has gone into the investment, and the amount of interest remains unchanged, resulting, necessarily, in a decreased rate of return. A portion of the nominal interest is therefore a repayment of the premium." Such a practice does not conflict with the provisions of section 31592 of the Government Code[2] which merely require that net income in excess of expenditures be funded as a reserve against deficiencies in income in other years. Thus, plaintiff's first and second causes of action, for declaratory relief and money judgment are without merit and the judgment for defendants must be affirmed.

[6, 7] Appellant's second contention and the third cause of action alleged involve the purchase by respondents prior to September 11, 1957, of $4,000,000 worth of bonds of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. It is appellant's contention that such bonds were not authorized as legal investments for the retirement fund because they were not certified as legal investments for savings banks in California as required by subdivision 6 of section 61 of the Bank Act quoted supra. Conceding that the subject bonds were not so certified, it is apparent that their purchase by respondent was authorized by the provisions of section 61, subdivision 5(f)[3] of the Bank Act, supra, if the subject bonds were legal for investment by savings banks in either New York or Massachusetts on December 31, 1948, (the time as of which section 1372 of the Financial Code provides that "* * * paragraph (f) of subdivision 5 of Section 61 of the Bank Act * * " shall be deemed to have been re-enacted.) We take judicial notice of the laws of a sister state (section 1875, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc.). Examining the statutes of Massachusetts we find that section 54 of Chapter 168 of the General Laws of the State of Massachusetts, as amended by Chapter 361, page 347, Statutes of 1948, specifically permits savings banks to invest in bonds, notes, or obligations issued, assumed, or guaranteed by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. This authority was in effect on December 31, 1948. The New York Bank Law, § 235, subd. 24, as amended by Chapter 507, Statutes of 1946, provides that a savings bank may invest in "[o]bligations issued or guaranteed by the international bank for reconstruction and development." This provision also was in effect on December 31, 1948. Thus, we must conclude that the purchase of the subject bonds by respondents was proper because the subject bonds were legal for investment by savings banks in New York and Massachusetts, and therefore authorized for investment by respondents by section 1372 of the Financial Code.

[8] In 1957 the Financial Code was amended by the enactment of section 1360.-1 as follows: "Bonds of International Bank for Reconstruction and Development An amount not exceeding 25 percent of the paid-up capital and surplus of the savings bank or not exceeding 1 percent of the bank's savings deposits, whichever is

2. "Excess interest as reserve against contingencies
"Interest earned on the retirement fund during any year in excess of the total interest credited to contributions during such year shall remain in the fund as a reserve against deficiencies in interest earned in other years, losses on investments, and other contingencies."

3. "5. Irrespective of the provisions of Subdivision 6 of this section, bonds and other securities of the following classes:
* * *
"(f) Bonds legal for investment by savings banks in the State of New York or the State of Massachusetts."

* Now M.G.L.A. c. 168, § 42.

lesser, in bonds issued by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development." This section became effective on September 11, 1957, and is one of the statutes minutely defining the investments into which savings banks may put their funds. Financial Code, sections 1350–1371. Appellant here contends that the percentage limitations of savings bank investment in bonds of the International Bank found in section 1360.1 also apply to the retirement funds of the respondent association. Thus, appellant argues that the respondent board could not legally invest more than one percent of the retirement funds in bonds of the International Bank and that the Board's purchase of $2,208,752.87 of such bonds was illegal as violative of section 1360.1 of the Financial Code.

Examining section 1360.1 we conclude that the Legislature did not intend for it to apply to "* * * any pension fund, retirement plan, trust fund, * * * or the funds of any political subdivision or public corporation * * " (Financial Code, § 1372) and appellant's contention must be rejected. Initially, it should be observed that a retirement fund of the character here in question has no "paid up capital and surplus" nor are its funds properly denominated "deposits". Thus, it would require a most strained construction of the language employed by the Legislature to apply section 1360.1. Moreover, the 1957 amendment is merely supplementary to an already existing, and quite comprehensive, statutory scheme by which the investments permitted savings banks were minutely defined. Sections 1350 to 1371 of the Financial Code. However, section 1372 of the Financial Code specifically exempts " * * any pension fund, retirement plan, [or] trust fund * * *" from the percentage limitations applicable to savings banks found in sections 1350 to 1366 of the Financial Code. From the insertion of the subject matter of section 1360.1 in these sections, we are fortified in our conclusion that the Legislature did not intend for the percentage limitations of section 1360.1 to apply to the investment management of the subject retirement fund.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 17860.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 23, 1959.

Action by a taxpayer to recover penalties levied against it under provisions of the Sales Tax Act. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Milton D. Sapiro, J., entered judgment adverse to taxpayer and it appealed. The District Court of Appeals, Peters, P. J., held that evidence, including testimony that prior to tax period in question, taxpayer's attention was specifically directed to certain errors it was making in its returns, and that such errors were repeated for the period in question, and that numerous transactions were not reported by the taxpayer and that such failure had nothing to do with the accounting system adopted by taxpayer, supported imposition of 10 per cent negligence penalty on taxpayer.

1. Licenses ⇐34

In action by taxpayer to recover penalties levied on it by the board of equalization under provisions of the Sales Tax Act, evidence, including testimony that prior to tax period in question, taxpayer's attention was specifically directed to certain errors it was making in its returns, and that the same errors were repeated for the period in question, and that numerous transactions were not reported by the taxpayer, and that such failure had nothing to do with the accounting system adopted by taxpayer, supported imposition of 10 per cent negligence penalty on taxpayer. West's Ann. Rev. & Tax.Code, § 6484.

2. Licenses ⇐41

Where taxpayer reasonably could not have had the belief that out-of-state sales were not subject to sales tax, because in an audit made of taxpayer's accounts for prior years, heavy assessments were made against taxpayer because it failed to report out-of-state sales, a negligence penalty was properly imposed on taxpayer for failure to report such sales for a succeeding period, and imposition of such negligence penalty could not be avoided on theory that there was an "honest dispute" over the legality of the tax involved. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 6484.

3. Licenses ⇐41

Where a sales taxpayer did not report certain out-of-state sales transactions nor pay the sales tax due thereon and then sue for a refund, his failure to do so implied that no "honest dispute" existed as to whether imposition of the tax was constitutional, and therefore, imposition of negligence penalty would not be deemed unjustified on ground there was an "honest dispute" over the legality of the tax imposed. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 6484.

4. Licenses ⇐34

The doctrine of equitable recoupment of alleged overpayments of taxes, against deficiency assessments, has no application to an action by a sales taxpayer to recover negligence penalty assessed against it where the penalty was imposed because the taxpayer with full knowledge of its actions disregarded tax statute involved. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 6484.

5. Licenses ⇐34

Doctrine of equitable recoupment of alleged overpayments of taxes against deficiency assessments was not applicable in an action by taxpayer to recover negligence penalties assessed against it for failure to pay certain sales taxes, where taxpayer failed to prove overpayments. West's Ann. Rev. & Tax.Code, § 6484.

6. Licenses ⇐34

Where sales taxpayer failed to exhaust its administrative remedies before commencing an action for recovery of tax penalty imposed on it under provisions of the Sales Tax Act, theory of equitable recoupment of claimed overpayments of taxes against assessment of penalties was not available to it. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax. Code, §§ 6484, 6565.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This action was brought by a taxpayer to recover two penalties levied by the Board against it under the provisions of the Sales Tax Act. One was a mandatory late payment penalty imposed under section 6565 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, and the other was a negligence penalty imposed under section 6484 of the same code. From a judgment in favor of the Board the plaintiff appeals.

The complaint here involved was filed by the taxpayer on October 17, 1955. The complaint alleged that the tax period involved was from July 1, 1950, to June 30, 1953; that the taxpayer had filed returns for that period; that on September 22, 1953, the Board notified the taxpayer of an additional assessment and of the imposition of the two penalties; that the taxpayer protested; that thereafter the deficiency assessment and the two penalties were reduced; that the deficiency assessment and the two penalties were paid by the taxpayer; that on October 12, 1954, the taxpayer filed its claim for refund; that the claim was denied; that the taxpayer requests the refund of $7,474.88, the amount of the two penalties. In an exhibit attached to the complaint it is averred that the 10 per cent negligence penalty was imposed because the taxpayer kept its books in an improper fashion, and it is averred that its method of keeping books was proper and did not constitute negligence. It is also averred in the exhibit that the reason for the late payment was that the accountants it employed failed to file a timely protest; that the taxpayer should not be held responsible for this failure; that in periods prior to 1950 the taxpayer had made overpayments of its tax totaling $25,000; that it should be permitted to offset these overpayments against the penalties even though the claim for such overpayments was barred by the statute of limitations. Insofar as this contention involves claimed overpayments prior to 1950, it has now been abandoned.

The answer of the Board denies that the two penalties were wrongfully imposed and collected. It is averred that the Board gave the taxpayer timely notice of an additional assessment of $45,711.31, plus interest, plus a 10 per cent negligence penalty; that the taxpayer failed to pay this assessment and failed to challenge it; that on October 22, 1953, this assessment became final and an additional 10 per cent penalty for failure to pay the tax was assessed; that thereafter, and beyond the time permitted by law, an untimely protest was filed by the taxpayer on January 18, 1954; that the Board nevertheless made a re-audit of the taxpayer's books; that on such voluntary re-audit the assessment was reduced to $37,374.39 and the two 10 per cent penalties reduced accordingly.

On these issues, the trial court entered its judgment in favor of the Board, and the taxpayer appeals.

The evidence, so far as pertinent, produced at the hearing was as follows: For the tax period July 1, 1950, to June 30, 1953, on September 22, 1953, the Board notified the taxpayer of a deficiency assessment of $45,711.31 and of a 10 per cent negligence penalty. This deficiency assessment became final on October 22, 1953. Prior to that date the taxpayer neither paid nor challenged the assessment. Upon failure to pay, an additional 10 per cent penalty was imposed as required by law. In January of 1954 the taxpayer filed its protest against the additional assessment and penalties. Even though the additional assessment and penalties were then final, the Board made a re-audit of the taxpayer's books and voluntarily reduced the assessment from $45,711.31 to $37,374.39, and also reduced the two 10 per cent penalties accordingly.

The taxpayer is a company engaged in the structural steel business. Since 1924 it has adopted a method of accounting acceptable to the federal and state taxing authorities and a method that is commonly used in the industry. In its sales tax returns for the 1950–1953 period it made certain errors which are the basis for the re-assessment and the penalties here imposed. These errors were of three types.

1. The taxpayer issued re-sale certificates to manufacturers from which it acquired various supplies which were consumed by it in its business. As these supplies were assigned to particular jobs, the taxpayer, contrary to the rules of the Board, failed to report the tax.

2. The taxpayer failed to report out-of-state sales, that is, contracts to be completed out of the state. Under the then existing provisions of the sales and use tax laws, such transactions were taxable.

3. The taxpayer just failed to submit returns on between 27 to 30 transactions during the taxable year that should have been reported.

Although the evidence is conflicting, substantial evidence supports the conclusion that none of these errors was generic to the taxpayer's accounting system. These errors could have been avoided had the taxpayer properly evaluated the information contained in its accounting system. The Board's witnesses testified that the errors were the result of the improper extracting of information from the taxpayer's own accounts.

The evidence also shows that during the tax period here involved—1950 to 1953—the taxpayer had actual notice that the items included in the deficiency asessment should have been reported. The Board had audited the taxpayer's accounts for the 1947–1950 tax period in 1950, and had discovered certain deficiencies. These errors were explained to the taxpayer and the working papers resulting from the audit were turned over to the taxpayer. In spite of this fact, the taxpayer committed some of the same errors in the 1950–1953 period that it had committed during the 1947–1950 period. The bulk of the taxpayer's deficiency was caused by its failure to properly report materials assigned to contracts being performed by it. This same identical error was committed in the 1947–1950 period, and, even though the taxpayer was thoroughly informed of the proper procedures, it committed the same error in the 1950–1953 period.

The evidence shows that no penalties were imposed for the errors discovered in the 1947–1950 audit. Although the evidence is conflicting on the issue, that in favor of the Board is that no negligence penalty was imposed because the 1950 audit was a first audit by the Board, and that the Board seldom, if ever, imposes a negligence penalty for errors discovered on a first audit.

The appellant now claims that it made certain overpayments of its tax during the 1950–1953 period and that, even though barred by the statute of limitations, it should be permitted to offset these overpayments against the penalties. The evidence on this issue was meager and conflicting.

The original re-assessment for the 1950–1953 period was in the amount of $45,711.31. Thereafter, the taxpayer filed a late protest. The State caused a re-audit of the taxpayer's books to be made even though the deficiency assessment and penalties were then final. On such re-audit the deficiency was reduced to $37,374.39, and the two 10 per cent penalties were reduced accordingly. The Board reduced the deficiency because the auditors for the Board discovered on the re-audit that the taxpayer had been incorrectly reflecting certain exempt freight charges as part of its gross sale receipts. The State auditors called this to the attention of the taxpayer and the taxpayer prepared a proper schedule of these overcharges and submitted it to the Board. Admittedly, the total amount claimed was not refunded. The auditor for the Board testified that this was because some freight charges were properly taxable, and these were deducted from the refund. This witness was quite clear that this was the sole reason why some of the freight charges were disallowed, and was positive that none of the freight charges for the entire 1950–1953 period were disallowed because of the statute of limitations.

On the other hand, the vice-president and treasurer of the taxpayer testified that $5,521.76 of the tax claimed by the taxpayer as a refund was for the period July 1, 1950, to June 30, 1951, and that this amount was disallowed by the Board because of the statute of limitations.

This is the only evidence relating to claimed overpayments by the taxpayer that were not allowed as refunds. On this conflicting evidence the trial court specifically found that "there is no sufficient evidence to justify the application of the 'doctrine of equitable recoupment.'"

[1] On this appeal appellant first attacks the 10 per cent negligence penalty, claiming that the evidence does not support its imposition. The contention is without merit.

In arguing this point appellant relies on the testimony of its own witnesses that the errors were caused by reason of appellant's accounting system, that the system used was a proper one, and that to change it would impose an unconscionable burden on the taxpayer.

In its opening brief appellant makes no mention of the 1947–1950 audit during which it was notified of the nature of the errors it was committing. In its reply brief, after respondent had called attention to the facts surrounding this audit in its brief, appellant vigorously contends that all the evidence relating to this 1947–1950 audit was irrelevant and inadmissible.

On the issue of how much was due for the tax period 1950–1953, appellant is obviously correct that audits prior to that time were irrelevant. But the evidence relating to the prior audits was not introduced on the issue of the amount of tax imposed, but on the issue of whether or not the Board was justified in imposing a negligence penalty. The prior audit showed that prior to the 1950–1953 tax period, the taxpayer's attention was specifically directed to certain errors it was making in its returns. The 1950–1953 audit disclosed that the taxpayer continued to report its tax under methods it knew, and had been informed, were erroneous and illegal. Certainly, the point need not be labored that the ignoring of the notice received by it in the prior audit was relevant and admissible on the negligence issue.

In addition to this evidence that supports the imposition of the 10 per cent negligence penalty, there was evidence of numerous transactions that just were not reported by the taxpayer, and which failure had nothing to do with the accounting system adopted by it. This, too, was evidence of negligence. Thus, the finding on this issue is amply supported by the evidence.

[2, 3] Appellant also contends that the negligence penalty, insofar as it is based on that part of the additional assessment involving the out-of-state sales, that is, contracts to be completed out of the state, was unjustified because there was an "honest dispute" over the legality of such a tax. It may be assumed that a bona fide and reasonable belief that a particular transaction is not taxable would prevent the imposition of a negligence penalty. But here, the appellant not only failed to prove that it had such a bona fide and reasonable belief, but the evidence shows that, reasonably, it could not have had such a belief. In the 1947–1950 audit heavy assessments were made against the taxpayer because it had failed to report these out-of-state sales. Appellant was then notified that these sales were considered taxable by the Board. Thus, the taxpayer knew, or should have known, that the Board considered the transactions taxable. If the taxpayer honestly believed that the imposition of the tax was unconstitutional, as appellant now seems to contend, it should have followed the procedure of reporting the transactions, then paying the tax and then suing for a refund. The fact that the taxpayer did not follow this procedure implies that no "honest dispute" existed. It is of some significance that in 1956 the constitutionality of taxing sales consummated out of the state but originating in California was upheld. Levine v. State Board of Equalization, 142 Cal.App.2d 760, 299 P.2d 738.*

This brings us to the contention of appellant that it made certain overpayments for the 1950–1953 tax period that were disallowed and that, under the doctrine of equitable recoupment, it should be entitled to recover these claimed overpayments, even though a claim for them is barred by the statute of limitations. Although this point is now vigorously urged on this appeal, it was not a major issue before the trial court. It was not until the closing moments of the trial that appellant produced the very scant evidence on this issue to which reference has already been made.

* It should be mentioned that in 1953, after the taxable period here involved, the State amended section 6009.1 of the Revenue and Taxation Code (Stats. of 1953, Chap. 972, § 1, p. 2460) to provide that such transactions are not taxable under the Sales or Use Taxes. This statute changed the rule formerly existing, and has no relevancy to the tax period here involved.

The overpayments that appellant claims were disallowed admittedly were barred by section 6902 of the Revenue and Taxation Code which provides that the Board shall approve no claim for refund of taxes unless such a claim for refund is filed within three years of the last day of the month following the close of the quarterly period for which the overpayment was made. Section 6905 of the Code provides that failure to file a claim within the time prescribed constitutes a waiver of any demand against the State on account of the claimed overpayment.

Appellant admits that these sections bar any claim for refund of the taxes here in dispute, but claims that, under the doctrine of equitable recoupment, the amount of such overpayment for the same taxable period may be used as a setoff against the claim of the State for a deficiency or for a penalty.

If it be assumed, contrary to the fact, that the evidence shows an overpayment of taxes for the period 1950–1953 which was disallowed because of the running of the statute of limitations, and if we assume, contrary to the fact, that this is a proceeding involving a setoff, then we would be presented with the question as to whether California will permit a setoff of such taxes against penalties assessed for the same taxable period under the doctrine of equitable recoupment.

A brief discussion of the extent and application of the doctrine will demonstrate that it is not here applicable. It should first be mentioned that whether California will enforce such doctrine has not, as yet, been decided by the California courts. The doctrine had its origin in the federal courts. The United States Supreme Court has held that where the government attempts to impose a deficiency assessment, the taxpayer may interpose a setoff in the event that the taxpayer has made overpayments of its tax with regard to the same taxable event upon which the government's claim to a deficiency is predicated, even though the claim for a refund is barred by the statute of limitations. Thus, in Bull v. United States, 295 U.S. 247, 55 S.Ct. 695, 79 L.Ed. 1421, the tax commissioner taxed the same sum of money under both the estate and income tax laws. The correct tax was the income tax. In a suit by the government to collect that tax, the taxpayer was permitted to recoup the estate tax erroneously paid, on the theory that, equitably, the commissioner should not be permitted to recover two taxes on inconsistent theories.

In Rothensies v. Electric Storage Battery Co., 329 U.S. 296, 67 S.Ct. 271, 91 L. Ed. 296, it was held that the doctrine of equitable recoupment should be limited to situations where "the single transaction or taxable event had been subjected to two taxes on inconsistent legal theories." In such event "what was mistakenly paid [may be] recouped against what [is] correctly due." 329 U.S. at page 300, 67 S.Ct. at page 272. In that case the Supreme Court disallowed a recoupment claim under the following facts: From 1919 to 1926 the taxpayer had been mistakenly paying excise taxes on certain materials. In 1926 the taxpayer claimed and received a refund of the amount of excise tax it had paid from 1922–1926, but the claim was barred on the 1919–1922 payments. Because it had deducted the amount of the excise taxes from its income over the years involved, the government determined to tax the refund as income. Taxpayer paid the assessment of income tax and brought a claim for refund, or recoupment, of the amount of unrecoverable excise taxes (1919–22). This claim, the Supreme Court, in reversing the lower courts, disallowed, on the grounds that the overpayment of taxes did not arise out of the same transaction or taxable event involved in the government's assessment of income tax. The Court pointed out that to apply the recoupment doctrine under these facts would be to render the statute of limitations meaningless because if the doctrine applied to such a state of facts, the taxpayer could resurrect old overpayment claims whenever the government attempted enforcement of any tax.

The New York Court of Appeals enforced a broader application of the doctrine in National Cash Register Co. v. Joseph, 1949, 299 N.Y. 200, 86 N.E.2d 561. In that case, also involving a sales tax, an audit for 1935 to 1940 of the taxpayer's accounts revealed a deficiency of $45,000. Plaintiff brought an action for a review of the determination of the amount of the deficiency and review of taxing authority's denial of a claim of refund for $11,000 alleged to have been overpaid during the same audit period. The statute of limitations had run against direct recovery of the overpayments. The Court held that the claim should have been allowed since the government had itself decided to "open up" the period involved. The Court held that the overpayments came within the one transaction doctrine of the Rothensies case.

The federal law, to some extent, has been codified. (See "Section 820 of the Revenue Act of 1938" by Maguire, Surrey and Traynor, 48 Yale Law Journal 509, 719.)

It may be assumed that the equitable conscience of the California appellate courts is as sensitive to fair play as the conscience of the United States Supreme Court, and perhaps as sensitive as that of the New York Court of Appeals. For the purposes of this opinion, but without deciding the issue, it may be assumed that the doctrine of equitable recoupment exists in this state. Such an assumption would not assist the appellant, because, under the facts of this case, the doctrine, even in its broadest application, is not applicable. This is so for several reasons:

[4] 1. This action was not one for recoupment against a deficiency assessment of claimed overpayments. It was an action by the taxpayer to recover certain penalties assessed against it. The doctrine of recoupment has no application to such an action. This is so because the negligence penalty under attack was imposed because the taxpayer, with full knowledge of what it was doing, disregarded the tax statutes for the entire three-year audit period, not for the one-year period in which the claimed overpayments were made. Since the amount of the deficiency assessment as reduced was not attacked, it is difficult to see how the doctrine of equitable recoupment could apply in a direct action by the taxpayer to recover penalties.

[5] 2. There is another conclusive reason why the doctrine could not apply to the facts of the present case, and that is that the taxpayer failed in its proof. The trial court expressly so found, and that finding is amply supported. As already pointed out, supra, there is a conflict in the evidence as to whether or not the taxpayer did, in fact, make any overpayments during the entire three-year period which were barred by the statute of limitations and which the Board refused to allow as a deduction. The evidence most favorable to the Board is to the effect that no such overpayments were made or disallowed. We are bound by that testimony.

The appellant points out that one of its witnesses referred to a letter from the Board which purportedly stated that certain overpayments were barred and therefore disallowed as deductions against the deficiency assessment. Appellant's counsel failed to have the letter introduced into evidence so that it is not properly before us. Nevertheless, appellant attempts to use the letter to attack the testimony to which reference has already been made. Even if the letter could be considered, which it cannot, it would merely create a further conflict in the evidence. The evidence that no overpayments were disallowed as deductions is clear and unequivocal. We are bound by that testimony.

[6] 3. Another reason why recoupment could not possibly be here applicable is that the record shows that the appellant has failed to exhaust its administrative remedies as required by California law. This is a direct action by the taxpayer to recover tax penalties, not a defensive action in the nature of a setoff. Even if it be assumed, however, that a suit in equitable recoupment could be brought by the taxpayer after the imposition of a deficiency assessment, it would not assist this taxpayer, because such an action could only be brought under California law after the taxpayer has exhausted its administrative remedies. Appellant seems to be arguing that it may file such a suit and contest the administrative action, without regard to other administrative remedies that it may have. That is not the law. In West Publishing Co. v. McColgan, 27 Cal.2d 705, 712, 166 P.2d 861, 865, the court stated: "If the commissioner erred in his computation, the error could easily have been avoided by giving him the necessary information at the outset, or it could have been corrected by giving the necessary information upon the filing of the claim for refund. Plaintiff cannot complain of alleged errors in the computation of tax liability, when it refused to avail itself of its administrative remedies to prevent or correct such errors. [Many citations.]"

In People v. West Publishing Co., 35 Cal. 2d 80, 92, 216 P.2d 441, 448, the court, in discussing certain claimed but barred exemptions, used the following language: "Appellant seeks to offset against the assessment, which was based upon estimated sales of $900,000 for the tax period in question, the amount which it claims to be attributable to sales to state agencies for both that tax period and a later tax period, without making any showing at any stage of the proceedings that the amount of its actual sales, less the claimed sales to such agencies, was not far in excess of the estimate of $900,000. Under these circumstances, it appears peculiarly appropriate here to apply the rule requiring the taxpayer to exhaust administrative remedies before asking for judicial relief, and it becomes unnecessary to discuss the question of whether a counterclaim may ever be interposed in an action brought by the state for the purpose of enforcing a tax liability."

It must be remembered that under the law the Board was not required to pay any attention to the taxpayer's letter of protest of January, 1954. This is so because the two penalty assessments of September 22, 1953, became final on October 22, 1953. If the taxpayer believed that it had grounds for recoupment against any portion of the deficiency assessment it should have first exhausted its administrative remedies before instituting a direct action against the Board to recover the penalties. This it elected not to do. This is fatal to an action subsequently brought.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Gail JOHNSTON, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

KEY SYSTEM TRANSIT LINES, a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 17662.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 27, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Action for death of passenger in automobile which was struck by defendant's train at urban crossing. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Chris B. Fox, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that evidence would sustain finding that trainmen's negligence with regard to speed and warning had been proximate cause of collision.

Affirmed.

1. Negligence ⇐61(1)

Where concurrent negligence of two parties proximately contributes to cause an injury, neither can escape liability because of negligence of the other.

2. Railroads ⇐348(2)

In action for death of passenger in automobile which was struck by defendant's train at urban crossing, evidence would sustain finding that trainmen's negligence with regard to speed and warning had been proximate cause of collision.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐206(2)

In action for death of passenger in automobile which was struck by defendant's train at urban crossing, trial court, to which no objection had been addressed, would not be put in error for permitting cross-examination of trainmen as to number of stops made and time consumed between a certain point and point where collision occurred, even though distance between those points had not been established.

4. Appeal and Error ⇐207

In action for death of passenger in automobile which was struck by defendant's train at urban crossing, plaintiff's counsel's references to a "big monster" and a "wicked corporation" were not of such character that a timely admonition would not have been effective, and defendant, which had made no objection to statements at time they were made, could not successfully complain on appeal.

5. Trial ⇐121(2)

In action for death of passenger in automobile which was struck by defendant's train at urban crossing, plaintiff's counsel's comment, on fact that train with its brakes set had dragged automobile 400 feet and that weight of automobile would add to train's braking power, was legitimate argument of an inference which might reasonably be drawn by jury from physical facts.

6. Trial ⇐122

In action for death of passenger in automobile which was struck by defendant's train at urban crossing, plaintiff's counsel did not go beyond realm of legitimate argument in calling jury's attention to fact that passengers on train had not been called by defendant as witnesses and that police officer whom defendant had subpoenaed had not been put on stand.

7. Appeal and Error ⇐1004(3)

Damages reduction order of trial court, entered on motion for new trial, was entitled to be given great weight by appellate court.

8. Death ⇐99(3)

Award of $37,500, to 45-year-old widow for death of her 16-year-old son, was not excessive.

Hardin, Fletcher, Cook & Hayes, Oakland, Cyril Viadro, San Francisco, of counsel, for appellant.

Bernard Allard, Oakland, Leon Seyranian, Oakland, of counsel, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a plaintiff's judgment in an action for wrongful death. Respondent's son was a passenger in an automobile which was struck by a train operated by appellant at the intersection of 28th and Poplar Streets in Oakland. The son died as a result of this collision.

The collision occurred a few minutes after midnight on June 19, 1955. The automobile, driven by Richard Schuler, was proceeding easterly on 28th Street and despite the fact that there were three warning signs of various types at and before the intersection it did not stop or slacken speed before the collision with the train. The train was traveling northerly on Poplar Street and, although its brakes were set, the track was being sanded and the motor was in reverse, it carried the automobile 401 feet from the point of impact before it came to a stop.

Appellant concedes that there was evidence from which the jury could find that the train was traveling at a negligent speed and that no warning of any sort was sounded before the collision. The intersection was a blind one with a building flush to the curb on the corner between the automobile and train as they approached one another. There was testimony that neither Schuler nor the other passenger in his automobile saw the warning signs as the automobile approached the intersection.

While conceding that the jury could have found that the train was negligently operated at an excessive speed and without any warning signal of its approach to the crossing being sounded appellant argues that there was no basis in the evidence for the jury's finding that this negligence was a proximate cause of the collision.

[1] It may be conceded that Schuler was negligent in the driving of his automobile and that his negligence was a proximate cause of the collision, but where the concurrent negligence of two parties proximately contributes to cause an injury neither can escape liability because of the negligence of the other. Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co., 17 Cal.2d 594, 602, 110 P.2d 1044; Deshotel v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 144 Cal.App.2d 224, 231, 300 P.2d 910. Appellant in view of this rule is driven to the argument that even if a warning signal of the approach of the train had been sounded Schuler would have disregarded it and driven onto the track in front of the approaching train. A similar argument was made in Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 105 Cal.App. 340, 288 P. 81. The court in that case said at pages 348–349, of 105 Cal.App., at page 85 of 288 P.:

"Thus, if it be conceded as it must be, that Jack Salyer, as the driver of the automobile, was guilty of gross negligence in failing to stop, look, and listen for the approach of the train, yet the jury was warranted, under the testimony, in coming to the concusion that, had the proper signals been given, then and in that case Jack Salyer would have heard the same and taken proper precautions to avert the accident; or, at least, that the deceased Hallie Lindsley Johnson would have heard the signals of the approaching train and taken such precautions, in the way of warning Jack Salyer of the approach of the train as might or would be reasonably necessary to insure his own safety. With these premises in view, there is sufficient testimony * * * to support the judgment that, notwithstanding Jack Salyer's negligence, the negligence of the defendants proximately contributed to the death of Hallie Lindsley Johnson * * *." Cf. Peri v. Los Angeles Junction Ry., 22 Cal.2d 111, 126–127, 137 P.2d 441; Quiroga v. Southern Pacific Co., 130 Cal. App.2d 93, 101, 278 P.2d 80.

[2] None of the cases cited by appellant to support its argument that there was no evidence that its negligence was a proximate cause of the accident is factually in point and we are satisfied that the jury could properly find that its negligence was a proximate cause of the fatality.

[3] Appellant also complains of the cross-examination of its trainmen as to the number of stops made and time thereby consumed between 12th and Oak Streets and the scene of the collision on the ground that the distance between the two points was not established. This ground of objection was not urged to the trial court, the objection voiced being that the evidence was incompetent, immaterial, irrelevant and too remote. The burden is on a party to specify the ground of his objection to the trial court and he cannot on appeal rely on a ground of objection not so urged. (3 Cal. Jur.2d, Appeal and Error, § 157, pp. 636–637.) It is obvious that if the objection urged on appeal had been presented in the trial court respondent could readily have supplied the proof of the absence of which appellant now seeks to complain.

Appellant also urges a number of instances of alleged misconduct of counsel for respondent.

In the opening statement counsel promised to introduce an ordinance regulating the speed of the train. He attempted to do so on the trial but appellant's objection to its introduction was sustained. There is no showing that respondent's offer of proof in this particular was not made in good faith.

[4] Counsel for respondent at one point in his argument to the jury said: "I am not out after a big monster. Don't misunderstand me. I am not pointing at a wicked corporation * * *" No objection was made to this statement at the time and it was not of such a character that a timely admonition would not have been effective.

[5] Counsel's comment on the fact that the train with its brakes set dragged the automobile 401 feet and that the weight of the automobile would add to the train's braking power was a legitimate argument of an inference which might reasonably be drawn by the jury from the physical facts.

The evidence showed that no improvements had been made in the braking system of the train over a period of years. When counsel referred to this fact in argument the court sustained appellant's objection stating that there was no evidence "as to whether the equipment was adequate or inadequate, or could or could not have been improved upon, and certainly raises an issue that I don't think is in the case." No further admonition was requested of the court and counsel for respondent accepted the ruling.

[6] Counsel for respondent did not go beyond the realm of legitimate argument in calling the jury's attention to the fact that passengers on the train had not been called by appellant as witnesses or that a police officer whom appellant had subpoenaed was not put upon the stand. Freitas v. Peerless Stages, Inc., 108 Cal.App.2d 749, 761, 239 P.2d 671, 33 A.L.R.2d 778.

A reference was made in argument to the fact that "* * * Schuler's brakes weren't in good shape either." The court sustained an objection that there was no evidence on this point and while the jury was not expressly admonished to disregard the argument, as reasonable persons, they could only understand the ruling of the court to have that effect, particularly in view of the fact that the jury received the standard instructions that arguments of counsel are not evidence and that they should disregard statements of the attorneys not supported by the evidence.

We find no support in the record for any of appellant's claims of prejudicial misconduct.

The final claim is that the damages, even as reduced by the court, are excessive and the result of passion and prejudice. The jury awarded $75,000. Respondent accepted a reduction ordered by the court to $37,500. Decedent was 16 years of age. His mother, a widow, was 45 years of age.

[7, 8] In reducing the damages on motion for new trial the court must have held that while, in the court's opinion the award was excessive, the verdict for plaintiff was not the result of passion and prejudice. Hughes v. Hearst Publications, Inc., 79 Cal. App.2d 703, 705, 180 P.2d 419 and cases cited. The order of the trial court on motion for new trial is entitled to be given great weight by the appellate court. Johnston v. Long, 30 Cal.2d 54, 76, 181 P.2d 645; Deshotel v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., supra, 144 Cal.App.2d 224, 230, 300 P.2d 910. We cannot say that the award in this case is so disproportionate to the injury suffered as to shock the conscience. Daggett v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 48 Cal.2d 655, 666, 313 P.2d 557.

Plastering subcontractor's action against general contractor and surety on its bond for extra work allegedly done by subcontractor at general contractor's direction. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Paul Nourse, J., entered judgment for subcontractor and general contractor and surety on its bond appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held evidence sustained finding that extra work done by subcontractor was necessitated because of failure of general contractor to prepare surfaces in accordance with specifications and that work was done at the specific instance and request of general contractor.

1. Contracts ⇐350(1)

In action by plastering subcontractor against general contractor and its surety for extra work allegedly done by subcontractor at general contractor's direction, evidence sustained finding that extra leveling coat of cement plaster which subcontractor applied to exterior concrete surfaces of buildings was necessitated by defective concrete surfaces due to general contractor's failure to properly prepare the same to receive the two coats of plaster called for in specifications, and that such work was done at the specific instance and request of general contractor.

2. Contracts ⇐232(2)

"Extra work" as used in connection with building contracts means work arising outside of and entirely independent of contract, that is, something not required in its performance, not contemplated by parties and not controlled by contract.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Extra Work".

3. Contracts ⇐232(1)

Extra work may be performed by contractor for owner or by subcontractor for general contractor.

4. Contracts ⇐232(7)

Where the extras in building construction are of a different character from work called for in contract and no price is agreed on for extra work, their reasonable value may be recovered.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐991, 996

Resolution of purely factual questions was within the exclusive province of trier of fact and since findings were supported by substantial evidence, District Court of Appeal was without power to substitute its deductions for those of trial judge.

6. Contracts ⇐332(1)

Requirement that a waiver of building contract clause requiring written authorization for change order specifying any extra work must be pleaded in order to allow party to recover, is satisfied by allegation of facts which would constitute a waiver.

7. Contracts ⇐332(1)

In action by plastering subcontractor against general contractor and surety on its bond to recover for extra work allegedly done at instance and request of general contractor, complaint incorporating subcontract including requirement of written authorization for any extra work and alleging that in addition to work required under terms of subcontract, at special instance and request of general contractor subcontractor applied extra coat of cement plaster to building, constituted sufficient pleading of waiver.

8. Contracts ⇐350(1)

In action by plastering subcontractor to recover from general contractor and surety on bond for extra work consisting of an additional leveling coat of cement plaster, record disclosing that subcontractor had previously submitted written offer to do work for specified amount and thereafter general contractor directed subcontractor to proceed without referring to necessity of compliance with contract clause requiring written order for extra work, was sufficient to support finding that general contractor had waived requirement of a written order.

9. Contracts ⇐29

Generally existence of implied contract is usually a question of fact for the trial court and where evidence is conflicting or where reasonable, conflicting inferences may be drawn from evidence which is not conflicting, question of fact is presented for trial court.

HERNDON, Justice.

In the court below plaintiff, C. F. Bolster Co., a contractor, recovered judgment against defendant, J. C. Boespflug Construction Company, the general contractor, and The Travelers Indemnity Company, its surety, for extra work allegedly done by plaintiff at defendant contractor's direction in the construction of certain school buildings for the Los Angeles City High School District. By the terms of a subcontract, dated October 12, 1954, plaintiff undertook to do the interior and exterior plastering work on the project in conformity with and subject to the plans and specifications for the agreed sum of $201,914.00.

In substance, the trial court found that at defendant's instance and request plaintiff had applied an extra leveling coat of cement plaster to the exterior concrete surfaces of said buildings and that the reasonable value of the labor and materials utilized therein was $8135.96. The effect of the findings was to sustain plaintiff's contention that the extra work was necessitated by defendant's failure properly to prepare the concrete surfaces so that "irregularities" therein would not show through the two coats of plaster called for by the specifications.

The subcontract incorporates by reference the plans and specifications on the project which were prepared by the architect, Mr. A. C. Zimmerman. See Enochs v. Christie, 137 Cal.App.2d Supp. 887, 889, 291 P.2d 200; Bell v. Rio Grande Oil Co., 23 Cal.App.2d 436, 440, 73 P.2d 662. Under the terms of the specifications so incorporated, all materials furnished and work done were subject to the architect's inspection and approval for the owner. The architect was declared to be the interpreter of the specifications and the judge of the quality of materials, workmanship and performance.

An entire section of the specifications, section "K", deals with the plastering work which was plaintiff's responsibility under the subcontract. This section required plaintiff to apply two coats of plaster: first a "brush coat" which was essentially a coat of paint consisting of colored stucco without sand; and, second, a "dash coat", which was described in the testimony as a soupy mortar mix sometimes applied with a "dash brush." The specified thickness of the dash coat was 3/32 of an inch and it was provided that "[t]he dashing shall be done with a plasterer's dash brush using a strong whipping motion to secure a good bond." It was provided in paragraph 56 of section "K" that "[a]t least one week prior to starting the work, the contractor shall make up samples of stucco work under the direction of the architect. The finished work shall match the approved samples in color and texture."

The specifications (section K) require that "Concrete surfaces to be plastered shall be finished, cleaned and sandblasted as specified in the section on Portland Cement Concrete. Before starting plastering, the subcontractor for the work of this section shall inspect all surfaces to be plastered and report to the contractor and inspector any surfaces to be plastered which have not been prepared for plastering as specified * * *."

On February 11, 1955, plaintiff wrote defendant a letter reading as follows: "On the above project, we would like permission to machine apply the exterior stucco coat. It has been our experience, and the experience of the industry as a whole, that machine application produces a finished surface that is much superior to hand application. There will be no change in price." It will be noted that the foregoing requested a change from the method of application required by the above quoted section of the specifications which provided for application of the dash coat "with a plasterer's brush." Defendant transmitted the above letter to the architect on February 15, 1955, who wrote defendant as follows:

"Where stucco dash coat is specified, (Par. 55, Sec. K, Contract Specifications), the Architect will approve the application of stucco by machine, provided it is an air spray machine and the exterior woodwork is properly masked. A demonstration of the method of masking and application will have to be approved by the Inspector and the Architect before starting the stucco work. If the methods are approved, the Architect will process a change order to the above-referenced paragraph. Par. 56, Sec. K, Contract Specifications, requires samples of stucco work. If possible, these samples should be made at the time the machine application is demonstrated. As to the texture of the dash coat, the Architect has in mind a texture produced by a slight troweling of the dash coat. When you get ready to make the samples, the Architect will give you the address of a building to look at."

Defendant promptly transmitted the architect's letter to plaintiff, and subsequently notified plaintiff of the building to which the architect referred. The pre-trial stipulation recites that the specifications were modified to permit plaintiff to apply the stucco by means of a gun instead of by hand.

The section of the specifications on Portland Cement Concrete, section "E" (to which the above quoted plastering specifications referred), deals with the requirements of the concrete work for which defendant was responsible in this case. The provisions of this section required defendant to grind down or otherwise remove fins, pour lines, bulges, stains and irregularities of surfaces, and to sandblast the concrete surfaces which were to be plastered. It was further provided that "In addition, all exterior surfaces to be plastered with a dash coat shall have all irregularities removed which will show through the dash coat of plaster. * * *."

There is substantial evidence in the record, both testimonial and photographic, tending to prove the unsatisfactory conditions of the concrete surfaces of the exterior walls which defendant constructed and on which plaintiff was obligated to apply plaster. There is testimony as to the existence of excessive numbers of ridges, protrusions, indentations, and other irregularities on the surface of the concrete which had to be removed by grinding or sandblasting operations conducted by defendant. And there is evidence that as a result of the sandblasting operations, there was considerable pitting and scoring of the concrete surfaces on which plaintiff was required to work.

Plaintiff offered expert testimony to prove that two coats of plaster, consisting of a brushcoat and a 3/32-inch dash coat, as called for by the specifications, would not cover the irregularities and imperfections in the concrete surfaces as prepared by defendant. There is testimony by an ex-employee of defendant which gives substantial support to plaintiff's contention that defendant was having serious difficulty in bringing the concrete surfaces up to specifications. This witness testified that at the time the concrete work was done he was defendant's construction superintendent on the job; that when the forms were removed "the concrete was in fair condition, except, when we started sandblasting, it opened a lot of voids, and that required a lot of filling"; that in his opinion a 3/32-inch dash coat of stucco would not have been sufficient to cover the imperfections, and that his estimate of the cost of putting the concrete in shape so that the imperfections would be satisfactorily covered by the specified dash coat "would run around ten to twelve cents a square foot." The witness testified to conversations with plaintiff's representatives in which various methods of preparing the concrete surfaces for the application of plaster were discussed.

In June, 1956, plaintiff's employees prepared a number of samples of external stuccoing on a wall of one of the buildings which defendant had constructed. Among these samples were examples of both hand and machine application, including one consisting of a brush coat and a dash coat applied by hand as called for in the specifications. When these several samples were submitted to the architect for his approval, he rejected all except one which had been prepared by machine application with three coats of plaster. This sample had been prepared by the application of a machine-applied base or "float" coat of plaster considerably thicker than the dash coat called for in the specifications, followed by two machine applied dash coats.

In late July or early August defendant requested a bid from plaintiff for preparing the external concrete surfaces for the admitted purpose of avoiding any dispute as to responsibility for preparing the concrete surfaces. On August 18, 1955, plaintiff replied by letter with an offer to apply a "leveling coat" of plaster to the external concrete surfaces at an additional cost of $11,368. Defendant did not immediately respond to this offer. However, on September 28, 1955, defendant wrote to plaintiff as follows:

"With reference to your letter of August 18, 1955, regarding application of a leveling coat to exterior concrete surfaces, this is to advise that no such change was requested or authorized by this office.

"Subsequent to receipt of your letter the architect inspected the concrete surfaces of the buildings to receive dash coat and has approved the surfaces as fully complying with the requirements for preparation of concrete surfaces outlined in Section E of the contract specifications.

"The architect, at the same time, selected and approved one of the samples that you applied over said surfaces. This application of stucco dash coat will be applied by you in strict accordance with the specifications, particularly, Section K, and must meet with the architect's approval. Earlier in the year the architect gave conditional approval of a machine application for the dash coat, provided that such application first be approved by him. If it is impossible for you to secure a satisfactory and approved job, using mechanical methods, it may be necessary to revert to hand methods outlined in the specifications, which is your responsibility under the terms of our subcontract."

Plaintiff replied the following day as follows: "In accordance with our subcontract for plastering on the above mentioned construction, we are now, and have been for some time, ready to proceed with the application of dash coat of plaster on exterior concrete walls but have been unable to do so because surfaces have not been prepared for plastering. Pursuant to our contract and the specifications, we do hereby report to you that the concrete surfaces to be plastered have not been prepared for plastering as specified in the section of specifications on concrete Portland Cement. This surface preparation to be done is a part of Portland Cement concrete work as set forth in Section E, Paragraph 1–G and Section E, Paragraph 77 of specifications. This report is hereby given you pursuant to Section K, Paragraph 48 of specifications.

When surfaces have been prepared, we shall proceed forthwith with the dash coat. Delay on your part is preventing us from proceeding and is resulting in additional costs to us in performance of our subcontract."

The foregoing assertions by plaintiff that the concrete surfaces were not properly or adequately prepared provoked a reply from defendant on October 4, 1955, in which defendant insisted that the concrete surfaces fully complied with the requirements of section "E" of the specifications, and proceeded to identify the buildings which were or would be ready to receive the plaster. The letter concluded: "You are herewith requested to proceed with your work as directed and cooperate in a proper manner to complete this job to our mutual advantage and preclude any further delays." (Emphasis added.)

Plaintiff replied to the letter of October 4 by letter dated October 13, 1955, stating: "Pursuant to the request contained in your letter of October 4, 1955, we are 'proceeding with the work as directed' by you. Before we can properly apply the dash coat as provided in the specifications, it is necessary that certain preparatory work be done to put the surfaces in a condition to receive the dash coat. At your request, we have begun such preparation, which consists of applying a stucco float finish to cover imperfections and irregularities in the concrete. Obviously there is a dispute between us concerning responsibility for doing the work above described, and it is our contention that such preparatory work is not a part of the plastering specifications. However, at your request we are proceeding with the work. The dispute can be resolved upon completion of the contract. In the meantime for our own protection, we are treating this preparatory work as extra work and will bill you accordingly."

It does not appear that defendant made any reply to the last quoted communication. Plaintiff thereafter proceeded with the plastering of the exterior walls of the four buildings utilizing the base or "float" coat described above followed by the application of two "dash" coats. In other words, plaintiff followed the method of application used in producing the sample which the architect had approved.

Both in the trial court and on this appeal, defendant has insisted most vigorously that the exterior plastering work for which plaintiff is compensated by the judgment at bar was neither requested by defendant nor necessitated by defective concrete surfaces, but was required by the inspector and architect as a condition of granting plaintiff's request for permission to apply the plaster by a machine method in lieu of the hand method called for in the specifications. This contention centers upon an issue of fact and constitutes an attack upon the trial court's Finding of Fact No. IX which reads as follows: "In addition to the work required of plaintiff under the terms of said subcontract and at the request of the defendant, J. C. Boespflug Construction Company, the plaintiff performed extra services and supplied extra materials consisting of an additional coat of cement plaster to all of the exterior concrete surfaces of the buildings at Westchester High School. By reason of said extra work, plaintiff's costs were increased and the reasonable value of said labor and materials is the sum of $8,135.96. Said sum became due and payable on September 16, 1956."

[1] Our review of the record convinces us that the challenged finding is amply sustained by substantial evidence.

It is clear from the recited evidence that as late as mid-October, 1955, plaintiff and defendant were in disagreement as to what performance by plaintiff would be necessary in order to produce exterior wall surfaces which would conform to the requirements of the specifications and meet with the approval of the architect. There was abundant evidence that the concrete surfaces as they appeared in August were quite unsuitable to receive the application of plaster. Defendant's request for plaintiff's bid on the job of preparing the concrete could be construed most reasonably as indicating defendant's recognition that extra work was necessary. It bears repetition that the architect previously had rejected the sample of stucco work consisting of two coats applied in the manner prescribed in the original specifications and had approved a three-coat sample applied in the manner later followed by plaintiff in completing the work. It may be inferred from the evidence that defendant was fully informed concerning the architect's declarations in this regard. Defendant was advised by plaintiff's letter of October 13 that plaintiff considered itself under direction to apply the plaster in the manner which the architect had approved. In these circumstances, particularly in view of the urgency of the situation then existing, the last paragraph of defendant's letter of October 4 instructing plaintiff to proceed "as directed" was susceptible to interpretation as a demand that plaintiff proceed without further delay to apply the stucco in a manner that would satisfy both the architect and the specifications.

[2–5] Extra work as used in connection with a building contract means work arising outside of and entirely independent of the contract—something not required in its performance, not contemplated by the parties, and not controlled by the contract. Frank T. Hickey, Inc. v. Los Angeles Jewish Community Council, 128 Cal.App.2d 676, 683, 276 P.2d 52; City Street Imp. Co. v. Kroh, 158 Cal. 308, 321, 323, 110 P. 933; see 6 Cal.Jur. 370, § 224. Extra work may be performed by the contractor for the owner (Punton v. Sapp Bros. Construction Co., 143 Cal.App.2d 696, 701, 300 P.2d 271; Parkford v. Union Drilling Co., 118 Cal. App. 538, 544, 5 P.2d 440) or by the subcontractor for the general contractor. Frank T. Hickey, Inc. v. Los Angeles Jewish Community Council, supra, 128 Cal. App.2d 676, 683–685, 276 P.2d 52. Where the extras are of a different character from the work called for in the contract and no price is agreed on for extra work, their reasonable value may be recovered. Parkford v. Union Drilling Co., supra, 118 Cal. App. 538, 544, 5 P.2d 440; 17 C.J.S. Contracts § 371 h, p. 854. In the instant case, as we have pointed out, the finding that extra work was required by the defendant is supported by substantial evidence to be found in the circumstances, in the communications attending the controversy and in the construction apparently placed on the contract by the parties as indicated by their conduct. Cf. Wyman v. Hooker, 2 Cal. App. 36, 41, 83 P. 79; Punton v. Sapp Bros. Construction Co., supra, 143 Cal.App.2d 696, 701, 300 P.2d 271; Frank T. Hickey, Inc. v. Los Angeles Jewish Community, Council, supra, 128 Cal.App.2d 676, 681–683, 276 P.2d 52. Considering all the circumstances appearing from the record, it was not unreasonable for the trial judge to conclude that the extra work on the building was done at defendant's direction, that it was necessitated by imperfect performance of concrete work for which defendant was responsible and that defendant was fully aware that the architect's requirements could not be fulfilled without doing the extra work. See Bavin & Burch Co. v. Bard, 81 Cal.App. 722, 728–729, 255 P. 200; Frank T. Hickey, Inc. v. Los Angeles Jewish Community Council, supra; 9 Cal.Jur.2d 296, § 13. The resolution of these purely factual questions is within the exclusive province of the trier of the facts. See Greenwald v. Royal Indemnity Co., 112 Cal.App.2d 183, 185, 245 P.2d 1115; Lowry v. Law, 27 Cal.App. 483, 492, 150 P. 660. Since the findings are supported by substantial evidence this court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial judge. Primm v. Primm, 46 Cal.2d 690, 693–694, 299 P.2d 231; Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183; New v. New, 148 Cal.App.2d 372, 383, 306 P.2d 987.

[6, 7] Defendant contends that a provision of the subcontract requiring a written change order specifying any extra work to be done bars any recovery by plaintiff. Section 12 of the subcontract provides as follows: "No claims for extra work * * * will be recognized or paid for unless agreed to in writing before the work is done * * * in which writing shall be specified in detail the extra work or changes desired, * * *." Since no written authorization of this character was given, it is defendant's argument that plaintiff was required to plead and prove a waiver of this condition. See 25 Cal.Jur. 931, § 6. It is settled, however, that this requirement of pleading is satisfied by the allegation of facts which would constitute a waiver. Estrada v. Queen Ins. Co., 107 Cal.App. 504, 508, 290 P. 525. In the instant case the complaint incorporated the subcontract, including the requirement of a writing in connection with any extra work, and alleged "that in addition to the work required to be done by plaintiff under the terms of said subcontract, and at the special instance and request of the defendants, the plaintiff applied a leveling coat of cement plaster to the * * * buildings * * *." This pleading of a waiver is sufficient. Estrada v. Queen Ins. Co., supra, 107 Cal.App. 504, 508, 290 P. 525.

[8] The second phase of defendant's argument on this point is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding of a waiver by defendant of the required writing. However, we have found the evidence sufficient to support the finding that the extra work was done at defendant's special instance and request. Plaintiff previously had submitted a written offer to do this work for a specified amount. Defendant thereafter directed plaintiff to proceed without referring to the necessity of compliance with the requirement of section 12 of the subcontract. It has been held that proof of similar conduct is sufficient to support the finding of a waiver. Wilson v. Keefe, 150 Cal.App.2d 178, 181, 309 P.2d 516; Cf. Frank T. Hickey, Inc., v. Los Angeles Jewish Community Council, supra, 128 Cal.App.2d 676, 682–683, 276 P. 2d 52; and see 9 Cal.Jur.2d 296, § 13. As stated in Wyman v. Hooker, 2 Cal.App. 36, 41, 83 P. 79, 81: "The evidence showed that the extra work on the building was done with the knowledge and consent of defendant and his agent, and that they waived the written stipulation that a separate written estimate of extra work should be submitted, by orally agreeing to and countenancing the work without written estimates."

It was a purely factual question whether plaintiff adequately complied with the contractual provision requiring it to report to the contractor any surfaces not properly prepared before starting to plaster. It is implicit in the findings that the trial court resolved this issue in plaintiff's favor. Apart from the written communications from which we have quoted in our recital of the evidence, the record reveals that there were various discussions between the parties during the summer of 1955 in which the imperfections in the concrete surfaces were extensively discussed. Obviously, we cannot say that this evidence was insufficient to support a finding that the condition under discussion was adequately fulfilled. The same disposition must be made of defendant's argument that the extra work was occasioned solely by the change from the hand method to the machine method of application.

While it is true that the architect was constituted "the judge of the quality of materials and workmanship", his approval of the concrete surfaces could not properly be regarded as a binding adjudication of the issues which the trial court was called upon to decide in this case. There was no reason to believe that the architect as representative of the school district would ultimately have accepted buildings which failed to measure up to prescribed standards. It seems reasonable to conclude that as of mid-October, 1955, neither plaintiff nor defendant could predict with assurance whether or not the architect would accept the buildings after an application of the stucco in the manner provided by the original specifications. Indeed, the architect's rejection of a sample prepared in that way was a fact sufficient to support a finding that he probably would not have accepted them. At that time both plaintiff and defendant were faced with the necessity of making immediate decisions on the basis of their respective evaluations of the requirements of the specifications and of the conditions presented. Completion time was running out, and there appeared to be ample basis for apprehension of substantial liabilities in the event of further delay. It was within the sole province of the trial court to determine the factual questions upon which liability here depended: what quality of performance was being demanded of plaintiff; what methods were appropriate or essential to accomplish acceptable performance; whether extra work was necessary, and, if so, whether it was necessitated by faulty concrete surfaces or by plaintiff's choice of method, and whether plaintiff reasonably complied with the conditions on its part to be performed.

[9] "It is generally held that the existence of an implied contract is usually a question of fact for the trial court. Where evidence is conflicting, or where reasonable conflicting inferences may be drawn from evidence which is not in conflict, a question of fact is presented for decision of the trial court." Medina v. Van Camp Sea Food Co., 75 Cal.App.2d 551, 555–556, 171 P.2d 445, 448; Caron v. Andrew, 133 Cal.App.2d 412, 416, 284 P.2d 550.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Alfred E. AMADO, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6405.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 26, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Defendant was convicted of unlawful possession of heroin and from the judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., and from a nonexistent verdict, the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held, inter alia, that defendant was not deprived of due process on ground that his counsel wilfully failed to present defense of unlawful search and seizure and failed to ask arresting officer the names of informers, where a counsel of defendant's choice was substituted for public defender after arraignment in the Superior Court, no showing was made that defendant's representation was inept or incompetent, defendant made no complaint to the court with respect to his counsel's representation, arrest and consequent search and seizure were not made solely on information received from the informers, and counsel might have concluded that no purpose would be served in seeking disclosure of identity of informers.

Appeal from nonexistent verdict dismissed, and the judgment affirmed.

VALLÉE, Justice.

In a nonjury trial defendant was convicted of unlawful possession of heroin. He appeals from the judgment. The cause was submitted on the transcript of the preliminary hearing, each side reserving the right to offer additional evidence. Defendant did not testify or produce any evidence in his behalf.

On January 31, 1958 Deputy Sheriff Velasquez, acting on information he had received from two informers to the effect that defendant was using the house at 1821 East 43rd Street, Los Angeles, for the purpose of selling narcotics, went to that location. On arriving, Velasquez and Officer Vega went to the back door. The door itself was open but the screen door was closed. As they approached the door Velasquez saw defendant in the kitchen. On seeing the officers, defendant "made a movement toward his pocket and started stepping backwards and put a white piece of paper —looked to me like paper—in his mouth and started walking away from the kitchen." Velasquez immediately opened the door, entered the house, and arrested defendant. He searched defendant's person and in a trouser pocket found two gelatin capsules containing heroin. As the capsules were being removed from his pocket defendant called to his wife in Spanish that two capsules of heroin had been found in his pocket. The officers then took defendant into the bedroom and asked him for his "outfit." Defendant went to a dresser drawer and handed Velasquez a spoon, an eye dropper, and a box of tissue containing a syringe with a brownish liquid in it.

Later the same day defendant told Velasquez the narcotics found on his person were his; he had purchased them the day before; he had them for his own use; he was not in the business of selling narcotics; and he was an addict. The officers did not have a warrant for defendant's arrest or a search warrant.

Defendant contends in effect that he was denied a fair trial in violation of his constitutional rights because, so he asserts, his counsel wilfully and knowingly failed to present certain defenses that were available to him. He argues that his counsel failed to prepare his defense according to the facts and the law; that he failed to raise the defense of unlawful search and seizure; and that he failed to ask Velasquez the names of the informers.

[1] At the preliminary hearing defendant was represented by the public defender. The public defender did not raise any question of illegal search and seizure or seek disclosure of the informers. After arraignment in the superior court counsel of defendant's choice was substituted. "The handling of the defense by counsel of the accused's own choice will not be declared inadequate except in those rare cases where his counsel displays such a lack of diligence and competence as to reduce the trial to a 'farce or a sham.'" People v. Wein, 50 Cal.2d 383, 410, 326 P.2d 457, 473.

[2–5] It is presumed that an attorney has been faithful to the best interests of his client. No showing is made that defendant's representation was inept or incompetent. Defendant made no complaint to the court with respect to his counsel's representation. If he felt his counsel was incompetent or prejudiced against him as he now asserts, he should have so informed the trial court. Under ordinary circumstances a defendant may not complain for the first time on appeal of claimed inept conduct of trial counsel of his own choosing. People v. Comstock, 147 Cal.App.2d 287, 299, 305 P.2d 228. Counsel may well have concluded that the defenses of unlawful arrest and illegal search and seizure were not available to defendant. The record indicates they were not. The arrest and the consequent search and seizure were not made solely on information received from the informers. The officers before entering the house observed furtive conduct on the part of defendant, giving them reasonable cause to make the arrest and search. People v. Cantley, 163 Cal.App.2d 762, 329 P.2d 993. When defendant saw the arresting officers approach the back door he made a movement toward his pocket, started stepping backwards, put a piece of white paper in his mouth, and started walking away from the kitchen. People v. Andrews, 153 Cal.App.2d 333, 337–338, 314 P.2d 175. Counsel also may have reasonably concluded that no purpose would be served in seeking disclosure of the identity of the informers. The informers were neither participants in nor eyewitnesses to defendant's arrest. Disclosure of the identity of an informer has not been required where there was reasonable cause for a search and seizure apart from the informer's communication which led the police to suspect the defendant. People v. Williams, 51 Cal.2d 355, 333 P.2d 19. Disclosure is not required where the informer is not a material witness on the issue of guilt. People v. McShann, 50 Cal.2d 802, 808, 330 P.2d 33. There is nothing in the record to indicate that any information might have been elicited from either informer which would be relevant or helpful to the defense of defendant.

[6] Defendant has not made that type of showing which alone would compel the conclusion that he was deprived of due process within the meaning of the constitutional guarantees.

[7] Defendant also appeals from a nonexistent verdict. This appeal will be dismissed.

The appeal from the nonexistent verdict is dismissed; the judgment is affirmed.

v.

John A. CRONIN, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 23323.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 15, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 11, 1959.

Damage action. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Walter C. Allen, J., entered certain orders in regard to a memorandum of costs and damages claimed by plaintiff in a successful mandamus proceeding which he instituted in connection with his damage suit and plaintiff, deeming such orders unsatisfactory, appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that there was no provision in law for allowing as costs of a mandamus proceeding, items covering cost of employment of a stenographer to type various and sundry documents that plaintiff served and filed or otherwise used during the course of the mandate proceeding, in absence of any showing that the stenographer was an official court reporter, or that any of the documents prepared by her were prepared pursuant to court order.

Orders affirmed.

1. Mandamus ⇐190

A successful petitioner in a mandamus proceeding is entitled to recover his costs. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1095.

2. Costs ⇐2

The term "costs" includes only taxable costs.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Costs".

3. Mandamus ⇐190

There was no provision in law for allowing as costs of a mandamus proceeding items covering cost of employment of a stenographer to type various and sundry documents that prevailing party served and filed or otherwise used during the course of the mandate proceeding, in absence of any showing that a stenographer was an official court reporter, or that any of the documents prepared by her were prepared pursuant to court order. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1095.

4. Mandamus ⇐190

Successful petitioner in a mandamus proceeding was not entitled to recover as costs fee of an attorney for legal services rendered. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1095.

5. Mandamus ⇐190

Loss of time by successful petitioner in mandamus proceeding, in connection with the proceeding, and asserted damages for mental pain and anguish suffered by him in attempting to require respondent to answer certain questions which he refused to answer when his deposition was taken in a damage action, were not allowable as costs of the mandamus proceeding. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1095.

R. W. Agnew, in pro. per.

Montgomery G. Rice, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff brought an action for damages against John A. Cronin and others. See Agnew v. Cronin, 148 Cal.App.2d 117, 306 P.2d 527. Thereafter plaintiff sought to take the deposition of defendant Cronin, during the course of which Cronin refused to answer certain questions. Plaintiff thereupon filed a petition for a writ of mandate to compel Cronin to answer the questions. This court granted the petition (see Agnew v. Superior Court, 156 Cal.App. 2d 838 at page 841, 320 P.2d 158, at page 160) and ordered that plaintiff "shall recover his costs". Plaintiff filed in this court, prior to the remittitur being issued, a request for allowance of his costs and damages, and that the judgment be modified so as to include such items. Cronin filed a notice of motion to tax costs. This court thereupon entered the following order: "Petitioner's request to fix costs and respondent's motion to tax costs, are denied without prejudice to the making of appropriate motions in the superior court in the case of Agnew v. Cronin, et al., No. 65435."

Thereafter Agnew filed in the trial court a memorandum of costs and damages claimed by him in the mandamus proceeding. This memorandum consists of 15 items totaling $652.50. Item 1 is fee for filing petition for writ of mandate, $7.50; Item 2, notary fee for verifying petition for writ of mandate, $.50; Item 3, service fee and mileage for serving copy of alternative writ of mandate on the superior court, $1.35; Items 4, 5, 6, 10, 11, 12, 14 and 15 cover charges for typing various papers and documents and copies thereof that were filed in connection with the mandamus proceeding; Item 7 represents notary public fee for typewriting citation to superior court re refusal of Cronin to answer questions at deposition hearing, $7.50; Item 8 is for "Legal advice and legal research work from attorney Wilbur F. Littlefield for his services concerning R. W. Agnew [petitioner] obtaining a writ of mandate in order that John A. Cronin be compelled to answer questions re deposition." Item 9 is for time lost by Agnew in making trips, holding conferences and investigating possibility of obtaining a writ of mandate to compel Cronin to answer questions at deposition hearing; Item 13 is for "Mental pain, grief, distress, torment, worry, anguish, anxiety, annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, and headaches suffered by R. W. Agnew in attempting to require John A. Cronin to answer questions at his deposition which he refused to answer."

Cronin, in due course, filed a motion to tax costs in which he sought to have stricken all of the above mentioned items except Items 1, 2, and 3.

Agnew filed notice of motion to have his costs and damages fixed in accordance with the above mentioned memorandum. At the hearing on these two motions the court taxed the costs at $16.85, this being the total of Items 1, 2, 3 and 7. The court granted Cronin's motion to disallow, and ordered stricken all other items. It is from these orders that Agnew appeals.

[1, 2] By the terms of section 1095, Code of Civil Procedure, a successful petitioner in a mandamus proceeding is entitled to recover his costs. It was pursuant to this authority that we held in Agnew v. Superior Court, 156 Cal.App.2d 838, at page 841, 320 P.2d 158, at page 160, that "Petitioner shall recover his costs". But it will be noted that we stated "costs"—nothing more. As said in Pezel v. Yerex, 56 Cal. App. 304, at page 311, 205 P. 475, 478, "The term 'costs' has a well-defined legal meaning, and includes only taxable costs, that is, those expenses which are incurred by parties in prosecuting or defending actions or proceedings and which may be taxed against the losing party." Costs are defined by Mr. Justice Vallée in Re Estate of Bevelle, 81 Cal.App.2d 720, 722, 185 P.2d 90, 92, as follows: "The term 'costs' means those fees and charges which are required by law to be paid to the courts or some of their officers, or the amount of which is expressly fixed by law." This definition is based upon and supported by Moss v. Underwriters' Report, Inc., 12 Cal.2d 266, 274, 83 P.2d 503, and Blair v. Brownstone Oil & Refining Co., 20 Cal.App. 316, 128 P. 1022. In Estate of Johnson, 198 Cal. 469, 471, 245 P. 1089, 1090, it is pointed out that "The right to recover costs exists solely by virtue of statute. Consequently an award of costs can be justified only if permitted by some statutory provision, and the measure of the statute is the measure of the right." To the same effect see Moss v. Underwriters' Report, Inc., supra, and Gerstein v. Smirl, 70 Cal.App.2d 238, 239, 160 P.2d 585.

Applying these principles to the items here involved it is clear that the trial court ruled correctly in disallowing and striking each of the disputed items and in taxing the costs at $16.85.

[3] There is no provision in law for allowing as costs the items (4, 5, 6, 10, 11, 12, 14 and 15) covering the employment of Helen Pattinson to type various and sundry documents that plaintiff served and filed or otherwise used during the course of the mandate proceeding. Miss Pattinson was not an official court reporter and it does not appear that any of these documents were prepared pursuant to any court order. The work of Miss Pattinson was such as is performed every day in any law office by the stenographic personnel. She was simply the private employee of Agnew just as any stenographer is an employee of the person for whom she works.

[4] By item 8 Agnew seeks to recover as costs the fee of Attorney Littlefield for the legal services he rendered. Attorney's fees in a mandate proceeding may not be recovered as costs. Holbrook v. Board of Education, 113 Cal.App.2d 840, 249 P.2d 29.

[5] Item 9 relates to loss of time by Agnew in connection with the mandate proceeding, and item 10 to asserted damages for mental pain and anguish suffered by him in attempting to require Cronin to answer questions which he refused to answer when his deposition was taken. There is no provision in law for allowing either of these items as costs.

No useful purpose would be served by analyzing the multitude of cases cited by plaintiff. The principles that are decisive of this appeal are simple and clear, and their application demonstrates its lack of merit.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

Julio Marcalli CRUZ and Lawrence Ortiz, Defendants and Appellants.

Cr. 3531.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 26, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Defendants were convicted of kidnapping and rape and from the judgments of the Superior Court, Santa Clara County, M. G. Del Mutolo, J., the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that where rape occurred about 1 o'clock a. m. when defendants seized prosecutrix on a sidewalk, placed her in their automobile and drove about for some time, alleged error in admission of evidence that about 11:30 o'clock the same night defendants in their automobile followed an automobile driven by an unaccompanied woman from a point in downtown for a considerable distance and that when such automobile turned into a lonely road outside city defendants twice attempted to block its progress by forcing it off the road, was not prejudicial in view of defendants' confessions which had been recorded and played to jury, other admissions by defendants and in view of overwhelming evidence of guilt.

Affirmed.

Criminal Law ⇐1169(1)

In prosecution for kidnapping and rape which occurred about 1 o'clock a. m. when defendants seized prosecutrix on a sidewalk, placed her in their automobile and drove about for some time when rape occurred, alleged error in admission of evidence that about 11:30 o'clock the same night defendants in their automobile followed an automobile driven by an unaccompanied woman from a point in downtown for a considerable distance, and that when such automobile turned into a lonely road outside city defendants twice attempted to block its progress by forcing it off the road, was not prejudicial in view of defendants' confessions which had been recorded and played to jury, other admissions by defendants and in view of overwhelming evidence of guilt. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 207, 261(3).

Peter M. Nakahara, San Jose, for appellants.

Stanley Mosk, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., John S. McInerny, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DRAPER, Justice.

A jury found both defendants guilty of kidnapping (Pen.Code, § 207) and of rape (Pen.Code, § 261(3)). They appeal from the ensuing judgment.

At about 1 o'clock a. m. defendants seized prosecutrix upon a public sidewalk in San Jose, placed her in their car, and drove about for some time. Each then accomplished an act of sexual intercourse with her, while the other forcibly held her. Some portions of the testimony of appellants suggest that prosecutrix did not object either to being placed in the car or to the acts of intercourse. However, there is ample testimony to support the implied findings of the jury against appellants upon these issues.

The sole contention on appeal is that the trial court erred in admitting testimony as to an event shortly preceding the seizing of prosecutrix. This evidence indicates that at about 11:30 o'clock the same night defendants, in their automobile, followed a car driven by an unaccompanied woman (not the prosecutrix) from a point in downtown San Jose for a considerable distance. When this car turned into a lonely road outside the city, defendants twice attempted to block its progress by forcing it off the road. The woman driver was able to maneuver her car away, and drove to a fire station where she summoned help and frightened defendants away. This evidence was admitted over objection, and the jury was admonished that it was admitted "solely * * * for the purpose of showing, if it does show, the frame of mind or a design or a common purpose on the part of the defendants in connection with the offense with which they are charged."

Appellants point to People v. Cassandras, 83 Cal.App.2d 272, 188 P.2d 546, and like cases, for the rule that a similar offense may be proven only when its circumstances closely parallel those of the offense currently charged. That rule is clear, and it seems likely that the incident of 11:30 p. m. is not admissible as a "similar offense" in the strict sense. However, it might well show a frame of mind or intent which could be inferred to have continued to, and have direct bearing upon, the occurrence at 1 a. m. (see People v. Tolson, 109 Cal. App.2d 579, 241 P.2d 32). Although the issue is not directly argued on appeal, the real question is whether the acts of 11:30 and following do connote an intent to kidnap a woman for purpose of rape. This point may, on all the evidence, be fairly debatable. However, we do not find it necessary to detail the testimony to explore this question, since we are satisfied that the admission of the evidence, even if error, was not prejudicial.

Two confessions by defendant Cruz and one by defendant Ortiz had been recorded and were played to the jury. There was testimony of still other admissions by defendants. Their own testimony on the witness stand was weak. In view of the overwhelming evidence of guilt, it is clear that appellants could have suffered no prejudice by reason of the testimony as to the events preceding the offenses charged. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 299 P.2d 243.

Civ. 18245.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 22, 1959.

Proceeding on application by mother for order amending custody award to take physical custody of child from father and award it to mother. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Orla St. Clair, rendered judgment for mother, and father appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that where custody had been awarded to father on determination that if all things had been equal custody would have been awarded to mother, mother had established herself in responsible position in new community in Canada as teacher when she applied for order amending custody award, and father, although he held a Ph.D. degree, earned approximately $100 per month, award of custody of child to mother was not an abuse of discretion.

Affirmed.

1. Bastards ⇐10

The effect of legitimation of child under Civil Code is to give both parents the same rights in relation to child as if child had been born in wedlock. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 230.

2. Parent and Child ⇐2(3.1)

As between parents with equal rights to custody of child, the paramount consideration is the best interests of the child.

3. Parent and Child ⇐2(3, 3.3, 3.6)

In determining whether custody of child should be with father or mother, fact that child had lived for the three years of her life with father and his wife and knew no other home, that, if custody were awarded to mother, the child, an American citizen by birth, child would be taken to foreign country to live, and fact that mother was an unmarried woman would be weighed by court.

4. Infants ⇐19.3(7)

Court in custody cases has a broad discretion in determining what is for the best interests of child and its determination will not be disturbed unless record shows a clear abuse of that discretion.

5. Parent and Child ⇐2(3.5)

Where custody of child had been awarded to father rather than unmarried mother on determination of court that if all things had been equal custody would have been given to mother, mother, who three years later, applied for custody, had established herself in a responsible position in new community in Canada as teacher, and father, although he held a Ph.D. degree, earned approximately $100 per month, award of custody of child to mother was not an abuse of discretion. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 138(2).

6. Parent and Child ⇐2(3)

Fact that child, an American citizen by birth, would live abroad if custody were awarded to mother was not controlling in determining whether custody of child should be awarded to mother or to father, who lived in United States. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 138(2).

Philip Adams, Reginald G. Hearn, San Francisco, for appellant.

Lange & Rockwell, San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Plaintiff, the father of the minor child Laura Helen-Christa Donnally, appeals from an order of the court amending a custody award to take the physical custody of the child from appellant and award it to the defendant-respondent mother.

Appellant and his present wife were divorced in Nevada in October, 1953. After this divorce appellant went to London, England where appellant met the respondent, a German national. The child was conceived in London and when appellant's divorced wife learned of this she went to London and with the cooperation of appellant arranged to bring respondent to San Francisco where the child was born on December 23, 1954.

Respondent, who had only a temporary visitor's visa for this country, went to Canada shortly after the child's birth and has resided in British Columbia ever since. When respondent left the hospital after her child's birth the baby was taken home by appellant's divorced wife. In February 1955 appellant and his divorced wife were remarried and on February 24, 1955 appellant filed this action, naming respondent as defendant, in which he sought a decree of the court adjudging the child to be the legitimate child of appellant and respondent under the provisions of section 230 Civil Code and for such order for the custody of said child as might appear to the court to be in the child's best interest. Respondent filed an answer and cross-complaint in which she joined with appellant in asking the court to legitimate the child, but praying that her custody be awarded to respondent.

On March 25, 1955 an order was made and entered by the court which recites that the matter came on regularly for hearing, testimony both oral and documentary was received and the court finds that all of the allegations of plaintiff's complaint are established. This order concludes:

"It Is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed:

"1. That Laura Helen-Christa Donnally is the legitimate child of Laurance Henderson Donnally and Hertha Therese Blankenstein."

At the same time the court made an order reserving the decision as to the permanent custody of the child and committing her to the custody of appellant's wife until further order of the court.

After further hearing on the matter of permanent custody and the receipt of various reports by court investigators appointed pursuant to stipulation of the parties an order was made and entered on November 20, 1956, awarding the custody jointly to appellant and respondent "and until further order of this Court, the physical care and custody of said infant" was awarded to appellant. In connection with this order the court made findings of fact which, after reciting that respondent was living alone in Vancouver and working and had no home to which she could take the child while appellant had remarried and had a home, found further that: "in the present period the child ought to be permitted to remain in the home where it is. When the child becomes three or four years old, perhaps the mother's position will have changed and she can then apply for a modification at that time. * * * I was not greatly impressed by the father's attitude on some things. * * * If it was between two people, neither of whom had a home, of course, the mother would prevail * * * the Court does not find that the mother is unfit, but the Court finds for the present it is the best interest of the child (to remain with the father)."

On December 16, 1957, respondent secured from the court an order to show cause why the previous custody order should not be modified to give respondent physical custody and control of her child. After a hearing the order herein appealed from was made. It continues joint legal custody in the two parents but gives respondent the physical custody subject to reasonable visitation rights in appellant and provides that respondent "may take the minor * * * to the mother's residence in British Columbia, Canada, for the purpose of having said minor permanently reside with her said mother." It further orders that "except upon further order of this Court or for the purposes of temporary visitation on the part of the father with said minor here in California, the parties * * * are restrained from removing said minor from the territorial limits of the province of British Columbia."

In support of her application respondent showed that while supporting herself by working she had attended the University of British Columbia and secured a teacher's certificate; that she had obtained employment as a teacher of mathematics, physics and physical education in Prince Rupert, British Columbia at a salary of $320 per month; that she was living in the home of a Mr. and Mrs. Greissel who had two sons 10 and 14 and that Mrs. Greissel was willing to care for the child during her teaching hours. There was a report from the British Columbia Department of Health and Welfare that respondent is treated by the Greissels as one of the family; that the Greissels are a relaxed and friendly couple with experience in foster care of children and their home is adequate in every way. It further appeared that the Inspector of Schools knows that respondent is not married and is seeking the custody of her child. He has found her steady and dependable and her service as a teacher is very satisfactory. She has participated actively in community affairs, sings in the church choir, plays violin in the local symphony orchestra and is active in sports. The British Columbia agency commented on her maturity, intelligence and ability to plan for herself and the child.

At the time of the trial appellant was 56 years old and his wife 50, while respondent was 34.

[1] The effect of the legitimation of the child under section 230, Civil Code is to give both parents the same rights in relation to the child as if the child had been born in wedlock. In re Navarro, 77 Cal. App.2d 500, 175 P.2d 896; Strong v. Owens, 91 Cal.App.2d 336, 205 P.2d 48. Appellant asks us to reconsider the holding of these cases. We are satisfied that they correctly state the law (despite a strong dissenting opinion in Navarro the Supreme Court denied a hearing, 77 Cal.App.2d at page 520, 175 P.2d 896).

[2] Appellant attacks the present order as an abuse of discretion. As between parents with equal legal right to custody the paramount consideration is the best interests of the child. Holsinger v. Holsinger, 44 Cal.2d 132, 135, 279 P.2d 961; Clarke v. Clarke, 35 Cal.2d 259, 262, 217 P.2d 401. Appellant argues that respondent has failed to show a change in circumstances since the previous custody order was made. In this we are satisfied that appellant takes too narrow a view of the changed-circumstances rule. The court at the previous hearing found that if all things had been equal as to the ability of the parents to furnish the child a home the child should have been awarded to the mother and suggested the present application for modification when the mother's position in this respect was changed. The mother satisfied the court on this hearing that her circumstances were so changed that she can now give her child an adequate home. We cannot hold that the very change in circumstances which the court contemplated in making its first order might justify its future modification does not satisfy this court-made rule. To do so would tie the court's hands where it felt that the best interests of the child would otherwise be served by awarding it to one parent but, as in this case, it awarded it to the other solely because the one to whom the award was made had a proper home which the other by fortuity at that time could not furnish for the child.

[3–6] The fact that the child had lived for the three years of her life with appellant and his wife and knew no other home is a factor which the court should weigh (Fine v. Denny, 111 Cal.App.2d 402, 244 P.2d 983; Norton v. Norton, 112 Cal.App. 2d 358, 245 P.2d 1108; Frazier v. Frazier, 115 Cal.App.2d 551, 252 P.2d 693), as is the fact that under the present order the child, an American citizen by birth, will be taken to a foreign country to live (see Gantner v. Gantner, 39 Cal.2d 272, 280, 246 P. 2d 923) and the further fact that respondent is an unmarried woman. The court however in these cases has a broad discretion in determining what is for the best interests of the child and its determination will not be disturbed unless the record shows a clear abuse of that discretion. Holsinger v. Holsinger, supra, 44 Cal.2d at page 135, 279 P.2d 961. The respective ages of the parents (when the child reaches majority appellant will be 73), the preference of the law that children of tender years should be awarded to the mother (Civ.Code, § 138 (2)), the energy, initiative and adaptability shown by the mother in establishing herself in a responsible position in a new community in such a relatively short time as compared to the father's lack of those qualities (although he holds a Ph.D. degree, on July 30, 1956 an investigator reported that appellant's earnings were approximately $100 per month), and the previous determination of the court that if all things had been equal custody should have been given to the mother were all factors which support the present order of the court. The fact that the child will live abroad is not controlling. Gantner v. Gantner, supra, 39 Cal.2d at page 280, 246 P.2d 923. It is suggested that respondent might take the child back to Germany. She testified that she intended to live permanently in Canada and her present hard-earned position of security in British Columbia makes it appear highly unlikely that she would leave that security for the uncertainties of her former country.

It was the function of the trial court to weigh the various factors and determine what would be for the best interests of the child. We can find no abuse of discretion in its determination of that question.

Civ. 5780.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 26, 1959.

Action to recover for fertilizer sold wherein defendant cross-complained for loss in crop of potatoes allegedly due to failure to furnish fertilizer when requested. Verdict for the defendant and from an order of the Superior Court of Riverside County, Edward P. Fogg, J., granting plaintiff a new trial, the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that the trial court properly granted a new trial for insufficiency of evidence to sustain the verdict.

Order affirmed.

1. New Trial ⇐71

A trial court in considering a motion for new trial is not bound by the rules of conflicting evidence.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐979(2)

When a motion for new trial is granted for the insufficiency of evidence, it is only in rare cases showing abuse of discretion that an appellate court will interfere.

3. New Trial ⇐68

In action to recover for fertilizer sold to raise crop of potatoes wherein defendants counterclaimed alleging that because of the delay of plaintiffs in failing to furnish fertilizer high grade potatoes would have been produced by the defendants in place of a quantity of poor quality potatoes, where other growers in the area suffered a crop loss in that year and there was no testimony as to what profits would have been realized by defendant had he obtained delivery of the fertilizer when he first requested it, granting plaintiff's motion for new trial after verdict for the defendant was not an abuse of discretion.

Harold M. Fagin, Riverside, for appellants.

Hennigan, Ryneal & Nixen, by J. David Hennigan, Riverside, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This action was commenced in the Municipal Court of Riverside Judicial District. McCall and Noblitt, plaintiffs therein, sought judgment against defendant Schnackenberg and his wife for fertilizer sold and delivered to them. Defendants filed a general denial and cross-complaint, and alleged that in March, 1953, plaintiffs orally agreed to furnish all the fertilizer that defendants would need to fertilize approximately 25 acres of potatoes and to assist in the supervision and in the planting and raising of said crop; that they failed to deliver the fertilizer as agreed and that by reason of the delay of plaintiffs in delivering said fertilizer defendants' potato crop was damaged in the sum of $5,000. The cause was transferred to the Superior Court and a jury trial was had therein, resulting in a verdict in favor of the defendants and cross-complainants and against McCall and Noblitt for the sum of $3,000. On August 1, 1957, the trial court granted a new trial on motion of plaintiffs "on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict and for excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice". Defendant and cross-complainant Schnackenberg and his wife appealed from the order granting the new trial.

A second amended cross-complaint was filed by the Schnackenbergs in which they alleged that but for the delay of plaintiffs in failing to furnish fertilizer as agreed, 10,000 sacks of No. 1 and No. 2 potatoes would have been produced by the cross-complainants in place of a similar number of poorer quality potatoes; that the demands in the cross-complaint all arise out of the sale of fertilizer to cross-complainants during 1953; that cross-defendants falsely represented that they had been paid for only 227 bags of fertilizer when in fact they had been paid for 260 sacks; that cross-defendants stated that 1,475 sacks of culls owned by cross-complainants were worthless and had no value when in fact they did have a value of approximately $147.50; that cross-defendants fraudulently misgraded 1,020 sacks of potatoes.

The complaint herein involved facts which are not disputed. In September, 1953, at the request of appellants, respondents delivered to appellants 800 100-pound sacks of ammonium sulfate to be paid for at a price of $61.25 per ton, if paid within ten days of invoice, otherwise at $65 per ton, plus 50 additional sacks of sulfate at an agreed price of $65 per ton. $1,800 was paid in ten days of invoice, leaving a balance due of $851.50. No finding of the jury was made as to the issues in the complaint.

As to the cross-complaint the evidence shows that in the spring of 1953 Schnackenberg informed respondent McCall that he wanted to raise potatoes on his land. McCall referred him to persons who might assist him in financing the crop and Schnackenberg entered into a contract and crop mortgage with Alfred W. Chase and Sam Plone Potatoes, Inc., to advance the necessary funds. Chase paid to Schnackenberg a sum to cover 260 sacks of fertilizer. Some fertilizer was supplied and used in the planting of the potatoes and it was agreed that Schnackenberg would take delivery of the balance later. A total of either 167 or 227 sacks was delivered to cross-complainant Schnackenberg and he claims that the failure to deliver the balance of the 260 sacks amounted to actionable fraud. However, cross-complainants' credit on 260 sacks was applied to the purchase of insecticide which was obtained and sprayed on the potatoes. As the time for harvest approached the weather was hot and the potato market was low. Schnackenberg refused to release Chase from his obligation to harvest the crop and pursuant to his contract and mortgage Chase had the potatoes harvested, processed and graded by Sam Plone Potatoes, Inc. The potatoes were graded under the supervision of the Riverside Agricultural Inspector and some 14,750 pounds were rejected as culls. The potatoes were shipped to Los Angeles and there some of the No. 2 potatoes were rejected as having an unduly large number of poor quality potatoes resulting from grass roots, insect damage, and other items. The net result to Schnackenberg was that his crop resulted in a loss to him. Other growers in the area likewise suffered a crop loss in that year and area. There was no testimony as to what profits would have been realized by Schnackenberg had he obtained delivery of the 260 sacks of fertilizer when he first requested it.

The trial court in its opinion and order granting a new trial stated that he could find no evidence of sufficient probative value to justify the verdict for defendants and cross-complainants on their cause of action for alleged breach of contract to deliver fertilizer and to supervise the growing of the spring potato crop; that there was insufficient evidence to show that these potatoes were damaged by any failure of plaintiffs to deliver the fertilizer when requested; that Noblitt made none of the alleged representations and was not guilty of fraud; that he had searched the evidence in vain for anything that might justify a verdict of $3,000 against McCall and could find none; that the evidence clearly indicated that defendants and cross-complainants were indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of $851.50, which sum the jury should have deducted from any damages awarded.

[1–3] The state of the record herein is such that we cannot say that the trial court erred or abused its discretion in granting the motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. The rules applicable to an appeal from such an order are well settled. The trial court in considering a motion for new trial is not bound by the rules of conflicting evidence. When the motion is granted, as here, for insufficiency of the evidence, it is only in rare cases showing abuse of discretion that an appellate court will interfere because the trial judge must weigh all the evidence and determine the just conclusion to be drawn therefrom. In re Estate of Green, 25 Cal.2d 535, 542, 154 P.2d 692. In Van Ostrum v. State, 148 Cal.App.2d 1, 5, 306 P.2d 44, 47, the court said:

"Concerning an order granting the motion upon the ground of excessive damages, it is said in Strosk v. Howard Terminal Co., 129 Cal.App.2d 797, 802, 277 P.2d 828: '"Whatever may be the rule which should govern the trial judge, it is certain that when his action in granting a new trial on the ground of excessive damages, or requiring a reduction of the amount as the condition of denying one, comes to be reviewed on appeal, his order will not be reversed unless it plainly appears that he abused his discretion; and the cases teach that, when there is material conflict of evidence regarding the extent of damage, the imputation of such abuse is repelled, the same as if the ground of the order were insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict." Doolin v. Omnibus Cable Co., 125 Cal. 141, 144–145, 57 P. 744 * * *.'"

In Edler v. Sepulveda Park Apts., 141 Cal.App.2d 675, 676–677, 297 P.2d 508, 509, the court said:

"Upon motion for new trial it is the function of the trial judge to make an independent appraisal of the evidence, including all permissible inferences, and to exercise a sound judicial discretion in determining whether the verdict effects a miscarriage of justice, and a reviewing court cannot disturb the order unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears. All presumptions are in favor of the order and it will be affirmed if sustainable on any ground."

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

AMERICAN AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE COMPANY, a corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

REPUBLIC INDEMNITY COMPANY OF AMERICA, a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.*

Civ. 23169.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 14, 1959.

Hearing Granted March 11, 1959.

Action for declaratory relief brought by insurer of automobile driver against insurer of garage, which had permitted driver to use garage's automobile while driver's automobile was being repaired, to have insurers' respective obligations under their liability policies determined with respect to judgment entered against driver and garage in personal injury action arising out of accident involving garage's automobile. The Superior Court of Los Angeles, John J. Ford, J., rendered judgment for driver's insurer, and garage's insurer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that where policy of driver's insurer covered nonowned automobile used by driver as excess insurance with proviso that its coverage became primary in event there was no other insurance covering vehicle, but excess provision in policy of garage's insurer was limited to nonowned vehicles used by garage, garage's insurer's coverage of the use of automobile was not excess and driver's insurer was entitled to have garage's insurer satisfy entire judgment.

* Opinion vacated 341 P.2d 675.

Affirmed.

1. Insurance ⇐146(1), 152(3)

Automobile liability policies would be viewed in light of established rules and statutes in effect at time of automobile accident.

2. Insurance ⇐435.9

Under financial responsibility statutes in effect on March 27, 1956, when accident involving insured automobile occurred, every policy of motor vehicle liability insurance covered vehicle owned by named insured but driven by someone else with named insured's permission. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 402, 415.

3. Insurance ⇐138(1)

All restrictive endorsements on policy are subject to the law and public policy and if any coverage restriction contravenes the same, it is null and void.

4. Insurance ⇐435.8

Endorsement on automobile liability policy restricting coverage to named insured was void where it contravened existing law. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 402, 415.

5. Insurance ⇐435.23

Where policy issued to garage was entitled comprehensive liability policy, general-automobile, provided for compliance with motor vehicle financial responsibility act, and covered personal injury and property damage arising out of ownership, maintenance or use of any automobile, policy was a motor vehicle liability policy notwithstanding fact that it provided other coverage and that insurer attempted to limit its coverage by numerous attached endorsements.

6. Insurance ⇐435.23

Former rule of law extending protection under motor vehicle liability policies to persons driving insured's automobile with permission did not limit permissive user to any particular person or class of persons but applied to protection of all persons driving insured's automobile with permission and motor vehicle liability policy issued to garage covered vehicle lent by garage to a customer. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 402, 415.

7. Insurance ⇐604

Former rule that all motor vehicle liability policies covered vehicles described in policies when driven by any person with named insureds' permission was applicable to controversy between insurer of driver and insurer of garage which lent automobile to driver, in determining whether garage's insurer was liable to insurer of driver for any part of judgment entered against driver and garage. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 402, 415.

8. Insurance ⇐435.9

Where endorsement restricting liability of automobile insurer to automobiles operated by named insured was contrary to law, coverage would be extended to party who drove automobile with permission of insured notwithstanding allegation that premium charged insured did not include any driver other than insured. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 402, 415.

9. Insurance ⇐512½

Rights and duties of insurers under their policies in situation where one insurer's policy covers automobile driver and another insurer's policy covers automobile owner do not arise out of a contract with each other, since there is no contractual agreement between them, but their obligations are the result of the express provisions of their respective policies.

10. Insurance ⇐512½

Automobile owned by garage and driven with its permission by named insured as temporary substitute automobile became a "not-owned" automobile within insured's liability policy to effect that insurance should be excess insurance over any other collectible insurance with respect to automobile not-owned by named insured and temporarily used when described automobile was withdrawn because of repair and insurer's coverage on garage's automobile became excess over and above any other insurance. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 402, 415.

11. Insurance ⇐512½

Where excess insurance provision of automobile liability policy covered insured garage only in permissive use of an automobile not owned by it, insurer's coverage of automobile owned by garage and driven by customer while his automobile was being repaired constituted primary insurance. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 402, 415.

12. Insurance ⇐512½

Where policy of automobile liability insurer of driver of automobile which was used with permission of garage while driver's automobile was being repaired, covered nonowned automobile used by driver as excess insurance with proviso that its coverage became primary in event there was no other insurance covering vehicle, but excess provision in policy of liability insurer of garage was limited to nonowned vehicles used by garage, garage's coverage of automobile was primary coverage and driver's insurer's coverage of use of automobile was excess and driver's insurer was entitled to have garage's insurer satisfy judgment entered against driver and garage in personal injury action arising out of accident involving garage's automobile. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 402, 415.

Wyman & Finell, Marvin Finell, Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Parker, Stanbury, Reese & McGee, Raymond G. Stanbury, Los Angeles, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

A stipulated judgment in the sum of $5,000 was entered against John M. Steinberg and Max Barish, Inc., an automobile dealer and garage, hereinafter referred to as Barish, in a personal injury action arising out of an automobile accident on March 27, 1956, in which several persons were injured. It involved a car owned by Barish and driven with its permission by Steinberg. Steinberg was insured by American Automobile Insurance Company, plaintiff herein, and Barish by a policy issued by defendant Republic Indemnity Company of America. Plaintiff filed this action for declaratory relief to have their respective obligations under the two policies of liability insurance determined. The lower court held that Republic's policy provided primary insurance to the full extent of the stipulated judgment and the policy issued by American provided only excess coverage; and ordered Republic to satisfy the entire obligation. It is from this judgment defendant appeals.

Both policies, in standard form, were issued prior to March 27, 1956. American not only covered Steinberg's own car, but also his use of a non-owned vehicle as a "temporary substitute" automobile. Republic's policy, however, contained Special Endorsement No. 4, which provided: "with respect to any automobile used with the permission of the named insured by a customer of the named insured, such insurance as is afforded by the policy applies only to the named insured."

Republic contends that this endorsement excluded coverage of the automobile owned by Barish and driven by Steinberg who, as its customer, was permitted to use the same while Barish repaired Steinberg's car, thereby relieving it from liability under the policy; and in any event its policy provides only excess or, at most, pro rata coverage with the American policy. American submits that the endorsement is invalid as against public policy; that by operation of law, all permissive drivers were included in Republic's policy as insureds; that Republic's insurance on the Barish car constituted primary coverage and appellant is liable to the full extent of the judgment.

The issue is twofold—whether Republic's policy covered the Barish car, used with its permission by Steinberg and, if so, to what extent.

[1] Since the accident occurred in 1956, the policies must be viewed in the light of established rules and statutes then in force and effect. Section 415, Vehicle Code, a part of the Financial Responsibility Law, then required that every policy of motor vehicle liability insurance issued pursuant to the law "shall insure the person named therein and any other person using or responsible for the use of said motor vehicle or motor vehicles with the express or implied permission of said assured." As to liability, section 402 provided that "(e)very owner of a motor vehicle is liable and responsible for the death of or injury to person or property resulting from negligence" in its operation "by any person using or operating the same with the permission, express or implied, of such owner * * *".

In 1957, before the amendment of section 415, the Supreme Court decided the case of Wildman v. Government Employees' Ins. Co., 48 Cal.2d 31, 307 P.2d 359, controlling here. Confronted with the contention that the policy excluded coverage when a vehicle owned by the insured was driven by someone else, but with his permission, the court, after discussing public policy as reflected in sections 402 and 415, concluded "* * * that section 415 must be made a part of every policy of insurance issued by an insurer since the public policy of this state is to make owners of motor vehicles financially responsible to those injured by them in the operation of such vehicles. * * * We are of the opinion that for an insurer to issue a policy of insurance which does not cover an accident which occurs when a person, other than the insured, is driving with the permission and consent of the insured is a violation of the public policy of this state as set forth in sections 402 and 415 of the Vehicle Code." 48 Cal.2d 39, 307 P.2d 364.

[2] Republic seeks to avoid the effect of this decision by claiming that it dealt only with an interpretation of the particular insurance policy there under consideration and does not apply to all policies. It is clear from a reading of the opinion that the court extended its ruling to every policy of motor vehicle liability insurance. A similar contention was rejected by the court in Bonfils v. Pacific Auto. Ins. Co., 165 Cal.App.2d 152, 331 P.2d 766, at page 769: "The cited language from the opinion in the Wildman case is directed to 'every policy of insurance issued by an insurer'; this declaration was reiterated therein where the court said: 'Inasmuch as sections 402 and 415 of the Vehicle Code set forth the public policy of this state such laws must be considered a part of every policy of liability insurance even though the policy itself does not specifically make such laws a part thereof'; and again where it is stated: '* * * said sections were intended by the Legislature to be, and are, a part of every policy of motor vehicle liability insurance issued by an insurance carrier authorized to do business in this state.' * * *. Every motor vehicle liability policy of insurance issued in this state, by virtue of law, covers both the owner of the subject automobile and every person using the same with the owner's consent; any omission of an express provision in such a policy resulting in a failure to effect this dual coverage is supplied by implication of law; by the same standard, any provision therein which expressly excludes such coverage, being contrary to public policy, is rendered ineffectual by law."

Republic further argues in support of the validity of Special Endorsement No. 4 that restrictive endorsements excluding coverage have always been recognized, citing numerous authority therefor. It cannot be denied that the right of an insurer to limit its coverage has been repeatedly upheld. Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Constr. Co., 46 Cal.2d 423, at page 432, 296 P.2d 801, at page 806, 57 A.L.R.2d 914, sets forth the general rule: "An insurance company has the right to limit the coverage of a policy issued by it and when it has done so, the plain language of the limitation must be respected."

[3, 4] Recognizing this rule the court in the Wildman case, however, excepted therefrom the restrictive endorsement that contravenes the law or public policy, disapproved any endorsement excluding coverage of a permissive user of an insured's automobile; and rejected, as without merit, the contention that the company had the right in this kind of circumstance to limit its coverage. The court in Bonfils v. Pacific Automobile Ins. Co., 165 Cal. App.2d 152, 331 P.2d 766, 768, was faced with the same argument. Conceding that an insurer has the right to limit its coverage, the court therein stated: "However, any such limitation must conform to the law; if contrary to public policy it is void." It is clear that all restrictive endorsements are subject to the law and public policy and if any coverage restriction contravenes the same, it shall be null and void. In issuing its policy, Republic not only impliedly agreed to conform to the law, but expressly provided that "(s)uch insurance as is afforded by this policy for bodily injury liability or property damage liability shall comply with the provisions of the motor vehicle financial responsibility law * * * which shall be applicable with respect to any such liability arising out of the ownership, maintenance or use during the policy period of any automobile insured hereunder * * *" (Condition 8).

Republic finally contends that its policy was neither a "motor vehicle liability policy" under the Wildman decision or the Financial Responsibility Law, nor so intended by either the insured or insurer. It claims that Special Endorsement No. 4 relates only to the garage operation of Max Barish, Inc., and as to vehicles owned and used by Barish it was solely a general liability policy intended to cover only the operation of an automobile agency and garage in which the ownership of certain vehicles was covered under specifically designated circumstances, and then only incidental to the general liability. Republic denies that the rule in the Wildman case applies to that portion of the policy pertaining to the use of automobiles in connection with the operation of the garage.

[5–7] Republic's policy is entitled "Comprehensive Liability Policy (General-Automobile) Pacific Coast," was issued to Max Barish, Inc., and provides for compliance with the motor vehicle financial responsibility act (Condition 8). Although it provides other coverage, it is obvious that the policy also covers personal injury and property damage "arising out of the ownership, maintenance, or use of any automobile." (Emphasis added.) Insuring Agreement 1(A), (C). Reference to motor vehicle liability runs throughout the terms, conditions and provisions of this policy to such an extent that it would be burdensome to here relate them, and although Republic has attempted to limit its coverage by numerous attached endorsements, it is apparent that it constitutes a motor vehicle liability policy. Republic attempts to make a distinction between the permissive use of a vehicle lent to a friend or member of the insured's family, and the permissive use of a vehicle lent by the garage operation of the insured to a customer thereof, in its claim that the latter was not contemplated under its policy and no premium was paid therefor. Whether the permissive use of the Barish owned automobile is to a family member, a friend, or by way of a loan to a garage customer, is of little import insofar as concerns the protection the public has a right to expect. The Wildman decision did not limit the permissive user to any particular person or class of persons, but applied the rule of protection to all persons driving the insured's car with permission. Said the court at page 37 of 48 Cal.2d, at page 363 of 307 P.2d: "* * * the policy must be construed as extending coverage to persons suffering bodily injury or property damage caused by the vehicle in question when it was being driven by the named insured, or members of their immediate family, and also by someone else driving the vehicle with the consent and permission of the named insured." (Emphasis added.) 48 Cal.2d 31, 307 P.2d 359. Republic contends, however, that its policy does not deprive the public of protection because Steinberg was covered by American's policy and the persons injured were already protected. This argument is met by public policy considerations, the provisions of the automobile Financial Responsibility Law and the basic protection guaranteed thereunder for the benefit of drivers and owners of motor vehicles as well as the public who might suffer injury. Bonfils v. Pacific Auto. Ins. Co., 165 Cal.App.2d 152, 331 P.2d 766; Wildman v. Government Employees' Ins. Co., 48 Cal.2d 31, 307 P.2d 359, supra. The position advanced by Republic, that the rule for the benefit of the public developed in the Wildman case, arose out of a dispute between one injured and the insured and does not apply to a controversy between two insurers, finds no support in the law in this state. Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Constr. Co., 46 Cal.2d 423, 296 P.2d 801, and Oil Base, Inc. v. Transport Indem. Co., 143 Cal.App.2d 453, 299 P.2d 952. Forecasting the rule in the Wildman case, the court in Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Constr. Co., 46 Cal.2d 423, 296 P.2d 801, involving a dispute between two insurance companies, discussed at length the financial responsibility statute, and the protection the public has the right to expect.

[8] Republic's suggestion that it is unfair to extend the coverage because the premium charged Barish did not include any driver other than the insured, we deem to be without merit particularly where the endorsement restricting liability is contrary to the law with which the insurer is bound to comply.

Even though the accident occurred March 27, 1956, before the 1957 amendment to section 415, Republic argues that neither section 415 then in effect, nor the Wildman decision is controlling. It reasons that, although the Supreme Court there held that sections 402 and 415 were "intended by the Legislature to be, and are, a part of every policy of motor vehicle liability insurance," when section 415 was amended in 1957 the legislature expressed its disapproval of the court's holding by amending the definition of "motor vehicle liability policy" to include only policies "certified as provided in section 414"; and that contrary to the Supreme Court's ruling in the Wildman decision, the legislature actually never intended section 415 be read into any policy of liability insurance except those "certified." It is conceded that Republic's policy was not certified. The Supreme Court was explicit in its pronouncement that sections 402 and 415 be read into "every policy" of motor vehicle liability insurance (Wildman v. Government Employees' Ins. Co., 48 Cal.2d 31, 307 P.2d 359; Bonfils v. Pacific Automobile Ins. Co., 165 Cal.App.2d 152, 331 P.2d 766). We cannot construe therein any limitation to certified or any other particular type of motor vehicle liability policy. Since the 1957 amendment is not retroactive, and the policies in question must be construed under the law as it existed on March 27, 1956, we are not constrained to discuss further the tenuous position advanced.

Having concluded Special Endorsement No. 4 to be null and void as contrary to public policy and to the law in force in 1956, and Republic's policy, by operation of law, to extend coverage to the car owned by Barish in the permissive use by Steinberg, we are now concerned with Republic's dual claim that its coverage is excess only, and if not, at most, the loss should be borne by the two carriers on a pro rata basis. It is based primarily on American Auto. Ins. Co. v. Seaboard Surety Co., 155 Cal.App.2d 192, 318 P.2d 84; Peerless Casualty Co. v. Continental Cas. Co., 144 Cal.App.2d 617, 301 P.2d 602, and equitable considerations arising out of the fact that it received no premium from Barish for covering Steinberg's operation of one of its cars, and American did receive consideration for covering Steinberg's use of the car as a "temporary substitute" vehicle.

Both policies contained the same "excess" provision. American's policy issued to Steinberg provided that "insurance under this policy shall be excess insurance over any other valid and collectible insurance, with respect to (1) temporary substitute automobiles under Insuring Agreement IV * * *." Insuring Agreement IV defined a "temporary substitute automobile" as one "not owned by the named insured * * * while temporarily used as a substitute for the described automobile when withdrawn from normal use because of its breakdown, repair, servicing, * * *." Republic's policy on Barish provided that the "insurance under this policy with respect to loss arising out of the maintenance or use of * * * any non-owned automobile shall be excess insurance over any other valid and collectible insurance available to the insured * * *."

[9–11] Obviously, the rights and duties of insurers under their policies in a situation of this kind do not arise out of contract with each other, since there is no contractual agreement between them. Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Constr. Co., 46 Cal.2d 423, 296 P.2d 801; American Auto. Ins. Co. v. Seaboard Surety Co., 155 Cal.App.2d 192, 318 P.2d 84. Their obligations are the result of the express provisions of their respective policies. Insurers, in formulating the provisions of their policies have made every effort to avoid inequities growing out of conflicts where double coverage exists. Realizing insurance companies to be contentious by nature, reasonable constructions of these provisions relating to other insurance covering the same risk have been indulged by our courts with a view to aiding the industry itself in designating and determining liability under various types of coverage and avoid unnecessary litigation. It is clear from the terms of American's policy that the car owned by Barish and driven with its permission by Steinberg as a "temporary substitute automobile" fell squarely within its "excess" provision. The car became a "not-owned" vehicle as to Steinberg and accordingly, American's coverage thereon became excess over and above any "other valid and collectible insurance." Having already concluded that by operation of law Republic's policy included the automobile owned by Barish and used by Steinberg, its coverage thereof could not be included within the "excess" provision of Republic's policy because it covers Barish only in the permissive use of an automobile "non-owned" by it. The "excess" provision in Republic's policy obviously does not cover a vehicle owned by Barish and permissively used by another. Therefore, it is apparent that Republic's coverage of the Barish automobile driven by Steinberg constitutes primary insurance.

We are not here confronted with the problem arising out of a conflict between primary insurers as to whose coverage comes first when each, in order to escape liability under the primary coverage it originally issued, seeks to take advantage of an escape clause dependent upon the existence of another policy. By the very terms of American's policy, its coverage on the non-owned automobile used by Steinberg was originally issued as excess insurance, with the proviso that its coverage becomes primary in the event there is no other insurance covering the vehicle. Since by its terms the excess provision in Republic's policy is limited to "non-owned" vehicles used by Barish, the provision is not here effective. Therefore, if Republic is to avoid liability on its primary coverage, it must resort to the fortuitous existence of another policy, which it cannot do because American's coverage originally issued as excess does not go into effect and become "other valid and collectible insurance" until Republic's primary insurance is exhausted.

[12] That Republic's coverage of the car is primary, and American's coverage of its use is excess, is borne out by authority in this state, as well as in other jurisdictions, that as between insurers, in the common situation in which the insured is driving a vehicle he does not own, it is the coverage on the car that is primary and the coverage on the driver that is excess. The leading case in California, Pleasant Valley Lima Bean Growers and Warehouse Ass'n, v. Cal-Farm Ins. Co., 142 Cal.App. 2d 126, 298 P.2d 109, represents a declaratory relief action brought by an insured to determine obligations between two insurers. One Nungary, injured while unloading a truck in a warehouse, sued the warehouse operator, Pleasant Valley Lima Bean Growers & Warehouse Association, and its employee, Croker, for damages. Cal-Farm had insured Brucker, the truck owner. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company issued a policy to Pleasant Valley. The court held that Pleasant Valley and Croker were also covered under the Cal-Farm policy as additional insureds; that Cal-Farm had a primary obligation to defend and pay any judgment in the Nungaray damage action and that United's policy on Pleasant Valley provided only excess coverage in view of the clause making it such with respect to the use of a non-owned automobile. Said the court at page 136, of 142 Cal.App.2d, at page 115 of 298 P.2d: "Turning to the policies of insurance themselves, we find that both contain 'other insurance' clauses. United's 'other insurance' clause provides that its liability shall be proportionate to other valid and collectible insurance, save that in the case of loss arising out of the use of a non-owned automobile, its insurance shall be excess insurance only. As the truck involved in the accident was not owned by Pleasant Valley, United's insured, United's policy is excess insurance as to Pleasant Valley, and Cal-Farm's duty to defend Pleasant Valley and pay judgment in the Nungaray action is primary to the obligation of United. * * * Also, since United's coverage of Pleasant Valley is excess with respect to non-owned vehicles, there is no basis for apportionment with Cal-Farm's coverage of Pleasant Valley."

The court in the Pleasant Valley case recognized the distinction between the conflict created by two companies providing primary coverage in which each seeks to withdraw because of other insurance, and the conflict arising out of two policies, one contemplating primary coverage on the car and the other excess on the driver, by rejecting Air Transport Mfg. Co. v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp., 91 Cal. App.2d 129, 204 P.2d 647, as "readily distinguishable" on its facts. The Air Transport case cited by Republic, but not applicable to the case at bar for those reasons, involved a policy that did not contain an excess clause which was rendered operative when its assured became involved in a loss arising out of a non-owned automobile, but did contain an escape clause by which the vehicle owner's insurer sought to entirely avoid liability when other insurance was in force. This case was also rejected by the court on the same theory, in a case similar to the instant one in a 1952 California decision, in Norris v. Pacific Indem. Co., Cal., 237 P.2d 666. Although this decision is not now the law because it was superseded by one of the Supreme Court on other grounds (Norris v. Pacific Indem. Co., 39 Cal.2d 420, 247 P.2d 1), it serves to point up the distinction the court there also recognized.

The rule in the Pleasant Valley case exists with equal force as settled law in other jurisdictions. Noteworthy is the Fifth Circuit decision in General Insurance Co. v. Western Fire & Casualty Co., 5 Cir., 241

F.2d 289. Western insured the car owner, General insured the driver, Mrs. Cutshall. The court held that Western's coverage on the car was primary, liable to the full extent of the limitation of its policy, and General's coverage on the driver was excess. Said the court at page 295: "With Western's policy effective, it is conceded that it was available to Lola Jones Cutshall as an additional assured. This automatically brought into play the provision in General's policy * * * which prescribed that the drive-other-car extension agreement * * * 'shall be excess insurance over any other valid and collectible insurance available to the insured, either as an insured under a policy applicable with respect to said automobile or otherwise.' The effect of this is that Mrs. Cutshall did not have insurance with respect to other vehicles driven by her until she had reasonably exhausted coverage available to her elsewhere * * * It is only when Western's policy has been exhausted that General becomes liable for the excess, and until that point is reached, Mrs. Cutshall, as named or additional assured, has no claim which she can assert."

Identical facts and policies were involved in Hardware Cas. Co. v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co., Sup., 129 N.Y.S.2d 304, in which a customer of a garage used a car owned by it while his own was being repaired. The court held that the garage's policy insuring the car was primary coverage and that issued to the driver using a non-owned vehicle was excess only. Other cases upholding the excess provision as to non-owned vehicles include Farm Bureau Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., D.C., 78 F.Supp. 561; Benroth v. Continental Casualty Company, D.C., 132 F.Supp. 270; American Surety Co. of New York v. American Indemnity Co., 8 N.J.Super. 343, 72 A.2d 798; American Motorist Ins. Co. v. Weir, 132 Conn. 557, 46 A.2d 7; Manufacturers Cas. Ins. Co. v. Great American Ind. Co., D.C., 91 F. Supp. 18; Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. De Maison, D.C., 114 F.Supp. 106; United Services Automobile Association v. Russom, 5 Cir., 241 F.2d 296; Travelers Indemnity Co. v. State Automobile Ins. Co., 67 Ohio App. 457, 37 N.E.2d 198; Allstate Insurance Co. v. Urban, 15 Ill.App. 2d 386, 146 N.E.2d 387.

Our attention has been directed to Oregon Auto. Ins. Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guar. Co., 9 Cir., 195 F.2d 958, which appears to be contrary to the established line of Federal decisions. However, a careful reading thereof will disclose that nowhere in that opinion was any distinction made between a situation in which primary insurance is originally issued and then an attempt is made to withdraw the same to render it excess because other coverage exists, and the situation in which excess coverage is issued in the first instance, which becomes primary only if no other insurance exists. Perhaps with this distinction in mind, the California court in Peerless Cas. Co. v. Continental Cas. Co., 144 Cal.App.2d 617, at page 623, 301 P.2d 602, at page 607, recognized that as among the authorities the Oregon decision "stands alone." The Peerless case, relied upon by Republic for the proposition that it is doubtful an excess provision can be effective unless the primary coverage is designated, actually was concerned only with precedence between two primary insurers. There was an escape clause in one policy and a pro rata clause in another. The court held that the escape clause was ineffective and prorated the policies.

Having found under American's "excess" provision that it is liable only for that amount "over any other valid and collectible insurance" with respect to a "temporary substitute automobile," it follows under the authorities cited that until Republic's coverage on the Barish car is exhausted, American's insurance does not go into effect. Since the "excess" provision in Republic's policy is here inapplicable, and since its coverage of the Barish car is primary and no other insurance against the loss exists until Republic's coverage is exhausted, the pro rata clause in the Republic policy is of no effect.

Both policies contain identical pro rata clauses in connection with "other insurance": "If the insured has other insurance against a loss covered by this policy the company shall not be liable under this policy for a greater proportion of such loss than the applicable limit of liability stated in the declarations bears to the total applicable limit of liability of all valid and collectible insurance * * *."

On alleged equitable considerations and the authority of American Auto. Ins. Co. v. Seaboard Surety Co., 155 Cal.App.2d 192, 318 P.2d 84, Republic claims a proration of the loss with American. The Seaboard Surety Company case does not involve motor vehicle liability insurance or a non-owned car on which excess coverage was originally issued. It is clearly distinguishable on its facts as involving a conflict between two primary policies. Of particular interest therein is the court's reliance upon Air Transport Mfg. Co. v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp., 91 Cal.App.2d 129, 204 P.2d 647, and Peerless Casualty Co. v. Continental Cas. Co., 144 Cal.App.2d 617, 301 P.2d 602, cases involving primary policies. Furthermore, it involved subrogation rights and not a rule governing the rights between insurers who are not trying to subrogate but to determine their respective liabilities.

Our courts have clearly recognized the confusion proration under the kind of policies involved in the case at bar would bring to the insurance industry. In Norris v. Pacific Indemnity Co., Cal., 237 P.2d 666, although no longer controlling, the court acknowledged that a pro rata contribution should be ordered only in the event there are two or more primary carriers. The court in Pleasant Valley Lima Bean Growers and Warehouse Ass'n v. Cal-Farm Ins. Co., 142 Cal.App.2d 126, 298 P.2d 109, supra, pointed up the situation between two insurers in which one issued primary coverage on the automobile, and the other excess on the driver and said, 142 Cal.App.2d at page 136, 298 P.2d at page 115. "Also, since United's coverage of Pleasant Valley is excess with respect to non-owned vehicles, there is no basis for apportionment with Cal-Farm's coverage of Pleasant Valley."

Since Max Barish, Inc., was the owner of the accident car, which under American's policy constituted a "temporary substitute" vehicle as to Steinberg, and originally subject to excess coverage; and under Republic's policy the car was originally covered by "valid and collectible" primary insurance, American, by virtue of its "excess" provision became responsible only for that amount over and above Republic's coverage which herein amounts to nothing since the judgment was limited to $5,000.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 17889, 17928.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 21, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 18, 1959.

Divorce action by husband. The wife cross-complained. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Clarence W. Morris, J., entered order setting aside prior order denying husband's motion for entry of final decree, and wife appealed therefrom and from entry of final decree. The husband appealed from order entered by Orla St. Clair, J., awarding the wife costs on her appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that where trial court's order denying husband's request to enter final divorce decree was based on trial court's finding that husband and wife had become reconciled and such finding was supported by the evidence, trial court could not enter a contrary order the next day, based merely on his declaration that he had signed a formal order inadvertently; and also held that wife was entitled to costs and attorney's fees even if property settlement agreement contained a waiver of right to costs and fees, since by her appeals she was challenging continued existence of agreement and waiver.

Order in respect to costs affirmed and orders in respect to entry of final decree reversed.

1. Divorce ⇐156

If motion to enter final divorce decree is not contested, and if it does not appear that any acts of parties during period of interlocutory decree have occurred to change relationship or status of parties, entry of final decree is a mere "ministerial act" by the court; but where it appears that during the period of the interlocutory decree events have occurred that may have changed status or relationship of parties, such as condonation and resumption of marital relations, entry of final decree becomes "judicial act", and in such event court must judicially determine whether or not parties have become reconciled or whether prevailing party in divorce proceeding has condoned the acts forming the basis of the divorce, and if a reconciliation is found by the court, it must deny the entry of the final decree. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 132; West's Ann.Superior Court Rules, rule 20.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Judicial Act" and "Ministerial Act".

2. Divorce ⇐156

A "reconciliation", within rule that final divorce decree will not be entered if there has not been a reconciliation since entry of interlocutory decree, occurs when the circumstances show that the parties intended to reunite as husband and wife and when there has been an unconditional forgiveness by the prevailing party; isolated acts of intercourse do not necessarily establish a reconciliation; if, in fact, a reconciliation has occurred during the one-year period following interlocutory decree, the duration of the reconciliation is of no consequence, nor is it relevant that the parties again split up. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 132.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Reconciliation".

3. Divorce ⇐156

In determining whether there has been such a reconciliation since entry of interlocutory divorce decree as will prevent entry of final decree, "cohabitation" means "sexual intercourse" and also means living together in the same abode. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 132.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Cohabitation" and "Sexual Intercourse".

4. Divorce ⇐156

On motion to enter final divorce decree, the real question the trial court must determine is whether or not the parties have become reconciled since the entry of the interlocutory decree, and on this question the fact that they have engaged in sexual intercourse is evidence of a reconciliation but is not conclusive evidence of that fact. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 132.

5. Divorce ⇐184(10)

On motion to enter final divorce decree, the trial court's determination as to whether or not a reconciliation has occurred, if the evidence or inferences thereon are conflicting, is binding on the appellate court.

6. Divorce ⇐156

Where trial court's order denying husband's request to enter final divorce decree was based on trial court's finding that husband and wife had become reconciled and such finding was supported by the evidence, trial court could not enter a contrary order the next day, based merely on his declaration that he had signed the first order inadvertently. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 132; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

7. Judgment ⇐304, 306

The trial court has the power to correct misprision in its decrees, or other clerical errors, but not judicial errors; this power exists not only under the statute but also independent of the statute. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

8. Divorce ⇐182

Where trial court's order granted motion for entry of final divorce decree and wife applied to appellate court for writ of supersedeas and secured temporary stay enjoining enforcement of order and wife appealed from order, stay order did not prevent trial court from entertaining wife's motion for costs and attorney's fees, notwithstanding that stay order restrained trial court from "any further proceedings," since stay order was not intended to restrain proceedings that were in no way connected with entry of final decree.

9. Divorce ⇐182, 194

Where interlocutory divorce decree incorporated property settlement agreement, trial court first denied husband's motion for final divorce decree on ground that there had been a reconciliation and then granted husband's motion for final decree and wife appealed, she was entitled to costs and attorney's fees on appeal even if property settlement agreement contained a waiver of right to costs and fees, since by her appeal she was challenging continued existence of agreement and waiver.

10. Divorce ⇐182, 188, 200

The trial court, in a divorce proceeding, normally has the power to grant costs and fees and this power continues during pendency of an appeal. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 137.

11. Husband and Wife ⇐278(1)

The wife may, in a settlement agreement, waive future right to costs and fees in divorce action.

12. Divorce ⇐188, 225

If a proper waiver has been made the trial court is without legal authority to make an award of costs and fees in divorce action.

13. Divorce ⇐189, 226

Where wife, in support of her motion for costs and fees on appeal in divorce action, averred her inability to pay and ability of husband to pay and at hearing counsel for wife stated to the court that wife was earning $266 a month and had two children by a prior marriage to support, and that husband was earning in excess of $1,000 a month and husband elected not to produce any evidence on the issue, it was proper to award costs and fees to wife based upon the showing made in the affidavits alone.

14. Divorce ⇐188, 226

The usual practice is to award wife costs and attorney's fees on appeal in divorce action after a hearing, and such fees can only be awarded after the contesting husband has had an opportunity to be heard.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

These consolidated appeals grow out of a divorce proceeding. The wife appeals from an order setting aside a prior order of the court denying a motion of the husband for the entry of a final decree, and from the entry of the final decree (No. 17,928). The husband appeals from an order awarding the wife costs on her appeals (No. 17,889).

The parties were married on November 27, 1954. They separated five or six months later. The husband brought an action for divorce. The wife cross-complained. With the consent of the husband, the matter was submitted on the cross-complaint of the wife. On November 30, 1955, an interlocutory decree was entered in favor of the wife, which decree also incorporated a property settlement agreement. On November 29, 1956, the husband filed a notice of motion for entry of the final decree. The supporting affidavit of the husband averred that there had been no reconciliation between the parties and that since the interlocutory the "parties have not lived or cohabited together." This contested motion came before the trial court for hearing on December 5, 1956. The husband testified that he was an architect, with offices in Sacramento and San Francisco; that he lived in Sacramento; that his wife lived in Palo Alto; that since the entry of the interlocutory there had been no "reconciliation," nor had the parties "cohabited." On cross-examination he admitted that during the period of the interlocutory he had spent many week ends with his wife, and that on these occasions he had either stayed at a motel alone, gone back to his home in Sacramento to sleep, or sometimes spent the night or nights at his wife's house in Palo Alto. He denied sharing her bedroom, but conceded that on these occasions he had had sexual intercourse with her, finally admitting that this had occurred at least 20 times. The wife testified that after the interlocutory her husband visited her in Palo Alto every week end; that on these occasions he shared her bedroom; that they had intercourse on every visit; that during these visits they discussed going back to live together; that it was her understanding that they had become reconciled, and that she was to join him in Sacramento as soon as he could arrange things there. She further testified that she had unconditionally forgiven him for the cruelty which was the basis of the interlocutory.

The trial judge made several relevant comments about this testimony. While the wife was being cross-examined, the judge stated: "The Court: I have heard enough about it. I can't reconcile the testimony of the plaintiff here. His affidavit says that he never cohabited during the period, which, of course, is deliberate perjury. He admitted he's had intercourse with her about once a week ever since the granting of the interlocutory decree of divorce. And certainly that conduct, this Court views as being a tacit understanding of a reconciliation. At this time I will grant the motion to set aside the interlocutory decree of divorce."

When it was called to his attention that no motion to set aside the interlocutory had been made, the judge then told the attorney for the wife: "The Court: You are to prepare an order and see that it is filed, denying this man the right to secure a final decree of divorce. Then I would suggest you prepare a motion to set aside the interlocutory decree of divorce."

When the attorney for the husband asked if he could complete the cross-examination of the wife, the judge stated: "The Court: No, I have heard enough. * * * His testimony, and hers, is that they have cohabited on an average of once a week since the interlocutory decree of divorce, and nothing else—no conversations about reconciliation, or anything else; this court is of the opinion and so finds that in itself—his actions, he being the plaintiff in the original action—his actions and hers certainly indicate to this Court the proper finding [is] that there has been a reconciliation, by their conduct, and I therefore say that he is not entitled to a final decree of divorce. And when, as and if this motion is made to set aside the interlocutory, I will grant that motion, too."

On December 10, 1956, the wife, pursuant to the directions of the trial judge, noticed a motion for December 18, 1956, for an order to set aside the interlocutory and the property settlement. In the meantime, the wife's counsel, pursuant to the directions of the trial judge and in precise accordance with the finding ordered by the trial judge at the hearing on December 5, 1956, prepared findings, conclusions and an order denying the husband's motion for entry of the final decree. These documents were signed and filed on December 17, 1956.

On the next day, December 18, 1956, the motion to set aside the interlocutory and the property settlement came on for hearing before the same judge. When informed of the nature of the motion the judge expressed the thought that he had no power to set aside the interlocutory and property settlement because they were over a year old. Counsel for the wife called the judge's attention to the fact that he had directed her to file the motion, but the judge repeated that he had no power to grant such a motion. Then the following occurred: "The Court: I denied the fact that he was entitled to a final decree of divorce at that time, but I can't see any reason now why he shouldn't have it. Mrs. Axelrod: If he was not entitled to it a week ago, your Honor, why is he entitled to it now? The Court: Because he is entitled to it, period. You may take your final decree. Mrs. Axelrod: Your Honor, there is no motion; we are not prepared to argue it. The Court: There is no argument necessary. I have said he may have his final decree. Mrs. Axelrod: We have had no notice of it. The Court: You are not entitled to notice. Mr. Lange: We have an affidavit on file, your Honor. The Court: That is sufficient for me."

On that same day, December 18, 1956, an "order" was entered in the minutes stating that the motion for a final decree had been granted. On the following day the wife petitioned the other division of this court for a writ of supersedeas and for a temporary stay to restrain the trial court from enforcing or entering that minute order. A temporary stay was granted restraining the court below from any action on the order. The wife also appealed from the order of December 18, 1956. The husband moved to dismiss that appeal on the ground that it was nonappealable. On February 13, 1957, the other division of this court vacated the stay order, denied the petition for supersedeas, and dismissed the appeal from the order.

While these matters were pending in the appellate court, and on January 31, 1957, the wife noticed a motion for costs and attorney's fees on the appeal then pending. Affidavits by both parties were filed and the motion was heard on February 6, 1957, by a different trial judge than had heard the proceedings of December 5th and 18th, 1956. At this hearing the trial judge was informed about the prior proceedings in the case, but no testimony was formally taken. The wife's counsel informed the court that her client was making $266 a month in take-home pay, while the husband was making over $1,000 a month. A memorandum of argument was filed by each party, and, on March 18, 1957, a minute book entry was made granting the wife's motion and allowing her $100 costs and $500 attorney's fees. Appeal No. 17,889, by the husband, is from this order.

In the meantime, after the entry of the orders of the other division of this court on February 13, 1957, on February 25, 1957, the judge who had directed the final decree to be granted entered his order "setting aside order denying motion for entry of final decree of divorce, and for entry of final judgment of divorce nunc pro tunc [December 19, 1956]." A final decree of divorce, nunc pro tunc as of December 19, 1956, was entered on this same day. The wife's appeals (No. 17,928) are from those orders.

Turning first to the wife's appeals, there are certain general principles that should be mentioned.

[1] Under the provisions of section 132 of the Civil Code the trial court, twelve months after the entry of an interlocutory decree of divorce, may enter a final decree, either on the motion of one of the parties or on its own motion. Rule 20 of the Rules for Superior Courts requires that the moving party must file an affidavit averring, among other things, that since the interlocutory, the parties "have not become reconciled," and "have not lived or cohabited together." See also Angell v. Angell, 84 Cal.App.2d 339, 191 P.2d 54. If the motion to enter the final is not contested, and if it does not appear that any acts of the parties during the period of the interlocutory have occurred to change the relationship or status of the parties, the entry of the final decree is a mere ministerial act by the court. But where it is made to appear to the trial court that during the interlocutory events have occurred that may have changed the status or relationship of the parties, such as a condonation and a resumption of marital relations, the entry of the final decree becomes a judicial act. Lane v. Superior Court of Fresno County, 104 Cal.App. 340, 285 P. 860. In such event the court must judicially determine whether or not the parties have become reconciled, or whether the prevailing party in the divorce proceeding has condoned the acts forming the basis of the divorce. If a reconciliation is found by the court, it must deny the entry of the final decree.

[2] A reconciliation occurs when the circumstances show that the parties intended to re-unite as husband and wife (In re Estate of Abila, 32 Cal.2d 559, 197 P.2d 10; Nemer v. Nemer, 117 Cal.App.2d 35, 254 P.2d 661), and when there has been an unconditional forgiveness by the prevailing party. Angell v. Angell, 84 Cal. App.2d 339, 191 P.2d 54. Isolated acts of intercourse do not necessarily establish a reconciliation. Helbush v. Helbush, 209 Cal. 758, 290 P. 18. If, in fact, a reconciliation has occurred during the one-year period, the duration of the reconciliation is of no consequence, nor is it relevant that the parties again split up. In such a case neither is entitled to the final decree. Chester v. Chester, 76 Cal.App.2d 265, 172 P.2d 924; Lane v. Superior Court, 104 Cal. App. 340, 285 P. 860.

[3–5] At the December 5, 1956, hearing there was a discussion between the parties and the court as to whether "sexual intercourse" was synonymous with "cohabitation." That is one of the judicially recognized definitions of the term, but the term can also mean living together in the same abode. Garibaldi v. Garibaldi, 153 Cal.App.2d 170, 314 P.2d 89. The real question the trial court must determine on a motion to enter the final decree is whether or not the parties have become reconciled, since the entry of the interlocutory. On this question, the fact they have engaged in sexual intercourse is evidence of a reconciliation, but not conclusive evidence of that fact. The determination of the trial court as to whether or not a reconciliation has occurred, if the evidence or the inferences thereon are conflicting, is binding on the appellate court. Nemer v. Nemer, 117 Cal.App.2d 35, 254 P.2d 661; Ruggles v. Bailey, 15 Cal.App.2d 555, 59 P.2d 837; Slusher v. Slusher, 85 Cal.App. 2d 626, 193 P.2d 778; Small v. Small, 123 Cal.App.2d 870, 268 P.2d 63.

[6] In the instant case the evidence was, at least in part, conflicting. The wife testified that the parties had become reconciled and that she had unconditionally forgiven her husband. The husband, while admitting numerous acts of intercourse, denied that there had been a reconciliation. Thus, there certainly is evidence to support the order of December 17, 1956, denying the request to enter the final decree, and probably evidence to support the order of December 18, 1956, granting that request. The basic question presented on the appeals of the wife is whether or not the trial judge had the legal right to change his formal order of December 17, 1956, by simply declaring in his later order that the prior order had been signed "inadvertently."

[7] The rule applicable to this problem is easy to state but most difficult to apply. The rule is that the trial court has the power to correct misprisions in its decrees, or other clerical errors. This power exists not only under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but also independent of that statute. Meyer v. Porath, 113 Cal.

App.2d 808, 248 P.2d 984; In re Estate of Goldberg, 10 Cal.2d 709, 76 P.2d 508. But this power to change or modify its decrees extends only to clerical errors and does not empower the court to thus correct judicial errors. (See cases collected 29 Cal.Jur.2d § 99, p. 13.) The problem of whether a particular error is "clerical" or "judicial" is a somewhat difficult one. In Morgan v. State Bd. of Equalization, 89 Cal.App.2d 674, 682, 201 P.2d 859, 864, this court discussed the problem as follows: "From these cases, it appears that the rules to be followed in determining whether an error is clerical or judicial so that the court may have the power to correct it by amendment, are as follows: (1) No serious problem is involved where the correction is to include a matter inadvertently omitted, such as the grounds for granting a new trial, or where the error is plainly clerical. (2) The serious problem arises where the amendment is substantially different from the original order or substantially changes the rights of the parties. In such cases, if the court is purporting to correct a clerical error, it should say so, or there should be something in the record to show it. (3) Where there is conflicting evidence as to whether the error was clerical, the reviewing court will, probably accept the conclusion of the trial court. Bastajian v. Brown, supra, 19 Cal.2d 209, 120 P.2d 9. If the record shows clearly that there was no clerical error, the recital by the trial court will not be conclusive. In re Estate of Burnett, supra, 11 Cal.2d 259, 79 P.2d 89." See also Nathanson v. Murphy, 147 Cal.App.2d 462, 305 P.2d 710.

One of the leading cases on this subject is Bastajian v. Brown, 19 Cal.2d 209, 120 P.2d 9. There the court was presented with the problem of whether the trial judge had the power to vacate an order which had been originally entered, and enter a different order. The court upheld the vacation there involved on the grounds that the declaration by the trial court that the order originally entered did not conform to the judgment of the court, was supported by other evidence in the record. The court stated (19 Cal.2d at page 215, 120 P.2d at page 12): "The trial court's finding upon conflicting evidence that a clerical error exists, and the nature thereof, is conclusive upon this court." The weight thus to be given the trial court's declaration of inadvertence was emphasized in the Nathanson case (147 Cal.App.2d at page 469, 305 P.2d at page 714). See also Makovsky v. Makovsky, 158 Cal.App.2d 738, 743, 323 P.2d 562. However, in both the Nathanson and Bastajian cases there was evidence supporting the trial court's declaration independent of the declaration found in the opinion. In the Nathanson case, 147 Cal.App.2d at page 470, 305 P.2d at page 715, it is said: "But in the instant case we are not dependent solely upon the statement of the trial judge that it was his intent not to allow interest. The judge's statement and the testimony of the reporter, reasonably interpreted, are to the effect that the judge not only had such intent, but expressed it at the hearing on March 26, 1953."*

In the present case, the trial judge declared in its later order that the December 17, 1956, order had been entered inadvertently. There is nothing in the record to support the finding of inadvertence except the declaration itself. The balance of the record demonstrates that at the December 5, 1956, hearing the trial judge was unequivocally of the opinion that the final decree should not be entered. At that time, the trial judge directed counsel for the wife to file a motion to set the interlocutory aside, and expressly made and directed the entry of a finding to the effect that the parties had become reconciled. That finding is supported by the evidence. The order of December 17, 1956, was in precise accord with the directions of the trial court made on December 5, 1956. Of course, the trial judge had the legal right and power to change his mind before the entry of the order, and to reweigh the evidence. But the only "evidence" that the trial judge did so is his declaration in his order that the December 17, 1956, order had been entered "inadvertently." When this change of mind occurred does not appear. The record shows that on December 5, 1956, the trial judge believed and declared and found that the final decree should not be entered because the parties had become reconciled. The December 17, 1956, order so provided. There is nothing in the record to show the state of mind of the trial judge on December 17, 1956, except the order itself. There is certainly nothing in the record to show that a change of mind had occurred on or prior to December 17, 1956. We do know that by December 18, 1956, the trial judge had changed his mind. Now he believed the motion to enter the final decree should be granted. On that date he no longer believed that the husband had committed perjury in his affidavit by declaring that the parties had not become reconciled. He no longer believed that the numerous acts of intercourse constituted evidence of reconciliation. He now believed, and so declared, that the parties had not become reconciled. When did this change of mind occur? We do not know. We do know the state of the court's mind on December 5, 1956. We know that the order of December 17, 1956, correctly reflected that state of mind. Prior to December 18, 1956, the trial judge gave no indication that he had changed his mind. On December 18, 1956, he had changed his mind and declared that the order of December 17, 1956, had been entered "inadvertently." There can be no doubt at all that, if the December 17, 1956, order correctly reflected the trial judge's views, and that later the trial judge changed his mind on how the evidence should be evaluated, this would be an attempt to correct a judicial error and was not the correction of a mere clerical one. Egan v. Egan, 90 Cal. 15, 27 P. 22; Stevens v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 110, 59 P.2d 988; Maxwell v. Perkins, 116 Cal.App.2d 752, 255 P.2d 10. On the other hand, if prior to December 17, 1956, the trial judge had re-evaluated the evidence and had come to the conclusion that no reconciliation had occurred, as he had the legal right to do, then the December 17, 1956, order was entered "inadvertently" and the correction of December 18, 1956, was the correction of a clerical error. Carter v. Shinsako, 42 Cal.App.2d 9, 108 P.2d 27. Thus the question narrows down to this. A hearing is had. At that hearing the trial judge not only indicates how he has weighed the evidence, but expressly makes a finding on the vital issue and makes his ruling. The formal order reflecting those views is entered. Then, on the next day, the judge enters a contrary order, declaring that the earlier order had been entered inadvertently. There is nothing in the record to support this declaration of inadvertence except the declaration of the court itself. Everything else in the record points to the fact that the December 17, 1956, order correctly reflected the then views of the trial court. Can the judge, by merely declaring that a prior ruling was entered inadvertently, set that ruling aside and enter a different ruling? Will the appellate court, based on such a declaration alone conclusively presume that the change in mind occurred prior to the entry of the first order? We think not. The sanctity of judicial pronouncements cannot be made to depend on such insecure foundations. Once made, a judicial pronouncement cannot be set aside except as provided by law. Certainly it cannot be set aside by the judge who pronounced it simply changing his mind on the law or the facts. If a prior judgment or order is to be set aside there must be something more in the record to support the order than the mere declaration of the trial judge that the prior order was entered inadvertently. The court had no legal power to correct a judicial error in this fashion. The judge had no legal power to change his mind on the proper interpretation of the evidence after he had made a judicial ruling on that question. In our opinion, before a formal ruling can be set aside and a contrary ruling made on the ground of inadvertence, there must appear in the record something to support the finding of inadvertence other than the declaration of the court to this effect. The record here discloses no such showing. We are of the opinion that the trial court was attempting to correct in this fashion a judicial ruling and not trying to correct a mere clerical error. This it had no power to do. The orders appealed from must be reversed.

[8] We turn now to a consideration of the husband's appeal. To understand his contentions several dates must be emphasized:

December 18, 1956—the trial judge enters an order to the effect that the motion for the entry of the final decree should be granted.

December 19, 1956—the wife applies to the appellate court for a writ of supersedeas and secures a temporary stay restraining the enforcement of the order. The wife also appealed from the order of December 18, 1956.

January 31, 1957—the wife noticed a motion for costs and attorney's fees on that appeal.

February 6, 1957—motion heard by court.

February 13, 1957—the appellate court denied supersedeas, dissolved the stay order, and dismissed the appeal.

February 25, 1957—orders entered from which the wife has successfully appealed.

February 27, 1957—wife files notice of appeal from those orders.

March 18, 1957—court enters order allowing costs on appeal.

The husband contends that the court had no authority to entertain the motion for costs and fees, even though the appeal was then pending, because of the stay order issued on December 19, 1956, in connection with the petition for a writ of supersedeas. That stay order provided: "It Is Hereby Ordered that the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the Clerk of said Court desist and refrain from taking any further proceedings therein and from enforcing or attempting to enforce or enter said order, and that all proceedings of said Superior Court on said order be and the same are hereby stayed until further order of this Court * * *"

This stay remained in effect until February 13, 1957, when it was vacated. The wife filed her motion for costs and fees on January 31, 1957, and the motion was heard on February 6, 1957. On those dates the stay order was still in effect. It is the theory of the husband that the stay order restrained the trial court from taking any action in the proceeding relating to the application for the final decree, and therefore it had no power to entertain the motion for costs and fees.

The problem thus presented depends, obviously, upon the proper interpretation of the stay order. Properly interpreted we do not think that the stay order prohibited any and all action by the trial court in connection with the proceeding. It was issued in connection with an application for supersedeas which was aimed at preventing the entry of the final decree. In our opinion that is what the stay order restrains. It is true that the stay order states that it restrains the trial court from "any further proceedings" in the matter, but that language must be read in the light of the balance of the order which relates only to the entry of the final judgment. We cannot assume that the appellate court, by its stay order, was intending to restrain proceedings that were in no way connected with the entry of the final decree. We cannot assume that the appellate court, to protect its jurisdiction while it considered that application, intended to do anything more than restrain action that might affect that jurisdiction. Obviously, there was no necessity in order to protect its jurisdiction for the appellate court to restrain a purely collateral proceeding such as a motion for costs and fees. We think that it did not do so.

[9] The husband next contends that, by the terms of the property settlement agreement incorporated into the interlocutory decree, the wife waived her rights to costs and fees on appeal.

[10–12] Of course, the trial court, in a divorce proceeding, normally has the power to grant costs and fees, this power continuing during the pendency of an appeal. § 137, Civ.Code; McCahan v. McCahan, 47 Cal.App. 173, 190 P. 458. It is equally well settled, however, that the wife may, in a settlement agreement, waive her future right to costs and fees. Fox v. Fox, 42 Cal.2d 49, 265 P.2d 881; Viera v. Viera, 107 Cal.App.2d 181, 236 P.2d 632; Spreckels v. Spreckels, 111 Cal.App.2d 529, 244 P.2d 917. If a proper waiver has been made the trial court is without legal authority to make an award of costs and fees. Patton v. Patton, 32 Cal.2d 520, 196 P.2d 909; Grolla v. Grolla, 151 Cal.App.2d 253, 311 P.2d 547.

The husband contends that in the property settlement here involved the wife waived her right to such costs and fees. In this respect the husband relies on several provisions of the agreement, the strongest in his favor being Paragraph IV, which reads as follows: "Second party shall pay to First Party the sum of $600.00 at the rate of $100.00 per month commencing November 22, 1955, in full settlement and satisfaction of her rights in and to any property that is now or may hereinafter be claimed to be community property and in full satisfaction of her past, present and future rights to alimony, support or maintenance, it being understood that such payment, is intended to forever settle and adjust the property rights and financial obligations of each of the parties hereto with each other in all respects."

While this provision, in our opinion, does not amount to a clearcut waiver of costs and fees on appeal, the wife concedes that, for the purposes of this appeal, if the property settlement is legally effective, the trial court had no power to award costs and fees on appeal. It is her theory that the evidence shows a reconciliation, and that such reconciliation normally effects a rescission of the property settlement agreement. Lamb v. Lamb, 131 Cal.App.2d 489, 280 P.2d 793; Harrold v. Harrold, 100 Cal. App.2d 601, 224 P.2d 66; Lloyd Corporation, Limited v. Industrial Accident Commission, 61 Cal.App.2d 275, 142 P.2d 754.

Assuming that the property settlement agreement was a waiver of the right to costs and fees, as the wife concedes (although we are not certain it is), the question then remains whether, under the facts here involved, the wife was entitled to such an award. It must be remembered that, according to the order of December 17, 1956, the husband had been denied the right to a final decree because there had been a reconciliation. If there was a reconciliation the property settlement including, of course, the waiver, was set aside. The trial court on December 18, 1956, ordered the final decree to be entered. The wife appealed, and, as we have already held in this opinion, the appeal is meritorious. But regardless of the merits of that appeal, it is obvious that whether the property settlement is still effective (and therefore whether the claimed waiver is effective) depends upon which order of the trial court is held to be effective. The wife is challenging one of the orders, contending that because of the reconciliation, the property settlement, and therefore the waiver, is no longer effective. When the wife in good faith challenges the continued existence of the property settlement, or its validity, regardless of whether she is right or wrong, where she is unable to finance the appeal, she must have suit money to prosecute the appeal or she will lose her right to challenge the continued existence of the agreement.

The problem is essentially similar to the one presented in Locke Paddon v. Locke Paddon, 194 Cal. 73, 227 P. 715. There the wife brought an action to set aside a property settlement agreement on the ground of fraud. In the property settlement she had waived her right to costs and fees. She was held entitled to costs and fees on appeal in spite of such waiver, because she was, in good faith, challenging the continued existence of the agreement and waiver. That is precisely what is being done in the present case, and for similar reasons it should be held that the award of such costs and fees was proper. See also Vishner v. Vishner, 125 Cal.App.2d 667, 271 P.2d 68.

[13, 14] It is also urged by the husband that the evidence does not support the challenged award. This contention is without merit. The wife's affidavit in support of her motion avers her inability to pay such costs and the ability of the husband to pay them. At the hearing, although evidence was not formally produced, counsel for the wife stated to the court that his client was earning $266 a month and had two children by a prior marriage to support, and that the husband was earning in excess of $1,000 a month. The husband did not see fit to challenge these statements. He contends that he was precluded from doing so, but the record shows that he elected not to produce any evidence on the issue. While the practice is to award such costs and fees only after a hearing (1 Armstrong, Family Law, 301), and such fees can only be awarded after the contesting party has had an opportunity to be heard (Hite v. Hite, 124 Cal. 389, 57 P. 227, 45 L.R.A. 793), there can be no doubt of the propriety of making such an award based upon the showing made in the affidavits alone, at least where, as here, the counsel for the contesting party told the court that he had decided "to let well enough alone." Armstrong v. Armstrong, 81 Cal.App.2d 322, 183 P.2d 905; Peyre v. Peyre, 79 Cal. 336, 21 P. 838; see discussion 16 Cal.Jur.2d 476, § 185.

In No. 17,928 the orders appealed from are reversed.

In No. 17,889 the order appealed from is affirmed.

Action for rent. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Theresa Meikle, J., entered order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate a previous judgment and to enter a different judgment, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that where findings found the facts to be practically as alleged in the first cause of action and judgment was entered in favor of defendant on that cause of action, there was such inadvertence and mistake as would permit the trial court on its own motion to vacate the judgment and enter a different judgment.

Order affirmed.

Plaintiff appeals from an order denying his motion to vacate a previous judgment and to enter a different judgment.

[1] Question Presented.

Were the previous findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment signed and entered through the trial court's inadvertence and mistake?

Record.

After a trial on April 26, 1957, the trial judge on May 8 signed findings of fact and conclusions of law, and on May 9 signed and had entered a judgment in favor of plaintiff for $200 (based on plaintiff's second cause of action), in favor of defendant on plaintiff's first cause of action, and granting defendant a nonsuit on plaintiff's third cause of action. Thereafter plaintiff moved to set aside said judgment and to substitute a different judgment therefor on the ground that the findings do not support the judgment, as the findings find in effect that all of the allegations of plaintiff's first and second causes of action are true, yet the conclusions of law and judgment state that defendant is entitled to judgment against plaintiff on the first cause of action.[1] On June 5[2] a minute order signed by the trial judge was entered which stated: "Order of the Court in the above-entitled matter. It appearing to the Court that the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law heretofore signed on May 8, 1957, and the Judgment herein signed May 9, 1957, were signed and entered herein by said Court through the said Court's own inadvertence, improvidence and mistake and that the said Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and said Judgment do not conform to or represent the views of the Court heretofore expressed and the intention of the said Court, now on said Court's own motion the signing and entry of said Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and said Judgment are ordered vacated and set aside and counsel for the defendant is ordered and directed to prepare and submit Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and a form of Judgment consistent with the Court's views heretofore expressed. It is further ordered that the motion to vacate judgment and enter a different judgment filed by plaintiff herein be and the same is hereby denied."

Inadvertence and Mistake.

[2, 3] It is obvious by comparing the findings relating to the first cause of action with the conclusions of law and judgment that a mistake was made in either the findings or the conclusions of law and judgment as to that cause of action. The findings found the facts to be practically as alleged in that cause of action.[3] Thus either the findings on that first cause of action were correct and the conclusions and judgment were wrong, or vice versa. The trial judge said in the minute order that the findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment were not those expressed by her. It clearly appears that they could not have been as no judge would intentionally sign such contradictory documents. It is well settled that a court has the power, regardless of the lapse of time, to correct judgments and orders on its own motion

1. The motion as made was limited to correcting the findings and judgment as to the first cause of action only for the reason that the findings found that all of the allegations of the first and second causes of action in plaintiff's complaint were true and yet the judgment was that defendant have judgment on the first cause of action.

2. The motion was noticed for May 28. The record fails to show what, if anything, happened that day. Plaintiff contends that the motion was granted. There is no evidence or record to that effect.

3. The difference between the two causes of action is that the first one sought rent for the period when plaintiff alleged that his property was occupied by the decedent, and the second sought rent for the period of alleged occupancy by the defendant administrator.

so as to make them conform to the judicial decision actually made. This power exists independently of statute. Meyer v. Porath, 1952, 113 Cal.App.2d 808, 811, 248 P.2d 984; Culligan v. Leider, 65 Cal.App.2d 51, 149 P.2d 894; Smith v. Smith, 157 Cal.App.2d 658, 661, 321 P.2d 886. Or as stated in Minardi v. Collopy, 1957, 49 Cal.2d 348, 352, 316 P.2d 952, 955: "It is primarily for the trial judge to determine whether a decision misstated his real intention and whether the judgment as signed was an inadvertence. The trial court, independently of statute, has the power to correct its mistakes and amend its orders which are not the result of an exercise of judicial discretion." See Bastajian v. Brown, 1941, 19 Cal.2d 209, 120 P.2d 9, holding that a court can vacate and correct its judgment both under section 473, Code of Civl Procedure, and its inherent power, whenever the judgment has been made inadvertently or by mistake. See Morgan v. State Board of Equalization, 1949, 89 Cal.App.2d 674, 677, 201 P.2d 859, holding that the trial court may correct a clerical error without notice and on ex parte application. The court, of course, has no power to correct a judicial mistake. McKannay v. McKannay, 68 Cal.App. 709, 230 P. 218; Stevens v. Superior Court, 160 Cal.App.2d 264, 325 P.2d 204. But such is not the case here. As stated before, a mere comparison of the findings with the conclusions and judgment show the inadvertence and mistake. It well corroborates the judge's statement in the minute order. There is nothing in the record to the contrary. For that reason we deem it unnecessary to determine whether a trial court's statement of inadvertence and mistake, unsupported by anything else in the record, is sufficient to prove that a judgment as signed was not the intended judgment.[4]

As the findings, conclusions of law and judgment as to the first cause of action were inadvertently signed and when corrected as originally intended will be consistent rather than contradictory, as now, the court properly denied plaintiff's motion to enter a judgment which would be inconsistent with the findings as intended.

The order is affirmed.

CONTRACTORS' STATE LICENSE BOARD of the State of California, and E. W. Ford, Registrar and Executive Secretary, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 23271.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Mandamus proceeding brought to compel board to restore petitioner's contractor's license. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., denied a writ of mandate, and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence supported finding that licensed contractor had breached fiduciary duty with intent of making a secret and undisclosed profit by submitting false statements to contractee for materials and services and by permitting subcontractors to deviate from plans and specifications.

1. Stipulations ⇐18(7)

Having stipulated before hearing officer that he had been acting as a contractor, licensee could not successfully urge, in mandamus proceeding brought to compel license board to restore his contractor's license, that he might be exempt from disciplinary proceedings on theory that he had acted as an employee rather than as a contractor in transactions in question. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 7108, 7109, 7113, 7116.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by petitioner, Raymond M. Hemphill, from a judgment denying a writ of mandate to compel the Contractors' State License Board to restore petitioner's contractor's license.

Since November 1953, petitioner has been licensed by the board as a general building contractor. On May 24, 1956 an accusation was filed by an investigator of the board wherein Hemphill was charged with having improperly diverted funds received under the terms of a written contract for the construction of a single family residence and garage; departing from plans and specifications in seven instances to the prejudice of the owners, Robert H. and Florence Rosenberg; failing to complete construction for the price stated in the contract; and presenting false statements to Mr. Rosenberg for labor and materials in violation of sections 7108, 7109, 7113 and 7116 of the Business and Professions Code.

A hearing was conducted by a hearing officer, after which he found that Hemphill had violated section 7116 [1] in that he breached his fiduciary duty to the owner with the intent of making a secret and undisclosed profit by submitting false statements for materials and services rendered and by permitting subcontractors to wilfully deviate from the plans and specifications to the material prejudice of the owner. The hearing officer recommeded revocation of Hemphill's license and his recommendation was adopted by the board.

It was stipulated that at all times mentioned in the accusation Hemphill was acting as and in the capacity of a contractor under the provisions of chapter 9, division 3, of the Business and Professions Code.

Hemphill petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate. The court found that the decision and order of the board are supported by the weight of the evidence. Judgment followed denying the writ. Hemphill appeals.

[1] In his brief Hemphill concedes he was acting as a contractor in his relationship with the Rosenbergs. As pointed out, he so stipulated before the hearing officer and the latter so found. Hemphill takes the inconsistent position that he might be exempt from disciplinary proceedings on the theory he acted as an employee of the Rosenbergs rather than as a contractor, and therefore the board was without jurisdiction to discipline him. See Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7053. In view of the stipulation, the point is without merit.

1. Section 7116: "The doing of any wilful or fraudulent act by the licensee as a contractor in consequence of which another is substantially injured constitutes a cause for disciplinary action."

[2] The question is solely whether the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to respondents, sustains the finding of the trial court. Manning v. Watson, 108 Cal.App.2d 705, 712, 239 P.2d 688.

The written contract entered into between Hemphill and the Rosenbergs provided that bids had been obtained from subcontractors as per plans and specifications; Hemphill would act as owners' agent and supervisor of construction with diligence until completion; the owners would pay all subcontractor and material supply bills approved by Hemphill; and the total cost of the bids and supervision was not to exceed $23,620.44.

Rosenberg testified that at the time the contract was executed it was orally agreed that Hemphill would supervise construction for $1,200, payable $100 a week. He stated Hemphill, who drafted the contract, told him he did not want to set this out in the writing because he did not want the subcontractors to know he was doing the job under a supervisory arrangement as they would not approve of it.

Construction commenced about January 28, 1955. Hemphill hired the subcontractors and controlled the work, and for a period of 12 weeks from January 28 to April 23 received $100 a week from Rosenberg. Hemphill paid the subcontractors' bills and obtained waivers of liens for material and labor furnished. Hemphill never presented the bills to Rosenberg until after his discharge when demand was made on him for them by Rosenberg. Instead, he prepared and submitted to Rosenberg 11 written statements itemizing the cost of labor and materials furnished by the subcontractors. He admitted that a number of items in the statements were in excess of the amounts he had actually paid to the subcontractors. They were as follows:

Type of work:	Amount claimed by Hemphill:	Amount paid by Rosenberg:	Amount paid subcontractors by Hemphill:
Rough carpentry	$1,775.00	$1,775.00	$1,390.00
Sewer work	300.00	300.00	234.00
Metal work	214.00	214.00	107.50
Roof	960.00	960.00	810.00
Sliding door	241.00	241.00	172.68
Cabinets	1,045.00	1,045.00	855.95
Garage door	75.00	75.00	58.50
Hardwood Flooring	503.00	503.00	471.00

According to Hemphill his billing practice was to determine in his own mind when he was going to be billed by the subcontractors for the work then in progress, refer back to his original cost breakdown and bill Rosenberg according to his estimate of the percentage of work done and the estimated cost in the breakdown, so that he would receive the money from Rosenberg in advance of billings by the subcontractors. After receipt of bills from subcontractors for completed work and materials furnished, Hemphill gave no credits and made no adjustments on any of the later statements to Rosenberg, with one minor exception in which he credited Rosenberg with $11.37 as an "adjustment on Med. Cab." which he had billed at $73.37 to Rosenberg the previous week.

In reliance on the statements, Rosenberg gave Hemphill checks for the amounts shown thereon to be due. On June 20, at the request of Rosenberg, Hemphill had a cost breakdown prepared for Rosenberg to submit to a bank in applying for a loan to complete construction. It contained items under the headings "Payments to Sub-Contractors as of June 20, 1955 * * *" and "Estimated Amount Needed to Complete," reflecting the same false figures (except for a sliding door) as appeared in the statements previously submitted to Rosenberg. Hemphill admitted the figures were not correct but stated that he put them down anyhow with knowledge that the document would be submitted to the bank and that the bank would probably rely thereon.

At no time during construction did Rosenberg learn of the overcharges in the statements, and he denied asking Hemphill to falsify the figures. Rosenberg discharged Hemphill on June 27 and had the construction completed at an expenditure of $2,244.10 more than the contract price. As of the date of discharge Rosenberg had paid Hemphill $20,204.89, including the $1,200 fee, and Hemphill had paid the subcontractors about $18,300.19. Thereafter Hemphill disbursed an additional sum of $514.62 which paid up all expenses for which he had been billed to the date of his discharge. He testified he made a profit of $189.06 in addition to his $1,200 fee as supervisor. There is no evidence in the record of an agreement that Hemphill was to receive a profit over and above the $1,200 fee, other than his testimony to that effect. Hemphill told Rosenberg any savings made during construction would either be refunded or credited against the estimated cost.

Hemphill's claim that he could have completed construction, including correction of the deviations, for the original contract price of $23,620.44 if he had not been discharged is contrary to the statement and figures attached to the cost breakdown sheet on which he had indicated the "Estimated Amount Needed To Complete as of June 20, 1955" was "$5,250.59."

The plans and specifications called for a side porch with bases thereon to support wooden pilasters on each side of a window by the porch entrance. Although there were no specific figures on the plans showing the dimensions of the porch, it was drawn to scale. As scaled by Rosenberg and a building inspector for the city of Palos Verdes Estates it was over 8 feet in length. Rosenberg testified that instead of an 8-foot porch, a 3-foot stoop was installed and no bases were provided to support the pilasters so that they appeared to be hanging in air. Testimony of the building inspector and an investigator for the board was to the same effect, and photographs admitted in evidence show the installation and its awkward appearance. Hemphill admitted he had installed a stoop-type porch but stated he discussed it with Rosenberg and the subcontractor before the work was done and Rosenberg was happy about the way it was going to be. A reading of his testimony discloses, however, that the discussion was limited to the direction in which the steps should lead, since they were not shown on the plan, and the dimensions of the porch were not given. Hemphill also admitted discussing with the cement contractor the cost of making the correction, and the extension of the porch to 8 feet at an estimated cost of $25 was listed by him among items to be corrected. Rosenberg testified that he could get no satisfaction from Hemphill in correcting the work; Hemphill said the stoop was all right the way it was installed; and after Hemphill's discharge he had the stoop converted into a porch at the cost of $25.

The plans and specifications also called for a full concrete foundation of a minimum height of 18 inches on the interior walls. An investigator for the board testified the walls were dwarfed and wooden crippling was substituted for some of the solid walls of cement. Hemphill admitted the walls had been crippled but testified that when he talked to Rosenberg about making the change he told him (Rosenberg authorized the change. Rosenberg save time and a few dollars and Rosenberg authorized the change. Rosenberg testified he did not authorize the crippling; he specifically told Hemphill he had to comply with the plans and specifications and he was assured by Hemphill that the walls would all be solid concrete. There is no evidence that Hemphill ever offered to correct the work.

[3] We conclude that the board had jurisdiction to discipline Hemphill and that the evidence amply supports the finding that he breached his fiduciary duty with the intent of making a secret and undisclosed profit by submitting false statements to Rosenberg for materials and services and by permitting the subcontractors to deviate from the plans and specifications.

Harold A. WILLIAMS, also known as H. A. Williams, et ux., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5788.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 22, 1959.

Suit to establish plaintiffs' equitable rights in certain property, to establish a trust, for an accounting, and for recovery of sum by compulsory sale of property and distribution of proceeds. From a judgment of the Superior Court of San Bernardino County, A. D. Mitchell, J., plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shepard, J., held that lien of resulting trust had attached as of date when plaintiffs paid purchase price for land conveyed to defendants and had been converted into an equitable lien on date when defendants executed memorandum, reciting that if plaintiffs were unable to pay balance still owing under contract for construction of house on property defendants could sell property and return total amount paid under contract to plaintiffs.

Modified and affirmed.

1. Liens ⇐7

An "equity lien" is much favored by courts to do justice and prevent unfair results.

2. Liens ⇐22

Evidence supported judgment declaring equitable lien for amount paid by plaintiffs under contract by defendant to construct house for plaintiffs.

3. Novation ⇐3

A novation extinguishes old obligation.

4. Appeal and Error ⇐1009(1)

When, upon reliable evidence, court finds that parties intended to create equitable lien, such finding should not be disturbed.

5. Liens ⇐7

An equitable lien is not judicially recognized until a judgment is rendered declaring its existence, but lien relates to time it was created by conduct of parties.

6. Liens ⇐7

Lien of resulting trust attached as of date when plaintiffs paid purchase price for land conveyed to defendants, and lien was converted into an equitable lien on date when defendants executed memorandum, reciting that if plaintiffs were unable to pay balance still owing under contract for construction of house defendants could sell property and return total amount paid under contract to plaintiffs, and such lien continued thereafter to be impressed upon property, subject to enforcement by foreclosure, and homestead, filed a few days prior to rendition of judgment judicially recognizing equitable lien, would not take precedence over plaintiffs' lien. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 853, 2224.

SHEPARD, Justice.

Plaintiffs sued to establish their equitable rights in certain residence property in Upland, California, to establish a trust, for an accounting, and recovery of $7,900 by compulsory sale of the property and distribution of the proceeds.

After a full trial, the court found as to matters here material that on April 18, 1954, plaintiffs, as owners, and defendant H. A. Williams as contractor, entered into a contract for construction of a house on said property; that for the sole purpose of facilitating construction said defendant would hold title in his name and would procure the necessary construction loan in his own name; that by May 4, 1954, plaintiffs had paid to said defendant $2,600, being the total purchase price of the lot of land involved, and on the same day said defendant purchased said lot in his own and his wife's name as grantees; that on May 6, 1954, defendants secured a construction loan on said lot in the amount of $10,000; that thereafter, in August and September, 1954, plaintiffs paid an additional $5,300; that on September 11, 1954, Mr. Holder and Mr. Williams, each acting on behalf of the community of himself and his wife, executed a memorandum reciting what had occurred and stating that if Holder was unable to pay within 30 days the balance of $3,200 still owing to Williams, Williams "may then sell" the property; that $7,900, the total amount paid by Holder, would then be returned to Holder; that defendants before April, 1955, advised plaintiffs that they could sell the house much better if they were using it as a residence; that defendants then sold their own home and moved into said Upland house, which is the subject of this action, without the consent or permission of plaintiffs; that on April 28, 1955, defendants secured a new loan whereby the total encumbrance against the property was increased to the sum of $14,500, this also being done without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiffs; that defendants then constructed on said premises without plaintiffs' consent a heated swimming pool; that on May 24, 1955, defendant Harold Williams told plaintiffs that plaintiffs had no interest in the house and defendants would sell same when defendants were ready; that the property has not been sold; that defendants were and each of them was at all times acting on behalf of their community interest; that defendants are indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of $7,900; that plaintiffs' charges of fraud against defendants are untrue; and that the essential allegations of defendants' cross-complaint are untrue.

Judgment was entered for a money judgment in the sum of $7,900 in favor of plaintiffs and against defendants, and an equitable lien for said sum with interest at 7% from November 1, 1954 until paid was impressed on the real property involved. Plaintiffs appeal.

Plaintiffs contend that the trial court ought to have declared that defendants hold the property in trust, ordered the same sold and the proceeds of the sale distributed $7,900, interest and costs to plaintiffs, and the balance, if any, to defendants.

[1] Resulting trusts, constructive trusts and equitable liens are very much akin to each other, and their basic purposes to identify and impress upon certain property the beneficial rights that have arisen in an innocent party who in some way contributed to the acquisition, protection or improvement of that property are, in general, the same. We use, however, different names to indicate the different types of situation, elements of approach and kind of relief available. The basic definition and rule of equity relating to resulting and constructive trusts has been crystallized into statutory form in California.

"When a transfer of real property is made to one person, and the consideration therefor is paid by or for another, a trust is presumed to result in favor of the person by or for whom such payment is made." Civil Code, Sec. 853.

"Involuntary Trust Resulting From Negligence, Etc. One who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained, for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it." Civil Code, Sec. 2224.

Many of the liens formerly cognizable only as "equity liens" have also been incorporated into statutory form but, in the main, the "equity lien" is still nonstatutory. It is much favored by the courts to do justice and prevent unfair results. Mannon v. Pesula, 59 Cal.App.2d 597, 606(5), 139 P.2d 336. In Nau v. Santa Ana Sugar Co., 79 Cal.App. 685, 691(1), 250 P. 705, 707, the court quotes the general rule on equitable liens from Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence:

"'Every express executory agreement in writing, whereby the contracting party sufficiently indicates an intention to make some particular property, real or personal, or fund, therein described or identified, a security for a debt or other obligation, or whereby the party promises to convey or assign or transfer the property as security, creates an equitable lien upon the property so indicated, which is enforceable against the property in the hands not only of the original contractor, but of his heirs, administrators, executors, voluntary assignees, and purchasers or encumbrancers with notice.'"

[2, 3] The facts presented in the case at bar would clearly have supported a judgment declaring a resulting trust. However, they are also sufficient to support a judgment declaring an equitable lien. It appears from an examination of the evidence and the court's findings that the court believed the document signed on September 11, 1954, wherein it was recited that if the balance of $3,200 shall not be paid in 30 days defendants might sell, constituted a novation and that it was the intention of the parties that plaintiffs should have an equitable lien on the property as security for the repayment to them of said $7,900. This was not unreasonable in view of the difficulties of selling for an adequate price a home in the $25,000 class. When such a novation takes place it extinguishes the old obligation. Beckwith v. Sheldon, 165 Cal. 319, 324, 131 P. 1049.

[4] When upon reliable evidence the court finds that the parties intended to create an equitable lien, such finding should not be disturbed. In re Estate of Henshaw, 68 Cal.App.2d 627, 636(4), 157 P.2d 390; Grant v. De Otte, 122 Cal.App.2d 724, 729 (3), 265 P.2d 952.

[5, 6] Plaintiffs have included in their final brief a reference to the filing of a homestead by one of the defendants a few days before the judgment was rendered in this cause, and appear to be somewhat fearful that the homestead might precede the plaintiffs' equitable lien. This is not the rule.

"Although an equitable lien is not judicially recognized until a judgment is rendered declaring its existence, the lien relates to the time it was created by the conduct of the parties." Hise v. Superior Court, 21 Cal.2d 614, 627(8), 134 P.2d 748, 755.

Therefore, under the findings of the court, the equitable lien of the resulting trust attached as of the date of the purchase of the property, was converted into an equitable lien as of September 11, 1954, and continued to be impressed upon the property and still is so impressed, subject to enforcement by foreclosure.

Paragraph 2 of the judgment herein is hereby amended to add an additional sentence at the end thereof, reading as follows: "Said lien is impressed upon the property from and after September 11, 1954." As so modified, the judgment is affirmed. Each party will bear his own costs on appeal.

DEPARTMENT OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL and Russell S. Munro, Director of Alcoholic Beverage Control, Respondents.

Civ. 18184.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 27, 1959.

As Amended Jan. 28, 1959.

Mandamus proceeding brought to compel department to annul its revocation order and to reinstate petitioners' on-sale liquor license. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Donald K. Quayle, J., denied the relief sought, and an appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that liquor license may not be suspended or revoked simply because homosexuals or sexual perverts patronize bar, and that before such deprivation can occur there must be improper, illegal, disgusting or immoral acts committed on premises to knowledge of licensee.

Judgment reversed with directions.

1. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐106(2)

Under Business and Professions Code section, liquor license may not be suspended or revoked simply because homosexuals or sexual perverts patronize bar, and before such deprivation can occur there must be improper, illegal, disgusting or immoral acts committed on premises to knowledge of licensee. West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 24200(e).

2. Mandamus ⇐15, 187(9)

Notwithstanding fact that department, believing that license could be revoked merely because bar was a hangout for homosexuals, had not charged that immoral, improper, disgusting or illegal acts had been committed on the premises, it could properly urge, as ground for upholding revocation, that there was substantial evidence of such conduct; and if record showed such conduct, judgment denying writ of mandate to compel department to annul its order and reinstate license would be affirmed. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof. Code, § 24200(e).

3. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐106(2)

That women had danced with and kissed other women on licensed premises was not necessarily such "offensive, illegal or improper conduct" as would justify revocation of license. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 24200(e).

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Offensive, Illegal or Improper Conduct".

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

The Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control revoked the general on-sale liquor license of Albert Vallerga and Mary Azar. The Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board affirmed the revocation. This appeal is taken from the judgment of the Superior Court denying a writ of mandate to compel the Department to annul its order and to reinstate the license.

In June of 1956 the Department filed its First Amended Accusation charging the licensees with the violation of section 24200(e) of the Business and Professions Code, in that "From on or about September 7, 1955 until the date hereof [June 1, 1956], the portions of the premises of the licensees, where the activities permitted by the license are conducted, have been and still are a resort for sexual perverts, to wit: Homosexuals."

A hearing was had on this accusation. The hearing officer recommended a revocation. The Department adopted this recommendation, and ordered a revocation of the license. The Department found that there had been no prior formal accusations made against the licensees, and then found that the charge contained in the accusation, quoting it as charged, was true. It was also found that Vallerga, one of the licensees, admitted at the hearing that the premises "were established as a resort for lesbians and homosexuals, and that he was aware that said premises were a hangout for homosexuals." For these reasons the Department determined that "the continuance of the said license would be contrary to public welfare and morals within the meaning of said words as used in Article XX, Section 22, of the California Constitution."

The licensees appealed. The Appeals Board, without referring to any conduct of patrons on the licensed premises, held that, if the licensees knowingly permitted homosexuals to gather on the licensed premises, it violated section 24200(e) and justified revocation of the license. There is not one word in the decision about illegal, immoral, disgusting or indecent acts having been committed on the premises. The Department prosecuted the case, and the Appeals Board affirmed it, without any reference to the conduct of patrons while on the premises. The theory of both boards was that section 24200(e) prohibits the using of the licensed premises as a resort or gathering place for sexual perverts; that homosexuals are sexual perverts as a matter of law, and that if the licensed premises are so used, a violation justifying revocation of the license has occurred.

This is a misinterpretation of the law. In the leading case of Stoumen v. Rielly, 37 Cal.2d 713, 234 P.2d 969, the licensee was charged with operating a disorderly house to which people resorted for purposes which were injurious to public morals, health, convenience or safety. The trial Administrative Board found that the licensee maintained such a disorderly house in that he knowingly permitted persons of homosexual tendencies to patronize that bar and to use the bar as a meeting place. The Administrative Board ordered the suspension of the license. This was reversed by the Supreme Court in a unanimous opinion. The court pointed out that there "was no evidence of any illegal or immoral conduct on the premises or that the patrons resorted to the restaurant for purposes injurious to public morals" (37 Cal.2d at page 715, 234 P.2d at page 970), and then held that the disorderly house statute there involved did not attempt to regulate mere patronage by any particular class of persons without regard to their conduct on the premises. The court stated (37 Cal.2d at page 716, 234 P.2d at page 971): "Members of the public of lawful age have a right to patronize a public restaurant and bar so long as they are acting properly and are not committing illegal or immoral acts; the proprietor has no right to exclude or eject a patron 'except for good cause,' and if he does so without good cause he is liable in damages. See Civ. Code, §§ 51, 52. In analogous cases it has been held that a liquor license could not be revoked on the ground that prostitutes had dined in the licensee's restaurant, In re Farley, 217 N.Y. 105, 111 N.E. 479, and that a conviction of maintaining a bawdy house was not supported by evidence that women of loose or immoral character had obtained lodging in defendant's hotel. Patterson v. State, 9 Okl.Cr. 564, 132 P. 693, 695. In the Patterson case the court pointed out that such women are human beings entitled to shelter and that it is not a crime to give them lodging unless it is done for immoral purposes. The same reasoning applies to the patronage of a public restaurant and bar by homosexuals, and mere proof of patronage, without proof of the commission of illegal or immoral acts on the premises, or resort thereto for such purposes, is not sufficient to show a violation of section 58."

It was then held that from the fact that homosexuals used the licensed premises as a meeting place it could not be inferred that illegal or immoral acts were committed on the premises.

After determining that mere patronage did not violate the maintenance of a disorderly house statute, the court then went on to hold that, because of such patronage, the license could not be revoked under Article XX, section 22 of the Constitution, which provides that a license may be revoked if the administrative agency determines "for good cause that the granting or continuance of such license would be contrary to public welfare or morals." The court said (37 Cal.2d at page 717, 234 P.2d at page 971): "The board's discretion under section 22, however, is not absolute but must be exercised in accordance with the law, and the provision that it may revoke a license 'for good cause' necessarily implies that its decisions should be based on sufficient evidence and that it should not act arbitrarily in determining what is contrary to public welfare or morals. * * * In order to establish 'good cause' for suspension of plaintiff's license, something more must be shown than that many of his patrons were homosexuals and that they used his restaurant and bar as a meeting place."

The Stoumen case was decided in 1951. In 1955 the Legislature added section 24200 (e) to the Business and Professions Code. (Stats. of 1955, p. 2230, Chap. 1217.) As then amended, and as it now reads, that section provides, in part, that it shall be a ground for the suspension or revocation of a license if "the portion of the premises of the licensee upon which the activities permitted by the license are conducted are a resort for illegal possessors or users of narcotics, prostitutes, pimps, panderers, or sexual perverts."

Literally, this section seems to make revocation permissible if the licensed premises are simply used as a "resort" by "sexual perverts." But because such a literal interpretation would raise grave doubts as to the constitutionality of the section, it has not been literally construed. It has been held that the section must be interpreted in view of the holding in the Stoumen case as to what constitutes "good cause" for the revocation of a license. The reason for this interpretation is obvious. The Legislature, in enacting section 24200(e), acted under the authority and power granted by Article XX, § 22 of the state Constitution. As the section read in 1951 when the Stoumen case was decided, it provided that the State Board of Equalization shall have the power "in its discretion, to deny or revoke any specific liquor license if it shall determine for good cause that the granting or continuance of such license would be contrary to public welfare or morals." In the Stoumen case, as already pointed out, it was held that this provision did not confer uncontrolled discretion upon the Board, and that before a license could be revoked there must exist good cause, and that in order to establish "good cause" under the section "something more must be shown than that many of his patrons were homosexuals and that they used his restaurant and bar as a meeting place." While this section of the Constitution was later amended, in this respect, the Constitutional language is still as it was in 1951 when the Stoumen case was decided. That case necessarily decided that "good cause" for revocation of a license must consist of something more than mere patronage; there must be conduct on the premises that indicates that the continuance of the license would be contrary to public welfare or morals. Thus the Stoumen case necessarily decided that the Legislature was without power to provide that mere presence of a prohibited class was sufficient to revoke a license. It was for this reason, and in order to perserve the constitutionality of section 24200(e) that it was held that mere presence of homosexuals or of sexual perverts under the section was not enough and that in the absence of improper or illegal conduct on the licensed premises, the license could not be revoked.

The first of the cases so holding was Kershaw v. Dept. of Alcoholic Bev. Control, 155 Cal.App.2d 544, 318 P.2d 494, decided in 1957. In that case the enforcement officials contended, as they do here, that the use of the licensed premises as a meeting place for homosexuals was alone sufficient, under section 24200(e), to revoke the license. In refuting this contention, and in holding that improper conduct on the licensed premises was required before a license could be revoked, this court stated (155 Cal.App.2d at page 550, 318 P.2d at page 498): "It would seem a fair inference to conclude that in making that amendment [the addition of § 24200(e)] the Legislature acted in the light of and consistently with the rule of the Stoumen case, by inference excluding from the coverage of subdivision (e) the type of conduct which the Supreme Court had declared harmless and not inimical to public welfare or morals. The court having so recently and with such clarity said it, why should the Legislature say it again?" There was, however, evidence of illegal and immoral conduct on the part of patrons to the knowledge of the licensee sufficient to sustain the revocation.

This interpretation of section 24200(e) was reaffirmed in the recent case of Nickola v. Munro, 162 Cal.App.2d 449, 328 P.2d 271, decided in July of 1958. There, as in the Kershaw case, and in the instant case, it was contended that, upon proof that homosexuals used the licensed premises as a meeting place, the license could be revoked. This court stated (162 Cal.App.2d at page 455, 328 P.2d at page 274): "We do not think that section 24200(e), was passed by the Legislature to repeal or to change the rule of the Stoumen case to the effect that improper or illegal or immoral conduct must occur on the premises before discipline of the licensee is permitted, but was passed with the Stoumen case in mind to clarify the rule of that case." In the Nickola case there was ample evidence of improper conduct on the premises, and of the licensee's knowledge of such conduct.

[1] A petition for hearing was denied in the Nickola case. No petition for hearing was filed in the Kershaw case. It must, therefore, be accepted that, under section 24200(e), a license may not be suspended or revoked simply because homosexuals or sexual perverts patronize the bar in question. Before such deprivation can occur there must be improper, illegal, disgusting or immoral acts of conduct committed on the premises to the knowledge of the licensee. As already pointed out, unless section 24200(e) is so interpreted, there would be grave doubts as to its constitutionality. The Stoumen case was interpreting what constitutes "good cause" for the revocation of a license under the Constitution. This constituted a limitation on the Legislature as well as on the administrative board. The only way that the constitutionality of section 24200(e) could be saved was to assume that the Legislature was not attempting to overrule the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Constitution, but was acting in conformity thereto. That is the explanation of the Kershaw and Nickola cases.

[2] In the present case the proceeding was commenced and tried on the theory that mere patronage by homosexuals, to the knowledge of the licensees, was sufficient to warrant a revocation of the license. As already pointed out, there is no charge or finding that immoral, improper, disgusting or illegal acts were committed on the premises. The respondent, nevertheless, seeks to uphold the revocation on the ground that there was substantial evidence of such conduct. We think that respondent may properly urge such a contention, and that, if the record shows such conduct, the judgment should be affirmed.

The period involved in the charge contained in the amended accusation is from September 7, 1955, to June 1, 1956, a period of about nine months. The bar commenced operations in 1946, and in 1950 Vallerga purchased a half interest. During all the period it was operating, and particularly during the nine-month period involved in the charges, there had been no arrests for improper conduct on the premises, except one when the bartender called the police to eject an intoxicated patron. During the nine-month period involved in the charge, the licensed premises were subjected to frequent and intensive surveillance by the city and military police. Admittedly, not once during this period did the police call the attention of the licensees or their employees to any improper acts on the part of patrons that they had observed, nor was any person arrested for improper acts on the premises.

At the hearing, the enforcement officials were primarily interested in proving that the bar had a general reputation for being a hangout for homosexuals. This was done under that portion of section 24200(e) providing that "the character of the premises may be proved by the general reputation of the premises in the community as a resort for * * * sexual perverts." There is no doubt that the enforcement officials proved that the licensed premises were used as a meeting place by homosexuals. The Deputy Chief of the Oakland Police Department, the Patrol Captain of the area where the bar is located, the sergeant in charge of that patrol, the patrol officer in the area, and the sergeant in charge of the Armed Forces Police all testified that the reputation of the bar was bad in that its patronage consisted almost exclusively of homosexuals and lesbians. This fact was not in controversy. In fact, Vallerga, one of the licensees, testified that the bar was established in 1946 for homosexuals, and that it continued to be such an establishment from that date up to the date of the hearing; that in 1950, when he purchased a one-half interest in the bar, he consulted an attorney and was advised that since his bar was a public place, he was under a duty, and had the right, to serve his customers as long as they behaved themselves. Obviously, this evidence that the bar was largely patronized by homosexuals, is of importance only in showing that the licensee knew or should have known of this fact. Since the licensee admitted this fact, there was no dispute as to it. Contrary to the contention of the enforcement officials, this fact alone, as already pointed out, was not sufficient to justify a revocation of the license.

All of the police officials laid great emphasis upon the fact that the majority of female customers were dressed in mannish attire, and that the patrons of the bar usually paired off men with men, and women with women. These facts, if entitled to any legal significance, merely emphasized the fact that the patrons were homosexuals or lesbians. Of themselves, these acts did not amount to immoral, indecent, disgusting or improper acts. They merely tended to prove that the patrons were homosexuals, a fact the licensee admitted. That fact alone, for reasons already stated, did not justify revoking the license.

[3] During the nine-month period of intensive surveillance the police officers did testify that they did observe a few isolated acts which are relied upon to support the revocation order. Several of the police officers testified that, on occasion, women were observed dancing with, and kissing, other women. This is not necessarily offensive, illegal or improper conduct that would justify the revocation of the license.

The most damaging testimony was given by a policewoman who went to the bar as an undercover agent. She testified that she sat at a table and that a patron dressed in mannish costume sat down and stated to her "You're a cute little butch." Later in the evening this patron kissed the witness. A waitress of the establishment, Buddy by name, came by and warned the participants that if they wanted to continue such activity they should go into the rest room. Other than through this waitress, there was no evidence the licensees knew of this activity or that they had been told of it. The officer did not complain to anyone about this conduct.

Another police officer (who had been in the bar 10 times) on one occasion observed a display of affection between two men. He observed these two embrace and whisper to each other with their foreheads touching. He heard one of the men state to the bartender "Arley and I are going steady." There was no evidence that the acts of affection between these two men were or should have been observed by the licensees or their employees.

This is a fair summary of the alleged misconduct that was observed during the nine-month period. Some of the officers visited the bar during this period almost daily, while others were present several times a week. At most, the conduct observed indicated that the patrons were homosexuals. But that fact alone will not support the revocation. The conduct observed was not similar to the conduct observed in the Kershaw and Nickola cases which was held to support revocation orders. There the conduct was disgusting, immoral and illegal. It clearly demonstrated that the continuance of the licenses would be "contrary to public welfare or morals." The same cannot be said of the conduct observed here.

The other contentions of appellants attacking the constitutionality of section 24200(e) on various grounds were all decided adversely to appellants in the Kershaw or Nickola cases, or in both, and are without merit.

The judgment is reversed with instructions to the trial court to grant a peremptory writ of mandate directing the Administrative Board to set aside its order of revocation and to take such further action as may be proper.

No. 17439.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 27, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Action against railroad and others for injuries sustained by plaintiff when he fell while getting out of a boxcar from which he was unloading steel drums, which shipper had negligently loaded and carrier had negligently failed to inspect or had negligently transported, to fix a lift on a truck which was being used in the unloading procedure. The Superior Court, Alameda County, A. J. Woolsey, J., granted defendants' motions for nonsuit and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that evidence did not establish that plaintiff was contributorily negligent as a matter of law and it was error to order a nonsuit on that ground.

Judgment reversed.

1. Railroads ⇐282(9)

Mere fact that an accident occurred while plaintiff was using a certain method of unloading a boxcar did not demonstrate as a matter of law that he acted negligently in the selection and use of that method.

2. Negligence ⇐136(9)

Contributory negligence is not established as a matter of law unless the only reasonable hypothesis is that such negligence exists and that reasonable or sensible men could have drawn that conclusion and none other, and where there are different inferences that may be drawn, one for and one against, the inference against contributory negligence will be followed and before it can be held as a matter of law that contributory negligence exists, the evidence must point unerringly to that conclusion.

3. Negligence ⇐65

Where a person must work in a position of possible danger, the amount of care which he is bound to exercise for his own safety may well be less by reason of the necessity of his giving his attention to work than would otherwise be the case.

had negligently failed to inspect or had negligently transported, to fix a lift on a truck which was being used in the unloading procedure, evidence did not establish that employee was contributorily negligent as a matter of law and it was error to order a nonsuit on that ground.

5. Railroads ⇐282(9)

In action against railroad and others for injuries sustained by plaintiff when he fell while getting out of a boxcar from which he was unloading steel drums, which shipper had negligently loaded and carrier had negligently failed to inspect or had negligently transported, to fix a lift on a truck which was being used in unloading procedure, evidence did not show as a matter of law that employee assumed the risk of harm to himself in endeavoring to unload the boxcar.

6. Trial ⇐162

In action against railroad and others for injuries sustained by plaintiff when he fell while getting out of a boxcar from which he was unloading steel drums, which shipper had negligently loaded and carrier had negligently failed to inspect or had negligently transported, to fix a lift on a truck which was being used in unloading procedure, wherein counsel for employee stated he was prepared to rest except for introduction of testimony with respect to where boxcar came from, by whom it was delivered and when it was taken off siding, part of which would be covered by stipulation and part by introduction of a couple of documents, plaintiff had not completed presentation of his evidence on question of defendants' responsibility, and nonsuits entered in favor of defendants could not be sustained upon ground that there was a failure to prove that defendants owed a duty to plaintiff, until after completion of case as to defendants' responsibility. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 581c.

7. Appeal and Error ⇐419(1)

Notice of appeal allegedly couched in terms of an appeal from a formal written judgment instead of minute order of nonsuit which preceded it would be treated as being from the appealable order, when it was filed in ample time and when no one was misled or prejudiced thereby. FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

A carload of empty drums belonging to Dewey and Almy Chemical Company had been returned to it by rail. One of its employees, plaintiff herein, was injured while removing drums from the car. Defendants' motions for nonsuit upon the ground of plaintiff's contributory negligence and assumption of risk were granted and he has appealed.

Plaintiff was a maintenance mechanic at the Dew and Almy plant but during the eight years of his employment had been assigned to the loading and shipping of cars about a half day to a day a month and during that time had worked at the unloading of 20 or 30 cars.

He testified that empty drums such as these (three feet high and two feet in diameter, weighing 110 to 125 pounds each) are customarily loaded upright in tiers, one tier above the other (a full car has three tiers), with a board across the doorway (nailed from the inside against the door post, which is of wood in contrast to the steel on the outside) opposite each tier, to hold the drums in.

When unloading such a car, the boards would be removed one at a time, the top one first. A ladder placed against the door of the car would be used to climb part way up to the level desired and the unremoved boards would be used to get high enough to reach the top drums. The men would climb up and roll the drums out onto a track system which joined with the plant conveyor, until they had an opening big enough to get into the car itself.

Upon the occasion here involved, plaintiff's foreman told him to work on the unloading of a certain boxcar. They had to pry the door open. The drums were up against it. So they got a piece of board and stuck it between the opening and kept prying the drums loose from the door so they could get the door open. When the door was pried open, it could be seen that there were no boards across the doorway. This was the first car plaintiff ever unloaded that did not have boards across the doorway. The first and second tiers of drums were standing upright. The first tier was packed loosely. The drums in the top row were not standing upright. They were laying down. They were badly scrambled. That was perfectly visible to plaintiff at the time the door was open. He was fully aware of that before he went into the car.

The method for the unloading of this car was different from what it had been on previous occasions. Plaintiff testified "* * * we couldn't unload it from the outside because the drums were pretty rickety and wobbly, and it was a hazard to attempt unloading it from the outside. The only way to unload it was to get inside up on top, find a safe place to stand and roll them out up on top." He used a ladder that was between six and seven feet in length (it reached up to a point about two feet above the level of the floor of the car) to get as high as he could, then grabbed the side of the door and the door frame and pulled himself up and into the boxcar. The door opening was about eight feet high. When he was up in the car he had "to figure out each move so I wouldn't get myself hurt. The car was in such a mess." He was fully aware of that when he went into the car, "it was not a safe loaded car, I will tell you that." Asked whether he knew when he went up into the car whether he was putting himself into a position of danger, he said, "Yeah, I guess so. It wasn't the safest looking car that I have ever gone into," and that "there is danger in anything I guess you do."

He had rolled half a dozen drums out from the third tier when he was called to attend to a breakdown on a high-lift truck. It was his duty to respond to that call to fix the lift. He got out backwards by hanging onto the frame of the door, swinging himself around and putting his right foot on the top rung of the ladder. His right hand was on the edge of the doorframe, his left hand was around the door post and his left leg was hooked around the door post. He let his left hand go to get a lower grip so he could lower his left foot onto the ladder. He reached out and laid his hand on a second tier drum which was tipping over on him. He shoved the drum back in so it would not fall and knock him off. The result was that he lost the grip he had with his right hand and fell to the ground. The drum did not fall. He said that this drum tipped over the edge and would have "got" him if he had not shoved it back. He did not believe he moved that drum while he was in the car. He believed he moved the drum that was on top of it. He did not know of any other way he could have gotten out of the car from the third tier down to the ladder than the way he took.

He referred to the ladder he used as a "make-shift" ladder. He said "it wasn't a proper ladder to use." His employer had other types of ladders and longer ladders. With a longer ladder it would have been easier to climb in and out of that particular car. Asked if anything prevented him from making inquiry as to the whereabouts of another ladder or going and getting another ladder, he said "No, I usually get told to do a job and I try to do it to the best of my ability without asking too many questions." He used this ladder because it was out there for that purpose, the only one around there, and "when they unloaded these cars they use it. I was no different than anyone else." The ladder rested on solid ground and did not fall nor did it slip. It remained right where it was when he fell.

Plaintiff's foreman testified that he was present at the beginning of the unloading operation, but was not there when the accident happened. He was there to be sure that the men were being careful. He believed "they were handling it sufficiently not to have any accident at that time." He had dunnage boards that could have been used to shore up the doorway. He did not consider it necessary to do so. (No one asked plaintiff if it occurred to him that it might be desirable to place boards across the doorway, nor whether he knew that boards were available for such a purpose.)

[1] We have a picture of a man who was faced with a situation quite different from that which normally confronted him when unloading a car. He adopted a method for unloading this car which, according to him, seemed suitable for getting the drums out with the minimum of risk. The mere fact that an accident did occur does not demonstrate as a matter of law that he acted negligently in the selection and use of that method.

[2] The test to be applied in such a case as this we find well expressed in Anthony v. Hobbie, 25 Cal.2d 814, 818, 155 P.2d 826, 829: "* * * contributory negligence is not established as a matter of law unless the only reasonable hypothesis is that such negligence exists; that reasonable or sensible men could have drawn that conclusion and none other; that where there are different inferences that may be drawn, one for and one against, the one against will be followed; and that before it can be held as a matter of law that contributory negligence exists, the evidence must point unerringly to that conclusion. [Citations.]"

[3] When applying this test in this case we must bear in mind the fact that here the plaintiff had a function to perform, that of unloading the very drums which, allegedly, the shipper had negligently loaded and the carrier had negligently failed to inspect or had negligently transported. It is unlike the case of an invitee upon another man's land who encounters an obviously dangerous instrumentality and can avoid harm to himself by simply walking around it. "It has long been recognized that '* * * where a person must work in a position of possible danger the amount of care which he is bound to exercise for his own safety may well be less by reason of the necessity of his giving attention to his work than would otherwise be the case. [Citations.]'" Austin v. Riverside Portland Cement Co., 44 Cal.2d 225, 239, 282 P.2d 69, 77. See also James v. Key System Transit Lines, 125 Cal.App.2d 278, 281, 270 P.2d 116, 117, where it appeared that "plaintiff's duties required him to cross" a strip of rough pavement and "he had no choice except to cross" it.)

[4] We do not find any factors in this case which "point unerringly" to the conclusion of lack of due care on the part of the plaintiff.

Contributory negligence might be found in the failure to place boards across the doorway. However, the boards perhaps could not be readily fixed in place on the inside of the door frame. The drums pressed so closely to the door it had to be pried open. The boards could hardly be fastened on the outside because the outside walls of the car were of steel. Moreover, plaintiff's foreman, who had a great deal of experience in unloading boxcars, testified that such boards were not placed because he did not consider it necessary. Plaintiff might well be justified in relying on the foreman's superior experience and greater knowledge. See Hoogbruin v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 213 Cal. 582, 592, 2 P.2d 992; Andre v. Allynn, 84 Cal.App. 2d 347, 352–353, 190 P.2d 949.

Contributory negligence might be found in the use of a six-foot ladder to ascend and descend from the car. Plaintiff testified, when asked why he did not use a different ladder, "that ladder was out there for that purpose and that is the only one there was around there, and when they unloaded these cars they use it." The ladder extended about two feet above the level of the floor of the car. The car was about 10 feet high on the inside. Since the drums were three feet high, the level of the third tier could not have been more than four feet above the end of the ladder. It would not seem unreasonable for plaintiff to assume that entry and exit from the car could be safely made with the ladder that was used. Whether he should have used a longer ladder in the exercise of ordinary caution was a question for the jury.

Contributory negligence might be found in plaintiff's manner of exit. The same considerations would apply. Plaintiff testified that he knew of no other way to get out. See Rau v. Redwood City Women's Club, 111 Cal.App.2d 546, 551, 245 P.2d 12.

Placing his hand upon a drum which had begun to tip over and shoving it back into position, does not point unerringly to negligence. It appeared to plaintiff at the time that but for that act upon his part the drum would fall upon him with all its weight and bulk.

Since conflicting inferences are possible from the evidence concerning plaintiff's exercise of ordinary care or the lack of it, contributory negligence does not appear as a matter of law. It was error to order nonsuit upon that ground.

[5] For like reasons the evidence does not show, as a matter of law, that plaintiff assumed the risk of harm to himself. Plaintiff was faced with a dilemma created by defendants' alleged negligence, the unloading of the very drums which allegedly had been negligently loaded. Under the circumstances of the case, it was for the triers of the facts to determine whether the measures plaintiff took to meet that situation constituted a voluntary assumption of the risks involved. In such a case the question is whether "plaintiff conducted himself as a reasonable and prudent person." DeGraf v. Anglo California Nat. Bank, 14 Cal.2d 87, 100, 92 P.2d 899, 905.

"The defenses of assumption of risk * * * will negative liability regardless of the fact that plaintiff may have acted with due care. (See Prosser on Torts [1941], p. 377.) It is available when there has been a voluntary acceptance of a risk and such acceptance, whether express or implied, has been made with knowledge and appreciation of the risk. (See Rest., Torts, § 893.) Where the facts are such that the plaintiff must have had knowledge of the hazard, the situation is equivalent to actual knowledge, and there may be an assumption of the risk, but where it merely appears that he should or could have discovered the danger by the exercise of ordinary care, the defense is contributory negligence and not assumption of risk." Prescott v. Ralph's Grocery Co., 42 Cal.2d 158, 161–162, 265 P.2d 904, 906. See also Hayes v. Richfield Oil Corp., 38 Cal.2d 375, 384–385, 240 P.2d 580; Hawk v. City of Newport Beach, 46 Cal.2d 213, 218, 293 P.2d 48.

Plaintiff testified that he guessed he was aware that he was putting himself in a place of danger, and that "[i]t wasn't the safest looking car that * * * [he had] ever gone into." This shows a knowledge of some risk, but not necessarily an appreciation of the extent of the risk. Plaintiff had been in the car 15 or 20 minutes before his attempted exit, and there is no testimony that any drums had fallen out during that time. Even if he initially might have believed that there was danger of falling drums from the lack of boards holding them in, the lack of any such result for a period of time might have lulled him into a momentary forgetfulness of the danger.

Moreover, it is not clear from the plaintiff's testimony what particular risk he appreciated. If defendants are to be relieved from liability on the ground of assumption of risk, the jury would have to find that the plaintiff appreciated the danger from drums falling out the door, which was the particular risk, if any, which caused the plaintiff's injury. The testimony above quoted may refer only to the danger of falling within the car from the haphazard arrangement of the drums. The following testimony was given just before the part quoted above: "I [plaintiff] didn't do anything but find a footing so I could stand on up there and move what drums I did move. That took all the time I was up in there. I had to figure each move so I wouldn't get myself hurt. The car was in such a mess. Q. You were fully aware then of that, at the time you went into the car, is that correct? A. Yeah, it was not a safe loaded car, I will tell you that. Q. You knew at the time that you went into the car that you were putting yourself into a position of some danger, is that correct? A. There is danger in anything I guess you do."

Assumption of risk as a matter of law does not appear in this case. The danger was no more patently obvious to a person of average intelligence than that in Prescott v. Ralph's Grocery Co., supra, 42 Cal. 2d 158, 265 P.2d 904, 905, where the patron of a grocery store slipped and fell on a sidewalk on which there was "a lot of water," and the court reversed for erroneous instructions on assumption of risk; Hawk v. City of Newport Beach, supra, 46 Cal.2d 213, 293 P.2d 48, where a 17-year old boy injured himself when he dived from a rock, apparently because of the shallow water surrounding the rock, and the boy did not know the depth of the water except that the greatest depth he encountered wading out to the rock was appproximately up to his waistline; or Erde v. City of Los Angeles, 116 Cal.App. 2d 565, 254 P.2d 110, where plaintiff was injured by a falling light standard after he noticed the shade was broken and in a position likely to fall and had asked that it be repaired.

Cases upon which defendants principally rely are distinguishable. In Southern R. Co. v. Edwards, 5 Cir., 44 F.2d 526, and in Fisher v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 8 Cir., 199 F.2d 308, the injury occurred as a result of an obviously dangerous method of unloading poles which had been properly loaded. In Fletter v. City and County of San Francisco, 110 Cal.App. 2d 820, 824, 244 P.2d 59, 61, the plaintiff's testimony was "subject to only one interpretation, that knowing of the existence of the opening, he purposely stepped across for a hand truck, misjudged the distance, and fell into the opening."

[6] Defendants claim that the nonsuits can be sustained upon the ground of failure to prove that defendants owed a duty to plaintiff. They are mistaken. That question was not before the trial court for consideration and action, nor is it before this court. Plaintiff had not completed his case as to defendants' responsibility when he rested and defendants moved for a nonsuit. Upon resting his case in chief, plaintiff's counsel did so conditionally. He said: "Now, Your Honor, we are prepared to rest except for the introduction of certain very brief testimony with respect to where these cars came from, by whom they were delivered and when they were taken off the siding, part of which will be covered by stipulation, perhaps all, and part by the introduction of a couple of documents * * * I would ask leave that I rest subject simply to being permitted to reopen to put in this small portion of evidence." This request was granted. The court later said, "Well, you have rested your case with the exception of certain documents?" Plaintiff's counsel replied that this was correct. Twelve minutes later the motions for nonsuit were made. Obviously, plaintiff had not "completed * * * the presentation of his evidence" on the question of defendants' responsibility. Not until "after" such completion would a motion for nonsuit on that ground be in order. Code Civ.Proc. § 581c. It was proper to consider the questions of assumption of risk and contributory negligence for it was manifest that plaintiff was not going to introduce any more evidence pertinent to those issues. Moreover, plaintiff makes no claim that the motions on those grounds were prematurely made. See Skelton v. Schacht Motor Car Co., 22 Cal.App. 144, 146, 133 P. 504; Dineen v. City and County of San Francisco, 38 Cal. App.2d 486, 493, 101 P.2d 736.

[7] The contention is also made that this appeal should be dismissed because the notice of appeal was couched in terms of an appeal from a formal written judgment instead of the minute order which preceded it, although filed within 60 days of the entry of the minute order. It is clear that plaintiff seeks a review of the order of nonsuit, which is the judgment in a case such as this. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 581c and 581d, construed in Costa v. Regents of University of Cal., 103 Cal.App. 2d 491, 492–494, 229 P.2d 867, and cases therein cited. The notice of appeal was filed in ample time. No one has been misled. No prejudice to the defendants is involved. The notice should and will be treated as being from the appealable order and, therefore, effective. See Holden v. California Emp., etc., Comm., 101 Cal. App.2d 427, 430, 225 P.2d 634; Collins v. City and County of San Francisco, 112 Cal.App.2d 719, 722, 247 P.2d 362.

The judgment is reversed.

Civ. 18267.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 27, 1959.

Proceeding on petition for appointment of guardian for 15-year-old minor. From an order of the Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Harold Jacoby, J., appointing as guardians persons who were not related to minor over objection of mother and minor's maternal grandparents, the mother appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, P. J., held that fact that minor child had nominated a guardian did not dispense with requirement that guardianship be shown to be necessary or convenient before appointing strangers as guardians of minor, who was a ward of Juvenile Court.

Order reversed.

1. Parent and Child ⇐2(1)

Parents of a legitimate child have preference over a nonparent and custody may not be given to a nonparent unless the parent is found unfit.

2. Infants ⇐16.12

Fact that child was a ward of juvenile court did not of itself imply either that custody had been removed from mother, or that mother was unfit. West's Ann. Welfare & Inst.Code, § 739.

3. Guardian and Ward ⇐13(4)

Fact that 15-year-old minor child had nominated a guardian did not dispense with requirement that guardianship be shown to be necessary or convenient before appointing strangers as guardian of minor, who was a ward of juvenile court. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 739, 750.

Rodney G. Commons, Oakland, for appellant.

Richard D. Sanders, Pittsburg, for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by Alice Kostors, the mother of Evelyn Kostors, from an order appointing respondents, Earl and Elsie Gilbert, as guardians of the person and estate of Evelyn Kostors, a minor.

Respondents, who are not related in any way to this 15-year-old minor, were appointed guardians of her person and estate over the objections of her mother and her maternal grandparents. Her father is not living, and no relative supported the petition of respondents. The minor was, throughout the pendency of this proceeding, a ward of the Juvenile Court. Although appellant's brief, to the statement of facts in which we may look (Rule 17(b), Rules on Appeal) because no respondents' brief was filed, states that the petition for letters was filed at the request of the probation officer, there is no showing or suggestion of notice to or consent by the Juvenile Court. Neither petition nor order makes any reference to the fitness or lack of fitness of the mother. She appeals from the order. Respondents have filed no brief.

[1] Although our Supreme Court has recognized a "modern trend" to "regard as of primary importance the welfare of the minor himself" (In re Estate of Mathews, 174 Cal. 679, 683, 164 P. 8, 9), and despite some strong dissents, the majority of that court holds to the doctrine of parental right in guardianship and custody matters (for full review of the decisions, see In re Guardianship of Smith, 147 Cal.App.2d 686, 302 P.2d 86). We are therefore bound by the rule that "The parents of a legitimate child have preference over a non-parent and the custody shall not be given to a non-parent unless the parent is found unfit." In re Guardianship of Smith, 42 Cal.2d 91, 92, 265 P.2d 888, 889, 37 A.L.R.2d 867. Here the finding of unfitness is wholly lacking.

[2, 3] The fact that the child is a ward of the Juvenile Court does not of itself imply either that custody has been removed from the mother or that the mother is unfit, since the Juvenile Court "may define the extent of control permitted" to the parent and "no ward of the juvenile court shall be taken from the custody of his parent" without the latter's consent, unless specified facts supporting such removal are found. Welf. & Inst.Code, § 739. There is nothing in this record to suggest that any such finding was ever made by the Juvenile Court. The fact that the minor is over 14 years of age, and has nominated a guardian, does not dispense with the requirement that guardianship be shown to be "necessary or convenient." In re Guardianship of Kentera, 41 Cal.2d 639, 262 P.2d 317, 319. It is said in Kentera (41 Cal.2d at page 643, 262 P.2d at page 319): "The statutory provisions were not intended to upset the normal relationship of parent and child or to disrupt normal family discipline by allowing the fourteen-year-old minor to withdraw from the family circle at his whim." When the parent is not found unfit, a finding of necessity and convenience for the appointment of a stranger as guardian of the person would have this result.

We have left open the question whether, in view of the complete custodial control given by the statute to a juvenile court over its wards, the appointment of a guardian of the person of such a ward can ever be necessary or convenient unless the juvenile court first terminates its wardship. Welf. & Inst.Code, § 750.

Appellant's statement that respondents have removed the child from this state, which statement is not denied by reason of respondents' failure to file a brief, points up the fact that this proceeding could achieve most of the results of an adoption without any consent by the only living parent and without any order depriving her of custody and control.

Order reversed.

The PEOPLE of State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Margaret COOK and Fred Cook, Defendants and Appellants.

Cr. 2839.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 20, 1959.

Prosecutions for grand theft. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, R. M. Dunne, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that evidence disclosing that defendants operating travel agency appropriated to their own use money given to agency by client in payment of airline tickets, sustained conviction, and there was no error in excluding on cross-examination question as to custom of trade in support of defendant's contention that their relationship with their particular airline was one of debtor and creditor since matter had not been raised on direct examination and character of relationship could only be established by their own particular agreement and not by evidence of how some other airline might handle situation.

Affirmed.

1. Embezzlement ⇐44(1)

In prosecution resulting in conviction of grand theft, evidence sustained findings that defendants had appropriated for their own use money which they had collected for payment of airline fares while operating travel agency, that defendants were under a fiduciary duty to deliver funds to airlines, and that their failure to do so supported conviction of embezzlement.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1122(5)

Where no request was made for inclusion of refused instructions in transcript on appeal, reviewing court could not ascertain on state of record whether such instructions were properly refused.

3. Customs and Usages ⇐15(1)
Witnesses ⇐269(2)

In prosecution for grand theft arising out of defendants' alleged appropriation of funds belonging to airline for their own use, there was no error in sustaining objection to cross-examination on part of defendants relative to custom of trade as supporting defendants' contention that their relationship with airline was one of debtor and creditor, since subject matter of question had not been raised on direct examination and that character of relationship between airline and defendants could only be established by their own particular agreement and not by evidence of how some other airline might handle similar situation.

Robert N. Chargin, Deputy Public Defender, Stockton, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction for grand theft, and from the order of the trial court denying defendants' motion for a new trial.

The defendants, Margaret and Fred Cook, operated a travel agency in the City of Lodi known as the Lodi Travel Service. The record contains a great amount of testimony regarding the relationship between the defendants and Air France International Air Lines and the desires of defendants to have Air France sponsor their membership in the International Air Travel Association, known as I.A.T.A., thereby entitling them to receive commissions on the sale of air transportation on lines operated by Air France. Mr. DeCabrol, District Manager for Air France, explained that until defendants became members of the I.A.T.A. they could not receive commissions, but once they became members they would receive commissions retroactively. Following discussions between defendants and DeCabrol, an oral agreement was entered into whereby the defendants would be permitted to sell Air France service to their clients. The arrangement between the parties provided that the defendants would notify Air France when a local client wished passage on the latter's facilities. Air France would then forward the requested ticket made out in the passenger's name. The defendants would deliver the ticket to the customer, collect the price of the ticket and remit the same in its entirety to Air France. It should be noted, however, that the agency was permitted to draw its own check for the amount of the ticket for remission to Air France.

In July of 1957, a Mrs. John Precissi made arrangements with the defendants for herself and friends for a tour of Europe. A portion of the tour involved utilization of Air France service. Defendants obtained tickets from Air France of the value of $4,491.88. These tickets were made out in the names of Mrs. Precissi and her friends and were delivered to them by defendants who in turn received a check for $6,896.68. This check was in payment of the Air France tickets and other travel service in connection with the tour. Mr. Cook cashed the check and obtained $4,000 in one-hundred dollar bills, and took the balance in two drafts. Thereafter the defendants left Lodi, leaving no forwarding address. Air France received none of the money paid to defendants for the tickets. Following their arrest, defendants admitted the appropriation of the money.

[1] Defendants now contend, as they did throughout the trial, that the relationship between them and Air France was one of debtor and creditor in that the tickets were sold by Air France directly to defendants. This contention was refuted by Mr. DeCabrol, District Manager for Air France. His testimony was that the tickets were sold by his company directly to the persons who were to use them, the clients of defendants, and that an agent cannot buy tickets for resale. He further stated the reason that the air line requested the travel agent to remit with his own check was in order to keep a record of sales so that when the question of sponsorship in the I.A.T.A. came up at some future date the company would have such record available. Were it not for this the air line would simply request a check direct from the purchaser. Under such facts the jury could properly find, as it did, that defendants had appropriated for their own use money which they had collected for the payment of the fare and therefore defendants were under a fiduciary duty to deliver the funds to the air lines and their failure so to do would support a conviction of embezzlement. People v. Hedderly, 43 Cal.2d 476, 274 P.2d 857; People v. Foss, 7 Cal.2d 669, 62 P.2d 372.

[2] Defendants' further contention that the trial court erred in failing to give certain instructions requested by them is not properly before this court. No request was made for the inclusion of the refused instructions in the transcript and hence this court cannot ascertain on this state of the record whether such instructions were properly requested. People v. Rivera, 123 Cal.App.2d 358, 266 P.2d 810.

[3] Equally without merit is defendants' final contention, which is made without reference to the transcript and without benefit of authority, that the trial court erred in refusing to admit evidence of custom of the trade in support of defendants' contention that their relationship with Air France was one of debtor and creditor. The record shows that the local manager for United Air Lines was called as a witness for the prosecution and testified to certain payments made to United by the defendants. On cross-examination he was asked if it was not true that in so far as United Air Lines was concerned any non-sponsored travel agent was considered merely as a purchaser of the ticket and not as a representative of United Air Lines. Not alone was the question improper cross-examination, since the subject matter of the question had not been raised on direct examination, but furthermore the character of the relationship between Air France and defendants could only be established by their own particular agreement and not by evidence of how some other air line might handle a similar situation.

The judgment is affirmed.

Cr. 6468.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 14, 1959

Defendant was convicted of an offense and from a judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, Albert E. Wheatcroft, J., the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that an act of sexual intercourse between defendant and the 14-year-old daughter of his half-sister was incestuous under the statute.

Judgment and order affirmed.

HERNDON, Justice.

The sole question posed by this appeal is whether an admitted act of sexual intercourse between defendant and the 14-year old daughter of his half-sister was incestuous under section 285 of the Penal Code: "Persons being within the degrees of consanguinity within which marriages are declared by law to be incestuous and void, who intermarry with each other, or who commit fornication or adultery with each other, are punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not less than one year nor more than fifty years."

Section 59 of the Civil Code provides: "Marriages between parents and children, ancestors and descendants of every degree, and between brothers and sisters of the half as well as the whole blood, and between uncles and nieces or aunts and nephews, are incestuous, and void from the beginning, whether the relationship is legitimate or illegitimate."

The essence of defendant's argument, as stated in his opening brief, is as follows: "An ordinary reading of Civil Code, Section 59, leads counsel to the conclusion that 'half-uncle' and 'half-niece' are not included in the language. The words 'of the half as well as the whole blood' clearly apply to the words 'brothers and sisters'; they clearly do not apply to 'uncles and nieces'. In such case, where 'half-bloods' are mentioned as to one class of persons and not mentioned as to another class, it seems clear that 'half-bloods' are not covered as to the latter class."

[1, 2] Defendant seeks to invoke the rule that where the language of a penal statute is reasonably susceptible of two constructions that construction which is more favorable to the accused will ordinarily be adopted. People v. Valentine, 28 Cal.2d 121, 169 P.2d 1.

Although the question here presented has not been decided in any reported California decision, the great weight of authority is adverse to defendant's contention. We are in accord with the prevailing view that the statutory prohibition applies to the relationship here involved. By definition, an uncle is a brother of one's father or mother, and no distinction is made between the whole and the half blood according to common and ordinary usage. Black's Law Dictionary, 4th Ed.; The Oxford English Dictionary, Vol. 11, page 86. In referring to himself as the "half-uncle" of the victim of his act, defendant employs a misnomer; it is a term unknown to common usage.

In State v. Reedy, 1890, 44 Kan. 190, 24 P. 66, 67, the terms of the applicable statutes were essentially the same as those here involved. The Supreme Court of Kansas declared: "The language employed by the legislature is to be interpreted according to its common meaning; and, when the terms 'uncle' and 'niece' are viewed in that light, they will include the half-brother of the father, and the daughter of a brother of the half-blood."

In State v. Guiton, 1898, 51 La.Ann. 155, 24 So. 784, 785, the defendant was convicted of incest with a niece, the daughter of his half-brother. The definitive statute provided that "marriage is prohibited between brother and sister, whether of the whole or of the half blood, whether legitimate or illegitimate, and also between the uncle and the niece, the aunt and the nephew." On appeal the same contention as that urged by defendant here was advanced, namely that since the qualifying words relating to the half blood were used only in reference to brother and sister, the relationship involved was not covered. In rejecting the contention the Louisiana court said: "It is true that the compilers of our Code inserted the qualifying words [half-blood]. * * * We incline to the opinion that 'brother' and 'sister', as used, would include brother and sister of the half blood, without the qualifying words of the articles of the Code; that, as relates to the crime charged, the half blood is meant equally with the whole blood. * * Even if it should be conceded that too broad a meaning is given to the words 'brother' and 'sister,' and that, if used alone, they do not mean brothers and sisters of the half blood, here, in terms, brothers and sisters of the half blood are included in the article, followed by the words 'and also,' which refer, as we take it, to uncle and niece, and the qualifying words just preceding, 'of the half blood.' So that, in our view, it is as if the statute read, 'Marriage is prohibited between brother and sister, whether of the whole or half blood, and also uncle and niece, whether of the whole or the half blood.'"

In State v. Harris, 1908, 149 N.C. 513, 62 S.E. 1090, 1091, defendant was convicted of incest under a charge that he had carnal intercourse with a female who was the daughter of his half-sister. In defining the crime, the statute referred to intercourse between brother and sister and uncle and niece, but in referring to brother and sister added the qualifying clause "of the half or whole blood." In affirming the conviction the appellate court said: "For obvious reasons, nothing is said of the half or whole blood. The relation of uncle and niece must of necessity be of the half blood, as in all other relations of consanguinity, other than those defined in the preceding section. As here, the daughter of defendant's sister is of course related to him only by the half blood. The fact that the mother of the girl is only half-sister of defendant cannot affect the case. * * * We think the defendant and his niece, the daughter of the half-sister, clearly within the statute."

[3] It has been held generally that prohibitions against incestuous relationships apply to designated near relatives, whether by the half blood or the whole blood. State v. Lamb, 1929, 209 Iowa 132, 227 N.W. 830, 831; State v. Wyman, 1887, 59 Vt. 527, 8 A. 900; Simon v. State, 1892, 31 Tex. Cr.R. 186, 20 S.W. 399, 716; People v. L. A. 25209.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Petition for prohibition to prevent the trial of petitioner under information charging him with unlawful possession of narcotics. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that the fact that officers did not disclose identity of informer, whose information led to arrest of defendant for unlawful possession of narcotics, did not make the arrest illegal and evidence obtained as result thereof inadmissible, where no motion to strike the officer's testimony was made after identity of informer was refused, and neither in his objection to introduction of narcotics in evidence nor by argument elsewhere in the record did defendant indicate that he was relying on refusal to identify the informer to establish illegality of the arrest and search.

Alternative writ discharged and peremptory writ denied.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

An information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County charged defendant with possessing narcotics in violation of Health and Safety Code, section 11500. His motion to set aside the information under Penal Code section 995 was denied, and he now seeks a writ of prohibition to prevent his trial.

On June 11, 1958, Officer Hill of the Los Angeles Police Department Narcotics Division received information from a confidential informer that defendant was in possession of narcotics and that the room he occupied in a rooming house was being used as a "shooting gallery," a place where addicts congregate to use narcotics. The informer accompanied Officers Hill and Loreste to the neighborhood of the rooming house and pointed out the building and the room defendant occupied.

An hour or so later, the officers entered the rooming house with the permission of the landlady, who accompanied them upstairs to defendant's room. As they approached the room, the door opened and defendant emerged dressed in a bathrobe. The landlady indicated that he was the person the officers had inquired about, and they placed him under arrest. The officers had no warrant. When the officers searched defendant's person after the arrest, they found narcotics and paraphernalia for their use in the pockets of his bathrobe. Defendant admitted that the narcotics were his, that he had purchased them that morning, and that he was on his way to the bathroom to take a fix.

The informer was not present at the arrest, and took no other part than to supply information of defendant's possession and show the officers the location of defendant's residence.

At the preliminary hearing, Officer Hill testified to the foregoing facts. He also testified that the informer had provided accurate information in the past that led to the arrest of three persons for unlawful possession of narcotics. He stated that in his opinion the informer was a reliable source of information and that he had relied upon him in making the arrest in the present case.

On cross-examination, Officer Hill was asked the identity of the informer. The prosecution's objection was sustained on the ground that the informer's identity was privileged. (See, Code Civ.Proc., § 1881, subd. (5).) After the cross-examination, the prosecution sought to introduce into evidence the narcotics found on defendant's person after the arrest. Defendant's objection on the ground that they had been obtained as a result of an illegal search and seizure was overruled. Defendant was committed and held for trial and his motion to set aside the commitment was denied.

Defendant contends that since the identity of the informer was not disclosed, the officers could not justify the arrest on the basis of the informer's information; that the arrest was therefore illegal and the evidence obtained as a result thereof inadmissible; and that accordingly the writ should issue since there was no competent evidence to support the commitment. Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39; Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 269, 271, 294 P.2d 23.

In the Priestly case we held that "when the prosecution seeks to show reasonable cause for a search by testimony as to communications from an informer, either the identity of the informer must be disclosed when the defendant seeks disclosure or such testimony must be struck on proper motion of the defendant." 50 Cal.2d at page 819, 330 P.2d at page 43.

[1, 2] In the present case no motion to strike the officer's testimony was made after the identity of the informer was refused, and neither in his objection to the introduction of the narcotics in evidence nor by argument elsewhere in the record did defendant indicate that he was relying on the refusal to identify the informer to establish the illegality of the arrest and search. The magistrate did not err in sustaining the objection to the question asking the identity of the informer, for the prosecution was entitled to elect between disclosure and having the officer's testimony struck. It was incumbent on defendant to compel this election, however, by moving to strike or otherwise making his position clear. The prosecution may have had evidence other than the information of the informer to justify the search or it may have been willing to waive the privilege of nondisclosure if its case would otherwise fail, and it was entitled to an opportunity to produce such evidence or waive nondisclosure. It was not called upon to do so, however, while evidence of reasonable cause stood unchallenged in the record. To hold that the magistrate or trial court must strike the evidence on its own motion when the objection to it has not been called to its attention would open the door to needless repetitions of preliminary hearings. It would also permit the defendant to gamble on an acquittal at his trial secure in the knowledge that a conviction would be reversed on appeal and a new trial ordered. No undue burden is placed on the defendant by requiring him to make a motion to strike when the basis for excluding evidence theretofore properly admitted becomes apparent, and there is no basis for departing from the settled rule requiring such a motion (City of Venice v. Short Line Beach Land Co., 1919, 180 Cal. 447, 453, 181 P. 658; Ballos v. Natural, 1928, 93 Cal.App. 601, 608, 269 P. 972; Brandt v. Krogh, 1910, 14 Cal.App. 39, 56, 111 P. 275; Fricke, California Criminal Evidence, 444–445 (4th ed. 1957)) in the present situation.

The alternative writ is discharged and the peremptory writ is denied.

McCOMB, Justice.

This cause was transferred to this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division Three. Upon further examination of the record, we adopt the opinion of that court prepared by Mr. Justice Vallée, with such omissions as hereinafter appear, as and for the decision of this court. As modified, it reads:

"Plaintiff brought this suit for declaratory relief to determine the validity of certain ordinances of defendant city. The cause was tried and judgment rendered that Ordinance 49 of Culver City, as amended by Ordinance 250, is invalid and unenforceable against plaintiff insofar as it provides for the enforcement of the provisions of the ordinance by criminal process. On appeal the judgment, to the extent that it adjudged that Ordinance 49, as amended by Ordinance 250, was invalid and unenforceable against plaintiff insofar as it provided for the enforcement of the provisions of the ordinance by criminal process, was affirmed. In other respects the judgment was reversed with directions to the superior court to amend its findings of fact and conclusions of law. (Agnew v. City of Culver City, 147 Cal.App.2d 144 [304 P.2d 788].)

"The superior court amended its findings of fact pursuant to the directions; and rendered judgment that 'plaintiff, as a duly State-licensed electrical contractor, is entitled to contract anywhere in the State to do electrical work authorized by said General State License, without applying for or obtaining any license or permit from any municipality, except such licenses or permits as may be required by public agencies with respect to the quality, safety and character of electrical installations, and except such other licenses as may be required by public agencies requiring payment of license fees for revenue purposes only, under duly and legally adopted Ordinances enforceable by civil process only, which tax may, however, be increased by way of penalty of a percentage thereof for failure to pay the same as required by said Ordinances'; and 'That Ordinance No. CS–49, as amended by Ordinance No. CS–250, is invalid and unenforceable against plaintiff insofar as it provides for the enforcement of the provisions of said Ordinance by criminal process.'

"Defendants appeal from the part of the judgment reading, 'except such other licenses as may be required by public agencies requiring payment of license fees for revenue purposes only, under duly and legally adopted Ordinances enforceable by civil process only,' and 'That Ordinance No. CS–49, as amended by Ordinance No. CS–250, is invalid and unenforceable against plaintiff insofar as it provides for the enforcement of the provisions of said Ordinance by criminal process.'

"The contentions are that the penal provisions of a business license ordinance, and particularly Ordinance 49 as amended by Ordinance 250, are not invalid and do not invalidate the ordinance in imposing an additional burden on plaintiff in carrying on his work as a licensed contractor; and that the penal provisions of a business license ordinance, and particularly Ordinance 49 as amended by Ordinance 250, do not invalidate the ordinance as requiring imprisonment for a debt in violation of section 15, article I, of the Constitution.

"Plaintiff is an electrical contractor licensed by the Contractors' State License Board under section 7000 et seq. of the Business and Professions Code. He applied to the proper official for a permit authorizing him to do electrical work within Culver City at a designated address. He was informed it would be necessary for him to pay a license fee of $100 under Ordinance 49 and to obtain from the business license collector a business license to do work as an electrical contractor in the city. Plaintiff refused to pay the fee and to obtain the license on the ground his state license as an electrical contractor authorized him to do work as such in Culver City without conforming to any local ordinances requiring a license or the payment of a fee.

"Ordinance 49, as amended by Ordinance 250, makes it unlawful for any person to commence or carry on any business specified in the ordinance without first having paid the required license fee and having procured a license certificate so to do from the city and without obtaining the permit, certificate of compliance, or other instrument required by the ordinance. The license fee required was $50 a year or part thereof from local and $100 a year or part thereof from itinerant electricians and electrical contractors. The amount of the license fee is made a debt to Culver City. Violation of any provision of the ordinance is a misdemeanor. On payment of the required fee it is made the duty of the license collector to issue a license certificate.

"On the former appeal it was expressly held that Ordinance 49, as amended by Ordinance 250, is invalid and unenforceable against plaintiff insofar as it provides for the enforcement of its provisions by criminal process, and that the fee required was for regulation and not revenue purposes.

"In the recent case of Agnew v. City of Los Angeles, 51 Cal.2d 1 [330 P.2d 385], the Supreme Court held that a section of the Electrical Code of the City of Los Angeles which provided that 'In order to obtain a license tax registration certificate number, the contractor must pay the city clerk a fee based on the amount of his gross receipts' and made it a misdemeanor for an electrical contractor to install wiring without a permit from the Department of Building and Safety of the city was invalid for the reason that it was in conflict with the Contractors' License Act (Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 7000–7145) which has preempted the field of regulating contractors.

"The license fee required by the Culver City ordinance is of the same character as that held invalid in Agnew v. City of Los Angeles, 51 Cal.2d 1 [330 P.2d 385]. As said on the prior appeal in this case, it limits the right of a contractor holding a state license to contract in Culver City unless he pays the city the prescribed fee and obtains a permit from the city; the requirement for the payment of a fee and the obtaining of a permit nullifies the permission given a contractor by the general law to conduct his business at any place in the state. And in the Los Angeles case it is said (51 Cal. 2d at page —, 330 P.2d at page 388):

" 'The only material difference between the ordinance held invalid in Agnew v. City of Culver City, supra [147 Cal.App.2d 144, 304 P.2d 788], and the ordinance here involved is that the former imposed a fee of $100, while in the instant case the fee varies according to the amount of the contractor's gross receipts, the minimum being $12.'

"We hold that the penal provisions of Ordinance 49, as amended by Ordinance 250, are invalid. Agnew v. City of Culver City, 147 Cal.App.2d 144 [304 P.2d 788], constitutes the law of the case. (Katemis v. Westerlind, 142 Cal.App.2d 799, 805–806 [299 P.2d 383]; Hard v. Hollywood Turf Club, 134 Cal.App.2d 174, 178–179 [285 P.2d 321]; Stock v. Meek, 114 Cal. App.2d 584, 586 [250 P.2d 622].) Furthermore, the holding in Agnew v. City of Los Angeles, 51 Cal.2d 1 [330 P.2d 385], is conclusive on the question. As said in that case (51 Cal.2d —, 330 P.2d at page 388):

" 'Of course, as contended by defendants, a municipality may tax electrical contractors, as other trades, professions and businesses are taxed. The fees in the present case, however, are exacted not as a business tax but as the price of a license that the city cannot require.'

"Defendants' contention that the penal provisions of Ordinance 49, as amended by Ordinance 250, are not invalid, cannot be sustained." []*

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

A jury found defendant guilty of possessing narcotics in violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code. On this appeal she claims that there was an unlawful search and seizure and that there is insufficient evidence to show knowing possession.

Defendant was taken into custody on the morning of January 2, 1957, by Inspector Noel and three other officers. Noel and one of the other officers testified at the trial and related substantially the same facts with respect to the arrest. Upon entering the building in which defendant's apartment was located, the officers, who did not have a warrant, saw defendant open her door and walk down a hallway to the rear of the building. Her door was left ajar, and the officers entered and began to conduct a search. When defendant returned a few minutes later, she was placed under arrest, and a vial of narcotics was found in her skirt pocket. She said, "Well, I guess you have got me good this time," and, when questioned as to where she had obtained the narcotics, she replied, "I'd rather not say." She did not deny knowing that the narcotics were on her person.

Inspector Noel testified that the officers had gone to defendant's apartment because of information obtained from two sources on the morning of the arrest. A man who was known to the inspector as James Allen and who claimed to be living with defendant came to the inspector's office and said that defendant was selling narcotics at her apartment. Shortly thereafter, Noel was told by Inspector Ohlson, who did not testify at the trial, that Ohlson had received the same information from Randolph Clark. According to Noel, both Allen and Clark had, on previous occasions, given the authorities information which led to arrests, and, in his opinion, they were reliable informers. A photograph was introduced into evidence which Noel identified as being that of James Allen.

Defendant took the stand and said that she was living with a James Allen at the time she was taken into custody but that he was not the man whose photograph was in evidence. She testified that she had not known of the presence of narcotics on her person, and she denied making the incriminating remarks attributed to her by the officers. Her explanation was that one of her boarders, Randolph Clark, had quarreled with her and that, while she was washing clothes shortly before the arrest, Faye Robertson, a woman living with Clark, had asked her to keep something for a few minutes and had put an object wrapped in a five-dollar bill into her skirt pocket. According to defendant, the vial of narcotics was wrapped in a five-dollar bill when found by the police, and she then saw the vial for the first time. The officers testified, however, that there was no five-dollar bill in defendant's pocket, and, when Faye Robertson was called to the stand by the People, she testified that she did not know of any quarrel between defendant and Clark and that she had not given defendant the narcotics.

The defense called a witness who testified that his name was James Allen, that he had formerly lived at defendant's address, and that he had never given Inspector Noel information about defendant or anyone else. It was stipulated that the witness was not the informer referred to by Noel.

The evidence against defendant, if legally secured, clearly warrants the jury's implied finding that she knowingly possessed narcotics, and the only claim of error which need be discussed is the assertion that the evidence against defendant was obtained as the result of an unlawful search and seizure.

[1, 2] Defendant did not object at any point in the trial to the admission of evidence on the ground that it was obtained by an unlawful search and seizure, and she may not raise the matter for the first time on appeal. People v. Goldberg, 152 Cal. App.2d 562, 572, 314 P.2d 151; People v. Williams, 148 Cal.App.2d 525, 532, 307 P.2d 48; see People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal.2d 260, 262, 294 P.2d 17; cf. Robison v. Superior Court, 49 Cal.2d 186, 187, 316 P.2d 1. Moreover, the record permits the determination that, notwithstanding the absence of a warrant, the arrest and ensuing search were justified because there was reason to believe that defendant had committed a felony. Noel's testimony regarding James Allen, with whom he dealt personally, is alone sufficient for this purpose, without resort to his testimony about the information he received indirectly from Randolph Clark. The position taken by defendant, although not entirely clear, appears to be that the showing made by her with respect to Allen compels the conclusion that the alleged informer either did not exist or was not reliable. Obviously, however, defendand succeeded, at most, in creating a conflict in the evidence for the trial court to resolve, and the court was entitled to believe Noel and to determine that the communication in question was in fact made by an informer known to Noel as James Allen and that, in view of the informer's past reliability, there was reasonable cause for the arrest and search.

What has been said above makes it unnecessary to consider defendant's claim that the information allegedly given by Randolph Clark cannot be relied upon to justify the search and seizure because Noel learned of it indirectly through Inspector Ohlson, who did not testify.

The judgment is affirmed.

L. A. 25107.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
Feb. 2, 1959.

Action by county auditor for declaratory relief against all incumbent elective officers to determine effective date of ordinance increasing compensation of officers. From judgment of the Superior Court, Kern County, Robert B. Lambert, J., adjudging effective date of increase to be that as provided in ordinance, auditor appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held under statute suspending constitutional prohibition of salary increases to municipal officers during war and defining period of war as commencing when armed forces of the United States are engaged in active military operations and ending one year after termination of hostilities therein as proclaimed by the President, by Presidential proclamation fixing terminal date of eligibility of certain Korean veteran benefits and reciting that the armistice had terminated the hostilities in conflict, suspension of prohibition against salary increases terminated one year after Presidential declaration.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Plaintiff, the auditor of Kern County, brought this action for declaratory relief against all of the incumbent elective officers of that county to determine the effective date of a salary ordinance adopted by the Board of Supervisors of Kern County on December 31, 1957, increasing the compensation of these officers. The officers contend that the increase became effective on February 1, 1958, as provided in the ordinance. The auditor contends that the California Constitution prevents the salary ordinance from becoming effective until after defendants' terms of office expire on January 5, 1959.[1]

1. The ordinance provides that if the provisions of law prohibit the salary increases from becoming effective on February 1, 1958, they should become effective on January 5, 1959, the date of the expiration of defendants' terms of office.

The Constitution provides that "the compensation of any county, township or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office, * * *" (Art. XI, sec. 5.) This section was amended in 1944 to permit the Legislature to suspend the provision "for any period during which the United States is engaged in war and for one year after the termination of hostilities therein as proclaimed by the President of the United States." Pursuant to this amendment, the Legislature suspended the provision during "time of war" (Gov.Code, § 53071). "War" is defined in section 53070 of the Government Code as "that period of time commencing: (a) When Congress declares war; or (b) When the armed forces of the United States are engaged in active military operations against any foreign power whether or not war has been formally declared; * * * and ending one year after the termination of hostilities therein as proclaimed by the President of the United States."

The trial court found that beginning in 1950 the armed forces of the United States were engaged in active military operations in Korea that constituted "hostilities" and a "war" within the meaning of section 53070(b); that no proclamation has been issued by the President specifically terminating these hostilities; and that under section 53071, the constitutional prohibition against salary increases is still suspended. The court therefore held that the salary increases were effective February 1, 1958. Plaintiff contends that the termination of hostilities in the Korean conflict has been proclaimed by the President and that therefore the salary increases cannot become effective before January 5, 1959, the expiration date of the terms of office during which the salary ordinance was adopted. We agree with this contention.

On January 7, 1955, a presidential proclamation fixing the terminal date of eligibility for certain Korean veteran benefits declared that: "Whereas the armistice between the United Nations Command, on the one hand, and the Korean People's Army and the Chinese People's Volunteers, on the other hand, effective July 27, 1953, has terminated hostilities in said conflict * * *." (Presidential Proclamation No. 3080, U.S.Code Congressional and Administrative News 1955, p. 985, 3 C.F.R. 17 [20 C.F.R. 173]). On the same date the President issued Executive Order No. 10585, U.S.Code Congressional and Administrative News 1955, p. 1048, relating to income tax exemptions of the armed forces, in which he declared that "January 31, 1955, is designated as the date of termination of combatant activities" in the Korean conflict. The fact that the immediate purpose of these declarations was to terminate certain veteran benefits does not make them any the less official public proclamations by the President of the termination of the Korean hostilities. The President could hardly be expected to make such declarations unrelated to some specific purpose simply to declare the termination of a formally undeclared war. (See Pye, The Legal Status of the Korean Hostilities, 45 Geo.L.J. 45, 58–59; 27 Atty. Gen.Op. 295.) The United States Court of Military Appeals, relying on the foregoing presidential declarations, has held that for purposes of the military code the hostilities in the Korean conflict were at an end before June 4, 1955: "[T]aking into consideration all the circumstances existing on June 4, 1955, the date the offense in this case was committed, the inescapable conclusion is that a 'time of war' condition has ended." United States v. Sanders, 7 U.S. C.M.A. 21, 21 C.M.R. 147, 148.

Since the presidential declarations of January 7, 1955, fulfilled the requirements of Article XI, Section 5 of the Constitution and sections 53070–53071 of the Government Code, the suspension of the provision prohibiting salary increases terminated on January 7, 1956, one year after the presidential declaration of termination of hostilities. It follows that the salary ordinance of December 31, 1957, did not become effective until after defendants' terms of office expired on January 5, 1959.

The judgment is reversed.

v.

John Burr ROBERSON, Defendant and Appellant.

Crim. 6467.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 3, 1959.

Prosecution for committing lewd and lascivious acts on bodies of two females under age of fourteen years. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. Howard Ziemann, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that in absence of more specific and relative information, mere declaration that defendant pleaded guilty under a "promise" of probation was ineffective to create a meritorious issue before reviewing court particularly when it was clear from record that defendant was at all times represented by counsel and never called matter to attention of trial judge on motion to set aside guilty plea, or otherwise, either before, at time of trial, or after judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1044

In absence of more specific and relative information, mere declaration that defendant pleaded guilty under a "promise" of probation was ineffective to create a meritorious issue before reviewing court particularly when it was clear from record that defendant was at all times represented by counsel and never called matter to attention of trial judge on motion to set aside guilty plea, or otherwise, either before, at time of trial, or after judgment.

2. Criminal Law ⇐274, 1149

In allowing or denying a motion to set aside a plea of guilty, trial court is vested with broad discretion, exercise of which will not be disturbed on appeal unless abuse is clearly shown.

3. Criminal Law ⇐273

A defendant, by a voluntary plea of guilty, admits every element of offense with which he is charged.

4. Criminal Law ⇐982.3(3)

5. Criminal Law ⇐1147

An order denying probation will not be reviewed on appeal from judgment unless record clearly shows an abuse of discretion.

6. Criminal Law ⇐982.3(3)

In prosecution for committing lewd and lascivious acts on bodies of two females under age of fourteen years wherein two doctors were appointed to examine defendant and one of doctors reported that defendant was not only a sexual psychopath but a menace to health and safety of others, trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's application for probation. John Burr Roberson, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Defendant was charged in Counts 1 and 2 of an information with having committed lewd and lascivious acts on the bodies of two females under the age of fourteen years, in violation of Section 288, Penal Code. He pleaded not guilty to both counts, but on the day set for trial defendant, represented by, and in the presence of his counsel, withdrew his plea of not guilty to Count 1 and substituted therefor a plea of guilty. The court, under Section 5504, Welfare & Institutions Code, appointed two doctors to examine him and ordered the Probation Officer to submit a probation report. Proceedings on Count 2 were continued for further disposition, and later dismissed.

Upon the report of the two court-appointed doctors that defendant was "a possible sexual psychopath," the court below, on March 10, 1958, committed him to Atascadero State Hospital for a period not to exceed ninety days for observation. Thereafter, returning defendant for sentence, the Director of the State Hospital, Dr. Rude, reported to the court that defendant was a sexual psychopath, would not benefit from further care and was a menace to the health and safety of others; and recommended he be sentenced on the charge. On July 11, 1958, defendant, with his counsel, appeared before the lower court, at which time it found defendant to be a sexual psychopath, denied probation and sentenced him to the state prison. Defendant's appeal is taken from "my case," but we will treat the same as one taken from the judgment entered upon his plea of guilty and the subsequent denial of probation.

Although defendant was represented by counsel at all stages of the proceedings in the court below, he appears before us now in propria persona. His opening brief, not in compliance with the Rules of Appeal and consisting of only several short paragraphs, declares that he had been drinking to relieve a back pain and that because of a "promise" of probation, he pleaded guilty to a crime he "did not commit."

[1] Defendant's bare statement that he was "promised probation" stands alone without any explanation concerning the manner in which the alleged promise was made, by whom and when it was made, and of what it consisted. In the absence of more specific and relative information, the mere declaration that defendant pleaded guilty under a "promise" of probation is ineffective to create a meritorious issue before this court, particularly when it is clear from the record he was at all times represented by counsel, and never called the matter to the attention of the trial judge on a motion to set aside the guilty plea, or otherwise, either before, at the time of, or after judgment.

In all of the proceedings in the court below, defendant was represented by competent counsel of his own choice, who was present at all times with his client. There is no hint in the record or otherwise that any of the proceedings were other than proper or not free from duress, fraud, coercion or other forces overreaching the free will of the defendant. Defendant's statement on this appeal is the only suggestion anywhere that a "promise" of probation ever existed, and it, in the absence of specific explanatory facts, constitutes nothing more than that it was the disappointed hope of getting probation that motivated defendant's plea of guilty. Defendant made no request of the trial court to be relieved of his guilty plea, but even if the matter were properly before this court on an issue of abuse of discretion, such a circumstance is wholly insufficient to justify appellate interference. Said the court in People v. Van Valkenburg, 111 Cal.App.2d 337, at page 342, 244 P.2d 750, at page 754: "* * * it is equally clear that mere disappointment of the accused in the awarded sentence, or reliance upon his own counsel's advice, are not sufficient to prove abuse of discretion in denying the motion. (Citations.)" We have no reason to believe that such a "promise" was ever made, or if it was, that it came from any one officially connected with the prosecution or the court, or that defendant's plea was not entered by him voluntarily, while fully informed of his rights and with the knowledge, and in accord with, the advice of his counsel.

[2] At no time, either before or after judgment, did defendant ask the court below to permit him to withdraw his plea of guilty and substitute a not guilty plea therefor. Had he filed such a motion, it would have been incumbent on him to show good cause for the substitution. At that time he could and should have set forth in detail all of the matters of which he now complains, and whatever defense to the charge he now claims. In allowing or denying such motion, the trial court is vested with a broad discretion, the exercise of which will not be disturbed on appeal unless abuse is clearly shown. People v. Northcott, 209 Cal. 639, 289 P. 634, 70 A.L.R. 806; People v. Cooper, 123 Cal.App.2d 353, 266 P.2d 566; People v. Broady, 120 Cal.App.2d 901, 262 P.2d 669; People v. Van Valkenburg, 111 Cal.App.2d 337, 244 P.2d 750.

Although we do not believe the matter to be properly before us, and are not confronted with the matter of discretion, nevertheless we have fully considered defendant's contentions in the light of the record on appeal and we find nothing which would justify this court's interference with the judgment of the court below.

[3] With reference to defendant's declaration that he "had been drinking to relieve a pain" in his back, we are unable to determine from his brief whether he made the statement in connection with his contention that he pleaded guilty to a crime "he did not commit," or presented it to this court as a "defense" to the charge. If it is the latter, he is not now in a position to urge the same since, by his voluntary plea of guilty, he has admitted every element of the offense with which he was charged. People v. Ottenstror, 127 Cal.App.2d 104, 273 P.2d 289.

[4–6] As to the lower court's disposition of defendant's application for probation, this, too, is discretionary with the trial judge, probation not being an absolute right to which a person is entitled. People v. Hainline, 219 Cal. 532, 28 P.2d 16; People v. Roach, 139 Cal.App. 384, 33 P.2d 895. In any event, an order denying probation will not be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment unless the record clearly shows an abuse of discretion. People v. Jackson, 89 Cal.App.2d 181, 200 P.2d 204; People v. Wiley, 33 Cal.App.2d 424, 91 P.2d 907. The limited record before us contains neither the probation officer's report nor the medical reports. However, it does disclose that a probation report was ordered, medical reports of the two court-appointed doctors were submitted and the report of Dr. Rude was filed; and that all were considered by the trial judge before judgment was pronounced. It further shows that the probation officer recommended a period of observation for defendant; the two doctors found him to be a "possible sexual psychopath" and Dr. Rude, after observing defendant, reported that he was not only a sexual psychopath, but a menace to the health and safety of others, and recommended his sentence on the felony charge. The trial court considered these matters, and, in addition, had the opportunity to talk with and observe the defendant. We are unable to find anything that even approaches an abuse of its discretion in denying defendant's application of probation.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

Frederick M. Dagampat, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6306.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 30, 1959.

Defendant and his codefendant were convicted of kidnapping. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Albert E. Wheatcroft, J., entered judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for new trial, and the defendant appealed from the judgment and the order. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that the requisite force or compulsion needed to justify conviction for kidnapping need not consist of the use of actual physical force or of express threats, and that the taking is forcible where it is accomplished through the giving of orders, which the victim feels compelled to obey because he fears harm or injury from the defendant, and his apprehension is not unreasonable under the circumstances, and that evidence sustained conviction for kidnapping.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Kidnapping ⇐5

2. Kidnapping ⇐1

The gravamen of the offense of kidnapping is some form of compulsion. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 207.

3. Kidnapping ⇐1

5. Kidnapping ⇐4

Where defendant is not charged with kidnapping for a specific purpose, the people are only required to prove that he intended to commit the acts denounced by statute dealing with kidnapping. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 207.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

In a court trial, Frederick M. Dagampat and Leo Soto Contreras were found guilty of kidnaping and were committed to the Youth Authority. Dagampat appeals from the judgment and the denial of his motion for new trial. Contreras has not appealed.

The evidence consisted of that received at the preliminary hearing and additional evidence introduced at the trial. Stanley Jaramillo, aged 15, was the complaining witness. As Stanley was walking away from a friend's house near the intersection of Sunset Boulevard and Beaudry on the night of December 7, 1957, an open convertible containing three boys drove up and stopped beside him. Appellant was the driver of the car; Contreras and a boy named Johnny Valencia were in the back seat. Valencia got out of the car and entered a drug store on the corner. Appellant told Stanley: "Get into the car. I want to talk to you about the fight." (On November 29, Stanley had witnessed a fight during which Contreras had stabbed one Manuel Avalos with a knife.) Stanley looked at Dagampat and Contreras, "and they were as if they were giving me some dirty looks"; he turned and saw Valencia approaching him from behind. Asked what he was afraid of, he testified: "Well, you know, like what they did to Manuel. I was scared they might do that to me, too. * * * Stab me too." Stanley said "All right." He got into the car and appellant drove away from the intersection. Stanley testified that the boys displayed no weapons and made no threats, but he entered the car because he was afraid of being stabbed.

After the car had proceeded for half a block, Contreras asked Stanley if he had witnessed the stabbing of Avalos. Upon receiving an affirmative answer, Contreras and Valencia began to hit him. The car stopped in an alley a few blocks away from Sunset and Beaudry and appellant opened the door. Stanley pushed appellant out of the car. After all four boys had alighted, Stanley was held by the jacket while the others hit him; they laughed as they administered the beating; Valencia also gouged his eyes. Stanley then slipped out of his jacket and ran away; as he was running, he was hit on the head by a bottle. On cross-examination, Stanley was asked whether he entered the car voluntarily and he replied: "Not because I wanted to." He admitted that he had not asked to be let out of the car and had not attempted to leave the car or to call for help. He was also asked the following question: "Now, * * * they just asked you if you wanted to get in the car at the drug store, didn't they?" and he answered "Yes."

Dagampat and Contreras were taken into custody shortly after Stanley ran away from the alley. Policewoman Florence Stanton testified that she had a conversation with Contreras about an hour after his arrest. Contreras told her: "If I had to do it over again I would do the same thing. I will probably do time for it but when I get out I know where I can get a .22 gun and if you ask for mercy I will laugh at you." Evidence of the conversation was introduced over the objection of Contreras that the corpus delicti had not been established. Upon motion of counsel for appellant the evidence was admitted only against Contreras.

Appellant testified that he observed Stanley standing on the corner of Sunset and Beaudry when the car stopped for a red light. He had known the complaining witness for six months or a year. He called Stanley over and asked him if he wanted to go for a ride. Stanley entered the car and appellant drove away at an average speed. He handed Stanley a bottle of wine and Stanley took a drink. After he had driven a few blocks, Contreras and Stanley suddenly began to fight; appellant did not participate in the struggle. He drove into an alley and stopped, whereupon Stanley ran away. Appellant denied holding Stanley, hitting him or throwing a bottle at him. At no time did Stanley call for help or indicate that he wanted to get out of the car.

Contreras gave a similar account of the ride. He testified that he and his companions had not been looking for Stanley, that the latter did not ask to leave the car and that no one prevented him from doing so. He also testified that Stanley started the fight by calling him a name and swinging at him.

The first contention to be considered is the insufficiency of the evidence to establish appellant's guilt of kidnaping. Section 207 of the Penal Code provides in material part: "Every person who forcibly steals, takes, or arrests any person in this state, and carries him into another * * county, or into another part of the same county, * * * is guilty of kidnaping."

Appellant argues ably and at length that there was no evidence of a forcible abduction of the complaining witness and no evidence that he acted with a criminal intent. Although the argument could well have impressed the trial court it cannot prevail upon this appeal.

It is contended that Stanley had no reason for fear except the "dirty looks" he observed and that these could not reasonably induce fear of harm. But there was much more for Stanley to think about. He was outnumbered and with one of the group behind him. He was faced by another who was a knife carrier and who might have a knife in his belt. They wished to talk with him as a supposed witness to a fight. It is difficult for us to see how it was unreasonable for Stanley to fear harm that might come from his refusal to enter the car in view of the fact that he was assaulted soon after entering it. Who can say what would have happened to the boy if he had defied his adversaries.

[1–4] We do not doubt that evidence and the reasonable inferences amply established a forcible taking. The court could reasonably have found that Stanley did not willingly enter the car, but did so because of a fear of bodily harm induced by appellant's order to get into the convertible, defendants' "dirty looks," the sudden approach of Valencia from the drugstore, and his recollection of the fight in which Contreras stabbed Avalos. These factors influencing Stanley's decision were not to be analyzed separately, but as parts of a single indivisible transaction. The gravamen of the offense of kidnaping is some form of compulsion. People v. Guerrero, 22 Cal.2d 183, 189, 137 P.2d 21. The requisite force or compulsion need not consist of the use of actual physical force or of express threats; the taking is forcible where it is accomplished through the giving of orders which the victim feels compelled to obey because he fears harm or injury from the accused, and his apprehension is not unreasonable under the circumstances. People v. Broyles, 151 Cal.App.2d 428, 311 P.2d 88. Stanley was only 15 years of age. There could be no doubt as to the purpose of appellant and Contreras in inviting him into the car. He was the one to decide what might be the consequences of a refusal and he had ample reason for believing that the invitation to enter the car was not a friendly one. The prospect of having a knife thrust into one's ribs upon refusal of an invitation would furnish a good reason for regarding it as a command. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that Stanley was not actuated by fear or that his fears were unjustified.

[5] Where the accused is not charged with kidnaping for a specific purpose, the People are only required to prove that he intended to commit the acts denounced by the statute. People v. Hunter, 49 Cal.App. 2d 243, 250, 121 P.2d 529, and cases cited. Whether appellant intended to abduct the complaining witness was a question of fact which was resolved against him by the court upon sufficient evidence.

[6] The remaining contention to be considered is that the extrajudicial statement of Contreras should not have been allowed in evidence for the reason that there was no proof of the corpus delicti. In the light of the preceding discussion, the argument is clearly without merit.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

v.

Bruce R. MERRILL, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 17884.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 29, 1959.

Proceeding on motion to modify custody provisions of a divorce decree. The Superior Court, Marin County, N. Charles Brusatori, J., modified the decree in a manner unsatisfactory to mother and she appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that evidence failed to show that trial court abused its discretion in continuing joint custody of child of the parties and in dividing his physical custody between them, rather than giving mother undivided physical custody with visitation rights by father.

Order affirmed.

1. Divorce ⇐303(2)

Before a trial court will modify a child custody order in a divorce decree, there must be evidence of a change in circumstances arising after issuance of the decree.

2. Divorce ⇐303(3)

Evidence of either party of acts prior to rendition of a challenged divorce decree is inadmissible on a hearing for modification of child custody provisions thereof since it is irrelevant on question of a change of conditions, although there are exceptions to such rule, the major one being that evidence of acts unknown to the court or the complaining party at the time the challenged decree was entered may be admissible.

3. Divorce ⇐312.6(9)

In proceeding on motion to modify child custody provisions of a divorce decree, error, if any, by the trial court in refusing mother's offer to introduce evidence that prior to interlocutory decree father had submitted mother, and father's two other children by a prior marriage, to psychiatric examinations, to show that father had a pattern or phobia to submit members of his family to psychiatric examinations, was not prejudicial, in view of fact that court permitted mother to introduce evidence that after the interlocutory decree, father had submitted child of the parties to several psychiatric examinations.

4. Divorce ⇐303(3)

In every proceeding to modify a child custody provision of a divorce decree, burden is on the moving party to satisfy the court that conditions are so changed as to justify the modification, and all presumptions are in favor of the reasonableness of the decree, and in the absence of a showing that compels the conclusion that the decree should be modified, an appellate court cannot interfere with the trial court's refusal to modify it.

5. Divorce ⇐303(2)

Infractions of child custody provisions of interlocutory divorce decree by father, in taking child of the parties out of the state without consent, were not of such gravity as to warrant modification of the decree in regard to split physical custody of the child.

6. Divorce ⇐303(3)

In proceeding on motion to modify custody provisions of a divorce decree, evidence failed to show that trial court abused its discretion in continuing joint custody of child of the parties and in dividing his physical custody between them, rather than giving mother undivided physical custody with visitation rights by father.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, Lucy M. Merrill, obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce from defendant on February 25, 1954. There was one child of the marriage, Bruce, then aged 7. The decree granted the parents joint custody of this child and divided his physical custody between them. Thus, defendant was awarded physical custody on alternate week ends, and on certain designated holidays. Defendant was also awarded physical custody during six weeks of the summer vacation. The plaintiff was awarded physical custody for all of the periods not specifically awarded to defendant. The final decree, embodying the terms of the interlocutory, was entered March 1, 1955.

In June of 1956 plaintiff noticed a motion to modify the decree so as to greatly limit the periods of custody that had been awarded to defendant, and in July, 1956, noticed a supplementary motion to further modify the decree by awarding the plaintiff full custody of the child and allowing the defendant certain limited visitation rights. Affidavits accompanied both notices, and, after some difficulties, defendant's deposition was taken. In November, 1956, after a two-day hearing, the trial court modified the decree to provide that defendant was to see to it that during the periods the child was in his custody the child was to be sent to Sunday School. The modification also expressly provided that the plaintiff had the right to select the grammar school the child was to attend, and provided that both parents should permit the child to take readily movable toys from one residence to the other. The court also inserted a provision that each of the parties should keep the other informed of the whereabouts of the child during the long summer vacation, and that during the vacation periods each parent should have the reasonable right of visitation while the child was with the other parent. The six-week period awarded to defendant during summer vacations was divided into two three-week periods. In all other respects, the motions to modify were denied. The plaintiff appeals, contending that it was an abuse of discretion not to have granted her a more extensive modification.

The record shows that defendant is a practicing psychiatrist. He has been married three times, there being two children resulting from the first marriage, and Bruce was the sole issue of the second marriage to plaintiff. After the date the parties were divorced, both parents resided in Marin County. Defendant first rented a house in Sausalito. The household there consisted of a cook, defendant's then secretary whom he subsequently married, and occasionally the defendant's two children of the first marriage, and the secretary's mother. Since August of 1954 defendant has lived in Belvedere, where the cook and his secretary, who is now his wife, went to live with him. At both residences the defendant, his secretary and various house guests indulged, on occasion, in considerable drinking, sometimes in the presence of Bruce. But there was no evidence that defendant was ever intoxicated in the presence of the child; in fact, the evidence is to the contrary.

The plaintiff attempted to show immorality on the part of defendant by evidence that defendant had lived with his secretary before he married her. Defendant denied sharing his bedroom with his secretary until after they were married.

There was evidence that defendant did not take Bruce to church or to Sunday School while he had custody of the boy. Defendant testified that he did not think any religion should be forced on a child, but that young children should have religious training. This he tried to give to the boy by having him watch a religious television program each Sunday. The defendant evidenced a willingness to abide by any order about Sunday School that might be made.

The defendant frankly admitted that, on several occasions, without the consent of the court or of the plaintiff, he had taken Bruce outside of the area permitted except with the consent of the court. During Easter vacation in 1955 he took the child to Los Angeles, and another time took the child to Phoenix without notifying plaintiff or the court. On several occasions he took Bruce to the Nevada side of Lake Tahoe, without court approval, to a spot the family had frequently visited before the divorce. He testified that he thought the decree permitted this. It did not.

On several occasions, after the interlocutory decree, the defendant consulted other psychiatrists about the boy, and, on three occasions, without telling plaintiff, took the boy to see psychiatrists. Although plaintiff testified that she did not think the child needed psychiatric care, she did admit that the divided custody arrangement "had just raised havoc with him." On one occasion when the psychiatrist involved, at the request of defendant, asked plaintiff for her consent to such an examination, she refused her consent. Defendant believed that the boy needed this care.

There is substantial evidence that, after the interlocutory, there was a good relationship between the defendant and his son. The defendant was frequently observed playing and working with, and reading to the child. There is also evidence that the relationship between defendant's new wife and the child was good.

The child has a health problem. Before the divorce he had contracted polio, and plaintiff testified that at the time of the hearing the child was still under a doctor's care for this condition, and was still taking therapy treatments. The defendant testified that he did not believe in stereotyped orthopedic exercise for the boy, because such treatment was apt to overimpress him with the idea that he was sick. For this reason, when Bruce was with his father, the defendant would advise spontaneous activities that would help to build up his shoulder muscles, such as boat rowing or paddling, or bag punching.

The plaintiff wife resided in Kentfield and there is no doubt that the child's relationship with his mother was a good one. The environment there was a happy one. The plaintiff testified as to several minor incidents concerning conduct on the part of defendant of which she complained, but these were either reasonably explained by defendant or were so trivial that they did not show the defendant to be unfit to have custody. Plaintiff particularly complained that defendant purchased many expensive toys for the child which defendant would not allow the child to take to plaintiff's home in Kentfield. The trial court expressly provided in the order appealed from that the child should be permitted to take movable toys from one house to the other.

The most serious charges against defendant relate to his claimed excessive drinking and to his claimed relationship with his secretary prior to his marriage to her. So far as the drinking is concerned there was a direct conflict in the evidence. While defendant admitted drinking in front of the child, there is substantial evidence that defendant never became intoxicated in front of the child. On the issue of immorality, while there is evidence that defendant shared his bedroom with his secretary prior to the time they were married, defendant denied that he had done so. These conflicts were for the trial court.

Appellant makes a vigorous attack on an evidentiary matter that appears to be of relatively minor importance. The plaintiff desired to introduce evidence that, prior to the interlocutory decree, defendant had submitted her, and his two other children by the prior marriage, to psychiatric examinations. It was the theory of plaintiff that in this fashion she could show a "pattern" or "phobia" on the part of defendant to submit members of his family to psychiatric examinations. Apparently, plaintiff believed that, if she could establish such fact, it would be relevant on the issue of defendant's competency to have custody of the child. The parties argue at length as to whether or not the problem was properly submitted to the trial court, and whether the court actually made a ruling on the issue. Although the matter is not entirely free from doubt, it may be assumed that the plaintiff proffered such testimony, and that the trial court ruled that it was inadmissible. The ruling, in our opinion, was not erroneous, but, even if it were, it certainly was not prejudicial.

[1–3] It is difficult to see how the evidence was relevant. The problem before the court was whether the custody provisions in relation to Bruce should be modified. In deciding this question the court was required to consider the best interests of the child. Defendant testified that such care was required and plaintiff admitted that the child was disturbed. Moreover, it is the general rule of law that, before a trial court will modify a custody order, there must be evidence of a change in circumstances arising after the issuance of the decree sought to be modified. Foster v. Foster, 8 Cal.2d 719, 68 P.2d 719; see cases collected 16 Cal.Jur.2d 558, § 268. An obvious corollary of that rule is that evidence of either party of acts prior to the rendition of the challenged decree is inadmissible because irrelevant, since such evidence could not possibly show a change of conditions. Gantner v. Gantner, 39 Cal. 2d 272, 246 P.2d 923; Washburn v. Washburn, 49 Cal.App.2d 581, 122 P.2d 96; In re Wood, 103 Cal.App. 790, 285 P. 323. Of course, there are exceptions to this rule, the major one being that evidence of acts unknown to the court or the complaining party at the time the challenged decree was entered, may be admissible. Olson v. Olson, 95 Cal.App. 594, 272 P. 1113; Prouty v. Prouty, 16 Cal.2d 190, 105 P.2d 295; Washburn v. Washburn, 49 Cal.App.2d 581, 122 P.2d 96; Foster v. Foster, 8 Cal.2d 719, 68 P.2d 719; for cases from other jurisdictions discussing the problem see annotation in 9 A.L.R.2d 623.

It should be noted that plaintiff, at the time of the interlocutory, had actual knowledge of all of the facts about her husband's alleged "mania" for submitting members of his family to psychiatric examinations. Thus, the proffered evidence did not show any change in circumstances. The trial court permitted plaintiff to introduce evidence that, after the interlocutory, the defendant had submitted Bruce to several psychiatric examinations. Thus, no error was committed. (See Prouty v. Prouty, 16 Cal.2d 190, 105 P.2d 295, where a similar ruling of the trial court was upheld.) The trial court evidently believed defendant's testimony that such psychiatric examinations were necessary.

[4] The other major contention of plaintiff is that the trial court abused its discretion in not modifying the interlocutory and final decrees so as to grant full custody to her and to limit defendant to visitation privileges. Of course "in every proceeding to modify a provision for the custody of a minor child the burden is on the moving party to satisfy the court that conditions have so changed as to justify the modification. All presumptions are in favor of the reasonableness of the decree, and in the absence of a showing that compels the conclusion that the decree should be modified, an appellate court cannot interfere with the trial court's refusal to modify it." Prouty v. Prouty, 16 Cal.2d 190, 193, 105 P.2d 295, 297; see cases collected 16 Cal.Jur.2d 563, § 270.

[5, 6] In the instant case plaintiff has failed to sustain this burden. The claimed excessive drinking and immorality charges have already been discussed. As already pointed out, the evidence as to them was conflicting. The infractions of the interlocutory by defendant taking the child out of the state without consent were admitted by him. The trial court did not believe that these infractions were of such gravity as to warrant a modification. It was justified in this conclusion. The failure to take the child to Sunday School, and the refusal to allow the child to take toys from his house to that of plaintiff were explained by defendant, and the court modified the decree so as to prevent these problems from arising in the future. The other charges against defendant were either denied or explained by him, or were so trivial as not to warrant special mention. Thus, it is quite apparent that plaintiff has failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to modify the basic terms of the decree.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Proceeding respecting accounting of administrator. From a decree of the Superior Court, Sacramento County, Jay L. Henry, J., administrator appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that where administrator had recovered judgment in civil action against administratrix of estate of decedent's predeceased spouse but record on judgment roll appeal showed only that such administratrix had appeared as an heir of administrator's decedent and had filed objections as such and there was nothing to indicate that court had obtained any jurisdiction over administratrix in her capacity as such, court was without jurisdiction to take any action against party as administratrix and properly refused to make any order against her attorney or such party as administratrix.

Affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇐85(4)

Where administrator of decedent's estate had recovered judgment in civil action against administratrix of estate of decedent's predeceased spouse requiring administratrix to deliver certain assets adjudged to belong to decedent's estate, but record on judgment roll appeal in decedent's estate proceeding failed to disclose that party had appeared in estate as anything but an heir of decedent and there was nothing to show that she had appeared in her capacity as administratrix of predeceased spouse's estate and she was represented by her personal counsel, court was without jurisdiction to take any action against party as administratrix of estate of predeceased spouse or against her attorney, and it was proper for court to refuse to make any order against attorney or against such person as administratrix as requested by administrator's petition.

2. Executors and Administrators ⇐86(2)

Where administrator of decedent's estate was the sole heir thereof and obtained civil judgment against administratrix of estate of decedent's predeceased wife requiring her to deliver to administrator certain property which had been either the separate property of decedent or property of pre-existing community, but administratrix was unable to discharge from assets in her hand the total money judgment plus judgments for costs, upon receipt of money which administratrix was able to deliver, after satisfaction of costs, excess sum was to be allocated to community and separate property sources pro rata.

3. Executors and Administrators ⇐510(9)

On judgment roll appeal by administrator from decree in accounting proceeding, court must assume that evidence supported determination that attorneys had earned a specific sum for extraordinary services.

4. Executors and Administrators ⇐507(1)

Where court in probate proceedings had decreed that in addition to statutory fees attorneys had reasonably earned $2,500 for extraordinary services but between date of minute order and filing of final decree administrator filed document dismissing paragraph of his petition containing allegations concerning attorney's fees and prayed court for new order adjudging and determining attorney's fees on ground that petition in that respect had been prematurely filed, attorneys having been called into matter for determination of fees upon original petition of administrator and evidence as to fees presumably having been taken and determination made as indicated in minute order, administrator did not have authority to withdraw matter of attorney's fees from court's consideration without consent of attorneys. West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 911.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐907(3)

On judgment roll appeal presumption is in support of decree that proper notice was given or waived by interested parties to proceedings.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐907(3)

On a judgment roll appeal court must assume in support of decree that notwithstanding purported withdrawals of waivers by administrator to his fees, all proceedings taken supported decree that administrator had waived right to fees or commissions in open court for work done as administrator of estate of decedent and as associate counsel, and such waivers were confirmed.

Fred B. Hart, Oakland, for appellant.

Brandenburger, White & Dillon, Sacramento, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is a judgment roll appeal by Fred B. Hart as administrator of the Estate of Augustus Loring Hart, deceased, from a decree of the probate court. Appellant-administrator filed in the estate proceedings a document entitled "Petition, Waiver, Report and Accounting of Administrator". As reflected in the document the status of estate proceedings stood as follows: Notice to creditors had been published. The time for filing claims had elapsed and no claims had been filed. Appellant-administrator had filed his inventory of assets and the assets had been appraised. All costs of administration excepting only attorneys' fees and commissions of the administrator had been paid. There were no debts outstanding. Inheritance taxes had been paid in full. Some of the estate property had been sold during the course of administration. By partial distributions there had been distributed all property in the estate having its source and origin in separate property of appellant's decedent with certain listed exceptions. A final judgment had been obtained by appellant as administrator against Lillian Worthington, administratrix of the estate of Irene I. Hart, who had predeceased appellant's decedent and whose wife she had been. By this judgment it had been decreed that certain property which Lillian Worthington as such administratrix had taken possession of as being property of the estate of Irene had been either separate property of appellant's decedent or property of the preexisting community and therefore belonged to and ought to be probated as assets of the estate of Augustus. This judgment had not been wholly satisfied.

Petitioner prayed that the court allow and confirm his account as rendered; that the court fix the attorneys' fees for services rendered to him by attorneys both as to their general fees and as to fees for extraordinary services rendered. There were other matters which the petitioner requested the court to act upon but they will be discussed later. There was no prayer for final distribution.

Before discussing the contentions of error advanced by appellant, we will state briefly the vesting of the descent of decedent's estate. Appellant is the sole surviving brother and kin of the decedent and succeeded to all of the estate except that portion thereof which was formerly community property of the decedent and his predeceased wife, Irene. As to that community property one-half descended to appellant and the other half to respondents herein, two of whom are sisters, one of whom is a brother and one of whom is a niece of Irene.

[1] Appellant first contends that the court erred in dismissing that portion of the petition which sought relief against Lillian Worthington as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Irene, and William Dobkins, her attorney, in requiring them to deliver to appellant as administrator assets adjudged to belong to the estate of Augustus. By his petition herein appellant sought to have an order made by the court in probate based upon said judgment. There is nothing in this record to indicate that the court had obtained any jurisdiction over Lillian A. Worthington in her capacity of administratrix of the estate of Irene. As we have said this is a judgment roll appeal. The only parts of the record below which have been brought to us are the following: The petition, the objections thereto, the decree and order constituting the dismissal now under discussion, the notice of appeal and the notice and request for reporter's and clerk's transcripts. Although it appears from this last notice that as filed it requested a reporter's transcript, none has been brought up. Lillian Worthington appeared as an heir and filed objections as such. She specifically stated in her appearance that she was not appearing in her capacity as administratrix of the estate of Irene. She was represented by personal counsel and not by the attorney who had been her attorney in the estate proceedings. No process appears to have been addressed to her except in her capacity as an heir. Although her attorney in the proceedings in the estate of Irene was named in the petition, no process appears to have been addressed to the attorney and he made no appearance. On this record, therefore, it appears that the court was without jurisdiction to take any action against Lillian Worthington as administratrix of the estate of Irene and equally without jurisdiction to take any action against her attorney. Therefore, it was proper for the court to refuse to make any order against him or against Lillian Worthington as administratrix and the court properly dismissed the petition in so far as it asked such relief.

[2] It appears that after the civil judgment had become final, Lillian Worthington, as administratrix, pursuant to that judgment, delivered to appellant as administrator herein all of the personal property in her hands which she had claimed belonged in the estate of Irene and so to that extent satisfied the judgment. However, the judgment ran against her as administratrix for something over $2,000 in money, which obligation she was unable to discharge from the assets in her hands for want of sufficient funds. By that judgment costs had been awarded appellant in the sum of $402.27. Of the money he received from Lillian Worthington, appellant allocated to the payment of the cost item enough to discharge the same. There is no dispute here as to the propriety of that allocation. As to the balance, however, appellant's account showed that of the additional money recovery, he allocated $386.75 in satisfaction of that portion of the money award deriving from separate estate of his decedent which had come into the hands of Lillian. That left a balance of the funds received by him from Lillian in the sum of $187.41, which he applied in partial satisfaction of that portion of the money judgment derived from community property that had come into the hands of Lillian and this left an unpaid balance on the community obligation in the sum of $1,450.90. This allocation the court rejected and ordered that of the sum received in excess of costs the same should be allocated to community and to separate property sources pro rata. Appellant contends that this reallocation was error. We do not agree. In making the allocation which he sought to have the court approve, appellant was acting in the capacity of a trustee for all persons interested in the estate as heirs, including himself. Under such circumstances he was obliged to act equitably. By the allocation he made he preferred himself to the other heirs because he was the sole heir to those portions of the estate of his decedent which had constituted separate property of that decedent, whereas he was entitled to only half of the property which had constituted community property of his decedent and Irene Hart. The trial court could well find, and undoubtedly did, that, although acting as a trustee, he was seeking to prefer himself to the other beneficiaries of the trust by taking advantage of his position as trustee. We think it was eminently proper for the trial court to make the equitable reallocation that is reflected in its decree. Petitioner insists that Lillian Worthington, in resisting as administratrix of the estate of Irene the appellant's representative demands that the property she had taken into the estate of Irene was in truth assets belonging to the estate of Augustus, had been guilty of fraudulent conduct; that by the reallocation made by the probate court herein she and her coheirs in the community assets were given the fruits of fraud. There is nothing in this record which justifies these contentions. All that appears is—and we take this from the recitals in the petition—that Lilllian Worthington as administratrix of the estate of Irene Hart claimed that certain property was the separate property of Irene before her death; that appellant, as administrator of the estate of Augustus, claimed that the property was in part separate property of Augustus and in part community property of the two to which Augustus succeeded since Irene died intestate; that he demanded the property be turned over to him as administrator and the demand being refused he, as administrator, brought action against Lillian Worthington as administratrix and obtained a judgment that the property was in truth assets of the estate of Augustus. There is nothing in all this that fixes upon Lillian the charge of fraud or fastens upon her the obligations of a trustee ex maleficio, for, notwithstanding the litigation turned out adversely to her, it may well be that under the facts she was charged with the duty to resist the demands of appellant in behalf of the estate of Irene. Neither is there anything in all this that charges the coheirs of Lillian with any accountability or liability to the estate of Augustus. Under the circumstances as disclosed by the record, the oral proceedings not having been brought up, we must assume as could have been the case that the reallocation made by the probate court was justified.

[3–5] Appellant contends that the court erred in fixing attorneys' fees. In his petition he had set forth that the attorneys involved had represented him as administrator and were entitled to the regular fees allowable therefor under the statute. He further alleged that they had performed extraordinary services in conducting the litigation resulting in the judgment against Lillian as administratrix of the estate of Irene and he alleged that those services were reasonably worth 10% of the amount of the recovery which would figure out something over $800. The court decreed that in addition to the statutory fees the attorneys had reasonably earned $2,500 for extraordinary services. On a judgment roll appeal we must, of course, assume that the evidence supported this determination. It appears, however, that on September 10, 1957, appellant's petition was heard by the court and a minute order was made at the conclusion of the hearing that the attorneys' fees for extraordinary services be allowed in the sum of $2,500. The formal decree was filed November 26, 1957. Intermediate the minute order and the filing of the final decree, appellant, on October 17th, filed a document entitled "Dismissal", wherein he stated, first, that he "does hereby dismiss paragraph 15 in said petition" (this being the paragraph containing the allegations concerning attorneys' fees) and, second, that he further "does dismiss" paragraph 2 of the prayer (whereby petitioner had prayed the court for an order adjudging and determining attorneys' fees both general and special). He now contends that his dismissal as he calls it withdrew that part of his petition which requested the determination of attorneys' fees. He argues that the petition in that respect had been prematurely filed and that the court had no jurisdiction at that time in the probate proceedings to act upon the matter of attorneys' fees. We think the court had jurisdiction to make the order it did and if that be so, then, of course, the attorneys having been called into the matter for the determination of their fees upon the petition of appellant and evidence as to those fees presumably having been taken and a determination indicated in the minute order, it did not lie with petitioner to withdraw the matter of attorneys' fees from the court's consideration without the consent of interested parties. According to the record such consent had not been obtained. Under the provisions of Section 911 of the Probate Code, at any time after six months from the issuance of letters of administration the probate court may on proper petition make an order requiring the administrator to pay such attorneys out of the estate such compensation on account of services rendered up to that time as the court shall deem proper and such payment shall be made forthwith. It appears that all of the services which might be termed extraordinary were listed in appellant's petition as constituting extraordinary services rendered up to that time so there could be nothing premature in their allowance under the terms of the cited section of the code. There is nothing to indicate that proper notice that the attorneys' fees were to be fixed was not given and, of course, appellant could not raise such an objection since he brought the matter on for hearing by his own petition and according to the recitals in the decree appeared and participated in the proceedings which included the fixing of those fees. In re Estate of Pailhe, 114 Cal.App.2d 658, 251 P.2d 76. No other interested party has appealed and on a judgment roll appeal the presumption is in support of the decree that proper notice was given or waived. Appellant further argues that the services of the attorney in the civil action had not been completed and that, therefore, the court was without power to fix the fees in advance of the completion of the work. There is nothing in the record which supports the assertion that the work had not been completed or that any of the other matters handled by the attorneys and for which petitioner asked that allowances be made had not been completed. In so far as the regular statutory fees be concerned, they were computed concededly according to the statute, but they were not ordered paid. The court, responsive to the petition, merely determined the amount of the ordinary fees, did not order them paid and therefore appellant's contentions of error as to them are without merit. So far as fees for extraordinary services are concerned they may be allowed and ordered paid when earned. In re Estate of Hunt, 33 Cal.App.2d 356, 91 P.2d 612.

Simultaneously with the filing of the "dismissal" as to that part of the petition dealing with the determination of attorneys' fees, petitioner, who is a practicing attorney, filed a document wherein he purported to withdraw his waiver of attorneys' fees for himself as stated in his petition.

[6] On this subject the decree reads as follows: "That said Fred B. Hart has waived in Open Court his right to any and all fees or commissions as Administrator of the estate of said decedent, and as associate counsel for said Administrator in propria personam, which Waivers should be and the same are hereby confirmed, approved and allowed." Once again we must advert to the fact that this is a judgment roll appeal and we must assume, therefore, in support of the decree, that, notwithstanding the purported withdrawal of waivers, the oral proceedings taken support the decree rendered.

Finally, appellant contends that the court erred in fixing the amount of contribution which the community part of the estate and the separate part of the estate severally ought to bear with respect to the extraordinary services of his attorneys. He argues this was a proper situation for applying the rule that fees for legal services rendered in preserving a common fund for the benefit of all heirs are proper charges against such fund; that each beneficiary should bear his proportionate share of expenses of litigation as a result of which he derives a benefit. See, In re Estate of Lundell, 107 Cal.App.2d 463, 464–465, 237 P.2d 62; In re Estate of Hendrix, 77 Cal.App.2d 647, 176 P.2d 398. But it sufficiently appears that there were numerous items of separate and community property of varying values (at least the contrary does not appear) and the difficulty of proving title to each may have varied immensely. What was an equitable apportionment does not therefore appear as a matter of law. Once again we cannot follow appellant in his arguments in support of this assignment of error, because we cannot tell from the record here what evidence was before the trial court respecting apportionment and must assume that the decree of the court was supported by the oral proceedings.

Nothing further appearing, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Where plaintiff was serving term of imprisonment in a California prison and he was not presently being held under New York warrant and extradition proceedings were not pending or threatened, his petition for an order to vacate, nullify and void a New York warrant of arrest by virtue of which a hold had allegedly been placed against plaintiff was premature. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 476a.

Herbert J. Mattson, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by G. A. Strader, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from an order denying appellant's "petition for an order to vacate, nullify and void" a warrant of arrest issued by a magistrate of the City of New York, New York, by virtue of which a hold has been placed against appellant by the Police Department of New York City. The appeal comes before this court on a judgment roll only.

The petition was filed in propria persona by appellant, who is serving a term in Folsom prison, apparently for issuing worthless checks. Appellant does not seek to set aside the judgment of conviction for which he is now imprisoned, although he alleges that it was obtained by perjured testimony and that an appeal therefrom is pending. It is alleged in his petition that since issuance of the New York warrant in 1955 appellant has been held thereunder in many states, but that he was acquitted in Kentucky of the charges and that for this reason those same charges were dismissed by the municipal court of Los Angeles; that despite that fact the Sheriff of the County of Los Angeles, who is one of the "defendants" named herein, placed a "renewal" on the New York warrant which had theretofore expired. Thereafter the municipal court made the notation "dropped" on the renewal, but appellant alleges "someone has removed the renewal part this body warrant hold and that it is again upon his person illegally," and has been forwarded to someone by the Sheriff of Los Angeles County. Appellant further alleges that the Governor of California has advised the Sheriff of Los Angeles County that New York has made no request for the extradition of appellant and that he is no longer wanted there. Despite this allegation, appellant asks that the Governor be advised that he is not extraditable. He also asks that the sheriff be ordered to answer why he placed a renewal on an expired warrant and why he held appellant over 72 hours without arraignment. Appellant prays that a police officer of Los Angeles be ordered to show why he fraudulently filed an extradition warrant purportedly based on a Kentucky indictment for grand theft of an auto when no such indictment existed, and which charge the Municipal Court of Los Angeles dismissed. Appellant further alleges that as a matter of law the New York warrant expired one year after its issuance and could not thereafter be legally renewed by the California authorities. He further alleges that he cannot be held or tried on the New York charges as he was acquitted thereof in Kentucky. Appellant's final prayer is "that the record may be augmented and the Warrant removed from the body of the plaintiff."

Appellant does not claim that he is now being held under the New York warrant or that extradition proceedings are pending or threatened. As heretofore stated, appellant is now serving a term of imprisonment for three violations of Section 476a of the Penal Code. See People v. Mattson, Cal.App., 327 P.2d 915.

Since appellant does not claim that he is now being held under the New York warrant or that extradition proceedings are pending or threatened at this time, the relief which he is seeking is premature. If, upon the expiration of his present term of imprisonment, he is held or if he is denied parole because of the outstanding New York warrant, he may then seek relief. We are of the opinion that the law as stated in the case of In re Drake, 38 Cal.2d 195, 238 P.2d 566, is applicable to the instant proceedings. In that case the Supreme Court held that a person may not by a proceeding in the nature of habeas corpus litigate the future right of a sister state to extradite the prisoner. The court stated in 38 Cal.2d at pages 197–198, 238 P.2d at page 568:

> "No present extradition proceedings are pending. Should Drake be detained at some future date upon extradition proceedings, he may then apply for the writ of habeas corpus to test the legality of such detention. (§ 1550.1 Pen. Code.) Until that time, there is no detention which Drake can question by means of the writ. Whether Drake is subject to extradition, or whether his constitutional rights would be violated by extradition, are questions not now presented. Habeas corpus does not lie to challenge the validity of an anticipated future action nor to secure declaratory relief in advance thereof. Ex parte Rockwell, D.C., 75 F.Supp. 702; Boyce v. United States, D.C., 52 F.Supp. 115, 116."

The judgment is affirmed.

Action against insurer upon an automobile public liability policy for injuries sustained by plaintiffs in a collision between automobile in which they were riding with insured automobile. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Burnett Wolfson, J., the insurer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Patrosso, J. pro tem., held that where insurer was obligated to provide for liability arising out of ownership, maintenance or use of automobile during the policy period by incorporation in the policy of a condition that insurer would provide insurance for liability arising out of the ownership, maintenance or use of automobile to the extent of coverage and limits of liability required by law, insurer thereby limited extent of coverage to $10,000 for bodily injury to two or more persons as the result of any one accident and judgments against the insurer aggregating $16,900 was excessive even though the policy fixed a limit of $20,000.

Judgment reversed with directions.

1. Reformation of Instruments ⇐28, 51

Where insureds brought action against insurer after automobile accident for declaration of rights under automobile public liability policy and insurer interposed a cross complaint for reformation of policy to express the true intention of parties and the policy was reformed in favor of insurer, rights of persons injured in collision between automobile in which they were riding and insured automobile were measured by rights of policy as reformed and not by language of policy as originally written.

2. Insurance ⇐143(8)

Fact that insurer instituted an action against persons injured in collision between automobile in which they were riding and automobile owned by persons to whom insurer had issued an automobile public liability policy seeking a declaration that it was not liable to injured persons under terms of the policy as originally written and that action was dismissed prior to trial did not preclude insurer from thereafter seeking and obtaining a judgment reforming the policy to express true intention of the parties.

3. Insurance ⇐435.9

Statute providing that a motor vehicle liability policy shall insure the person named therein and any person using or responsible for the use of said motor vehicle with the express or implied permission of the insured is not limited only to those policies certified as provided by another section of the Vehicle Code as proof of ability to respond in damages. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 410, 414, 415.

4. Statutes ⇐223.5(6)

Fact that Legislature may have disagreed with construction placed upon language of statute as it read prior to amendment does not authorize the District Court of Appeal to say that Supreme Court was in error in construction which it placed upon the statute prior to amendment, and amendment of statute did not establish that judicial decisions were erroneous.

5. Insurance ⇐152(3), 435.8

Where automobile public liability policy provided that insurance afforded by policy for bodily injury and property damage liability should comply with provisions of motor vehicle responsibility law of any state or province which should be applicable with respect to any liability arising out of ownership, maintenance or use of automobile to extent of coverage and limits of liability required by such law and that terms of policy which were in conflict with statutes of state wherein policy was issued were amended to conform to such statutes, provisions of California Financial Responsibility Law were effectively written in the policy and became a part thereof and insurer would not be heard to complain that policy did not provide insurance to extent of coverage and limits of liability required by law, and restrictive endorsement undertaking to exclude all liability for injuries occasioned by operation of motor vehicle by one under 25 years of age was ineffective. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 415.

6. Insurance ⇐173

Where insurer was obligated to provide for liability arising out of ownership, maintenance or use of automobile during the policy period by incorporation in the policy of a condition that insurer would provide insurance for liability arising out of the ownership, maintenance or use of automobile to extent of coverage and limits of liability required by law, insurer thereby limited extent of coverage to $10,000 for bodily injury to two or more persons as result of any one accident and judgments against the insurer aggregating $16,900 was excessive even though the policy fixed a limit of $20,000. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 415.

PATROSSO, Justice pro tem.

Action upon an automobile public liability insurance policy in which judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs from which defendant appeals.

The policy in question was issued to John A. Campbell, Jr. and Pauline Campbell and covered a 1949 Chevrolet automobile owned by them. Among others the policy contains a provision reading in part as follows: "Definition of Insured. With respect to insurance for bodily injury liability and for property damage liability the unqualified word 'insured' includes the named insured and also includes any person while using the automobile * * * provided the actual use of the automobile is by the named insured or with his permission." As originally written there was no language in the policy restricting the scope of the foregoing provision other than an endorsement reading in part as follows: "Additional Declaration. * * * (b) There is no operator of the automobile under 25 years of age resident in the Named Insured's household or employed as a chauffeur of the automobile." Subsequently, however, and following the accident out of which plaintiffs' causes of action arose, the Campbells instituted an action against the defendant for a declaration of rights under the policy. In this action the defendant interposed a cross-complaint for reformation of the policy to express the true intention of the parties. This action resulted in a judgment in favor of defendant whereby the policy was reformed by substituting for the endorsement quoted above one reading as follows: "It is agreed that no insurance is afforded by any provision of this policy or of any endorsement attached hereto or issued to form a part hereof while any insured vehicle is being operated, maintained or used by or under the control of a person under twenty-five (25) years of age."

This judgment was affirmed upon appeal (Campbell v. Republic Indemnity Co., 149 Cal.App.2d 476, 308 P.2d 425) and became final.

Within the policy period and prior to the time that the policy was reformed as hereinabove stated, the insured vehicle while being driven by the named insured's son who was then under the age of 25 years was involved in a collision with an automobile owned and driven by the plaintiff, Harold Shapiro, as a result of which he and the other plaintiffs herein, Sophie Shapiro, Toinette Karvas and Richard Karvas, as well as two other persons, Maxine Friedman and Allen Friedman, who are not parties to this action, sustained personal injuries and the automobile of Harold Shapiro was damaged. These parties thereafter instituted actions against the Campbells and their son and recovered judgments as follows: (1) Sophie Shapiro recovered judgment against Mr. and Mrs. Campbell and their son in the sum of $5,800 of which amount the liability of Mr. and Mrs. Campbell was limited to $3,333; (2) Harold Shapiro recovered judgment against Mr. and Mrs. Campbell in the sum of $600 for property damage and against the son alone in the sum of $500 for personal injuries; the Shapiros also recovered costs in the sum of $98.14; (3) Toinette Karvas recovered judgment against the Campbells' son in the sum of $500; (4) Richard Karvas recovered judgment against Mr. and Mrs. Campbell and their son in the sum of $5,800 of which amount the liability of Mr. and Mrs. Campbell was limited to $3,333; costs were $48.75; (5) Maxine Friedman recovered judgment against Mr. and Mrs. Campbell and their son in the sum of $3,800, said judgment being limited to $3,333 against Mr. and Mrs. Campbell; (6) Allen Friedman recovered judgment against the son alone in the sum of $500; the Friedmans also recovered costs of $47.70.

After the recovery of the aforementioned judgments respondents instituted the present action against the defendant upon the insurance policy. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the respondents Shapiro in the sum of $6,998.14 together with interest from July 26, 1956, and in favor of the respondents Karvas in the sum of $6,348.75 with interest from July 26, 1956.

[1] At the outset and before addressing ourselves to the contentions of the appellant, it is necessary to dispose of a contention of the respondents. This is to the effect that their rights under the policy are to be determined by the language of the policy as originally written and as it read at the time of the accident in question and not as reformed to read by the judgment in the action between the defendant and the insured Mr. and Mrs. Campbell. The argument is that, as respondents were not parties to the reformation action, they are not bound thereby and the judgment therein is not res judicata as to them. The question of res judicata, however, does not arise. Respondents' rights under the policy are, in any event, measured by the terms of the policy as reformed for they stand in the shoes of the insured and they have no greater rights against the insurer than the insured would have had if they paid the judgments against them and then sued the insurer. Olds v. General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp., 1945, 67 Cal.App.2d 812, 821, 155 P.2d 676; Ford v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 1957, 151 Cal.App.2d 431, 438–439, 311 P.2d 930; and compare, Valladao v. Fireman's Fund Indemnity Co., 1939, 13 Cal.2d 322, 328, 89 P.2d 643.

[2] Additionally, it is to be noticed that prior to the filing of the action which resulted in the judgment of reformation hereinabove referred to and prior to the institution of the actions by the respondents against the insured, defendant instituted an action against the respondents for declaratory relief seeking a declaration that it was not liable to respondents under the terms of the policy as originally written, which action, however, was dismissed prior to trial. The trial court here concluded that the filing of such action "served to affirm the original policy and endorsement," and respondents contend that as a result the defendant "irrevocably confirmed the terms of the policy and rider" as originally written. Respondents cite no authorities in support of this proposition and we know of none. The mere fact that the defendant may have previously instituted an action which it later dismissed to secure a declaration that it was not liable to the respondents under the policy as originally written did not preclude it from thereafter seeking and obtaining a judgment reforming the policy to express the true intention of the parties.

[3] The trial court found that the restrictive endorsement which was added to the policy by the judgment of reformation was ineffective as being in contravention of section 415 of the Vehicle Code which at the time of the issuance of the policy read in part as follows: "(a) A 'motor vehicle liability policy,' as used in this code means a policy of liability insurance issued by an insurance carrier authorized to transact such business in this State to or for the benefit of the person named therein as assured, which policy shall meet the following requirements: * * * (2) Such policy shall insure the person named therein and any other person using or responsible for the use of said motor vehicle or motor vehicles with the express or implied permission of said assured."

The appellant contends that in so deciding the trial court erred because, so it argues, section 415 applies only to those policies certified as provided in section 414 of the Vehicle Code as proof of ability to respond in damages.[1] This identical contention, however, was rejected by the Supreme Court in Wildman v. Government Employees' Ins. Co., 1957, 48 Cal.2d 31, at page 39, 307 P.2d 359, at page 364, where it is said: "It appears that section 415 must be made a part of every policy of insurance issued by an insurer since the public policy of this state is to make owners of motor vehicles financially responsible to those injured by them in the operation of such vehicles. Section 402 of the Vehicle Code provides that 'Every owner of a motor vehicle is liable and responsible for the death of or injury to person or property resulting from negligence in the operation of such motor vehicle, in the business of such owner or otherwise, by any person using or operating the same with the permission, express or implied, of such owner, and the negligence of such person shall be imputed to the owner for all purposes of civil damages.' We are of the opinion that for an insurer to issue a policy of insurance which does not cover an accident which occurs when a person, other than the insured, is driving with the permission and consent of the insured is a violation of the public policy of this state as set forth in sections 402 and 415 of the Vehicle Code."

While the appellant earnestly argues that the Supreme Court was in error in construing section 415 as applying to every motor vehicle policy rather than only to those certified as provided in section 414 as proof of ability to respond in damages, we are bound by the decision of the Supreme Court and are not at liberty to reexamine the question.

Appellant further contends that the effect of the Wildman decision has been overcome by reason of the fact that following it the Legislature amended the first paragraph of the portion of section 415 of the Vehicle Code heretofore quoted to read as follows: "(a) A 'motor vehicle liability policy,' as used in this ~~code~~ chapter means an owner's policy or an operator's policy, or both, of liability insurance, certified as provided in Section 414 as proof of ability to respond in damages, issued by an insurance carrier * * *." (Italics and strike-out type indicate changes effected by the amendment.)

[4] Appellant argues that by this amendment the Legislature expressed its disapproval of the interpretation accorded this section by the Supreme Court in the Wildman case. The fact, however, that the Legislature may have disagreed with the construction placed upon the language of the section as it read prior to the amendment does not authorize this court to say that the Supreme Court was in error in the construction which it had placed upon it. Undoubtedly, many statutes have been amended to overcome the judicial construction placed upon them, but this does not serve to establish that such judicial decisions were erroneous. If the amendment to section 415 had occurred prior to the decision in the Wildman case it may well be that the Supreme Court would have given consideration to it in interpreting the language of the section as it read prior to the amendment, that is to say, whether by the amendment the Legislature evidenced an intention to change the law or merely to declare what the law had been prior to the amendment. Cf. Union League Club v. Johnson, 18 Cal.2d 275, 278, 115 P.2d 425; Standard Oil Co. of California v. Johnson, 24 Cal.2d 40, 48, 147 P.2d 577. It by no means follows, however, that, if it had done so, the court would have reached a different result. While "[l]egislative intent may be manifest by a subsequent act" (45 Cal.Jur. 2d 678), ordinarily, any essential change in the phraseology of a statutory provision will be taken as an indication of a change in the meaning rather than as an interpretation (id. 679). And it may not be doubted that the amendment here involved an essential change in phraseology.

1. Section 410, Vehicle Code, provides that the operator's license of any person who has suffered a final judgment to be rendered against him for damages to property "in excess of one hundred dollars ($100) or for damage in any amount on account of bodily injury to or death of any person resulting from the operation" of a motor vehicle shall be suspended until such judgment has been paid and "until the judgment debtor gives proof of financial responsibility in future"; and, section 414 defines what shall constitute "proof of ability to respond in damages." There is no claim here that the insured had previously suffered a final judgment for damages resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle which they had failed to satisfy.

[5] Moreover, even though we were to sustain appellant's contention that section 415 is without application to the policy here this would not serve to aid appellant's cause for the appellant voluntarily assumed liability under section 415 by the insertion in the policy of the following provisions: "Condition 8: Financial Responsibility Laws: Such insurance as is afforded by this policy for bodily injury liability or property damage liability shall comply with the provisions of the motor vehicle financial responsibility law of any state or province which shall be applicable with respect to any such liability arising out of the ownership, maintenance or use of the automobile during the policy period, to the extent of the coverage and limits of liability required by such law, but in no event in excess of the limits of liability stated in this policy. The insured agrees to reimburse the company for any payment made by the company which it would not have been obligated to make under this paragraph.

"* * * Condition 23: Terms of Policy Conformed to Statute: Terms of this policy which are in conflict with the statutes of the state wherein this policy is issued are hereby amended to conform to such statute."

The policy involved in the Wildman case contained provisions identical to those above quoted and concerning these the court said: "Inasmuch as sections 402 and 415 of the Vehicle Code set forth the public policy of this state such laws must be considered a part of every policy of liability insurance even though the policy itself does not specifically make such laws a part thereof. We have here, however, a policy containing a clause which provides that the insurance afforded by the policy shall comply with the provisions of the motor vehicle financial responsibility law 'of any state * * *' wherein the liability arising out of the ownership, maintenance or use of the automobile may occur." Wildman v. Government Employees' Ins. Co., 48 Cal.2d 31, 40, 307 P.2d 359, 364.

In Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Ledesma, 10 Cir., 1954, 214 F.2d 495, 497, the insurance company had issued to one Isdonas a motor vehicle liability policy in New Mexico which by its terms insured the named insured and "any person while using the automobile with the permission of the named insured." By an endorsement to the policy it was provided that the insurance should not apply while the automobile was being operated outside the limits of an established military or naval reservation unless it was being operated by the named insured or spouse or by any other qualified operator while accompanied by the named insured or spouse. During the policy period one Carter while operating the automobile outside of a military and naval reservation at a time when neither the named insured nor his spouse was present was involved in an accident as a result of which the defendant was injured. The policy contained a further provision substantially identical to condition 8 of the policy here and hereinabove quoted. New Mexico has a financial responsibility law somewhat similar to that of California. While the court there held, as the appellant here contends, that the New Mexico act applied only to "motorists who have been involved in accidents or who fail to pay judgments rendered against them for damages resulting from the use and operation of motor vehicles" and as the named insured was not in this category there was no requirement in the law that the liability insurance policy issued to him provide insurance complying with the provisions of the motor vehicle financial responsibility law, proceeded to say (214 F.2d at page 500): "But the provision to that effect was voluntarily inserted in the policy with binding force and effect. It made the policy conform to the Act. It imported into the policy the pertinent provisions of the Act. The Act provides that a policy issued under its terms shall insure as the insured the person named therein and any other person using or responsible for the use of such motor vehicle with the consent express or implied of the named insured." (Italics ours.)

In the light of the foregoing it is apparent that the provisions of our financial responsibility law were effectively written into the policy and became a part thereof and that the appellant may not be heard to complain that the policy does not provide insurance to the extent of the coverage and limits of liability required by section 415 of the Vehicle Code.

[6] Thus we reach appellant's final contention that, inasmuch as section 415 requires insurance only in the sum of $5,000 for bodily injury to or death of each person as the result of any one accident and $10,000 for bodily injury to or the death of all persons as the result of any one accident, the judgment appealed from is excessive in that it awards in the aggregate a greater sum than the coverage required by section 415. Hence, the question is presented whether the extent of defendant's liability for the bodily injuries sustained by all of the persons as a result of the accident in question is $10,000 as prescribed in section 415 or the policy limit of $20,000.

By virtue of the language of the policy incorporating therein the provisions of the financial responsibility law the defendant agreed, independently of any other provision in the policy, to provide insurance for "liability arising out of the ownership, maintenance or use of the automobile during the policy period, to the extent of the coverage and limits of liability required by such law." (Italics ours.) While the provisions of the statute thus incorporated in the policy operate to render ineffective the restrictive endorsement hereinbefore referred to insofar as it undertakes to exclude all liability for injuries occasioned by the operation of the motor vehicle by one under the age of 25 years, we see nothing in the statute to suggest that an insurer in agreeing to afford coverage for such liability may not restrict the extent thereof to the amounts prescribed by the statute irrespective of the limits of the other coverage afforded by the policy. Indeed, subdivision (c) of section 415 expressly provides that the policy of insurance required thereby may "contain any agreements, provisions or stipulations not in conflict with the provisions of this code and not otherwise contrary to law." If the policy here had provided that no insurance was afforded thereby while the automobile was being operated with the permission of the named insured by one under the age of 25 years except as and to the extent provided in Vehicle Code, section 415, no doubt could arise as to the validity thereof, and when the restrictive endorsement is read in connection with the conditions 8 and 23 of the policy this is in effect what it says. Inasmuch as so construed the policy provides insurance against the liability and to the extent required by section 415 the requirements of the statute are satisfied as well as the public policy embodied therein.

While the question under discussion was not there involved the language of the opinion in Bonfils v. Pacific Automobile Ins. Co., 1958, 165 Cal.App.2d 152, 331 P.2d 766, is pertinent. There the defendant insurance company had issued a policy containing provisions identical with conditions 8 and 23 of the policy in the instant case. The policy also contained a restrictive endorsement to the effect that coverage of the policy should be null and void if the insured vehicle was operated by anyone other than the named insured. While the vehicle was operated by one other than the named insured with the latter's permission it was involved in an accident as a result of which two persons sustained injuries. In speaking of the effect of these two provisions the court said (165 Cal. App.2d at page 159, 331 P.2d at page 770): "Interpreted by the rules applicable to policies of insurance, the endorsement in question did not eliminate, limit or modify the foregoing provisions respecting conformance of the policy to statute and compliance with financial responsibility laws. When these provisions and the endorsement are considered together, as they must be, the endorsement had the limited effect of withdrawing policy coverage when the subject automobile was operated by a person other than the owner only in the event such withdrawal did not conflict with the statute or laws in question." (Italics ours.) So here, the restrictive endorsement may be said to have the limited effect of withdrawing policy coverage when the automobile was operated by a person under the age of 25 years only to the extent that such withdrawal did not conflict with section 415.

While the California courts have not had occasion to consider this precise question the decisions in other jurisdictions having similar financial responsibility laws where the question has arisen under like circumstances as here, are to the effect that notwithstanding the greater coverage provided by the policy, recovery is limited to the minimum figures fixed by the statute. In Landis, for Use of Talley v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 1952, 347 Ill.App. 560, 107 N.E.2d 187, the policy named only the owner, E. A. Peters, as the insured. While the automobile was driven by one Landis, with the permission of the owner, it was involved in an accident as a result of which one Talley sustained bodily injuries for which she recovered a judgment against Landis in the sum of $30,000. Illinois has a financial responsibility law, section 58k of which is substantially identical with paragraph (a) and subparagraph (a) (2) of said section 415 hereinbefore quoted. Likewise, the policy there contained a condition identical with condition 8 of the policy in the instant case. After the recovery of the judgment against Landis, Talley instituted an action against the insurance company on the policy and recovered a judgment in the sum of $30,000 which, while within the policy limit, was in excess of the amount fixed by the financial responsibility law of Illinois, namely $5,000. The court said (107 N.E.2d at page 192): "There is also a contention made in this Court that the policy coverage should be limited to $5,000.00 since Section 58e of the Motor Vehicle Financial Responsibility Law provides that proof of financial responsibility shall mean proof of ability to respond in damages in the amount of $5,000.00. The provision of the policy referred to as condition 6 [identical with condition 8 of the policy here] is specifically to the effect that where the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Financial Responsibility Law of any State are to be read into the policy, such provisions are to be effective 'to the extent of the coverage and limitation of liability required by such law, 'but not in excess of the policy limits in amount. It is obvious that the word 'coverage' in the quoted portion of condition 6 could only refer to coverage required by the Financial Responsibility Law. Such required coverage was in the sum of $5,000.00. This construction is reinforced by the further provision that, in no event would such coverage exceed the limits of liability stated in the policy. A judgment, therefore, would be justified under the circumstances, in the sum only of $5,000.00 and costs of suit."

Other authorities to like effect will be found cited in the annotation in 29 A.L.R.2d 811.

Inasmuch as section 415 requires insurance in the aggregate amount, exclusive of insurance and costs, of $10,000 for bodily injuries to two or more persons in any one accident and the total amount awarded by the judgment herein is greater than this, it is to that extent excessive and must be reduced accordingly. As the total amount of the judgments recovered for bodily injuries against the insured by the persons involved in the accident, including the Friedmans, the amount of whose judgments must be considered although they are not parties to this action, aggregates $16,900, each of the respondents is entitled to judgment as follows:

Sophie Shapiro, 58/169ths of $10,000 or $3,432.25; Harold Shapiro, 5/169ths or $295.86; Toinette Karvas, 5/169ths or $295.86; Richard Karvas, 58/169ths or $3,432.25.

In addition Harold Shapiro is entitled to judgment for $600 by virtue of his judgment for property damage and each of the respondents is entitled to the costs incurred in the personal injury actions as follows: Respondents Shapiro, $98.14; and respondents Karvas, $48.75, together with interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum on the aggregate of the judgments in favor of the respective respondents from July 26, 1956.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to amend its findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with the views herein expressed and enter judgment accordingly.

Manuel CASTRO, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 1191.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 23, 1959.

Prosecution for unlawfully furnishing and giving away of a narcotic to an undercover agent who accosted defendant and asked him if he had any "stuff" and who gave defendant a ride home and went into defendant's home where he claimed defendant gave him a capsule containing a narcotic. From adverse judgments of the Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Carl B. Hilliard, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, Acting P. J., held that evidence warranted inference that defendant voluntarily furnished and gave a narcotic to agent and that defendant was not inveigled into commission of crime.

Judgments affirmed.

MUSSELL, Acting Presiding Judge.

Appellant was charged with furnishing a narcotic (Health and Safety Code, § 11500) a felony, in that on or about the 14th day of January, 1958, he did wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously furnish and give away a narcotic, to wit, codeine. Two prior felony convictions for possession of narcotics alleged in the information were admitted and a jury trial resulted in a verdict finding the appellant guilty as charged. Upon motion of the district attorney the allegations of the prior convictions were dismissed by the trial court in the interests of justice. Appellant's application for probation was denied, and on May 27, 1958, he was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law for the offense charged and it was further ordered "that the sentence imposed shall run concurrent with any prior sentence or sentences that the defendant may be obligated to serve."

[1] On April 8, 1955, appellant entered a plea of guilty, in the Superior Court of San Bernardino County, to the crime of possession of a narcotic, a felony. His application for probation in that case, Superior Court No. 10404, was granted for a period of three years and on May 27, 1958, the court vacated, revoked and set aside said probation and appellant was sentenced to state prison for the term prescribed by law on this charge. The sentence was ordered "to run concurrent with any prior sentence that defendant may be obligated to serve". Appellant appeals from the judgment in the instant case, tried by a jury, Superior Court No. 12490, and from "the judgment and sentencing in regard to revocation of probation in case No. 10404". No appeal lies from sentences. People v. Gallardo, 41 Cal.2d 57, 60, 257 P.2d 29. The appeal from the sentence herein is therefore dismissed and the appeal herein will be considered as having been taken from the judgment. People v. Yarter, 138 Cal.App.2d 803, 805, 292 P.2d 649.

[2] In October, 1957, Joaquin Acosta, an undercover agent for the San Bernardino County Sheriff's office, was asked by city detectives to see what he could find on appellant if he saw him. Acosta met appellant about six times prior to January 14, 1958, and on that date met appellant at the Turf Club in San Bernardino. Acosta asked appellant if he had any "stuff" with him and appellant said that he did not. Appellant and a friend asked Acosta if he could give them a ride home and after dropping the friend off appellant and Acosta drove to appellant's home. They entered through a side door and went through the kitchen into the den where appellant began to play Hi-Fi records. He left the room several times and one time when he came back into the living room he had a black and green capsule in his hand which he gave to Acosta, saying: "Here, man, this will do you some good". Acosta took the capsule, made a motion to put it in his mouth, and when appellant turned away Acosta put the capsule in his pocket. Later, he delivered the capsule to the city detective and upon analysis and examination by a qualified expert it was found to contain the narcotic codeine. The capsule was delivered to Acosta without any request having been made therefor by him. On December 8, 1957, a pharmacist had filled a prescription for appellant. This prescription called for the use of codeine and authorized the use of the medicine by appellant and by no one else. Appellant testified that on December 8, 1957, he had injured his shoulder in an automobile accident and had obtained a prescription from a doctor to relieve the pain; that on the night of February 14, 1958, he was suffering from pain in his shoulder and decided to take a capsule; that, Acosta, who was present at the time, asked to see the capsule and when he (appellant) placed some in his hand Acosta took one and pretended to swallow it.

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of the jury; that if there was any transferring of narcotics by him, the "result was due to the undercover agent instilling in the mind of appellant, who was innocent of any criminal purpose, the original intent to do the act, thus entrapping him into the commission of a crime he would not otherwise have committed or even contemplated". These contentions are without merit.

[3] In People v. Mangiameli, 149 Cal. App.2d 642, 645, 308 P.2d 762, the court held that where evidence, circumstantial or otherwise, establishes that a crime has been committed and that the accused was the perpetrator thereof, an appellate tribunal in reviewing a conviction will not appraise the weight of the evidence but will consider and determine only whether, upon the face of the evidence, it can justly be held that the trier of facts could not have found sufficient facts to warrant the inference of guilt.

[4] In People v. Bobeda, 143 Cal.App. 2d 496, 500, 300 P.2d 97, it is held that the trial court's determination of the truth or veracity of a witness is final, and it is not required to accept as true the testimony of a witness even though not contradicted.

[5, 6] This is not the type of a case in which the law requires corroboration (People v. Gebron, 124 Cal.App.2d 675, 676, 268 P.2d 1068). The testimony of the undercover agent was clear and coherent and while the testimony of appellant was in conflict therewith, the jury had the authority to determine the conflict and its finding cannot be disturbed on appeal. In People v. Lindsey, 91 Cal.App.2d 914, 916, 205 P.2d 1114, 1115, it was held that entrapment is the conception and planning of an offense by an officer and his procurement of its commission by one who would not have perpetrated it except for the trickery, persuasion or fraud of the officer; that the officer must induce the defendant to commit a crime which he would not have committed without such inducement; that:

> "Where the doing of an act is a crime, regardless of the consent of anyone, the courts are agreed that if the criminal intent originates in the mind of the accused and the offense is completed, the fact that an opportunity was furnished, or that the accused is aided in the commission of the crime in order to secure the evidence necessary to prosecute him therefor, constitutes no defense. 15 Am.Jur. Sec. 355, p. 24. If the officer uses no more persuasion than is necessary to an ordinary sale, and the accused is ready and willing to make the sale, there is no entrapment. People v. Rucker, 121 Cal.App. 361, 364, 8 P.2d 938; People v. Harris, 80 Cal.App. 328, 331, 251 P. 823; In re Moore, 70 Cal.App. 483, 488, 233 P. 805; People v. Heusers, 58 Cal.App. 103, 104, 207 P. 908. Where the defendant is not inveigled into the commission of the crime there is no entrapment. People v. Rucker, supra. * * * It is only when the criminal design is conceived in the mind of the officer and does not originate with the accused, and a decoy is used to ensnare the innocent and law-abiding by persuasion, deceitful representation, inducement or allurement into the commission of the crime, that there is entrapment."

[7, 8] Entrapment is an affirmative defense imposing upon the accused the burdent of proving that he was induced to commit the crime of which he is charged, and the existence or nonexistence of entrapment is a question of fact for the trier of fact who is the sole judge of the weight and worth of the evidence. People v. Gutierrez, 128 Cal.App.2d 387, 390, 275 P.2d 65. The evidence herein warranted the jury in inferring that appellant voluntarily furnished and gave a narcotic to the witness Acosta as charged in the information, and that appellant was not inveigled into the commission of the crime. Appellant has presented no argument, authority or grounds for reversal of the judgment entered by the trial court upon revocation of his probation.

The judgments are affirmed.

MUNICIPAL COURT of The LOS ANGELES JUDICIAL DISTRICT, COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, State of California, Defendant and Respondent.*

Civ. 23343.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 27, 1959.

Rehearing Granted Feb. 17, 1959.

Petition for writ of prohibition to prevent retrial on same charge after reversal of conviction for violation of felon registration ordinance. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Leon T. David, J., entered an order denying the petition, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that felon registration ordinance which makes presence in city without registering in compliance with ordinance an offense, regardless of actual knowledge of duty to register or probability of such knowledge, violates due process of law requirement of United States Constitution, U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

Order reversed and cause remanded with directions.

* Opinion vacated 343 P.2d 81.

1. Prohibition ⇐3(5)

Prohibition would lie to prevent retrial on same charge after reversal of conviction for violation of felon registration ordinance on ground that such conviction without actual knowledge of duty to register or proof of probability of such knowledge violated due process of law requirement of United States Constitution, since the question presented was one of jurisdiction and remedy by motion in arrest of judgment or by appeal after judgment was neither speedy nor adequate. U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14.

2. Prohibition ⇐3(5)

Where one is restrained of his liberty under an illegal process, appeal after judgment does not afford such a speedy and adequate remedy as will preclude relief by other appropriate proceedings.

3. Constitutional Law ⇐258

Felon registration ordinance which makes mere presence in city without registering in compliance with ordinance an offense, regardless of actual knowledge of duty to register or probability of such knowledge and subsequent failure to comply with ordinance, violates due process of law requirement of 14th amendment. U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14.

4. Prohibition ⇐5(4)

Where conviction for violation of felon registration ordinance had been reversed on ground that ordinance, as construed by courts, violated due process of law requirement of 14th amendment, accused was entitled to peremptory writ of prohibition to prevent retrial for same alleged violation. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

Samuel C. McMorris, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Donald K. Byrne, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In June, 1951 appellant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County of the crime of forgery. She was granted conditional probation.

On February 2, 1955 appellant was arrested on suspicion of another offense. Although convicted of the aforesaid charge of forgery, a crime punishable in this state as a felony, she had not at the time of her subsequent arrest on suspicion, registered under the provisions of the Municipal Code of the City of Los Angeles. Section 52.38 (a) of said code defines "convicted person" as follows:

"Any person who, subsequent to January 1, 1921, has been or hereafter is convicted of an offense punishable as a felony in the State of California, or who has been or who is hereafter convicted of any offense in any place other than the State of California, which offense, if committed in the State of California, would have been punishable as a felony."

Section 52.39 provides that it shall be unlawful for "any convicted person" to be or remain in Los Angeles for a period of more than five days without registering; it requires any person having a place of abode outside the city to register if he comes into the city on five occasions or more during a 30-day period; and it prescribes the information to be furnished the Chief of Police on registering.

Section 52.43(b) makes the failure to register a continuing offense, each day's failure constituting a separate offense.

After her arrest on the aforesaid charge of suspicion of another offense, appellant was charged in the respondent Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District with a violation of the aforesaid registration law. She was convicted, her motion for a new trial was denied, and she was granted conditional probation. The conviction was affirmed by the Appellate Department of the Superior Court. On appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, the conviction was reversed (Lambert v. People of State of California, 355 U.S. 225, 78 S. Ct. 240, 242, 2 L.Ed.2d 228, 231), on the ground as stated by the court, "* * * we now hold that the registration provisions of the (Los Angeles Municipal) Code as sought to be applied here violate the Due Process requirement of the Fourteeth Amendment * * * No element of willfulness is by terms included in the ordinance nor read into it by the California court as a condition necessary for a conviction". In stating the issue presented on appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States said (355 U.S. at page 227, 78 S.Ct. at page 242, 2 L.Ed.2d at page 231, supra), "The question is whether a registration act of this character violates Due Process where it is applied to a person who had no actual knowledge of his duty to register, and where no showing is made of the probability of such knowledge". (Emphasis added.) After noting that registration ordinances are common and that their range is wide, as indicated by cases cited in the opinion, the court (355 U.S. at page 229, 78 S.Ct. at page 243, 2 L.Ed.2d at page 232) went on to say, "But the present ordinance is entirely different. Violation of its provisions is unaccompanied by any activity whatever, mere presence in the city being the test. Moreover, circumstances which might move one to inquire as to the necessity of registration are completely lacking. At most the ordinance is but a law enforcement technique designed for the convenience of law enforcement agencies through which a list of names and addresses of felons then residing in a given community is compiled. The disclosure is merely a compilation of former convictions already publicly recorded in the jurisdiction where obtained.

Nevertheless this [appellant] on first becoming aware of her duty to register was given no opportunity to comply with the law and avoid its penality, even though her default was entirely innocent. She could but suffer the consequences of the ordinance, namely, conviction with the imposition of heavy criminal penalities thereunder. We believe that actual knowledge of the duty to register or proof of the probability of such knowledge and subsequent failure to comply are necessary before a conviction under the ordinance can stand. As Holmes wrote in The Common Law, 'A law which punished conduct which would not be blameworthy in the average member of the community would be too severe for that community to bear.' Id., at 50. Its severity lies in the absence of an opportunity either to avoid the consequences of the law or to defend any prosecution brought under it. Where a person did not know of the duty to register and where there was no proof of the probability of such knowledge, he may not be convicted consistently with Due Process. Were it otherwise, the evil would be as great as it is when the law is written in print too fine to read or in a language foreign to the community." (Emphasis added.)

When the remittitur of the Supreme Court of the United States was lodged with the Appellate Department of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, that tribunal vacated the order of respondent municipal court granting probation, ordered that appellant's motion for a new trial be granted, and remanded the cause to the municipal court for a new trial.

When appellant was notified to appear in respondent municipal court, she applied to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County for a writ of prohibition restraining and enjoining respondent municipal court from proceeding with a retrial of the aforesaid cause. The superior court refused to grant an alternative writ as prayed for or to set a date for hearing appellant's petition therefor. It is from the denial of said petition that appellant prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant's main contention on this appeal is that the municipal code provision as it existed at the time she was prosecuted thereunder was invalid and unconstitutional in that it was offensive to the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

[1, 2] Respondent however, contends that prohibition will issue only where there is no plain, speedy and adequate remedy at law. That in the instant case appellant "has the remedy of a motion in arrest of judgment at any time until judgment. In addition there is the basic remedy of appeal after judgment." We cannot agree with respondent where, as here, the ultimate question presented is plainly one of jurisdiction. The rule in criminal cases, sanctioned by right, reason and simple justice, as we conceive it, is stated by the court in Ex parte Hayter, 16 Cal.App. 211, 225, 116 P. 370, 376, as follows:

"The remedy by appeal is neither speedy nor adequate in a case where a citizen is restrained of his liberty under an illegal process. Where one is unlawfully imprisoned and it may be made so to appear to a court in an appropriate legal proceeding, there can exist no conceivable reason why he should not be restored to his liberty by the shortest cut recognized by the law, and not be compelled to remain in a county prison and thus be made to suffer the inconvenience of such restraint until some more dilatory remedy, which may ultimately be available to him, has been put in operation. See Terrill v. Superior Court, [6 Cal.Unrep. 398], 60 P. 38."

And again in Arfsten v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.App. 269, 276, 128 P. 949, 951, the following appears: "It may be added that the contention of another adequate remedy implies, of course, that the petitioner may be convicted and suffer imprisonment until his case can be reached on appeal. Unless convicted he will have no occasion to invoke the other remedy. If convicted, and required, as he may be, to suffer the whole or a part of the term imposed, the remedy by appeal would at least to the appellant seem quite inadequate."

[3] We are persuaded that appellant's contention as to the invalidity of the municipal code section under which it is proposed to try her must be sustained.

Respondent contends that the Supreme Court of the United States (Lambert v. People of State of California, supra) impliedly decided that the ordinance itself need not contain a requirement of notice of the duty to register as a convicted person. That the decision of the highest court in the land was merely to the effect that "as applied to appellant, there must be a showing in the trial court that appellant had knowledge or probability of knowledge of the requirement to register". We do not so construe the decision. At her previous trial, appellant offered proof that she had no actual knowledge of the requirement that she register under the municipal code provision, which defense on her part was rejected by the trial court and the ruling was affirmed on appeal to the superior court appellate department. What the United States Supreme Court said was, and we quote (355 U.S. at page 227, 78 S. Ct. at page 242, 2 L.Ed.2d at page 231), "No element of willfulness is by terms included in the ordinance nor read into it by the California Court as a condition necessary for a conviction". (Emphasis added.) To us it seems manifest that the United States Supreme Court holding was that no conviction can legally be predicated upon the ordinance as construed by the California courts because its omission of the requirement of knowledge and consequent willfulness does violence to the due process requirement of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Because of the foregoing conclusion at which we have arrived, it becomes unnecessary to discuss other questions presented on this appeal.

[4] For the foregoing reasons, the order from which this appeal was taken is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to the court below to issue its peremptory writ of prohibition as prayed.

Ben I. RANKIN, aka Ben Rankin, James H. Morrison, Bernard Livingston, John Doe I, John Doe II, John Doe III, John Doe IV, John Doe V, and John Doe VI, Defendants, James H. Morrison, Appellant.

Civ. 23289.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 29, 1959.

Action for money had and received. Defendant moved for an exemption of half of his earnings allegedly received by him for his personal services within 30 days of levy of an attachment served on a number of banks. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, H. Eugene Breitenbach, J., denied defendant's claim and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that defendant's affidavit merely stating that moneys attached were earnings for personal services rendered within 30 days next preceding the levy, was a mere conclusion of law, and did not constitute proof of such fact, nor did defendant's supplemental affidavit to the effect that moneys attached were deposited within 30 days next preceding the levy, afford a basis for the court granting defendant an exemption, since such supplemental affidavit did not contain an averment that the moneys were earned within the 30-day period, and therefore, since there was nothing before the court to show the moneys attached were earnings for personal services rendered within 30 days next preceding the levy, exemption was properly denied.

Affirmed.

1. Exemptions ⇐48(2)

Earnings of a self-employed person, whether he is a professional man or not, are "earnings for personal services" within meaning of statute exempting a portion of such earnings. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 690.11.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Earnings for Personal Services".

2. Exemptions ⇐122, 148

One who contends for an exemption of a portion of his earnings from a levy must establish his right by evidence, and by facts, and an affidavit which merely follows language of an exemption statute states nothing more than a conclusion of law and proves nothing.

3. Exemptions ⇐122

In action for money had and received, defendant's affidavit merely stating that moneys attached were earnings for personal services rendered within 30 days next preceding the levy was a mere conclusion of law, and did not constitute proof of such fact, nor did defendant's supplemental affidavit to the effect that moneys attached were deposited within 30 days next preceding the levy afford a basis for the court granting defendant an exemption, since such supplemental affidavit did not contain an averment that the moneys were earned within the 30-day period, and therefore, since there was nothing before the court to show the moneys attached were earnings for personal services rendered within 30 days next preceding the levy, exemption was properly denied. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 690.11.

4. Appeal and Error ⇐714(4)

In proceeding by defendant in an action for money had and received for an exemption of half of his earnings from a levy of attachment, declarations filed in District Court of Appeal as to where attached moneys were derived from could not be considered, since they were not a part of the record on appeal. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rules 4, 6–8.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐594, 607(1)

When an appellant desires to present any point which requires consideration of the oral proceedings before a lower court he must obtain and file in the appellate court a reporter's transcript, certified by the reporter, or, where a transcript is unavailable, a settled statement of the oral proceedings prepared by the parties and settled by the judge who heard the matter, or an agreed statement prepared by the parties, consisting of a condensed statement of the relevant proceedings. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 4, 6–8.

James H. Morrison, appellant, in pro. per.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Samuel O. Pruitt, Jr., and John L. Endicott, Los Angeles, for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal from an order denying the claim of defendant James H. Morrison for an exemption of half of his earnings, averred to have been received by him for his personal services rendered within 30 days of the levy of an attachment.

The complaint, filed November 9, 1955, alleged a common count for money had and received. On filing the complaint, plaintiff filed an affidavit for a writ of attachment alleging Morrison was indebted to plaintiff on an implied-in-law contract for the direct payment of money. A writ of attachment issued and was served on a number of banks the following day. $706.96 was attached in four bank accounts.

On September 11, 1957, nearly two years later, Morrison filed an "Exemption Claim For Earnings Under Section 690.11, C.C. P." stating that the $706.96 were his earnings for personal services rendered within 30 days next preceding the levy and that they were necessary for the use of his family, consisting of himself and his wife. Plaintiff filed a counter-affidavit stating the moneys attached were not earnings for personal services rendered within 30 days next preceding the levy; on information and belief, the moneys attached were on deposit in the banks for longer than 30 days prior to the levy. Morrison filed a supplemental affidavit stating he was self-employed as a tax consultant and the earnings were from fees for such services; he deposited in one of the banks "fees for personal services rendered to his clients in the amount of $115.00 on November 4, 1955"; he deposited in another of the banks "fees for personal services rendered to his clients as follows: $50.00 on November 4, 1955, $340.00 on November 7, 1955, and 200.00 on November 8, 1955"; the amounts of $59.96 and $6.14, held under attachment in two other banks, "were earnings derived from personal services rendered by affiant to his clients."

On motion of appellant Morrison, a hearing was had to determine the claim of exemption. The court denied the claim. Morrison appeals from the order.

[1] Morrison first asserts his earnings as a tax consultant are earnings for personal services within the meaning of section 690.11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The point is not in issue. Plaintiff concedes that the earnings of a self-employed person, whether he be a professional man or not, are earnings for personal services within the meaning of section 690.11.

Section 690.11 requires that earnings to be exempt must have been for "personal services rendered at any time within 30 days next preceding the levy of attachment." Morrison made no showing to come within the section. There was nothing before the court to show that the moneys attached were earnings for personal services rendered within 30 days next preceding the levy.

[2, 3] The statement in the printed form "Exemption Claim For Earnings" that the moneys attached were "earnings for personal services rendered within 30 days next preceding said levy" is a conclusion of law. "The prevailing rule is that 'one who contends for an exemption must establish his right by evidence, by facts,' and that an affidavit which merely follows the language of the statute states nothing more than a conclusion of law and proves nothing." Bertozzi v. Swisher, 27 Cal.App.2d 739, 743, 81 P.2d 1016, 1918. "[T]he burden is upon him to show that he is entitled to the exemption. * * * The affidavit of Santich merely follows the language of the statute, and states nothing but conclusions of law. Such an affidavit proves nothing. 1 Cal.Jur. 669, 670." Petrich v. Francis, 83 Cal.App. 72, 74, 256 P. 444. Also see Fay Securities Co. v. Bowering, 106 Cal. App.Supp. 771, 776–777, 288 P. 41. Morrison's supplemental affidavit merely establishes that the moneys attached were deposited within 30 days next preceding the levy. There is no averment therein that the moneys were earned within the 30-day period.

In Carter v. Carter, 55 Cal.App.2d 13, 130 P.2d 186, the defendant claimed an exemption of moneys in his bank account. He was a commission salesman in San Francisco for New York firms. His claim was rejected, the court stating (55 Cal.App. 2d at page 14, 130 P.2d at page 187):

> "He [defendant] testified that he sells drapery and upholstery goods on commission in San Francisco for two New York firms. The practice is for him to forward checks to these firms for goods sold and they in turn mail checks to him for the commissions earned. He did not recall what items made up the amount of $251.87 claimed to be exempt. He merely added up all the deposits made in his account within thirty days of the levy. He keeps no books and had no record of his earnings except his deposits and an informal record that he keeps to enable him to make an income tax return. It is obvious from this summary of his testimony that he failed to prove that any part of the sum as to which he claimed an exemption was for 'services rendered within thirty days next preceding the levy.' He failed completely in fact to prove when any of such services were actually rendered."

Morrison failed completely to prove when any of the services for which the moneys on deposit were earned were actually rendered.

[4, 5] In his closing brief Morrison says that he appeared at the hearing of the matter "bringing with him evidence consisting of bank deposit slips, cash-book entries, and vouchers, which would show that the attached moneys were derived from services, personally rendered by appellant to his clients within the 30 days immediately prior to the date of levy" and that he "made the proffer of the evidence, explaining to the court what the evidence would show, namely, that the moneys were appellant's earnings from personally rendered services within the thirty days immediately prior to the date of attachment, or levy, and that the amounts on deposit were deposited within the same thirty days prior to levy. Respondent, by his counsel, made no objection to the proffer. However, the court declined the proffer, saying that it was not necessary to present the evidence, and that it was taking the matter under submission." He has filed two declarations in this court to substantially the same effect: one by himself, and one by an attorney who happened to be in the courtroom at the time. The statement in the brief and the declarations cannot be considered. They are not part of the record on appeal. When an appellant desires to present any point which requires consideration of the oral proceedings, he must obtain and file in the appellate court a reporter's transcript, certified by the reporter; or, where a transcript is unavailable, a settled statement of the oral proceedings prepared by the parties and settled by the judge who heard the matter; or an agreed statement prepared by the parties, consisting of a condensed statement of the relevant proceedings. Rules on Appeal, 4, 6, 7, 8. The record on appeal consists solely of the clerk's transcript. There is no reporter's transcript, settled statement, or agreed statement.

v.

WESTERN GRAIN & FERTILIZER CO., a corporation, Kern Valley Packing Co., a corporation, Oscar Rudnick and Mark Futerman, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5901.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 28, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1959.

Action was brought for unlawful detainer and for damages. The Superior Court of San Bernardino County, Carl B. Hilliard, J., entered judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, Acting P. J., held that where defendant-lessee had abandoned leased premises before complaint was filed, judgment of nonsuit was proper as to the first cause of action in unlawful detainer, and that where complaint was filed more than four years after alleged breach of contract, second cause of action for damages for alleged breach of contract was barred by statute of limitations.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Landlord and Tenant ⇐288

Statutory unlawful detainer proceedings are summary in nature and are designed to determine or protect landlord's right to possession in those situations specified in the statute and cannot be used for any other purpose. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1161.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇐288

The primary purpose of an action of unlawful detainer is for recovery of possession of the realty, and recovery of rent is a mere incident to the main object, and, when the main object of the action fails, the incidents fall with it. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1161.

3. Pleading ⇐354(27)

Where lessee abandoned leased premises before lessor brought action for unlawful detainer, wherein lessor sought to recover rent and damages for failure of lessee to remove structures, action was properly dismissed. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1161.

4. Limitation of Actions ⇐21(1)

Where complaint was filed more than four years after alleged breach of contract, second cause of action for damages for alleged breach of contract was barred by statute of limitations. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 337, subd. 1.

Trent G. Anderson, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

MUSSELL, Acting Presiding Justice.

This is an action for unlawful detainer and for damages. The first amended complaint contains two causes of action. In the first cause of action plaintiff alleges, among other matters, that on or about November 1, 1954, plaintiff and defendant Western Grain & Fertilizer Co., Inc., entered into a written agreement wherein plaintiff, as owner, leased to said defendant approximately 60 acres of the property commonly known as Fontana Farms, in San Bernardino county; that the lease was for a period of five years at an agreed rental per year and lessee agreed to pay the taxes; that it was further agreed that "* * * in the event the lessee abandons the premises or should the lessee default in any of the covenants herein contained, the lessor at his option may reenter and take possession of the premises and remove all persons and property thereto, and at his option terminate this lease"; that it was further provided that lessor acknowledges that certain items of fixtures were sold to the Kern Valley Packing Company; that lessee warrants that it is entitled to remove such items as were sold to the Kern Valley Packing Company primarily including the feed mill on the leased premises, and lessor consents to the removal of such items thus sold at any time during the terms of the lease. It is further alleged that defendant Western defaulted in the payments in the sum of $8,625; that plaintiff is informed and believes and therefore alleges that defendants have abandoned said premises in their entirety, and did so abandon said premises on or about the 30th day of March, 1956; that there are certain buildings, property of lessee, now located on said premises, consisting of a grain elevator building and of certain incidental structures and fence posts; that defendant Western has not removed said buildings and that the cost of removing them is the approximate sum of $15,000; that in said lease it is provided that lessee agrees to remove all rubbish from the premises; that the aforesaid grain elevator has partially burned and is therefore useless and that the expense of removing it is approximately $15,000.

The second cause of action, which relates a transaction antedating the foregoing by several years, is against the defendants Kern Valley Packing Company and Oscar Rudnick. Plaintiff alleges that on or about November 24, 1951, plaintiff was the owner of all the fixtures, buildings and equipment located on the real property described in the first cause of action; that plaintiff's assignors entered into a written agreement of sale with defendant Kern whereby said defendant purchased the fixtures located on said premises, including a grain elevator, grinding mill, with hog pens, runways and fence posts; that in said agreement defendant Kern agreed to accomplish the removal of all of said improvements within five months from the close of escrow and to leave the premises in an orderly and clean condition; that escrow was entered into between the parties, the purchase price of said buildings was paid and the escrow was closed on or about February 5, 1952; that more than five months have gone by since the close of said escrow, but defendant Kern has failed and neglected to remove the grain elevator and certain fence posts and other buildings incidental to said elevator, and that plaintiff was damaged thereby in the sum of $15,000.

The prayer of the complaint is for judgment against Western for unpaid rental and personal property taxes, for restitution and possession of the premises, for attorney's fees, and for $15,000 for cost of removal of rubbish from the premises. Judgment is sought against Kern and Rudnick in the sum of $15,000 as the reasonable cost of removing the fixtures and equipment as alleged in the second cause of action.

The pre-trial conference order herein shows that plaintiff's statement is that the instant action is an unlawful detainer action and an effort by the lessor to regain possession of the premises demised; that in the second cause of action the sale of the personal property to Kern Valley Packing Company included a clause requiring the removal of the property and in this cause of action damages are sought against the Kern Valley Packing Company for plaintiff's alleged costs in removing the personal property.

At the close of plaintiff's case the trial court granted a nonsuit and plaintiff appeals from the judgment which was then entered.

[1] The statutory unlawful detainer proceedings are summary in nature. They are designed to determine or protect the landlord's right to possession in those situations specified in the statute (Code Civ. Proc. Sec. 1161) and cannot be used for any other purpose (30 Cal.Jur.2d, Sec. 348, page 487).

[2] In Markham v. Fralick, 2 Cal.2d 221, 227, 39 P.2d 804, 806, the court said:

> "The primary purpose of such an action is for the recovery of the possession of the property. The recovery of rent is a mere incident to the main object. Arnold v. Krigbaum, 169 Cal. 143, 146, 146 P. 423, Ann.Cas.1916D, 370. When the main object of the action fails, the incidents fall with it."

In Garfinkle v. Montgomery, 113 Cal. App.2d 149, 153, 248 P.2d 52, 54, the court said:

> "The summary remedy of unlawful detainer is primarily designed to recover possession from the defaulting lessee. As incidental to the main object the court under Section 1174 of the Code of Civil Procedure assesses damages and determines the rent due. Markham v. Fralick, 2 Cal.2d 221, 39 P.2d 804; D'Amico v. Riedel, 95 Cal. App.2d 6, 212 P.2d 52. In an unlawful detainer action where the lessee remains in possession or deprives the lessor of possession until the rendition of judgment the allowance of rental to the date of judgment is proper. Keyes v. Moy Jin Mun, 136 Cal. 129, 68 P. 476; Flournoy v. Everett, 51 Cal.App. 406, 196 P. 916. However, if the lessor enters into and assumes full control of the premises during the pendency of the action and it cannot be said that such assumption of control is for the account of the lessees under appropriate provisions of the lease or circumstances justifying such a declaration, then such entry constitutes an eviction and liability for rent is thus terminated."

[3] In the instant case the record shows that the defendant Western Grain & Fertilizer Company abandoned the premises involved about March 30, 1956, and it is alleged by plaintiff in its first amended complaint "that defendants have abandoned said premises in their entirety and did so abandon said premises on or about the 30th day of March, 1956." The complaint herein was filed on July 25, 1956. There is no pleading or proof that defendant Western was in possession of the property at the time the action was filed or that said defendant wrongfully or otherwise withheld possession of the property from plaintiff at that time. The record further shows that plaintiff finally removed the fixtures involved in April, 1957, and there was no evidence indicating that plaintiff was prevented from taking possession of the property in March, 1956, or prior thereto. Under these circumstances a judgment of nonsuit was proper as to the first cause of action in unlawful detainer.

[4] Plaintiff's second cause of action is for damages for the breach of a contract by respondents Kern Valley Packing Company and Oscar Rudnick, who agreed therein to remove the fixtures involved within five months after close of escrow. The record shows that the escrow was closed on February 5, 1952 and the complaint herein was filed July 5, 1956, more than four years after the alleged breach of the contract. Respondents pleaded the statute of limitations and the record shows that the second cause of action in the complaint was barred by the statute. Code Civ.Proc. § 337, subd. 1.

Judgment affirmed.

PHOENIX INDEMNITY COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 9478.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 30, 1959.

Insured's action against liability insurer for expenses incurred in establishing, by declaratory relief action, a breach of insurance contract. The Superior Court, Merced County, Gregory P. Maushart, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that neither Civil Code section expressing elementary rule on measure of damages for breach of contract nor any other statutory provision authorized recovery of attorney fees for prosecution of declaratory judgment proceeding.

Modified and affirmed.

Insurance ⇐602.1

In insured's action against liability insurer for expenses incurred in establishing a breach of insurance contract by declaratory relief action, neither Civil Code section expressing elementary rule on measure of damages for breach of contract nor any other statutory provisions authorized recovery of attorney fees for prosecution of declaratory judgment proceeding. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3300.

Weinstock, Anderson, Maloney & Chase, San Francisco, for appellant.

Lee Alex MacNicol and Preston, Braucht & George, Merced, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

Defendant Phoenix Indemnity Company appeals from a judgment of the trial court entered pursuant to plaintiff's motion for judgment on the pleadings.

In September of 1952 defendant issued a liability insurance policy to plaintiff covering his business operations. By the terms of that policy defendant, among other things, agreed: "To pay on behalf of the Insured all sums which the Insured shall become obligated to pay by reason of the liability imposed upon him by law for damages because of injury to or destruction of property, including the loss of use thereof, caused by accident and arising out of the hazards hereinafter defined." The policy also provided that defendant "* * shall (a) defend in his name and behalf any suit against the Insured alleging such injury, sickness, disease or destruction and seeking damages on account thereof, even if such suit is groundless, false or fraudulent; but the company shall have the right to make such investigation, negotiations and settlement of any claim or suit as may be deemed expedient by the Company."

In April of 1953, as a result of work then being done by plaintiff, certain liability claims for damages were asserted against him. Defendant was duly notified but refused to defend said claims upon the ground that they did not come within the coverage afforded by the policy. Plaintiff thereupon engaged his own attorney to defend the claims at the cost to him of $250. In addition plaintiff instituted an action against defendant for declaratory relief wherein he sought a declaration of the extent of the coverage under the policy. The judgment which was in favor of plaintiff provided:

"(a) That defendant is hereby required to afford to the plaintiff all of the rights and benefits of the named 'insured' under the terms of defendant's policy No. SM 30315 for and during the period extending from September 12, 1952 to and including September 12, 1953, specifically including any and all lawful claims established by the owners of any property which was damaged by plaintiff's operations on a certain parking lot in Merced, California, during April 1953;

"(b) That defendant is hereby required to perform all of its duties and obligations owing to plaintiff as the named 'insured' under the terms of defendant's policy No. SM 30315 during the policy period from September 12 1952 to September 12, 1953."

The defendant's appeal therefrom was affirmed by this court on November 28, 1956. Spiva v. Phoenix Indemnity Co., 146 Cal.App.2d 384, 303 P.2d 777.

Thereafter plaintiff filed the present action in which he seeks to recover from defendant the following items of damage for breach of contract: (1) $250 for attorney fees incurred in defending himself against third party claims; (2) $160.67 for court costs incurred in the action for declaratory relief against defendant; and (3) $1,200 for attorney fees incurred in that action. The trial court gave judgment in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $1,610.67, or the total sum sought, together with costs.

Since defendant admits liability for the items of $250 and $160.67 and is only contesting the award of $1,200 for attorney fees incurred by plaintiff in the declaratory relief action, the sole question before this court is whether or not plaintiff is entitled, as a matter of law, to attorney fees incurred by him in the prosecution of that proceeding.

It seems unnecessary to discuss at length the question presented. Plaintiff's rights, if any, to recover the sum in question must be dependent upon either (1) contract, or (2) statute, and since it is not contended that the insurance contract makes any provision whatsoever for such matters, we are concerned only with the second. In this regard it is plaintiff's contention that section 3300 of the Civil Code is controlling.

That section is merely an expression of the elementary rule on the measure of damages for breach of contract. Here the damages sought by plaintiff were expenses incurred in his endeavor to establish a breach of the contract by his declaratory relief action—not damages resulting from a breach. Those were the damages which were involved in the first action.

In the case of Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. West End etc. Co., 37 Cal.App.2d 685, 696, 100 P.2d 319, 324, the court held: "There is no express statutory provision allowing the recovery of such [attorney] fees in actions for declaratory relief * * " Furthermore, in the case of O'Morrow v. Borad, 27 Cal. 2d 794, 167 P.2d 483, 163 A.L.R. 894, where insurance policies having provisions identical to those in the present case were before the court in a declaratory relief action, the court held: " * * there is no basis for allowing O'Morrow the reasonable expense of counsel in the present suit for declaratory relief. He has not brought himself within any of the few exceptions to the general rule that, in the absence of contract or statutory provision, the services of an attorney must be paid for by the client who employs him." (27 Cal.2d at page 801, 167 P.2d at page 487.) It necessarily follows that, in the absence of any like showing by plaintiff in the present case, the same result must obtain herein.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the award of the sum of $1,200. As so modified, it is affirmed.

v.

Gibson BURKE and Lillian Burke, Defendants and Respondents.

No. 17888.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 2, 1959.

Action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff who tripped and fell in alleyway while carrying a barrel of refuse from employer's laboratory. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Raymond J. Arata, J., entered judgment for owners of alleyway and building which it served, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that where jury had deliberated several hours and asked to have reread to it the instruction of contributory negligence and requested that such instruction in written form be sent to the jury room, sending of written instruction into the jury room, while erroneous, was not prejudicial under the circumstances since the singling out of subject of contributory negligence was done by the jury in the course of their deliberations and not by the judge.

Affirmed.

1. Trial ⇐307(4)

An instruction is not one of those papers which jury is authorized to take into the jury room. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. §§ 612, 614.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1069(2)

In plaintiff's action against owners of alleyway and building which it served for personal injuries received when he tripped and fell while carrying a barrel of refuse from employer's laboratory through alleyway, where jury had deliberated for several hours before it requested a rereading of the instruction on contributory negligence and after such rereading of instruction, at request of jury, instruction in written form was sent into the jury room, while sending of written instruction was irregular and therefore erroneous, it was not, under the circumstances, prejudicial since it was the jury's debate which singled out issue of contributory negligence. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 612, 614.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1031(1), 1069(2)

Prejudice is not presumed from mere fact that court had sent written instructions into the jury room, and something affirmatively indicating prejudice should appear in order to justify a reversal in absence of other errors in conduct of trial. West's Ann.Code. Civ.Proc. §§ 612, 614.

R. Edward Burton, San Francisco, for appellant.

Partridge, O'Connell & Partridge, San Francisco, for respondents.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff tripped and fell while carrying a barrel of refuse from his employer's laboratory along and through an alleyway, for deposit in garbage cans placed there for that purpose. The jury gave its verdict in favor of defendants, the owners of the alleyway and the building which it served.

The sole assignment of prejudicial error is the fact that in response to the jury's request therefor the trial judge sent a written instruction on contributory negligence into the jury room.

[1, 2] An instruction is not one of the papers which the jury is authorized to take into the jury room. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 612–614. Accordingly, it was irregular and therefore erroneous to permit the taking of this instruction into the jury room. Melikian v. Independent Paper Stock Co., 8 Cal.App.2d 166, 168, 47 P.2d 539; Fererira v. Silvey, 38 Cal.App. 346, 359, 176 P. 371. However, we do not find it prejudicial under the circumstances of this case.

The jury was instructed, and retired for deliberations at 3:40 p. m. Deliberation continued, with time out for dinner, until 10:20 p. m., when the court recalled the jury to see if a verdict was possible. The foreman indicated that disagreement existed in regard to the issue of contributory negligence and asked that the court reread its instruction on contributory negligence. The court reread its previously given instruction on contributory negligence. Plaintiff interposed no objection. The jury retired for further deliberation.

Within a matter of a few minutes the court announced in the presence of counsel for both parties that the jury had asked for the written instruction on contributory negligence which had just been reread to them. The court complied with this request over objection of counsel for plaintiff. Counsel's objection was that it would be improper to send a written instruction to the jury room as it would tend to focus the jury's attention on a single instruction instead of the instructions as a whole. About ten minutes later, the jury returned its verdict in favor of defendants.

The instruction, to which plaintiff interposed no objection and the correctness of which he does not question, was an accurate and adequate statement on the subject of contributory negligence. Any singling out of that subject was done by the jury (not by the judge) in the course of their deliberations. Sending the instruction in to them, to be read in the jury room, would not seem to give this subject any greater emphasis than to have called them into the courtroom (which would have been proper) for the judge again to read it to them there.

[3] Here, we are "dealing with error which is collateral and without probable substantial relation to the disposition of the cause." Santina v. General Petroleum Corp., 41 Cal.App.2d 74, 77, 106 P.2d 60, 62. This, it would seem, is why prejudice is not presumed from the mere fact of sending written instructions into the jury room and why it is said that something affirmatively indicating prejudice should appear, to justify a reversal in the absence of other errors in the conduct of a trial. That appears to be the rationale of such cases as Fererira v. Silvey, supra, 38 Cal. App. 346, 359, 176 P. 371; Melikian v. Independent Paper Stock Co., supra, 8 Cal. App.2d 166, 168, 47 P.2d 539; Day v. General Petroleum Corp., 32 Cal.App.2d 220, 237–238, 89 P.2d 718; Santina v. General Petroleum Corp., supra, 41 Cal.App.2d 74, 76–78, 106 P.2d 60; Lewis v. Southern Pacific Co., 98 Cal.App.2d 358, 362, 220 P. 2d 431; Chambers v. Southern Pacific Co., 148 Cal.App.2d 873, 876–878, 307 P.2d 662.

In Nelson v. Southern Pacific Co., 8 Cal. 2d 648, 655, 67 P.2d 682, a reversal was ordered. But there were a number of errors, including errors in the giving and refusal of instructions and the rejection of evidence in addition to communication with the jury by sending them a message (the nature of which does not appear in the printed report) by the bailiff and without the presence of counsel. The court did not single out any one of these errors. It said "we are not prepared to say that the sum of these errors was not prejudicial * * *" At page 655 of 8 Cal.2d, at page 686 of 67 P.2d.

Plaintiff relies heavily on Hammond v. Foster, 1882, 4 Mont. 421, 1 P. 757, which held it proper for the court to give the jury all of the instructions, but erroneous, even by accident, to give the jury some but not all of the instructions. 1 P. at page 759. We see no analogy between that situation and the one presented here. Obviously, a different rule in respect to the furnishing of written instructions obtained there than here. Also, there the court, apparently upon its own initiative, furnished an incomplete set of instructions, analogous to orally giving incomplete instructions, as distinguished from furnishing an instruction at the jury's request, one that had just been reread to them at their request. Moreover, in the Hammond case the furnishing of incomplete instructions was not the sole error involved.

The judgment is affirmed.

Jan. 23, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 19, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 18, 1959.

Action against respondent in his representative capacity as executor of the will of the deceased. From an order granting respondent's motion for a change of venue to San Francisco in the Superior Court, Colusa County, Arthur C. Huston, J., the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem., held that where the primary purpose of the action was to recover personal property respondent's motion for change of venue was properly granted.

Order affirmed.

1. Venue ⇐45

In an action against respondent in his representative capacity as executor of deceased whose estate was subject of administration in San Francisco where it appeared that respondent was a resident of Alameda County, respondent would not be entitled to have the cause transferred to San Francisco on the ground of residence. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

2. Venue ⇐16½

If there is personal or in personam cause of action joined with one that is local in nature the defendant is entitled to have the proceeding transferred to the county of his residence but the action must be wholly local in nature. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

3. Executors and Administrators ⇐436

In action against respondent in his representative capacity as executor of the will of the deceased whose estate was subject of administration in San Francisco where respondent averred that 95% of the appraised value of the estate consisted of personalty and that the balance consisted of real property in County of Colusa and in San Francisco, primary purpose of the action was to recover personalty and venue was properly transferred to San Francisco. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.1.

Donald W. Littlejohn, Colusa, and Elkins & Wright, San Francisco, for appellant.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, San Francisco, for respondent.

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from an order granting respondent's motion for a change of venue.

Appellant commenced this action in the County of Colusa against respondent in his representative capacity as executor of the last will and testament of Alice Hagar Tubbs, deceased, whose estate is the subject of administration in the City and County of San Francisco.

[1] In his affidavit in support of the motion for change of venue to the City and County of San Francisco, respondent avers that he is not a resident of Colusa County, but omits any reference to his place of residence. However, it appears in the briefs that respondent is a resident of Alameda County. Consequently, respondent would not be entitled to have the cause transferred to the City and County of San Francisco on the ground of residence. Sec. 395, Code Civ.Proc. Nor is respondent entitled to a change of venue unless the action herein is one "on a claim for the payment of money or for the recovery of personal property" within the purview of Section 395.1 of said code, which provides: "When a defendant is sued in his official capacity as executor, administrator, guardian or trustee, on a claim for the payment of money or for the recovery of personal property, the county which has jurisdiction of the estate which he represents shall be the proper county for the trial of the action."

The complaint herein is entitled "Complaint in Equity to Recover Trust Property Obtained by Fraud and Collusion and to Impress a Constructive Trust," against plaintiff as executor of the last will and testament of Alice Hagar Tubbs, deceased. The complaint alleges in substance that Alice Hagar Tubbs, deceased, was the daughter of George Hagar; that George Hagar died testate on September 2, 1902; that his will was admitted to probate in Colusa County, and that his daughter Alice, and her husband, Alfred S. Tubbs, were appointed executors pursuant to the terms of said will. It is further alleged that under the terms of George Hagar's will the residue of his estate was left to his daughter Alice and her husband Alfred, and the survivors of them, in trust for the use of Alice and her children during her lifetime and upon Alice's death to pass to her descendants and if none in equal shares to certain named nieces, nephews, and the widow of a deceased nephew of the testator. Alice Hagar Tubbs died testate and without issue on December 22, 1955. Her will makes no provision for the beneficiaries of the trust named in her father's will, and appellant claims to have succeeded to the interest of one of them.

The complaint further alleges that Alice and her husband fraudulently concealed from the court in which her father's estate was administered the fact that his will contained the aforementioned trust provisions and that Alice had the whole of the residue of the estate distributed to herself absolutely free and clear of the trust. The prayer of the complaint is that respondent be ordered to turn over to the court all property and assets of the estate of Alice Tubbs which had their origin in or are traceable to the residue of the estate of George Hagar, deceased, and that the court distribute such property in accordance with the provisions of George Hagar's will. Appellant further prays that a referee be appointed, an accounting ordered, and a trust impressed on all property in respondent's possession which derives from the estate of George Hagar, deceased. As stated above, the determinative question as to respondent's right to change of venue is whether this action is one "on a claim for the payment of money or for the recovery of personal property." In his affidavit in support of the motion for a change of venue, respondent, among other things not pertinent to a determination of this appeal, avers that 95% of the appraised value of the assets of the estate consists of personal property, and that the balance of 5% of the appraised value of the estate consists of real property in the County of Colusa and in the City and County of San Francisco.

[2, 3] It seems clear to us that the primary purpose of this action is to recover personal property. As to the remaining 5%, consisting of real property in the City and County of San Francisco and in Colusa County, the action to recover it does not affect the venue here.

As stated in Hardy v. White, 130 Cal. App.2d 550, 552, 279 P.2d 126, 128:

"* * * The well settled rule is that if there is a personal, or in personam, cause of action joined with one that is local in nature, the defendant is entitled to have the proceeding transferred to the county of his residence. The action must be wholly local in nature to require it to be brought in the county of the situs as designated in section 392, subdivision (a), Code of Civil Procedure. [Citing cases.]" See, also, Peiser v. Mettler, 50 Cal.2d 594, 328 P.2d 953.

We conclude that the trial court properly granted respondent's motion for change of venue based on Section 395.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The order is affirmed.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Action for injunctive and declaratory relief. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, Wayne R. Millington, J., rendered judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The defendants moved to dismiss the appeal as untimely filed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that the essence of the action was the asserted invalidity of an assessment, and appeal was required to be perfected within 30 days.

Appeal dismissed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐339(1)

Where complaint was denominated one for "injunction and declaratory relief" but it was apparent that asserted invalidity of proceedings of defendant city to establish special assessment district and levy of assessment thereon to construct public parking facilities was essence of action, appeal taken more than 30 days after entry of judgment for defendants was untimely. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 2(a); West's Ann.Streets & High.Code, § 10400.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐428(2)

Timely filing of notice of appeal is jurisdictional. West's Ann.Streets & High.Code, § 10400.

Carr, McClelland, Ingersoll & Thompson, Burlingame, for respondents.

DRAPER, Justice.

Respondents move to dismiss this appeal upon the ground that it was filed too late. Judgment for defendants was entered January 30, 1958. Notice of appeal was filed March 25. "Except as otherwise specifically provided by law," notice of appeal may be filed within 60 days after entry of judgment (Rules on Appeal, Rule 2(a)). But in an action or proceeding contesting "[t]he validity of an assessment * * * levied" under Division 12, Streets and Highways Code, "[a]ny appeal from a final judgment * * * shall be perfected within 30 days after the entry of judgment" (Sts. & Hy. Code, § 10400).

[1] The present action is within the scope of Section 10400. The complaint is denominated one for "injunction and declaratory relief," but makes clear that each count asserts invalidity of the proceedings of defendant city to establish a special assessment district and levy an assessment thereon to construct public parking facilities. Both the allegations and prayer of the first count show that plaintiffs seek to enjoin the levy and collection of assessments. The second count, for declaratory relief, states plaintiffs' contention to be that "all proceedings taken * * * to create the assessments * * * are illegal and void."

A statutory provision almost identical to Section 10400 has been held valid and effective. Cohen v. City of Alameda, 168 Cal. 265, 142 P. 885. Another statute fixing a special time limit for appeal in a particular type of case has been upheld. Sheets v. Cleveland, 51 Cal.App.2d 148, 124 P.2d 200.

Appellants suggest that their action seeks to determine matters other than the validity of the assessment, but these matters are but steps in the assessment procedure, and it is apparent that the asserted invalidity of the assessment is the essence of the action. Appellants also contend that Section 10400 is ambiguous, and that in such case the ambiguity should be so resolved as to permit hearing on the merits. Santa Barbara etc. Agency v. All Persons, 47 Cal.2d 699, 306 P.2d 875. But we find no ambiguity in the language of the code section here involved.

Civ. 5779.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 26, 1959.

Action for specific performance of contract to sell real property and for damages. From judgment of the Superior Court of Riverside County, S. Bucciarelli, J., plaintiffs appealed and defendants cross appealed. The District Court, Shepard, J., held that contract for sale of realty authorizing deferred payments but containing no provisions as to how deferred payments were to be evidenced or secured could not be specifically enforced, and description of land which did not show whether place named was in California or any other state, or whether any map thereof had been recorded, was insufficient to permit a specific performance, but inability of court to order specific performance did not necessarily preclude assessment of damages.

Portion of judgment affirmed and balance of judgment reversed.

1. Specific Performance ⇐30

Where contract for sale of realty and personal property provided for payment in cash with a deferred balance, but without any provision as to how deferred payments were to be evidenced or secured, under such conditions of uncertainty as to terms contract could not be specifically enforced.

2. Specific Performance ⇐29(1, 2)

Contract for sale of land and personal property referring to property in a certain named city but without stating whether city was in California or any other state, whether any map thereof had ever been recorded or whether street number was that of a particular and sole residence, and without any inventory or description of furniture involved, was insufficient to permit specific performance.

3. Evidence ⇐460(2)
Frauds, Statute of ⇐158(3)

Under some conditions parol evidence can be received to assist in determining meaning of words used for property descriptions, but when the statute of frauds interposes a bar no material elements of a contract may be supplied by parol.

4. Specific Performance ⇐68

Specific performance will not lie for enforcement of contract for sale of personal property.

5. Specific Performance ⇐128(1)

Inability of court to order specific performance of contract does not necessarily cut off all legal right and since there is but one form of civil action in such matters it is the duty of court to look at problem as a whole for the purpose of doing justice between the parties if it is possible.

6. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐351(1)

Damages awarded for failure to convey real estate in accordance with contract are controlled by statute and while rental loss is an element of special damages in some cases when specially pleaded, it is not an item of general damages and where there is no plea of special damages rental loss is an improper measure of damages. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3306.

7. Statutes ⇐223.4

Statute relating to detriment caused by breach of contract to convey an estate in real property being a special provision, prevails over general statutes on damages. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3306.

8. Exchange of Property ⇐8(5)

Where contract to convey realty remained executory at all times, difference in values was proper measure of general damages bearing in mind that no special damages were ever pleaded.

9. Specific Performance ⇐134

Where action was brought to specifically enforce contract to convey realty and nothing was in record to show that handwriting expert had been appointed by court, prevailing party was not entitled to tax as costs one half of the fee charged by its handwriting expert. West's Ann. Code Civ. Proc. § 1032(a).

J. Frederick Rosen, Coachella, C. Frederick Woolpert, Indio, for plaintiffs.

Richard M. Marsh, Indio, for defendant.

SHEPARD, Justice.

This is an action for specific performance and for damages. In general, plaintiffs allege that on May 31, 1954, defendant agreed to sell to plaintiffs by the agreement hereinafter set forth the property therein described to be conveyed. Said document reads as follows:

> "Received of Grace Gorges 1 Wing foot House Cathedral City + 2000.00 cash Bal 14,500 @ 100.00 per month or more @ 6% for Home at 569 F. St. Cathedral City this also encludes all Furniture at F St. Wingfoot also has furniture
> "Minta H. Johnson"

The complaint also contains the allegations of fair and reasonable value, delivery of $2,000 check plus Wing foot house and furnishings, demand for conveyance, refusal by defendant to convey, and a prayer for specific performance and $24,000 damages.

Defendant's answer admits (1) the ownership of the land described in the document; admits signing some paper; denies execution of the particular receipt alleged; denies agreement to sell; denies fairness of price; admits receiving a check but alleges it was received conditionally on approval of Wing foot house and that check was returned; admits demand but denies refusal to convey. As other defenses, defendant pleads (2) a general de-murrer to sufficiency of the complaint; (3) statutes of fraud in bar; (4) conditional signing and no final agreement; (5) a purported defense of fraud.

After a full trial, the court found that the agreement quoted was entered into; that the check was first accepted, then refused and torn up; that plaintiff has demanded and defendant refused to convey the property referred to; that reasonable rental value of plaintiffs' Wing foot house was $55 per month; that plaintiffs refrained from leasing the same for 21 months in reliance on defendant's agreement and therefore lost such rental, and are entitled to judgment therefor in the amount of $1,155 and cost. There is no finding that the Wing foot house was ever delivered to or received by defendant and the evidence would not support such a finding. The court also allowed as costs one half the amount paid to a handwriting expert for testimony as to the signature of defendant to the alleged agreement. Plaintiffs and defendant appeal.

Plaintiffs charge the trial court with error in its finding that the property subject to this action was not described with sufficient certainty to support a decree of specific performance.

[1, 2] An examination of the document immediately reveals that it contains no provision as to how the deferred payments were to be evidenced or secured. Under such conditions of uncertainty as to terms it could not be specifically enforced. Klein v. Markarian, 175 Cal. 37, 41, 165 P. 3; Gould v. Callan, 127 Cal.App.2d 1, 4(4) (5), 273 P.2d 93; Bonk v. Boyajian, 128 Cal. App.2d 153, 155, 274 P.2d 948. The description of the land itself is insufficient to permit of specific performance because it would be impossible for a stranger to locate the property on the ground. The document does not show whether the place called "Cathedral City" is in California or Maine; it does not show whether any map thereof was ever recorded; whether the street number is that of a particular and sole residence; it gives no inventory or description of the furniture involved; and no inkling of whether or not the Wing foot house is realty or personalty. Roberts v. Lebrain, 113 Cal.App.2d 712, 715(3) (4) (5), 248 P.2d 810.

[3, 4] Under some conditions, parol evidence can be received to assist in determining the meaning of the words used for property description. Ellis v. Klaff, 96 Cal.App.2d 471, 476, 216 P.2d 15. But when, as here, the statute of frauds interposes a bar no material elements of a contract may be supplied by parol. No estoppel was pleaded or proved in the case at bar. Ellis v. Klaff, supra; Joyce v. Tomasini, 168 Cal. 234, 238, 142 P. 67; McKevitt v. City of Sacramento, 55 Cal. App. 117, 203 P. 132; Pruitt v. Fontana, 143 Cal.App.2d 675, 686(5), 300 P.2d 371. Nowhere in the pleading or in the trial was any evidence offered to show that the descriptive terms could actually be applied to the land or property on the ground in any of the ways we have hereinbefore suggested, or in any other way. Under the circumstances of this case, with the evidentiary deficiencies as noted, there was no proper basis for a judgment of specific performance. If we view the matter from the standpoint of personalty, specific performance will not lie. Emirzian v. Asato, 23 Cal.App. 251, 257, 137 P. 1072.

[5] In this state the inability of a court to order specific performance does not necessarily cut off all right to relief. We have only one form of civil action in such matters, and it is therefore the duty of the court to look at the problem as a whole for the purpose of doing justice between the parties if it is possible. Bettancourt v. Gilroy Theatre, Inc., 120 Cal.App.2d 364, 372(4), 261 P.2d 351; Eastwood Homes, Inc. v. Hudson, 161 Cal.App.2d 532, 327 P.2d 29. In the case of Pascoe v. Morrison, 219 Cal. 54, 58, 25 P.2d 9, 10, quoting from Haffey v. Lynch, 143 N.Y. 241, 38 N.E. 298, it is said:

"'In addition thereto, the facts as pleaded, without any reference to any question of specific performance, entitled plaintiff to damages; and, as shown by the cases heretofore cited, the court was not only authorized, but it was its duty, to grant such relief as the evidence warranted.'"

[6, 7] However, damages awarded are controlled by our statute. Rental, while an element of special damage in some cases when specially pleaded, is not an item of general damage. There was no plea of special damages here. Rental was therefore an improper measure of damage. Civil Code, Sec. 3306; Smith v. Schrader, 80 Cal.App. 478, 491, 251 P. 967, Cummings v. Roeth, 10 Cal.App. 144, 153, 101 P. 434; Yocum v. Taylor, 50 Cal.App. 294, 295, 195 P. 62; Baran v. Goldberg, 86 Cal. App.2d 506, 511(5), 194 P.2d 765.

"The compensation is to be adjusted according to the rules obtaining with regard to the measure of damages for the breach of a contract in an action at law." Engasser v. Jones, 88 Cal. App.2d 171, 176(4), 198 P.2d 546, 549.

Said Civil Code Section 3306, "relating to detriment caused by breach of agreement to convey an estate in real property being a special provision, prevails over general statutes on damages. Boshes v. Miller, 119 Cal.App.2d 332, 336." Rasmussen v. Moe, 138 Cal.App.2d 499, 503 (3), 292 P.2d 226, 229.

[8] In some phases of this cause it would appear to be an attempted partial exchange, especially as to the "Wing foot" house upon the use of which the damages complained of are based. Since the contract here involved remained executory at all times, a difference in values was the proper measure of general damages, bearing in mind that no special damages were ever pleaded. Barnhart v. Blackburn, 137 Cal.App. 240, 244(4) 30 P.2d 424.

[9] Defendant complains of the court's ruling on her motion to tax costs. The only portion of this objection argued in the brief is with respect to one half the fee charged by the hand-writing expert. We agree with defendant's objection in this regard. We can find nothing in the record to show that the witness Clark Sellers was appointed by the court. He was called to the witness stand and examined on behalf of plaintiffs. There is no returned subpoena in the file. There is no way in the record that he may be deemed the witness of anyone except the plaintiffs. While the court has considerable discretion in equity actions, that discretion can be exercised only in those actions not specifically covered by section 1032, Code of Civil Procedure. The action here at bar is fully covered by Paragraph (a) of said section 1032, and since the record does not show that the witness was appointed by the court the allowance of the fee involved was not, as against the defendant, within the power of the court. Plaintiffs cite in support of their position on the cost bill Reachi v. National Auto. & Cas. Co., 37 Cal.2d 808, 813(5), 236 P.2d 151. However, it clearly appears that the expert's fees referred to therein were an item of damage claimed in a preceding action for damages on an undertaking on attachment, and not as costs. In the only other case cited by plaintiffs in support of their position (Dodge v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., 92 Cal.App.2d 759, 769(14), 208 P.2d 37, the experts involved were, in fact, appointed by the court under the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure section 1871, and the record so showed. "The right to recover costs is entirely statutory and 'the measure of the statute is the measure of the right.'" Moss v. Underwriters' Report, Inc., 12 Cal.2d 266, 274(9), 83 P.2d 503, 507.

The portion of the judgment denying specific performance is affirmed. The balance of the judgment is reversed. The costs on appeal are allowed to the defendant.

COUNTY OF RIVERSIDE, State of California, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5961.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 28, 1959.

Proceeding for reimbursement of license tax and fine paid to county pursuant to ordinance which Supreme Court had subsequently held to be invalid. The Superior Court, Riverside County, S. Thomas Bucciarelli, J., dismissed complaint and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Stone, J. pro tem., held that general statutory provisions requiring that claims against counties be filed within a year after last item accrued were applicable to proceeding, in absence of special statute providing a procedure to be followed in seeking reimbursement of license taxes or fines illegally collected by county, and action brought more than one year after payment of tax and fine could not be maintained.

Affirmed.

1. Licenses ⇐34

Statutory provision to effect that claim for refund of taxes illegally collected may be filed within three years apply only to recovery of property taxes illegally or erroneously collected and are not applicable to license taxes or fines. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 5097 et seq.

2. Licenses ⇐34

Fact that Supreme Court held county ordinance invalid as an attempt to raise revenue by license tax upon business undertaking did not change tax into property tax and thus place it within scope of statute providing that claim for refund of taxes illegally collected may be filed within three years. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 29700 et seq., 29701, 29702.

3. Counties ⇐201, 208

Counties, as agencies of the state, enjoy protection of sovereign immunity, and therefore, when a general procedure is established to perfect claims against a county, it must be followed unless a special statute authorizing an action against county provides procedure to be followed in perfecting that particular type of claim.

4. Counties ⇐216

General statutory provisions requiring that claims against counties be filed within a year after last item accrued were applicable to proceeding for recovery of license tax paid pursuant to ordinance and fine paid for violating ordinance which was subsequently declared invalid, in absence of special statute providing a procedure to be followed in seeking reimbursement of license taxes or fines illegally collected by county, and action brought more than one year after payment of tax and fine could not be maintained. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 29700 et seq., 29701, 29702; West's Ann. Rev. & Tax.Code, § 5097 et seq.

5. Limitation of Actions ⇐43

A cause of action accrues at the moment when party who owns it is entitled to bring and prosecute an action thereon.

6. Limitation of Actions ⇐49(4)

Where parties, who paid license tax and fine pursuant to ordinance, considered ordinance invalid at time of payment, right to commence proceeding to collect tax illegally assessed and fine illegally imposed accrued upon payment and was not dependent upon outcome of other litigation pending in Supreme Court pertaining to same ordinance, and did not accrue when Supreme Court handed down its decision holding ordinance to be invalid. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 29700 et seq., 29701, 29702; West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 5097 et seq.

Ray T. Sullivan, Jr., County Counsel, Justin M. McCarthy, Deputy County Counsel, Riverside, for respondent.

STONE, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment dismissing plaintiffs' second amended complaint. The plaintiffs Bainbridge and Watkins were engaged in a joint business venture, one of its purposes being to move houses from Oceanside, San Diego County, to land located in an unincorporated territory of Riverside County. Prior to the beginning of the business venture by the plaintiffs the Board of Supervisors of Riverside County enacted an ordinance requiring the payment of a license tax of $50 for each house moved onto land in an unincorporated area. Plaintiff Bainbridge paid under protest a tax of $1,500 imposed pursuant to the ordinance. The plaintiff Watkins was fined $500 for violating the ordinance. In the second amended complaint plaintiff Bainbridge sought reimbursement of the $1,500 license tax so paid, and plaintiff Watkins sought reimbursement of the $500 fine paid to the county. Subsequent to the payment of the tax and the fine, the Supreme Court held the ordinance to be invalid.

Defendant specified four grounds in its demurrer to the complaint and the court in sustaining the demurrer failed to indicate upon which ground or grounds the order was based. Three of the grounds of demurrer are untenable and it is unnecessary to consider them on this appeal. The remaining ground of demurrer is founded upon the statute of limitations. It is defendant's position that the plaintiffs have failed to comply with the provisions of the Government Code concerning the filing of claims against a county. The pertinent Government Code sections relating to claims against a county are as follows: Section 29700 provides in substance that the board of supervisors shall not consider or allow any claim in favor of any person against the county or any county or district fund unless it is itemized as provided therein. Section 29701 requires that the claim be verified and filed with the clerk of the board or the auditor, and section 29702 provides that "A claim shall be filed within a year after the last item accrued".

[1] Plaintiffs' second amended complaint reflects that Bainbridge paid the $1,500 illegal license tax between the dates of December 27, 1954, and March 24, 1955, and that his verified claim was filed with the clerk of the Board of Supervisors on September 4, 1956. The plaintiff Watkins it is alleged paid a $500 fine July 1, 1955, and filed his claim with the Board of Supervisors on September 4, 1956. Thus from the face of the complaint it appears that more than one year elapsed "after the last item accrued" before each verified claim was filed. Appellants contend that Government Code sections 29700 et seq. are not applicable in this case, but rather that Revenue and Taxation Code section 5097 controls. This section provides that a claim for a refund of taxes illegally collected may be filed within three years. However, Revenue and Taxation Code sections 5097 et seq. apply only to the recovery of property taxes illegally or erroneously collected and are not applicable to license taxes or fines. Chapter 5, Division 1 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, comprising sections 5096 through 5143 are reenactment of former Title IX of the Political Code, including section 3804 which provided a 3-year period of limitation. It is well established that former section 3804 of the Political Code had reference only to the payment of illegal taxes pursuant to an assessment of property. Trower v. City and County of San Francisco, 157 Cal. 762, 769, 109 P. 617; 24 Cal.Jur. p. 320, sec. 291; The California Tax System, by J. Gould (West's Revenue and Taxation Code Vol. 59, p. 2, et seq).

[2] Appellant offers the somewhat unusual argument that because the Supreme Court held the ordinance in question invalid as an attempt to raise revenue by a license tax upon a business undertaking, the tax could not be a license tax but must be a property tax and thus within the scope of Revenue and Taxation Code Section 5097. This argument falls because the improper application of a tax does not change its nature. The Supreme Court held the ordinance in question to be invalid because it was an attempt to impose a license tax for revenue purposes only in violation of section 12, article XI of the Constitution and section 16100 of the Business and Professions Code. In re Gritton, on Behalf of Hennigan, 46 Cal.2d 856, 860, 300 P.2d 7.

[3, 4] Government Code sections 29700, et seq. provide a procedure for filing claims against a county arising by virtue of either contract or tort. Counties, as agencies of the state, enjoy the protection of sovereign immunity. Therefore, when a general procedure is established to perfect claims against a county it must be followed unless a special statute authorizing an action against a county provides the procedure to be followed in perfecting that particular type of claim. Albaeck v. County of Santa Barbara, 123 Cal.App.2d 336, 340, 266 P.2d 844; Dillard v. County of Kern, 23 Cal.2d 271, 275, 144 P.2d 365, 150 A.L.R. 1048; Artukovich v. Astendorf, 21 Cal. 2d 329, 332, 131 P.2d 831. There is no special statute providing a procedure to be followed in seeking reimbursement of license taxes or of fines illegally collected by a county. Therefore, the general provisions of Government Code sections 29700, 29701 and 29702 are applicable in this case.

Appellant advances the argument that if it is conceded that Government Code sections 29701 and 29702 are controlling, none the less the cause of action did not accrue until the Supreme Court declared the ordinance in question unconstitutional. Such an interpretation of the term "accrue" would place the filing of its claims with the Board of Supervisors well within the year specified in section 29702. Thus the question is whether the cause of action accrued when the payment was made under protest or when the Supreme Court handed down its decision holding the ordinance to be invalid.

[5, 6] A cause of action accrues at the moment when the party who owns it is entitled to bring and prosecute an action thereon. 1 Cal.Jur.2d 640, sec. 38; Lubin v. Lubin, 144 Cal.App.2d 781, 789, 302 P. 2d 49; Los Angeles County v. Metropolitan Casualty Insurance Co., 135 Cal.App. 26, 28, 26 P.2d 699; Smith v. Minnesota Mutual Life Insurance Co., 86 Cal.App.2d 581, 590, 195 P.2d 457, 84 C.J.S. Taxation § 639, p. 1298. Thus the causes of action in this case were not dependent upon the outcome of other litigation pending in the Supreme Court even though such litigation pertained to the same ordinance. That both plaintiffs considered the ordinance invalid at the time of payment is evident from the payment of the license tax under protest by Bainbridge and the payment of the fine by Watkins only after a trial defended upon the ground that the ordinance was "illegal". In this action the right to commence proceedings to collect the tax illegally assessed and fine illegally imposed accrued upon payment of the last item in each instance.

It appears from the face of the complaint that appellants failed to file a claim for reimbursement of either the license tax collected or the fine imposed within one year after the last item accrued and the demurrer on the ground that each cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations was properly sustained. The plaintiffs having failed to amend their complaint within the 20 days allowed by the court, the judgment of dismissal must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

v.

Glenn A. VROMAN and Lettie B. Vroman, Defendants and Respondents.

No. 23193.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 2, 1959.

Action to quiet title. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Fletcher Bowron, J., rendered judgment that neither plaintiff nor defendants were entitled to judgment quieting title to the property, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Patrosso, J. pro tem., held that under defendants' denial of plaintiff's allegation of ownership and that defendants had no right, title or interest in the property, defendants were entitled to produce any proof designed to establish that plaintiff was not entitled to the equitable relief which it sought.

Affirmed.

1. Quieting Title ⇐10(1)

A plaintiff, in order to prevail in a quiet-title action, must do so on the strength of his own title and not on the weakness of his adversary's title.

2. Quieting Title ⇐43

In quiet-title action, where defendants filed answer denying plaintiff's title and right to possession, a contract for sale of property to defendants was admissible even though the defendants did not plead such contract, and even though the defendants pleaded ownership by adverse possession.

3. Pleading ⇐93(1)

A defendant can plead inconsistent defenses.

4. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐187

Acceptance by vendor of payments which are past due under executory contract constitutes waiver of right to forfeit purchaser's interest by reason of breaches which have accrued at or prior to the time when such payment was made, and purchaser may not be again placed in default for the same delinquency until he has been allowed a reasonable time to perform his contract, and in such case right of forfeiture is temporarily suspended until vendor has given notice of intention to require strict performance in the future and purchaser has a reasonable time within which to perform his part of the contract.

5. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐148

Where vendor allows the whole purchase price to become due before undertaking to enforce a forfeiture, the payment of the price then becomes a dependent and concurrent condition, and nonpayment alone does not put the purchaser in default, and in such case the vendor must tender a deed as a condition to demanding payment of the price, and he cannot without such tender declare a forfeiture.

6. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐244

In quiet-title action, evidence warranted finding that plaintiff was not a bona fide purchaser without notice of defendants' claim to the property under agreement of sale.

7. Quieting Title ⇐43

Where the complaint was one to quiet title and defendants denied plaintiff's allegation of ownership and that defendants had no right, title or interest in the property, defendants could assert that plaintiff had waived right to declare forfeiture of defendants' interest under land contract notwithstanding that defendants did not in their answer seek relief from forfeiture. Action to quiet title to real property.

The trial court adjudged that neither plaintiff nor defendants were entitled to a judgment quieting title to the property in question and plaintiff appeals.

The complaint is in the usual form alleging that plaintiff is the owner of the property therein described; that defendants claim and assert an interest therein adverse to plaintiff; that the claims of the defendants are without right and that the defendants have no right, title or interest therein or thereto. Defendants Glenn A. Vroman and Lettie Vroman filed an answer denying the allegations of plaintiff's complaint and affirmatively alleging ownership in themselves by adverse possession.

There is no serious dispute with respect to the facts. The subject property consists of a lot in the city of South Gate improved with a small dwelling. On February 18, 1935, the record title stood in the name of Lew Moch, a single man, who on that date executed an agreement of sale thereof to Harold A. and Anna Belle Lamont.[1] The interest of the Lamonts was assigned to Arthur C. Wright by an instrument dated May 17, 1940. On September 16, 1940, Arthur C. Wright and his wife executed an agreement for the sale of the property to the defendant Glenn A. Vroman.[2] The latter made payments on the contract from time to time more or less irregularly from the date of the contract to November 18, 1941. Thereafter on April 18, 1942, Vroman made a payment of $15 which was accepted by the vendor. No further payments, however, were made by Vroman and the Wrights made no effort whatever to enforce the provisions of the agreement of sale. Vroman remained in possession of the property for some years and then leased it to another. He failed to pay the taxes levied and assessed against the property and on June 30, 1950, the property was sold to the state. Vroman continued in possession in person or by a tenant until September 15, 1955, when a lease was executed by the state to one Trent who was, at that time, a lessee of Vroman. On April 16, 1956, Arthur C. Wright and his wife quitclaimed all of their interest in the property to the plaintiff and in May 1956 plaintiff acquired quitclaim deeds from Joe Moch, Emma Moch Ingels and Blanche Moch Smith, who it asserts are the heirs of Lew Moch. There is, however, no proof of this fact nor that these parties succeeded as heirs or devisees to any interest in this property through Lew Moch. On May 31, 1956, plaintiff made a payment in the sum of $108.14 to the county tax collector as an initial step under the statutory 5-year plan for the redemption of delinquent taxes assessed Vroman. Following this agents of the plaintiff in the absence of Vroman entered the property, removed the furniture and personal possessions of Vroman and made some repairs to the house including the roof and front steps, put locks on the doors and attempted to rent the property. When a representative of the plaintiff went to the premises he found the defendant Vroman in possession. Plaintiff demanded that Vroman vacate the premises but Vroman refused asserting ownership to the property. On June 18, 1956, the defendant Lettie B. Vroman, mother of Glenn A. Vroman, paid all taxes due upon the property and received a certificate of redemption and

1. The sales price provided in this agreement is $2,750, of which $50 was paid down upon the execution of the agreement and the balance of $2,700 is payable in monthly installments of $25 including interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum on the 10th day of each month commencing April 10, 1935. This agreement was not recorded until June 25, 1940, following its assignment to Wright.

2. This agreement provides that the sales price is $2,750 of which $150 was paid upon the execution of the agreement and the balance of $2,600 is payable in monthly installments of $30 including interest at 7 per cent per annum on the first day of each month commencing October 1, 1940. The agreement further recites that the vendors are purchasing the property under an agreement with Lew Moch providing for monthly payments of $25 per month, "on which there is now an unpaid balance of approximately $2,000.00." This agreement was never recorded.

on June 21, 1956, Glenn Vroman executed a grant deed to Lettie. On July 11, 1956, plaintiff filed the present action.

[1] At the outset and in view of the contentions advanced by the appellant it is necessary to advert to the elementary rule that a plaintiff in order to prevail in a quiet title action must do so on the strength of his own title and not on the weakness of his adversary's. Valle v. Ingram, 1941, 18 Cal.2d 761, 767, 117 P.2d 869. Here there is a total absence of any evidence that the Wrights ever acquired title to the property under the contract of sale executed by Lew Moch and the Lamonts,[3] hence appellant acquired only such rights as against the defendants as the Wrights could assert against the defendants under the contract of sale executed between the Wrights and Glenn Vroman. Insofar as the evidence discloses the record title to the property still stands in Lew Moch subject to the contract of sale executed between him and the Lamonts which was assigned by the latter to Wright and the contract of sale executed between the Wrights and the defendant Glenn Vroman. With these preliminary observations, we pass to a consideration of the various contentions urged by the appellant for a reversal of the judgment.

[2, 3] The first contention is that the trial court erred in admitting proof of the contract between the Wrights and Glenn Vroman because the respondents did not specifically plead the contract. There is no merit to this contention. As said in Smart v. Peek, 1931, 213 Cal. 452, 454, 2 P.2d 380, 381: "An answer denying the plaintiff's title and right to possession is always sufficient. Warden v. Stoll, 210 Cal. 374, 291 P. 835; Hinds v. Clark, 173 Cal. 49, 159 P. 153; Tilton v. Russek, 171 Cal. 731, 154 P. 860; United Land Ass'n v. Pacific Imp. Co., 139 Cal. 370, 69 P. 1064, 72 P. 988. Under such an answer the defendant may prove whatever right he may have, including a tax title. Hinds v. Clark, supra; Tilton v. Russek, supra."

Appellant further contends that the trial court erred in admitting proof of the contract last mentioned because such proof is inconsistent with the pleaded defense of ownership by adverse possession. The right of a defendant to plead inconsistent defenses has long been recognized in this state. 39 Cal.Jur.2d, p. 276, § 189. Moreover, we see no inconsistency in the defendants' answer. Their denial of plaintiff's allegation that it was the owner of the property and that defendants had no right, title or interest therein put in issue plaintiff's title and this is in no wise inconsistent with the affirmative allegation of title in themselves. The fact that the defendants could not prevail upon their plea of title by adverse possession as against the plaintiff by reason of the fact that the possession of a vendee under a contract of sale is not adverse to the vendor or his successor in interest does not prevent the vendee from challenging the right of the vendor to secure a decree foreclosing the vendee's interest under the contract.

The trial court found that, by reason of the fact that defendants' vendor accepted payments under the contract after the same became due without objection and that neither the Wrights nor the plaintiffs ever made demand upon the defendants to bring the payments due under the contract up to date, or took any steps to declare a forfeiture of the vendee's interest under the contract, the provision of the contract to the effect that time was of the essence thereof was waived by the Wrights and that plaintiff as their successor in interest is bound thereby.

[4, 5] Appellant challenges this conclusion. However, since Boone v. Templeman, 1910, 158 Cal. 290, 110 P. 947, it has been the settled law of this state that the acceptance by a vendor of payments which are past due under an executory contract constitutes a waiver of the right to forfeit the purchaser's interest by reason of breaches which have accrued at or prior to the time when such payment was made and the purchaser may not be again placed in default for the same delinquency until he has been allowed a reasonable time to perform his contract. In such case the right of forfeiture is temporarily suspended until the vendor has given notice of his intention to require strict performance in the future and the purchaser has a reasonable time within which to perform his part of the contract. Moreover, where, as here, the vendor allows the whole purchase price to become due before undertaking to enforce a forfeiture, the payment of the price then becomes a dependent and concurrent condition, and nonpayment alone does not put the vendee in default. In such case the vendor must tender a deed as a condition to demanding payment of the price and he cannot without such tender declare a forfeiture. See Community Industrial Land Co. v. Walker, 1943, 61 Cal.App.2d 298, 302–303, 142 P.2d 757; 25 Cal.Jur., p. 614, § 117 and cases there cited.

While not denying that such is the rule plaintiff asserts that defendants forfeited or waived their right to such notice by reason of the fact that when plaintiff demanded possession of the property defendant Glenn Vroman refused to vacate the same and claimed ownership thereof. We find no merit in this argument. When demanding possession of the premises it neither demanded payment of the balance of the purchase price nor tendered a deed. Indeed, a tender of a deed if made would have been ineffectual because it does not appear that plaintiff was in a position to convey title to the property upon payment of the unpaid balance of the purchase price. Plaintiff further contends that if notice of termination of the contract was required such notice was given when plaintiff demanded possession of the property. However, plaintiff, as successor in interest to the Wrights, could not under the circumstances terminate the contract by mere demand for possession without affording defendants a reasonable time within which to make payment of the unpaid balance of the purchase price. Gonzalez v. Hirose, 1948, 33 Cal.2d 213, 216, 200 P.2d 793.

[6] Plaintiff further asserts that the trial court erred in finding that it was not a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of defendants' contract. The uncontradicted evidence is to the effect that the property was assessed to Glenn A. Vroman and that this was known to the plaintiff prior to the time it acquired an assignment of the Lamont contract from the Wrights. Plaintiff adduced no proof to the effect that when they acquired the quitclaim deed from the Wrights it made any inquiry as to what if any interest Glenn Vroman had in the property or if so what information it received from the Wrights with respect thereto. The trial court was justified in inferring that if such inquiry had been made plaintiff would have ascertained the interest of Vroman in the property. Moreover, it affirmatively appears that plaintiff had notice that Glenn Vroman claimed some interest in the property by reason of the fact that almost a year before it acquired the assignment of the contract from the Wrights plaintiff addressed a letter to Glenn Vroman at the address of the subject property offering to purchase his interest therein, in response to which Vroman replied that he was not interested in selling. Under these circumstances it is clear that the trial court was fully warranted in concluding as it did that the plaintiff was not a bona fide purchaser without notice of Vroman's claim to the property.

[7] Plaintiff further contends that the court erred in finding that the Wrights and plaintiff as their successor in interest had waived their right to declare a forfeiture of defendant Glenn Vroman's interest under the contract by reason of the fact that defendants did not in their answer seek relief from the forfeiture under Civil Code, section 3275. Under the circumstances no such pleading was required. As we have seen, plaintiff's complaint was one to quiet title and under defendants' denial of plaintiff's allegation of ownership and that defendants had no right, title or interest in the property, defendants were entitled to adduce any proof designed to establish that plaintiff was not entitled to the equitable relief which it sought. Selby v. Battley, 1957, 149 Cal.App.2d 659, 664–665, 309 P.2d 120.

In conclusion it is to be noted that the judgment herein does not operate to quiet title in the defendants and they may in no event be entitled to such relief unless and until they pay the balance of the purchase price.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 23238.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 2, 1959.

Action by expelled union members against the union to recover union dues allegedly deducted from their pay after revocation of authorization to company to deduct union dues. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, John F. Aiso, J., dismissing the suit, the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that action by named and unnamed expelled members of union who allowed employer to deduct their regular monthly dues from the pay checks after expulsion and to pay dues to union in hope that they would be reinstated as members in good standing and who allegedly subsequently terminated authorization to company either by revocation or by termination of their employment was not a proper representative or class suit.

Affirmed.

1. Parties ⇐11

A representative suit is proper only to conserve a common fund or property in which all of those represented have an interest and if rights of each member of class are dependent on facts applicable to him alone there is not requisite ascertainable class required for a representative suit. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 382.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment of dismissal in a suit claimed to be representative. The named plaintiffs are four in number. Defendant's demurrer to the first amended complaint, called the complaint, was sustained with leave to amend. Plaintiffs did not amend and judgment of dismissal was entered. The question is: Is this a proper representative or class suit?

The complaint alleges:

Count I

1. Defendant is a union with its principal place of business in the County of Los Angeles. It is the recognized bargaining agent by Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, called the company, and represents all those employees of the company who are members of the union.

2. Prior to about January 15, 1956, plaintiffs were employees of the company and were members in good standing of the union. Under an agreement between the union and the company, plaintiffs had authorized the company to deduct their monthly union dues from their regular pay checks and to pay them to the union.

3. About January 15, 1956, defendant levied an assessment on all members, which plaintiffs refused to pay. About that date, in accordance with the constitution and by-laws of the union, plaintiffs were expelled from the union. Since that date plaintiffs have not been members of or affiliated with the union.

4. After they were expelled, plaintiffs continued to allow the company to deduct their regular monthly dues from their pay checks and to pay them to defendant as plaintiffs hoped to be reinstated by the union as members in good standing. Since plaintiffs were expelled defendant has continued to collect the dues for each plaintiff from the company over varying periods of time. On information and belief, substantially all of the about 300 former members of the union who are the rightful owners of the funds held by defendant have terminated the authorization to the company either by a revocation or by the termination of their employment with the company. On information and belief, defendant has kept the funds received from the company separate and distinct from their regular funds and the funds are on deposit in a special account.

5. Plaintiffs, individually and as representatives of the above-described class, have demanded the return of the funds from defendant. Defendant has refused to return them and continues to withhold them in the approximate amount of $6,000.

6. Plaintiffs, and each of them, constitute a class so large that it is impracticable to bring them all before the court. Plaintiffs, and each of them, are members of a definite, ascertainable class which can be determined "by" the books and records of defendant, which records will show the exact moneys held by defendant which rightfully belong to the respective plaintiffs, and each of them. All of the moneys of the respective plaintiffs, and each of them, are held in a common fund which is on deposit with defendant Doe II, standing in the name of the union.

7. Plaintiffs, individually and as representatives of the above described class, have retained the office of Pregerson & Costley, attorneys, to represent them on a contingent fee arrangement specifying that the attorneys are to advance all costs of suit; from any recovery the costs advanced shall first be deducted, and the attorneys shall receive 25 per cent of all moneys recovered by settlement or 33⅓ per cent of all moneys recovered by settlement, judgment, or otherwise after a trial date has been set; if there should be no recovery no moneys shall be owing to the attorneys for costs advanced or fees; and if there is a recovery the attorneys shall have a lien for their services and costs advanced.

Count II

1. Realleges the allegation of count I.

2. As the former representative and bargaining agent of plaintiffs, defendant was in a confidential relationship with plaintiffs.

3. After plaintiffs were expelled from the union defendant came into possession of funds that rightfully belong to plaintiffs. Defendant holds the bare legal title to the funds; and all equitable right, title, and interest in the funds belongs to plaintiffs. Defendant holds the funds as constructive trustee under a constructive trust for the use and benefit of plaintiffs. If the funds are disposed of by defendant, plaintiffs will suffer irreparable harm.

Count III realleges the allegations of count I and a common count for money had and received, the amount alleged being about $6,000.

The prayer is for judgment against the union in the approximate amount of $6,000, the exact amount to be determined in accordance with proof, and that a receiver be appointed to distribute the funds in the following manner: first, to reimburse the attorneys for costs advanced, attorney fees in the amount of 25 per cent of settlement or 33⅓ per cent after date of trial has been set, and: second, the balance to plaintiffs in accordance with proof.

The demurrer was general and special. The record discloses that the demurrer was sustained [1] on the ground the named plaintiffs may not prosecute the action as a representative suit on behalf of the unnamed about 300 former members of the union.

Code of Civil Procedure, section 382, in pertinent part provides:

> "* * * when the question is one of a common or general interest, of many persons, or when the parties are numerous, and it is impracticable to bring them all before the Court, one or more may sue or defend for the benefit of all."

A party may therefore sue for the benefit of many in one of two cases: (a) where the question is one of a common or general interest of many persons, or (b) where the parties are numerous and it is impracticable to bring them all before the court. "Section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits an action to be brought by one or more parties on behalf of others when the parties are numerous. This is a statutory provision based upon the common law theory of convenience to the parties when one or more fairly represent the rights of others similarly situated who could be designated in the controversy. It is known as the doctrine of virtual representation, and such representees if sufficiently represented are bound by the order or judgment made. The sufficiency of the representation is generally gauged by the good faith of the representors and the effect of the order or judgment upon the unnamed parties." Fallon v. Superior Court, 33 Cal.App.2d 48, 50, 90 P.2d 858, 859.

[1] A representative suit is proper only to conserve a common fund or property in which all of those represented have an interest. Watson v. Santa Carmelita Mut. Water Co., 58 Cal.App.2d 709, 718–719, 137 P.2d 757. If the rights of each member of the class are dependent on facts applicable to him alone there is not the requisite ascertainable class required for a representative suit. Barber v. California Emp. Stab. Comm., 130 Cal.App.2d 7, 14, 278 P.2d 762.

The leading case enumerating the rules as to when a representative suit may be maintained is Weaver v. Pasadena Tournament of Roses, 32 Cal.2d 833, 198 P.2d 514. The court stated (32 Cal.2d at page 835, 198 P.2d at page 515):

> "Four plaintiffs—'on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated'—brought this action in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, each seeking to recover the $100 statutory penalty imposed for the wrongful refusal of admission to the Rose Bowl Game at Pasadena on January 1, 1947—a 'place of public amusement or entertainment.' * * *
> "[32 Cal.2d at page 837, 198 P.2d at page 517.] But in any event and regardless of which of the alternative conditions of the statute is invoked as authorizing a class proceeding, it has been uniformly held that there must be a well-defined 'community of interest' in the questions of law and fact involved as affecting the parties to be represented. [Citations.]

named,' who waited in line but were denied tickets to the Rose Bowl Game 'have the same interest in the subject matter and the recovery'; that 'the facts necessary to prove the cause of action of any one of them are the same [as those] necessary to prove the cause of action of any one or all of the others'; and that the number of interested individuals, 'amounting to several hundred,' renders it 'impracticable to bring them all before the court.' Accordingly, they urge that this action comes within the provisions of either of the statutory conditions sustaining the prosecution of a representative suit, and particularly within the second category. But plaintiffs misconstrue the nature of this litigation. The causes of action of the several plaintiffs and the other unnamed aggrieved individuals are separate and distinct. The question, as to each individual plaintiff, is whether he 'as a person over the age of twenty-one years' presented himself and demanded admittance to the game, whether he tendered the price of the ticket, and whether, as to him, the refusal of admission was wrongful under section 53 of the Civil Code, entitling him 'to recover * * his actual damages, and one hundred dollars in addition thereto.' Civ.Code, sec. 54; emphasis added. Moreover, other independent factors of consideration arise in connection with the respective individual claims by reason of the provision that a 'person under the influence of liquor, or who is guilty of boisterous conduct, or [who is] of lewd or immoral character, may be excluded from any such [public] place of amusement.' Civ.Code, sec. 53. Thus, a decision favorable or adverse to these plaintiffs—or any of them—could not determine the rights of any of the unnamed parties whom plaintiffs purport to represent. True, the plaintiffs, and perhaps others who waited in line and were refused tickets of admission, have an interest in a common question of law, that is, whether the statutory recovery is authorized when an operator of a 'place of public amusement or entertainment' advertises 7,500 tickets for sale to the general public and then later, after selling only 1,500, closes the box office upon announcing that 'all of the available tickets had been sold.' But the determination of such question in the present case would still leave to be litigated the right of any other person to recover on his statutory claim in the light of whether he, in reliance upon the advertised sale, stood in line, received an identification stub, was denied tickets before the promised 7,500 had been sold, presented himself at the Rose Bowl as a 'sober, moral person,' demanded admission, tendered the price, and was refused, entitling him 'to recover * * * his actual damages' as well as the fixed statutory penalty of $100.

"In general, a representative suit is proper because it is in behalf of a common or joint interest of an ascertained class in the subject matter of the controversy * * *. [32 Cal.2d at page 839, 198 P.2d at page 518.] In the present case there is no ascertainable class, such as the stockholders, bondholders, or creditors of an organization. Rather there is only a large number of individuals, each of whom may or may not have, or care to assert, a claim against the operators of the 1947 Rose Bowl Game for the alleged wrongful refusal of admission thereto. Each of such claimants must establish separately that he was refused admission, and that such refusal was wrongful under section 53 of the Civil Code. Moreover, each claimant would have the independent right, under section 54 of said code, to litigate the question of his recovery of 'actual damages' in addition to the $100 penalty imposed by the statute. While each would be 'similarly situated' in that his cause of action arises under the same statute, his recovery would rest on a distinct premise correlative with varying proof as to the facts of his particular case. In such circumstances there is not the necessary 'common or general interest' in the subject-matter of the litigation appropriate to the maintenance of a representative action as that type of proceeding has been analyzed in the adjudicated cases. * * *

"[32 Cal.2d at page 841, 198 P.2d at page 519.] So the fact that 'numerous parties' have separate and distinct claims against the same person or persons will not alone suffice to sustain a representative suit where there is no community of interest. To hold otherwise would nullify the equitable concept of section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure as a procedural convenience for the maintenance of representative litigation. * * *

"[32 Cal.2d at page 842, 198 P.2d at page 520.] In concluding this discussion, there is one further point to be noted. In cases properly falling within the category of representative litigation, the judgment or decree would be res judicata for or against the class sought to be represented."

[2] The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs allowed deduction of dues after expulsion in the hope they would be reinstated in the union as members in good standing. Each expelled member of the union whose dues were paid to the union may have had a separate claim therefor, no doubt varying in amount. In disposing of his claim questions would arise as to whether he revoked his authorization to the company to deduct his dues and pay them to the union; as to whether he wished the union to collect his dues and, if not, when did he disapprove the practice and revoke his authorization; as to whether he wishes the union to collect the dues from the company in order to satisfy the assessment; as to whether he voluntarily permitted the company to pay the dues to the union in consideration of receiving union representation; as to whether he desires to apply for reinstatement in the union and wishes the collected dues to be applied to the reinstatement and the payment of back dues. Desire of reinstatement would seem to follow from the fact that an expelled member permitted deduction of dues when he could have stopped it by revocation of his authorization. The allegation of the complaint with respect to revocation of the authorization is that "substantially all of the approximately 300 former members" have revoked their authorizations to the company either expressly or by termination of employment. There is no allegation that the named plaintiffs have revoked their authorizations. The factual allegation as to why there was no revocation of the authorizations for any period of time is separate as to each expelled member. So it is with respect to when each expelled member who terminated his employment with the company did so. The questions whether an unnamed plaintiff intended that the company should deduct his dues and pay them to the union and whether he has no desire to bring a lawsuit or assert any claim to the moneys are factual questions.

The complaint alleges the named plaintiffs have a contingent fee contract with their attorneys and the prayer is that the fees be deducted from the recovery. There is no allegation that the about 300 former members of the union agreed to this arrangement. Yet if the suit were maintained they might be bound by the contract and the judgment would be res judicata.

The unnamed plaintiffs may have rights which are independent of those of the named plaintiffs, and defendant may have rights against the unnamed plaintiffs or some of them which it does not have against the named plaintiffs. There is no community of interest regarding questions of law and fact between the named and the unnamed plaintiffs. In fact, there is no definite, ascertainable class. There is only a large number of individuals, each of whom may or may not have or care to assert a claim against the union. There could be an indefinite number of factual situations applicable to the about 300 of those claimed to be similarly situated whom the named plaintiffs seek to make parties to this action without their knowledge, consent, participation, and, so far as appears, regardless of their wishes. A decision favorable or adverse to the named plaintiffs or any of them could not determine the rights of any of the unnamed plaintiffs whom the named plaintiffs purport to represent. To permit this as a representative suit might deprive defendant of the right to assert any defenses it might have against individual, unnamed plaintiffs. A judgment that the named plaintiffs are or are not entitled to recover should not operate as res judicata against either the unnamed plaintiffs or against defendant union.

Zaleski v. Local 401 of United E. R. & M. Workers, 9 N.J.Super. 206, 75 A.2d 740, concerned the method of paying dues to a labor union local. The named plaintiffs, seven in number, and perhaps all the members severally, empowered their employer to "deduct or check-off" their dues and pay them to the local. The plaintiffs, becoming dissatisfied with this procedure, brought suit on behalf of themselves and all members of the union who had authorized the employer to check-off their dues, and obtained an injunction that restrained the employer from paying to the union not only their own dues but the dues of any members. Reversing, the court said (75 A.2d at page 741):

"The device of the class action, the prosecution or the defense on behalf of many by a few, is of great social utility and has earned a constantly widening application, since it was first employed in equity. * * * In the suit before us, the rights of the employees are several and not joint; each is concerned with his own dues and has separately empowered the employer as his agent to pay his dues. They do not appear to constitute a single class for the purpose of the present controversy, but at least two classes, namely, those who want the check-off discontinued and those who do not want it discontinued. Hansberry v. Lee, 1940, 311 U.S. 32, 61 S.Ct. 115, 85 L.Ed. 22, 132 A.L.R. 741. Obviously the plaintiffs do not represent the latter group, and yet the plaintiffs pretend to speak for them and have obtained an injunction interfering with the relation between the members of that group and the Union. * * *

"Where the circumstances are such that all the persons severally possessing the right which is the basis of the suit would naturally want the right enforced—for instance, where the right has great value—such persons may be considered a single class, although actually there are dissenters among them. But where the wish of many to enforce the right is doubtful, the possessors of the right do not constitute a class. That was the situation in Hansberry v. Lee, supra, and is the situation here. But let us follow through on plaintiffs' theory. Since the check-off of each employee's dues depends on the separate authorization which he signed, the rights of the employees are several and not joint; and the action before us is of the kind that has come to be known as a spurious class suit."

The trial court properly determined this is not a representative or class suit.

SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, IN AND FOR the CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, Respondent.

District Court of Appeal, First District. Division 2, California.

Jan. 27, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 26, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Original proceeding for writ of prohibition or mandate to nullify order overruling objections of defendant, against whom malpractice action has been brought, to interrogatories asking whether defendant carried malpractice insurance and, if so, name and address of insurer and policy limits. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that existence and extent of liability insurance of defendant in malpractice case was relevant to subject matter within statute to effect that discovery may be had as to any matter relevant to subject matter involved in pending action, although policy was not strictly within issues raised by pleadings, plaintiff was entitled to serve interrogatories upon defendant and discovery would not be relegated to a proceeding to perpetuate testimony but could be had in personal injury action itself.

Writs denied and alternative writs discharged.

1. Insurance ⊂591½

Statute requiring provision for direct action by injured party against insurer, after judgment against insured, in all policies against loss or damages resulting from liability for injury suffered by another person other than a policy of workmen's compensation, is applicable to policy insuring against liability for negligent practice of healing arts. West's Ann.Insurance Code, § 11580.

2. Discovery ⊂29

Discovery act which became effective January 1, 1958 is to be liberally construed. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 2016(b), 2030(a, b).

DRAPER, Justice.

This original proceeding presents the question whether the existence and extent of liability insurance of a defendant may be obtained in discovery proceedings. Shirley Ross, the real party in interest here, brought an action against petitioner and others for injuries allegedly resulting from malpractice, and served interrogatories upon defendant, Dr. Laddon, asking whether he carried malpractice insurance at the time in issue, and, if so, the name and address of the insurer and the policy limits. Petitioner filed objections to these questions. Code Civ.Proc. § 2030(a). His objections were overruled and he promptly petitioned for writ of prohibition or mandate to nullify the order. We granted alternative writs.

Interrogatories may relate to "any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action." Code Civ.Proc. §§ 2030(b), 2016(b). Since these code sections did not become effective until January 1, 1958 (Stats.1957, Chap. 1904, § 4), there is no decision of an appellate court of California dealing with this problem in the precise context now before us. The present California discovery statutes are based largely upon the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Comparable rules, varying somewhat in their language, are in force in several states.

In the federal courts themselves there is a difference of opinion as to discoverability of the existence and limits of insurance. The Eastern District of Tennessee has both granted (Brackett v. Woodall Food Products, D.C., 12 F.R.D. 4) and denied (McNelley v. Perry, D.C., 18 F.R.D. 360) discovery. Discovery has been allowed in one other U. S. District Court (Orgel v. McCurdy, D.C.S.D.N.Y., 8 F. R.D. 585) and denied in three (McClure v. Boeger, D.C.E.D.Pa., 105 F.Supp. 612; Roembke v. Wisdom, D.C.S.D.Ill., 22 F. R.D. 197; Gallimore v. Dye, D.C.E.D. Ill., 21 F.R.D. 283). There is also a division of authority in states having comparable rules or statutes. Discovery has been allowed in Illinois (People ex rel. Terry v. Fisher, 12 Ill.2d 231, 145 N.E.2d 588), Kentucky (Maddox v. Grauman, Ky., 265 S.W.2d 939, 41 A.L.R.2d 964), and Michigan (Layton v. Cregan & Mallory Co., 263 Mich. 30, 248 N.W. 539); but denied in Nevada (State ex rel. Allen v. Second Judicial District Court, 69 Nev. 196, 245 P.2d 999), South Dakota (Bean v. Best, 76 S.D. 462, 80 N.W.2d 565), Florida (Brooks v. Owens, Fla., 97 So.2d 693), Minnesota (Jeppesen v. Swanson, 243 Minn. 547, 68 N.W.2d 649), Oklahoma (Peters v. Webb, Okl., 316 P.2d 170) and Arizona (Di Pietruntonio v. Superior Court, 84 Ariz. 291, 327 P.2d 746).

These decisions may be distinguishable from the case at bar upon the language of the statute involved or upon the facts, but they fairly represent the division of opinion in other jurisdictions and show that the weight of authority favors denial of attempts to discover the existence and extent of public liability insurance carried by a defendant.

While the decisions favoring discovery are persuasive in their reasoning, we might be inclined to follow the majority view if the question were wholly new in California. But it is not. Although no California case passes upon the precise language of the present discovery act, discovery of the existence and limits of insurance was permissible under the much more restricted procedure in effect before 1958.

In 1937, our Supreme Court held that a plaintiff in a personal injury action is entitled, in a collateral proceeding to perpetuate testimony, to examine defendant's public liability insurance policy. Demaree v. Superior Court, 10 Cal.2d 99, 73 P.2d 605. In 1951, the Supreme Court made it clear that the rule of Demaree extends to the limits of the insurance, and not merely to the insuring clauses of the policy. Superior Insurance Co. v. Superior Court, 37 Cal.2d 749, 235 P.2d 833. The court quoted from Malmgren v. Southwestern Automobile Ins. Co., 201 Cal. 29, at page 33, 255 P. 512, at page 513, which pointed out that under a 1919 statute comparable to our present Insurance Code, section 11580, the policy evidences "a contractual relation created by statute which inured to the benefit of any and every person who might be negligently injured by the assured as completely as if such injured person had been specifically named in the policy." The court in Superior Insurance points out (37 Cal.2d at page 754, 235 P.2d at page 835) that "[t]he provisions of such a policy are not, therefore, a matter for the sole knowledge of the named assured and the insurance carrier to the exclusion of the injured person; the very pendency of an action by the injured person brought in good faith against the named insured person gives the former a discoverable interest in the policy."

[1] Demaree, Superior Insurance and Malmgren all concern policies of automobile liability insurance, whereas the case at bar deals with malpractice insurance. But that difference does not distinguish the cases. The code (Ins. Code, § 11580) requires the provision for direct action by the injured party against the insurer, after judgment against the insured, in all policies of insurance "[a]gainst loss or damage resulting from liability for injury suffered by another person other than a policy of workmen's compensation insurance." A policy insuring against liability for negligent practice of the healing arts is quite as much within this provision as is a policy insuring against liability for the negligent operation of an automobile.

Since 1937, and even more clearly since 1951, the California rule has permitted discovery of the existence and extent of liability insurance. We must and do assume that this rule of law has been known to the legal profession generally. Thus, even though the additional step of a proceeding to perpetuate testimony has been required, it is reasonable to conclude that plaintiffs' attorneys have, where they deemed it necessary, been able to secure such information either through proceedings to perpetuate testimony or by the mere statement that they intend to institute such proceedings.

Petitioner, however, contends that the 1957 discovery act removes this right. It is true that the new act, while enlarging the right to discovery in an action presently pending, places somewhat greater procedural restrictions upon proceedings to perpetuate testimony (Code Civ.Proc. § 2017 (a) (1)) than were contained in the old act (Code Civ.Proc. §§ 2083–2090). However, there is no apparent effort to limit the scope or subject matter of the inquiry in a perpetuation proceeding. Certainly the new statute evidences no intent to negative the "discoverable interest" which Superior Insurance holds to exist in the liability insurance carried by a defendant. In the absence of express language compelling such a result, it would be anomalous to construe the discovery act of 1957 as eliminating the discoverable interest so long recognized in the rule of Demaree and Superior Insurance. An act designed to broaden discovery cannot lightly be construed as narrowing it.

[2, 3] The remaining question is whether discovery may be had in the personal injury action itself, as is sought to be done here, or must be relegated to a proceeding to perpetuate testimony. The present discovery act is to be liberally construed. Grover v. Superior Court, 161 Cal.App.2d 644, 327 P.2d 212. Under discovery rules comparable to ours, "[t]he question of relevancy is more loosely construed upon pre-trial examination than at the trial." Maddox v. Grauman, supra, Ky., 265 S.W. 2d 939, 941, 41 A.L.R.2d 964 at page 966. In jurisdictions which have accepted the view of Demaree and Superior Insurance Company, the modern discovery rules have been held to permit discovery as to liability insurance in the action itself. Maddox v. Grauman, supra; People ex rel. Terry v. Fisher, supra, 12 Ill.2d 231, 145 N.E.2d 588. In California, Superior Insurance has recognized that plaintiff's "discoverable interest" in defendant's liability insurance arises with the "very pendency" of the action against the assured. The conclusion is inescapable that under this decision the insurance policy is relevant to the subject matter involved in the personal injury action, although not strictly within the issues raised by the pleadings. Now that discovery may be had as to "any matter * * * relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action." (Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(b)) there is no reason to require an ancillary proceeding as the only means of exercising the long-recognized "discoverable interest" of plaintiff in defendant's policy. A principal purpose of the new discovery act is to facilitate expeditious disposition of litigation. It would contravene that purpose to require two steps in a discovery proceeding where one suffices.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

John WARDWELL, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 1250.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 3, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 1, 1959.

Prosecution for sale of marijuana by defendant to a special investigator on February 21, who at the time of such sale negotiated for an additional sale of a larger amount the following day. From adverse judgment and order of the Superior Court, Kern County, Norman F. Main, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shepard, J., held that evidence of the sale on the succeeding day was properly admitted when all of the circumstances of place, time, persons and methods in both sales were inextricably interwoven.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐369(2)

In prosecution for sale of marijuana by defendant to a special investigator on February 21, who at the time of such sale negotiated for an additional sale of a larger amount on following day, evidence of sale on succeeding day was properly admitted when all of the circumstances of place, time, persons, and methods in both sales were inextricably interwoven. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Criminal Law ⇐741(1, 2), 747

In a criminal prosecution, weight of testimony, identifications, conflicts and witness uncertainties are in the province of the jury at the trial.

3. Criminal Law ⇐369(2)

Except when it shows merely criminal disposition, evidence that is relevant is not excluded because it reveals commission of an offense other than that charged.

4. Criminal Law ⇐369(2)

In a criminal prosecution, evidence is admissible if it tends logically, naturally, and by reasonable inference to establish any fact material for the state, or to overcome any material matters sought to be proved by the defense, regardless of whether evidence embraces commission of another crime, whether other crime be similar in kind or not, and whether it be part of a single design or not.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1171(1)

In prosecution for sale of marijuana wherein defendant left clear impression that person who had assisted special investigator was almost a complete stranger to defendant, district attorney did not commit prejudicial error in asking defendant whether it was a fact that in previous year he was in jail in the same "tank" as such assistant. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

6. Criminal Law ⇐1171(1)

In prosecution for sale of marijuana wherein defendant in response to a question stated that when he was arrested he did not know what was going on, it was not prejudicial error to ask defendant whether he had been arrested previously by two other persons to show that defendant's pretense of lack of understanding was a mere sham.

7. Criminal Law ⇐1171(1)

In prosecution for sale of marijuana wherein defendant had volunteered statement that he had never had any connection with anything like they were talking about, it was not prejudicial error to inquire of defendant whether he had used narcotics before.

8. Criminal Law ⇐780(2)

In prosecution for sale of marijuana to a special investigator who was assisted by certain person in making contact with defendant, evidence was insufficient to warrant the giving of an "accomplice instruction" by reason of aid of such other person. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

9. Criminal Law ⇐1162

Primary purpose of all rules of procedure is to secure for the people and for defendant a reasonably fair trial, in which all relevant truth is made known to the trier of fact, and no case should be reversed unless it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to appealing party would have been reached in absence of error.

10. Poisons ⇐9

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for sale of marijuana. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

SHEPARD, Justice.

[1] Appeal from a judgment and order denying a new trial after conviction of violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code (sale of marijuana).

Appellant complains of alleged improper admission of proof of other crimes; misconduct of district attorney in insinuating other crimes and in argument to the jury; error in excluding evidence offered by defendant; error in the court's remarks during trial; and error in instructions to the jury.

[2] It appears from the record that a special investigator for the Kern County sheriff's office in the course of his work made contact with one Joe Arvizu, commonly and hereinafter called "Pepi". Pepi was asked by a deputy sheriff known to him to assist the special investigator, whom we will hereinafter call Van Ness, by introducing Van Ness as a buyer to a seller of narcotics. Pepi did so introduce Van Ness to defendant near a place called "Eight Ball Pool Hall", and arrangements were made to purchase narcotics. The three entered an auto and drove to an alley location near 21st and Pine Streets, where defendant delivered a "tin" of marijuana to Van Ness for the price of $10.00. This was on February 21st, 1958. During the trip to receive delivery of the "tin" the defendant negotiated with Van Ness for an additional sale of a larger amount, and concluded arrangements for a meeting next day at the Eight Ball Pool Hall for that purpose. On February 22, 1958, Pepi again made contact with Van Ness at the pool hall with practically identical procedure and method of approach by defendant, except that on this occasion defendant took into his car only Pepi and he stopped at his apartment and there picked up some cigarettes (assumed to be marijuana), then drove to the same alley location, went through the same gate, reappeared as before with the marijuana and received payment of $40 therefor (a larger amount.) He then returned Pepi to the point of departure, near where Van Ness was waiting and went away. Pepi was aware of the part the law officers were playing in the whole matter. Later Van Ness, with the law officers listening in, had some partly corroborative telephone conversations with defendant. The identity of defendant in these conversations was somewhat corroborated by the coincidence of his immediately subsequent actions in accordance with intentions announced in the telephone conversations. After defendant's arrest, and while awaiting trial, defendant approached Pepi's divorced wife in an effort to persuade Pepi to return to Mexico so he would not testify against defendant. In addition, there was other corroborative evidence. There was, of course, conflicting evidence but we must assume the foregoing presents the truth as the jury saw it. The weight of testimony, identifications, conflicts and witness uncertainties are in the province of the jury at the trial. People v. Weems, 157 Cal.App.2d 753, 755(3), 321 P.2d 884; People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 156(3), 293 P.2d 40.

[3, 4] Plaintiff complains that the evidence of the sale on February 22, 1958, should not have been admitted. The sale of the 22nd was in the process of negotiation during and as a part of the sale of the 21st, and considering all the circumstances of place, times, persons, and methods in both sales they seemed to be so inextricably interwoven that each is partially corroborative of the other, and the recital of one is incomplete without the recital of the other so that they bear very definitely in all aspects on knowledge, intent, planning and financial purpose.

> "It is settled in this state, however, that except when it shows merely criminal disposition (citations), evidence that is relevant is not exluded because it reveals the commission of an offense other than that charged. 'The general tests of the admissibility of evidence in a criminal case are: * * * does it tend logically, naturally, and by reasonable inference to establish any fact material for the people, or to overcome any material matter sought to be proved by the defense? If it does, then it is admissible, whether it embraces the commission of another crime or does not, whether the other crime be similar in kind or not, whether it be part of a single design or not.'" People v. Peete, 28 Cal.2d 306, 314(1), 169 P.2d 924, 929.

This rule is stated in various ways but it is consistently adhered to in this state. People v. Citrino, 46 Cal.2d 284, 288(4), 294 P.2d 32; People v. Edwards, 159 Cal. App.2d 208, 212(2), 323 P.2d 484; People v. Kostal, 159 Cal.App.2d 444, 450(5), 323 P.2d 1020; People v. Freytas, 157 Cal.App. 2d 706, 719(11), 321 P.2d 782.

[5, 6] Next the defendant complains that the district attorney committed prejudicial error in various questions. For example: "Mr. Wardwell, isn't it a fact that last year you were in jail in the same tank as this Joe (Pepi) Arvizu?" This question was called forth by a series of questions and answers of defendant in which he left the clear impression that Pepi was almost a complete stranger to defendant. It is true that the question might have been framed differently, but when any indirect evasion or fabrication by defendant compels a question that indirectly brings an inference of another brush with the law in order that the truth may be known, the defendant must take the consequences and there is no error. People v. Teshara, 141 Cal. 633, 638, 75 P. 338; People v. Zerillo, 36 Cal.2d 222, 228(7), 223 P.2d 223. Defendant was asked the question "Now, isn't it a fact Mr. Wardwell, you have been arrested before by Mr. Mulligan and Mr. Dodd?" This was in response to a statement by defendant that, when he was arrested on the occasion now at bar he did not know what was going on. It is evident that the district attorney was seeking to show that defendant's pretense of lack of understanding was a mere sham. Without ruling on the question of the validity of the district attorney's question it is clear that most of the harm done, if any, must be attributed to the insistence of defendant's counsel in arguing the matter in the presence of the jury after the court had already indicated a ruling in his favor, and readiness to admonish the jury to disregard the question. We cannot, under the circumstances, find any prejudicial error.

[7] Next was the question: "Mr. Wardwell, isn't it a fact you have used narcotics before?" This was apparently in response to defendant's having volunteered the statement in a prior answer: "I never had any connection with anything like they are talking about." A defendant who, by his voluntary testimony, seeks to strengthen a presumption of innocence in the particular crime charged by attempting to create a halo of complete innocence about his head, can rightly expect that halo to be promptly dispelled if there are facts with which the prosecution can truthfully do so. People v. Westek, 31 Cal.2d 469, 479, 190 P.2d 9.

Next, defendant alleges error by the district attorney in his argument to the jury. We have gone over these assignments of error at length and they all present the aspect of legitimate arguments of the evidence or replies to arguments advanced by the defendant. We find nothing in them worthy of note.

Next defendant contends that at one point in the testimony the court sustained an objection to defendant's attempt to put in the record a self-serving statement under the guise of an explanation of silence at the time of arrest. The chronological time involved in this statement was at the jail during interrogation, which was a long time after arrest. As defendant's counsel has stated in his brief, the circumstances at the time of arrest would probably not have been considered by the jury as needing any denial. Further, defendant appears to have already given whatever explanation of that particular affair he desired to give when he said "I was too scared and too mixed up to say anything." There was no contention by the prosecution that at the jail interrogation the defendant was silent or admitted the truth of the charge.

Defendant next complains that the court was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in certain remarks made during the trial. As is true of all strongly contested cases, there were occasional exchanges between the court and counsel. In this case they were in the minimum, and did not in any way suggest or intimate anything to the jury regarding the guilt or innocence of the defendant. Furthermore, counsel did not assign them as error nor voice any objection at the time. People v. Knocke, 94 Cal.App. 55, 57(1), 270 P. 468. We can see no prejudice to the defendant in any event. Time limitations are within the discretion of the court, and counsel here makes no complaint that he had an insufficient amount of time to present his material to the jury. People v. Young, 136 Cal.App. 699, 706(5), 29 P.2d 440. Defendant complains that the instruction by the court on the subject of other crimes is prejudicially erroneous. We would not choose that instruction as a model of clarity. However, it did contain the main ingredients of the subject correctly; the jury was clearly informed that the defendant was charged with only one crime; that the evidence of other crimes was received solely for a limited purpose; and that the jury must weigh the evidence on the subject of identity, intent, familiarity with the means and plan, scheme, system or design. We do not believe the jury was misled by it.

[8] Defendant complains that no "accomplice" instructions were given. The evidence is uncontradicted that whatever contact Pepi made was done in aid of the sheriff's office. There was no evidence that he was an accomplice, and the giving of an accomplice instruction could only have confused the jury improperly.

Respecting defendant's complaint that the court failed to give Instruction 7 and 7a, relating to the court's comment on evidence, the jury was fully informed that weighing the evidence and deciding the facts were entirely within the hands of the jury, and that the jury should not take any intimation from the judge's ruling on the evidence. We have found no place in the evidence where the judge commented on the evidence, and the defendant has pointed to none. Other instructions complained about were merely repetitive expressions of matters covered in other instructions which were, in fact, given. While repetition of instructions sometimes accidently occurs, certainly it is not good practice and no party has a right to have the same thought repeated over and over again, even in different language.

Some points contained in the instructions were, it is true, surplusage, but the jury was adequately informed that they must not pay attention to those instructions which apply to facts which they, the jury, found not to be true or do not exist. In the particular case here at bar, we see no way in which the minds of the jury were confused.

[9] Viewing the case as a whole, we deem it worthy of comment that no judge, district attorney, defense counsel or appeals court ever tried a case or wrote an opinion that was absolutely perfect. The primary purpose of all the rules of procedure is to secure for the people and for the defendant a reasonably fair trial, in which all the relevant truth is made known to the trier of fact. No case should be reversed unless "it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the appealing party would have been reached in the absence of the error." People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 836(12), 299 P.2d 243, 254. The case here at bar bears no resemblance to such cases as People v. Tucker, 164 Cal.App.2d 624, 331 P.2d 160.

[10] From a review of the entire record it appears to us that the defendant received a fair trial, and that the evidence sufficiently supported the decision of the jury.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Robert William HOLSTUN and Thomas Burke, Defendants,

Robert William Holstun, Appellant.

Cr. 6161.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 30, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 17, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Prosecution for conspiracy to commit grand theft and to violate certain sections of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Beach Vasey, J., entered judgment finding one of the defendants guilty of conspiracy to violate regulatory provisions of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that statute subjecting to felony punishment parties guilty of conspiracy to violate certain statutes, even though violation of those statutes themselves would constitute only misdemeanors, is not unconstitutional since conspiracy is a distinct offense and it is for the legislature to determine the propriety of statute making a conspiracy to do an act punishable more severely than doing of act itself.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1206(1)

Statute subjecting to felony punishment parties guilty of conspiracy to violate regulatory provisions of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, even though violations or attempted violations of the particular regulatory provisions would constitute misdemeanors only, is not unconstitutional since conspiracy is a distinct offense and propriety of making conspiracy to do an act punishable more severely than doing of act itself is a matter for legislative body. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 23000 et seq., 25657, 25658, 25663; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

2. Criminal Law ⇐13

Statute making it unlawful for any person to employ upon any licensed on-sale premises any hostess or entertainer for purpose of procuring or encouraging the purchase or sale of alcoholic beverages is not unconstitutional on ground that it was vague and uncertain in that it failed to define word "hostess". West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 182; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof. Code, § 25657; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 13.

3. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐116

Under statute making it unlawful for any person to employ upon any licensed on-sale premises any hostess or entertainer for purpose of procuring or encouraging purchase or sale of alcoholic beverages, it is legislative intent to prohibit direct procuring or encouraging of the purchase of alcoholic beverages by female attendants employed at on-sale premises if duties of such attendant include dispensing hospitality by such methods as receiving, entertaining, or drinking with, male customers. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 25657.

4. Criminal Law ⇐824(2)

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate provisions of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, there was no error by court failing to instruct jury as to meaning of words "hostess" and "B girls" as used in information when such instruction was not requested by defendant and court had already instructed respecting substance of statutes. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23000 et seq., 25657, 25658, 25663.

5. Criminal Law ⇐829(10)

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate certain regulatory provisions of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act growing out of alleged employment of "B girls" to solicit purchase of drinks, serving of drinks to minors and employment of minor girls to act as "B girls", there was no error in refusing to instruct jury, as requested by defendant, that if crime of conspiracy to violate Alcoholic Beverage Act was committed as a matter of law the girls testifying against defendant were accomplices, where court had already instructed jury with reference to definition of an accomplice and requirement that testimony of accomplice must be corroborated. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23000 et seq., 25657, 25658(a, b), 25663.

6. Conspiracy ⇐47

Evidence including testimony as to defendant's employment of "B girls" to solicit purchase of drinks, serving of intoxicating beverages to minors and employment of minors to act as "B girls" was sufficient to sustain conviction of defendant for conspiracy to violate regulatory provisions of Alcoholic Beverage and Control Act. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 25658, 25663.

Albert C. S. Ramsey, Long Beach, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

In an information defendant Holstun and one Thomas Burke were charged, in count 1, with conspiracy to commit grand theft; in count 2 with grand theft; and in count 3 with conspiracy to violate certain sections of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. Business and Professions Code, § 23000 et seq. Burke pleaded guilty as to count 1, and further proceedings as to him were continued to a later date. Holstun pleaded not guilty as to the three counts. In a jury trial Holstun was found guilty on count 3, and not guilty on count 2. The jury could not agree upon a verdict as to count 1; and a mistrial was declared as to that count. (Later count 1 was dismissed.) Holstun was sentenced, on count 3, to imprisonment in the county jail for one year. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

In count 3 it was alleged that Holstun and Burke committed the crime of conspiracy to violate the regulatory provisions of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act in that about July, 1957, they unlawfully conspired together to violate the provisions of sections 25657, 25658, and 25663 of said act.

As overt act 1, it was alleged therein that said defendants "employed female persons commonly known and described as 'B' girls to solicit the purchase of drinks of intoxicating beverages for said female persons and for male customers on premises operated by said defendants."

As overt act 2, it was alleged that the defendants "served and caused to be served drinks of intoxicating beverages to minor persons in on-sale premises."

As overt act 3, it was alleged that the defendants "employed two minor girls, * * [Judy and Connie], to act as so-called 'B' girls, that is, to solicit male customers of on-sale liquor premises to purchase drinks of intoxicating beverages for said minor girls and male customers."

As overt act 4, it was alleged that the said minor girls (Judy and Connie) "did solicit the purchase of drinks of intoxicating beverages under the direct instructions of the said defendants" at the Gyro Room and the Captain's Table.

Appellant asserts that certain code sections, involved herein, are unconstitutional; the court erred in instructing the jury; and the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict.

At various times, beginning in 1953, the defendant Holstun (appellant) owned and operated six bars or saloons in Long Beach. At the time of the alleged offenses involved herein, he was operating four of the bars. Two of the bars he was then operating were adjacent bars which were known as the Gyro Room and the Captain's Table. Defendant Thomas Burke was the manager of those two bars.

On April 25, 1957, about 11 p. m. a sailor entered the Gyro Room, and at that time he had more than $500 on his person. Rusty, a girl employee in that bar, introduced him to Judy, another girl employee therein. Then he and Judy sat at a table and he bought drinks for her and himself. Soon thereafter, another girl employee therein, by the name of Connie, sat at the table with them. Judy and Connie "wanted" champagne, and he bought it for them. Rusty waited on them. He bought at least three or four bottles of champagne. When a bottle was brought to the table he paid for it with a $20 bill. He was intoxicated and did not notice whether each bottle was a new bottle or the same bottle that had been on the table. He also drank some beer and a drink known as a screwdriver, consisting of vodka and orange juice. He was affectionate with the girls. There was a discussion about the three of them going to an apartment. They remained at the table until approximately 2:30 a. m., when he, Judy, and Connie left the barroom. They entered a taxicab and traveled several blocks. Then they walked down a stairway to the beach. During the walk the girls had their arms around his waist and he had his arms around their necks. When they arrived at the beach Connie "disappeared." While he and Judy continued along the beach, he put his hand in his pocket and found that all his money, except $11, was gone. Thereupon they returned to the boulevard. A taxicab, in which Connie was riding, came there and stopped for a second. Judy jumped into the cab, and the cab went away. He telephoned the police. Soon thereafter the police arrested Judy and Connie.

Judy was 19 years of age. Two or three days before April 25, she was employed by Burke to work at the Gyro Room. Burke introduced her to appellant (Holstun) and said that appellant was the owner of the place. Neither Burke nor appellant asked her how old she was. With respect to her duties, Judy testified that she was supposed to be a cocktail waitress; Burke told her to "hustle up" the drinks and keep the drinks coming in, to sit down and drink with the customers, and try to get them to buy as much champagne as possible; about 11 p. m. on April 25, she sat at a table in the Gyro Room with a sailor (McWilliams); she observed that he had a large amount of money consisting principally of $20 bills; part of the money was counted in her presence, and that part was $500; soon thereafter Connie sat at the table with them, and at that time a bottle of champagne was on the table; Rusty (a waitress) poured champagne from the bottle into glasses, and then she took the bottle away; the sailor complained about the high price charged for a bottle of champagne; he ordered another bottle of champagne; during the time they were sitting there, Rusty brought a bottle of champagne to the table four or five times; when Connie began pouring drinks on the side of the chair, Burke motioned to Judy indicating that she also should "pour out" her drinks; thereafter Judy and Connie "poured out" their drinks; while they were there the sailor kissed them and they kissed him; before Connie arrived at the table, appellant had told Judy that any money she got from the sailor would be split three ways—divided among Burke, appellant, and Judy; after Connie was at the table appellant told Judy that money obtained from the sailor would be split four ways; appellant and Burke told Judy to keep the sailor there as long as she could keep him; Burke told her to keep the sailor there after the closing hour; after the place was closed about 2 a. m., and while the sailor was still there, appellant told Judy to take the sailor out and try to get the rest of the money from him, and to promise him anything he wanted; Burke told her to promise him anything; Judy, Connie and the sailor left the place, entered a taxicab, and traveled several blocks; then the three of them started to walk down a stairway to the beach; during the walk, the sailor had his arms around the girls; when Connie showed money to Judy, the girls ran away from the sailor; the sailor "caught up" with Judy, but Connie entered a taxicab and went away; after Judy and the sailor had returned to the top of the stairway, Connie came there in a taxicab, and Judy entered the cab and they went to their apartment; soon thereafter police officers came to the apartment, recovered the money, and took the girls to the police station.

Connie was 20 years of age. On April 25, about 11:30 p. m., she entered the Gyro Room and sat at the bar and drank beer. She told appellant that she was Judy's roommate. She testified that appellant asked her if she would like to work for him; she asked him what she would have to do; he said that all she would have to do would be to sit with the customers and drink, and promise them anything; he told her he would guarantee $50 a week, that some girls made from $15 to $25 a night in tips or what they can "take the fellow for"; soon thereafter, appellant told her that the sailor (McWilliams) had $1,300, and if she would work with Judy, he (appellant) would see that she and Judy would go home together; he also told her to order all the champagne she could order, and to try to get the sailor to buy a lot of drinks; he said that anything they took in or any money they took from the sailor would be split four ways; appellant did not ask how old she was; she sat at the table with Judy and the sailor; Rusty brought a bottle of champagne to the table; after the bottle was partially empty, Rusty took it back to the bar; Rusty brought champagne to the table seven or eight times; Connie and Judy were affectionate with the sailor; appellant told Connie to try to keep the sailor there after hours and "we will try to get the money then." The testimony of Connie, with respect to occurrences after leaving the bar, was substantially the same as the testimony of Judy with respect thereto.

Rusty testified that, when she was 19 years of age, she was employed by Burke to wait on the tables at the Gyro Room and to drink with the customers if so requested by them; on April 25, while she was in that bar but was not working there at that time, appellant asked her if she would like to make some money by serving the table where Judy, Connie, and a sailor were sitting; appellant told her that the sailor had a considerable amount of money and they would like to have it; she waited on the table and took champagne to the table about three times; Burke told her when to take the first bottle away from the table.

Five other girls, who had been employees of appellant, testified in substance the same as Judy, Connie, and Rusty had testified with respect to the general instructions given by appellant and Burke regarding duties. The five other girls testified that appellant and Burke had instructed them to associate and drink with the men customers and induce them to spend money. They also testified that they followed those instructions.

Mr. McGrail testified that in April, 1957, when he was paying for a highball which he had ordered in the Gyro Room, he handed a $100 bill to the bartender; there was a delay in giving the change; meanwhile, two girls came to his table and drank from "bottles that were labeled champagne"; he asked them who was paying for their drinks; they told him not to worry; about an hour later, Burke came to the table and gave him $60 as change.

Defendant Burke, called as a witness by the People, testified that on April 25, 1957, he was manager of the Gyro Room and the Captain's Table; soon after he commenced working for appellant in 1955, appellant told him to have the girls push the sale of champagne and to get a good price for it; appellant also told him that the girls should associate and drink with the customers and induce them to spend money, and if the girls had any outside activities, that was approved; pursuant to appellant's instructions, Burke told all the girls that in the matter of getting money from men customers they should promise the men anything; he told Judy to come to work at the Gyro Room; he did not know she was 19 years of age; he did not ask how old she was; he gave her instructions with respect to her duties; on April 25, about 11 p. m., while the sailor was sitting at a table with Judy and Connie, appellant told Burke that one of the girls said that the sailor had a considerable amount of money; appellant instructed Connie in the bar business and discussed with her the method of "a split" and "the inducement of separating a person from his money"; Burke told Judy and Connie to sell as much champagne as possible to the sailor and to keep him spending money; Burke told Rusty to take the bottle of champagne to the table and to take it back; on one occasion, appellant told Burke that a girl named Valerie, who had been employed there, was a good person to contact men, bring them into the bar, and induce them to spend money; on another occasion, appellant told Burke that he paid money to Valerie for selling champagne at a high price; appellant also told him to tell the other girls that they would receive $5.00 on a bottle of champagne if they sold it for a price from $15 to $25; Burke heard appellant tell a bartender (at another bar owned by appellant) to keep the girls hustling to see that the house got its "end," and that there were "no stops."

The testimony of appellant on direct examination was in effect a denial of the statements and acts attributed to him, in the testimony of the prosecution witnesses, with respect to the duties of the girls or the instructions to them as employees. On cross-examination, he testified that Judy told him that the sailor had a considerable amount of money; he (witness) told her to talk to Burke; his purpose in telling her to talk to Burke was that she should tell Burke that a man was there to spend money; he would not have told Judy to "get all you can," but he might have given her a word of praise, and it was probable that he gave her "a little urge"; he was interested in Judy getting all the money she could get for the house; he saw Judy, Connie, and the sailor sitting and drinking at the table.

Mary Ambrosio, called by the People as a rebuttal witness, testified that she was a police officer; pursuant to an assignment she went to the Gyro Room on April 30, 1957, and told appellant she wanted to work for him; appellant said he would like to employ her; he told her she would receive $10 a day if she stayed there; she said she received more than that where she had worked, and she had received "so much" on every drink she sponsored; he said he could not do anything like that but he would split "50-50" with her on champagne, and that a smart girl could make $90 a week there and that "plenty of them do."

[1] Appellant asserts that section 182 of the Penal Code, under which he is charged with conspiracy in count 3, is unconstitutional. That section provides that if two or more persons conspire to commit any crime, they are punishable as follows: when they conspire to commit any felony, they shall be punishable in the same manner as is provided for the punishment of said felony; when they conspire to do any other acts described in said section, they shall be punishable by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year, or in the state prison for not more than three years, or by a fine or both fine and imprisonment. Appellant argues to the effect that he and Burke could have been charged with violating sections 25657, 25658, and 25663 of the Business and Professions Code, referred to in the information, or with an attempt to violate those sections, and then, if they were convicted, they would have been subject only to misdemeanor punishment, whereas they were charged with conspiring to violate those same sections and, having been convicted, they became subject to felony punishment; and that such discrepancy between the punishments deprives him of his constitutional right of equal protection of the laws. He argues further that such a discrepancy is unfair in that the punishment for agreeing to commit a misdemeanor is far greater than the punishment would be if the misdemeanor were actually committed. In People v. Keene, 128 Cal.App.2d 520, at page 529, 275 P.2d 804, at page 810 it was said: "Conspiracy is a distinct offense from the actual commission of the offense or offenses forming the object of the conspiracy; and the fact that the conspirators succeeded in perpetrating the acts which of themselves constitute the offense or offenses which they conspired to commit, in nowise relieves them from liability for conspiracy under section 182 of the Penal Code." In Clune v. United States, 159 U.S. 590, 16 S.Ct. 125, at page 126, 40 L.Ed. 269, it was said: "A conspiracy to commit an offense is denounced as itself a separate offense, and the punishment therefor fixed by the statute, and we know of no lack of power in congress to thus deal with a conspiracy. Whatever may be thought of the wisdom or propriety of a statute making a conspiracy to do an act punishable more severely than the doing of the act itself, it is a matter to be considered solely by the legislative body." Appellant's contention regarding unconstitutionality of said section 182 is not sustainable.

[2, 3] Appellant asserts further that section 25657 of the Business and Professions Code (referred to in the information as having been violated by appellant) is unconstitutional in that it is so vague and uncertain that it violates the due process clause of the Constitution. Const. art. 1, § 13. That section provides, in part, that it is unlawful "For any person to employ, upon any licensed on-sale premises, any hostess or entertainer for the purpose of procuring or encouraging the purchase or sale of alcoholic beverages, or to pay any such hostess or entertainer a percentage or commission on the sale of alcoholic beverages for procuring or encouraging the purchase or sale of alcoholic beverages on such premises." Appellant argues that the section is vague and uncertain in that it fails to define the word "hostess" which is used therein; and that the meaning of that word is left open to speculation and conjecture. He quotes from the testimony of Judy, Connie, Rusty and others wherein the girls are referred to as waitresses, and argues that the girls employed by appellant were not hostesses. In Cooper v. State Board of Equalization, 137 Cal.App. 2d 672, 290 P.2d 914, a license to sell intoxicating liquor had been revoked on the basis that the licensee had violated said section 25657 and other statutes. In that case there was evidence that waitresses solicited male customers to purchase drinks for them and that the waitresses received money from the bartender for soliciting the purchases. It was contended therein that said section and another section (Pen.Code, § 303) were void for uncertainty. (The word "hostess" was not discussed specifically therein.) The court said 137 Cal. App.2d at page 680, 290 P.2d at page 919: "Appellants argue that the language of the statutes 'to employ * * * any person for the purpose of procuring or encouraging the purchase or sale of such beverage' is so broad as to apply to legitimate entertainers, who by providing entertainment necessarily encourage the sale of drinks or to a waitress who asks a patron if he desires a drink. The contention requires but scant consideration. The Legislature obviously intended to prohibit the direct 'procuring or encouraging the purchase' of alcoholic beverages, and not the incidental increase of consumption of liquor by persons watching entertainment furnished by the management. We have no difficulty in holding that the statute clearly and without ambiguity only prohibits direct solicitation of drinks, and does not prohibit the purchase of drinks by patrons of their own initiative and volition while watching entertainment or when asked by a waitress if they desire service." In People v. Hallner, 43 Cal.2d 715, at page 720, 277 P.2d 393, at page 396, it was said: "A statute will not be declared void as being indefinite if it contains 'a reasonably adequate disclosure of the legislative intent regarding an evil to be combatted in language giving fair notice of the practices to be avoided.'" The word "hostess" is defined as: "A female host; in public resorts, an attendant in charge who dispenses hospitality." Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition, Unabridged, page 1205. A "host" is defined as: "One who receives or entertains another, whether socially or for pay * * *." Ibid. The word "hostess" is one of common usage and understanding. It is apparent that it was the legislative intent to prohibit the direct "procuring or encouraging of the purchase" of alcoholic beverages, by a female attendant employed at on-sale premises, if her duties as such attendant include dispensing hospitality by such methods as receiving, entertaining, or drinking with, male customers. Appellant's contention regarding unconstitutionality of said section 25657 is not sustainable.

[4] Appellant also asserts that the court erred in not instructing the jury as to the meaning of the words "hostess" and "B girls," as used in the information. He did not request such an instruction. He argues that the court of its own motion should have given such an instruction so that the jury would have known the meaning of the charge in count 3. The court gave an instruction which stated the substance of said section 25657 of the Business and Professions Code. It also gave an instruction to the effect that, as a prerequisite for determination of guilt, the jury must find that an overt act was committed, as alleged in the information. The information was read twice to the jury. As above shown, overt act 3, in count 3, alleged that defendants employed the two minor girls, Judy and Connie, "to act as so-called 'B' girls, that is, to solicit male customers of on-sale liquor premises to purchase drinks of intoxicating beverages for said minor girls and male customers." Rachel Brann, a witness called by the People, who was employed about three years as a waitress at bars owned by appellant, testified that a "B girl," as she understood the term, was one "Just to sit and drink and try to make extra money." As above stated, in discussing the next preceding contention, the word "hostess" is one of common understanding. The court, in instructing the jury with reference to finding as to the alleged overt acts, sufficiently directed the jury's attention to the meaning of the expression "B girls." This contention regarding the giving of additional instructions on the court's own motion is not sustainable.

[5] Appellant asserts further that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury, as requested by appellant, that if the crime of conspiracy to violate the Alcoholic Beverage Act, as alleged in count 3, was committed by anyone, then under the evidence and as a matter of law Burke, Judy, Connie, Rusty, and four other girls (specifically mentioned in the requested instruction) were accomplices. The four other girls, who had been employed as waitresses at some of appellant's bars, testified in substance the same as Judy, Connie, and Rusty had testified regarding their duties and the instructions given them by appellant. The court instructed the jury properly with reference to the definition of an accomplice and with reference to the requirement that the testimony of an accomplice must be corroborated. Also an instruction was given which was to the effect that the jury should determine from the evidence whether a witness was an accomplice, unless the court specifically instructed the jury that a witness was an accomplice. There was a given instruction, with reference to count 3, that as a matter of law Burke was an accomplice. The jury was also instructed that a barmaid or bartender could be guilty of conspiracy to violate said act, and that a person need not be a licensee or a manager of a bar to be guilty of so conspiring, but that any person who entered into an agreement with one or more persons that they would join together to violate the act was guilty of conspiracy. Reference should be made to the three sections of the Business and Professions Code which it is alleged that appellant and Burke conspired to violate. Section 25657, subdivision (a), which relates to employing a "hostess" for the purpose of procuring purchases of alcoholic beverages, has been quoted hereinabove. Subdivision (b) of said section provides in substance that it is unlawful, in any place of business where alcoholic beverages are sold to be consumed on the premises, to employ or knowingly permit anyone to loiter in the premises for the purpose of begging or soliciting any patron therein to purchase such beverages for the one begging or soliciting.

Section 25658, subdivision (a), provides: "Every person who sells, furnishes, gives * * * any alcoholic beverage to any person under the age of 21 years is guilty of a misdemeanor. (b) * * * (c) Any on-sale licensee who knowingly permits a person under the age of 21 to consume any alcoholic beverage in the on-sale premises, whether or not the licensee has knowledge that the person is under the age of 21 years, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

Section 25663 provides: "Every person who employs or uses the services of minors in or on that portion of any premises, during business hours, which are primarily designed and used for the sale and service of alcoholic beverages for consumption on the premises is guilty of a misdemeanor."

Even if it be assumed that those witnesses were accomplices, it appears that the evidence was sufficient to show that their testimony was corroborated. As above stated, appellant testified he saw Judy, Connie, and the sailor at the table, and saw them drinking champagne; Judy told him that the sailor had a considerable amount of money; he told her to tell that to Burke; he might have given Judy a "word of praise" regarding her conduct with the sailor, and it was probable that he gave her "a little urge." The court did not err prejudicially in refusing to give said requested instruction.

[6] Appellant contends further that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict of guilty of conspiracy to violate said sections 25658 and 25663, as charged in count 3. He argues that there was no evidence that he knew that Judy, Connie, or Rusty was a minor; and there was no evidence that he conspired with any one to sell to, or furnish the girls with, any alcoholic beverage or to employ them, knowing that they were minors. The jury could infer from the evidence that he knew that those girls were minors. He did not ask their age. It is reasonable to assume that their appearances placed him on notice that there was a question as to their minority. The jury could infer that the acts and conduct of appellant and Burke in employing Judy, Connie, and Rusty, in using their services, and furnishing them with intoxicating liquor were based upon an understanding between appellant and Burke "to make as good use of the girls as possible" in selling drinks and inducing the male customers to spend money. Burke testified that appellant told him to have the girls "push" the sale of champagne, and that the purpose of the girls was to associate and drink with male customers and induce them to spend money. He also testified that he and appellant discussed making "as good use of the girls as possible" in selling drinks and inducing the male customers to spend money. Judy and Connie testified to the effect that appellant and Burke told them to sit at the table and drink with male customers if the customers so requested, and to get the customers to buy as much champagne as possible, and to keep the sailor there as long as they could. As above shown, appellant testified to the effect that, after he saw Judy and Connie at the table with the sailor, and after she had told him that the sailor had money, he encouraged her with respect to her conduct with the sailor. Rusty testified to the effect that appellant instructed her to serve champagne to Judy, Connie, and the sailor at the table where they were sitting. It is not necessary to refer specifically to other evidence, hereinabove mentioned, which indicates appellant's implication in a conspiracy to violate said sections. The evidence was sufficient to support the verdict.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

CITY OF PASADENA, Board of City Directors: Warren M. Dorn, Chairman, Seth Miller, Vice-Chairman, Alson E. Abernethy, A. Ray Benedict, Milton S. Brenner, Clarence A. Winder, Ray G. Woods; Don C. McMillan, City Manager; Robert D. McCue, Superintendent of Buildings; Douglas McKensie, City Engineer and Superintendent of Streets; Marcia C. Purpus, a.k.a. Marcia C. Brown, Defendants and Respondents.

No. 23175.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 2, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Mandamus proceeding to compel the board of directors of city to annul its order affirming decision of zoning committee in granting a variance and exception and to dismiss the proceeding. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Jerold E. Weil, J., the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Patrosso, J. pro tem., held, inter alia, that the granting of variance and exception from zoning ordinance permitting resident to construct a swimming pool, etc., did not operate to give such resident any right which was not theretofore vested in her, but merely removed certain restrictions imposed by zoning ordinance, and exception did not restrict neighbors or those they purported to represent in use of their property and they had no vested right in maintenance of the restrictions.

Affirmed.

1. Mandamus ⇐187(4)

In proceeding for mandamus to compel board of city directors to annul its order affirming action of zoning committee in granting a variance and exception from city ordinance, since it was incumbent upon plaintiffs to prepare and file in superior court a transcript of evidence adduced upon hearing before the committee and the board if they wished to urge contention that evidence was insufficient to support board's order, failure to do so precluded an attack upon sufficiency of the evidence upon appeal from judgment denying writ of mandate.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇐621.47

The affirmance by board of city directors of action of zoning committee in granting a variance and exception from zoning ordinance to permit construction of a swimming pool, etc., was not invalid on ground that board failed to make required finding where aside from fact that ordinance did not require board to make findings the board and the committee made findings to effect that all of conditions prescribed by ordinance as prerequisite to granting of variance and exception had been met.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇐621.47

An express finding by board of city directors in affirming action of zoning committee in granting variance and exception from zoning ordinance that "in order to carry out the general purpose and intent of zoning plan and code of the City of Pasadena, the said decision of the zoning committee hereby is sustained" was tantamount to a finding that variance granted was not in conflict with general purpose and intent of zoning plan and code as required by ordinance as a prerequisite to grant of variance and exception.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇐621.47

The affirmance by board of city directors of action of zoning committee in granting variance and exception was not invalid for failure to find that variance was necessary "to prevent unreasonable property loss or unnecessary hardship" where such finding was implicit in the one to effect that "such variance and exception are necessary for the preservation and enjoyment of a property right".

5. Municipal Corporations ⇐621.47

The determination of board of city directors that its action in affirming action of zoning committee in granting a variance and exception from zoning ordinance was necessary "in order to carry out the general purpose and intent of the zoning plan and code of the City of Pasadena" necessarily implied a finding that all of requirements thereof had been complied with.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇐621.40

A written application for variance and exception from zoning ordinance was not deficient for failure to set forth sufficient facts showing that variance was "necessary for the preservation and enjoyment of a property right", since such applications need not conform to nicety required of pleadings in judicial proceedings, and such provisions are directory.

7. Municipal Corporations ⇐621.47

The findings of board of city directors in affirming decision of zoning committee granting a variance and exception from zoning ordinance were not insufficient because they were in language of ordinance and did not set forth probative facts upon which they were based, where there was nothing in ordinance to suggest that board or zoning committee was required to do more than find the ultimate facts prescribed by the ordinance as a condition to granting of a variance or exception.

8. Municipal Corporations ⇐621.39

The granting or denial of a variance rests largely in discretion of body designated by zoning ordinance for that purpose.

9. Evidence ⇐83(2)
Municipal Corporations ⇐621.53

Where a variance is granted, it is presumed that official duty was performed in making of required investigation and that existence of necessary fact was found, and decision of municipal body in granting or denying a variance will not be disturbed by the courts in absence of a clear and convincing showing of an abuse of discretion.

10. Municipal Corporations ⇐621.46

The granting of variance and exception from zoning ordinance permitting resident to construct a swimming pool, etc., did not operate to give such resident any right which was not theretofore vested in her, but merely removed certain restrictions imposed by zoning ordinance, and exception did not restrict neighbors or those they purported to represent in use of their property, and they had no vested right in maintenance of the restrictions.

Robertson & Poindexter, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank L. Kostlan, City Atty., Wendell R. Thompson, Asst. City Atty., Pasadena, David E. Golay, Deputy City Atty., San Gabriel, for respondent City et al.

Hahn & Hahn and Allyn H. Barber, Pasadena, for respondent Purpus.

PATROSSO, Justice pro tem.

The Board of Directors of the city of Pasadena upon appeal affirmed the action of the zoning committee in granting to the defendant Purpus a variance and exception from certain provisions of the city zoning ordinance. The variance and exception so granted permitted the defendant Purpus, in addition to a single family dwelling and garage, to construct a swimming pool 20 feet from a private roadway located at the rear of her property prior to the construction of the dwelling and garage; to erect a pool terrace building containing kitchen facilities, a pool equipment building and a 5-foot high chain-link fence on top of the existing wall located 5 feet from the property line of the private roadway and along the northwest and southwest side property lines.[1]

The appeal is from a judgment denying a writ of mandate to compel the board to annul its order and dismissing the proceeding.

Briefly stated, the second amended complaint as further amended by an amendment thereto alleges that the plaintiffs are the owners of property in the Oak Knoll area of the city of Pasadena "near" the property owned by the defendant Purpus which is located at 1344 Hillcrest Avenue and they bring the proceeding on behalf of themselves and other neighboring property owners; that the zoning committee of the city granted to the defendant Purpus a variance from the requirement of the zoning ordinance as hereinabove mentioned; that the zoning committee in granting said variance and the board in affirming the latter's action acted in excess of their jurisdiction and the same constitutes an abuse of discretion in that (1) the defendants "failed to make any finding whatsoever as required by said ordinance 'that the variance requested is not in conflict with the general purposes and intent of this code,'" and the said variance is in fact "in conflict with the general purpose and intent of said zoning ordinance"; and (2) that the findings made by the board are not supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. With their amendment to the second amended complaint plaintiffs filed what they allege to be a "certified copy of the transcript of record and proceedings before the defendant Board of City Directors" which they state is "a complete and full, true and correct copy of the record of said appeal except that it does not include a drawing and two large site plans presented on behalf of the defendant Purpus" which said drawing and site plans it is further alleged "are not material or relevant to this proceeding and that all material and relevant portions of said proceedings are filed concurrently herewith."

Defendants city of Pasadena and its board of directors filed a return consisting of a demurrer and answer as did also the defendant Purpus. The demurrers were sustained without leave to amend, following which the judgment appealed from was entered.

The issue here is whether upon the showing thus made the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief requested.

[1] We may at once dismiss plaintiffs' contention that the action of the zoning committee and the board of directors in granting the variance and exception is not supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record by reason of the fact that, while the certified copy of the record filed by the plaintiffs discloses that both the zoning committee and board received oral and documentary evidence, such evidence is not included in the record filed by the plaintiffs. Since it was incumbent upon the plaintiffs to prepare and file in the superior court a transcript of the evidence adduced upon the hearing before the committee and the board if they wished to urge the contention that the evidence was insufficient to support the board's order, failure to do so precludes an attack upon the sufficiency of the evidence upon this appeal. Fickeisen v. Civil Service Com., 1950, 98 Cal.App.2d 419, 420–421, 220 P.2d 605.

[2] Plaintiffs further contend that the board of directors in affirming the action of the zoning committee failed to make findings warranting the granting of the variance and exception. The contention is without merit. Aside from the fact that the ordinance does not require the board to make findings both the board and the zoning committee made findings to the effect that all of the conditions prescribed by the ordinance as a prerequisite to the granting of the variance and exception had been met.

1. Under the terms of the zoning ordinance the pool terrace building is not a permitted use in an R–1 zone; a swimming pool is not permitted to be built before the dwelling; the required setback for a swimming pool is 25 feet; the location of the pool equipment building was within the prescribed front and side yard setbacks and the height of fences is limited to 3½ feet.

Section 6.02(B) of the ordinance sets forth the conditions under which a variance may be granted as to use of property and front yard restrictions while section 6.02(C) sets forth the requirements with respect to exceptions to side yard and height of fence restrictions.

Section 6.02(B) provides that a variance may be granted by the zoning committee if, from the facts, it is found: "(1) That there are exceptional or extraordinary circumstances or conditions applicable to the property involved or to the intended use of the property that do not apply generally to the property or class of uses in the same zone so that a denial of the petition would result in undue property loss, and (2) That such variance is necessary for the preservation and enjoyment of a property right of the petitioner, and also (3) That such variance will not be detrimental to the public welfare or convenience nor injurious to the property or improvements of other owners of property."

Section 6.02(C) provides that exceptions to side yard and height of fences restrictions may be granted if the zoning committee finds from the facts: "(1) That the variance requested is not in conflict with the general purpose and intent of this code; and (2) That the variance will not be detrimental to the public welfare or convenience; and (3) That such variance is necessary for the preservation and enjoyment of a property right of the petitioner and to prevent unreasonable property loss or unnecessary hardship and will not be detrimental nor injurious to the property or improvements of other owners of property."

The order of the zoning committee reads in part as follows: "(1) That there are exceptional or extraordinary circumstances or conditions applicable to the property involved or to the intended use of the property that do not apply generally to the property or class of uses in the same zone so that a denial of the petition would result in undue property loss. (2) That such variance, as granted, is necessary for the preservation and enjoyment of a property right of the petitioner. (3) That such variance, as granted, will not be detrimental to the public welfare or convenience nor injurious to the property or improvements of other owners of property."

The resolution of the board affirming the action of the zoning committee reads in part as follows:

"Whereas, the Board finds that:

"1. There are exceptional or extraordinary circumstances or conditions applicable to the property involved or to the intended use of the property that do not apply generally to the property or class of uses in the same zone so that a denial of the petition would result in undue property loss; and

"2. Such variance and exceptions are necessary for the preservation and enjoyment of a property right of the petitioner; and

"3. Such variance and exception will not be detrimental to the public welfare or convenience nor injurious to the property or improvements of other owners of property.

"Now, Therefore, in order to carry out the general purpose and intent of The Zoning Plan and Code of the City of Pasadena, the said decision of the Zoning Committee hereby is sustained and said appeal of Thomas W. Ames and Eileen H. Ames, being Appeal No. 41426 in the files of the City Clerk, hereby is denied."

From the foregoing it is apparent that the board made findings in strict conformity with the provisions of section 6.02(B). Plaintiffs, however, contend that the board did not make all of the findings required by section 6.02(C) in that the board did not find that the variance was "not in conflict with the general purpose and intent of this code" or that the variance was necessary "to prevent unreasonable property loss or unnecessary hardship."

[3] As to the first the board in its order expressly found that "in order to carry out the general purpose and intent of The Zoning Plan and Code of the City of Pasadena, the said decision of the Zoning Committee hereby is sustained." This is tantamount to a finding that the variance granted is not in conflict with the general purpose and intent of the zoning plan and code.

[4, 5] As to the second objection while the board did not expressly find that the variance was necessary "to prevent unreasonable property loss or unnecessary hardship" such a finding is implicit in the one to the effect that "[s]uch variance and exception are necessary for the preservation and enjoyment of a property right." Obviously, if this is true it is equally true that to deny the variance would result in "unnecessary hardship" to the owner of the property. Moreover, the board's determination that its action in affirming the action of the zoning committee was necessary "in order to carry out the general purpose and intent of The Zoning Plan and Code of the City of Pasadena" necessarily implies a finding that all of the requirements thereof had been complied with. See Miller v. Planning Commission, 1956, 138 Cal.App.2d 598, 603, 292 P.2d 278.

[6] Plaintiffs further contend that the defendant Purpus, in her written application for a variance and exception, did not set forth sufficient facts showing that such variance and exception was "necessary for the preservation and enjoyment of a property right." Applications of this character addressed to zoning boards, however, need not conform to the nicety required of pleadings in judicial proceedings. Moreover, as said in Miller v. Planning Commission, supra (138 Cal.App.2d at page 604, 292 P.2d at page 282), in rejecting a similar contention:

"* * * The furnishing of such information with the application is not made a condition, either expressly or by implication, of its approval. These provisions are clearly directory and simply specify a proper time and occasion for supplying this information. * * *"

[7] Finally, plaintiffs contend that the findings of the board are insufficient because they are in the language of the ordinance and do not set forth the probative facts upon which they are based. We find nothing in the ordinance to suggest that the board or the zoning committee is required to do more than find the ultimate facts prescribed by the ordinance as a condition to the granting of a variance or exception.

[8, 9] It is necessary to repeat what has frequently been said that the granting or denial of a variance rests largely in the discretion of the body designated by the zoning ordinance for that purpose. Where a variance is granted it is presumed that official duty was performed in the making of the required investigation and that the existence of the necessary facts was found. And the decision of the municipal body in granting or denying a variance will not be disturbed by the courts in the absence of a clear and convincing showing of an abuse of discretion. Jackson v. City of San Mateo, 1957, 148 Cal.App.2d 667, 307 P. 2d 451.

[10] Finally, it is to be observed as pointed out in Steiger v. Board of Supervisors, 1956, 143 Cal.App.2d 352, 357, 300 P.2d 210, that the granting of the variance and exception did not operate to give the defendant Purpus any right which was not theretofore vested in her. It merely removed certain restrictions imposed by the zoning ordinance in an R–1 zone. The exception does not restrict plaintiffs or those they purport to represent in the use of their property and they have no vested right in the maintenance of the restrictions.

The judgment is affirmed.

EMPLOYERS MUTUAL LIABILITY INSURANCE COMPANY OF WISCONSIN, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

PACIFIC INDEMNITY COMPANY,
Defendant and Appellant.

No. 17903.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 27, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Action by a construction company's comprehensive liability insurer against construction company's motor vehicle insurer for recovery of an amount paid by comprehensive insurer to an employee of a trucking company who was injured when a piece of steel sheet piling fell off a truck being loaded under supervision of construction company's employees. The Superior Court, County of San Mateo, Louis B. DeMatteis, J., entered judgment for comprehensive insurer, and motor vehicle insurer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that where motor vehicle insurer insisted that its policy did not cover the accident, but that comprehensive insurer's policy did cover the accident, comprehensive insurer's action in contributing toward the settlement of the claim in question could not be deemed to have been an act exclusively in its own interest, or to have been an act of a volunteer, but was an act to protect the best interests of comprehensive insurer, construction company, and motor vehicle insurer and in view of the fact that motor vehicle insurer's policy actually covered the accident, and comprehensive insurer's policy did not, comprehensive insurer, under the doctrine of subrogation, was entitled to recover its contribution to the settlement from motor vehicle insurer.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐110

An order denying a new trial is not appealable, and a purported appeal therefrom would be dismissed.

2. Insurance ⇐435.24

Where a comprehensive liability policy issued to a construction company, covering liability arising out of construction of a certain power plant, provided that policy did not apply to motor vehicles while away from premises owned, rented, or controlled by construction company, and an accident giving rise to contingent liability against construction company arose away from premises owned or controlled by named insured, during a truck-loading operation, such comprehensive policy did not cover the accident.

3. Insurance ⇐435.17

Where a motor vehicle policy issued a construction company covered liability arising out of the use by any person of an owned or hired automobile or truck, insurer was liable under such policy to construction company for liability arising out of an accidental injury to an employee of a company which leased a truck to construction company, where injury occurred while the truck was being loaded under supervision of construction company's employees.

4. Insurance ⇐435.17

Where a motor vehicle liability policy specifically included coverage for accidents arising out of loading of automobiles and trucks, even though policy provided that a power crane was not included in the coverage, under such policy, accidents in loading automobiles by whatever means, including cranes, would be deemed covered.

5. Subrogation ⇐1

Subrogation is an equitable doctrine, recognized at law, and not depending upon contractual relationships, and is administered so as to secure justice without regard to form.

6. Subrogation ⇐1

Subrogation applies in all cases in which one party, not a volunteer, pays a debt for which another is primarily liable, which in equity and good conscience, should have been paid by the latter party.

7. Subrogation ⇐1

Requisites of subrogation are that payment must have been made by the subrogee to protect his own interests, that the subrogee did not act as a volunteer, that the debt was one for which the subrogee was not primarily liable, that the entire debt was paid, and that subrogation will not work any injustice to the rights of others.

8. Subrogation ⇐1

Subrogation extends to those parties who pay in the performance of a legal duty by contract or rules of law, who pay in order to protect their own rights or interest, and whose payments are favored by public policy.

9. Insurance ⇐606(5)

Where construction company's motor vehicle insurer insisted that its policy did not cover an accident in which a trucking company employee was injured, but that construction company's comprehensive insurer's policy covered the accident, comprehensive insurer's action in contributing toward the settlement of claim arising out of the accident could not be deemed to have been an act exclusively in its own interest, or to have been an act of a volunteer, but was an act to protect the best interests of comprehensive insurer, construction company, and motor vehicle insurer, and in view of the fact that motor vehicle insurer's policy actually covered the accident, and comprehensive insurer's policy did not, comprehensive insurer, under the doctrine of subrogation, was entitled to recover its contribution to the settlement from motor vehicle insurer.

10. Subrogation ⇐26

Where a reasonable doubt exists as to a person's own liability to a third party, his act in making a payment for that party which should have been made by that party cannot be considered to have been an act of a volunteer or interloper, and thus cannot preclude his right to subrogation.

11. Insurance ⇐512½

Where an employee of a trucking company which leased its truck to a construction company was injured through the negligence of employees of the construction company, liability of such negligent employees was primary, and therefore, policy covering liability of construction company arising out of its negligence had to be exhausted before an insurer's policy on the truck, or an insurer under a comprehensive policy issued construction company, could be resorted to.

12. Insurance ⇐606(1)

Remedy of declaratory relief is not exclusive, and therefore, an insurer was not required to bring an action in declaratory relief in seeking subrogation rights, even though question of liability of various insurers under various policies was involved. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1062.

13. Insurance ⇐539(5)

Where a motor vehicle insurer failed to show any prejudice from failure to receive notice during a 10-month period which elapsed from time of an accident until it was notified thereof, such fact did not constitute a defense even though the policy contained a provision requiring written notice by the insured as soon as practicable after knowledge of injury.

[1] Defendant Pacific Indemnity Company appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for $17,500 and $446.78 attorneys' fees, both amounts to bear interest from specified dates. Defendant purports to appeal from the order denying new trial.[1]

Questions Presented.

Is plaintiff entitled to recover under the doctrine of subrogation? Corollary thereto is the question of whether defendant's policy covered the accident and plaintiff's did not.

Facts.

The action grows out of an injury sustained by one Borges who was employed as a truck driver by McLaughlin Draying Co. The truck and driver were rented to Guy F. Atkinson Co., a corporation. His employer instructed him to take one of its trucks to the Southern Pacific railroad spur track at Folsom to be loaded with steel piling. He was to report to Atkinson's men and take orders from them. Borges parked the truck adjacent to a railroad gondola car in the Southern Pacific railroad yard at Folsom. The truck was being loaded with steel sheet pilings, which were hoisted from the gondola car to the truck by a crane owned by George Pollock Co. and operated by a Pollock employee. The crane and operator were rented to Atkinson. In the gondola car were employees of Atkinson. Loading of the truck commenced with those employees attaching a single piling to the crane boom hooks. They then signalled the crane operator, who transported the piling over to the Borges' truck, where it was placed at the direction of Borges and two Atkinson men who were on the truck. After 12 pilings had been loaded, the Atkinson men attached a piling to the crane hooks. In some manner an additional piling became wedged into the secured piling. Borges called the crane operator's attention to this. The latter attempted to dislodge the extra piling by banging it within the gondola car. Atkinson men signalled the operator to lift the load from the car. The operator lifted it, moved it over to the bed of the truck and lowered it into the truck, under the direction of Borges and the Atkinson men. When about 6 inches from the bed of the truck, the wedged piling broke loose from the secured piling, bounced off the truck bed and struck Borges, severely injuring him. Borges brought suit in April, 1953, against both companies and the individual employees who were concerned in the loading of the truck, for damages in the sum of $105,000 for the injuries suffered. Plaintiff had issued to Atkinson a comprehensive liability insurance policy for risks other than automobile. Defendant also had issued a policy to Atkinson covering automobile risks. Plaintiff received notice of the action May 26, 1953, and after investigation, tendered to defendant the defense of Atkinson. This offer was declined by defendant. On April 14, 1954, plaintiff again tendered the defense to defendant, which defendant refused. One Rhodes, foreman of Atkinson, was a defendant in the Borges action. Plaintiff tendered to McLaughlin and its automobile insurer, Travelers Insurance Company, the defense of Rhodes, which tender was accepted. Travelers also accepted the defense of Atkinson tendered by plaintiff. (Pollock was insured under a Travelers comprehensive policy.) Before trial and after considerable negotiations for settlement the Borges action was settled for $50,000, Travelers paying $15,000 under its policy with McLaughlin and $17,500 under its policy with Pollock. Plaintiff on behalf of Atkinson contributed $17,500. Defendant previously had been notified to undertake Atkinson's defense and now was notified of the settlement negotiations, and refused to participate in either. Plaintiff then brought this action to recover the amount it had contributed to the Borges settlement, claiming to be subrogated to Atkinson's rights under defendant's policy.

1. As this order is not appealable, the purported appeal must be dismissed.

The trial court found that the accident was the result of the negligence of Atkinson employees in loading the truck hired by Atkinson from McLaughlin, that Pollock and McLaughlin were not independent contractors in relation to Atkinson in the loading of the truck, that defendant's policy specifically covered loading of the truck with coverage extended to any company legally responsible for the use of a hired truck, that the premises where the accident occurred were not owned, rented or controlled by Atkinson, that plaintiff's policy specifically excluded automobile accidents including the loading and unloading thereof, that plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum paid in settlement as it succeeded to all rights of Atkinson under the equitable doctrine of subrogation.

Plaintiff's Policy.

It covered Atkinson only for "Construction of Folsom Power Plant * * * and elsewhere in connection with said project." The steel pilings being loaded on the Atkinson truck at the time of the accident were for this project. The following provisions of the policy are pertinent here:

"I. Coverage A—Bodily Injury Liability—Automobile Included. To pay on behalf of the insured all sums which the insured shall become obligated to pay by reason of the liability imposed upon him by law or by written contract for damages because of bodily injury, sickness or disease, including death at any time resulting therefrom, sustained by any person."

Included as an insured is "any person while using an owned automobile or a hired automobile and any person or organization legally responsible for the use thereof, provided the actual use of the automobile is by the named insured, or with his permission * * *" "Automobile" includes a hired automobile used under contract or loaned to the named insured. But a power crane is excluded. Endorsement No. 1 provides:

"It is agreed that this policy does not apply under coverage A, except with respect to operations performed by independent contractors, to automobiles while away from premises owned, rented or controlled by the named insured or the ways immediately adjoining, or the loading or unloading thereof."

[2] It is clear from an examination of the policy and the circumstances of the accident that, contrary to defendant's contention, plaintiff's policy did not cover the accident, and hence plaintiff's payment of a portion of Borges' damages was not required by the direct terms of the policy. It expressly excluded coverage of Atkinson's automobiles (under the definition of the policy the truck is an automobile) while away from premises owned, rented or controlled by the named insured, including the loading and unloading thereof on such premises. The accident took place on premises neither owned, rented nor controlled by Atkinson. Nor did the exception "except with respect to operations performed by independent contractors" apply. The court found and the evidence supported the finding, that Borges' injuries were caused by Atkinson's negligence, and that Pollock and McLaughlin were not "independent contractors" in relation to the loading of the truck.

Defendant's Policy.

[3] Under it defendant agreed to insure Atkinson:

"To pay on behalf of the insured all sums which the insured shall become legally obligated to pay as damages because of bodily injury, sickness or disease, including death at any time resulting therefrom, sustained by any person."

By Endorsement No. 1, "Insured" was defined: "The unqualified word 'insured' includes the named insured and also includes (1) under coverages A and C, any partner, executive officer, director or stockholder thereof while acting within the scope of his duties as such, and (2) under coverages A and B, any person while using an owned automobile or a hired automobile and any person or organization legally responsible for the use thereof, provided the actual use of the automobile is with the permission of the named insured * * *"

The word "automobile" in the policy includes: "(2) Hired Automobile—an automobile used under contract in behalf of, or loaned to, the named insured provided such automobile is not owned by or registered in the name of (a) the named insured * * *" But a power crane was excluded from the definition, and "use" of an automobile included the loading or unloading thereof.

Thus, it clearly appears that defendant was liable to Atkinson under the policy, as the truck (defined as an automobile in the policy) was hired by Atkinson and was being used by Borges, its employee, in the scope of his employment, and that the accident occurred while the truck was being loaded. In the definition portion of the policy it is stated that "power crane" is not included in the words "motor vehicles" except when being towed. Based upon this fact plus the fact that the operation of the crane was involved in the accident and that Travelers (whose policy did cover the Pollock crane) by paying $17,500 towards the settlement, indirectly recognized that the crane was at fault in the accident, defendant contends that its policy did not apply.

[4] In the exclusions portions of the policy power cranes are not mentioned. The only reasonable interpretation of the policy which specifically included loading accidents, is that while the crane is not insured, accidents in loading automobiles by whatever means, including cranes, are included. As pointed out in Bituminous Cas. Corp. v. Travelers Ins. Co., D.C., 122 F.Supp. 197, a truck is not provided with a self-loading device and the only way it could be loaded would be by hand or some outside instrumentality.

Subrogation.

[5–8] Defendant being bound under its policy to indemnify and defend Atkinson and plaintiff not being bound under its policy so to do, was the payment made by plaintiff for Atkinson's protection one entitling it to subrogation to Atkinson's rights against defendant, or was plaintiff a mere volunteer not entitled to subrogation? Subrogation is an equitable doctrine, recognized also at law and not depending upon contractual relationships, which is administered so as to secure justice without regard to form. (23 Cal.Jur. 917.) It applies in all cases in which one party, not a volunteer, pays a debt for which another is primarily liable, which in equity and good conscience should have been paid by the latter party. The requisites of subrogation are: "(1) Payment must have been made by the subrogee to protect his own interest. (2) The subrogee must not have acted as a volunteer. (3) The debt paid must be one for which the subrogee was not primarily liable. (4) The entire debt must have been paid. (5) Subrogation must not work any injustice to the rights of others." Grant v. De Otte, 1954, 122 Cal.App.2d 724, 728, 265 P.2d 952, 955. Subrogation extends to those parties who pay in the performance of a legal duty by contract or rules of law, who pay in order to protect their own rights or interest, and whose payments are favored by public policy. Fresno Investment Co. v. Brandon, 1926, 79 Cal.App. 387, 389, 249 P. 548.

[9] There can be no question but that requisites (3), (4) and (5) are met in this case. While the meeting of requisites (1) and (2) is not so clearly shown as the others, nevertheless the evidence fully justifies a finding that they are met. Even though there was no legal obligation on plaintiff to make the payment it nevertheless had an interest to protect in making it. That interest arose from the fact that there was a dispute between it and defendant as to which policy, plaintiff's or defendant's, covered the accident. That this was such a dispute as justified plaintiff in settling for a less sum than it might have been liable for if its contention that its policy did not cover the accident were incorrect, is shown by defendant's insistence here that the policy did cover the accident. Thus defendant contends that, as plaintiff's policy was a comprehensive liability one covering the "Construction of Folsom Power Plant and appurtenant works on American River * * and elsewhere in connection with said project" and as the truck was being loaded with pilings for the project, the policy did cover this accident. However, as we have shown, the limitation of coverage under the automobile portions of the policy limited its comprehensiveness. Nevertheless, in view of defendant's insistence that plaintiff's policy covered the accident and that defendant's did not, plaintiff's action in joining in a settlement of Borges' claim for an amount far less than it might have had to pay, if liable, and an amount which was also far less than defendant would have to pay under the clear terms of its policy, was a reasonable action, which took plaintiff out of the officious intermeddler or volunteer class. Additionally, plaintiff was under a moral obligation to protect Atkinson since Atkinson in getting insurance from both companies had attempted to get, and thought it had, sufficient coverage to be fully protected. If plaintiff had followed defendant's course of conduct, Atkinson would have been thrown on its own resources although it had paid premiums for protection. Moreover, plaintiff in making the payment acted on the invitation and at the request of Atkinson. To leave Atkinson unprotected would have injured the very valuable business relationship between Atkinson and plaintiff and likewise would have injured the insurance business generally. Also plaintiff's action helped defendant's relationship with Atkinson, for by the lower settlement amount defendant would pay in compromise, defendant's rates to Atkinson would be lower than if defendant paid out the full amount for which it was liable. Borges was badly injured. He was demanding over $100,000. Atkinson was clearly liable for Borges' injuries. Atkinson had insured with Pacific for automobile risks, and for other than automobile risks (with exceptions) with plaintiff. Plaintiff's manager knew all this and that if the case were not settled, the verdict could have gone well over the $50,000 which Borges in settlement was willing to take. Further, there was a good chance that Pollock could have been exonerated by a jury (Pollock's crane operator was acting under the direction of Atkinson's employees) and thus Travelers' $17,500 contribution would be lost and that plaintiff, if liable and defendant not, would have to pay all of Borges' recovery except the $15,000 contributed by Travelers on behalf of McLaughlin.

The court found and the evidence supports the finding that plaintiff's manager in paying the $17,500 on behalf of Atkinson was not acting freely and voluntarily but was acting in order to protect the best interests of his company, Atkinson and defendant.

Defendant contends that Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Fireman's Fund Indemnity Co., 1940, 38 Cal.App.2d 1, 100 P.2d 364, is applicable here. We do not agree. There the policies of two coinsurers provided for pro rata coverage. Fireman's refused coverage on the ground of breach of its policy by failure to give notice of loss. Fidelity, before suit filed, settled with the injured party and sought contribution from Fireman's. The reviewing court upheld a denial of recovery upon the ground that in California as well as elsewhere, where both policies contain a pro rata clause, "the insurers are to be deemed coinsurers and not cosureties, and neither can recover from the other any amount that it may have paid in excess of its pro rata share of the entire loss sustained by the insured." 38 Cal.App.2d at page 5, 100 P.2d at page 366. The case points out, however, that "The authorities hold that, where two or more insurance companies fully insure the same risk and one company pays the total loss, that company may force contribution from the others." 38 Cal.App.2d at page 4, 100 P.2d at page 366. The court went to some length to distinguish the situation in pro rata policies from that of policies of full coinsurance. Thus, this case has no application to our situation, where only one of the policies was not of the pro rata type. Moreover, we are not dealing with contribution between coinsurers, but with subrogation to the rights of the insured in favor of one who because of interest in the matter has paid the obligation of a defaulting obligor. Thus, the above mentioned case and the other cases cited by defendant dealing with contribution between excess insurers, pro rata insurers and other coinsurers do not apply.

The courts have applied the right of subrogation to one who discharges a lien on property not his own but which he mistakenly believes to be his, and have held that he is subrogated to the rights of the lienholder. See Stein v. Simpson, 37 Cal. 2d 79, 84, 230 P.2d 816, and cases there cited. Thus, the courts have given a very liberal interpretation to the "interest" required to distinguish a person from being a volunteer. "It would seem that one acting in good faith in making his payment, and under a reasonable belief that it is necessary to his protection, is entitled to subrogation, even though it turns out that he had no interest to protect." (50 Am. Jur. p. 699, § 23.)

In United States Guarantee Co. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 1943, 244 Wis. 317, 12 N.W.2d 59, 150 A.L.R. 632, both the plaintiff and the defendant had insured the insured under pro rata policies. The defendant refused to defend an action brought against the insured by a person injured by a tractor operated by the insured. The plaintiff did defend and settled the case on the second day of the trial, paying an excess over its pro rata share as well as its share. The plaintiff then sought to recover that excess from the defendant, claiming subrogation as to the excess. The defendant set up two defenses, (1) that its policy provided that no action should lie against it unless the loss had been determined by final judgment after trial of the issues in an action against the assured or by its agreement, and (2) that the payment of the excess was voluntary. The court held that in making the payment which the defendant should have made, the plaintiff was not an interloper or volunteer, but was subrogated to the rights of the assured, saying that subrogation "is a device adopted or invented by equity to compel the ultimate discharge of a debt or obligation by one who in good conscience ought to pay it," (12 N.W.2d at page 61), and that as to the first defense the defendant's failure to defend the assured as its policy required it to do, constituted a waiver of any right to object to the settlement. See also Maryland Cas. Co. v. Employers Mut. Liability Ins. Co., D.C., 112 F.Supp. 272.

[10] Had Atkinson itself made the settlement with Borges, there can be no question but that it would have been entitled to recover the amount paid from defendant. Equity would be performing a very poor function if by refusing under the circumstances of this case to consider plaintiff as the subrogee of Atkinson, it permitted defendant to escape its clear liability to Atkinson. Where, as here, a reasonable doubt exists as to his own liability to a third party, a person making a payment for that party which should have been made by a second party, cannot as to such payment be considered a volunteer or interloper.

As said in Commercial Standard Ins. Co. v. American Emp. Ins. Co., 6 Cir., 209 F.2d 60, at page 64, where it was contended that subrogation would not lie as to the payment by one coinsurer of more than its pro rata share of a judgment against the assured on the ground that the payment of the excess was voluntary as to the other coinsurer who had refused to participate in payment of a judgment against the assured: "If a person has any palpable interest which will be protected by the extinguishment of the debt, he may pay the debt and be entitled to hold and enforce it just as the creditor could. Katschor v. Ley, 153 Kan. 569, 113 P.2d 127. Payment of the debt of another under a moral obligation will support equitable subrogation; and the remedy will be applied in all cases where demanded by the dictates of equity, good conscience, and public policy. Federal Land Bank of Louisville v. Marvin, 228 Ky. 242, 245, 14 S.W.2d 762, 70 A.L.R. 1392."

In Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. v. Car. & General Ins. Corp., D.C.1957, 152 F.Supp. 477, 482, the court said in response to a voluntary payment defense, after stating that the defendant had refused coverage as to the action brought against the assured: "Plaintiff thus was compelled to act on the assumption, as defendant well knew, that the burden was the plaintiff's alone. In so acting the plaintiff decided, wisely, to join with Reading Company in a reasonable settlement before any suit, and to have judicially determined thereafter the truth or falsity of defendant's representation of noncoverage. Faced with this suit for such determination defendant staunchly adhered to falsity until trial and then, forced into reluctant admission of the truth, sought to turn to its own advantage its former falsity by asserting that the very payment which its own misrepresentations obliged constituted the plaintiff a volunteer. Whether the legal principles in the Murphy case [Murphy & Co. v. Manufacturers' Casualty Co., 89 Pa.Super. 281], supra, or equitable principles of estoppel are applied, the defendant cannot now be heard to complain of the consequence of its own conduct.

"Moreover, a 'volunteer', under the principle defendant seeks to apply, is a stranger or intermeddler who has no interest to protect and is under no legal or moral obligation to pay under the circumstances. [Citations.] Under the facts we conclude that neither was the plaintiff a volunteer nor may the defendant, by reason of its own conduct, so assert. Judgment as prayed for will be entered for the plaintiff and against the defendant on submission by counsel of an appropriate order."

"Recently, the courts have happily retreated from application of the harsh 'volunteer' rule, and have allowed recovery from the other pro rata insurer following a payment in excess of the ratable share. While not confined to such a situation, there are more compelling reasons for allowing recovery when the other insurer has not entered the case at all or has refused to defend the insured against suit by the injured party. Nevertheless, this view represents the current trend and better rule in the 'volunteer' situations." 38 Minn.Law Rev. 838, 850. See also Detroit Automobile Inter-Insurance Exchange v. Detroit Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 337 Mich. 50, 59 N.W.2d 80; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Elam, 198 Tenn. 194, 278 S.W.2d 693.

Travelers paid $15,000 towards the settlement under the omnibus clause of its policy with McLaughlin which covered automobiles only. This payment was not made for McLaughlin, but for Atkinson and the other persons using the McLaughlin truck in the loading operation. Borges being employed by McLaughlin could not sue the latter, but was entitled to damages from the others responsible for his injuries.

[11] Travelers also paid $17,500 under its comprehensive policy with Pollock. Defendant contends in effect that under this policy Travelers should have paid the entire $50,000. The evidence failed to show any negligence on the part of Pollock or its employees. Moreover, the policy merely covered Pollock. It did not cover McLaughlin, the McLaughlin employee or Atkinson. The omnibus clauses of the Travelers' policy on the McLaughlin truck and defendant's policy on Atkinson for use of the hired truck covered the employees of Atkinson and Pollock. Under Continental Casualty Co. v. Phoenix Construction Co., 46 Cal.2d 423, 296 P.2d 801, 57 A.L.R.2d 914, the liability of the negligent employees was primary and hence the policies covering the employees must be exhausted before Travelers' policy on Pollock or plaintiff's policy on Atkinson (if it had covered Atkinson) could be resorted to. This fact answers, too, the contention of defendant that as plaintiff's policy was a pro rata one and defendant's an excess one, defendant should be, at most, only liable for the proportion of $50,000 (the amount of defendant's automobile coverage of Atkinson) to $100,000 of plaintiff's alleged coverage of Atkinson.

[12] Defendant contends that plaintiff before making the payment should have brought an action in declaratory relief joining all of the insurance companies involved. Such remedy, however, is not exclusive. Section 1062, Code of Civil Procedure, expressly provides that such remedy "shall not be construed as restricting any remedy, provisional or otherwise, provided by law * * *" Moreover, defendant could litigate in this proceeding any question that could be raised in a declaratory relief proceeding and could have brought into this case the other insurance companies.

[13] Some ten months elapsed from the time of the accident until plaintiff notified defendant of it. Defendant's policy contains a provision requiring written notices by the assured as soon as practicable after knowledge of the injury. Defendant has failed to show any prejudice from failure to receive notice prior to the ten months period, nor from the fact that the notice was given by plaintiff instead of by the assured. There is nothing in the evidence to show that defendant would have defended Atkinson or indemnified it even though notice had been given it by Atkinson immediately after the accident.

The purported appeal from the order denying new trial is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

Ira ROBERSON, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 3496.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 29, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Defendant was convicted of sale of narcotics. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Walter Carpenti, J., entered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that where the case depended on a determination of whether one prosecution witness or the defendant was to be believed by the jury, one error which deprived defendant of evidence which circumstantially supported defendant's testimony and another error which tended erroneously to impeach him were prejudicial.

Reversed.

Kaufman, P. J., dissented.

1. Criminal Law ⇐419(3)

In prosecution for sale of narcotics, where the only evidence of sale by defendant was testimony that narcotics agent bought heroin from defendant, and defendant denied the sale, and to support circumstantially his denial the defendant testified that he knew that agent was police officer, defendant should have been permitted to corroborate his state of mind by testimony of witness that witness had told defendant that witness had heard that agent was police officer.

2. Criminal Law ⇐419(3)

Whenever an utterance is offered to evidence the state of mind which ensued in another person in consequence of the utterance, it is obvious that no assertive or testimonial use is sought to be made of it, and the utterance is therefore admissible, so far as the hearsay rule is concerned.

3. Witnesses ⇐274(1)

In prosecution for sale of narcotics, where defendant's character witness, who was defendant's former employer, testified only to defendant's reputation for truth and veracity, character witness could be cross-examined only about specific misconduct inconsistent with the trait as to which he testified on direct examination, and therefore, it was error to permit cross-examination of character witness as to defendant's narcotics and petty theft convictions.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1170(1), 1170½(1)

When the case depends on a determination of whether one prosecution witness or the defendant is to be believed by the jury, one error which deprives the defendant of evidence which circumstantially supports the defendant's testimony and another error which tends erroneously to impeach him are prejudicial.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1202(1)

A prior conviction is not a part of the offense charged, but serves only to aid ascertainment of the proper term of punishment.

6. Indictment and Information ⇐159(1)

Under statute permitting amendment before plea where amendment does not change the offense charged, indictment charging sale of narcotics could be amended, before plea, so as to allege prior conviction for misdemeanor offense of unlawful use of narcotics, since the prior conviction was not a part of the offense charged but served only to aid ascertainment of the proper term of punishment.

West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11713, 11721; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1009.

7. Criminal Law ⇐1032(1)

Where defendant accused of sale of narcotics did not object to amendment of indictment, prior to the plea, so as to charge prior conviction for misdemeanor offense of unlawful use of narcotics, but admitted the prior conviction and defendant did not show that he had been prejudiced by the amendment, defendant could not for the first time on appeal assert that such addition to indictment could be made only by resubmission to grand jury. DOOLING, Justice.

Tried upon an indictment charging sale of narcotics, defendant was found guilty by a jury and sentenced to prison. He appeals.

The prosecution charges that appellant sold heroin to James Shepherd, a Hayward policeman employed for five weeks in the spring of 1957 as an undercover agent for the State Bureau of Narcotics. The only evidence of the sale of narcotics by appellant is found in Shepherd's testimony that he bought heroin from appellant. Appellant flatly denied this sale and on that issue the jury had to resolve the question of credibility between those two witnesses and those two witnesses alone.

[1, 2] To support circumstantially his denial of sale to Shepherd appellant testified that he knew that Shepherd was a police officer. To corroborate this state of mind he produced Pitman and sought to prove that Pitman had told appellant that Pitman had heard that Shepherd was a police officer. The refusal of the trial court to allow this testimony was error. The applicable rule is stated in VI Wigmore on Evidence, 3d ed., sec. 1789, p. 235:

"Whenever an utterance is offered to evidence the state of mind which ensued in another person in consequence of the utterance, it is obvious that no assertive or testimonial use is sought to be made of it, and the utterance is therefore admissible, so far as the Hearsay rule is concerned." (Emphasis the author's.)

This rule is well settled in California. Swan v. Thompson, 124 Cal. 193, 197, 56 P. 878; Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 290–294, 30 P. 529; Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 601–602, 22 P. 266, 5 L.R.A. 498; People v. King, 140 Cal.App.2d 1, 4–5, 294 P.2d 972; Aitken v. White, 93 Cal.App.2d 134, 145, 208 P.2d 788; cf. Werner v. State Bar, 24 Cal.2d 611, 621, 150 P.2d 892.

[3] Appellant further argues that the cross-examination of his character witness was improper. The character witness, appellant's former employer, testified only to appellant's reputation for truth and veracity. On cross-examination, the witness was examined over objection about appellant's narcotic and petty theft convictions. The rule is that a character witness can be asked only about specific misconduct inconsistent with the trait as to which he testified on direct. People v. Tucker, 164 Cal. App.2d 624, 331 P.2d 160; People v. Logan, 41 Cal.2d 279, 260 P.2d 20. The crimes inquired about are not inconsistent with truth and veracity. It was error to permit cross-examination of appellant's character witness in this fashion. People v. Tucker, supra, 164 Cal.App.2d 624, 331 P.2d 160.

[4] When the case depends on a determination of whether one prosecution witness or the defendant is to be believed by the jury, one error which deprives the defendant of evidence which circumstantially supports the defendant's testimony and another error which tends erroneously to impeach him cannot be said not to be prejudicial.

[5–7] At the time of appellant's conviction, Health and Safety Code, section 11713 provided that punishment for sale of narcotics carried a longer minimum term of imprisonment if a prior conviction "of any offense described in this division" were charged and found true or admitted. After filing of the indictment, but before plea, it was amended by the district attorney to allege appellant's prior conviction of violation of Health and Safety Code, section 11721, which although a misdemeanor, is an offense described in the same division of that code which contains section 11713. Appellant contends that this addition to the indictment could be made only by resubmission to the Grand Jury. He argues that Penal Code, section 969a permits amendment only to charge additional prior felonies. We need not determine the validity of this contention. A prior conviction is not a part of the offense charged, but serves only to aid ascertainment of the proper term of punishment. People v. Ashcraft, 138 Cal.App.2d 820, 825, 292 P.2d 676. Thus Penal Code, section 1009, permitting amendment before plea where the amendment does not change the offense charged, is applicable. Further, appellant did not object to the amendment, but admitted the prior conviction. He has shown no prejudice, and he cannot raise his question for the first time on appeal. People v. Huerta, 148 Cal. App.2d 272, 275, 306 P.2d 505.

KAUFMAN, P. J., dissenting.

Before this court can reverse a judgment for the improper admission or rejection of evidence, an examination of the entire cause must show that the errors complained of resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Cal.Const. art. VI, § 4½; Code Civ. Proc. § 475. In this case, the evidence was demonstrative of the guilt of the appellant.

I cannot say that the errors complained of deprived appellant of a fair trial.

Action to establish plaintiff's equitable interest in certain real and personal property acquired during time that she and defendant were living together as husband and wife. The Superior Court of San Bernardino County, A. D. Mitchell, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shepard, J., held that the law relating to licensing of real estate brokers has as its purpose the protection of the buying and selling public, and was not intended to invalidate any over-all agreement such as that between husband and wife to engage in real estate business and share equally in earnings thereof.

Affirmed.

1. Husband and Wife ⇐232(3)

In action to establish plaintiff's equitable interest in certain real and personal property acquired during time that she and defendant were living together as husband and wife, evidence sustained finding that the parties had agreed to, and during the years they had lived together had, operated under an agreement that all expenses, income and acquisitions of both of them would be shared equally, including real estate business.

2. Husband and Wife ⇐229(1)

In action to establish plaintiff's equitable interest in certain real and personal property acquired during time that she and defendant were living together as husband and wife, pleading recital that parties had agreed to "share equally in their joint accumulations" was sufficient to support finding that parties had agreed to share in real estate business "as well as moneys derived from any sources other than said business," where only property specifically identified in evidence as having previously been owned by one of parties was automobile of plaintiff and it appeared that if there was other property, it had been so merged in common property that it could no longer be traced.

3. Brokers ⇐3

The law relating to licensing of real estate brokers has as its purpose the protection of the buying and selling public, and was not intended to invalidate any over-all agreement such as that between husband and wife to engage in real estate business and share equally in earnings thereof.

4. Brokers ⇐3

The Real Estate Broker's License Act did not prohibit broker and salesman from working together and dividing commission; but even if it did, it would not be applicable to agreement by husband and wife to engage in real estate business and share equally in earnings thereof.

Husband and Wife ⇐232(2)

In action to establish plaintiff's equitable interest in certain real and personal property acquired during time that she and defendant were living together as husband and wife, evidence, apparently intended to indicate affection borne by defendant toward plaintiff during period of time involved, might have been unnecessary, but it had at least some corroborative value in showing intent of defendant in his dealings with plaintiff, and it was neither harmful nor improper.

SHEPARD, Justice.

This is an action in which plaintiff seeks to establish her equitable interest in certain real and personal property, acquired during the time that she and defendant Schuenemann (who will hereinafter be referred to as defendant) were living together as husband and wife and had agreed to pool their interest in income and property.

After a 9-day trial and voluminous evidence and arguments of counsel, the court found in general substance that in October, 1948, plaintiff and defendant agreed to pool and share equally their income, expenses and property accumulations; that said parties did so pool their earnings and share equally any expense and acquisition of property from said October, 1948, continuously until March 1, 1955; that they accumulated certain real and personal property during said period of time as is specifically described in the findings and judgment; that certain other defendants, who have not appealed, are entitled to specified reimbursements for beneficial expenditures on one of the parcels of property; that plaintiff is an equal owner with defendant of the property described; for a money judgment to adjust the division of certain monies; and for a certain monthly stipend while plaintiff is held out of possession of certain property. Judgment was entered for plaintiff accordingly, and defendant appeals.

[1] Defendant's first complaint is that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that plaintiff had an oral agreement to engage in the real estate business and share equally in the earnings thereof. While defense counsel recognized the rule that on appeal an appellate court has "no power to judge of the effect or value of the evidence, to weigh the evidence, to consider the credibility of witnesses, or to resolve conflicts in the evidence or in the reasonable inferences that may be drawn therefrom" (Overton v. Vita-Food Corp., 94 Cal.App.2d 367, 370, 210 P.2d 757, he nevertheless contends that the whole record does not present substantial evidence to support the finding.

Neither party has attempted to give this court any over-all résumé of the evidence, but we have nevertheless reviewed the transcript to discover whether or not defendant's assertion has any foundation. In the interest of brevity we refrain from attempting any great detail, but it does appear clearly from defendant's own testimony that plaintiff and defendant, late in 1947, assumed what is ordinarily called the relationship of common law husband and wife and lived together in that relationship until about February, 1955; that they took some of the property in their names as husband and wife, bought and sold, executed deeds of trust and notes, and borrowed money representing themselves to public institutions and in many business transactions as husband and wife. Plaintiff made direct contributions as to some of the property. For most of this period she held a real estate salesman's license, which defendant assisted her to obtain, and worked with defendant in the real estate business as a licensed saleswoman. All of this testimony and other testimony of the defendant amply corroborates the testimony of the plaintiff that from the time they first started living together in the Clifton Hotel in October, 1947, they shared expenses and he used her car; that about the time they first started living together they had a conversation in which each agreed to share equally any earnings and expenses; that when they first joined hands she was making $60 to $75 per week as a beauty operator; that through the years she cooked and scrubbed and maintained the home, kept the garden, did secretarial work at the office, shared her own car for all the needs of the business, went on listing tours, acted as hostess to patrons who came to purchase property, advised and consulted with defendant on the house construction, improvement and furnishings, and did actual sales work during the five or six years she held a license.

Other witnesses testified in corroboration as to various of these matters. For example, one witness testified that when a client protested about defendant taking over the closure of a real estate transaction which plaintiff worked up, defendant in reply to said protest stated that the real estate commissions earned by plaintiff and defendant were "all in the family."

In our opinion, the sum total of the evidence amply warrants the conclusion that the parties had agreed to and, during the years they lived together, did operate under an agreement that all expenses, income and acquisitions of both of them would be shared equally, including the real estate business.

Such agreements have received recognition from California courts throughout the State's history. Cline v. Festersen, 128 Cal.App. 380, 275 P.2d 149; Garcia v. Venegas, 106 Cal.App.2d 364, 235 P.2d 89. What we have hereinbefore said concludes further discussion of defendant's second and third points, in which he also challenges the general sufficiency of the evidence to support the court's conclusion as to what was done as well as what was agreed upon.

[2] By defendant's fourth objection he would appear to be questioning the breadth or inclusiveness of the words in plaintiff's pleading "share equally in their joint accumulations", contending that such words are insufficient as a basic support for the court's finding that the parties agreed to share in the real estate business "as well as moneys derived from any sources other than said business." Counsel has not called to our attention by his brief, and we have been unable to discover any evidence of identifiable property belonging to or held by defendant prior to the commencement of the parties' relationship, or of property received by gift, devise or inheritance. The only property specifically identified in the evidence as having previously been owned by one of the parties was the automobile of plaintiff. If there was other property, it appears to have been so merged in the common property that it can no longer be traced. There was some testimony that defendant was at one time in the "surplus" business, but nothing to show whether he was a clerk or actually owned something, or if so how much. The record, as we see it, gives no comfort on this score to defendant.

[3, 4] Defendant's next contention is that such an agreement would be void as in violation of the California statutes and regulations relating to licensing of real estate brokers and salesmen, and he cites in support of that contention the cases of California Employment Stabilization Comm. v. Morris, 28 Cal.2d 812, 172 P.2d 497, which relates to unemployment insurance liability for his employee salesman who was paid solely by commission; Riley v. Chambers, 181 Cal. 589, 185 P. 855, 8 A.L.R. 418, which relates to the validity of the Real Estate Broker's License Act of 1919, St.1919, p. 1252; Gray v. Horne, 48 Cal.App.2d 372, 119 P.2d 779, which relates only to whether or not a real estate broker's license is required for refinancing and refunding services, marshalling, reduction and compromise of debts; Koeberle v. Hotchkiss, 8 Cal.App.2d 634, 48 P.2d 104, in which payment to a real estate broker for prior services was being accomplished through an agreement to pay a percentage of oil royalties, and Wilson v. Stearns, 123 Cal.App.2d 472, 267 P.2d 59, relating to the effect of failure to fix a definite termination date on the realty broker's right to collect a commission.

As was said in Wilson v. Stearns, supra, 123 Cal.App.2d 480(5), 267 P.2d 65:

> "In determining whether a contract is invalid the courts should strive to deal with the transaction so as to give effect to the fundamental purpose of the legislature and to a wise public policy."

In our opinion, the law relating to licensing of real estate brokers has as its purpose the protection of the buying and selling public, and was not intended to invalidate any over-all agreement between people acting in the relationship here at bar. Furthermore, during the vast majority of the time involved plaintiff held a license as a salesman. We can find nothing in the act which prohibits a broker and salesman working together and dividing the commission, but even if there was we still think it would not apply to the type of situation we have at bar.

[5] Defendant complains of the admission of certain evidence apparently intended to indicate the affection borne by defendant toward plaintiff during the period of time involved. Such evidence might well have been deemed unnecessary, but it had at least some corroborative value in showing the intent of the defendant in his dealings with the plaintiff.

We cannot say that it was either harmful or improper. It is certainly a very natural and honorable thing for a man to divide with a woman for whom he held a strong affection the accumulations arising under a situation of this kind, especially where it appears that the woman involved was, during the whole period, working with constant industry on behalf of both of them. In our opinion, the case was fairly tried and fairly decided.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Larry PALLESCHI, Jr., Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 9383.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 3, 1959.

Proceeding brought by father for change of custody of child. The Superior Court, Stanislaus County, David F. Bush, J., entered order changing custody of child to father, and mother appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that where mother in prior custody proceeding had sworn falsely that relations with man who frequented her apartment were wholly innocent and concealed that she was living in meretricious relations with man and legal custody of child was awarded to probation officer with physical custody in mother's parents with whom mother alleged she lived, determination in instant proceeding, wherein it appeared that wife had been about four months pregnant when she testified at prior hearing, that best interests of child lay in giving its custody to father was not an abuse of discretion.

Affirmed.

1. Parent and Child ⇐2(5)

Although no appeal was taken from order awarding legal custody of child to probation officer, with physical custody in mother's parents, upon filing by husband of application for change of custody court could exercise its continuing jurisdiction over subject-matter of child's custody and issuance of order to show cause was not an abuse of discretion.

2. Infants ⇐19.3(5)

A custody order has no such finality as to be beyond change.

3. Parent and Child ⇐2(7)

Even if affidavit of father supporting application for order to show cause for purpose of changing physical custody of child from mother's parents to father failed to meet change of circumstances test, jurisdiction of court to proceed was not affected and validity of ensuing order for change of custody would be tested by sufficiency of evidence to support a change order.

4. Infants ⇐19.3(5)

Sufficiency of affidavit for order to show cause issued in custody proceeding to state a cause for modification of custody order does not affect jurisdiction of court to proceed, and ensuing order for change of custody must be tested by sufficiency of evidence to support a change order.

5. Infants ⇐19.3(5)

Change of circumstances rule with respect to orders issued in custody cases is not so hard and fast that it does not admit of exceptions.

6. Parent and Child ⇐2(3.3)

Where mother in custody proceeding swore falsely that relations with man who frequented her apartment were wholly innocent and concealed that she was living in meretricious relations with man and legal custody of child was awarded to probation officer with physical custody in mother's parents, with whom mother allegedly lived, determination in subsequent proceeding, wherein it was learned that wife was pregnant and that she had been about four months pregnant when she testified at prior hearing, that best interests of child lay in giving its custody to father, was not an abuse of discretion.

7. Divorce ⇐312.6(8)

Court which tries divorce action, which has parties before it frequently during custody proceedings, and which has advantage of observing both parents as they testified before it, is in best position to judge what ought to be done concerning child's custody, and, under such circumstances, reviewing court is seldom justified in setting aside decree of trial court.

Colley & Sakuma, Sacramento, for plaintiff-appellant.

Robert Carter, Modesto, for defendant-respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by the mother of a minor son born to her May 3, 1954, from an order of court changing the custody of the child from appellant to the child's father. The parents had been divorced and by the divorce decree the custody had been awarded to appellant.

On December 6, 1956, respondent initiated a proceeding for a change of custody. An order to show cause was issued. It appears that for some time after the original custody order, appellant, with her child, had resided at the home of her parents in Modesto, in which city the father also resided. She then moved to Los Angeles, taking the child with her. After service on her of the order to show cause she returned to Modesto and resumed residence with her parents. At the hearing on the order appellant testified that in Los Angeles she had been living in a basement apartment. The status of one John Edwards respecting his relations with her was the subject of inquiry at the hearing. She testified that he was frequently in her apartment, occasionally stayed overnight there, but she denied that she and John Edwards were engaging in meretricious relations. She testified she had no intention of marrying John Edwards, and intended to continue to reside with her parents. After having partially heard the matter, the court referred the case to the probation officer of the county for investigation. The court took further testimony in May of 1957. It appeared that respondent had recently remarried. The court, apparently dissatisfied with the domestic situation of both the father and mother, made an order giving legal custody of the child to the probation officer, with physical custody in the appellant's parents. No appeal was taken from that order. Shortly thereafter respondent discovered that appellant was pregnant and, shortly after the order had been made, had married John Edwards. He obtained a new order to show cause. A hearing on this order was held September 18, 1957. Appellant testified that she had married John Edwards July 3, 1957 and was presently living with him in Los Angeles, where he was employed; that she intended to continue to reside there with him; that she was expecting a child; that it was John Edwards' child; that the child was expected in November. (This would fix the date of conception in the preceding February, so that she had been about 4 months pregnant when she had testified at the last hearing on the preceding show cause order, denying in that testimony that she had ever engaged in meretricious relations with John Edwards.) She testified further that when she gave her testimony at the prior hearing she had not known she was pregnant. She made no attempt, however, to justify her testimony that she had not been engaging in meretricious relations with John Edwards.

The court, in this proceeding, made the following findings: From the probation officer's report received in evidence and the other evidence taken, the court found that respondent had a home which was adequate for the care of his son; that he was regularly and gainfully employed in Modesto and able to give his son proper support, care and guidance; that his new marriage appeared to be stable and the child would find in respondent's home a proper environment; that, on the other hand, appellant did not have a fit and proper home for the rearing of the child; that the best interests of the child lay in committing it to the care, custody and control of the father, subject to reasonable visitation rights to be accorded appellant; that a change of circumstances had taken place since the prior custodial orders in that appellant had married Edwards, moved to Los Angeles, and intended to reside there; that appellant had deliberately misled the court in prior proceedings with respect to her plans for the care of the child and had deliberately and intentionally misled the court with respect to her conduct and relationship with Edwards, particularly as to her moral conduct as affecting her fitness to have the custody of her son; that she had represented to the court that she had ceased all relationship with Edwards when in fact she was at the time having meretricious relations with him; that on one occasion when she was before the court, she was pregnant by Edwards and must have known of that fact, although still representing that she had never had meretricious relations with Edwards; that the best interests respecting the moral, temporal and economic welfare and security of the child would be served by awarding the custody of the child to respondent.

[1–4] Asserting that the order of the court made June 28, 1957, awarding legal custody of the child to the probation officer was a valid order which had become final in that no appeal therefrom had been taken and that, the court having decreed in that order that neither parent was at that time a fit and proper person to have the custody of the child, appellant contends the court abused its discretion in issuing its order to show cause August 19, 1958. Appellant argues that the affidavit of respondent supporting the order to show cause failed to meet the change of circumstances test (16 Cal.Jur.2d sec. 268, p. 558; Foster v. Foster, 8 Cal.2d 719, 68 P.2d 719), in that it contained only allegations that at the time of making the June 28th order appellant had represented to the court that she was then residing in the home of her mother with said child and that she would continue to reside there and give the child the loving care and affection of a mother; that appellant no longer lived with her mother, had remarried and intended to move to Los Angeles. We find no abuse of discretion. A custody order has no such finality as to be beyond change and upon the filing of the affidavit and the application for an order to show cause, the court could exercise its continuing jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the child's custody. The sufficiency of the affidavit to state a cause for modification does not affect that jurisdiction to proceed and the ensuing order for change must be tested by the sufficiency of the evidence to support a change order.

[5] The change of circumstances rule is not so hard and fast that it does not admit of exceptions. In Foster v. Foster, supra, 8 Cal.2d at page 728, 68 P.2d at page 723, the Supreme Court said:

> "We do not wish to be understood as holding that 'the change of circumstance' rule is an absolutely iron-clad rule, and that there can be no possible exception to it. * * * It is also possible to conceive of some theoretical case in which some fact, secret and hidden at the time of the entry of the former judgment, would in the interest of the welfare of the child justify a court in modifying the former order of custody despite the fact that there had been no actual change of circumstances since the entry of the former order."

[6, 7] It is apparent from the record and from the findings of the trial court that we have such a case as was foretold in Foster v. Foster. The trial court was fully warranted in concluding: (1) That prior to its recently-made order giving custody to the probation officer, appellant had left her home in Modesto and taken the child to Los Angeles where she began living in an apartment to which John Edwards frequently repaired; that she was unlawfully cohabiting with him; that when met with inquiry as to her relations with him, she had sworn falsely to the court that those relations were wholly innocent; that by such false swearing she had concealed from the court her secret that she was in fact living in her apartment in meretricious relations with John Edwards; that in testifying as to the innocence of her relations with John Edwards she did so knowing that she was then pregnant by him; that when in this proceeding she was driven by the course of nature from her false position she attempted to better her position by again falsely swearing that when she testified falsely before she had not known that she was pregnant. The trial court, without any thought of punishing her for her derelictions, could well conclude, as it did, that the best interests of the child lay, for the present at least, in giving its custody to respondent, appellant having demonstrated grave character faults justifying the court's preferring the child's father to her in the matter of custody. The court that tried the divorce action, that had the parties before it frequently during the custody proceedings, and that had the advantage of observing both parents as they testified before it, was in the best position to judge what ought to be done concerning the child's custody. It is seldom that under such circumstances a reviewing court is justified in setting aside the decrees of the trial court. Regardless of the change of circumstances rule the situation justified the order granting custody to respondent.

We think it unnecessary to follow appellant in her discussion of specific findings and the asserted lack of the evidence to support such findings, for, from a reading of the whole record, we are satisfied the order made is fully supported by the record.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

The District Court of Appeal, Coughlin, J. pro tem., held that trial court properly determined that plaintiffs had good record title under deed and good title by adverse possession under entry and occupancy by the plaintiffs.

Judgment and orders affirmed.

1. Deeds ⇐93

Intention of parties to a grant is to be gathered, if possible, from language itself and is determined by a proper construction of language used rather than by resorting to extrinsic evidence.

2. Deeds ⇐93

Intention of parties to a grant must be gained from consideration of entire document, and every part thereof must be given effect if it is reasonably practicable to do so. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1641.

3. Deeds ⇐93, 99

When deed refers to other instruments, the other instruments become a part of the deed, and all must be considered as a whole to determine intention of parties.

4. Waters and Water Courses ⇐165

Where testator shortly before his death conveyed to water company an easement to use 47.61 acres of land for reservoir purposes, and thereafter testator died leaving will devising 3,000 acres to two sons, and sons, after receiving title as cotenants through decree of distribution, executed deeds partitioning the land, and deeds executed by them referred to map showing reservoir site, and deed of first son to second son described 212-acre block, which encompassed the reservoir site, and deed recited "excepting" and "reserving" from operation of the deed the 47.61-acre tract conveyed for reservoir purposes, there was an intention to except from operation of the deed only the easement conveyed to the water company, and not the fee to the 47.61-acre tract subject to the easement.

5. Deeds ⇐101

Where language of deed is uncertain, that is, fairly susceptible of either one of two constructions contended for without doing violence to its usual and ordinary import, circumstances surrounding its execution and subsequent conduct of parties with respect thereto may be considered to determine their intention in consonance with language used, and to determine what they meant by what they said. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1647.

6. Evidence ⇐461(5)

If it be assumed that deed did not clearly express intention to except from its operation only easement given to water company, neither did the deed clearly express an intention to except entire fee of tract subject to the easement, and therefore action of trial court, in quiet title action, in permitting introduction of extrinsic evidence, and in finding that parties actually intended to except only the easement, which was adequately supported by the record, was proper, and trial court's conclusion was sound.

7. Appeal and Error ⇐1050(1)

Where deed clearly excepted only an easement, as contended by plaintiffs in quiet title action, and did not except the fee of the tract covered by the easement, as contended by defendants, admission of extrinsic evidence to show that parties to deed actually intended to except only the easement was not prejudicial as to defendants.

8. Adverse Possession ⇐114(1)

In action to quiet title, evidence sustained finding that whatever interest defendants may have had in the realty was terminated by adverse possession of the plaintiffs. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 325.

9. Adverse Possession ⇐13

To establish title by adverse possession, there must be actual, open, notorious occupancy of the subject property, which is hostile and adverse to the owner's title, under such circumstances as to give reasonable notice thereof, either actual or constructive, to the true owner, by an occupant claiming the property exclusively as his own, under claim of right or color of title, which is continuous and uninterrupted for five years, and is accompanied by occupant's payment of all taxes levied or assessed against the property during that period of time. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 325.

10. Adverse Possession ⇐58

Requirement of "hostility" on part of adverse possessor means, not that parties must have a dispute as to title during period of possession, but that adverse possessor's possession must be adverse to the record owner, unaccompanied by any recognition, express or inferable from the circumstances, of right in record owner.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Hostility".

11. Tenancy In Common ⇐15(7)

Exclusive occupancy of cotenant is deemed permissive and does not become adverse until tenant out of possession has had notice, either actual or constructive, that possession of cotenant is hostile to him, and when entry into occupancy is avowedly as tenant in common with others, possession thus gained is possession of the others and continues as such until tenancy in common is disclaimed.

12. Tenancy In Common ⇐15(2)

In order to constitute evidence of disclaimer by cotenant, who has gone into possession, that his possession is in common with others, conduct of tenant in possession must be such as amounts to ouster of the other cotenants and consists of acts of the most open and notorious character, clearly giving notice to the world, and to all having occasion to observe the condition and occupancy of the property, that the intention is to exclude and does exclude the cotenants.

13. Tenancy In Common ⇐15(5, 10)

Entry by grantee under deed from cotenant in exclusive possession, which purports to convey the whole of the property, without notice of cotenancy, is presumed to be assertion of an exclusive right in severalty, and is equivalent to an express declaration by grantee that he claims the whole interest, and constitutes an ouster of cotenants out of possession, and is such a disseisin as sets statute of prescription in motion in his favor and against them.

14. Adverse Possession ⇐71(1)

Where entry and claim of plaintiffs were made under deeds, which implied full ownership, entry and claim rested on color of title for purpose of adverse possession.

15. Adverse Possession ⇐71(2)

Estate purporting to be conveyed, not estate actually conveyed, characterizes entry of adverse possessor.

16. Adverse Possession ⇐25, 71(1)

Acceptance by plaintiffs, who claimed title by adverse possession, of deeds, which conveyed to them oil and gas rights, and subsequent exercise by plaintiffs of acts of ownership were the equivalent of an entry into possession of those rights under color of title to the whole interest in severalty, and possession of the lessee was the possession of the plaintiffs.

17. Tenancy in Common ⇐15(7)

Recordation of deeds of plaintiffs constituted constructive notice that plaintiffs' claims were hostile and adverse to any interest of alleged cotenant or defendants, who claimed under alleged cotenant.

18. Tenancy in Common ⇐15(7)

Where tenant in common enters into possession and claims under invalid deed purporting to convey the property to him, recordation of the deed is notice to his cotenants of such existence and therefore of the adverse character of his claim, so as to start statute of limitations running, at least where he knew nothing of the existence of the other cotenants.

19. Adverse Possession ⇐31, 33

A person claiming title by adverse possession is not required to establish that the record owner knew of his own rights in the land in question, and all that claimant must show is that his occupation was such as to constitute reasonable notice to the true owner that the claimant claimed the land as his own, and fact that record owner was unaware of his own rights in the land is immaterial.

20. Adverse Possession ⇐92

Where, pursuant to lease, lessee paid all taxes, and lessors reimbursed lessee for their agreed share, payment made by lessee was made on behalf of the lessors and constituted payment by the lessors within meaning of statute prescribing payment by occupant of all taxes levied and assessed on the subject property during possessory period, as an element of adverse possession. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 325.

21. Adverse Possession ⇐94

Statute prescribing payment by occupant of all taxes levied and assessed on subject property during possessory period, as an element of adverse possession, does not require that such taxes be paid with money obtained from sources other than the property claimed. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 325.

22. Appeal and Error ⇐903

There was a presumption that clerk's minutes correctly related order to which objection was made.

23. Appeal and Error ⇐843(2), 1074(3)

Where any inaccuracies in reporter's transcript did not relate to matters involving title dispute between plaintiffs and defendants in quiet title action, but related to proceedings under cross complaint and concerned solely issues therein raised respecting relationship between cross complainants and cross defendant, based on premise that cross complainants were owners of a cotenancy interest in realty, and judgment that plaintiffs were sole owners of realty rendered those issues moot, no prejudice to cross complainants resulted from order settling reporter's transcript as corrected, and it was unnecessary on appeal to determine whether trial court abused its discretion under circumstances.

24. Appeal and Error ⇐980
New Trial ⇐93

Exercise of power by court under statute providing that court shall have power to order new trial where reporter's transcript of proceedings becomes unavailable, is discretionary, and order denying motion made pursuant thereto should not be reversed on appeal except for abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 953e.

25. New Trial ⇐128(1)

Party moving for new trial under statute providing that court shall have power to order a new trial where reporter's transcript of proceedings becomes unavailable, must indicate substantial controversial issues concerning which a judgment on the merits would depend. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 953e.

26. Appeal and Error ⇐1072

Where motion for new trial under statute providing that court shall have power to order a new trial where reporter's transcript of proceedings becomes unavailable, stated that issue involved pertained to cross complainants' rights and contentions against cross defendant, and the judgment did not depend on such issue, and issue was moot, cross complainants were not prejudiced by denial of motion. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 953e.

COUGHLIN, Justice pro tem.

This is an action to quiet title to 47.61 acres of land commonly referred to by the parties as the "Reservoir Site". The primary issues presented on this appeal concern the effect of an allegedly ambiguous deed and the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a finding of adverse possession by a cotenant.

In 1881 Daniel Kraemer "granted and conveyed" to the Anaheim Water Company "the right and privilege" of using the 47.61 acres of land in question for reservoir purposes, including the right to do whatever was necessary to construct dams and store water thereon, together with rights of way for ditches and canals. The "Reservoir Site" was described by metes and bounds.

The following year Daniel died testate and two of his children, Samuel and Jonathan, as the principal beneficiaries under his will, were devised in excess of 3,000 acres of land, receiving title as cotenants through a decree of distribution describing the property by the description used in the deed conveying title to their father, "excepting such portions thereof as were conveyed by Daniel Kraemer in his life time to various parties" including "a tract containing 47.61 acres conveyed by said Daniel to the Anaheim Water Company for a Reservoir Site, recorded in Book 82 of Deeds, page 335 * * * reference being made for more particular description of said excepted portions to said deeds respectively."

In 1886 Samuel and Jonathan, by deeds, partitioned the property distributed to them as cotenants. For descriptive purposes, these deeds referred to a simultaneously recorded map of the Kraemer Tract, which divided the property into blocks and showed the "Reservoir Site" located on the southerly portion of Blocks E and F of that tract. A description of the northerly portion of said Blocks E and F, consisting of 452.50 acres, was included in the deed from Samuel to Jonathan, and a description of the southerly portion, consisting of 450.40 acres, was included in the deed from Jonathan to Samuel. The latter deed is the one heretofore referred to as containing an alleged ambiguity; it described all of the property which Jonathan conveyed to Samuel and consists of three paragraphs; the first paragraph contains the granting clause and a description of all property conveyed, except that described in the second paragraph which sets forth a description of the southerly 450.40 acres of Blocks E and F; the portion of Block F contained in this description consists of approximately 212 acres and includes all of the "Reservoir Site" with the exception of a small part thereof in Block E; the third paragraph recites the following: "Excepting and reserving from the operation of this deed the forty-seven and 61/100 (47 61/100) acre tract conveyed by Daniel Kraemer to the Anaheim Water Company for Reservoir purposes—the boundaries of which tract are shown on the said map."

One of the issues on this appeal concerns the effect of the foregoing third paragraph. Although the terms "excepting" and "reserving" may be contradictory (Victory Oil Co. v. Hancock Oil Co., 125 Cal.App.

2d 222, 232, 270 P.2d 604), their use in this instance, when considered in context, relates a singular intention to effect an exception from the operation of the deed, i. e., from the grant. Van Slyke v. Arrowhead, etc. Power Co., 155 Cal. 675, 680, 102 P. 816; Butler v. Gosling, 130 Cal. 422, 62 P. 596; Victory Oil Co. v. Hancock Oil Co., supra, 125 Cal.App.2d 222, 232, 270 P.2d 604. The real controversy between the parties involves the subject matter of this exception. Does the language used identify a tract of land as the subject of the exception, or does it identify an interest in the land as such subject? Defendants contend that the language referring to a 47 61/100 acre tract conveyed by Daniel to the Anaheim Water Company for reservoir purposes, the boundaries of which are shown on the Kraemer tract map, clearly indicates an intention to except from the operation of the deed the land to be used as a reservoir site. Plaintiffs counter with the claim that Daniel did not convey a tract of land to the Water Company, but rather, conveyed an easement, and contend that the exception refers only to this easement, arguing that the language used indicates an intention to except from the operation of the deed that property which Daniel, in fact, did convey to the Water Company, which was an easement. That the original deed to Anaheim Water Company conveyed only an easement is conceded by all parties.

In 1888, two years after the partition deeds had been executed, Samuel and Jonathan, each, executed a deed to the other for the purpose of correcting errors. By his correction deed Jonathan conveyed to Samuel all of his interest "in and to that tract of land * * * described in the second paragraph of the description" in the 1886 partition deed to Samuel, the land here "referred to being the land therein last described as granted." The 1888 deed also contained the following: "This deed is given to correct an error in a deed heretofore made" by Samuel to Jonathan "and to establish the Eastern boundary of said tract as described in said deed first aforesaid as the true boundary between the lands of the parties hereto." (Italics ours.) The only boundary between the lands of the parties was Samuel's northern boundary and Jonathan's southern boundary. The eastern boundary of Samuel's property did not separate it from Jonathan's property. The foregoing correction deed made no mention of the exception contained in the prior partition deed, and whether the correction deed gave Samuel a clear title to the southerly portion of Blocks "E" and "F", freed of any alleged interest Jonathan might have had in the "Reservoir Site", is a subject of further controversy between the parties to this action.

In 1893, Jonathan, having suffered financial reverses resulting in the loss of all his property, left the area and eventually settled in Mexico, where he was visited by Samuel and his son in 1910.

In the meantime, the Anaheim Water Company, and its successor, Anaheim Union Water Company, had abandoned their efforts to maintain a reservoir on the 47.61 acre site, and in 1906 Samuel purchased the water company's interest in that site for $1,000, receiving a deed, which was recorded, conveying such interest to him individually.

After acquiring the water company's interest in the "Reservoir Site", Samuel made various uses of the 212 acres in Block "F", including this site, and otherwise exercised acts of ownership over the property; the whole property was leased on two occasions, the leases being recorded; the fences around the "Reservoir Site" were removed, leaving the property enclosed by a fence around the 212 acre plot, which later was removed in part; the land was cleared, planted to walnut trees and thereafter interset with orange trees; part of the property was used as a gravel pit and other parts were used for farming purposes, such as the raising of bees, the growing of corn and beans; in 1916 Blocks "E" and "F", including the "Reservoir Site", were subdivided into eight lots each and a map thereof recorded which designated the subdivision as "Tract No. 56-Kraemer Tract

No. 2"; this map carried a certificate signed by Samuel and his wife declaring they were the owners of and the persons whose consent was necessary to pass a clear title to the land therein described, and dedicating to public use all highways, drives and alleys shown thereon.

In 1917 Jonathan returned from Mexico, and visited with his relatives in California. On one occasion during this visit, Jonathan, accompanied by Samuel, his brother Ben and Samuel's son, made a trip to an oil drilling project on land formerly owned by Jonathan, which took them through Block "F", past the "Reservoir Site", and Jonathan expressed surprise at the change effected by the clearing of the wilderness and the planting of walnut trees. While at the site of this oil well, when Samuel expressed a belief that the entire property to the south, which included the "Reservoir Site" along with other property in Block "F", would be oil property, Jonathan expressed the hope that oil would be discovered both on Samuel's property and on Ben's. There was a great deal of "oil activity" in this area at this time, including efforts by different oil companies to obtain oil leases, together with attendant newspaper notoriety. The evidence does not disclose that Jonathan, at any time, made any claim to any interest in the "Reservoir Site". After concluding a four-month visit in California, Jonathan left and, eventually, took up residence in Texas, where he died in 1921 and his estate was probated. The individual defendants are his heirs at law, or their successors in interest. Most of these defendants have lived in the immediate vicinity of the property for a great number of years.

In 1919 Samuel leased the 212 acre parcel in Block "F", including the 47.61 acres in the "Reservoir Site", to the Standard Oil Company, for 25 years. This lease purported to affect all interests in the property; was executed by Samuel individually as sole lessor; did not separately describe the "Reservoir Site"; was recorded, and received considerable newspaper notoriety. The lessee went into possession; erected and installed derricks, buildings, tanks, camps, extraction plants and pipe lines; drilled a great number of oil producing wells, including five or six on the "Reservoir Site", and paid rents and royalties to Samuel and his successors.

In the meantime, houses, barns and sheds were erected on and moved from various locations on or near the "Reservoir Site" and parts of this site were used for farming activities of various types. Samuel, in his sole name, conveyed easements across the property for pipe line purposes, which were recorded. In some instances, the exact location of these possessory acts, with respect to the boundaries of the "Reservoir Site" is not clearly indicated by the evidence. However, they support the conclusion that Samuel and his successors considered the property as a whole, not segregating the "Reservoir Site" from the balance thereof for ownership purposes.

Between 1920 and 1934 Samuel and his wife deeded to each of their eight children, who are the plaintiffs in this action, one of the lots in Block of Tract No. 56, reserving the oil and gas rights therein, but conveying to each child an undivided one-tenth interest in all oil and gas rights appurtenant to all eight lots, i. e., the 212 acre parcel. Five conveyances were made in 1920, one in 1927, and two in 1934. Each of these deeds was recorded; was executed by the grantors as sole owners and not as cotenants; and purported to convey the entire fee to the property therein described, less the oil rights reserved by the grantors; no exception of property within the "Reservoir Site" was made; and no acknowledgment of an outstanding interest in Jonathan, or his successors, was expressed. Each of the eight deeds contained a conveyance of the aforesaid one-tenth oil and gas interest; the remaining two-tenths interest was retained by Samuel and his wife until they died in 1937 and 1941, respectively, whereupon it was distributed to their children in equal shares.

After the execution of the foregoing conveyances, these children went into possession of their respective lots; continued in possession for a period covering between nineteen and thirty-three years; executed agreements, which were recorded, extending and modifying the 1919 lease to "Standard Oil"; received the royalties paid under that lease and its extension; conveyed several rights of way to that and other companies, which were recorded; constructed improvements, farmed, leased, excavated, encumbered, occupied and exercised other acts of ownership on and concerning their respective property, making no distinction between that portion within and that portion without the "Reservoir Site"; and annually paid all the taxes levied upon the property described in their deeds, which included that site.

In 1953 probate proceedings in the estate of Jonathan were commenced in Orange county. Thereafter, the plaintiffs, Samuel's children, brought this action to quiet their title against the defendants, who claim an interest in the "Reservoir Site" as personal representatives, heirs at law, or successors in interest of Jonathan, based on a contention that his rights as cotenant never were transferred or terminated. The defendants filed a cross-complaint, seeking to quiet title to their alleged interest in this property, and for an accounting. The Standard Oil Company of California was included as a cross-defendant. In substance, the trial court concluded that the 1886 deed by Jonathan transferred to Samuel, in severalty, the entire title to the property described in the complaint, except for the easement theretofore conveyed to the Anaheim Water Company, which Samuel subsequently acquired, and further concluded that, in any event, the facts established by the evidence created a title by adverse possession in Samuel and in the plaintiffs, freed of any alleged cotenancy interest. In accord with its conclusions, and upon the authority of H. & J. Mabury Co. v. Bryant, 9 Cal.2d 586, 590, 71 P.2d 1111, the trial court made a finding of good record title as well as a finding of good title by adverse possession. Thereupon judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs and cross-defendants, from which the defendants and cross-complainants appeal, contending that both the finding of a good record title and the finding of title by adverse possession are conclusions of law not supported by the evidence; that the 1886 deed from Jonathan to Samuel clearly excepted the 47.61 acre "Reservoir Site" from the grant; that the court erred in concluding that this deed was ambiguous and uncertain, in permitting the introduction of evidence to interpret the deed or determine the intention of the parties thereto, and in finding that the deed excepted from its operation only an easement in and not a fee to the disputed 47.61 acres; that the 1888 correction deed did not convey to Samuel the outstanding cotenancy interest; and that errors were committed in rulings on matters of evidence as related to the issues raised by the pleadings. Defendants also appeal from orders made after judgment, contending that there was error in the preparation of the record on appeal, and in ruling on a motion for new trial under section 953e of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1, 2] "The intention of the parties to a grant is to be gathered if possible from the language itself and is determined by a proper construction of the language used rather than by resorting to extrinsic evidence." Pinsky v. Sloat, 130 Cal.App.2d 579, 588, 279 P.2d 584, 590. In accord: Hartwig v. Central-Gaither Union School Dist., 200 Cal. 425, 427, 253 P. 733; Mitchel v. Brown, 43 Cal.App.2d 217, 221, 110 P.2d 456. This intention must be gained from a consideration of the entire document, and every part thereof must be given effect if reasonably practicable. Civ.Code, Sec. 1641; Burnett v. Piercy, 149 Cal. 178, 189, 86 P. 603; Weber v. Graner, 137 Cal.App.2d 771, 774, 291 P.2d 173; Paddock v. Vasquez, 122 Cal.App.2d 396, 400, 265 P.2d 121; Moakley v. Los Angeles Pacific Ry. Co., 139 Cal.App. 421, 423, 34 P.2d 218.

[3] The 1886 partition deed from Jonathan to Samuel described the property to be excepted from its operation as "the forty-seven $^{61}/_{100}$ ($47^{61}/_{100}$) acre tract conveyed by Daniel Kraemer to the Anaheim Water Company for reservoir purposes" (italics ours). The defendants urge that the term

"tract" means "tract of land". The boundaries of that tract are shown on the map to which reference is made in the deed. Thus, this deed, in substance, refers to two other instruments, i. e., a conveyance and a map. When a deed refers to other instruments the latter become a part of the former, and all of them must be considered as a whole to determine the intention of the parties. Anderson v. Trotter, 213 Cal. 414, 420, 2 P.2d 373; Biescar v. Czechoslovak-Patrohat, 145 Cal.App.2d 133, 142, 302 P.2d 104; Holbrook v. Fazio, 84 Cal.App.2d 700, 191 P.2d 123; Hamilton v. Ferguson, 26 Cal. App.2d 390, 394–395, 79 P.2d 427; Edwards v. Lewis, 25 Cal.App.2d 168, 172, 76 P.2d 720; Drake v. Russian River Land Co., 10 Cal.App. 654, 103 P. 167.

Daniel Kraemer did not convey to the Anaheim Water Company the tract of land which the defendants contend is excepted from the operation of the partition deed. As noted by the trial judge in his memorandum opinion, the obvious purpose of the exception was to exclude from the operation of this deed property which already had been conveyed and over which the grantor had no legal control, i. e., the easement to Anaheim Water Company. Lewis v. Standard Oil Co. of California, 9 Cir., 88 F.2d 512, 515; Goss v. Congdon, 114 Vt. 155, 40 A.2d 429.

In Boring v. Filby, 151 Cal.App.2d 602, 605, 311 P.2d 869, 871, a conveyance from the defendants to the plaintiffs contained this clause: "Saving, Excepting and Reserving from Parcels 1, 2 and 3 above all oil, gas and minerals, etc., as contained in Deed from Bank of America * * * to Edgar O. Filby and Annie M. Filby * *." (Italics ours.) The defendants Filby previously had acquired parcels 1, 2 and 3 from the Bank of America by a deed which reserved to the Bank, as grantor, all oil, gas and minerals but thereafter, by agreement, also received these oil, gas and mineral rights; the plaintiffs claimed these rights under the aforesaid conveyance to them; the defendants contended that these rights were excepted from the operation of that conveyance; a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs was sustained, the court saying: "There is no language in the deed (from the Bank to the defendants) that could possibly be construed as conveying any of the mineral rights to the Filbys. The clause in question contained in the deed from the defendants to the plaintiffs is no more than a reference to an outstanding interest." As no mineral rights were "contained" in the deed from Bank of America to defendants, the questioned clause excepting and reserving the mineral rights "contained" in that deed, in effect, excepted and reserved nothing. The situation in the instant matter is analogous.

In the case at bar, although Daniel Kraemer did not convey to the Anaheim Water Company a tract of land, he did convey an easement, i. e., a "tract conveyed * * for Reservoir purposes." (Italics ours.) In a number of instances the language of a deed granting a tract or a specifically described parcel of property for a particular purpose has been held to convey only an easement for that purpose. Parks v. Gates, 186 Cal. 151, 152–154, 199 P. 40; Pellissier v. Corker, 103 Cal. 516, 37 P. 465; City of Glendora v. Faus, 148 Cal.App.2d 920, 922, 307 P.2d 976; Hamilton v. Ferguson, supra, 26 Cal.App.2d 390, 392, 396, 79 P.2d 427; Marlin v. Robinson, 123 Cal.App. 373, 376, 11 P.2d 70. In these cases the courts determined that the recital of the purpose was a part of the granting clause. No valid distinction exists between the meaning of particular language used to describe the extent of the interest in property conveyed and similar language used to describe the extent of the interest in property excepted from a conveyance. In Coon v. Sonoma Magnesite Co., 182 Cal. 597, 189 P. 271, the court held that an easement only was excepted from the operation of a deed by the following phraseology: "Saving and excepting therefrom a strip of land forty feet wide * * * for a road to be built at some future time." In Moakley v. Los Angeles Pacific Ry. Co., 139 Cal.App. 421, 425, 34 P.2d 218, 219, supra, a finding of the trial court that an exception from a described parcel of "so much as has been taken for the county road known as Vermont Avenue, for the street known as Benefit Street and for electric car lines across said land," excepted only an easement, was sustained on appeal. In Penn v. Holland, Tex.Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 351, 353, 354, the following language in a deed was held to except only a previously conveyed easement, to wit: "Save and except three (3) acres of land out of said tract, the same having been conveyed by me to the Houston Galveston Electric Railway Company", and the court said that the deed in question "does not rise higher than its source, in the sense that it merely meant—by its express reference back to the conveyance of April 26th—to confirm the right of way and easement over the same land that had been previously granted to the railway company." In Pitcairn v. Harkness, 10 Cal.App. 295, 297, 101 P. 809, it was held that the reservation of "a strip of land 25 feet wide * * * for street purposes" reserved an easement only, and that a subsequent grant reciting that "said purchase includes 25 feet * * * to be used for streets" transferred this easement. In Boothe v. McLean, Tex.Civ.App., 267 S.W.2d 158, 165, the court considered a description containing the following language: "* * * save and except 36.54 acres of land heretofore conveyed to the * * * railway company, and that occupied by the public road passing along the east and north side of the * * * right of way"; the 36.54 acres was the land over which the railroads and the public had easements only, which had been acquired by eminent domain proceedings and not by conveyance; and it was held, as a matter of law, that the phraseology under consideration excepted only the easements from the property described.

In support of their contentions, the defendants cite Seligman v. Carr, 8 Cal.App. 572, 97 P. 324 and Hartwig v. Central-Gaither Union School Dist., 200 Cal. 425, 253 P. 733, as involving a basic question identical with that presented in the case at bar. However, these cases are clearly distinguishable from the one before us. In each of them, an original deed conveyed property to a school district upon condition that it should be used for school purposes and provided for a reversion in the event the property was not so used; a subsequent deed excepted from its operation the property theretofore conveyed to the school district and, consequently, retained the reversionary interest in the grantors. There was no question in the cited cases as to whether the subsequent deeds excepted a fee or an easement, as the original deeds did not convey an easement.

[4] It is our conclusion that the deed in question, including the conveyance and map referred to therein, clearly indicate an intention to except from its operation that interest in the subject property previously conveyed by Daniel to the Water Company, which was an easement, and did not indicate an intention to except therefrom the fee to the tract of land subject to that easement which had not been conveyed.

[5] Where the language of a deed is uncertain, i. e., "fairly susceptible of either one of two constructions contended for without doing violence to its usual and ordinary import" (Beneficial Fire & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Kurt Hitke & Co., 46 Cal.2d 517, 525, 297 P.2d 428, 432), circumstances surrounding its execution and the subsequent conduct of the parties with respect thereto may be considered in order to determine their intention in consonance with the language used; to determine "what they meant by what they said." Barnhart Aircraft, Inc. v. Preston, 212 Cal. 19, 23, 297 P. 20, 21; Civil Code, sec. 1647; Universal Sales Corp. v. Cal. Press Mfg. Co., 20 Cal.2d 751, 761, 128 P.2d 665; Van Slyke v. Arrowhead, etc. Power Co., supra, 155 Cal. 675, 681, 102 P. 816; Poles v. Glass, 136 Cal.App.2d 508, 510, 288 P.2d 986; Paddock v. Vasquez, 122 Cal.App.2d 396, 265 P.2d 121.

[6] If it be assumed that the deed in question did not clearly express an intention to except from its operation only the water company's easement, neither did it clearly express an intention to except the entire fee of the tract subject to that easement, and the action of the trial court in permitting the introduction of extrinsic evidence, together with its finding that the parties actually intended to except only the easement, which is adequately supported by the record, were proper and its conclusion was sound. In this regard, it is noteworthy that the phraseology used in the partition deed to describe the excepted interest in the "Reservoir Site", and that used in the decree of distribution in the estate of Daniel Kraemer, for the same purpose is substantially identical; the former excepted "the forty-seven and 61/100 (47 61/100) acre tract conveyed by Daniel Kraemer to the Anaheim Water Company for Reservoir purposes", while the latter excepted "* * * such portions * * * as were conveyed by said Daniel Kraemer in his lifetime to various parties, to wit: * * * a tract containing 47 61/100 acres conveyed by said Daniel to the Anaheim Water Company for a reservoir site * *" In partitioning the property awarded to them by the decree of distribution, it is reasonable to assume that Samuel and Jonathan referred to that decree for the description of that property. The decree clearly excepts from its operation only that property which Daniel had conveyed in his lifetime. The findings of the trial court that the partition deed did likewise is supported by the foregoing circumstances. In addition, there is substantial evidence to support the conclusion that the subsequent conduct of the parties confirmed the fact that they intended the partition deed to dispose of all of the property they owned and to except therefrom only that property over which they had no control.

[7] The defendants' claim of error in the admission of extrinsic evidence to assist in the interpretation of the 1886 deed is of no avail in any event; if the deed clearly excepted only an easement, the admission of such evidence was not prejudicial. Hamilton v. Ferguson, supra, 26 Cal. App.2d 390, 393, 79 P.2d 427; Marlin v. Robinson, supra, 123 Cal.App. 373, 378, 11 P.2d 70. If the deed was not clear such admission was proper.

[8] Even though it be assumed that the deed executed by Jonathan in 1886 did not effectively convey to Samuel all of Jonathan's interest in the "Reservoir Site", the evidence adequately supports the conclusion that whatever interest Jonathan or his successors may have had in this property was terminated by the adverse possession of the plaintiffs. The trial court found that the plaintiffs on the dates of their respective deeds from Samuel and his wife, as the grantees therein named, entered into exclusive possession of the property therein described, including the oil rights conveyed thereby, and, upon the dates of the aforementioned decrees of distribution entered into the exclusive possession of the remaining two-tenths interest in those oil rights; that "from and after the respective dates of said deeds and decrees of distribution to the time of the commencement of this action said respective grantees remained in the continuous, open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, actual, uninterrupted, hostile and peaceable occupancy and possession of the property described in said deeds and decrees of distribution * * *" and during that time "exercised overt, open, notorious, adverse and hostile acts of ownership of said property of such unequivocal character as to clearly manifest and impart notice and knowledge to D. Jonathan Kraemer, and to the defendants, of the hostile intent of the plaintiffs * * * to hold said property adversely and in their own exclusive right for themselves alone"; that during all of this time none of the plaintiffs knew of the existence of any cotenant or cotenancy respecting any of said property, and, until May 19, 1953, no one made any claim to any interest therein; and that the taxes assessed against said property during that time were paid by the plaintiffs, with the exception of those assessed against the mineral rights which, pursuant to the lease in question, were paid by the lessee oil company on behalf of the plaintiffs.

[9, 10] To establish title by adverse possession there must be an actual, open, notorious occupancy of the subject property, which is hostile and adverse to the owner's title, under such circumstances as to give reasonable notice thereof, either actual or constructive, to the true owner, by an occupant claiming the property exclusively as his own, under a claim of right or color of title, which is continuous and uninterrupted for five years, and is accompanied by the occupant's payment of all taxes levied or assessed against the property during that period of time. West v. Evans, 29 Cal.2d 414, 417, 175 P.2d 219; Meier v. Meier, 71 Cal.App.2d 502, 505–506, 162 P.2d 950. "The requirement of 'hostility' * * * means not that the parties must have a dispute as to the title during the period of possession, but that the claimant's possession must be adverse to the record owner, 'unaccompanied by any recognition, express or inferable from the circumstances of the right in the latter.'" Sorensen v. Costa, 32 Cal.2d 453, 459, 196 P.2d 900, 904.

[11–16] The defendants contend that plaintiffs' occupancy was not under such circumstances as constituted reasonable notice of the hostile character of their claim; that there was no ouster of the tenants out of possession. This contention is based on the well settled principle that the exclusive occupancy of a cotenant is deemed permissive and does not become adverse until the tenant out of possession has had notice, either actual or constructive, that the possession of the cotenant is hostile to him. West v. Evans, supra, 29 Cal.2d 414, 418, 175 P.2d 219; Johns v. Scobie, 12 Cal.2d 618, 623, 86 P.2d 820, 121 A.L.R. 1404. When the entry into occupancy is avowedly as a tenant in common with others, the possession thus gained is the possession of the others and continues as such until the tenancy in common is disclaimed. Akley v. Bassett, 189 Cal. 625, 641–642, 209 P. 576. Under such circumstances, in order to constitute evidence of a disclaimer, the conduct of the tenant in possession must be such as amounts to an ouster of the other cotenants and consist of "acts of the most open and notorious character, clearly giving notice to the world, and to all having occasion to observe the condition and occupancy of the property, that the intention is to exclude, and does exclude the cotenants." Akley v. Bassett, supra, 189 Cal. 625, 642, 209 P. 576, 583. Defendants urge that the evidence in this case does not meet these requirements. However, the foregoing rules have "no application to a case where the possession of the person in question was neither avowedly begun as a tenant in common, nor instituted under a deed or instrument which defined his title as such." Akley v. Bassett, supra, 189 Cal. 625, 642, 209 P. 576, 583; Johns v. Scobie, supra, 12 Cal.2d 618, 86 P.2d 820, 121 A.L.R. 1404. An entry by a grantee under a deed from a cotenant in exclusive possession, which purports to convey the whole of the property, without notice of the cotenancy, is presumed to be the assertion of an exclusive right in severalty; is equivalent to an express declaration on the part of the grantee that he claims the whole interest; constitutes an ouster of the cotenants out of possession; and is such a disseisin as sets the statute of prescription in motion in his favor and against them. Johns v. Scobie, supra, 12 Cal.2d 618, 624, 86 P.2d 820, 121 A.L.R. 1404; Akley v. Bassett, supra, 189 Cal. 625, 642, 209 P. 576; Frick v. Sinon, 75 Cal. 337, 339, 17 P. 439; Bath v. Valdez, 70 Cal. 350, 358, 11 P. 724; Packard v. Moss, 68 Cal. 123, 129, 8 P. 818; Zolezzi v. Michelis, 86 Cal.App.2d 827, 831, 195 P.2d 835. Such is the case at bar. The entry and claim of the plaintiffs rest on color of title, being made under deeds which implied full ownership (Akley v. Bassett, supra, 189 Cal. 625, 640, 209 P. 576); the estate purporting to be conveyed, not the estate actually conveyed, characterized their entry. Akley v. Bassett, supra, 189 Cal. 625, 642, 209 P. 576. Although each deed reserved to the grantors the oil and gas rights appurtenant to the particular lot described therein, the combined deeds, together with the decrees of distribution in the estates of the grantors, in turn conveyed to the grantees all such rights in all of these lots. None of the grantees had any knowledge of an outstanding interest in Jonathan or his successors. There was no indication in any of the deeds that Samuel or his wife intended to convey only a one-half interest in any of the property transferred. To the contrary, the map therein referred to represented that Samuel and his wife were the sole owners of the tract therein described. After entering into possession, the plaintiffs exercised acts of ownership which were in total disregard of and adverse to the rights of any other person in any part of their land. The recorded map of Tract No. 56 had obliterated the preexisting concept of a defined and described "Reservoir Site". The evidence supports the conclusion that each plaintiff occupied the whole of his or her lot exclusively, as a unit, under color of title established by deed. In like manner, the plaintiffs claim all of the oil and gas rights appurtenant to the 212 acre parcel—Block F of Tract No. 56—composed of their respective lots and including the 47.61 acre "Reservoir Site". Acceptance of the deeds which conveyed to them the oil and gas rights and the subsequent exercise of acts of ownership by the plaintiffs were the equivalent of an entry into possession of these rights under color of title to the whole interest in severalty. The possession of the Standard Oil Company was the possession of the plaintiffs. Palin v. Sweitzer, 8 Cal.2d 329, 331, 65 P.2d 351; Weyse v. Biedebach, 86 Cal.App. 712, 722, 261 P. 1086. Both were acting under instruments of title implying the transfer of an interest unimpaired by any cotenancy. The execution and recordation of agreements extending and modifying the original lease, which occurred in 1942 and 1943, the receipt of royalties over a period of time encompassing nineteen to thirty-three years —thirty-three years as to five plaintiffs, twenty-six as to one, and nineteen years as to two—without an accounting, the lack of any claim by the defendants to any part of the property, to the royalties or to the oil and gas rights (Palin v. Sweitzer, supra, 8 Cal.2d 329, 330, 65 P.2d 351), the fact that the plaintiffs "knew nothing of the existence of the cotenants" (West v. Evans, supra, 29 Cal.2d 414, 418, 175 P.2d 219, 221; Johns v. Scobie, supra, 12 Cal.2d 618, 624, 86 P.2d 820, 121 A.L.R. 1404), and the possessory acts of the lessee in the discovery, development, operation and maintenance of oil wells on the leased property, justify the conclusion that the plaintiffs were holding these interests adversely to any outstanding claim, that this holding was notorious, that they were acting under the color of title conferred on them by the deeds from Samuel and his wife, and that the defendants had constructive knowledge of these facts. West v. Evans, supra, 29 Cal.2d 414, 419, 175 P.2d 219; Palin v. Sweitzer, supra, 8 Cal.2d 329, 330, 65 P.2d 351. The following statement by the court in Akley v. Bassett, supra, 189 Cal. 625, 642, 209 P. 576, 583, is apropos to this case: "The extent of the estate purporting to be conveyed characterized the entry and subsequent possession, and showed beyond doubt that they were made under a claim to the whole, and were with the intent to oust all others asserting an interest."

[17, 18] Moreover, the recordation of the plaintiffs' deeds, under the circumstances of this case, constituted constructive notice that their claims were hostile and adverse to any interest of Jonathan or the defendants. It is now the settled law of this state "that where a tenant in common enters into possession and claims under an invalid deed purporting to convey the property to him, the recordation of the deed is notice to his cotenants of its existence and therefore of the adverse character of his claim, so as to start the statute of limitations running, at least where, as here, he knew nothing of the existence of the other cotenants." Johns v. Scobie, supra, 12 Cal.2d 618, 624, 86 P.2d 820, 823. In support of their position to the contrary the defendants cite West v. Evans, 29 Cal. 2d 414, 175 P.2d 219, in which recordation alone, independent of other facts, was relied upon to establish notice and, for this reason, is clearly distinguishable from and not controlling in the matter at hand.

[19] The defendants further contend that the possessory acts relied upon to establish a title by adverse possession could not constitute notice to them, as the true owners, that the plaintiffs claimed adversely to their interest in the property, because they had no knowledge of such interest. This contention is without merit. A person claiming title by adverse possession is not required to "establish that the record owner knew of his own rights in the land in question. All that the claimant must show, however, is that his occupation was such as to constitute reasonable notice to the true owner that he claimed the land as his own. The fact that the record owner was unaware of his own rights in the land is immaterial." Sorensen v. Costa, supra, 32 Cal.2d 453, 461, 196 P.2d 900, 905.

[20] The trial court's finding with respect to the payment of taxes is supported by the evidence. From the time of acquisition, each plaintiff paid the taxes assessed against the lot conveyed to him or her, resulting in the payment by plaintiffs annually of all taxes on all of said lots since 1934. The mineral rights appurtenant to this property were assessed separately. Under the "Standard Oil" lease the lessors and the lessee agreed to share payment of these taxes on these rights in accord with an agreed formula. Pursuant to this lease "Standard" as lessee paid all of these taxes and the plaintiffs, as lessors, reimbursed it for their agreed share. In reality, the payment made by "Standard" was made on behalf of the plaintiffs and constituted payment by them. Williams v. Stillwell, 217 Cal. 487, 492, 19 P.2d 773; Gray v. Walker, 157 Cal. 381, 386, 108 P. 278. The lease in question, by providing that the lessee should pay a share of the taxes levied and assessed against the leased premises, in effect, required it to pay an amount of money equal to that share of the taxes, and its payment of this money was made to discharge that obligation and not as a payment on its behalf of taxes, as such, "levied and assessed upon such land". (Code Civ.Proc. sec. 325.)

The defendants contend that "Standard" was in possession for all the cotenants, and that any payment of taxes made by it was made on behalf of all. This contention is based on a false premise. As heretofore noted, the occupancy of the plaintiffs and their lessee, under the circumstances of this case, was not presumed to be the occupancy of a cotenant.

[21] The defendants further contend that the taxes were paid "with what the property yielded" and, for this reason, were not paid by the plaintiffs. Section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure which prescribes payment by the occupant of all taxes levied and assessed upon the subject property during the possessory period, as an element of adverse possession, does not require that such taxes be paid with money obtained from sources other than the property claimed.

The determination by the trial court that the plaintiffs have a good record title under the 1886 deed and good title by adverse possession under the entry and occupancy by the plaintiffs was correct and should be affirmed. Our conclusions in this regard render unnecessary a consideration of the effect of the 1888 correction deed or the sufficiency of the evidence to establish adverse possession by Samuel. For like reasons, the contentions of plaintiffs respecting the finding of the trial court in their favor, under the doctrines of estoppel and laches, need not be considered. These conclusions also dispose of the issues on appeal which involve the cross-defendant Standard Oil Company of California.

After filing a notice of appeal from the judgment herein, and during the course of proceedings to prepare a transcript on appeal, the defendants-cross-complainants and the cross-defendant, Standard Oil Company of California, filed written requests for a correction of proposed transcripts on appeal. Alleged errors in these transcripts concerned a minute order and other entries in the clerk's transcript, and inaccuracies in the reporter's transcript with respect to a hearing on August 30, 1956, which dealt with issues between the cross-complainants and the cross-defendant, Standard Oil Company. A hearing was held upon these requests at which the court reporter was present and testified. Subsequently the court proposed certain corrections in the reporter's transcript. Thereupon the defendants-cross-complainants filed objections to the proposed corrections and moved for a new trial under the provisions of section 953e of the Code of Civil Procedure upon the ground that the transcript was incomplete and contained guesses, surmise, uncertainty and substitution. The motion for a new trial stated that the issue involved "pertains to cross-complainants' rights and contentions against cross-defendant, Standard Oil Company * * *" After a further hearing, at which no evidence was introduced, the court made its order correcting parts of the clerk's transcript, overruling objections to the controversial minute order, as well as to the proposed corrections of the reporter's transcript, settling both transcripts as corrected and denying the motion for a new trial. Thereupon the defendants-cross-complainants appealed from this order to the Supreme Court, which, in turn, denied a motion to dismiss and transferred the appeal to this court.

[22] There is a presumption that the clerk's minutes correctly related the order to which objection was made, which supports the finding of the trial court to this effect. Wutchumna Water Co. v. Superior Court, 215 Cal. 734, 737, 12 P.2d 1033; People v. Palmer, 49 Cal.App.2d 567, 122 P.2d 109. Moreover, this order referred to matters concerning the accounting phase of this case, and its effect has been rendered inconsequential by the decision on the issue of title. No prejudicial error in settling the clerk's transcript appears.

[23] Any inaccuracies in the reporter's transcript did not relate to matters involving the title dispute between plaintiffs and defendants; they related to proceedings under the cross-complaint and concerned solely the issues therein raised respecting the relationship between cross-complainants and the cross-defendant, Standard Oil Company, based upon the premise that the cross-complainants are owners of a cotenancy interest in the Reservoir Site". The judgment that plaintiffs are the sole owners of that property renders these issues moot. Under these circumstances no prejudice to appellants resulted from the order settling the reporter's transcript as corrected, and it is unnecessary to determine whether the trial court abused its discretion under the circumstances. The order should be affirmed.

[24–26] Assuming without deciding that cross-complainants' motion for a new trial came within the purview of section 953e of the Code of Civil Procedure, the trial court's denial thereof did not constitute prejudicial error. It has been held uniformly "that the exercise of the power by the court under that section is discretionary, and that an order denying a motion made pursuant thereto should not be reversed except for an abuse of discretion." Fickett v. Rauch, 31 Cal.2d 110, 112, 187 P.2d 402, 404. The moving party in such a matter must "indicate substantial controversial issues concerning which a judgment on the merits would depend." Fickett v. Rauch, supra, 31 Cal.2d 110, 115, 187 P.2d 402, 406. The motion in question stated that the issue involved pertained to "cross-complainants' rights and contentions against cross-defendant, Standard Oil Company." The judgment herein did not depend upon this issue. In any event, as heretofore noted, the issue referred to in this motion now is moot. No prejudice to cross-complainants has resulted from the order of denial.

We have considered other objections made by the defendants with respect to rulings upon the evidence and the sufficiency of the pleadings, but find them without merit.

The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent

v.

Henry WOZNIAK, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 1399.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 29, 1959.

Prosecution for first-degree burglary. The Superior Court, San Diego County, William A. Glen, J., after jury's verdict, entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Stone, J. pro tem., held that where there was no proof beyond a reasonable doubt of the commission of the crime prior to sunrise and jurors could have reasonably concluded that burglary occurred after sunrise, judgment would be modified to second-degree burglary.

Modified and affirmed.

An appeal does not lie from a verdict and sentence.

Robert C. Thaxton, Jr., San Diego, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Arthur C. deGoede, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

STONE, Justice pro tem.

A jury found the defendant guilty of burglary in the first degree. By this appeal defendant asks the court to modify the judgment to burglary in the second degree.

Kent Parker was a permanent resident of a hotel in San Diego on March 19, 1958. A few days prior to that date he had been released from the hospital, he was not well, and was suffering some pain. At about 6:30 P.M. he took two sleeping pills prescribed by a doctor and went to sleep. When he awoke on the morning of March 20th he discovered that some of his property had been stolen. This was about 7 or 7:15 A.M. He then dressed, went downstairs to the hotel office, and reported the theft. He was advised by a girl in the cashier's office that his credit cards had been turned in by a cook in whose room they had been found. The defendant registered at the hotel at 10 P.M. March 19th and checked out sometime during the day of March 20th. There is nothing else in the record to indicate the time at which the burglary was committed.

Penal Code, section 460 defines the degrees of burglary as follows:

"1. Every burglary of an inhabited dwelling house, trailer coach as defined by the Vehicle Code, or building committed in the nighttime, and every burglary, whether in the daytime or nighttime, committed by a person armed with a deadly weapon, or who while in the commission of such burglary arms himself with a deadly weapon, or who while in the commission of such burglary assaults any person, is burglary of the first degree."

"2. All other kinds of burglary are of the second degree."

As there is no contention that the defendant was armed or that he committed an assault in the commission of the burglary his conviction in the first degree can be sustained only if the record reflects that the burglary was committed in the nighttime. Section 463 of the Penal Code defines nighttime as follows: "The phrase 'night-time,' as used in this Chapter, means the period between sunset and sunrise."

The hour of sunset on March 19th is unimportant as the defendant did not arrive at the hotel until 10 P.M. The hour of sunrise the following morning, March 20th, was 6:52 A.M. Defendant contends that the failure of the court to instruct the jury of the time of sunset and sunrise made it impossible for the jury to determine whether the burglary took place in the nighttime, before 5:52 A.M. March 20th, or after that hour and during the daytime.

[1] Appellant argues that from the evidence adduced it would be just as reasonable to conclude that the burglary was committed after sunrise as during the nighttime. One inference points to burglary first degree and the other to burglary second degree. The appellant contends that both inferences are reasonable and therefore he is entitled to have the doubt resolved in his favor and the crime determined to be of the lesser degree. Appellant also infers that there was no proof beyond a reasonable doubt of the commission of the crime prior to sunrise and for this additional reason the judgment should be modified to burglary second degree. He cites People v. Golembiewski, 25 Cal.App. 2d 115, 118, 76 P.2d 717, which appears to support his position. However, the Golembiewski case has been distinguished by the Supreme Court which points out in People v. Daugherty, 40 Cal.2d 876, 884, 256 P.2d 911, that in the Golembiewski case there was no evidence of the higher offense and the judgment had to be modified to second degree. The Daugherty case also holds that the rule that a defendant's guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt and the rule that when the evidence is open to two equally reasonable constructions, one of which points to the guilt of the defendant of a higher degree of crime and the other to his guilt of a lesser degree, the court must adopt the theory pointing to the lesser degree, are rules applicable only to the trier of fact. The test on appeal is whether there is substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trier of fact. People v. Daugherty, supra, 40 Cal.2d 884, 885, 256 P.2d 915.

The question presented by this appeal is whether or not the record reflects substantial evidence to support the conviction of burglary first degree.

The respondent argues that the fact that the cook discovered Mr. Parker's credit cards in his room and delivered them to the management sometime before Mr. Parker reported the theft at approximately 7:15 A.M. constitutes evidence from which the jury could conclude that the burglary occurred before sunrise. However, the cook was not called to testify as to the time that he discovered the credit cards in his room nor the time he delivered them to the cashier's office, nor was anyone from the cashier's office called to testify as to the time Mr. Parker's credit cards were delivered at that office. Respondent also contends that the jurors could have concluded that the burglary occurred prior to 5:52 because there are fewer people moving about in a hotel prior to sunrise than after and there would be less likelihood of the burglar being detected. Respondent also contends that the victim would be more likely to sleep soundly during the night and less likely to hear a person entering the room than would be the case after sunrise.

[2-4] Of course, the jurors could not have indulged in the speculation suggested by respondent unless they knew the hour of sunrise. Respondent argues that the burglary occurred within a few days of the vernal equinox and that some of the jurors could well have been aware of this and also that at this period of the year the sun sets and rises at approximately 6 P.M. and 6 A.M. It is recognized that courts will take judicial notice of natural phenomena of various sorts including the seasons of the year and differences in solar time. It is reasonable to assume that people living in a given community have general knowledge of the approximate time of sunrise in that vicinity although such knowledge is not exact. This general knowledge was not made certain by an instruction advising the jury of the hour of sunrise, and although the omission standing alone would not be fatal, when viewed in the light of the dearth of evidence concerning the time when the burglary was committed impels a modification of the judgment to burglary second degree.

Pursuant to Penal Code, section 1260, which empowers an appellate court to reduce the degree of an offense, the judgment is modified to read: "Whereas, said Henry Wozniak having been duly found guilty in this court of the crime of burglary of the second degree (Penal Code, sec. 459) and grand theft (Penal Code, secs. 484 and 487, subd. 1) with one prior felony conviction; and defendant's application for probation being denied, it is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said Henry Wozniak be punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the State of California. It is further ordered, adjudged and directed that the said defendant be taken by the sheriff of the county of San Diego to the Director of Correction and Warden of the state prison of the state of California at California Institution for Men at Chino, forthwith."

[5] As so modified the judgment is affirmed. The attempted appeal from the nonexistent order denying a motion for new trial is dismissed. The attempted appeal from the verdict and sentence from which no appeal lies are hereby dismissed.

Hearing Granted March 25, 1959.*

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, Mendocino County, Hale McCowen, J., for forgery, and he appealed. The Third District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that since defendant had not personally consented to proceed with only 11 jurors after one juror had been excused because of illness, conviction could not be upheld, notwithstanding fact that his counsel had stated in open court that he had reviewed matter with defendant and that defendant was willing to waive right to trial by 12 jurors and that they stipulated that matter might be decided by jury of 11 people.

Timothy W. O'Brien, Public Defender, Ukiah, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by G. A. Strader, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

This is an appeal from the judgment entered after a jury found the defendant Thomas E. Manley guilty of a violation of section 470 of the Penal Code (forgery) and from an order of the court denying a motion for a new trial.

The appellant Thomas E. Manley was employed as a reporter for the "Ukiah News" in Ukiah from mid-November, 1957, until about the 27th day of December, 1957. During this period the appellant received five or six weekly paychecks. These checks were made on a check-writing machine and a typewriter and signed by the publisher of the newspaper, Mr. Robert F. Gerber.

On December 29, 1957, the appellant cashed a check payable to himself and purportedly signed by Robert F. Gerber. Mr. Gerber testified that the signature was a forgery and that he had not authorized any person to sign his name to the check. A genuine paycheck issued to the appellant and signed by Mr. Gerber was introduced in evidence for comparison.

The forged check was cashed by a Mr. Virgil Alsup, the owner of a bar or tavern in Ukiah known as the Forest Club. On the evening of December 29, 1957, the appellant entered the bar and after ordering and paying for a drink asked Mr. Alsup if he would cash the check which was payable to himself and showed some identification. In explanation of his request that Mr. Alsup cash the check, the appellant stated that he worked for the newspaper and that he had picked up his check late and there was no place where he could cash it during the holiday weekend. The appellant endorsed the check in Mr. Alsup's presence and received cash in the sum of $94; the check was made out for $94.43. The check was later returned to the bank by Mr. Gerber as a forgery.

The defense was an alibi. Appellant claimed that he was in Santa Rosa during the evening of the 28th and 29th. A bartender testified that he saw appellant in his bar about 9:30 a. m. on December 29, and one Oscar Leezy saw him about 4:30 a. m. the same morning. A third witness, who it was shown had been convicted of a felony, testified he was with the appellant in Santa Rosa from 10:00 a. m., December 29, until sometime the following morning.

Appellant also claimed that he sent a telegram to Gerber from Santa Rosa on December 29, 1957. The Ukiah manager of Western Union testified that the code numbers on the telegram indicated that it was phoned to the Oakland office from Ukiah at 12:20 a. m., December 30, 1957.

A report of the Bureau of Criminal Identification and Investigation was introduced in evidence by the defense. This report recited that Gerber did not write the check appellant was accused of uttering. It also stated that the examiner could not conclude that appellant had written the face of the check.

During the course of the trial a juror was excused because of illness. The court instead of dismissing the jury accepted a stipulation and continued the trial with 11 jurors. The record discloses that the following occurred: "Mr. O'Brien: Your Honor, I have reviewed this matter with my client. He is aware of his rights. He is willing to waive the right to a trial by twelve jurors and at this time, we stipulate the matter may be continued and be decided by the jury of eleven people. Mr. Irish: I will join in that stipulation, your Honor. The Court: All right. Let the record so show. You may proceed."

[1] Appellant's first contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment of conviction. He argues that an endorser can not have the required intent to defraud since under the provisions of section 3147 of the Civil Code an endorser warrants that he will pay the instrument if dishonored. Appellant argues further that in a case where there is no evidence that the accused wrote the check himself he can not have the required intent to defraud since the obligation to repay is inconsistent with such intent.

There is no merit in this contention. The fact the appellant may be civilly liable would not prevent the drawing of an inference of intent to defraud. Every thief is civilly liable. If appellant knew the check was not a valid instrument and if he did not inform Mr. Alsup of that fact when he negotiated it, the required intent existed. By negotiating it appellant impliedly warranted that it was valid. Mr. Alsup in cashing the check would expect that he could go to the bank and recover the money he disbursed for the check. Once this expectation proved to be false, he was defrauded. The fact that appellant may have had an undisclosed intent to repay Mr. Alsup at some future date does not change the result since the required intent to defraud would exist when he induced Mr. Alsup to cash a check which was worthless.

Appellant was charged with forging the check and with uttering it, knowing that it was forged, with intent to defraud. The evidence is ample to sustain the conviction. Whether or not appellant wrote the face of the check the record shows that it was not signed by Mr. Gerber so when appellant presented the check to Mr. Alsup, falsely representing that he had received it from the Ukiah News, and then by endorsing the check received the amount thereof, he was guilty of the offense charged.

Upon the oral argument this court expressed doubt as to whether the judgment entered upon a verdict by a jury of only 11 jurors could be sustained and requested respective counsel to file briefs upon that issue.

[2] Appellant contends that the judgment must be reversed because the appellant did not personally and expressly consent to the trial proceeding with 11 jurors. In view of the authorities hereinafter cited, we agree with this contention.

Article I, Sec. 7, of the Constitution of the State of California provides:

> "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate; but in civil actions three-fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases, by the consent of both parties, expressed in open court by the defendant and his counsel, and in civil actions by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil actions and cases of misdemeanor, the jury may consist of twelve or of any number less than twelve upon which the parties may agree in open court."

In the event a juror becomes ill, Section 1123 of the Penal Code provides:

> "If before the jury has returned its verdict into court, a juror becomes sick or upon other good cause shown to the court is found to be unable to perform his duty, the court may order him to be discharged. If any alternate jurors have been selected as provided by law, one of them shall then be designated by the court to take the place of the juror so discharged. If, after all alternate jurors have been made regular jurors or if there be no alternate juror, a juror becomes sick > or otherwise unable to perform his duty and has been discharged by the court as provided herein, the jury shall be discharged and a new jury then or afterwards impaneled, and the cause may be again tried."

It has been held that a defendant in a criminal case may agree to proceed with less than 12 jurors. People v. Clark, 24 Cal.App.2d 302, 74 P.2d 1070; People v. Williams, 128 Cal.App.2d 458, 275 P.2d 513. However, the cited cases involved situations in which during the course of the trial one juror became ill and the trial was continued with the remaining 11 jurors, but in each case the defendant personally waived the requirement of 12 jurors in open court.

Respondent argues that the cited cases did not involve the issue of whether or not such personal waiver by the defendant is required under the provisions of the California Constitution, Article I, Sec. 7. Respondent states: "The constitutional provision above cited provides that the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate. The constitutional provision further provides that '[a] trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases, by the consent of both parties, expressed in open court by the defendant and his counsel * * *' It is the respondent's contention that the defendant was accorded a trial by jury in the present case, although the number of jurors was less than the usual number of 12. Therefore, respondent further contends that the requirement of the Constitution with respect to personal waiver by the defendant expressed in open court does not apply and that the excusing of one juror during the course of the trial was merely a matter of procedure upon which counsel for the defendant was authorized to stipulate."

Respondent concedes, as indeed it must, that appellant did not personally "by the use of language" consent that his trial proceed with 11 jurors, but respondent argues that this was merely an irregularity of procedure. We cannot agree. In the recent case of People v. Barnum, 147 Cal.App. 2d 803 at page 808, 305 P.2d 986, at page 989 (hearing denied), the court said:

> "Article I, Section 7 of the state constitution provides, in part, that: 'A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases, by the consent of both parties, expressed in open court by the defendant and his counsel'. It has been held repeatedly that the consent of the defendant must be expressed by him personally and may not be implied. People v. Garcia, 98 Cal.App. 702, 277 P. 747; People v. Wilkerson, 99 Cal. App. 123, 278 P. 466; People v. Barba, 100 Cal.App. 557, 280 P. 549; People v. Spinato, 100 Cal.App. 600, 280 P. 691; People v. Wyatt, 101 Cal.App. 396, 281 P. 629; People v. Woods, 126 Cal.App. 158, 14 P.2d 313; People v. Washington, 95 Cal.App.2d 454, 213 P.2d 70; People v. Shannon, 110 Cal. App.2d 153, 241 P.2d 1007; People v. Pechar, 130 Cal.App.2d 616, 279 P.2d 570; People v. Benjamin, 140 Cal.App. 2d 703, 295 P.2d 477. In each of these cases in which a petition for hearing before the Supreme Court has been filed such petition has been denied. In People v. Pechar, 130 Cal.App.2d 616, 619, 279 P.2d 570, 572, the court held that the consent of a defendant waiving a trial by jury must be expressed 'by the use of language'. In the case at bar, the attorney general, on behalf of respondent, urges the same contention which he urged in the cited case, i.e., that consent may be 'expressed' by conduct as well as by words, and asks this court to reappraise the rule. In the light of the consistent adherence to this rule, over a period of 27 years, by the appellate courts of this state, and the refusal of the Supreme Court to grant a hearing in any case applying it, we do not feel that such a reappraisal is within our province."

We think it is clear that the jury to which a defendant in a criminal case is entitled under Article I, sec. 7, of our state Constitution is a jury of 12 members. A jury can only be waived "by the consent of both parties, expressed in open court by the defendant and his counsel." In order for a case to be tried with less than 12 jurors, the consent to such reduced number must be expressed in open court by the defendant. We believe there is no logical basis for a distinction between waiving a trial by jury and consenting to a trial by a jury of less than 12 members. For as was said by the United States Supreme Court in Patton v. United States, 281 U.S. 276, at page 290, 50 S.Ct. 253, 255, 74 L. Ed. 854: "It follows that we must reject in limine the distinction sought to be made between the effect of a complete waiver of a jury and consent to be tried by a less number than twelve, and must treat both forms of waiver as in substance amounting to the same thing."

As hereinbefore set forth, appellant did not personally "by the use of language" consent that his trial proceed with 11 jurors when a juror became ill. It would have been a simple matter for the court to have asked appellant if he did so consent and have the record show his expressed consent. The discussions hereinbefore cited have reiterated the rule that the defendant's consent must be expressed by him personally in open court. As stated in People v. Pechar, 130 Cal.App.2d 616, at page 619, 279 P.2d 570, at page 572:

> "Having in mind the sanctity of the right to trial by jury in criminal cases and the evident purpose of the constitutional provision that no defendant should be deprived of that right unless he unequivocally and personally expressed his consent to such waiver in open court, we have concluded that such waiver must be expressed by the defendant in the manner which can involve no question of misinterpretation, doubt or uncertainty at the time or afterwards, i.e., that such waiver must be by the use of language."

We conclude that because appellant did not personally consent to proceeding with 11 jurors the judgment and order must be reversed.

No other points raised require discussion.

The judgment and order are reversed.

LONG BEACH OIL DEVELOPMENT COMPANY, Service Pipe Line Company, L. J. Smith, Harvey Bird, Doe I, Doe II, and Roe Corporation, Defendants.

Long Beach Oil Development Company, Respondent.

Civ. 23181.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 3, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 1, 1959.

Action to recover for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in cave-in of trench in which he was working on premises of defendant. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Fred Miller, J., rendered judgment for defendant notwithstanding verdict for plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that evidence had not required finding as a matter of law such special employment relationship between plaintiff and defendant as would make recovery of workmen's compensation plaintiff's exclusive remedy.

Earl A. Barnes, Long Beach, for appellant.

Moss, Lyon & Dunn, Fulton W. Haight and Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for respondent.

HERNDON, Justice.

Appellant (plaintiff below) sued to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him in the cave-in of a trench in which he was working on premises of defendant Long Beach Oil Development Company (hereinafter referred to as respondent). At the time of the accident, appellant was the foreman of a four-man maintenance crew employed by Industrial Suppliers Company and supplied to respondent under a contract which described Industrial Suppliers "as an independent contractor and not as an employee" of respondent. In this common law action for negligence, appellant proceeded against Service Pipe Line Construction Company, the excavator of the trench or ditch which caved in, and respondent on whose premises and for whose benefit the trench had been constructed. Appellant's theory was that the two corporate defendants and certain of their employees had been negligent in failing to shore up the trench in which he sustained his injuries.

By way of affirmative defense, respondent alleged in its answer that appellant was the special employee of both defendants and that the action was accordingly barred by sections 3600 and 3601 of the Labor Code. The action came on for trial before a jury. Motions for a directed verdict having been denied, a verdict was returned in favor of appellant and against both defendants. Thereafter, respondent's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was granted on the ground that at the time of the accident appellant was respondent's special employee, and that his exclusive remedy was to apply to the Industrial Accident Commission for compensation under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Lab.Code, § 3600 et seq.)

Thus, the sole question here presented is this: did the trial court err in deciding as a matter of law (contrary to the jury's implied finding) that appellant was the special employee of respondent at the time of the accident?

[1–3] Where an employer sends an employee to do work for another person, and both have the right to exercise certain powers of control over the employee, that employee may be held to have two employers—his original or "general" employer and a second, the "special" employer. Industrial Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 26 Cal.2d 130, 134, 156 P.2d 926; see generally 1 Campbell, Workmen's Compensation, 408, § 453. This doctrine has special significance in the situation in which one party engages an independent contractor to perform certain work, and by the terms of the contract or during the course of its performance the employee of the independent contractor comes under the control and direction of the other party to the contract. If relationships of both general and special employer are found to exist, an employee who is injured during the course of the employment may be entitled to compensation from both employers under the Workmen's Compensation Act. See 27 Cal.Jur. 334, § 56; 1 Campbell, Workmen's Compensation, 412, § 457. Where the special employment relationship is found to exist, the Industrial Accident Commission has exclusive jurisdiction to award compensation for injuries received during the course of such employment and the injured employee cannot maintain a common-law action for negligence against his special employer. Wessell v. Barrett, 62 Cal.App.2d 374, 144 P.2d 656; see Labor Code, § 3601.

The possibility of the existence of a dual employment relationship is well recognized. As stated in Industrial Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 26 Cal.2d 130, 134, 156 P.2d 926, 928, "* * * an employee may at the same time be under a general and a special employer, and where, either by the terms of a contract or during the course of its performance, the employee of an independent contractor comes under the control and direction of the other party to the contract, a dual employment relationship is held to exist. [Citations.] The right to control and direct the activities of the alleged employee or the manner and method in which the work is performed, whether exercised or not, gives rise to the employment relationship. [Citations.] And, although in distinguishing between an employment and an independent contractor relationship it has been said that 'The test of "control", * * * means "complete control"' [citations], it is settled that 'a general and special employer relationship is present if there exists in each some power, not necessarily complete, of direction and control.'"

[4] But, to constitute evidence of the special employment relationship the special employer must have a power of direction and control over the way in which the work is to be done (cf. Ridgeway v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 130 Cal.App.2d 841, 848, 279 P.2d 1005; Wessell v. Barrett, supra, 62 Cal.App.2d 374, 376, 144 P.2d 656; see 1 Campbell, Workmen's Compensation 410, § 454.) As stated in Ridgeway v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 130 Cal.App.2d at page 848, 279 P.2d at page 1009: "[it is] * * * the fundamental rule that in order to establish the relationship of special employer and employee it is necessary that the special employer have some control over the details of the work to be done and not merely in the results accomplished, * * *." See also Doty v. Lacey, 114 Cal.App.2d 73, 249 P.2d 550.

[5] Whether the right to control existed or was exercised is generally a question of fact to be resolved from the reasonable inferences to be drawn from the circumstances shown. Industrial Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 26 Cal.2d 130, 135, 156 P.2d 926; Guarantee Ins. Co. Limited Mutual v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 22 Cal.2d 516, 520, 139 P.2d 905. And the existence or non-existence of the special employment relationship barring the injured employee's action at law is generally a question reserved for the trier of fact. Doty v. Lacey, supra, 114 Cal.App.2d 73, 80, 249 P.2d 550; cf. Wessell v. Barrett, supra, 62 Cal.App.2d 374, 377, 144 P.2d 656; Madsen v. LeClair, 125 Cal.App. 393, 13 P.2d 939; Peters v. United Studios, Inc., 98 Cal.App. 373, 277 P. 156.

In Deorosan v. Haslett Warehouse Co., 165 Cal.App.2d 599, 332 P.2d 422, a common law action for negligence, the trial court granted a nonsuit as to one corporate defendant, the Beagle Products Company, on the theory that as a matter of law the plaintiff was a special employee of Beagle. There was testimony in the record that plaintiff was not an employee of Beagle; that plaintiff was employed and paid by another employer; and that plaintiff was not subject to dismissal by Beagle. The appellate court reversed the judgment of nonsuit with the observation that "* * * the issue of appellant's status [as a special employee] should have been left to the jury * * *."

[6] On this appeal from a judgment n. o. v. we must examine the evidence in the light most favorable to appellant. As stated in Neel v. Mannings, Inc., 19 Cal.2d 647, 649–650, 122 P.2d 576, 577: "It appears to be the well-established law of this state that the power of the trial court to set aside a verdict and enter a contrary judgment is absolutely the same as its power to grant a nonsuit, Sec. 629 Code Civ.Proc.; Card v. Boms, 210 Cal. 200, 291 P. 190; Hunt v. United Bank & Trust Co. of California, 210 Cal. 108, 291 P. 184; 7 Cal.Jur. 10-Yr. Supp. 268, sec. 65c. Therefore, a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto may properly be granted 'when, and only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of the plainiff.'" And as stated in Hargrave v. Acme Tool & Tester Co., 145 Cal.App.2d 469, 472, 302 P.2d 592, 594: "The trial court is authorized to grant a motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict only where, viewing all the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff, with every legitimate inference drawn in his favor, and disregarding all conflicting evidence, the record is insufficient to support the verdict for plaintiff."

[7] Thus, if the trier of fact could reasonably conclude that the special employment relationship did not exist between appellant and respondent at the time of the accident the judgment n. o. v. must be reversed. See Umsted v. Scofield Engineering Const. Co., 203 Cal. 224, 227–228, 263 P. 799.

The evidence in the record bearing on the existence of a special employment relationship may be briefly summarized. Appellant had been employed by Industrial Suppliers Company for about four and one-half years prior to the accident. During almost all of that time his work consisted of the supervision of his four-man crew which did small jobs of construction work and maintenance on respondent's oil properties in the Long Beach Harbor area. His services and that of his crew were supplied under a contract between Industrial Suppliers and respondent which was evidenced by a "Service Order" the material portions of which are set out in the margin.[1]

1. "(1) Contractor [Industrial Suppliers] shall furnish all labor, tools, equipment and material necessary for the complete performance of this order unless other-

Appellant was instructed by his employers, the owners of Industrial Suppliers, to follow the instructions of respondent's field superintendent. Appellant and his crew reported for work every morning at the Industrial Suppliers yard from which they drove about five miles to respondent's premises where respondent's construction foreman, L. J. Smith, would give the crew its daily work assignments. The work generally assigned this crew involved relatively unskilled manual labor such as cleaning the concrete foundations of oil-well pumping units, digging ditches and small construction jobs. Their work was performed with tools owned by Industrial Suppliers and appellant was paid a higher wage than the other members of his crew.

Mr. Smith, respondent's construction foreman, testified that he would call the attention of the crew foreman to any work which he didn't think was right, but he did not supervise the operations or concern himself with the details of the work. On cross examination he described his relationship with the foreman of various crews of independent contractors employed by respondent as follows:

"Q. Does your relationship or duty with respect to these contractors vary in any degree? A. They are primarily the same as with Industrial Suppliers.

"Q. What is that relationship? A. To outline their work, the construction work we want performed.

"Q. Then you outline the work for the contractor or the foreman of the contractor, and he is in charge of the actual supervision of the work itself, is that correct? A. Substantially, yes. By outline the job, we don't have blueprints drawn for most of it. * * *

"Q. If you decided clean up work needed to be done would you simply contact the foreman of one of these two Industrial Suppliers crews and tell them where to do the work, is that right? A. That is right.

"Q. I believe you said Mr. Miller was the foreman or pusher of one of those labor crews for Industrial Suppliers? A. He is the foreman for one of the crews, yes.

"Q. Then if you were to contact Mr. Miller and tell him some clean up work was needed in a particular location, you would simply tell him where the work was to be done, is that right? A. That is right.

"Q. You would leave it up to his discretion to determine how the work was to be done and what tools were to be used? A. Yes. If I were to go by and see something that I didn't think was right, I would call it to his attention, but I wouldn't go to the job and tell each individual thing to do."

Appellant testified in substance that he would follow the directions of Mr. Smith as to what he should have his crew do. At one point he testified as follows:

wise provided for herein and shall secure all necessary permits in connection with the performance of the service or acts herein provided for.

"(a) Contractor agrees that work provided for herein will be done by him, and as an independent contractor and not as an employee of company, and that in doing it he shall comply with all apicable labor laws.

"(3) Contractor will obtain and maintain in effect Workmen's Compensation Insurance as provided by law.

"(4) Where work is done on Company's premises, Contractor agrees to observe such safety rules that Company shall prescribe as necessary for the protection of Company's personnel and property. Contractor agrees to limit smoking and the use of fire, including welding and torch cutting to such locations and occasions as are specifically authorized in writing by Company.

"(5) Contractor agrees to pay any taxes assessed on wages for labor hereunder, and agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the Company from all liability and claims therefor and to make any reports required.

"(6) Contractor shall segregate invoice to show taxable and non-taxable items."

"Q. Who was your boss? A. Mr. Tighe and Mr. Foudray [the owners of Industrial Suppliers] were my boss.

"Q. How about Mr. Smith? [Construction foreman for Long Beach Oil Development Co.] A. Mr. Smith told us what to do during the day, gave us locations to do. He didn't tell us how to do the work."

Respondent has directed our attention to certain evidence which undoubtedly would have supported a finding that appellant was the special employee of respondent. Compare Ridgeway v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 130 Cal.App.2d 841, 279 P.2d 1005. For example, the trier of fact could reasonably interpret appellant's testimony that he was told to follow the instructions of respondent's field superintendent as evidence of respondent's right to dictate as to the details of the work. However, in the light of the entire record such testimony could resasonably be interpreted as indicating appellant's duty to follow respondent's directions, not as to detail, but with respect to the assignments to be undertaken and completed. It is not enough for respondent to point to evidence which would support a finding of special employment.

From the record there can be no question but that Industrial Suppliers Company was an independent contractor (Doty v. Lacey, supra, 114 Cal.App.2d 73, 77, 249 P.2d 550) and that Industrial Suppliers was appellant's original or general employer. The real question is whether the evidence compels the conclusion that as between appellant and respondent the special employment relationship was created, or whether the trier of fact could reasonably conclude that respondent did not exercise, or have the right to exercise, sufficient control over the details of appellant's work to become his special employer. There is abundant evidence in the record from which the trier of fact reasonably could conclude that respondent did not become appellant's special employer. Appellant's wages were paid by Industrial Suppliers, not by respondent (cf. Ridgeway v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 130 Cal. App.2d at page 843, 279 P.2d at page 1006). Respondent did not have the power to discharge appellant; if dissatisfied respondent might have asked for another foreman, but it had no power to terminate appellant's employment. Cf. Doty v. Lacey, supra, 114 Cal.App.2d at page 77, 249 P.2d at page 553. At the time of the cave-in Mr. Smith, respondent's construction foreman was not present overseeing the trench cleaning operation, nor was appellant under his direct supervision and control. Cf. Wessell v. Barrett, supra, 62 Cal.App.2d at page 375, 144 P.2d at page 657.

As the foreman of the crew performing services for respondent, appellant presumably would direct and supervise the activities of his subordinates. The jury might reasonably conclude that Mr. Smith's directions dealt with the results to be accomplished by the group labor of the crew and not with appellant's activities in supervising their performance. The contract between respondent and Industrial Suppliers describes the latter as an independent contractor and not an employee. Although the writing is by no means conclusive as to respondent's right to exercise control over the details of appellant's work, with other evidence it is a sufficient basis for the inferences as to the absence of the special employment relationship which the jury evidently drew.

Conceding that respondent had the power to direct the time and place of appellant's performance of his labors and the result to be obtained, such general supervisory power over the employee of an independent contractor does not constitute conclusive evidence of the special employment relationship. Ridgeway v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 130 Cal.App.2d at pages 848–849, 279 P.2d at page 1009. Thus the jury might reasonably have inferred that the directions given plaintiff by respondent's construction foreman "* * * were merely directions as to the result to be accomplished, such as are required in the nature of things to be given to independent contractors in any case." Umsted v. Scofield Engineering Const. Co., supra, 203 Cal. 224, 230, 263 P. 799, 801.

Examining the record in the light of the above cited cases, we conclude that there is substantial evidence upon which the trier of fact could find that the special employment relationship did not exist between appellant and respondent. It follows that the trial court erred in granting the judgment n. o. v.

Carl D. LINDBERG, Respondent,
v.
Michael COUTCHES, Appellant.
Civ. 262.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Alameda County, California.
Feb. 2, 1959.

Action by buyer of used aircraft against seller for breach of implied warranty of fitness. The Municipal Court, San Leandro-Hayward Judicial District, T. L. Foley, J., entered judgment for buyer and seller appealed. The Appellate Department of Superior Court, Alameda County, Quayle, J. pro tem., held that seller, by advertising and offering used "Cessna 195" aircraft for sale without indicating any inability of aircraft to sustain flight, impliedly represented that aircraft was reasonably fit to sustain flight.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Sales ⇐273(1)

Seller, by advertising and offering a used "Cessna 195" aircraft for sale, without indicating any inability of aircraft to sustain flight, impliedly represented that aircraft was reasonably fit to sustain flight. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735.

2. Sales ⇐272, 273(1)

The seller by the very act of offering his goods for sale, asserts or represents that they are merchantable articles of their kind or are fit for some special purpose and that the buyer relies upon this implied assertion or representation. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1735.

3. Sales ⇐273(1)

Warranty of fitness for its intended use extends to used articles as well as new articles. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735.

4. Sales ⇐441(1)

In action by buyer of used aircraft against seller for breach of implied warranty of fitness, evidence established that use of trade name "Cessna 195" in contract was merely manner of designating article sold and that buyer did not order aircraft by its trade name or that buyer sought a "Cessna 195". West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1735, subd. 4.

5. Sales ⇐273(5)

Mere description of an article by its trade name is not conclusive, if other conditions justify a finding of the existence of an implied warranty of fitness. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735, subd. 4.

6. Sales ⇐441(2)

In action by buyer of used aircraft against seller for breach of implied warranty of fitness, evidence that buyer made known to seller that he proposed to use aircraft immediately in aerial photograph business and that seller made no statement of any kind to indicate that aircraft was in any way unfit for buyer's proposed use, established that buyer relied upon implied representation that aircraft was airworthy. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735.

7. Evidence ⇐34

Court may take judicial notice of Federal Civil Aeronautics Act providing that it shall be unlawful for any person to operate in air commerce any civil aircraft for which there is not currently in effect an airworthiness certificate. West's Ann.Civ.

Code, § 1735; Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, § 610(a), 49 U.S.C.A. § 560(a).

8. Sales ⇐120, 267

Printed disclaimer of contract providing for sale of used aircraft "as is, where is, unless otherwise specified", followed by handwritten statement "Deposit subject to financial approval and mechanical approval", did not affect warranty of mechanical fitness and was modified by handwritten statement and therefore aircraft was required to be mechanically fit for its intended purpose and buyer had right to withdraw from sale if aircraft was not fit. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735; Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, § 610(a), 49 U.S.C.A. § 560(a).

9. Sales ⇐267

Only an express disclaimer will eliminate an implied warranty of fitness. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735.

10. Sales ⇐267

Disclaimer of seller's implied warranty is strictly construed against the seller. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735.

11. Sales ⇐270

Under contract for sale of used aircraft providing for sale thereof "as is, where is, unless otherwise specified", followed by handwritten statement "Deposit subject to financial approval and mechanical approval", buyer had duty to inspect and withdraw from sale if reasonable inspection revealed mechanical defects but seller remained responsible for mechanical defects which reasonable inspection could not reveal. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735.

12. Sales ⇐270

Statute providing that if buyer has examined goods, there is no implied warranty as regards defect which such examination ought to have revealed, negates warranty only as to defects that could be discovered by reasonable inspection. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735, subd. 3.

13. Sales ⇐267

In action by buyer of used aircraft against seller for breach of implied warranty of fitness, wherein licensed CAA mechanic and inspector testified that reasonable inspection did not and would not reveal wilfully concealed oil leakage problem, printed disclaimer of contract providing for sale "as is, where is, unless otherwise specified" created only conditional disclaimer of warranty and did not affect latent defect that rendered aircraft not airworthy. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735, subd. 3.

14. Sales ⇐284(1)

Seller of used aircraft was liable for latent mechanical defects therein which could not be discovered by reasonable inspection even though seller was unaware of defect. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735, subd. 3.

15. Fraud ⇐30

Seller of used aircraft with wilfully concealed latent mechanical defect may seek redress from seller's predecessors in interest. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735.

Purchio & Fairwell, Hayward, J. W. Morony, Chico, for appellant.

Paul N. McCloskey, Jr., Palo Alto, for respondent.

QUAYLE, Justice pro tem.

This appeal comes before the court on an agreed statement of facts after judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action for breach of warranty arising out of the sale of a used "Cessna 195" aircraft in which damages in the sum of $1,200.73 were awarded against defendant. The amount of damages is not an issue here. The defendant appeals, contending that the sale was made without warranty, express or implied.

On April 20, 1957, while engaged in the business of selling aircraft, appellant agreed in writing to sell to respondent a certain "Cessna 195" aircraft for $7,150. A printed clause in the contract provided—

> "It is agreed that the aircraft herein sold is sold as is, where is, unless otherwise specified."

A handwritten insertion in the contract, under the term "Remarks" provided:

"Deposit subject to financial approval and mechanical approval."

Prior to the execution of the contract, respondent made known to appellant that he proposed to use the aircraft immediately in the aerial photography business. Respondent and appellant made a short test flight in the aircraft before respondent took delivery. Appellant made no statement of any kind to indicate that the aircraft was in any way unfit for respondent's proposed use.

Respondent did not accept delivery of the aircraft until he had employed Mr. Skid Meissner, a duly licensed CAA mechanic and inspector to give the aircraft a 100-hour check and complete mechanical examination. After correcting several minor defects he certified the aircraft to be merchantable and airworthy under CAA regulations. Mr. Meissner, stipulated to be an expert on aircraft mechanics, testified that prior to the time of sale and his examination, a piece of shim stock had been inserted between the crank shaft and oil-retaining enclosing sleeve; that such piece of shim stock concealed a worn area in the crank shaft and further kept a serious oil leakage problem from becoming apparent upon any reasonable investigation; that such shim stock could only be discovered upon a major overhaul of the aircraft; that this condition made the aircraft both unmerchantable and non-airworthy under existing CAA rules.

It was Mr. Meissner's expert opinion that the shim stock had been inserted at some time prior to appellant's acquisition of the aircraft. The appellant testified that he did not know of the presence of the shim stock. He had purchased the aircraft for $6,850 the previous month from Vesta Aircraft, a used aircraft sales organization. Appellant then advertised the aircraft for sale at a price of $8,450, believing it had flown approximately 200 hours since its last major overhaul.

After commencing negotiations with respondent, the arrival of the aircraft's log books from Vesta Aircraft showed that 560 hours flying time had been put on the engine since its last major overhaul. The testimony indicated that major overhaul on an engine of this type was required between 800 and 1,000 hours. Because of this disclosure, appellant reduced the sales price to respondent to $7,150, the figure inserted in the written contract.

After taking delivery of the aircraft, respondent entered into certain commitments for its use in aerial photography. During the month of June, 1957, increased oil leakage caused respondent to submit the aircraft for further examination after flying it only 25 hours. After several attempts, Mr. Meissner discovered the shim stock and immediately grounded the aircraft.

Appellant's first contention is that there was no express warranty connected with this sale. Respondent makes no issue of this. He relies exclusively on an implied warranty arising under subdivision 1 of section 1735 of the Civil Code.

Appellant contends that no such implied warranty arises because there was no representation made by seller and relied upon by buyer, and furthermore, the terms of the agreement of sale disclaimed warranty.

[1, 2] The implied warranty that the goods shall be reasonably fit for buyer's particular purpose exists only "where the buyer, expressly or by implication, makes known to the seller the particular purpose for which the goods are required, and it appears that the buyer relies on the seller's skill or judgment." Subdivision 1, Section 1735, Civil Code. By advertising and offering a used "Cessna 195" aircraft for sale without indicating any inability to sustain flight, appellant impliedly represented that it was reasonably fit for the purpose for which it is intended, namely, sustained flight.

The 1948 Edition of Williston on Sales (Section 231, in Vol. 1, at page 591), states:

"* * * the seller by the very act of offering his goods for sale, asserts or represents that they are merchantable articles of their kind or are fit for some special purpose and that the buyer relies upon this implied assertion or representation."

[3] Section 1735 of the Civil Code is a part of the Uniform Sales Act as adopted in California and it extends the warranty of fitness for its intended use to used articles as well as new articles. Drumar Mining Co. v. Morris Ravine Mining Co., 33 Cal. App.2d 492, 92 P.2d 424; 1 Williston on Sales, 575 (Section 232); 43 Cal.Jur. 2nd, 263.

[4, 5] Appellant claims that the use of the trade name "Cessna 195" in the agreement of sale negates warranty under subdivision 4 of section 1735 of the Civil Code. This subdivision provides that > "in the case of a contract to sell or a sale of a specified article under its patent or other trade name, there is no implied warranty as to its fitness for any particular purpose."

There is nothing in the agreed statement of facts that indicates that this aircraft was ordered by its trade name, or that the buyer was seeking a "Cessna 195". On the other hand it does appear that appellant had this used aircraft and offered it for sale. That after negotiation the parties reduced their bargain to writing and the use of the trade name "Cessna 195" was merely a manner of designating the article sold. Mere description of an article by its trade name is not conclusive, if other conditions justify a finding of the existence of an implied warranty of fitness. Bagley v. International Harvester Co., 91 Cal.App. 2d 922, 206 P.2d 43.

[6, 7] It cannot be successfully contended that respondent did not rely on appellant's implied representation that the aircraft in question was airworthy. He disclosed to appellant during negotiations that he needed the aircraft for immediate use in the aerial photograph business. This required the immediate use of the aircraft in flight. It can be inferred that he would not have bought the aircraft had he known that it could not be so used. The court takes judicial notice of the Federal Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 which provides:

> "It shall be unlawful * * * for any person to operate in air commerce any civil aircraft for which there is not currently in effect an airworthiness certificate." § 610, Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 (49 U.S.C.A. § 560(a))

Therefore immediate use of the aircraft in flight, as required by the respondent, was impossible because the aircraft in fact was not airworthy.

[8] Next let us give consideration to appellant's contention that the terms of the written agreement of sale constituted a disclaimer of warranty. In the printed portion of the contract it provided that the aircraft was sold "as is, where is, unless otherwise specified." Elsewhere in the agreement there appeared in handwriting the words "Deposit subject to financial approval and mechanical approval." It seems unnecessary to consider whether one of these provisions supersedes the other because of the manner in which it appeared on the face of the contract. They can most reasonably be reconciled from the context of the agreement. The printed form contemplated a disclaimer of warranty unless the parties expressed a different intent by some other provision in the document. The "unless otherwise specified" provision was used by respondent and appellant here when they inserted the condition that the "Deposit subject to * * * mechanical approval."

Thereby the parties expressed their intention that the aircraft should be mechanically fit for its intended purpose. Buyer was accorded the right to withdraw from the sale if the aircraft was not mechanically fit. The disclaimer originally set forth in the contract was thereby modified so as not to affect the warranty of mechanical fitness, which in essence meant airworthiness.

[9, 10] The law seems clear that only an express disclaimer will eliminate the implied warranty of fitness. Furthermore disclaimer of seller's implied warranty is strictly construed against the seller. Burr v. Sherwin Williams Co., 42 Cal.2d 682, 268 P.2d 1041.

[11] The reasonable effect to be given to the terms of this agreement of sale would seem to be that responsibility be imposed upon the buyer to inspect and withdraw from the sale if reasonable inspection revealed mechanical defects; but that seller remained responsible for mechanical defects which reasonable inspection could not reveal.

[12, 13] Subdivision 3 of section 1735 of the Civil Code provides;

> "If the buyer has examined the goods, there is no implied warranty as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed."

This negates warranty only as to defects that could be discovered by reasonable inspection. Webster v. Klassen, 109 Cal.App. 2d 583, 241 P.2d 302; Moore v. Hubbard & Johnson Lumber Co., 149 Cal.App.2d 236, at page 241, 308 P.2d 794, at page 797. Here it is admitted that reasonable inspection did not and would not reveal the mechanical defect wilfully concealed by some one who had access to the aircraft prior to the sale in question. Therefore the agreement of sale created only a conditional disclaimer of warranty which did not effect the particular latent defect that rendered the aircraft in question not airworthy.

[14] Appellant points out that it is inequitable to hold him liable for a latent mechanical defect of which he was not aware; that since he did not discover it and could not discover it unless he undertook major overhaul of the aircraft, that he was also an innocent victim of a wilful act perpetrated by some one else.

However, the Uniform Sales Act extends warranty as to latent defects upon the seller whether they are known to him or not. Tremeroli v. Austin Trailer Equipment Co., 102 Cal.App.2d 464, 227 P.2d 923; 43 Cal.Jur.2nd, 256. The defect was admittedly latent. The expert testimony indicated that it was wilfully concealed by one of appellant's predecessors in interest.

A similar result obtained in Regula v. Gerber, Ohio Com.Pl., 70 N.E.2d 662, where, under the Uniform Sales Act in Ohio (Ohio G.C. 8395), a purchaser acquiring a used automobile for transportation was relieved from his contract because loose connecting rod bearings rendered the vehicle unroadworthy. Seller's contention, that he was unaware of the defect because some person unknown had concealed it by putting heavy oil in the crank case, was of no avail in the face of warranties implied by law upon the seller.

[15] If this is an attempt by appellant to seek the application of equity to the issues here involved it should be recalled first, that warranty is a codification of the legal remedies developed primarily from the common law; furthermore, if appellant is held liable here he may seek redress against Vesta Aircraft, from whom he purchased the aircraft. They not only may be liable on their warranty but it is possible they concealed the defect or at least knew of it. On the other hand, if respondent is denied relief here, he is without remedy.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Feb. 6, 1959.

Action for reformation of spouses' agreement to hold property as community property regardless of way record title might stand at time. The Superior Court, Sonoma County, Hilliard Comstock, J., sustained a general demurrer, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that the complaint stated a cause of action for reformation on ground of mutual mistake, and that reformation would be of benefit to plaintiff since, properly construed, agreement evinced intent to abrogate any conflicting provision in prior deposit agreement creating joint tenancy with right of survivorship.

Frank W. Finn and Leon J. Libeu, Sebastopol, for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Plaintiffs, executors of the will of Seymour Frizelle, appeal from a judgment for defendant, special administrator of the estate of Jennie Frizelle, in an action for reformation of a written agreement executed in January, 1953. The judgment was entered upon the sustaining of a general demurrer to the first amended complaint without leave to amend.

The complaint alleged:

On November 6, 1940, Seymour and Jennie opened an account with the Bank of Sonoma. The deposit agreement provided that "We hereby agree with each other and the bank, that all moneys now or hereafter deposited by us or either of us with the bank in this account shall be so deposited and shall be received and held by the bank with the understanding and upon the conditions that said money as deposited, without consideration of its previous ownership, and all interest therein (if any there be) shall be the property of both of us as joint tenants and shall be payable to and collectable by either of us during our joint lives, and after death of one of us shall belong to and be the sole property of the survivor, and shall be payable to and collectable by such survivor."

In January, 1953, Seymour and Jennie orally agreed that regardless of how title was held, all of their property had been acquired as their community property, that "all of said property, and any and all property which they might thereafter acquire, should be held and owned by them as community property regardless of the way the record title might stand at any time," and that they would execute a written agreement so providing. They employed an attorney to draft the written agreement, which they executed in the mistaken belief that it correctly expressed their oral understanding. The attorney's draft, however, set forth a defective description of the existing property and made no reference to property thereafter to be acquired.

On October 20, 1954, Seymour executed a will in which he undertook to dispose of all of the community property, and Jennie executed a waiver of claim to her share of the community property in view of her election to accept the terms of the will.

Seymour died on March 2, 1955. The balance in the bank account was then $42,357.14. Jennie died on July 17, 1955.

Plaintiffs contend that they have stated a cause of action for reformation of the 1953 agreement, that under the agreement as reformed the balance of the account is community property, and that they are therefore entitled to administer it as such pursuant to the terms of the will and Jennie's waiver. Defendant contends, on the other hand, that whether reformed or not the agreement cannot operate to change the rights of the parties in the joint tenancy bank account, that title to it therefore vested in Jennie when she survived Seymour, and that since there is no allegation that any other property is affected by the agreement, its reformation would serve no purpose.

[1] The complaint states a cause of action for reformation of the 1953 agreement on the ground of mutual mistake (Civ.Code, § 3399; Murphy v. Rooney, 45 Cal. 78; Oatman v. Niemeyer, 207 Cal. 424, 425–427, 278 P. 1043; see Bailard v. Marden, 36 Cal.2d 703, 708, 227 P.2d 10) if such reformation would serve any interest of plaintiffs. Auerbach v. Healy, 174 Cal. 60, 63, 161 P. 1157. It would if the 1953 agreement could affect the rights of the parties in the joint account.

[2] Defendant invokes former section 15a of the California Bank Act (1 Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 652, pp. 221–222),* in effect at the time the joint account was opened, to establish that the 1953 agreement cannot operate to defeat Jennie's right of survivorship. That section provided in part: "When a deposit shall be made in any bank by any person or persons whether minor or adult in the names of such depositor or depositors and another person or persons, and in form to be paid to any of them or the survivor or survivors of them, such deposit and any additions thereto made by any such persons after the making thereof, shall become the property of such persons as joint tenants, and the deposit together with all dividends or interest thereon, shall be held for the exclusive use of such persons and may be paid to any of them during their lifetime or to the survivor or survivors after the death of one or more of them, and such payment and the receipt or acquittance of the person or persons to whom such payment is made shall be valid and sufficient release and discharge to such bank for all payments made on account of such deposit prior to the receipt by such bank of notice in writing not to pay such deposit in accordance with the terms thereof. The making of the deposit in such form shall, in the absence of fraud or undue influence, be conclusive evidence, in any action or proceeding to which either such bank or the surviving depositor or depositors may be a party, of the intention of such depositors to vest title to such deposit and the additions thereto in such survivor or survivors." (Italics added.) Since this section was in effect at the time the account was opened, it became a part of the contract of the parties. Comastri v. Burke, 137 Cal.App.2d 430, 434, 290 P.2d 663. Defendant accordingly contends that in the absence of fraud or undue influence, plaintiffs cannot now show that the parties did not intend that title should vest in the survivor.

[3] There is no doubt that under the statute the making of the deposit is conclusive evidence of the intention of the depositors at that time to vest title in the survivor. It does not follow, however, that the statute compels depositors thereafter to remain frozen to that intention. It in no way deprives the depositors of their freedom of contract to make subsequent agreements changing their interests in the account. Such freedom is expressly recognized in Civil Code section 1698, which provides that a "contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise." Section 15a cannot reasonably be interpreted to impair this freedom to alter one contract by another. There is nothing in its language that would justify such interpretation. The intention to which it refers is the intention manifested by the making of the deposit in the specified form and thus necessarily the intention existing at the time that form is used. Its constrained language cannot be enlarged to nullify any subsequent contracts between the depositors and thereby to repeal by implication Civil Code section 1698.

This interpretation of section 15a in no way departs from the parol evidence rule. "Extrinsic evidence is excluded because it cannot serve to prove what the agreement was, this being determined as a matter of law to be the writing itself. The rule comes into operation when there is a single and final memorial of the understanding of the parties. When that takes place, prior and contemporaneous negotiations, oral or written, are excluded; or, as it is sometimes said, the written memorial supersedes these prior or contemporaneous negotiations." In re Estate of Gaines, 15 Cal.2d 255, 265, 100 P.2d 1055, 1060. Obviously, however, it has no corresponding power to preclude future negotiations. "Any contract, however made or evidenced, can be discharged or modified by subsequent agreement of the parties. No contract whether oral or written can be varied, contradicted, or discharged by an antecedent agreement. Today may control the effect of what happened yesterday; but what happened yesterday cannot change the effect of what happens today. This, it is believed, is the substance of what has been unfortunately called the 'parol evidence rule.'" 3 Corbin on Contracts, § 574, pp. 222–223; see also, 3 Williston on Contracts (Rev. ed.), § 632, p. 1817; McKeon v. Giusto, 44 Cal.2d 152, 156–157, 280 P.2d 782, and cases cited. Paterson v. Comastri, 39 Cal.2d 66, 244 P.2d 902; Medeiros v. Cotta, 134 Cal.App.2d 452, 286 P.2d 546; Comastri v. Burke, 137 Cal.App.2d 430, 290 P.2d 663, and other cases interpreting section 15a of the Bank Act are not to the contrary, for none of them involved a subsequent agreement changing the rights of the depositors in a joint account.

Even if section 15a were interpreted to deprive the depositors of their freedom to make subsequent contracts changing their rights in the joint account, there could be no such deprivation following the repeal of that section in 1949. Section 852 of the Financial Code based thereon not only omits the provision making the form of the deposit conclusive evidence of the intent of the parties to vest title in the survivor, but expressly recognizes that the deposit agreement may not accurately reflect the interests of the depositors in the account. It provides that the bank may refuse payment after notice from a depositor "not to permit withdrawals in accordance with the terms of the account * * *. After receipt of such notice, a bank may refuse, without liability, to honor any check, receipt, or withdrawal order on the account pending determination of the rights of the parties."

[4–8] Although the repealed provision of section 15a was a part of the joint deposit agreement entered into while it was in effect, since its repeal, any restriction it might theretofore have imposed on the depositors' power to contract could survive only by virtue of its continued existence as part of the contract of the parties. The parties could not, however, contract away their power to contract in the future, for the law, not private agreement, determines the essential elements of a valid contract. See, 6 Corbin on Contracts, § 1295, pp. 158–161. A husband and wife may change the character of their property by agreement. Civ.Code, § 158; In re Estate of Wieling, 37 Cal.2d 106, 108, 230 P.2d 808. Clearly implict in the 1953 agreement in this case was the mutual abrogation by the parties of any conflicting provision in their joint tenancy agreement. Their abrogation was effective, since they were free to contract in 1953 without regard to any limitations imposed by the repealed provision.

Ehrman v. Rosenthal, 117 Cal. 491, 49 P. 460, and Fitts v. Mission Health & Beauty Shop, 58 Cal.App. 362, 208 P. 691, cited by defendant are not to the contrary. Those cases correctly hold that two parties to a tripartite agreement cannot change it to the prejudice of the third party. In the present case the bank will in no way be prejudiced by recognizing its depositors' subsequent agreement between themselves.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Respondent,

v.

John DEWBERRY, Appellant.

Cr. 6335.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Feb. 6, 1959.

Prosecution for murder and for unlawful carrying of a weapon. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Walter Carpeneti, J., entered orders denying new trial and the defendant appealed from judgment and order pertaining to the murder charge. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that failure to instruct jury that, if they were convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was guilty of an offense included within charge of indictment but entertained doubt as to whether it was murder or manslaughter, they should convict defendant only of manslaughter, was error.

Judgment and order denying a new trial reversed as to murder count, and affirmed in other respects.

McComb, J., dissented in part.

Opinion, 327 P.2d 616, vacated.

1. Homicide ⇐268

In prosecution for murder allegedly committed by defendant when decedent took some of defendant's money which he had spread out on a bar and refused to return it to defendant when he demanded it, evidence was sufficient to make a submissible case. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 187, 188.

2. Criminal Law ⇐785(8)

In prosecution for murder and for unlawful possession of a pistol because of prior felony convictions, requested instruction that conviction of a felony may be considered only for purpose of judging credibility of witness and conviction does not necessarily destroy or impair witness' credibility and does not raise a presumption that witness has testified falsely, was properly refused. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 12021.

3. Homicide ⇐307(1)

In prosecution for murder and for unlawful carrying of a weapon, failure to instruct jury that, if they were convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was guilty of an offense included within the charge of the indictment but entertained doubt as to whether it was murder or manslaughter, they should convict defendant only of manslaughter, was error. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1097.

4. Criminal Law ⇐795(4)

When evidence is sufficient to support a finding of guilt of both the offense charged and a lesser included offense, jury must be instructed that if they entertain reasonable doubt as to which offense has been committed, they must find defendant guilty only of lesser offense. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 1097.

5. Criminal Law ⇐571

Statute providing that where it appears that defendant has committed a public offense and there is reasonable ground of doubt of which of two or more degrees he is guilty, he can be convicted of lowest of such degrees only, presupposes that jury has concluded that defendant is guilty of some public offense embraced within pleadings but is in doubt as to degree of offense proved. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1097.

6. Homicide ⇐21

An unlawful killing may involve not only two degrees of murder, but also included offense of manslaughter.

7. Criminal Law ⇐571

Under statute providing that where it appears that defendant has committed a "public offense" and there is reasonable ground of doubt as to which of two or more "degrees" he is guilty, he can be convicted of lowest of such degrees only, the quoted words refer to all degrees of criminality involved in a criminal act. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1097.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Degrees" and "Public Offense".

8. Criminal Law ⇐561(1)

Principle of reasonable doubt requires an acquittal of an offense when prosecution has not met its burden of proof, and when reasonable doubt exists as between degrees of same offense or as between inclusive and included offense, jury can only convict of crime whose elements have been proved beyond a reasonable doubt. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 1097.

Gladstein, Andersen, Leonard & Sibbett, George R. Andersen and Norman Leonard, San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., and John S. McInerny, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction entered on a jury verdict finding him guilty of second degree murder and of a violation of section 12021 of the Penal Code (possession of a pistol by an ex-convict). He also appeals from the order denying his motion for a new trial. He contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict and that the refusal to give certain requested instructions was prejudicial error.

[1] The circumstances of the homicide were related at the trial by two witnesses, Jesse Mosley and defendant. Mosley testified that about 7:30 A. M. on Sunday, October 14, 1956, he went to a bar in San Francisco. He sat near the door and consumed two bourbon highballs. He had been in the bar about forty-five minutes when defendant entered and sat about 10 feet from him. Mosley did not know defendant, but had seen him before and had heard his name. Defendant went to the telephone several times and complained about not being able to reach his sister.

In the course of a conversation about gambling between defendant and another customer defendant took a large roll of bills from his pocket. The two agreed to gamble and defendant stated that he did not want any foolishness about his money and that he carried his own protection. He then showed the revolver he was carrying. Defendant repocketed the pistol and the two left the bar. A short time later, defendant returned.

The deceased, Rudolf Glover, entered the bar at about 9 A. M. with a woman whom he introduced as his wife to Mosley and the others. Glover and defendant each bought a round of drinks for the six or seven other customers.

About 10:45 A. M. the television set was turned on for a Forty-Niner football game. Mosley moved to a booth in the rear to see better. About this time defendant told the bartender he wished to take care of his bill and spread his roll of money on the bar.

A few minutes later, two people sat in front of Mosley and blocked his view of the screen, so he started back to his original seat. As he was walking toward the front of the bar he heard defendant accuse Glover of taking his money and demand its return. Glover stated that he was not taking defendant's money but merely keeping it for him to protect him. Defendant told Glover that he did not need his protection, that he had his own protection. Both defendant and Glover were standing, about three bar stools or ten feet apart. Defendant again demanded that Glover return the money.

In the course of the argument, Mosley saw Glover put his hand in his pocket and pass something to Mrs. Glover. Defendant then told Mrs. Glover to put his money on the bar and repeated his demand to Glover. Thereupon defendant took out his revolver, cocked it, and fired once. Glover turned and fell. At no time did Mosley hear Glover threaten defendant or see him make a move toward defendant.

Defendant turned Glover over and went through his pockets. Mrs. Glover began to cry as she put her head on Glover's chest. She then started for the door, but defendant asked her for the rest of his money. When she failed to give it to him, he hit her in the face, knocking her down. He pointed the pistol at her and said, "If you don't give me my money I will kill you too." Mosley took the money from Mrs. Glover. Defendant had the bartender count it for him and when he was told the amount he stated that he was still about $100 short.

Meanwhile, someone had called an ambulance and the police. Officer Dobleman testified that when he arrived at the bar, defendant handed him a .38 calibre revolver with five live rounds and one discharged shell in the cylinder. Defendant told the officer, "He tried to take my money and I did it." Shortly thereafter defendant made substantially the same statement to Inspector McDonald of the homicide detail. It appeared to the officers that at the time he was questioned defendant had been drinking but was in full control of his faculties and had no trouble speaking.

Defendant testified that he was a professional gambler and a car salesman and admitted two prior felony convictions. He had spend the previous night drinking and gambling in San Mateo, had met a friend in San Francisco about 5:00 A. M., had a few more drinks, and went to the bar about 8:00 A. M. He was waiting there to get in touch with his sister to give her money for the care of his mother. While he was waiting, he talked to another customer about gambling, but he denied showing him the pistol. He went upstairs and gambled with him for about forty-five minutes and won $55.

When he returned to the bar, he had a brief conversation with the bartender about his bar bill. He paid it and then spread his money out along the bar so that the could arrange it according to denomination. He knew he had $1,252. While he was sorting and arranging the money, Mrs. Glover told him to take it off the bar. Defendant told her to mind her own business and she walked away. Glover then walked to the bar and picked up the money. Defendant stopped him and asked him to return it. Glover put some money back on the bar, but defendant could see that five $100 bills were missing. At defendant's request, the bartender counted the money and found about $700. After defendant's repeated demands for the return of his money, Glover reached in his pocket and raised his arm toward defendant. Glover had told defendant that if he did not shut up he would lose more than his money. One James McCoy had told him that the deceased had a reputation of being belligerent. Defendant said he tried to fire the pistol to the right of Glover, but with no intention to hit him. He had won the weapon in the game in San Mateo and was not sure it was loaded until he pulled the trigger. He denied threatening Mrs. Glover.

The testimony of the autopsy surgeon tended to corroborate defendant's story about Glover's raising his arm toward defendant. James McCoy, called by the People in rebuttal, denied telling defendant anything about Glover.

There is no merit in defendant's contention that the evidence was insufficient to support the conviction of second-degree murder. Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being, with malice aforethought. Pen.Code, § 187. Such malice may be express or implied. It is express when there is manifested a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow-creature. It is implied, when no considerable provocation appears, or when the circumstances attending the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart. Pen.Code, § 188. The jury could reasonably conclude from the testimony of the prosecution's eyewitness that defendant shot the deceased without the provocation necessary to make the homicide manslaughter or the deliberation and premeditation necessary to make it first-degree murder. Defendant's testimony of provocation served only to create a conflict in the evidence. People v. Wein, 50 Cal.2d 383, 326 P.2d 457; People v. Brust, 47 Cal.2d 776, 783, 306 P.2d 480; People v. Pope, 130 Cal.App.2d 321, 325, 279 P.2d 108.

[2] Defendant contends that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction:

> "The fact that a witness had been convicted of a felony, if such be a fact, may be considered by you for only one purpose, namely, in judging the credibility of that witness. The fact of such a conviction does not necessarily destroy or impair the witness's credibility, and it does not raise a presumption that the witness has testified falsely. It is simply one of the circumstances that you are to take into consideration in weighing the testimony of such a witness."

The jury was instructed that it was for them alone to judge the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given the evidence offered; that every person is presumed to speak the truth; and that a witness may be impeached by inconsistent statements, by contradictory evidence, or by evidence that he has been convicted of a felony. These instructions correctly stated the law. Moreover, under the circumstances of the present case, the requested instruction was incorrect. Defendant's convictions were not in the evidence "for only one purpose, namely, in judging the credibility of that witness." They were an essential element in the charged violation of the Deadly Weapons Act. Pen.Code, § 12021.

[3] Defendant's most serious contention is that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction:

"You may find the defendant guilty of any offense, the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged, if, in your judgment, the evidence supports such a verdict under my instructions.

"To enable you to apply the foregoing instruction, if your findings of fact require you to do so, I instruct you that the offense of murder, of which the defendant is charged in Count I of the indictment, necessarily includes the crime of manslaughter.

"If you find that defendant was guilty of an offense included within the charge of the indictment, but entertain a reasonable doubt as to the degree of the crime of which he is guilty, it is your duty to convict him only of the lesser offense." (CALJIC [1946 ed.] Instructions Nos. 115–115A.)

The jury was instructed on the elements of the crimes of murder and manslaughter. The court explained that there are two degrees of murder and that if the jurors were convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant had committed the crime of murder but entertained a reasonable doubt as to the degree, they should give defendant the benefit of the doubt and find him guilty of second degree murder. The jury was also instructed that if they were in doubt as to whether the killing was manslaughter or justifiable homicide, defendant was to be acquitted. Finally, the court instructed the jury that defendant was presumed innocent of any crime until the contrary had been proved, and in case of reasonable doubt, was entitled to an acquittal, and that the presumption of innocence attaches at every stage of the case and to every fact essential to a conviction.

Defendant contends that because the instructions on manslaughter were not accompanied with the further instruction that in the case of a reasonable doubt as between second degree murder and manslaughter, defendant was to be found guilty of manslaughter, the jury was given the impression that the rule requiring a finding of guilt of the lesser offense applied only as between degrees of murder.

[4] It has been consistently held in this state since 1880 that when the evidence is sufficient to support a finding of guilt of both the offense charged and a lesser included offense, the jury must be instructed that if they entertain a reasonable doubt as to which offense has been committed, they must find the defendant guilty only of the lesser offense. People v. Iams, 57 Cal. 115, 121, 130; People v. Newcomer, 118 Cal. 263, 270–271, 50 P. 405; People v. Marshall, 120 Cal. 70, 70–71, 52 P. 129; People v. Burns, 88 Cal.App.2d 867, 871–873, 200 P.2d 134; see also, McAffee v. United States, 70 App.D.C. 142, 105 F.2d 21, 31; People v. Marquis, 153 Cal.App.2d 553, 556–558, 315 P.2d 57; People v. Miller, 67 Cal.App. 674, 678–679, 228 P. 68; 20 A.L.R. 1258, 1259; 26 Am.Jur., Homicide, § 541. The People contend, however, that this rule is inconsistent with section 1097 of the Penal Code, which provides that "When it appears that the defendant has committed a public offense, and there is reasonable ground of doubt in which of two or more degrees he is guilty, he can be convicted of the lowest of such degrees only." They contend that this section is limited on its face to degrees of the same offense and that the proposed instruction is therefore erroneous because murder and manslaughter are distinct offenses.

[5–7] Section 1097 presupposes that the jury has concluded that the defendant is guilty of some public offense embraced within the pleadings but is in doubt as to the degree of the offense proved. The question presented is whether the words "offense" and "degrees" refer only to the specifically defined degrees of a single offense, or refer to all the degrees of criminality that may be involved in a criminal act. Thus, an unlawful killing may involve not only the two degrees of murder, but also the included offense of manslaughter. There is no reason for not applying the general principle of reasonable doubt to both situations. Given the overriding basic principle of reasonable doubt, the admonition that the Penal Code is to be interpreted "with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice" (Pen.Code, § 4), and the anomaly that would otherwise result, we conclude that the words "offense" and "degrees" in section 1097 refer to all the degrees of criminality involved in a criminal act.

[8] Even if we were to conclude, however, that section 1097 refers only to specifically defined degrees of single offenses divided into degrees, it would not follow that the instruction is erroneous. In every case the principle of reasonable doubt requires an acquittal of an offense when the prosecution has not met its burden of proof. Thus, whether reasonable doubt exists as between degrees of the same offense or as between the inclusive and included offense, the jury can only convict of the crime whose elements have been proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Narrowly construed, section 1097 at most illustrates the application of the rule in the case of crimes divided into degrees. It does not abrogate its application in other situations. See Southern Cal. Gas Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 50 Cal.2d 713, 329 P.2d 289; City of Los Angeles v. City of Glendale, 23 Cal. 2d 68, 77, 142 P.2d 289; Strand Improvement Co. v. City of Long Beach, 173 Cal. 765, 772–773, 161 P. 975. Accordingly, under either interpretation, it affords no basis for departing from the settled law. People v. Iams, supra, 57 Cal. 115, 121, 130; People v. Newcomer, supra, 118 Cal. 263, 270–271, 50 P. 405; People v. Marshall, supra, 120 Cal. 70, 70–71, 52 P. 129; People v. Burns, supra, 88 Cal.App.2d 867, 871–873, 200 P.2d 134; see also, McAffee v. United States, supra, 105 F.2d 21, 31; People v. Marquis, supra, 153 Cal.App.2d 553, 556–558, 315 P.2d 57; People v. Miller, supra, 67 Cal.App. 674, 678–679, 228 P. 68; 20 A.L.R. 1258, 1259; 26 Am.Jur., Homicide, § 541.

The People contend, however, that the proposed instruction is erroneous in its statement of the rule of reasonable doubt between second degree murder and manslaughter. They object to the language that if you "entertain a reasonable doubt as to the degree of the crime of which he is guilty, it is your duty to convict him only of the lesser offense." They point out that it is only murder that is divided into degrees and contend that the jury would relate "degree of the crime" to degrees of murder, "lesser offense" to manslaughter, and conclude that under the proposed instruction doubt as to the degree of murder would require a verdict of manslaughter. The instruction cannot reasonably be construed to reach such an obviously absurd result. When read in context it is obvious that "degree of the crime" refers, not to degrees of murder alone, but to degrees of criminal homicide including manslaughter, and that "lesser offense" refers to the lesser of the two degrees of criminal homicide between which the doubt exists. It thus makes clear that the principle of reasonable doubt applies not only between first and second degree murder but also between second degree murder and manslaughter.

The failure of the trial court to instruct on the effect of a reasonable doubt as between any of the included offenses, when it had instructed as to the effect of such doubt as between the two highest offenses, and as between the lowest offense and justifiable homicide, left the instructions with the clearly erroneous implication that the rule requiring a finding of guilt of the lesser offense applied only as between first and second degree murder. This case was a close one on its facts. While there was sufficient evidence to support a conviction of second degree murder, a finding that the offense was manslaughter would be equally warranted. Even if the jury disbelieved defendant's testimony that he did not intend to hit Glover and concluded that the crime was not involuntary manslaughter, it was still presented with substantial evidence of provocation, much of which was undisputed, that would support a finding of voluntary manslaughter. See People v. Keel, 91 Cal.App. 599, 604–606, 267 P. 161. Glover had taken defendant's money and only returned part of it, passing the rest to his wife. Defendant could reasonably conclude that Glover intended to steal his money, and he testified that Glover made a menacing gesture toward him and told him that if he did not shut up he would lose more than his money. Defendant was entitled to have this evidence considered in the light of the rule of reasonable doubt, not only on the issue of self defense, but also on the issue of provocation sufficient to reduce the killing from second degree murder to manslaughter. The record demonstrates that the jury considered the distinction between these offenses crucial and had difficulty with it. Six hours after the case was submitted to them, they returned to the courtroom and requested "once again the legal interpretation of murder in the second degree and voluntary manslaughter," and again the defendant requested that his instruction be given, and again his request was denied.

The proposed instruction should have been given. It went directly to the defense of reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt of second degree murder; it was clearly responsive to an issue raised by the evidence (People v. Carnine, 41 Cal.2d 384, 389–390, 260 P.2d 16; People v. Hudson, 45 Cal.2d 121, 126, 287 P.2d 497), and it was essential to cure the misleading effect of its absence in the light of the other instructions given. Under these circumstances there exists "such an equal balance of reasonable probabilities as to leave the court in serious doubt as to whether the error has affected the result," and accordingly the error is prejudicial. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 837, 299 P.2d 243, 255. The error did not, however, have any bearing on defendant's conviction of violating Penal Code section 12021.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed as to count one charging murder. In all other respects they are affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Respondent,

v.

Vender Lee DUNCAN, Appellant.

Cr. 6287.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Feb. 3, 1959.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, C. Harold Caulfield, J., for first-degree murder, and he appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that the trial court had properly denied defendant's request, made after fixing of death penalty and prior to commencement of sanity proceeding, that he be permitted to conduct further voir dire examination of jurors to determine whether they had become biased as a result of fixing of that penalty.

Affirmed.

1. Homicide ⇐228(1)

Corpus delicti of first-degree murder consists of two elements, namely, death of victim and existence of some criminal agency as cause.

2. Criminal Law ⇐517(4)

Once prima facie proof of corpus delicti is made, extrajudicial statements, admissions and confessions of defendant may be considered in determining whether all of elements of crime have been established.

3. Homicide ⇐253(1)

In homicide prosecution, evidence, exclusive of defendant's confessions, was sufficient to establish commission of first-degree murder. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 189.

4. Criminal Law ⇐404(4)

In homicide prosecution, 12-inch pipe taken from defendant at time he was arrested as a vagrant was relevant in connection with his statement that he had struck victim with a piece of pipe.

5. Searches and Seizures ⇐3(1)

Under circumstances disclosed, in homicide prosecution, officers, who had observed defendant acting suspiciously after midnight in neighborhood where attacks had occurred, and who had observed table knife protruding from his pocket, were justified in questioning and searching defendant.

6. Criminal Law ⇐384

In homicide prosecution, it was not error to reject defendant's offer to prove that another crime, similar in circumstances to the ones for which he was being prosecuted, had occurred while he was in custody.

7. Criminal Law ⇐625, 1206(1)

Penal Code section, providing for separate trials of issues of guilt, penalty, and sanity, is constitutional. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 190.1.

8. Jury ⇐131(11)

In homicide prosecution, trial court properly denied defendant's request, made after fixing of death penalty and prior to commencement of sanity proceeding, that he be permitted to conduct further voir dire examination of jurors to determine whether they had become biased as a result of fixing of that penalty. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 190.1.

9. Criminal Law ⇐854(8)

In homicide prosecution, it was not error to permit jury to separate after it had returned verdict of guilty of murder in first degree but prior to commencement of sanity proceeding. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.1.

10. Criminal Law ⇐871(2)

In homicide prosecution, verdicts relative to penalty and to sanity were not rendered invalid by fact that they were not signed by foreman who had signed verdicts of guilty but, instead, were signed by different foremen. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.1.

Edward T. Mancuso, Public Defender, and Waldo F. Postel, Jr., Asst. Public Defender, San Francisco, for appellant.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

A jury found defendant guilty of two counts of first degree murder. In separate proceedings the penalty was fixed at death for each count, and defendant was found to have been sane when the offenses were committed. Pen.Code, § 190.1. His motions for a new trial and modification of the verdicts were denied, and he was sentenced to death. This appeal comes before us automatically. Pen.Code, § 1239, subd. (b).

Two police officers found the dead body of Elizabeth Manning on September 4, 1955, in her apartment on Webster Street near Fulton Street in San Francisco. About $65 in currency and some silver were missing. Mrs. Manning, who was about 75 years old, had been beaten about the head, face, neck and chest, a number of bones had been fractured, there were injuries to her genitalia, and spermatozoa were present in her vagina. The autopsy surgeon testified that Mrs. Manning's death was due to strangulation.

Mrs. Ada Romig, an elderly woman, was found on April 5, 1957, in a vacant lot which ran from Fulton to Grove Street between Fillmore and Webster Streets in San Francisco. She had been attacked at the Grove Street end of the lot and dragged through it to where she was found near Fulton. There were extensive injuries about her head, face and neck. A small abrasion was found on the inside of the left thigh, and the opening to the vagina was badly bruised and bleeding. She died on May 9, 1957, as a result of the injuries. Officers searched the lot and found articles of her clothing in several places, but they did not find her purse.

Approximately three weeks after the attack on Mrs. Romig, police officers observed defendant and another man some time after midnight on the corner of Octavia and McAllister Streets, four and a half blocks from the lot where the attack occurred. Defendant and the other man made a number of starts in different directions but each time went back to the corner. When defendant saw the officers he turned around and started to walk in another direction. The officers approached defendant, saw the blade of a table knife protruding from his pocket, and took the knife from him. They questioned him as to his reason for being in the area, and he gave several conflicting stories. He was placed under arrest as a vagrant, and, when he was searched, the officers found a 12-inch pipe with an elbow on it inside the front of his trousers.

In November 1957, while serving a county jail sentence for another offense, defendant asked to speak to members of the homicide department. He told the officers that in the early part of September 1955 he had killed a woman with whom he had been having an "affair" and that he had taken two watches and $35 from her.

The police officers asked defendant to show them where the crime had taken place, and he directed them to 804 Webster Street, the location of Mrs. Manning's apartment. Upon arriving there he said that his earlier statement was false in some respects, that he wanted to correct it, that he had never seen Mrs. Manning before he entered her apartment, that she awoke and started to scream as he was taking about $200 from a drawer, that he hit her numerous times and started to choke her, that he then took about $30 from her purse, and that after she again cried out he raped and choked her. At the time the police officers discovered Mrs. Manning's body the front and rear doors of the apartment were locked, and the only apparent method of entry was through an unlatched window. When asked how he entered the apartment, defendant led the officers to a garbage pail, which was under the steps of the adjoining home and not visible from the street, and showed them how he had placed it under the window and climbed into the room. He also said that he had wrapped his hands in handkerchiefs so that he would leave no fingerprints.

A few days later defendant told police officers he had killed another woman in a lot on Fillmore Street, and he directed them to the place where Mrs. Romig had been attacked. He told the officers that he accosted Mrs. Romig at the corner of Grove and Webster Streets and, after threatening her with a knife, forced her into the lot where he shoved her to the ground, choked her with a piece of wire, struck her repeatedly over the head with a piece of pipe, a cement brick and other things, and then began an act of intercourse. Due to light in the area and the sound of voices he became afraid that someone might see or hear him, and he dragged her to an opening between a wall and a shed. Mrs. Romig began to moan, so he dragged her farther into the lot and again had an act of intercourse but stopped when he was frightened by some noise. He moved her to another portion of the lot and took fifty cents and some codeine from her purse.

Defendant repeated his confessions the next day, and his statements, which were recorded and which the jury heard, were substantially the same as those he had previously given to the police at the scenes of the crimes.

At the trial defendant admitted making the confessions but denied that he had committed either of the crimes and said that he made the confessions because he wanted to die and that he had attempted suicide three times previously. He explained his knowledge of the crimes by stating that he learned some of the details from newspaper accounts and some from seeing police reports on an occasion when he was arrested in 1956, and that with respect to others he had been prompted by the police when he was taken to the scenes of the crimes. On cross-examination he admitted prior convictions of rape and assault to commit murder.

There is no claim that the evidence is insufficient to support defendant's conviction of the murder of Mrs. Manning.

[1–3] With respect to the Romig homicide, defendant contends that every element of the corpus delicti, including the degree of the crime, must be established without reference to his extrajudicial statements, and he asserts that any question of the homicide occurring during the commission of a robbery or rape was raised by his confession and that the People, as a matter of law, established only a murder in the second degree. It is settled, however, that the corpus delicti in a case involving first degree murder consists of two elements, namely, the death of the victim and the existence of some criminal agency as the cause. People v. Cullen, 37 Cal.2d 614, 624–625, 234 P.2d 1; People v. Ives, 17 Cal.2d 459, 463–464, 110 P.2d 408. Once prima facie proof of the corpus delicti is made, the extrajudicial statements, admissions, and confessions of a defendant may be considered in determining whether all the elements of the crime have been established. People v. McMonigle, 29 Cal.2d 730, 738–740, 177 P.2d 745. It is clear from the evidence other than the confessions that Mrs. Romig met her death through a criminal agency. Moreover, the circumstantial evidence, without the confessions, is sufficient to establish the commission of first degree murder, since it supports an inference that Mrs. Romig was killed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate, rape. Pen.Code, § 189; cf. People v. Sameniego, 118 Cal.App. 165, 170–171, 4 P.2d 809, 5 P.2d 653.

[4, 5] The 12-inch pipe taken from defendant at the time he was arrested as a vagrant was relevant in connection with his statement that he had struck Mrs. Romig with a piece of pipe. An objection that the pipe was obtained as the result of an unlawful search and seizure was properly overruled. In view of the circumstances related above, the officers were clearly justified in questioning and searching defendant.

[6] Defendant contends that the trial court erroneously rejected his offer to prove that in March 1958, when he was in custody, a third woman was murdered in San Francisco, that she had been strangled, and that she had suffered injuries similar to those inflicted upon Mrs. Manning and Mrs. Romig. He argues that the offered evidence would have tended to show that the same person committed all the crimes and that, since defendant could not have committed the third murder, he was innocent. However, the facts which defendant sought to prove are at best too remotely connected wtih the issues of this case to show that the trial court erred in refusing the offer.

After the jurors had been deliberating the issue of sanity for several hours they returned to the courtroom and asked whether, if defendant was sane at the inception of the crime, they were to infer from this that he was legally sane throughout the crime. In reply the judge repeated instructions previously given on sanity, including directions that the jury must determine whether defendant was sane or insane at the time of the commission of the offenses and ascertain the condition of his mind at the "precise times" of the criminal conduct of which he "has been found guilty." The judge remarked that he realized it would be difficult for the jurors to determine the mental condition of a person at any definite period during the commission of a crime, and defendant asserts that this remark took from the jury the right to find that he became legally insane before committing murder or rape if the jury found that he was sane when he commenced the crime of burglary or assault and battery in Mrs. Manning's apartment or when he forced Mrs. Romig into the lot. The instructions informed the jury that its duty was to determine defendant's mental condition at the time of the consummation of the crimes of which he was convicted, namely, the murders, and there is no sound basis for concluding that the remark in question was understood as anything more than a recognition that the performance of that duty would be difficult.

[7] There is no merit in defendant's contentions that section 190.1 of the Penal Code, adopted in 1957, which provides for separate trials of the issues of guilt, penalty, and sanity, is unconstitutional. People v. Feldkamp, 51 Cal.2d 237, 331 P.2d 632; People v. Ward, 50 Cal.2d 702, 328 P. 2d 777; cf. People v. Cordova, 14 Cal.2d 308, 309 et seq., 94 P.2d 40.

[8] The trial court properly denied defendant's request, made after the fixing of the death penalty and prior to the commencement of the sanity proceeding, that he be permitted to conduct further voir dire examination of the jurors to determine whether they had become biased as a result of the fixing of that penalty. Section 190.1 of the Penal Code provides that, where the defendant is convicted by a jury of an offense which may involve the death penalty, the same jury shall determine the issues of penalty and insanity "unless, for good cause shown, the court discharges that jury * * *." The section clearly contemplates that a jury, after fixing the penalty at death, may be called upon to determine the question of insanity and that the imposition of the death penalty, without more, does not constitute bias on the part of the jurors or good cause for discharge. Defendant conceded to the trial court that he had no information in his possession indicating disqualification of any of the jurors, and he admitted that he had been given opportunity before the jurors were sworn to examine them as to whether or not their judgment on the issue of sanity would be affected by the fixing of the death penalty. In an analogous situation involving the death penalty prior to the enactment of section 190.1, it was held that the trial court was not required to let the defendant re-examine the jurors for cause after trial of the general issue and before the proceeding to determine sanity. People v. Goodwin, 9 Cal.2d 711, 715, 72 P.2d 551; see People v. Wein, 50 Cal.2d 383, 408, 326 P.2d 457; cf. People v. Woods, 19 Cal.App.2d 556, 558, 65 P.2d 940; People v. Foster, 3 Cal.App.2d 35, 39–40, 39 P.2d 271; People v. Davis, 94 Cal.App. 192, 197, 270 P. 715.

[9] There was no error in permitting the jury to separate after it returned the verdicts of guilty of murder of the first degree. Section 190.1 of the Penal Code, as we have seen, provides for separate proceedings on the issues of guilt, penalty, and sanity, and, under certain circumstances, it permits the hearing of these issues by different juries. The trial of the issues of penalty and sanity may take several days, and there does not seem to be any greater reason to prevent the jury from separating prior to or during these proceedings than during the trial of the issue of guilt.

[10] The verdicts relative to penalty and to sanity were not rendered invalid by the fact that they were not signed by the foreman who signed the verdicts of guilty but, instead, were signed by different foremen. No reason appears why the jury should not be permitted to choose different foremen for the separate proceedings upon the issues of guilt, penalty, and sanity.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Nick VANGEL et al., Respondents,

v.

Charles VANGEL, Appellant.

L. A. 24725.

Supreme Court of California,

In Bank.

Feb. 3, 1959.

Action for dissolution of partnership and for accounting. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., rendered judgment, and the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that where amounts due partner causing dissolution of partnership, as his original share of partnership assets, had been deposited to his order, no profits were thereafter due him from the use of such assets.

Affirmed.

Opinion, 327 P.2d 136, vacated.

1. Partnership ⇐328(3)

In action for dissolution of partnership, evidence warranted finding that partner who was expelled from partnership for cause and by judicial decree and who continued to participate with former partners in operation and management of business without protest and with acquiescence of former partners was entitled to compensation for such services at rate of $200 per month.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1097(1), 1195(1)

In action for dissolution of partnership, where it was decided on former appeal that certain amounts were properly disposed of in determining net worth of partnership on date of dissolution, the matter was res judicata and could not be relitigated in subsequent proceedings in the trial or appellate courts.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1097(1), 1195(1)

In action for dissolution of partnership, where it was determined on prior appeal that trial court properly applied the statute relating to continuation of partnership business by partners not causing the dissolution, the party causing the dissolution could not assert in subsequent proceedings that statute was not properly applied. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 15038(2)(b).

4. Appeal and Error ⇐1195(1)

Where value of partnership's ranch on date of dissolution had been fixed and on review such valuation was declared to be "definitive of that question", the partner causing dissolution could not thereafter assert right to share on a different valuation based on what the ranch, because of its location, would be worth for subdivision purposes.

5. Partnership ⇐306

Where amounts due partner causing dissolution of partnership, as his original share of partnership assets, had been deposited to his order, no profits were thereafter due him from the use of such assets.

CARTER, Justice.

Defendant, Charles Vangel, appeals from a judgment entered in an action instituted in April, 1946, by plaintiffs, Nick and Ernest Vangel, for dissolution of a partnership. The case has now been tried four times and this appeal is from the judgment entered after the fourth trial. Vangel v. Vangel, 116 Cal.App.2d 615, 254 P.2d 919; Vangel v. Vangel, 45 Cal.2d 804, 291 P.2d 25, 55 A.L.R.2d 138.

In May, 1944, Nick, Ernest and Charles Vangel, brothers, entered into an agreement for the purchase and operation of a 360-acre citrus ranch. The agreement provided that title was to be taken in the individual names of the three brothers, each of whom was to contribute his pro rata share of the purchase price and each to own a one-third interest in the ranch. The purchase of the ranch was consummated for $340,000, with a down payment of $120,000. Charles was unable to pay his full share of the down payment and borrowed $25,000 from Nick and Ernest to make up his share of $40,000.

After operations had commenced a dispute arose among the brothers which culminated in an action by Nick and Ernest to dissolve the partnership. Inasmuch as our decision here must necessarily turn upon a construction of the opinion rendered by the District Court of Appeal in Vangel v. Vangel, 116 Cal.App.2d 615, 254 P.2d 919, and by this court on December 23, 1955, we will set forth in some detail the pertinent portions thereof. Unless otherwise noted, the emphasis is here added. In Vangel v. Vangel, 45 Cal.2d 804, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 291 P.2d 25, 26–29, we held: "By the prior judgment, a dissolution was decreed effective as of June 15, 1950. The court found that Charles wrongfully caused the dissolution and concluded that Nick and Ernest were privileged to purchase his interest. The value of the ranch was fixed at $235,000, and a finding was made as to the value of Charles' interest in the partnership. According to another finding, he was entitled to participate in profits accruing between the date of dissolution and January 1, 1951.

"Upon the prior appeal [Vangel v. Vangel, 116 Cal.App.2d 615, 254 P.2d 919], findings as to the value of the ranch property and Charles' fault in causing the dissolution were approved. It was held that the trial judge properly allowed the plaintiffs to purchase Charles' interest, but that he erred in failing to include certain items in his valuation of it. Furthermore, said the District Court of Appeal, the right of Charles to participate in profits accumulated by joint use of the partnership assets should not have been terminated as of January 1, 1951. That period, it was determined, should extend so as to include the proceeds from fruit substantially matured and soon ready for marketing, the final date to be left to the sound judgment of the chancellor. As to those matters, the judgment was reversed with directions for an accounting.

"The amounts of profits from the operation of the ranch after dissolution of the partnership and of set-offs, claims and advances, as determined upon the retrial, are not now disputed. The value of Charles' interest in the partnership at the time of dissolution based upon those amounts, was found to be 23.96% of the partnership net worth. The court also declared that Charles is entitled to that percentage of the profits from the operation of the ranch accruing between the date of dissolution and the winding up of the partnership affairs. Another finding is that 'whatever services defendant may have rendered toward the conduct of the partnership affairs, from the date of the dissolution of the partnership * * * was voluntary on his part and against the wishes and directions of the plaintiffs.'

"The judgment gives Nick and Ernest, inter alia, the right to purchase Charles' interest in the partnership for its value as determined at the retrial, plus interest on that amount from September 8, 1953. Charles is allowed 23.96% of the profits accruing prior to that date and the same percentage of certain proceeds from sales of crops. He is denied any wages for services performed after the dissolution of the partnership and must pay 23.96% of the costs of the audit.

"Charles contends that the trial judge erred in his computations of the values at the time of the dissolution, of the respective partnership interests and of the partners' shares of the profits accruing between dissolution and the winding up of the partnership affairs. He also challenges the finding that his post-dissolution services were 'voluntary' and 'against the wishes and directions of the plaintiffs' as being without support in the evidence. Finally, he contends that he should not have been taxed any of the costs of conducting the audit upon the retrial.

"With regard to the value of the partnership interests, Charles argues that the trial judge erred in including in the partners' capital accounts items which properly are personal obligations of the partners inter sese. He objects particularly to the inclusion of an item of $25,000, advanced to him by the other partners upon the purchase of the ranch, and another one of $42,000, which his brothers assertedly withdrew improperly from partnership funds.

"Upon the former appeal, however, it was held that these items were, respectively, an obligation owing to the partnership and a distribution of profits. By including those items in his computations of the values of the partners' interests in the partnership, the trial judge followed the mandate of the District Court of Appeal: 'In ascertaining such interest not only is the value of the ranch to be considered as of that date [June 15, 1950] as well as other capital assets, liabilities and expenses, but also the claims which the partnership had against the brothers and their set-offs among themselves should have been computed as of June 15, 1950, with interest to that time.' Emphasis added, 116 Cal.App. 2d 629–630, 254 P.2d 928. The court further said 'in determining the respective financial interests in the partnership business as of that date consideration must be given to the $25,000 which plaintiffs advanced for defendant, and to the $42,000 which plaintiffs improperly withheld and distributed, together with interest on said sums to date of dissolution. All other assets and liabilities of the partnership, together with any claims of the parties inter se, must be included in the ascertainment of the respective interests of the plaintiffs and the defendant.' * * *

"In attacking the portion of the judgment limiting him to 23.96% of the post-dissolution profits, Charles has presented several theories as justifying a larger amount. It is unnecessary to consider all of them, however, because the computation of his share was made upon an erroneous basis.

"Upon the former appeal it was held that the trial judge was correct in concluding that the partnership had been dissolved by reason of Charles' breach of the partnership agreement and that the remaining partners had exercised their privilege of continuing the partnership business. Corp. Code, § 15038(2) (b). In that situation, Charles was entitled to have computed the value of his interest in the partnership, exclusive of his share of the good will of the business, and less any damages caused to his copartners. Corp. Code, § 15038 (2) (c) par. II. For the use of his partnership assets in the continuing business, pending a settlement of the accounts, he was entitled to receive 'as an ordinary creditor an amount equal to the value of his interest in the dissolved partnership with interest, or, at his option * * * in lieu of interest, the profits attributable to the use of his right in the property of the dissolved partnership.' Emphasis added; Corp. Code, § 15042. Said the District Court of Appeal, 'From the position defendant has taken on this appeal it is fair to say that he has elected to take profits rather than interest on the value of his share of the partnership.' 116 Cal.App.2d 629, 254 P.2d 928.

"The record presents the rather unusual situation of a partner, expelled from the partnership for cause and by judicial decree, continuing to participate with his former partners in the operation and management of the business. Charles contends that he is entitled to receive compensation for services so performed. In reply, his brothers rely upon the finding that his post-dissolution services were voluntary and against their wishes. However, the evidence does not support that finding. It appears that Charles continued to participate in the business in substantially the same manner as before the action for dissolution. There is no evidence of any protest by his brothers. On the contrary, they appear to have acquiesced fully in his continuing services.

"Section 15042 of the Corporations Code fixes the right of one retired from a partnership for cause, or the personal representative of a deceased partner, to recover compensation for the use of his assets in the continuing business pending an accounting. In such case, he is entitled to 'the profits attributable to the use of his right in the property.' As a practical matter, his share of the profits usually is computed on the basis of the ratio that his share of the partnership assets bears to the whole of them. [Citations.] However, that division may not be equitable when the contribution to profits from capital is relatively minor in comparison to the contribution from the skills or services of one conducting the business. In such a case, the managing partner may be entitled to a greater share of the profits. [Citations.] Although such a method of dividing profits is usually spoken of in terms of providing extra compensation for the managing ex-partner, in reality it merely reflects the statutory requirement that the retired or deceased partner be allowed the profits attributable to his right in the assets used in the business.

"No California case considers the right to compensation for services in a continuing business of one whose fault has caused the dissolution of the partnership. The authorities in other jurisdictions are in conflict. [Citations.] Those which deny recovery generally proceed upon a theory similar to the unclean hands principle; most of the decisions which allow recovery are based upon the principle that one who seeks equity must do equity.

"In the present case the balance of the equities favors the allowance of compensation based upon services rendered. The type of operation here shown is one which involves a considerable amount of service and skill in the cultivation and harvesting of a citrus crop. Furthermore, it would be inequitable to deny Charles compensation for his services when his brothers acquiesced in them.

"The respondents [plaintiffs] take the position, however, that the requirement that profits be apportioned according to the values of the partnership interests without compensation to Charles for his post-dissolution services is the law of the case as established in Vangel v. Vangel, supra. It is unnecessary to pass upon this contention. 'The doctrine of the law of the case is recognized as a harsh one * * * and the modern view is that it should not be adhered to when the application of it results in a manifestly unjust decision.' England v. Hospital of Good Samaritan, 14 Cal.2d 791, 795, 97 P.2d 813, 814. Even if the decision upon the former appeal be construed as limiting the apportionment of profits in the manner suggested, it would be unjust to do so, and the decision should not be followed to that extent.

"The judgment, insofar as it determines the value of the partnership interests and the total amount of post-dissolution profits to be distributed among the ex-partners, is based upon findings which are supported by substantial evidence. However, those profits are divided solely upon the basis of the relative values of the partners' interests in the partnership property. The amount of profits attributable to the use of Charles' share of the assets and also those allocable to his services in the continuing business should have been considered in the apportionment.

"No error is shown in the award of costs. A proceeding to dissolve and liquidate a partnership is controlled by equitable principles [citations] and the trial judge has a broad discretion in fixing costs [citations].

"The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to determine, in accordance with this opinion, the respective share of the profits to which each partner is entitled. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed. The costs upon this appeal shall be divided equally between the appellant and the respondents."

Summary of Directions:

We held (in addition to what had theretofore been adjudicated):

1. That Charles was entitled to a share of the post-dissolution profits attributable to the use of his share of the partnership assets.

2. That Charles was entitled to compensation for his services in the continuing business.

3. That Charles was not limited to 23.96% of the post-dissolution profits because the contribution of his services in managing the ranch had not been taken into consideration.

The 23.96 percentage was achieved in this way:

Partners' Capital: Gross assets of partnership (with value of partnership real estate, improvements and supplies fixed at $235,000) less gross liabilities.

	Nick Vangel	Ernest Vangel	Charles Vangel	Total
Balance, at 33⅓ per cent each	$67,611.98	$67,611.99	$67,611.99	$202,835.96
Adjustments—Liability of Charles Vangel to Nick and Ernest Vangel in the amount of $25,000, plus interest at 7 per cent from April 16, 1945 to June 15, 1950	17,021.23	17,021.23	(34,042.46)
Liability of Nick and Ernest Vangel to Charles Vangel in amount of $14,000 (⅓ of $42,000), plus interest at 7 per cent from May 27, 1949 to June 15, 1950	(7,515.51)	(7,515.51)	15,031.02
Financial interests	$77,117.70	$77,117.71	$48,600.55
Interest in percentages	38.02%	32.02%	23.96%

After our decision, upon the retrial, the court found:

1. That this court affirmed the 23.96 per cent figure, both as to the former partnership interests and the post-dissolution profits from June 15, 1950, the adjudged dissolution date, "to and including the 1953 crops harvested and unharvested, the cut-off date being May 12, 1953." (Finding III.)

2. That defendant's interest in the value of the ranch, at the time of dissolution, on the basis of 23.96 per cent was found by Judge Vickers to be $37,440.45; that this figure was affirmed by this court. (Finding IV.)

3. That defendant's interest "in capital assets (profits) at the date of dissolution of the partnership was $48,600.55. (Finding IV.)

4. That defendant's interest in post-dissolution profits from June 15, 1950, to May 12, 1953 "the terminal date found by Judge Vickers and affirmed by the Supreme Court" amounted to $45,849.39. (Finding IV.)

5. That certain monies had been paid to plaintiffs subsequent to May 12, 1953, and up to October 13, 1953, and that defendant's interest therein was $9,024.74. (Finding IV.)

6. That the "total of Defendant's interest 'attributable to the use of Charles' (Defendant) share of assets' in the former partnership is $140,915.13." (Finding IV.)

7. That Charles had withdrawn from the total sum of $140,915.13 the sum of $81,999.45, leaving a balance due him of $58,915.68 (this latter sum is exclusive of the compensation found to be due to defendant as will hereinafter appear). (Finding VI.)

8. That Charles had not been the exclusive manager and supervisor of the ranch; that "much" of what defendant did was over the protest of the plaintiffs and not with their "full acquiescence"; that defendant's services were of the management type and not that of a mere employee; that the post-dissolution services rendered by defendant were from June 15, 1950 to November 10, 1953; that defendant rendered no services thereafter. (Finding VII, in part.)

9. "That it is true the value of services for managing and supervising a citrus ranch the size of the cultivated portion of the Cascade Ranch is from $193.75 to $233.50 a month. The court finds that the services of Defendant are worth on the average not to exceed $200 a month for the period from June 15, 1950 to November 10, 1953, or a total amount of $8,200.00." (Finding VII.)

10. It was provided that because of a stipulation entered into between the parties, defendant was to pay 23.96 per cent of $1,950 charged by an accountant employed by the parties. (Finding VIII.)

Charles contends that the trial court erred in terminating his right to profits as of May 12, 1953. In subheading 4, just set forth, we pointed out that Finding IV is to the effect that Judge Vicker's finding of the terminal date as May 12, 1953, was affirmed by this court. There is no such affirmation. In commenting upon the decision of the District Court of Appeal in Vangel v. Vangel, 116 Cal.App.2d 615, 254 P.2d 919, we said that Charles' right to participate in post-dissolution profits "should not have been terminated as of January 1, 1951. That period, it was determined, should extend so as to include the proceeds from fruit substantially matured and soon ready for marketing, the final date to be left to the sound judgment of the chancellor." Vangel v. Vangel, 45 Cal.2d 804, 806, 291 P.2d 25. In a memorandum ruling signed February 4, 1957, by Judge Clarence M. Hanson it is stated: "The findings of Judge Vickers, carried into the judgment he rendered, granted to the defendant 23.96 per cent of the value of the partnership property ($235,000) as of the date of dissolution on June 15, 1950, plus 23.96 per cent of the post-dissolution profits from June 15, 1950 to and including the 1953 crops harvested and unharvested on May 12, 1953, but as he did not include anything for the services rendered by the defendant from June 15, 1950 to that date, the judgment was reversed with instructions to ascertain the amount. The Supreme Court did not suggest that the cut-off date was to be May 12, 1953 but that is probably what it had in mind. However, if a later date should be proper, as the defendant contends, it may not in any event go beyond November 10, 1953. * * *" The memorandum opinion then sets forth part of an affidavit signed by Charles wherein he states he has done no work on the ranch subsequent to November 10, 1953. November 10, 1953, was apparently the date judgment was entered after the third trial.

In the alternative, Charles argues that if he is not entitled to a share of the profits subsequent to May 12, 1953, that he is entitled to interest on the balance due him as of that date. Section 15042 of the Corporations Code provides that a partner in Charles' position is entitled to "an amount equal to the value of his interest in the dissolved partnership" or "In lieu of interest, the profits attributable to the use of his right in the property of the dissolved partnership." The District Court of Appeal noted (116 Cal.App.2d 629, 254 P.2d 928) that "From the position defendant has taken on this appeal it is fair to say that he has elected to take profits rather than interest on the value of his share in the partnership." See, also, Vangel v. Vangel, 45 Cal.2d 804, 808, 291 P.2d 25.

[1] By Charles' own admission, he performed no services after November 10, 1953, the date on which the trial court terminated any right to compensation for services. He does argue that his services had been found, on a prior trial, to be worth $750 per month as compared with the $200 per month awarded him on the instant trial. It is sufficient to note that new evidence was adduced at the trial, the judgment of which is now under consideration, and that there is ample evidence in the record to substantiate the trial court's finding that Charles' services were worth $200 per month, or a total amount of $8,200.

[2] Charles argues, as he has done before, that the 23.96 per cent figure is incorrect and seeks to relitigate the disposition of the two items of $25,000 and $42,000 which were discussed at length in Vangel v. Vangel, 116 Cal.App.2d 629–630, 254 P.2d 927–928, and in Vangel v. Vangel, 45 Cal.2d 804, 807, 291 P.2d 25. We did not say, in the latter case, that the 23.96 per cent figure was incorrect because of the disposition of the two amounts, but that Charles' share of the post-dissolution profits was incorrect because his right to compensation had not been taken into consideration. There is no merit to this contention inasmuch as the matter is res judicata.

[3] There is no merit to Charles' contention that the trial court erred in applying the provisions of section 15038, subdivision (2) (b) of the Corporations Code. This was held to be correct and proper in Vangel v. Vangel, 116 Cal.App.2d 615, 628, 254 P.2d 919, and reaffirmed by this court in Vangel v. Vangel, 45 Cal.2d 804, 808, 291 P.2d 25.

[4] There is no merit to Charles' contention that he is entitled to share in what he claims is the present value of the ranch, the sum of $2,000,000. His claim is based on his argument that because of the location of the ranch it will have that value for subdivision purposes. In Vangel v. Vangel, 116 Cal.App.2d 615, 633, 254 P.2d 919, 930, the court noted that the valuation of $235,000 placed on the ranch by the trial court at the date of dissolution of the partnership was "definitive of that question." Furthermore, section 15042 of the Corporations Code provides that the retiring partner's interest "at the date of dissolution" shall be ascertained. See, Vangel v. Vangel, 116 Cal.App.2d 615, 627, 628, 629, 254 P.2d 919.

[5] Plaintiffs argue that the sum of $38,090.45 ($37,440.45 plus $650 interest) has been available to Charles since September 10, 1953. This statement is substantiated by the record. Charles' Exhibit "A," the Pritkin, Finkel & Company Accountants' Report, page 2, shows such deposits in escrow to Charles' account. Plaintiffs also point out that the amount of the judgment ($67,115.68) after the fourth trial, has been in escrow since May 3, 1953. The record shows (Charles' Exhibit "A") that from the $38,090.45 deposited in September, 1953, Charles has withdrawn the sum of $6,982.10. The record also shows (as reflected in the findings) that Charles had made other withdrawals in the sum of $75,017.35.[1] It was then found that Charles had a balance due him of $58,915.68 plus the sum of $8,200 as compensation for his services, making a total due Charles of $67,115.68, which has been deposited in escrow to Charles' account since May, 1957. It appears to us that the trial court correctly carried out the mandate of the District Court of Appeal and that of this court and that there has been no error. After the amounts due Charles as his original share of the partnership assets had been deposited to his order, it is obvious that no profits were due him from the use of such assets. Charles' interest in the real property had been adjudged to be $37,440.45; his interest as of June 15, 1950 (the date of dissolution), is shown by his Exhibit "A" to be $48,600.55; his share of the post-dissolution profits from June 15, 1950 to May 12, 1953, as shown by Charles' Exhibit "A" amount to $45,849.39; and his share of the profits on the 1952–1953 crop which was apparently harvested by October 13, 1953, amount to $9,024.74, or a total balance of $140,915.13. Charles' withdrawals from this amount have been heretofore set forth. It will be recalled that in Vangel v. Vangel, 116 Cal.App.2d 615, 630, 254 P.2d 919, 928, it was held that Charles should be entitled to his share of the proceeds of a "crop substantially matured and soon ready for market. While no formula or precise definition can be laid down to determine when such fruit has substantially matured, this determination can properly be left to the sound judgment of the chancellor." As heretofore noted, there was no petition for hearing after that decision, and our opinion in Vangel v. Vangel, 45 Cal.2d 804, 291 P.2d 25, did not disturb that holding. While we did not, as found by the trial court during this trial, approve May 12, 1953, as a "cut-off" date, we did not hold otherwise and reversed only for the purpose of allowing Charles compensation for his post-dissolution managerial efforts on behalf of the partnership. Since the trial court has here, in its sound judgment, aided by the reports of several qualified accountants determined that Charles' interests are as have been heretofore set forth, and since there has been no judicial error, there appears to be no reason to disturb its judgment.

From what has just been said it is clear that there is no merit to Charles' contention that his right to participate in the partnership profits should not have been terminated as of May 12, 1953, since it appears from the record that he was allowed profits on the 1952–1953 crop to October 13, 1953, which would be the latest date that any profits could have accrued from his interest in the partnership real property. As heretofore set forth, Charles' share of the value of the partnership real property was deposited in escrow to his account on September 10, 1953.

Charles also argues that he cannot be put to an election between interest and profits until the amount due him has been finally settled. This argument stems from the statement made by the District Court of Appeal, 116 Cal.App.2d 615, 630, 254 P.2d 919, 928, that since the accounts of the partnership had not been "properly settled * * * he was not required to accept the offer made to purchase his share after the rendition of final judgment, since the accounting should have proceeded 'upon different principles than did the accounting which was actually taken.' Nuland v. Pruyn, supra [99 Cal.App.2d 603, 222 P.2d 261]." The same court pointed out, however, that "From the position defendant has taken on this appeal it is fair to say that he has elected to take profits rather than interest on the value of his share in the partnership." 116 Cal.App.2d 615, 629, 254 P.2d 919.

Charles also claims that he is entitled to interest on the amount found to be due him until that amount is either paid, or made available to him. From what has been heretofore said it is obvious that there is no merit to this argument.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Hazel M. McEACHEN et al., Appellants.

L. A. 24383.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Feb. 2, 1959.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing March 4, 1959.

Action was brought against owners of lot for injuries sustained by child five years and nine months old when her clothing caught fire from fire on lot. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Frederick F. Houser, J., entered judgment adverse to owners of lot, and they appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that instruction of Superior Court, on its own motion, that there was no contributory negligence on part of child was erroneous, where it deprived owners of lot of defense on which they relied, and that giving of such instruction was reversible error.

Judgment reversed.

Spence, Carter, Schauer, and McComb, JJ., dissented in part.

Opinion, 315 P.2d 351, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐1064(1)
Negligence ⇐141(10)

In action against owners of lot for injuries sustained by child five years and nine months old when her clothing caught fire from fire on lot, instruction of trial court on its own motion that there was no contributory negligence on part of child was erroneous, where it deprived owners of lot of defense on which they relied, and giving of such instruction was reversible error.

2. Master and Servant ⇐318(1)

In action against owners of lot for injuries sustained by child five years and nine months old when her clothing caught fire from fire on lot, determination of question whether third person, who started fire on lot, was an employee of owners of lot, so that owners of lot would be liable for his negligence, or was an independent contractor, depended on various factors, the most important of which was the degree of control retained by owners of lot.

3. Master and Servant ⇐332(3)

In action against owners of lot for injuries sustained by child five years and nine months old when her clothing caught fire from fire on lot, question whether third person, who started fire on lot, was an employee of owners of lot, so as to make owners of lot liable for any negligence of third person, or was an independent contractor, was a question of fact.

4. Master and Servant ⇐315

Rule that employer is not liable for an independent contractor's negligence is subject to numerous exceptions.

5. Negligence ⇐33(3)

Possessor of land is subject to liability for bodily harm to young children trespassing thereon, caused by structure or other artificial condition which possessor maintains on the land, if place where condition is maintained is one upon which possessor knows or should know that such children are likely to trespass, and condition is one of which possessor knows or should know and which he realizes or should realize as involving an unreasonable risk of death or serious bodily harm to such children, and children, because of their youth, do not discover condition or realize risk involved in intermeddling in it or in coming within area made dangerous by it, and utility of possessor of maintaining condition is slight as compared to risk to young children involved therein.

6. Negligence ⇐136(15)

In action against owners of lot for injuries sustained by child five years and nine months old when her clothing caught fire from fire on lot, question whether owners of lot were liable if child was a trespasser was for trier of fact.

7. Negligence ⇐136(17)

In action against owners of lot for injuries sustained by child five years and nine months old when her clothing caught fire from fire on lot, question whether alleged employee of owners of lot violated ordinance providing that it shall be unlawful to leave, or cause or permit to be left, any outdoor or open fire unattended by an adult, or such person or persons as may be required in permit issued for any such fire by county fire warden, and that before leaving any such fire person in charge of fire shall thoroughly extinguish fire, was for trier of facts.

8. Negligence ⇐121(1)

Where statute is intended to protect class of persons, in which plaintiff is included, against risk of type of harm he has sustained, a violation of statute gives rise to presumption of negligence, which may be rebutted by evidence of justification or excuse.

9. Negligence ⇐18, 32(1), 33(3)

Ordinances relating to open fires were intended to protect, not only against the spreading of fires, but against all perils which might arise from fires not properly started, controlled, or extinguished, whether or not the danger materializes on premises where burning is done, and the protection undoubtedly extends to licensees, and also to child trespassers to whom a duty of care is owed by possessor of realty.

10. Negligence ⇐56(3)

In action against owners of lot for injuries sustained by child five years and nine months old when her clothing caught fire from fire on lot, presumption of negligence arising from burning of debris by alleged employee of owners of lots in violation of ordinances could not form a basis of liability, unless violation proximately caused child's injuries.

Murchison & Cumming, R. Bruce Murchison and Warren D. Allen, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank W. Swann, Jr., Beverly Hills, for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Defendants, Mrs. McEachen and the administrator of the estate of her deceased husband, appeal from a judgment in the amount of $50,000 recovered by plaintiff as damages for severe burns she sustained while playing on a lot owned by the McEachens in joint tenancy.

A house had been torn down on the lot where the accident happened, and early in 1953 Mr. McEachen, who managed the real property of the couple, engaged Harry Plummer to burn the lumber and debris, which covered the lot. Plummer, an evening-shift worker in a tire factory, was a tenant of the McEachens, renting a house next to the lot, and he agreed to do the burning for one month's free rent. McEachen told him that he could burn a little each day between 9:00 a. m. and 10:30 or 11:00 a. m., and for several mornings after February 1 he burned some debris at approximately the center of the lot. On February 11, the day of the accident, Plummer did some burning in this manner and left the lot about 11:00 a. m., returning to his home.

About 2:30 p. m. on February 11, plaintiff, a girl five years and nine months old, was walking home from school. Several children, among them two daughters and a son of Plummer, were playing on the lot, and one of them called to plaintiff to join them. A woman who saw the accident from her home nearby testified that plaintiff walked to the center of the lot, jumped over something and "stooped down" and that, when plaintiff got up, the back of her dress was on fire. The witness had observed the lot from the time that Plummer started the fire in the morning, and she stated that, when the accident happened, the fire was still smoldering, although there were no flames.

The court determined that plaintiff was capable of being a witness, and she testified that her dress caught fire when, having gone to the center of the lot and having jumped over a pile of wood, she squatted down to pick up a stick. She further said that there were no flames on the lot, that there was a little smoke in the center and embers on the ground, including a six-inch pile under some wood, that she did not know embers could burn her or set her dress on fire, and that she knew of fire only from her mother's stove.

According to one of Plummer's daughters, her brother had started a fire near the front of the lot, and, when plaintiff came onto the lot, the children were playing with that fire, which was about 15 inches high. Both plaintiff and the witness jumped over the fire "a little bit over the side." Plummer's son testified that shortly before the accident the children were playing with a fire he had lighted. Neither of the two Plummer children saw when or how plaintiff's dress caught fire.

Plummer testified that, before leaving the lot on the morning of February 11, he put out the fire by wetting it with a hose, raking it apart and pouring buckets of water over it, and that, when he came out of his house after the accident, he saw a fire of newspapers or cardboard at approximately the place where he had been burning earlier but did not see any "red coals."

At the trial Mrs. McEachen denied knowing that children were playing on the lot prior to the accident, but it was shown that she had made a statement to the contrary in her deposition. According to Plummer, he knew that his children and others played on the lot after the house had been torn down, and Mr. McEachen had visited him on some occasions when the children were playing there.

Defendants first complain of an instruction given by the court on its own motion that there was no contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. There are four theories which could warrant the giving of such an instruction: (1) that a child of the age of plaintiff is conclusively presumed to be incapable of contributory negligence; (2) that the evidence established that this particular plaintiff was incapable of such negligence with respect to the accident in question; (3) that it was proved, as a matter of law, that plaintiff, while capable of negligence, had exercised due care; or (4) that, although plaintiff had been negligent, her lack of care could not have contributed to her injury. None of these theories, however, can justify the giving of the instruction in this case.

The questions whether a child was capable of exercising care to avoid the particular danger encountered and whether, if so, the child failed to exercise due care, thereby contributing to the injury, are normally for the trier of fact to determine. Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., 167 Cal. 126, 139, 138 P. 712. In keeping with this rule courts have rejected the theory that a child of plaintiff's age, namely, between five and six, is incapable of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Smith v. Harger, 84 Cal. App.2d 361, 370, 191 P.2d 25; Carrillo v. Helms Bakeries, 6 Cal.App.2d 299, 304, 44 P.2d 604. The evidence was conflicting as to whether plaintiff's dress caught fire because she played near flames or because she squatted down on embers, and a determination of this conflict was obviously essential in order to resolve the questions of plaintiff's capacity to exercise care for her safety and of her contributory negligence. Accordingly, those questions could not properly have been decided as matters of law.

Plaintiff appears to take the position that, in cases involving injury to young children, the trial judge may determine the issue of contributory negligence even though questions of fact are presented. She relies on a statement in Mayne v. San Diego Electric Railway Co., 179 Cal. 173, 177, 175 P. 690, 692, that "as a rule courts upon appeal have not interfered with the discretion of trial courts in referring or in refusing to refer to juries the question as to whether the contributory negligence of children of the age of 14 years or under was such as to prevent their recovery * * *." In that case, however, the trial judge had not decided the issue of contributory negligence but had submitted it to the jury. Thus, the case on its facts does not support plaintiff's position, and the quoted language should not be construed in the manner urged. Contributory negligence is a matter bearing directly upon the outcome of a suit, and, where, as in the present case, the facts are in dispute, there is no rational basis for permitting the judge, rather than the jury, to resolve that matter. So far as has been called to our attention, the existence of such an exceptional power is not recognized anywhere.

[1] The instruction that there was no contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff erroneously deprived defendants of a defense upon which they relied. Although plaintiff has not raised the point, it has been suggested that the error is not prejudicial because, assertedly, the defense was so defectively pleaded that it must be treated as not properly in the case. However, there is nothing in the record to show, and plaintiff does not now claim, that the defect in the pleadings misled or hindered her in any way. Having sought unsuccessfully to strike the defense from the answer, plaintiff was aware that the matter was being treated as subject to trial, and she introduced evidence which, while it may also have been material to her case in chief, undoubtedly tended to rebut the claim of contributory negligence, for example, her testimony that there were no flames on the lot, that she did not know embers could burn her or set her dress on fire, and that she knew of fire only from her mother's stove. On appeal she has not seen fit to mention the defect and argues only that the instruction given by the court was proper under the evidence. In these circumstances we are not justified in disregarding the effect of the erroneous instruction, and, since the error was clearly prejudicial to defendants, the judgment must be reversed.

[2, 3] There are several other problems which should be discussed in order to guide the trial court in the event of a new trial. One of these concerns the effect, if any, upon defendants' liability of the circumstance that Plummer, rather than defendants, actually did the burning. The determination of whether Plummer was an independent contractor or an employee depends upon a consideration of various factors, the most important of which is the degree of control retained by the McEachens. See Empire Star Mines Co. v. Cal. Emp. Comm., 28 Cal.2d 33, 43–44, 168 P.2d 686. The evidence now before us is inconclusive in regard to this factor since it appears that McEachen gave only a few instructions and did not supervise the burning but that Plummer would have followed additional instructions had they been given. Other pertinent circumstances are also conflicting in their effect, for example, Plummer was paid by the job, rather than by the hour, but burning was not his usual occupation. On such a record, the question as to whether Plummer was an employee or an independent contractor is one of fact.

[4] Obviously, if Plummer was an employee, defendants would be liable for any conduct on his part which, in view of his knowledge regarding use of the lot by children, would constitute a lack of due care. We do not mean to suggest, however, that there could be no liability if it should be found that Plummer was an independent contractor. The rule that an employer is not liable for an independent contractor's negligence is subject to numerous exceptions, including the ones set forth in sections 413 and 416 of the Restatement of Torts.[1] Potter v. Empress Theatre Co., 91 Cal.App.2d 4, 10–11, 204 P.2d 120; see Snyder v. Southern Cal. Edison Co., 44 Cal. 2d 793, 797, 285 P.2d 912; Knell v. Morris, 39 Cal.2d 450, 456, 247 P.2d 352. Those sections relate to a situation where an independent contractor is employed to do work which the employer should recognize as necessarily creating a condition involving an unreasonable risk of bodily harm to others unless special precautions are taken. They impose liability upon the employer for an injury caused by the absence of such precautions if he has failed to take steps to assure observance of the precautions, either by a provision in the contract or in some other reasonable manner (§ 413), or if the independent contractor has not exercised reasonable care to take such precautions (§ 416). It is to be noted that the sections require knowledge of the employer himself concerning the existence of a risk to others, so that a showing of such

1. Section 413 of the Restatement of Torts provides:

"One who employs an independent contractor to do work which the employer should recognize as necessarily creating during its progress, conditions containing an unreasonable risk of bodily harm to others unless special precautions are taken, is subject to liability for bodily harm caused to them by the absence of such precautions, if the employer (a) fails to provide in the contract that the contractor shall take such precautions (as to which see § 416), or (b) fails to exercise reasonable care to provide in some other manner for the taking of such precautions."

Section 416 of the Restatement of Torts provides:

knowledge must be made regardless of what the independent contractor may have known.

[5] Another question is whether plaintiff, who undoubtedly has a cause of action if she was injured by active operations and was a licensee (see Oettinger v. Stewart, 24 Cal.2d 133, 136, 148 P.2d 19, 156 A.L.R. 1221; Rest., Torts, § 341), has no cause of action if she was injured by a condition of the premises and was a trespasser. A child trespasser injured by a condition of the premises may recover if the case comes within the rule set forth in section 339 of the Restatement of Torts, and, of course, a child licensee thus injured has at least an equal right of recovery (see Prosser on Torts (2d ed. 1955) pp. 450, 438–440; Rest., Torts, § 342 and comment (b) thereto). Section 339 reads: "A possessor of land is subject to liability for bodily harm to young children trespassing thereon caused by a structure or other artificial condition which he maintains upon the land, if (a) the place where the condition is maintained is one upon which the possessor knows or should know that such children are likely to trespass, and (b) the condition is one of which the possessor knows or should know and which he realizes or should realize as involving an unreasonable risk of death or serious bodily harm to such children, and (c) the children because of their youth do not discover the condition or realize the risk involved in intermeddling in it or in coming within the area made dangerous by it, and (d) the utility to the possessor of maintaining the condition is slight as compared to the risk to young children involved therein."

[6] The duty of the possessor of land under section 339 extends to dangerous conditions "which, though observable by adults, are likely not to be observed by children or which contain risks the full extent of which an adult would realize but which are beyond the imperfect realization of children." However, it does not extend to "those conditions the existence of which is obvious even to children and the risk of which is fully realized by them." Rest., Torts, § 339, comment (b). On the basis of the record now before us, different inferences could be drawn as to the character of the danger encountered by plaintiff, and it would be for the trier of fact to determine whether she was injured by a risk not obvious to her. The question whether the concealed danger, if it existed, should have been recognized as creating an unreasonable risk of serious harm to young children, would also be one of fact unless an affirmative answer is compelled in view of two county fire ordinances which, according to plaintiff, establish defendants' negligence as a matter of law.

Section 1313 of Ordinance No. 2947 provides: "It shall be unlawful to leave, or cause or permit to be left, any outdoor or open fire unattended by an adult person, or such person or persons as may be required in permit issued for any such fire by the County Fire Warden. Before leaving any such fire, such person or persons in charge of such fire shall thoroughy extinguish same by completely covering it with dirt, saturating it with water, or otherwise treating it in such a manner to prevent rekindling of such fire."

Section 1301 of Ordinance No. 5520, which also relates to open fires, provides that a person shall not burn, or cause or permit to be burned, any combustible material unless (a) he first secures a permit to do so, or (b) the burning is done in small heaps between six a. m. and ten a. m. at specified distances from woodland, buildings, or other combustible material, and is attended at all times by an adult having extinguishing equipment, or (c) the burning takes place within the boundaries of an established camp site.[2]

2. Section 1301 of Ordinance No. 5520 provides:
"Open Fires—hours of burning. A person shall not build, light, maintain, or cause or permit to be built, lighted or maintained, any open or outdoor fire, use, or cause or permit to be used, any fire for clearing land, burn or cause or per-

[7] Unless the evidence on a new trial should materially differ from that now before us, a factual issue would be presented as to whether Plummer violated section 1313, but a violation of section 1301 would be shown as a matter of law, since none of the three exceptions to the general prohibition against open fires would be applicable.

[8] It is settled that, where a statute is intended to protect the class of persons in which the plaintiff is included against the risk of the type of harm he has sustained, a violation of the statute gives rise to a presumption of negligence which may be rebutted by evidence of justification or excuse. Porter v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., 48 Cal.2d 846, 849, 313 P.2d 854; Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist., 29 Cal.2d 581, 588, 177 P.2d 279. While there is no claim of justification or excuse, defendants take the position that the ordinances were designed to protect against the spreading of fire and not against bodily injury suffered by one coming voluntarily into the area of danger, particularly if the one injured is a trespasser. It may be noted, however, that the portion of Ordinance No. 5520 relating to issuance of permits for open fires makes clear that the fire warden is to consider the prevention of the spreading of fire "or" the protection of public safety.

[9] In our view, the reasonable construction to be given the ordinances is that they are intended to protect not only against the spreading of fire but against all perils which may arise from fires not properly started, controlled or extinguished, whether or not the danger materializes on the premises where the burning is done. The protection undoubtedly extends to licensees on those premises, and there is no reason to conclude that it does not also extend to child trespassers to whom a duty of care is owed under the rule set forth in section 339 of the Restatement of Torts. The person who is responsible for the burning is charged by the ordinances with knowledge that unreasonable risks of harm are presented by the contingencies sought to be prevented, including the dangers to trespassing children resulting from conditions not obvious to them. A violation of the ordinances would, absent a showing of justification or excuse, give rise to a presumption of negligence if the jury were to find against defendants on the questions regarding existence of a concealed risk and knowledge of use of the lot by children.

[10] A presumption of negligence arising from burning by Plummer in violation of the ordinances could not form a basis of liability, of course, unless the violation proximately caused plaintiff's injuries. There would be a question in this connection as to whether the accident resulted from the fire started by Plummer or a second fire assertedly lighted by his son.

The judgment is reversed.

SHENK and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

SPENCE, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

I concur in the reversal of the judgment upon the principal ground stated for remit to be burned, any brush, trash, rubbish, stubble, or other flammable or combustible material, unless:

"(a) He first secures from the County Fire Warden, State Forester, or a United States Forest Service officer having jurisdiction, a permit so to do, or

"(b) Such burning is in one or more small heaps or piles, where the fire is set in dooryard premises, corrals, gardens, or plowed fields, at a distance not less than five hundred (500) feet from any woodland, timber, or brush-covered land, or land containing dry grass or other flammable vegetation, and there is at least one adult person in actual attendance with water, garden hose, shovels or other fire extinguishing equipment on hand in charge of such fire at all times during its burning, and such burning is done not less than twenty-five (25) feet from buildings, structures, or other combustible material, and further that such burning is done only between the hours of 6:00 a. m. and 10:00 a. m. of the same day, or versal in the main opinion. It is there correctly declared that "The instruction that there was no contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff erroneously deprived defendants of a defense upon which they had relied * * *. In these circumstances we are not justified in disregarding the effect of the erroneous instruction, and, since the error was clearly prejudicial to defendants, the judgment must be reversed." I must dissent, however, from the views expressed in the main opinion upon the more fundamental questions involved on this appeal. Furthermore, I am of the opinion that the reversal should be accompanied with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of defendants.

This is one of a series of recent appeals involving the question of the nature of the duty owed by the landowner to the trespassing child. My views on this question were set forth at some length in my dissenting opinion in Reynolds v. Willson, 51 Cal.2d 94, 331 P.2d 48, and need not be repeated here. But regardless of the conflicting views expressed in the Reynolds case, it seems entirely clear that the present case involves only the common, obvious risk of fire for which liability for injuries to the trespassing child should not be imposed upon the landowner or those acting on his behalf.

Turning first to the facts presented by the record, it is true that conflicting inferences could be draw as to whether the minor plaintiff was injured through contact with the flames of the fire built by other children or through contact with the embers of a fire previously built in the middle of the vacant lot by Plummer. It may also be conceded that conflicting inferences could be drawn as to whether Plummer was an employee or an independent contractor. But even if all conflicting inferences are resolved in favor of plaintiff, the imposition of liability here appears to be wholly inconsistent with our prior decisions, which strictly limit the type of cases in which liability may be imposed upon the landowner for injuries to the trespassing child.

Accepting plaintiff's testimony, it showed that while she did not see any "flames," she saw "live embers" and "smoke" arising therefrom. Her explanation of her rash act in squatting down there was that she had never seen "live embers" before. The fact remains, however, that any risk which she encountered was a common, obvious risk of fire. To intimate, as does the main opinion, that the risk described by plaintiff could be found by the trier of fact to be a "concealed" risk, or a "hidden" or "masked" risk as required by the authorities, is to indulge in a contradiction of terms. No risk can be more common or more obvious than the risk presented by the ordinary trash fire built upon the surface of the ground. Such was the only risk presented here under any view of the evidence.

It is significant to note that the main opinion does not cite a single case which has imposed liability upon the landowner to the trespassing child under similar circumstances. On the other hand, the great weight of authority supports the view that no liability should be imposed here. Moon v. Payne, 97 Cal.App.2d 717, 218 P.2d 550; Dunbar v. Olivieri, 97 Colo. 381, 50 P.2d 64; Paolino v. McKendall, 24 R.I. 432, 53 A. 268, 60 L.R.A. 133; Fitzmaurice v. Manning Paper Co., 221 App.Div. 415, 223 N.Y.S. 358; Zaia v. Lalex Realty Corporation, 261 App.Div. 843, 25 N.Y.S.2d 183, affirmed 287 N.Y. 689, 39 N.E.2d 300; Stinnett v. Liberty Aircraft Products Corp., 273 App.Div. 909, 77 N.Y.S.2d 357; Eason v. State, 201 Misc. 336, 104 N.Y.S.2d 683; Krystopowicz v. Reading Co., 40 Pa.Dist. & Co.R. 304;

Some of the cited fire cases, as well as other cases, have involved violations of ordinances but such violations were not deemed material as the ordinances, like the ordinances here, were obviously not enacted for the protection of trespassing children. As was said in Lopez v. Capitol Co., 141 Cal.App.2d 60, at page 69, 296 P.2d 63, at page 67: "The ordinance added nothing to respondents' duty insofar as the duty to trespassers is concerned."

The main opinion does not discuss the above-cited cases or any of the prior decisions of the courts of this state dealing with the fundamental question involved. It merely quotes section 339 of the Restatement of Torts and, like the dissenting opinion in Knight v. Kaiser Co., 48 Cal.2d 778, 785, 312 P.2d 1089, equates its requirements with mere "lack of due care." Thus the main opinion places upon the landowner a duty toward the trespassing child which is measured by precisely the same standard as the duty owed by the landowner to a child who is a business invitee. The imposition of such duty is contrary to numerous prior decisions in this state. Knight v. Kaiser Co., supra, 48 Cal.2d 778, 312 P.2d 1089; Melendez v. City of Los Angeles, 8 Cal.2d 741, 68 P.2d 971; Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345, 47 P. 113, 598; Wilford v. Little, 144 Cal.App.2d 477, 301 P.2d 282; Lopez v. Capitol Co., supra, 141 Cal.App.2d 60, 296 P.2d 63; Lake v. Ferrer, 139 Cal.App.2d 114, 293 P.2d 104; Ward v. Oakley Co., 125 Cal.App.2d 840, 271 P.2d 536; Betts v. City and County of San Francisco, 108 Cal.App.2d 701, 239 P.2d 456; Demmer v. City of Eureka, 78 Cal.App.2d 708, 178 P.2d 472; King v. Simons Brick Co., 52 Cal.App.2d 586, 126 P.2d 627; Beeson v. City of Los Angeles, 115 Cal.App. 122, 300 P. 993; Reardon v. Spring Valley Water Co., 68 Cal.App. 13, 228 P. 406; Polk v. Laurel Hill Cemetery Ass'n, 37 Cal.App. 624, 174 P. 414.

The reading of these authorities demonstrates the impropriety of discussing the duty of the landowner toward the trespassing child in the conventional terms of "lack of due care" or "negligence" unless it appears that the landowner's premises presented some uncommon or concealed danger which brings the situation within the recognized exception to the general rules limiting his liability. Then, and then only, does the law impose upon him the added burden of using "due care" to safeguard trespassing children from such uncommon or concealed danger. No such situation is shown by the record here.

There is a further suggestion in the main opinion that plaintiff might have a cause of action upon the theory that she was injured through "active operations" of defendants. Reference is made to Oettinger v. Stewart, 24 Cal.2d 133, 148 P.2d 19, 156 A.L.R. 1221. While the so-called "active negligence" doctrine may be applied where a defendant who was on the premises was chargeable with some new act of negligence after the injured person had entered thereon (Yamauchi v. O'Neill, 38 Cal.App.2d 703, 102 P.2d 365), no authorities have been found which hold that the circumstances of the present case would fall within its scope. Any risk of harm here resulted solely from the leaving of the premises in the condition described, and such leaving constituted, at most, mere "passive negligence" as distinguished from "active negligence" within the meaning of the doctrine. There is therefore no question of fact to be determined which could make the "active negligence" doctrine applicable here.

In my dissenting opinion in Reynolds v. Willson, supra, 51 Cal.2d 94, 331 P.2d 48, 56, I referred to the confusion that would inevitably result from the majority opinion there. Such confusion will become worse confounded by the filing of the main opinion here. Both opinions are clearly susceptible to the construction that this court is now, sub silentio, "disapproving the former cases" as was advocated in the dissenting opinion in Knight v. Kaiser Co., supra, 48 Cal.2d 778, 785, 312 P.2d 1089. Both opinions are likewise clearly susceptible to the construction that this court now, in effect, is approving the erroneous construction placed upon section 339 of the Restatement of Torts in Copfer v. Golden, 135 Cal.App.2d 623, 288 P.2d 90. Nevertheless, no mention whatever is made of "the former cases" or of the Copfer case in the main opinion here. Unfortunately, the bench and bar will still be compelled to speculate upon this court's views concerning the proper construction of section 339 of the Restatement of Torts and upon this court's views as to whether "the former cases" are to be followed or ignored.

As indicated in my dissent in Reynolds v. Willson, supra, 51 Cal.2d 94, 331 P.2d 48, I believe that section 339 of the Restatement of Torts, properly construed, is entirely consistent with "the former cases." See Knight v. Kaiser Co., supra, 48 Cal.2d 778, 312 P.2d 1089; Melendez v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 8 Cal.2d 741, 68 P.2d 971; Wilford v. Little, supra, 144 Cal.App. 2d 477, 301 P.2d 282. On the other hand, I do not believe that the majority opinion in the Reynolds case or the main opinion here can be reconciled with those decisions. I am in accord with Dean Prosser's version of the proper construction of section 339, where he states: "There are some dangers common in the community which any child of sufficient age to be allowed at large may be expected to understand and appreciate—such as the usual risks of fire and water, * * *." [51 Cal.2d —, 331 P.2d 57.] Prosser on Torts, 2d Ed., p. 441. There is no evidence in the record before us which shows anything more than the "usual" risk of fire. Furthermore, it is not suggested that anything more could be shown on a retrial of the cause.

I would therefore reverse the judgment and would accompany such reversal with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of the defendants.

SCHAUER and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

I agree with that portion of the majority opinion which determines the issue of liability of the defendants in this case but disagree with the discussion and the conclusion with respect to the issue of contributory negligence of the plaintiff, Donna Jean Courtell.

From my examination of the record in this case it appears clear that contributory negligence is not an issue for the following reasons: First, there is no sufficient allegation in the answer of any of the defendants to raise an issue of contributory negligence of any of the plaintiffs. Second, there is no basis for the conclusion that the issue of contributory negligence is available to defendants because no testimony was offered on this issue and the case was not tried upon the theory that contributory negligence was an issue. The record discloses that all of the testimony offered on behalf of plaintiff was testimony relating to her conduct, which was necessarily a part of her case in chief.

It is true that in the second affirmative defense of the answer of defendants there is an attempt to plead contributory negligence generally. A demurrer and motion to strike this defense were interposed. The demurrer was overruled and the motion to strike denied. Under the settled law of this state plaintiffs' attack upon this defense should have been sustained. From this state of the record it cannot be said that contributory negligence was pleaded or that the pleadings were sufficient to give rise to the issue of contributory negligence. No testimony was offered by either party on the issue of contributory negligence and the fact that instructions were submitted on this issue is of no consequence.

While it is my view that it is within the province of the trial judge to determine in the first instance whether a child of tender years may be guilty of contributory negligence, for the reasons above stated, it is not necessary for this court to determine in this case whether the trial judge abused his discretion in holding as a matter of law that plaintiff Donna Jean Courtell was not capable of exercising care to avoid the particular danger encountered by her which resulted in her injury and that she could not, therefore, be guilty of contributory negligence.

In California, as a general rule, a defendant must specially plead contributory negligence of the plaintiff in order to rely on that defense. Kenny v. Kennedy, 9 Cal. App. 350, 351, 99 P. 384; Kofoid v. Beckner, 70 Cal.App. 624, 630, 234 P. 113; Hoffman v. Southern Pacific Co., 84 Cal.App. 337, 346, 258 P. 397. But where plaintiff's contributory negligence appears from the allegations of the complaint or evidence introduced in his behalf, the defense is available to the defendant though not pleaded in his answer. Green v. Southern Pacific Co., 132 Cal. 254, 64 P. 255; Hall v. City and County of San Francisco, 188 Cal. 641, 206 P. 459; Kenny v. Kennedy, supra, 9 Cal.App. 350, 99 P. 384. Another exception to the general rule exists where it appears from the record that the issue of contributory negligence was actually and intentionally tried by the introduction of pertinent evidence, provided it is shown that the parties consciously participated or acquiesced in such trial as if the issue had been made by the pleadings. Ortega v. Cordero, 88 Cal. 221, 227, 26 P. 80; Lein v. Parkin, 49 Cal.2d 397, 400–401, 318 P.2d 1.

The plea must set forth the facts on which the defense of contributory negligence is predicated and not merely state the conclusion of the pleader that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury. Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel Gold Mining Co., 168 Cal. 500, 505, 143 P. 714. "It is not necessary to use the specific term of contributory negligence, although a concise statement of the facts indicating the commission or omission of acts which would be required of one under similar circumstances in the exercise of ordinary care and which would appear to directly contribute to the injuries complained of must be alleged. It is not sufficient to merely allege in the form of a conclusion that the acts complained of were due to the negligence or carelessness of the plaintiff." Hoffman v. Southern Pacific Co., 84 Cal.App. 337, 347, 258 P. 397, 401.

Where an improper pleading is shown to exist it is at the very least subject to a special demurrer (see, Campbell v. Genshlea, 180 Cal. 213, 217, 180 P. 336; Fleischmann v. Lotito, 6 Cal.2d 365, 367, 57 P.2d 922), and some cases have held that a general demurrer should be sustained (Foerst v. Hobro, 125 Cal.App. 476, 479, 13 P.2d 1055; Callaway v. Novotny, 128 Cal.App. 166, 169, 16 P.2d 1013).

Applying these rules to the case at bar, the question for determination is whether defendant's allegations in his second special defense constitute an adequate plea of contributory negligence. If not then the demurrer to this defense should have been sustained or the motion to strike the same should have been granted. For the reasons stated below it appears that the allegations contained in this pleading are insufficient to state a valid plea of contributory negligence.

The plea reads in part "That if in fact plaintiffs * * * were injured * * * then said injuries and damages, if any * * * are due to the negligence and carelessness of the plaintiffs * * * and that said negligence and carelessness * * * proximately and concurrently contributed to and brought about whatever injuries and damages plaintiffs * * * may have sustained."

It is at once evident in reading this pleading that there are no facts included therein that indicate the commission or omission of acts which would be required of one under similar circumstances in the exercise of ordinary care and which would appear to directly contribute to the injuries complained of. Failure to allege any fact or facts from which the negligence occurred renders the complaint fatal (Church v. Headrick and Brown, 101 Cal.App.2d 396, 225 P.2d 558; Potter v. Richards, 132 Cal. App.2d 380, 282 P.2d 113) for the reason that there is a failure to show a causal connection between the act and injury. Furthermore there is no evidence which would support a finding of contributory negligence.

Although these complaints are concerned with negligent acts of the defendant the same rules apply when defendant pleads contributory negligence. Hoffman v. Southern Pacific Co., supra. Thus, defendant's failure to describe any acts of negligence on the part of the plaintiff to show a causal connection between them and the injury is fatal.

I would, therefore, affirm the judgment.

GEDDES & SMITH, INC. (a Corporation), Appellant,

v.

SAINT PAUL-MERCURY INDEMNITY CO. (a Corporation), Respondent.

Sac. 6914.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Feb. 10, 1959.

Action by building contractor against insurer of manufacturer of aluminum doors to recover amount of judgment obtained against manufacturer. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, John Quincy Brown, J., rendered judgment for insurer, and contractor appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where aluminum doors sold to contractor developed defects within six months after installation and fell apart, and door failures were unexpected, undesigned and unforeseen and were not result of normal deterioration but occurred suddenly long before any properly constructed door might be expected to wear out or collapse, failure of doors constituted an accident within policy whereby insurer agreed to pay on behalf of manufacturer all sums which manufacturer became obligated to pay by reason of destruction of property caused by accident and insurer was liable for damages to houses resulting from such failure.

Judgment reversed.

Spence, Shenk, and McComb, JJ., dissented.

Opinion, 320 P.2d 231, vacated.

1. Insurance ⇐616½

Insurer that has been notified of an action against insured and refuses to defend on ground that alleged claim is not within policy coverage is bound by judgment in the action, in absence of fraud or collusion, as to all material findings of fact essential to judgment of liability of insured, but insurer is not bound as to issues not necessarily adjudicated in prior action and can still present any defenses not inconsistent with judgment against insured.

2. Insurance ⇐616½

Where insurer was obligated to defend any actions against insured for damages within policy coverage, but insurer refused to defend action against insured and judgment was rendered against insured, but issue concerning scope of policy coverage was not adjudicated, insurer was entitled to present defense that damages were excluded from coverage, in action against it by party who obtained judgment against insured.

3. Insurance ⇐434

Where policy excluded liability for injury to or destruction of goods or products which were sold by insured and out of which accident arose, endorsement containing provision that nothing therein should vary terms of policy other than as stated and excluding products liability for damage to property other than products themselves and bodily injuries did not increase coverage and its cancellation left coverage and exclusions fully intact.

4. Insurance ⇐434

Where aluminum doors sold to building contractor developed defects within six months after installation and fell apart, and door failures were unexpected, undesigned and unforeseen and were not result of normal deterioration but occurred suddenly long before any properly constructed door might be expected to wear out or collapse, failure of doors constituted an "accident" within policy whereby insurer agreed to pay on behalf of insured door manufacturer all sums which manufacturer became obligated to pay by reason of destruction of property caused by accident and insurer was liable for damages to houses resulting from such failure.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Accident".

5. Insurance ⇐512, 513

Where policy issued to manufacturer of aluminum doors covered liability imposed upon manufacturer because of injuries to or destruction of property caused by accident, insurer was not liable for expense of handling defective doors and their replacement, or loss of profits and good will sustained by purchaser of manufacturer's doors which were defective and resulted in damage to houses in which they were placed.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment for defendant in an action to recover on an insurance policy issued by defendant to California Aluminum Products, Inc., hereinafter referred to as Aluminum Products.

Plaintiff, a building contractor, ordered 760 aluminum doors, door jambs, and attached hardware from Aluminum Products in November, 1950. The doors were to be used in 76 houses being constructed by plaintiff in the cities of Napa and Fairfield. The deliveries of the doors occurred from December, 1950, to February, 1951. The doors were kept in storage for some time, and plaintiff began to install them in May, 1951, and installed all of them within a few months. After installation, defects appeared in some of the doors within a few days and in others after various periods of time ranging up to six months. Some of the doors sagged on their hinges and dragged on the floors. Some went out of shape. Parts of some of the doors fell out. Some doors could not be closed and others that were closed became locked in place and could not be opened. Plaintiff notified Aluminum Products, which undertook to supply other doors. Many of the new doors had the same defects as the old. Some were found damaged when received by plaintiff. Some could not be used because they were unsuitable; for example, 22 doors shipped as replacement-bathroom doors were equipped with chimes and letter drops. Aluminum Products shipped a total of 2,604 doors before enough suitable doors were obtained, and plaintiff was engaged in handling, storing, repairing, removing and installing doors for over a year.

In May, 1952, plaintiff brought an action against Aluminum Products alleging breach of warranty and negligence. Plaintiff alleged that by reason of expenses incurred in removing, installing, repairing, storing, and shipping doors, expenses incurred in office overhead during the time it was engaged in settling disputes arising out of installation of the doors and loss of profit, it was damaged in excess of $100,000. Aluminum Products notified defendant and asked it to defend the action. Defendant refused to do so on the ground that damage to the doors was excluded from coverage under the policy issued to Aluminum Products. Aluminum Products then undertook the defense of the action. It denied the allegations of the complaint and filed a cross-complaint for some $8,000 alleged to be unpaid on the doors. When that action came on for trial, counsel for both parties stipulated findings of fact and conclusions of law. Pursuant thereto, the court found that allegations of the complaint were true, that nothing was unpaid on the doors, entered judgment on the complaint for plaintiff in the sum of $100,000 and costs, and entered judgment against Aluminum Products on the cross-complaint.

Plaintiff then brought this action against defendant to recover the amount of the judgment under the insurance policy issued by defendant to Aluminum Products. The judgment roll of the prior action was admitted into evidence.

[1, 2] The policy in question was issued for the period from May 1, 1951, to May 1, 1952. Under the terms of the policy defendant was obligated to defend any actions against Aluminum Products alleging damages within the policy coverage. An insurer that has been notified of an action and refuses to defend on the ground that the alleged claim is not within the policy coverage is bound by a judgment in the action, in the absence of fraud or collusion, as to all material findings of fact essential to the judgment of liability of the insured. The insurer is not bound, however, as to issues not necessarily adjudicated in the prior action and can still present any defenses not inconsistent with the judgment against the insured. Sawyer v. Sunset Mutual Life Ins. Co., 8 Cal.2d 492, 499–501, 66 P.2d 641; Artukovich v. St. Paul-Mercury Indem. Co., 150 Cal.App.2d 312, 320–321, 310 P.2d 461; see Rest., Judgments, § 107a, pp. 513–518. Defendant contends that the judgment against Aluminum Products is only presumptive evidence of the matters necessarily adjudicated therein because it was a stipulated judgment. This question need not be considered since the trial court's findings in the instant case on issues necessarily adjudicated in the prior action are the same as the findings in the prior action. Thus, the findings on such issues are supported by the record of the prior judgment, whether it be considered as conclusive on those issues or only as presumptive evidence thereon. The issues that defendant litigated in the trial court and that are raised in this appeal concern the scope of policy coverage and were not adjudicated in the prior action.

The pertinent provisions of the policy are as follows. Under Coverage "C," "Property Damage Liability other than Automobile," defendant agreed: "To pay on behalf of the Insured all sums which the insured shall become obligated to pay by reason of the liability imposed upon him by law or contract because of injury to or destruction of property, including the loss of use thereof, caused by accident." Under "Exclusions" it is provided that: "This Policy does not apply: * * * (e) under Coverage C, to injury to or destruction of (1) any goods or products * * * sold * * * by the Insured * * * out of which the accident arises." Endorsement number 1, effective May 1, 1951, entitled "Exclusion of Products Liability," provides: "It is agreed that the policy does not apply to: (1) the handling or use of, the existence of any condition in or a warranty of goods or products * * * sold * * * by the named insured occurring after the insured has relinquished possession thereof to others * * *." Endorsement number 4 was executed on April 1, 1952, and provided that retroactive to May 1, 1951, the "exclusion of products liability endorsement number 1 is cancelled flat." The policy provides that it applies to accidents taking place during the policy period.

[3] Plaintiff contends that since endorsement 1 excluded liability for any breach of warranty of goods sold after the insured had relinquished possession thereof to others, its cancellation by endorsement 4 must be interpreted as providing coverage to the extent theretofore excluded, and that accordingly damages for breach of warranty in the sale of the doors were necessarily covered. There is no merit in this contention. Each of the endorsements contains the provision: "Nothing herein contained shall be held to vary, alter, waive or extend any of the terms, conditions, provisions, agreements or limitations of the undermentioned Policy, other than as above stated." Coverage A provides for bodily injury liability. Coverage C includes damages "because of injury to or destruction of property, including the loss of use thereof, caused by accident." Exclusion (e) excepts "injury to or destruction of (1) any goods or products * * * sold * * * by the Insured * * * out of which the accident arises." Endorsement 1 is an additional products liability exclusion. It excludes products liability for damage to property other than the products themselves and bodily injuries. It neither increases the coverage nor limits the exclusions otherwise provided, and its cancellation by its express terms leaves such coverage and exclusions fully intact. Accordingly, plaintiff cannot recover under the policy unless the damages were damages "because of injury to or destruction of property, including loss of use thereof, caused by accident," and were not damages because of "injury to or destruction of (1) any goods or products * * * sold * * * by the Insured * * * out of which the accident arises."

[4] Defendant contends that there was no injury to or destruction of property caused by accident. No all-inclusive definition of the word "accident" can be given. It has been defined "as 'a casualty—something out of the usual course of events, and which happens suddenly and unexpectedly and without design of the person injured.' Rock v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 172 Cal. 462, 465, 156 P. 1029, 1036, L.R.A. 1916E, 1196; Richards v. Travelers Ins. Co., 89 Cal. 170, 175, 26 P. 762, [23 Am. St.Rep. 455]." Zuckerman v. Underwriters at Lloyd's, 42 Cal.2d 460, 473, 267 P.2d 777, 784. It "'includes any event which takes place without the foresight or expectation of the person acted upon or affected by the event.'" Richards v. Travelers Ins. Co., 89 Cal. 170, 176, 26 P. 762, 763; see also, Ritchie v. Anchor Casualty Co., 135 Cal.App.2d 245, 252–253, 286 P. 2d 1000; Moore v. Fidelity & Cas. Co., 140 Cal.App.2d Supp. 967, 971, 295 P.2d 154. "Accident, as a source and cause of damage to property, within the terms of an accident policy, is an unexpected, unforeseen, or undesigned happening or consequence from either a known or an unknown cause." Hauenstein v. Saint Paul-Mercury Indem. Co., 242 Minn. 354, 65 N.W.2d 122, 126. The door failures were unexpected, undesigned, and unforeseen. They were not the result of normal deterioration, but occurred long before any properly constructed door might be expected to wear out or collapse. Moreover, they occurred suddenly. It bears emphasis that we are concerned, not with a series of imperceptible events that finally culminated in a single tangible harm (cf., Canadian Radium and Uranium Corp. v. Indemnity Ins. Co., 342 Ill.App. 456, 97 N.E.2d 132, 139–140), but with a series of specific events each of which manifested itself at an identifiable time and each of which caused identifiable harm at the time it occurred. The trial court found that "these defects, in some cases, developed within a few days after [the doors] were installed and in some cases as much as six months elapsed after the doors were installed, but that eventually all the original 760 doors so sold and delivered by the California Aluminum to plaintiff proved defective and fell apart. That said doors sagged on their hinges, went out of shape, they dragged on the floors and the inside parts of said doors fell out. That when said doors came apart they would frequently lock themselves in place and could not be opened. In other cases doors that were closed and locked would fall apart and come open. That when the dwelling houses were occupied by purchasers, as hereinafter set forth, the occupants would frequently leave their premises with the doors closed and locked and on their return find the doors had come apart and the houses were wide open. That in many cases, by reason of these defects in the doors, it was impossible for the occupants to lock the doors, or even to close the doors at night. That when temperatures arose in the houses the said doors would also emit noises that sounded like the explosion of fire crackers." Thus, although it may have taken many months for all of the doors to fail and fall apart, it is clear that each door, when it failed, failed suddenly. At one moment it was a usable door, at the next it was not. Had the door failures resulted in direct physical injury to the houses, the accidental cause of the harm would be obvious, but other harms flowing from the door failures were likewise accidentally caused. Accordingly, the crucial issue is which, if any, of these harms were within the policy coverage.

It is not disputed that injury to or destruction of the doors themselves was excluded by exclusion (e). Plaintiff contends, however, that both the houses and its business were damaged by the door failures. With respect to the houses its position is supported by Hauenstein v. Saint Paul-Mercury Indem. Co., 242 Minn. 354, 65 N.W.2d 122. In that case the insured sold defective plaster that was used to plaster a house. The plaster shrank and cracked to such an extent that it was of no value and had to be removed so that the walls and ceilings could be replastered with a different material. Injury to the plaster itself was excluded from coverage. The court held, however, that injury to the house had occurred and was covered under a clause identical with Coverage C in the present case. "No one can reasonably contend that the application of a useless plaster, which has to be removed before the walls can be properly replastered, does not lower the market value of a building. Although the injury to the walls and ceilings can be rectified by removal of the defective plaster, nevertheless, the presence of the defective plaster on the walls and ceilings reduced the value of the building and constituted property damage. The measure of damages is the diminution in the market value of the building, or the cost of removing the defective plaster and restoring the building to its former condition plus any loss from deprival of use, whichever is the lesser." 65 N.W.2d at page 125. In Volf v. Ocean Accident & Guar. Corp., 50 Cal.2d 373, 325 P.2d 987, a case also involving defective plaster, we distinguished the Hauenstein case on the ground that in the Volf case it was not necessary to remove the defective plaster before replastering the house. In the present case, however, it was necessary to remove the defective doors before they could be replaced, and we see no reason for not following the Hauenstein case and permitting recovery for damages to the houses according to the rule stated therein.

[5] Plaintiff's judgment against the insured was not limited to such damages. In addition to costs of removal of the doors and loss of use of the houses, it included the other costs of handling the defective doors and their replacements, loss of profits, and loss of goodwill. Plaintiff contends, however, that these additional items of damages constituted damages to its business and goodwill and were therefore damages "because of injury to or destruction of property." We cannot agree with this contention.

When Coverage C is read in the light of the exclusions applicable thereto, it is clear that the word property refers to physical or tangible property. Thus it is such property, not goodwill or a business entity, that is ordinarily thought of as the subject of use, and it is to damage to such property that all of the exclusions are directed. Any breach of contract may harm the business of the injured party, and if sufficiently serious, may affect his goodwill. Such damages, however, are not commonly thought of as injuries to or destruction of property within the meaning of a public liability insurance policy. Defendant did not undertake to insure against all breaches of contract caused by accident. It required an injury to or destruction of property and excluded injury to or destruction of goods or products sold by the insured. The significance of this exclusion would be obvious had the defects appeared before any of the doors had been installed. In such event it could not be seriously contended that an injury to property other than the doors had occurred within the meaning of the policy even though plaintiff's inability to use them seriously interfered with its business and injured its goodwill. Such damages are no less outside the coverage of the policy because there was also damage to the houses.

To summarize, it appears from the specific facts found that there was injury to the houses caused by accident and that therefore the trial court's conclusion to the contrary cannot stand. Since the judgment against Aluminum Products, however, also included additional elements of damages not covered by defendant's policy, we cannot grant plaintiff's motion to amend the findings and enter judgment for the full amount sought in its favor.

The motion to amend the findings is denied and the judgment is reversed for further proceedings in accord with the views herein expressed.

CARTER, Justice.

I concur in the judgment and in the majority opinion except the reasoning therein that the case of Volf v. Ocean Accident & Guar. Corp., 50 Cal.2d 373, 377, 325 P.2d 987, is distinguishable from Hauenstein v. Saint Paul-Mercury Indem. Co., 242 Minn. 354, 65 N.W.2d 122, relied upon in support of the conclusion reached in the case at bar. In my opinion the conclusion reached by a majority of this court in the instant case is inconsistent with that reached by it in the Volf case. In my dissenting opinion in the Volf case I set forth in detail the reasons why the insurance policy there involved was ambiguous and why, under the decided cases, such ambiguity should be resolved in favor of the insured. I pointed out that the primary function of insurance is to insure—to provide full coverage of the indicated risk. Businessmen are not usually lawyers and in the normal course of events must rely on the agents of insurance companies when buying insurance. If this court continues to "interpret" patently ambiguous and inconsistent clauses in insurance policies to the detriment of the insured rather than resolving such ambiguities in his favor, the door will be opened for still more ambiguities and even less insurance coverage for the money expended than is presently the case. It is my view that this court could, and should, when such an ambiguous policy is before it, hold without equivocation that the provisions which are confusing and ambiguous as to the liability covered will be resolved in favor of the insured. If a few of such forthright decisions were rendered by this court in this field it would not be long before insurance policies were more clearly and understandably written to express the true intent of the parties and there would be less litigation involving insurance policies.

SPENCE, Justice.

I dissent.

The policy coverage was limited to "liability imposed * * * because of injury to or destruction of property, * * * caused by accident." (Emphasis added.) The trial court found: "That it is not true that any of the defects in any of said doors or any of the expenses incurred or losses sustained by plaintiff was caused by accident." In my opinion this was the only finding which the trial court could properly have made under the undisputed facts. There was no "sudden and unexpected" event or anything which happened "suddenly and unexpectedly" so as to bring the situation within any accepted meaning of the phrase "injury to or destruction of property, * * * caused by accident." Zuckerman v. Underwriters at Lloyd's, 42 Cal.2d 460, 473, 267 P.2d 777, 784; Rock v. Travelers' Insurance Co., 172 Cal. 462, 465, 156 P. 1029, L.R.A.1916E, 1196; Richards v. Travelers Ins. Co., 89 Cal. 170, 175, 26 P. 762. Thus, the effect of the majority opinion is to convert a so-called public liability policy, limited to liability imposed for damage "caused by accident," into an agreement to indemnify the insured against liability for the insured's failure faithfully to perform its contractual obligations regardless of the showing of any "accident."

In Volf v. Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation, 50 Cal.2d 373, 325 P.2d 987, a somewhat similar policy was involved. This court found it unnecessary there to determine the scope of the insuring clause using the term "caused by accident," as the facts clearly brought the situation within one of the exclusionary clauses of the policy. Ibid, 50 Cal.2d at page 375, 325 P.2d 987. In my opinion, this court could have properly reached the same result in the Volf case by holding that the facts did not bring the situation within the plain provisions of the insuring clause. This court there distinguished Hauenstein v. Saint Paul-Mercury Indem. Co., 242 Minn. 354, 65 N.W.2d 122, but in the present case, the majority relies upon that case to support its position. I do not believe that the cited case was correctly decided, and therefore I would not follow it.

The majority opinion also cites and relies upon Ritchie v. Anchor Casualty Co., 135 Cal.App.2d 245, 286 P.2d 1000. The policy there was quite similar, insuring against liability for damages "caused by accident." The insured sold rancid peanut oil which was used by its customer in the manufacture of food products. The use of such oil by its customer "ruined all food products in which it was used, and damaged the machinery employed in the manufacture of same." 135 Cal.App.2d at page 252, 286 P.2d at page 1004. The court there quoted the approved definition of accident as something "which happens suddenly and unexpectedly" (135 Cal.App.2d at page 253, 286 P.2d at page 1005) and held that the liability of the insured was embraced within the terms of the insuring clause. Unlike the present case, the use of the rancid peanut oil there "suddenly and unexpectedly" caused damage to both the entire mass of the food product into which it was mixed and to the machinery used in the processing. Here, nothing happened "suddenly and unexpectedly" and there was no damage to the houses except for the fact that the doors themselves proved to be defective. It is therefore clear that the insured's liability was not a liability for damage "caused by accident."

I would affirm the judgment.

CALIFORNIA WATER & TELEPHONE COMPANY (a corporation), Petitioner,

v.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION of State of California, et al., Respondents.

S. F. 19690.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Feb. 2, 1959.

Rehearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Proceeding to review order of Public Utilities Commission purporting to modify terms of certain contract between water utility and subdivider. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that Public Utilities Commission could not compel water utility to extend its mains to new, proposed residential community to be created by subdivider in nondedicated territory, on terms other than those agreed to by the utility.

Order annulled.

Gibson, C. J., and Traynor, J., dissented.

1. Public Service Commissions ⇐6.8

The Public Utilities Commission is not charged with enforcement of private contracts; its function is to regulate public utilities and compel enforcement of their duties to public but not to compel them to carry out their contract obligations with individuals.

2. Public Service Commissions ⇐6.8

Public Utilities Commission can neither modify a public utility's contract nor order the utility to perform a contract, whether modified or unmodified, though it may, within limits of its jurisdiction, order utility to render certain services on certain terms and conditions, and, in so doing, it is not bound by terms of utility's previously negotiated contracts.

3. Constitutional Law ⇐81

Order directing public utility to devote its property to some use other than public use to which utility has dedicated property cannot be justified as exercise of police power.

4. Corporations ⇐382½

A public utility may limit its dedication of facilities to a territorial area.

5. Public Service Commissions ⇐6.7

A public utility may not be compelled to extend its service beyond territorial limits of its dedication, irrespective of nature of utility involved.

6. Corporations ⇐382½

In measuring territorial scope of a utility's dedication of its facilities, fundamental distinction exists between railway companies and other utilities such as water, gas, electric power and telephone companies, in that the latter forms of utilities normally extend their lines to their customers, while railway companies' customers bring themselves to the utility.

7. Waters and Water Courses ⇐194

When water utility has dedicated its service to inhabitants of municipality, territorial scope of its dedication may ordinarily be measured by municipality's boundaries, and in proper case, utility may be required to make reasonable extensions of its lines to accommodate increased demand of growing municipality.

8. Waters and Water Courses ⇐194

Water utility which had extended service to one portion of subdivided ranch could not be held to have dedicated its service to the remainder of that ranch merely because it claimed right to extend its service into the remainder especially when its contemplated possible future service was expressly made conditional, by agreement with subdivider, on explicit Public Utilities Commission approval of extension plan as tentatively offered.

9. Public Service Commissions ⇐32

Court could not disturb finding of Public Utilities Commission, if there was any evidence before Commission to support that finding.

10. Corporations ⇐382½

To hold that public utility property has been dedicated to public use is not a trivial thing, and such a dedication may never be presumed without evidence of unequivocal intention.

11. Corporations ⇐382½

The evidence of unequivocal intention to dedicate public utility property necessary to sustain a finding of dedication need not be expressly stated and it may be inferred from the acts of the owner and his dealings in relation to the property.

12. Corporations ⇐382½

Dedication of utility property is normally evidenced by some act which is reasonably interpreted and relied upon by public as a holding out or indication of willingness to provide services on equal terms to all who might apply.

13. Waters and Water Courses ⇐194

A water utility, by the mere act of signing agreements stipulating conditions under which it would extend service to new subdivisions in previously nondedicated area, would not be held to have made a dedication of its property to the public use in such area and such agreements could not empower the Public Utilities Commission to compel extension of mains and conduits on conditions other than those specified by utility in the agreements.

14. Waters and Water Courses ⇐194

In proceeding to review Public Utilities Commission order purporting to modify terms of contract between water utility and subdivider, evidence was insufficient to support implied finding that utility had dedicated its service to territory in question when it had, pursuant to special agreements, extended service to certain houses within the area.

15. Corporations ⇐382½

Actual rendition of public utility service to only a restricted class or eligible segment of public may be held to constitute a dedication of service to public. West's Ann.Public Util.Code, § 207.

16. Waters and Water Courses ⇐194

The provision of the Public Utilities Code stating that no water corporation shall begin construction of line without first obtaining certificate of public convenience and necessity but providing that such certificate shall not be necessary for extension into a territory contiguous to an existing line does not free water utility from all regulation when it contracts to extend mains beyond dedicated service area. West's Ann.Public Util.Code, § 1001.

17. Waters and Water Courses ⇐194

Under the Public Utilities Code, when water utility undertakes to extend its mains beyond dedicated area, it may do so only on terms and conditions stated in its main extension rule on file with Commission and it must obtain authority for any arrangements which deviate therefrom. West's Ann.Public Util.Code, § 532.

18. Waters and Water Courses ⇐194

Under the Public Utilities Code when water utility extends service, until provisions deviating from utility's main extension rule are approved by Commission, they are of no force and effect. West's Ann. Public Util.Code, § 532.

19. Waters and Water Courses ⇐194

Public Utilities Commission may properly regulate terms on which extensions into new areas may be voluntarily made by water utility and may regulate service which must be given within area to which utility is dedicated but it may not compel water utility to extend mains into wholly new proposed residential community to be created by subdivision in nondedicated territory on terms other than those agreed upon by utility. West's Ann.Public Util. Code, §§ 532, 1001.

SCHAUER, Justice.

This is a proceeding to review an order of the Public Utilities Commission which purports to modify the terms of a certain contract between petitioner and respondent Sawyer, and directs petitioner to re-execute the contract "as modified" by the commission and thereupon to specifically perform such "contract." We have concluded that the commission has acted in excess of its jurisdiction and that the order under review must be annulled.

Petitioner is a public utility engaged in the business of supplying water service to consumers in certain portions of Monterey County. The contract involved provides for the extension of petitioner's water mains and services into unimproved land which respondent Sawyer proposes to subdivide and which petitioner considers outside its dedicated service area. The commission premises its authority to make the subject order on its finding that petitioner has dedicated its service to the territory involved. Petitioner contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding of public dedication as to the subject area and that petitioner is therefore being deprived of its property without compensation in violation of its constitutional rights. For reasons hereinafter indicated we have concluded that petitioner's argument should be sustained. Because of the nature of the issue it is necessary to summarize all of the evidence which conceivably could tend to support the commission's holding.

In 1948 petitioner's admitted territory of dedicated service extended as far south as the southern boundary of an area known as Carmel Highlands. In that year respondent Sawyer purchased some 1,146 acres of land lying immediately south of Carmel Highlands. This land is known as the Victorine Ranch and, at the time of the Sawyer purchase, apparently contained but two dwelling houses and was in fact, as the name implies, a ranch or farm and not a residential area.

Following oral discussions with certain officers and employes of petitioner and after receiving letters from the manager of its Monterey Peninsula Division to the effect that "our installations at Carmel Highlands can be extended to the Victorine Ranch with storage tanks which would supply any development that might be contemplated in this area," and that "It would not be necessary to supplement our present supply from any other sources," respondent Sawyer proceeded to subdivide some 23 acres, hereinafter referred to as Tract No. 1, install a water distribution system therein, and construct an 8 inch water main from that distribution system to a 3 inch water main of petitioner's at its termination point some 400 feet north of the southern boundary of Carmel Highlands. This work was completed in October, 1948, and petitioner's local representatives prepared and presented to Sawyer for his consideration and signature a certain proposed contract for the extension of petitioner's service. However, neither Sawyer nor petitioner signed the document.

This unsigned proposal apparently contemplated the extension of petitioner's service to Tract No. 1 as an area contiguous to that being served by petitioner and also contained proposed agreements for possible later extensions of service to future subdivisions of the balance of the Victorine Ranch area. As to Tract No. 1 the proposed contract provided, in substance, that upon respondent Sawyer's transferring to petitioner ownership of the distribution system and 8 inch pipeline which he had constructed, petitioner would extend its service to Tract No. 1 as a public utility and would refund "the actual cost of the installation of said facilities" in conformance with petitioner's then effective subdivision main extension rule. Such extension rule (designated Rule and Regulation 19B) provided, in effect, that applicants for main extensions to serve subdivisions would pay the construction costs of the extension and would receive from petitioner, for a period not to exceed ten years, an annual refund of 35 per cent of the gross revenues collected from consumers within the subdivision.

The unsigned document also provided that respondent Sawyer would, as a condition precedent to petitioner's being obligated to supply water to areas other than Tract No. 1, construct at his own expense some 5,000 feet of 8 inch pipeline running from the northern terminus of the 8 inch pipeline installed by Sawyer to the southern terminus of petitioner's certain 8 inch pipeline in Carmel Highlands. There was no refund provision concerning the 5,000 foot pipeline.

The parties, having failed to agree, resumed negotiations and on July 8, 1949, reached agreement. They signed a contract which provided, among other things, that respondent Sawyer in effect transferred to petitioner, without obligation to refund, the pipeline and Tract No. 1 distribution system which he had constructed. Petitioner then connected its 3 inch main with the 8 inch main constructed by Sawyer and commenced service to Tract No. 1. Petitioner concedes, and has conceded throughout, that Tract No. 1, but only No. 1, thereby became and is now within its dedicated public service area. The order of the commission presently under review does not concern the terms of petitioner's service to Tract No. 1; it relates solely to the nature of petitioner's obligation, if any, to extend its mains and services to new subdivisions proposed to be created in other areas of the Victorine Ranch.

Under the July, 1949, contract petitioner conditionally agreed, in effect, to extend its mains and services from time to time to other contemplated subdivisions of the Vic-torine Ranch land lying below the 600 foot contour. Such main extensions were to be made in accordance with petitioner's Rule and Regulation 19B, provided that Sawyer, as a condition precedent, deposited with petitioner $20,000 toward the cost of the installation by petitioner rather than by Sawyer of the aforementioned 5,000 feet of 8 inch pipeline running from the northern terminus of the 8 inch pipeline in Carmel Highlands. Sawyer agreed to pay petitioner's actual construction costs and construction was to begin upon deposit of the $20,000. Petitioner agreed to refund any portion of the $20,000 that should prove in excess of the actual construction costs, but there was no provision for refund of the actual construction costs themselves. Respondent Sawyer agreed to commence accumulating the $20,000 by opening an escrow savings account and depositing the sum of $1,500 therein concurrently with each and every sale of a lot in Tract No. 1.

Paragraph 9 of the agreement provides that "This agreement shall at all times be subject to such changes or modification of the Public Utilities Commission * * * as said Commission may from time to time direct in the exercise of [its] jurisdiction." (Italics added.) Such provision is required by and was inserted pursuant to the commission's General Order No. 96. General Order No. 96 also states that no public utility such as petitioner "shall hereafter make effective any contract or arrangement for the furnishing of any public utility service * * * under conditions other than the * * * conditions contained in its tariff schedules on file and in effect at the time, unless it first obtain the authorization of the Commission to carry out the terms of such contract or arrangement * * *. Each such contract shall contain a provision indicating the understanding of the parties that it shall not become effective until such authorization of the Commission is obtained." (Italics added.) The latter provision was not inserted in the subject contract and petitioner did not submit the contract for the commission's approval but, as hereinafter shown, it was not until 1954 that Sawyer requested petitioner to "make effective" the contract for service beyond the original contiguous areas of Tract No. 1.

Petitioner also agreed to apply to the commission, within 60 days after execution of the contract (July 8, 1949), for a certificate of public convenience and necessity to render water service as a public utility in that portion of the Victorine Ranch lying below the 600 foot contour. Petitioner has not made such application and holds no certificate or franchise to serve the Victorine Ranch area.

In 1954 respondent Sawyer sought water service for certain areas of the Victorine Ranch other than Tract No. 1. Petitioner advised Sawyer that it would not extend its mains or services unless and until Sawyer complied with the condition precedent and, as specified in the contract, deposited with petitioner $20,000 for the construction of the 5,000 foot pipeline. Sawyer did not deposit the $20,000 but, on November 29, 1954, filed a complaint with the commission. The complaint alleged the substance of the foregoing facts, among other things, and prayed that petitioner be required to reduce its demands and extend service to the entire Victorine Ranch territory in accordance with its Rule and Regulation 19B. Petitioner filed an answer which, among other things, contested the commission's jurisdiction to grant the prayed-for relief. Hearings were held during April and July, 1955.

After the case was submitted but prior to a decision, the parties, on May 21, 1956, signed a proposed compromise agreement. LeForust, Inc., to whom respondent Sawyer had previously sold certain undeveloped portions of the Victorine Ranch, was a party to such agreement. This proposed compromise evidenced a full meeting of the minds of the parties and a clear statement of their intended contractual rights and obligations but, inasmuch as under General Order No. 96, hereinabove quoted, the proposed agreement would not be fully valid and effective without approval of its terms by the Public Utilities Commission, the parties expressly declared such approval to be a prerequisite to any effectiveness of the proposed agreement. The agreement provided that in place of meeting the condition theretofore agreed upon (the immediate deposit of $20,000 to be credited against Sawyer's obligation to pay all of the actual cost of constructing the 5,000 foot pipeline specified in the 1949 agreement) respondent Sawyer would "pay to" petitioner $24,000 but would not be obligated to pay any further amount toward petitioner's costs of making the necessary extension to its facilities. Petitioner agreed that upon receipt of the $24,000 it would proceed to construct an 8 inch pipeline some 560 feet in length connecting the 8 inch pipeline originally installed by Sawyer with a certain 8 inch pipeline of petitioner's which terminates on "Lower Walden Road." This latter pipeline is not 8 inches in diameter throughout its entire length; it contains some 1,500 feet of smaller pipe. Petitioner agreed to replace the smaller pipe so as to provide a continuous 8 inch main leading to the Victorine Ranch.

The $24,000 was, of course, intended to substantially defray petitioner's construction costs for the addition but was stipulated in the compromise agreement to be a "firm amount" not subject to readjustment upon determination of petitioner's actual construction costs. It was also agreed that as to any future main extensions —i. e., extensions after its service would have become dedicated to the new area— petitioner's main extension rule in effect at the time of such extension would be applicable, rather than the Rule and Regulation 19B which was in effect at the time of the 1949 agreement.[1]

Respondent Sawyer also agreed to request the commission to dismiss his complaint with prejudice and approve the 1949 agreement as amended by the 1956 agreement. In this regard the 1956 agreement provided as follows: "It is mutually agreed by the parties hereto that unless and until the Commission shall have, upon the application of [Sawyer] * * *, dismissed said complaint with prejudice and approved the 1949 Agreement, as amended hereby, all in such manner as to make such dismissal and approvals full, final and unconditional and subject to no further change without the consent of the parties hereto, this Agreement shall be of no force or effect and the rights, duties and obligations of the parties hereto shall remain as they were prior to the execution hereof." Except as expressly proposed to be modified, the agreement of July 8, 1949, was ratified and affirmed.

Pursuant to the terms of the 1956 proposed compromise agreement, Sawyer, on May 23, 1956, submitted the contracts to the commission for its approval and requested dismissal of his complaint with prejudice.

On August 29, 1956, the commission rendered its decision. Its opinion notes petitioner's argument to the effect that petitioner has not dedicated its public service to the Victorine Ranch properties other than Tract No. 1, and that the commission therefore has no jurisdiction to order an extension of service or regulate the conditions upon which petitioner's mains may be extended. The commission opinion, however, concludes that petitioner is subject to "whatever order in this proceeding [the commission] * * * may deem appropriate with respect to the facilities and service contemplated by [the 1949] * * * agreement and by the [1956] amendments thereto." (Italics added.) This conclusion is apparently based on (1) the commission's interpretation of the contracts involved and (2) its finding "that [petitioner] * * *, by execution of the 1949 agreement and the 1956 amendments thereto, has unequivocally indicated its intent to dedicate and has in fact dedicated its service, as set forth in said amended agreement, to the balance of the Victorine Ranch properties." (Italics added.) The above quoted finding, as appears from the above recited facts and as is hereinafter explained in more detail, is untenable.

1. In 1954 the commission promulgated a new main extension rule. Its refund provisions are considered less onerous to the utility.

The commission opinion then turns to what it terms "a consideration of the merits" of the agreement and concludes that petitioner's main extension rule in effect in 1949 should apply to future extensions and that Sawyer should not be required to pay the $24,000 contemplated in the 1956 agreement; that Sawyer should be required to pay no more than the actual cost of constructing the 560 feet of 8 inch pipe connecting the pipeline originally constructed by Sawyer with petitioner's "Lower Walden Road" pipeline, that petitioner should stand the cost of removing the "bottlenecks" in the latter pipeline. Placing emphasis on paragraph 9 of the 1949 agreement, which states that the agreement shall "at all times" be subject to modification by the commission "in the exercise of [its] jurisdiction," the commission entered its order: (1) Denying petitioner's motions to dismiss the Sawyer complaint. (2) Denying Sawyer's request for approval of the agreements and dismissal of his complaint. (3) Directing petitioner "to carry out the terms and conditions of its agreement of July 8, 1949, as amended by its agreement of May 21, 1956 * * * as modified to the extent and in the manner set forth in the preceding opinion * * *." (4) Directing petitioner "to re-execute said agreement of July 8, 1949, as amended by the agreement of May 21, 1956, and as modified by this order * * *." (Italics added.) (5) Denying all other relief prayed for by Sawyer, with the exception of the institution of an investigation by the commission into petitioner's "Monterey subdivision main extension contracts and practices," such investigation having already commenced. A petition for rehearing was denied.

[1, 2] Petitioner contends that the commission has acted in excess of its jurisdiction in that the commission's order purports to modify a private contract and order its re-execution and specific performance "as modified." As stated in Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Comm. (1916), 173 Cal. 577, 582, 160 P. 828, 2 A.L.R. 975, "the * * * commission is not a body charged with the enforcement of private contracts. [Citation.] Its function * * * is to regulate public utilities and compel the enforcement of their duties to the public [citation], not to compel them to carry out their contract obligations to individuals." The commission cannot "modify" a public utility's contract or order a public utility to perform a contract, whether "modified" or "unmodified." It may, however, within the limits of its jurisdiction, order a public utility to render certain services on certain terms and conditions, and in so doing it is not bound by the terms of a utility's previously negotiated contracts. (Cf. Motor Transit Co. v. Railroad Commission (1922), 189 Cal. 573, 581 [4], 209 P. 586.) The commission argues that the record supports its determination that petitioner has dedicated its service as a public utility to the entire Victorine Ranch area rather than just to Tract No. 1 therein, and that consequently the order under review merely utilizes various provisions of the contracts in the course of directing petitioner to extend its mains and services to the balance of the ranch on conditions which the commission has found reasonable.

[3] The law is clear that an order directing a public utility to devote its property to some other use than the public use to which the utility has dedicated the property cannot be justified as an exercise of the police power. As appears from Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Eshleman (1913), 166 Cal. 640, 680, 137 P. 1119, 50 L.R.A.,N.S., 652. "[I]n dealing with public utilities, regulation of use within the dedicated use is as far as the police power may be extended, and * * * when the regulation exceeds this, it is always void for unreasonableness and may, depending upon the form and character of the order, be also void as an attempt to take property without compensation * * *." In that case the commission had ordered Pacific Telephone Company to "permit a connection between its long distance lines and the local lines of the [competing] * * * companies [Tehama County Telephone Company, and Glenn County Telephone Company], under which, by the use of the switchboards, operators, and lines of the Pacific Company, its property and its agencies, the petitioning companies and their subscribers would have the same rights to all the long distance instrumentalities of the Pacific Company as its subscribers and patrons." (At page 669 of 166 Cal., at page 1129 of 137 P.) In opinions annulling the commission's order it was pointed out (166 Cal. at pages 669–670, 690–701, 137 P. at pages 1129–1130, 1138–1143) that the Pacific Company had dedicated its property to telephone service conducted by itself for the benefit of its own patrons and to the service of local companies in noncompeting territory, but had not made such dedication to the use of rival and competing companies, and held (166 Cal. at pages 686–687, 702–703, 137 P. at pages 1136–1137, 1143) that to compel it to provide service to such companies would be to subject its property to a new use which would constitute a taking without compensation first being paid to the owner as required by the California Constitution, art. 12, § 22.

[4] This court has likewise recognized that a public utility may limit its dedication to a territorial area. (Hollywood Chamber of Commerce v. Railroad Comm. (1923), 192 Cal. 307, 219 P. 983, 30 A.L.R. 68; Atchison, etc. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Comm. (1916), supra, 173 Cal. 577, 160 P. 828; Del Mar Water, Light & Power Co. v. Eshleman (1914), 167 Cal. 666, 140 P. 591, 948.) In the last cited case we annulled an order which directed a water company to extend its pipeline and render service to a certain individual. (See at pages 678–683 of 167 Cal., pages 595–597 of 140 P. 591.) Although there was some doubt whether the company was a public utility, such was assumed to be the fact and this court based its decision on failure of the evidence to show, and of the commission to find, that the individual concerned was within the territorial area to which the company had dedicated its public service. The court further commented on the limited nature of the supply of water itself, and declared (167 Cal. at page 681, 140 P. at page 597) that "There can be no doubt, therefore, that the owner of a water supply may make a limited dedication of it to public use, confining the use to such territory as he sees fit. Nor can there be any doubt that one owning a water supply is not compelled to dedicate all of it to public use, or that he may dedicate a part of it, only, to such use * * * Accordingly, our decisions have recognized and have repeatedly declared the right of a water company to make such limited dedication and to decline to furnish its water to persons not within the area it has undertaken to serve. [Citations.]" (Italics added.)

The commission, however, argues that certain language appearing in the decision of Hollywood Chamber of Commerce v. Railroad Comm. (1923), supra, 192 Cal. 307, 219 P. 983, indicates that a public utility water company may be ordered to expand into territory outside its dedicated service area in the interest of public convenience and necessity. As applied to the circumstances of the case at bar the argument is without merit. In the cited case this court held (192 Cal. at pages 313–314, 219 P. at pages 985–986) that the commission is without jurisdiction to order a street railway company to extend its lines into new territory in which it has no municipal franchise to operate. We recognized (192 Cal. at pages 312–313, 219 P. at pages 985–986) that the territorial scope of a utility's dedication might be measured by the territorial scope of the municipal franchises the utility had acquired, but reasoned that "whereas these other utilities [water, gas, electric, telephone] are given franchises [and hence have dedicated their services] to supply the inhabitants of the particular community," the territorial scope of the railway company's franchise included only the land over which the company had obtained permission to run its lines.

This court further stated among other things (at page 312 of 192 Cal., at page 985 of 219 P.): "The argument of the Railroad Commission seems to be predicated upon the erroneous assumption that a street railway company's public duty is analogous to the duties of a water, gas, electric power, or telephone company, which are required to expand their facilities to meet the demands of a growing community. (Lukrawka v. Spring Valley Water Co. [1915], 169 Cal. 318, 146 P. 640, * * *)" (Italics added.) Respondent commission now suggests that the italicized portion of the above quotation establishes that a water company may be compelled to extend its service beyond its dedicated area. But as hereinafter shown a reading of the court's opinion shows no support for the commission's suggestion.

The Lukrawka case involved a corporation which was organized "under the act of April, 1858 [Stats.1858, p. 218], for the purpose of supplying the city and county of San Francisco and the inhabitants thereof with a sufficient supply of water." (At page 321 of 169 Cal., at page 641 of 146 P.) Certain residents of San Francisco sued the company to compel it to extend its water mains and provide them with water. The court pointed out (169 Cal. at page 324, 146 P. at page 642) that "The act of 1858 in express terms confers on corporations accepting the franchise extended under it, the privilege of using the streets of the municipality in which it has undertaken to operate for laying its pipes and conduits. The respondent could acquire no right to engage in the business of supplying water to the city and county of San Francisco, with an easement over all the streets of the municipality, unless under a franchise granted by the state for that purpose and with such a right. It was for the benefit of the public that the franchise was extended; to secure to the municipality * * * and its inhabitants an adequate supply of water * * * [Page 325 of 169 Cal., page 643 of 146 P.] This was the purpose and this the condition upon which the franchise was offered and when it was accepted by the respondent it constituted a contract between the state and the respondent under which the rights, duties, and responsibilities of each were fixed * * * The franchise was not offered, nor could it be accepted, with any limitation as to the area to be fixed by the corporation organized under the act within which in the municipality it would furnish water to its inhabitants." The holding was that by accepting the franchise the water company had also assumed the obligation "to anticipate the natural growth of the municipality it had undertaken to serve as a whole and to take reasonable measures to have under its control a sufficient supply of water and make gradual extensions of its distributive system to meet the reasonable demands for water by the growing community." (Page 325, of 169 Cal. page 643 of 146 P.) The court further commented (169 Cal. at page 326, 146 P. at page 643), that it had not been cited to any authority holding that a corporation "operating under the terms of a franchise such as is involved here" (italics added) is not required to extend its water system into new territory in the city of its franchise. There is no suggestion that the commission could require the water company to extend its lines and services to some other city or new community lying beyond the bounds of the franchise it had accepted. It is thus clear that in the Lukrawka case the court was concerned with the peculiar obligations of a water company which had been organized and had accepted a franchise under the particular statute there involved (Act of April, 1858), rather than with any general power of the public utilities commission to order a public utility to extend its service beyond the territorial limits of its dedicated area, and that neither the Lukrawka nor the Hollywood case supports the commission's suggestion that it has such power.

[5–7] To summarize, the above cited cases are uniformly to the effect that a public utility may not be compelled to extend its service beyond the territorial limits of its dedication. This is true regardless of the nature of the utility involved. In measuring the territorial scope of a utility's dedication a fundamental distinction exists between railway companies and other utilities such as water, gas, electric power and telephone companies. This distinction stems from the fact that the latter utilities normally extend their lines to their customers, whereas a railway company's customers bring themselves to the utility. This distinction is most apparent in cases like Hollywood and Lukrawka, wherein a public utility has acquired a franchise to operate within a municipality. The extent and terms of such franchises constitute persuasive evidence of the territorial scope of the utility's dedication. When a railway company obtains a franchise to operate within a municipality it normally merely acquires permission (and impliedly obligates itself to the public) to run its lines over certain specified streets or strips of land; it does not acquire permission or obligate itself to extend its lines should the municipality grow in the future. The territorial scope of a railway's dedication is limited to a relatively narrow strip of land and, from the nature of the business, it is up to the public to bring itself to the railway company's line. Such is normally not the situation with respect to water companies and like utilities which extend their lines to individual customers within the areas to which they are dedicated. When a water company acquires a franchise to operate within a municipality, it normally (although not necessarily) acquires permission (and impliedly obligates itself to the public) to extend its lines along all the streets in the municipality, including streets to be built in the future, so that it may bring its service to all customers embraced within the territorial limits of the municipality. It follows that when a water utility has dedicated its service to the inhabitants of a municipality, the territorial scope of its dedication may ordinarily be measured by the municipality's boundaries, and, in a proper case, it may be required to make reasonable extensions of its lines to accommodate the increased demands of a growing municipality. But it is only within the territorial scope of its dedication that a water utility, or any other utility, may be compelled to extend its lines.

[8] The commission also suggests that as a matter of law petitioner must be held to have dedicated its service to the balance of the Victorine Ranch properties, because it claims the right to extend its service into that territory. Such reasoning, which transmutes a claimed privilege into an avowed obligation, is clearly untenable; this is even more obviously true here where the claimed privilege or, more accurately, contemplated possible future service, was itself expressly made conditional on explicit commission approval of the extension plan as tentatively offered.

[9–12] The next issue is whether the evidence is sufficient to support the commission's finding that petitioner has dedicated its public service to the territory involved. If there was any evidence[2] before the commission that could support its finding of dedication, such finding will not be disturbed. (Kern County Land Co. v. Railroad Comm. (1934), 2 Cal.2d 29, 35 [3], 38 P.2d 401; Western Canal Co. v. Railroad Commission (1932), 216 Cal. 639, 646[1], 15 P.2d 853; Samuel Edwards Associates v. Railroad Comm. (1925), 196 Cal. 62, 70[4], 235 P. 647; Butte County Water Users Assn. v. Railroad Comm. (1921), 185 Cal. 218, 231[8], 196 P. 265; Van Hoosear v. Railroad Commission (1920), 184 Cal. 553, 555[2], 194 P. 1003; see also, California Portland Cement Co. v. Public Utilities Comm. (1957), 49 Cal.2d 171, 175 [3], 315 P.2d 709; Southern California Edison Co. v. Railroad Comm. (1936), supra, 6 Cal.2d 737, 747[6], 59 P.2d 808.) Petitioner has admittedly dedicated its property to public use in various areas of Monterey County. The question is whether the evidence supports the finding that petitioner has made such a dedication with respect to the balance of the Victorine Ranch area. As stated in Allen v. Railroad Commission (1918), 179 Cal. 68, 85, 175 P. 466, 8 A.L.R. 249, "To hold that property has been dedicated to a public use is 'not a trivial thing' [citation], and such dedication is never presumed 'without evidence of unequivocal intention.'" (See also, Trask v. Moore (1944), 24 Cal.2d 365, 373[3], 149 P.2d 854; Klatt v. Railroad Commission (1923), 192 Cal. 689, 702[2], 221 P. 926; Richardson v. Railroad Commission (1923), 191 Cal. 716, 721[3], 218 P. 418.) However, such unequivocal intention need not be expressly stated; it may be inferred from the acts of the owner and his dealings and relations to the property. (Samuel Edwards Associates v. Railroad Comm. (1925), supra, 196 Cal. 62, 70[2], 235 P. 647.) Dedication is normally evidenced by some act which is reasonably interpreted and relied upon by the public as a "holding out" or indication of willingness to provide service on equal terms to all who might apply. (See Samuel Edwards Associates v. Railroad Comm. (1925), supra, 196 Cal. 62, 70[3], 71[7], 235 P. 647; Traber v. Railroad Commission (1920), 183 Cal. 304, 312, 191 P. 366; City of San Leandro v. Railroad Commission (1920), 183 Cal. 229, 234[2], 191 P. 1; Producers Transp. Co. v. Railroad Comm. (1917), 176 Cal. 499, 503–505, 169 P. 59; Camp Rincon Resort Co. v. Eshleman (1916), 172 Cal. 561, 563–564, 158 P. 186; Thayer v. California Development Co. (1912), 164 Cal. 117, 126–132, 128 P. 21.) If the evidence reveals any acts on the part of petitioner which were reasonably relied upon by the public as an expression of petitioner's willingness to extend its mains to the uninhabited balance of the Victorine Ranch and render public utility service therein whenever members of the public should occupy that area and request such service, the commission's order will not be annulled.

2. For the purposes of this argument we do not consider the possible effect of section 1760 of the Public Utilities Code. (See Southern Pac. Co. v. Public Utilities Comm. (1953), 41 Cal.2d 354, 361, 260 P.2d 70; Southern California Edison Co. v. Railroad Comm. (1936), 6 Cal.2d 737, 748–750 [7, 9, 11], 59 P.2d 808.)

[13] The commission in its written opinion states: "We * * * find that [petitioner] * * * by execution of the 1949 agreement and the 1956 amendments thereto, has unequivocally indicated its intent to dedicate and has in fact dedicated its service, as set forth in said amended agreement, to the balance of the Victorine Ranch properties." (Italics added.) But the mere signing of the 1949 and 1956 agreements furnishes no evidence of public dedication. For one thing, the 1956 agreement has not become effective and the commission errs to the extent that it treats that agreement as binding upon petitioner. That agreement clearly states that it "shall be of no force or effect" unless and until the commission "shall have * * * dismissed [the Sawyer] * * * complaint with prejudice and approved the 1949 Agreement, as amended hereby * * *" Neither of the conditions precedent has occurred and the 1956 agreement is inoperative. Furthermore, it is manifestly arbitrary and unreasonable to hold that the mere signing of these agreements evidenced a dedication of property to public use in a previously non-dedicated area, so as to ipso facto empower the commission to compel the extension of petitioner's mains on conditions other than those specified by petitioner in the agreements, and without which petitioner, in the exercise of its managerial judgment (cf. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Public Utilities Comm. (1950), 34 Cal.2d 822, 828–829[5, 6], 215 P.2d 441), would not have signed the agreements in the first place.

Butte County Water Users Ass'n v. Railroad Comm. (1921), supra, 185 Cal. 218, 228–229[4], 196 P. 265, cited by the commission, is not persuasive to the contrary. In that case this court, despite protest by certain "old consumers" of a water utility, affirmed an order of the commission directing the utility to supply water, beginning with the year 1920, to some 14,400 acres of land not theretofore served by it. In September, 1919, the utility had contracted with the owners of the 14,400 acres to supply such service. In the spring of 1920 it became evident that there was danger of a water shortage due to light rainfall during the preceding winters. Before the water company actually commenced deliveries to the 14,400 acres the company's pre-1920 consumers filed a complaint with the commission, alleging that the company would not have enough water to serve both their lands and the 14,400 acres of new lands, and asking the commission to direct the company not to supply the latter. The owners of the 14,400 acres intervened, alleging that they had been accepted by the water company as consumers. The commission, on the ground that the interveners occupied the status of consumers and were therefore, as a matter of law, entitled to share pro rata in the available supply, ordered the company to serve them.

Although in affirming the commission's order this court held that the record supported the commission's conclusion that the owners of the 14,400 acres occupied the status of consumers, i. e., persons whom the water company was obligated to serve, the holding did not rely on the mere creation of the September, 1919, contract. The opinion states (at page 228–229 of 185 Cal., at page 269 of 196 P. 265): "The facts in the matter are * * * that in September, 1919, the company and the owners of the new lands contracted for service for those lands; that the company thereupon extended its system and the owners prepared their land, both at very considerable expense; and that prior to January 1, 1920, pursuant to the company's rules, the respective owners had made application to it for water for the ensuing year, and those applications had been accepted, and the owners had paid the company's charges.

"These facts are not disputed, and upon them certainly the owners had become consumers, provided only the company had authority to admit them as such. * * * The relation of public utility company and consumers was established as soon as the company came under obligation to serve and the owners came under obligation to take. Both these obligations had been assumed by the respective parties by January 1, 1920, so far as they could assume them. * * *" In the Butte case the water company had actually extended its system into the new territory and the owners of the 14,400 acres had performed all conditions precedent to the water company's obligation to commence water deliveries. The case is clearly not authority for the proposition that petitioner here dedicated its service to the entire Victorine Ranch by merely signing the 1949 and 1956 agreements.

[14] The commission contends also that the record supports an implied finding that petitioner had dedicated its service to the territory in question prior to the signing of the contracts. The commission's written opinion, as well as its order denying rehearing, indicate that it relied to some degree upon evidence that petitioner serves water to three houses located on the Victorine Ranch a short distance south of Tract No. 1.

Two of those houses existed at the time Sawyer acquired the Victorine Ranch and are served water pursuant to a 1943 contract with their then owner, Joe Victorine. The record reveals that when Victorine applied to petitioner for water service in 1943 the matter was the subject of correspondence between petitioner and the commission. In a letter to the commission dated March 8, 1943, petitioner advised that it was willing to serve Victorine only on condition that it would not be interpreted "as an extension of the company's service area or the dedication of any of the company's water to the Victorine service or the area in which it is located." That area, of course, was farm land, not a growing residential area. By letter of April 12, 1943, the commission suggested to Victorine that "the service be covered by an agreement in order that there can be no cause for future misunderstanding concerning it." Such a contract was entered into and expressly provides that the service is to be temporary in character and to meet an emergency, and is to be supplied from surplus waters; that petitioner may terminate the service at any time upon one year's written notice, and that neither Victorine nor any successor in interest of his shall acquire any right to receive water except on such temporary basis; that "no water is dedicated to any such uses of Victorine or of the present or future occupants of said residences [sic] or said residences or said real property or any part thereof." By the terms of the contract Victorine agreed to, "at his own cost and expense, furnish and install pipe necessary to accept delivery of water from [petitioner] * * * within [petitioner's Carmel Highlands] * * * service area." There is nothing to indicate that the pipe installed by Victorine became the property of petitioner. Petitioner's rendition of service to the two Victorine ranch houses certainly does not evidence a willingness to assume public utility obligations to all potential inhabitants of the 1,146 acre Victorine Ranch as a residential subdivision area.

The third house referred to by the commission is owned by one Andrews. It appears that in 1954 Andrews was negotiating with Sawyer for the purchase of two acres immediately south of Tract No. 1. Sawyer inquired whether petitioner would serve the property and was informed that petitioner would not serve any area outside of Tract No. 1 until Sawyer complied with his obligation under the 1949 contract. Finally, however, an arrangement was worked out between Sawyer and petitioner whereby the property could be served under a private and limited contract. Pursuant to that arrangement Andrews, now petitioner, ran a pipe from the Andrews home to petitioner's mains in Tract No. 1, at which point delivery is made and metered. Also pursuant to that arrangement, Sawyer deposited $2,500 from the proceeds of his sale to Andrews in the escrow account provided for by the 1949 contract. Even if we should assume that petitioner thereby dedicated its service as a public utility to this single residence located on the outskirts of Tract No. 1, such service cannot be construed as a representation to the public that like service will be provided all who purchase lots in future subdivisions yet to be developed by Sawyer. The very nature of the arrangement made negates any such inference.

The commission asserts that its finding of public dedication was particularly based upon the testimony of one Neill, who was petitioner's division manager in the Monterey area from 1940 to 1943. Neill testified to the effect that at the time he was connected with petitioner both he and his superiors considered petitioner obligated to serve "the entire Monterey Peninsula, the subdividable land in Carmel Valley from the Mathiot Ranch on down. * * * the Coast line down to and including the [Carmel] Highlands * * *" The Victorine Ranch, of course, lies beyond and immediately south of Carmel Highlands. At other times during his examination Neill made statements to the effect that the entire Victorine Ranch was within what he and his superiors considered to be petitioner's "service area." It is clear from Neill's testimony that he used the term "service area" to include all territory into which he expected petitioner, at some future time, to expand. For instance, he included within petitioner's "service area" territory that was then being served by three other water systems which he expected petitioner would eventually absorb. Neill's testimony thus amounts to no more than a statement of his own 1943 conclusion as to what petitioner probably would do in the future. He testified to no acts which could be construed as representations to the public by petitioner that it had dedicated its public utility service to the entire area of the Victorine Ranch or that it would extend its service to that new area whenever requested. His testimony does not support the commission's finding that petitioner has dedicated its service to the public in the balance of the Victorine Ranch area. Nor is any other evidence cited which can support such finding.

This is a situation wherein Sawyer, as a private individual businessman, desired, negotiated for, and obtained, a conditioned or provisional obligation running from petitioner to Sawyer as an individual, as distinguished from a member of the public. The most than can be deduced from the dealings between petitioner and Sawyer is that petitioner has conditionally obligated itself to Sawyer as an individual subdivider, to obligate itself to the public in the future when and if the specified conditions precedent have been met. And such conditions have not been met.

[15] Of course, an actual rendition of public utility service to only a restricted class or eligible segment of the public may be held to constitute a dedication of service to the public. (Camp Rincon Resort Co. v. Eshleman (1916), supra, 172 Cal. 561, 564, 158 P. 186; see Commercial Communications, Inc. v. Public Utilities Comm. (1958), 50 Cal.2d 512, 327 P.2d 513.) Section 207 of the Public Utilities Code defines "Public or any portion thereof" as "the public generally, or any limited portion of the public, including a person * * * for which the service is performed or to which the commodity is delivered." In the present case, however, Sawyer has not sought, much less received, actual water deliveries to himself for his own use upon the balance of the Victorine Ranch property. He does not appear interested in himself receiving and paying for water deliveries. What he has sought and what he has received is a conditioned contractual obligation running to himself, not as a water consumer, but as a private individual engaged in the business of subdividing uninhabited land.

The commission has relied upon the mere existence of that conditioned and provisional obligation, running to Sawyer as an individual private businessman—who has never met the conditions precedent—as evidence that petitioner obligated itself to "the public"—an unidentified and intangible public—to provide service in an as yet uninhabited area. Such a view is untenable. It follows that the evidence fails to support the finding of dedication and that the order under review must be annulled.

Petitioner further contends that the commission had no jurisdiction whatsoever over the terms and conditions upon which a water public utility may voluntarily agree to extend its mains into non-dedicated territory. Petitioner concedes the commission's jurisdiction over the rates which may be charged for actual water delivery once the mains have been extended and service commenced, but urges that the commission's jurisdiction does not attach until such time as water is actually delivered to consumers; that a water public utility may agree to extend its mains into previously non-dedicated territory upon whatever terms and conditions it pleases. The commission contends that when a water public utility undertakes to extend its mains beyond its dedicated area it must do so on the terms and conditions stated in its main extension rule on file with the commission, or obtain commission authority for any arrangements which deviate therefrom; that until the commission approves provisions deviating from the utility's main extension rule, such provisions are of no force or effect.

[16] Petitioner argues that its main extension rule is applicable only to extensions within its dedicated service area; that when it contracts to extend its mains to an area wherein it is under no obligation to the public to serve, it does so as a private corporation free from regulation by the Public Utilities Commission. Petitioner relies on section 1001 of the Public Utilities Code which provides: "No * * * water corporation shall begin the construction * * * of a line, plant, or system, or of any extension thereof, without having first obtained from the commission a certificate [of public convenience and necessity] * * *

"This article shall not be construed to require any such corporation to secure such certificate for an extension * * * into territory * * * contiguous to its * * line, plant, or system, and not theretofore served by a public utility of like character * * *"

Nothing in section 1001 indicates that a water utility is free from all regulation when it contracts to extend its mains beyond its dedicated service area. The commission seeks to apply and enforce that part of its General Order No. 96 which states that no public utility such as petitioner "shall hereafter make effective any contract or arrangement for the furnishing of any public utility service * * * under conditions other than the * * * conditions contained in its tariff schedules on file and in effect at the time, unless it first obtain the authorization of the Commission to carry out the terms of such contract or arrangement." As authority for its promulgation of the quoted portion of General Order No. 96, the commission relies on section 532 of the Public Utilities Code which provides that "no public utility shall charge, or receive a different compensation for any product or commodity furnished or to be furnished, or for any service rendered or to be rendered, than the * * * charges applicable thereto as specified in its schedules on file and in effect at the time * * * The commission may by rule or order establish such exceptions from the operation of this prohibition as it may consider just and reasonable as to each public utility."

[17] Petitioner contends that a water utility cannot be considered to have dedicated its service to the public in a previously non-dedicated area until water is actually delivered in that area; that the commission's jurisdiction to regulate terms and conditions of service does not attach until such time as water is actually delivered; and that therefore the commission has no jurisdiction whatsoever over the compensation charged for the extension of a water utility's mains preparatory to the commencement of actual water deliveries. In other words, petitioner concedes that section 532 is applicable insofar as compensation charged for actual water deliveries is concerned, but contends that the section is inapplicable with respect to the compensation charged for the main extensions which make such water deliveries possible.

But regulation of compensation charged for actual water deliveries could be substantially inadequate to protect the public interest if public utilities were free from all regulation with respect to the compensation charged for the main extensions which make such water deliveries possible. The extension of a water utility's mains in preparation for the actual delivery of water is no less a public utility service than the water deliveries themselves. The cost of installing mains for the delivery of water is a part of the cost of the water deliveries. Petitioner's position on this issue is not tenable. Various cases from other jurisdictions cited by petitioner do not involve statutory schemes of regulation akin to that in California, and are not in point.

[18, 19] We conclude that section 532 of the Public Utilities Code fully supports the commission's position that when a water public utility undertakes to extend its mains beyond its dedicated area it may do so only on the terms and conditions stated in its main extension rule on file with the commission, and must obtain commission authority for any arrangements which deviate therefrom; that until provisions deviating from the utility's main extension rule are approved by the commission, they are of no force or effect. The commission may properly regulate the terms on which extensions into new areas may be voluntarily made and it may regulate the service which must be given within an area to which the utility is dedicated. But this is not to say that the commission may compel a water utility to extend its mains into a wholly new, proposed residential community to be created by a subdivision in non-dedicated territory, on terms other than those agreed to by the utility. It cannot. Neither may the commission accomplish that result by itself proposing the terms on which the utility will contract to enter a new territory, order the utility to enter into such a contract, and then compel it to specifically perform that contract.

The order under review is annulled.

SHENK, CARTER, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

I dissent.

I am of the view that the commission's finding that there was a dedication of service by the company with respect to the Victorine Ranch property is supported as to all portions of the ranch other than the part above the 600-foot contour. It is not disputed that, if there was such a dedication, the commission has authority to order the company to extend service to the dedicated area when such service becomes necessary. The order of the commission should be affirmed, with the possible exception of certain provisions discussed hereinafter relating to the form of the order.

In considering the propriety of the commission's order we must keep in mind the rule that the Public Utilities Commission is a statewide agency which derives adjudicating power from the Constitution (Cal. Const., art. XII, § 22) and that its factual determinations, for example, those of public convenience and necessity and of reasonableness, are not subject to re-examination in a trial de novo but must be upheld by a reviewing court if they are supported by substantial evidence. (Southern Pac. Co. v. Public Utilities Comm., 41 Cal.2d 354, 362, 367, 260 P.2d 70; Pacific Greyhound Lines v. Railroad Comm., 11 Cal.2d 427, 429, 80 P.2d 971; see California Portland Cement Co. v. Public Utilities Comm., 49 Cal.2d 171, 175, 176, 315 P.2d 709; cf. Shepherd v. State Personnel Board, 48 Cal. 2d 41, 46, 307 P.2d 4.)

The water company admits that in 1948 its territory of dedicated service extended south to the southern boundary of Carmel Highlands. In that year respondent Sawyer purchased the Victorine Ranch which contained 1,146 acres of land lying immediately south of Carmel Highlands. After receiving letters from an officer of the water company to the effect that its installations could be extended to the ranch with storage tanks that would supply any development that might be contemplated in this area, Sawyer subdivided 23 acres, herein referred to as Tract No. 1, installed a water distribution system therein, and constructed an 8-inch water main to connect with the company's 3-inch main some 400 feet north of the southern boundary of Carmel Highlands.

In July 1949 the parties signed an agreement which provided for the transfer to the water company, without obligation to refund, of the 8-inch pipeline and the distribution system in Tract No. 1. The agreement provided in part as follows: The company, within five days, was to connect its 3-inch main with the 8-inch main and, within 60 days, to apply to the Public Utilities Commission for a certificate of public convenience and necessity "to render water service as a public utility in that portion of said Victorine Ranch lying below the 600 foot contour." Sawyer agreed to pay the company the cost of installing an 8-inch pipeline running some 5,000 feet to connect the one previously built by Sawyer with an existing 8-inch pipe of the water company. He was to create a fund of $20,000 toward this purpose, the fund to be turned over to the company upon the construction of ten homes in Tract No. 1 or in the event Sawyer should subdivide an additional portion of the main tract. The company agreed "to extend its facilities to other portions of said tract lying below the 600 foot contour in accordance with Published Rule and Regulation 19B of Company," provided such additional areas were developed in units of not less than five acres. With respect to the portion of the ranch lying above the 600-foot contour, the company agreed to supply water under terms and conditions acceptable to it, but the contract provided that the company should be under no obligation to serve that area if Sawyer and the company were unable to agree on reasonable terms. It was further provided that the services to be rendered by the company and the rates to be charged should be subject to such rules and regulations as were or should be established by the Public Utilities Commission and that the agreement should be subject to such changes and modifications as the commission might direct in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

The company's Rule 19B referred to above, filed with the commission, provided that applicants for extensions of mains to serve tracts and subdivisions should pay the construction costs of the necessary facilities with certain minor exceptions and should receive from the company, for a period of not to exceed ten years, an annual refund of 35% of the gross revenue collected from consumers within the subdivision. It thus appears that the 1949 agreement was more favorable to the company than its rule on file with the commission with respect to who should pay the costs of the 8-inch main already built by Sawyer, the contemplated 5,000-foot pipeline, and the distribution system for Tract No. 1.

Following execution of the July 1949 agreement, the company connected its 3-inch main with the 8-inch main built by Sawyer and commenced service to Tract No. 1. The company concedes that Tract No. 1 thereby became a part of its dedicated public service area.

The company, however, failed to comply with its unconditional promise, under the 1949 agreement, to apply within 60 days to the Public Utilities Commission for a certificate of public convenience and necessity "to render water service as a public utility in that portion of said Victorine Ranch lying below the 600 foot contour." Moreover, the company did not comply with paragraph X of General Order No. 96 of the commission which, in accord with section 532 of the Public Utilities Code, declares that a water company cannot make effective any contract for furnishing public utility service under conditions other than those contained in its schedules on file with the commission (in this case, Rule 19B of the company) unless it obtains commission authority for any arrangements which deviate therefrom. Here, as we have seen, the 1949 agreement contained several departures, favorable to the company, from its Rule 19B, and these departures, under the law, could not be made effective without approval. The company thus violated the law when it put the 1949 agreement into effect, without commission approval, by proceeding into a portion of the ranch area, namely, Tract No. 1.

In view of the fact that the company proceeded into a portion of the ranch area, commenced service, and operated there for a period of several years, at all times purporting to act under the 1949 agreement, there was clearly a dedication by the company to furnish water to the area, at least in accordance with the terms and conditions of that agreement. One of these terms, and a part of the consideration due to Sawyer, was the unconditional promise of the company to seek within 60 days a certificate of public convenience and necessity with respect to the entire ranch below the 600-foot contour, and the extent of the dedication must be measured by this term of the agreement, which cannot properly be severed from the remainder of the contract. In the analogous case of Lukrawka v. Spring Valley Water Co., 169 Cal. 318, 324, 146 P. 640 et seq., a water company, organized under a statute permitting the formation of corporations to supply water to a city or town, had commenced service to part of San Francisco. It was held that the company, by proceeding under the statute and accepting the statutory franchise which was applicable to the whole city, dedicated its service to the entire city. Although in the present case there is no franchise to show the boundaries of the land to be served, the extent of the area of dedication is clearly indicated by the provisions of the 1949 contract under which the company obligated itself to apply for a certificate of public convenience and necessity as to all portions of the ranch below the 600-foot contour.

The 1949 contract is not, as asserted by the majority opinion, merely a conditioned or provisional obligation upon the part of the company to obligate itself in the future. The existence of the agreement itself is unconditional, and the company's promise to apply for a certificate is likewise unconditional. While the contract by implication makes certain acts by Sawyer conditions precedent to performance by the company of its obligation to serve the portions of the ranch outside of Tract No. 1 in accordance with Rule 19B, such conditions would merely affect the time for performance of those duties and do not excuse the company's failure to perform its unconditional promises nor operate to terminate the completed dedication. If the company in 1949 had performed its duty to apply for such a certificate and for approval of the terms and conditions of the contract which departed from its Rule 19B, and if the commission had granted those requests and had approved the contract, there obviously would have been a completed dedication of service to the entire ranch below the 600-foot contour. Under such circumstances the commission would have had authority to order the company to render service to the area, upon performance by Sawyer of his obligations under the 1949 agreement, giving Sawyer a reasonable time for performance upon his part within the meaning of the contractual provisions. The company should not be permitted to rely either on the fact that it breached its agreement by failing to apply for the certificate or on the fact that it violated the law by putting the contract into effect without first obtaining commission approval.

The foregoing conclusions are not affected by the fact that in 1956 the company, Sawyer, and a purchaser of a part of the ranch property entered into a compromise agreement which expressly provided that it should have no force and effect until dismissal of Sawyer's complaint and unqualified approval by the commission of the 1949 agreement as modified by the compromise. The 1956 compromise adopted, with certain amendments, the provisions of the 1949 agreement relating to the extension of service to all the ranch below the 600-foot contour but was conditioned upon dismissal of the complaint and unqualified approval by the commission of all the terms of the 1949 agreement as amended by the compromise. The 1956 compromise indicates at least a conditional intent upon the part of the company to dedicate its services to all portions of the ranch below the 600-foot contour, and, in any event, it is clear that the 1956 agreement discloses no desire upon the part of the company to depart from its announced intent, as declared in the 1949 agreement, to extend service to all portions of the ranch below the 600-foot contour. Although the 1956 compromise, standing alone, would not be sufficient to show a dedication, in view of the fact that it was conditioned upon an approval which was never obtained, this is immaterial because, as we have seen, there was a completed dedication of service to the whole ranch below the 600-foot line as a result of the 1949 agreement and the action of the company pursuant thereto in commencing service to part of the ranch.

Under the circumstances of this case the commission, in addition to concluding that the company had dedicated its services to all the ranch property below the 600-foot contour, could also order the company to render service upon terms different from the conditions set forth in the 1949 contract, and the commission was not required to make a choice between accepting or rejecting the agreement as an entirety. As the majority opinion recognizes, the commission may properly regulate the service which must be given in an area to which the utility is dedicated and the terms on which extensions into new areas may be made, and any arrangements made by the utility which deviate from its rules on file with the commission, unless approved by the commission, are of no force and effect. (Pub.Util.Code, § 532; Paragraph X of General Order No. 96 of the commission.) When the company put into effect the 1949 agreement by extending service thereunder to a portion of the ranch area, without complying with its promise to seek a certificate of public convenience and necessity and in violation of the order requiring commission approval of deviations from the company's filed rules, it was bound to know that it acted at its peril. The company thus assumed the risk that the commission would subsequently conclude that the company had dedicated its services to the entire area as delineated by the promises under which it purported to act, that the company could be ordered to render service within the area under reasonable regulations, and that such contract terms as were not acceptable to the commission could be disregarded.

Any other conclusion would be very unfair to Sawyer and other persons interested in the ranch property, would give the company benefits to which it was not entitled, and would permit the company to circumvent the law requiring commission approval of extensions of service upon terms different from the company's filed rules. The company purportedly acted under the 1949 contract when it entered into the ranch property, began to serve a portion of it, and continued that service during the intervening years to the date of this proceeding. Sawyer and other persons interested in the ranch property clearly had a right to rely upon the fact that the company, by its conduct, indicated that it intended to fulfill the obligations which it had undertaken in 1949, including the unconditional, express promise to apply for a certificate of public convenience and necessity to serve the entire ranch property below the 600-foot contour and the implied in law promise to seek commission approval of the arrangements. In view of all the circumstances, including the contract and the fact that the company was at all times aware of Sawyer's plans to continue subdividing the land, the commission could reasonably conclude that it would be unfair to permit the company, at this late date, to be released from its agreement to apply for permission to serve the entire area. Moreover, it should be noted, in this connection, that the commission could reasonably consider the possibility that, for purposes of economy of operation and public convenience, only one water utility should serve the entire ranch area, that the company's entry into a portion of the area made it impossible for any other utility to perform such unit service unless the company was forced to withdraw, and that, since the company had entered Tract No. 1 under nonapproved conditions but pursuant to its agreement to extend service to the balance of the ranch, the company should be required to serve the portions outside Tract No. 1 as a condition to applying in Tract No. 1 terms of service which depart from Rule 19B.

Contrary to the position taken by the majority opinion the order of the commission, when properly construed, concerns the terms of the company's service to Tract No. 1 and does not relate solely to the company's obligation to serve other areas of the ranch. The terms of extension of the company's service to Tract No. 1, under the 1949 agreement, obviously include the various promises of Sawyer and the company with regard to construction of pipelines, payment therefor, connections with the company's system, and transfer of Sawyer's 8-inch main and distribution system to the company. These promises clearly related to, and were parts of the consideration for, the company's agreement to enter Tract No. 1 as well as for its agreement to apply for a certificate as to other portions of the ranch. Thus, when the commission, by its order, prescribed terms other than those fixed by the 1949 agreement for construction of and payment for pipelines, it was in effect altering the terms of extending service to Tract No. 1 as well as to the remaining property. The majority opinion does not discuss the right of the commission under General Order No. 96 and the undisputed facts of this case to order the company to revise the unapproved terms upon which it entered Tract No. 1 in 1949 or, as an alternative, to withdraw from that tract. If the commission were not permitted to make such an order, any company could ignore the commission, flout the rules discussed above, and establish service on its own exorbitant terms by simply entering a tract and commencing service under private arrangements without obtaining commission approval.

I find no merit in that portion of the majority opinion which appears to argue that there has been no dedication of service to the ranch area outside of Tract No. 1 because, it is asserted, "Sawyer has not sought, much less received, actual water deliveries to himself for his own use" upon this portion of the ranch but, rather, has sought an "obligation running to himself, not as a water consumer, but as a private individual engaged in the business of subdividing uninhabited land." Under the evidence presented here the commission could reasonably conclude that in 1949 Sawyer, to the knowledge of the company, was planning to subdivide the entire ranch property and that the 1949 contract was made in order to assure a water supply for the subdivided area. Unquestionably this was true with respect to Tract No. 1, and the agreement and the other circumstances discussed above are sufficient to justify a similar conclusion with respect to the remainder of the ranch. The use of a contract of this type, subject to approval of the commission, is clearly an appropriate method for a subdivider and a water company to employ for the purpose of establishing for the subdivider, in advance of actual construction, the necessary water supply for his tracts, and it would be wholly unreasonable to require that he receive some of the water for his personal use or that he obtain the signatures of prospective home owners, who are probably unknown to him. The implied finding of the commission that the parties to the agreement contemplated and arranged for service by the company to the public, as distinguished from some private contractual service which would not come within the jurisdiction of the commission, is likewise supported by the provision of the 1949 agreement requiring the company to apply for a certificate of convenience and necessity with respect to the remainder of the ranch property. As we have seen, the factual determinations of the commission, under its constitutional powers, are not subject to re-examination in a trial de novo and must be upheld by this court if they are supported by substantial evidence.

The finding of the commission is that there had been a dedication of service to the balance of the ranch, but the only provision in the contract relating to service above the 600-foot contour is that the company should not be under any obligation to serve that area unless it was able to agree with Sawyer on reasonable terms. There was merely an agreement to agree in the future, which is not sufficient to show a clear intent to dedicate service to the area above 600 feet. However, the portion of the finding as to the upper area is severable, and the deficiency of evidence does not require any modification of the commission's order since it does not direct that any action be taken with reference to the land above the 600-foot contour.

It is not necessary in this dissent to discuss the power of the commission to compel a utility to extend its mains into a wholly new and nondedicated area on terms other than those agreed to by the utility.

In view of the holding of the majority opinion it is likewise unnecessary for this dissent to consider, with respect to the form of the commission's order, whether the company can properly be ordered to "modify" or "re-execute" or "perform" its 1949 contract as amended. The commission, nevertheless, has the power, as the majority opinion recognizes, to order a public utility to render certain services on certain terms and conditions, and, in so doing, it is not bound by the company's previously negotiated contracts. It would be a minor matter to correct, or direct the commission to correct, any technical errors of this type in its order.

In my opinion the order of the commission should be affirmed, except insofar as concerns the possible technical errors referred to above.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION of the State of California, Appellant.

L. A. 24769.

Supreme Court of California,

In Bank.

Feb. 6, 1959.

Rehearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Action to recover taxes paid. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Walter H. Odomar, J., rendered judgment for the plaintiff and the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that a railroad subsidiary could not be both a highway common carrier business and a city carrier business and was not entitled to segregate the two operations for tax purposes and thus take advantage of the Motor Vehicle Transportation License Tax Law exemption as a city carrier.

Judgment reversed.

CARTER, Justice.

Plaintiff, Santa Fe Transportation Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as plaintiff, or the transportation company, brought this action against the State Board of Equalization for a refund of taxes paid under protest.[1]

Plaintiff transportation company is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company. Under an agreement executed in July, 1937 between the transportation company and the railway company, the plaintiff agreed to transport tangible personal property in less than carload lots moving on the railway's bills of lading. Under another agreement,

1. The tax assessed encompassed the period from November 1, 1950 until October 31, 1953. Defendant refunded to plaintiff a penalty assessed by it and paid by plaintiff, and it has been stipulated between the parties that the correct amount to which plaintiff would be entitled is the sum of $33,244.38 which includes $4,958.07 interest.

executed in 1951, the transportation company agreed to perform for the railway company "pickup and delivery" services which were described as the transportation from local freight depots of the railway company in California to the customer's warehouse or place of business in the vicinity of such depots and from the customer's warehouse or place of business to such local depots, of goods moving on bills of lading of the railway company which were either theretofore or thereafter transported by the plaintiff under the same bills of lading of the railway company from one station to another over public highways outside the corporate limits of cities. The railroad bills of lading required the railroad to make pickups and to deliver the goods from the point of origin to the point of destination.

Plaintiff's pickup and delivery services were, for the most part, accomplished by the use of lighter equipment than the "line haul" (inter-city) operations which, for the most part, used heavier equipment. It is conceded by the plaintiff that in 8.8% of the operations line haul equipment was used for pickup and delivery services whereas in 91.2% of the operations the line haul equipment was used in the inter-city operations. In some instances the lighter equipment was used in inter-city operations.

The tax here disputed was assessed by defendant Board of Equalization under the provisions of the California Motor Vehicle Transportation License Tax Law (Revenue & Taxation Code, §§ 9601–9607, 9651, 9652 et seq.).

Section 9603, subdivision (a) defines "operator" as "Any person engaging in the transportation of persons or property for hire or compensation by or upon a motor vehicle upon any public highway in this State, either directly or indirectly."

Section 9606 defines "Gross receipts" as follows: "'Gross receipts' include all receipts from the operation of motor vehicles entirely within this State and a proportion, based upon the proportion of the mileage within this State to the entire mileage over which such operations extend, of the receipts from the operation of motor vehicles passing through, into, or out of this State, or partly within and partly without this State. * * *

"'Gross receipts' do not include revenue derived by an express company from the shipment of property over the lines of common carriers, but do include revenue derived by an express company from the transportation of property in motor vehicles operated by it."

Section 9652 provides that: "For the purpose of the proper administration of this part and to prevent evasion of the tax it shall be presumed that the gross receipts from all operations of operators are subject to the tax until the contrary is established."

Section 9651 provides that: "A license tax is hereby imposed upon operators at the rate of 3 per cent of the gross receipts of the operators from operations."

Section 9653 provides that: "This part does not apply to operators of motor vehicles operated exclusively within incorporated cities or between incorporated cities or incorporated cities and private property where no portion of the public highway outside the corporate limits of the cities is traversed in such operation.

"The tax does not apply to the gross receipts derived from the transportation of persons or property wholly within incorporated cities or between incorporated cities or incorporated cities and private property or wholly on private property where no portion of the public highway outside the corporate limits of the cities or private property is traversed in such operation." [2] (Emphasis added.)

It is plaintiff's position that its intra-city pickup and delivery service, even though admittedly part of its inter-city service, was separate and distinct from its line haul operations and thus within the emphasized portion of the exemption statute just set forth. It is argued that the intra-city pickup and delivery service is "wholly" within incorporated cities and not over public highways. Defendant, on the other hand, contends that plaintiff's intra-city pickup and delivery service was an inseparable part of its inter-city service.

2. This section was amended in 1955 by the addition of another paragraph which will be hereinafter discussed.

There is no dispute as to the facts. The dispute arises over what legal effect is to be given them. Plaintiff's books were kept by an employee of the railway company and were segregated as to pickup and delivery service and line haul operations. There was no segregation when line haul equipment was used for pickup and delivery service and no segregation when the lighter equipment was used for inter-city service. The price charged for pickup and delivery service was 25½ cents per 100 pounds, while the line haul charge was on a cost plus percentage basis. The drivers of the line haul equipment and pickup and delivery service equipment were members of different unions, however, as heretofore noted, both types of equipment were operated to some extent on an inter-changeable basis. All equipment was serviced at the same garage. In some 21 cities, pickup and delivery service was accomplished by equipment other than that owned by the transportation company. Plaintiff transportation company held a certificate of public convenience and necessity from the Public Utilities Commission which authorized it to do both an inter-city and an intra-city business and which authorized it to move on billing of the railway company at its published tariff rates. Plaintiff was also separately licensed as a city carrier.

Plaintiff relies upon the case of California Motor Transport Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 1947, 31 Cal.2d 217, 187 P.2d 745, in support of its position that its intra-city pickup and delivery service was a separate and untaxable part of its business. Defendant board relies on the case of Bekins Van Lines, Inc. v. Johnson, 1942, 21 Cal.2d 135, 130 P.2d 421, in support of its position that the intra-city pickup and delivery service was an inseparable and taxable part of plaintiff's inter-city operations.

In the California Motor case it was held that the inter-city and intra-city operations of the plaintiff were so entirely separate and distinct as to constitute two separate businesses. In the California Motor case the plaintiff was a highway common carrier which operated under a certificate of public convenience and necessity restricted to inter-city operations and which prohibited it from operating any intra-city pickup and delivery service in any of the three cities which were part of its inter-city operations. Plaintiff purchased the equipment of the pickup and delivery service in Los Angeles which had formerly been used by it for its intra-city service; it also purchased the equipment of the Oakland and San Francisco pickup and delivery service. Plaintiff, after acquiring a license as a city carrier, operated the Los Angeles and Oakland pickup and delivery services, and the former owner of the San Francisco pickup and delivery service continued to operate it for the plaintiff. Plaintiff operated its pickup and delivery services under written contracts with the express company which covered only that portion of the goods transported in intra-city movement. There were also separate written contracts covering the inter-city and inter-terminal transportation. It was found by the trial court that different equipment was used for the inter-city and intra-city services; that "'its equipment never deviated from its devotion to the service for which it was licensed. It kept accounts restricted to its character as a highway carrier. * * * That plaintiff is both a highway carrier and a city carrier and it exists in each of these characters by separate authority. Each business [of plaintiff] has a separate license or certificate. * * * The businesses were not confused or entangled and did not overlap. The Court finds that the two operations, that of a city carrier and that of a highway carrier, are just as separate and distinct for all purposes of this case as if the two operations had been conducted by separate and distinct corporations or legal entities.' " It was also there found that " 'plaintiff has at all times kept separate and distinct books and records covering said pickup and delivery service and entirely independent of books and records covering its intercity operations.' "

In the Bekins Van case (which was decided in 1942 but which involved taxes assessed for the years 1935 and 1936 under the provisions of the California Motor Vehicle Transportation License Tax Act), it was held that intra-city pickup and delivery service which was maintained for the transportation of small consignments to and from inter-city terminals was taxable as part of the gross receipts. This court then stated that: "The trial court in the present case properly concluded that receipts from all hauls which originated in one city for transportation over the public highways or which terminated in a city after such transportation should be treated without distinction as taxable gross receipts from operation.

"It is shown that receipts from intracity business as excepted from the act were not included in the computations of gross receipts from operation as defined by the act. Nor were charges for labor furnished for the purpose of packing and crating goods, or warehousing, included in the gross receipts subject to taxation. All exceptions and limitations provided by the act were contemplated in the additional assessment paid under protest by the plaintiff. The trial court correctly concluded that the assessment of the additional tax was in accordance with the statute." 21 Cal.2d 135, 142, 130 P.2d 421, 425.

In the Bekins case the amounts charged for pickup and delivery service in intracity movement were separately indicated on the way bills; smaller equipment was used for the intra-city operations than was used in inter-city hauls.

In the California Motor case, a majority of this court distinguished the Bekins case as follows [31 Cal.2d 217, 187 P.2d 747]:

"In support of its position that the assessments upon the receipts of pick-up and delivery service performed by plaintiff were lawfully made, defendant relies in particular upon the case of Bekins Van Lines, Inc. v. Johnson, (1942), 21 Cal.2d 135, 130 P.2d 421. The situation in that case, however, does not coincide with that now before us. There it was not proven and found by the court, as here, that the plaintiff conducted two separate and distinct business operations, each of which performed distinct and different services under contracts separately executed with the recipient of the services. Rather, the plaintiff there argued that before the tax rate was applied it was entitled to deduct from its gross receipts for the hauling of goods from its customers' dwellings in one city to those in other cities an amount computed as attributable to services rendered in loading and unloading such goods between house and sidewalk, as well as amounts 'separately indicated on its way bills received from pick-up and delivery service within municipalities.' In its opinion this court continued (at page 139 of 21 Cal.2d, at page 423 of 130 P.2d), 'In intercity hauls of small consignments the plaintiff found it more convenient to pick up and deliver with the use of smaller trucks between the point of pick-up or delivery and the larger truck or van which was to transport or which had transported the goods over the public highways. In other intercity hauls the van or truck received and discharged the load directly at the door. The plaintiff contends that receipts from such separate pick-up and delivery service within municipalities in connection with intercity hauls should be excepted from assessment under the act because that service is conducted entirely within municipalities and does not employ any part of the public highways.' * * *

"It is to be noted, also, that the court in its opinion in the above cited case points out (at page 142 of 21 Cal.2d, at page 425 of 130 P.2d) that 'receipts from intracity business as excepted from the act [Rev. & Tax.Code, § 9653] were not included [by the Board of Equalization] in the computation of gross receipts from operation as defined by the act. Nor were charges for labor furnished for the purpose of packing and crating goods, or warehousing, included in the gross receipts subject to taxation,' and that (at page 138 of 21 Cal.2d, at page 423 of 130 P.2d) in its return to the Board for the years in question 'the plaintiff reported its gross receipts from all transportation business in the state exclusive of hauls excepted by section 14 [now § 9653] of the act,' but claimed deductions therefrom as described above. It thus appears that only receipts from those services which were found to be integral parts of the single operation of moving goods from a dwelling, over the public highways, to their destination outside of the city in which the moving operation originated, were held subject to the tax. By contrast, plaintiff in the instant case is not moving the goods of its own customers in intercity operations whereof the pick-up and delivery service forms an integral part of a unitary operation, but is rather, as found by the trial court, engaging in two separate and distinct businesses, severally authorized by a certificate of public convenience and necessity and by a permit to operate as a city carrier, in which it renders to an express company, which alone deals with the general public, separate services under separate contracts and with separate and independent bills rendered therefor. Manifestly the fact that the same goods were the subjects of both intracity and intercity transportation does not establish that as a matter of law there was but a single business operation. In truth the plaintiff in its capacity of highway carrier was, as previously noted, prohibited from rendering pickup and delivery service in any of its terminal depot cities and, hence, could carry intercity only the identical goods which were the subject of pick-up and delivery by some other operation or agency." (Emphasis added.)

A comparison of the facts of the case at bar with the distinctions above drawn shows: That plaintiff carried goods for its parent company, the railway company, on the railway's bills of lading; and while plaintiff had two certificates, one of which was an intra-city license, its certificate of public convenience and necessity was not prohibitory but included the right to conduct intra-city transportation; that pickup and delivery service and inter-city operations were rendered under separate contracts although it appears that the original 1937 contract covered intra-city pickups and deliveries as well as line hauls; that while no separate bills were rendered for the two services, different charges were made for intra- and inter-city operations; that pickup and delivery charges were registered by the railway agents and forwarded to the plaintiff which kept monthly summaries and payment was remitted monthly by the agents; that while bookkeeping was segregated on the basis of pickup and delivery and line haul operations, there was some intermingling and overlapping both as to the bookkeeping and the operations themselves in that no distinction was made as to wholly intra-city pickups and deliveries.

In the Bekins case it was held to be of no significance that plaintiff there used smaller equipment for pickup and delivery as a matter of its own convenience. In the California Motor case it was held to be of great significance that there was no overlapping or intermingling of the use of the two types of vehicles and that there was separate billing and a complete separation of the intra- and inter-city accounts as a matter of bookkeeping. It was also held significant in the California Motor case that while the pickup and delivery services were owned by the inter-city transportation company, both businesses were conducted on behalf of an independent third party—the express company. Factually, the case at bar appears more like the Bekins case than it does the California Motor case. The Bekins case was not overruled by the California Motor case but was distinguished only because of the factual differences existing in the two cases.

[1, 2] Plaintiff argues that there is nothing in section 9653 to indicate a legislative intention that a transportation operation was exempt from taxation only if it is entirely separated from or in no way related to another transportation which is conducted on highways outside the city limits. The answer to this contention lies in the wording of the statute in which it is provided that the tax does not apply where the transportation of property is wholly within or between incorporated cities "where no portion of the public highway outside the corporate limits of the cities or private property is traversed in such operation." (Emphasis added.) A majority of this court said in the Bekins case (21 Cal.2d at pages 140, 141, 130 P.2d at page 424) that "The preparatory activities sought to be excepted are just as much a part of and essential to transportation, and therefore to operation of motor vehicles, as are actual loading and unloadig operations which are also preparatory to the rolling of the vehicle along the highways. To adopt the plaintiff's suggestion would be to add to the language of the definition a limitation which the Legislature did not express and which it must be deemed it did not intend. If the Legislature intended to exclude from 'operation' as defined every incidental service and activity customary and essential in the matter of transporting goods for compensation and hire, it could easily have said so. By failure to use any such limiting words the Legislature indicated its intention of not so limiting or circumscribing the meaning or scope of the act. In re Bush, 6 Cal.2d 43, 56 P.2d 511. Under the applicable rules of construction this court may not supply any language which the Legislature must be deemed to have omitted intentionally."

[3] Plaintiff also contends that the Bekins case was decided on facts occurring prior to the 1939 amendment to the act which, it is argued, constituted a substantive change in the law. This same contention was made with respect to the 1941 codification of what is now section 9653 in San Diego Electric Ry. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 1948, 89 Cal.App.2d 267, 270, 200 P.2d 573, 575, where the court said: "We find no merit in this contention. No change in the language of the statutes has been made which compels such conclusion; and if the legislature intended, by the slight changes made in the wording of the law, that in determining gross receipts subject to taxation, only that portion of a single fare attributable to transportation in unincorporated territory should be taxed, no reason appears why cryptic language should have been used. Where prorationing has been intended, as provided in section 9606, supra, the legislature has so provided in definite terms; and its failure to provide for the apportionment of gross receipts from intercity travel on a mileage basis, when it specifically so provided regarding interstate travel, is convincing evidence that no such result was intended. It is beyond the province of courts to read into section 9653, supra, language which, we must assume, was intentionally omitted. Furthermore, that the legislature did not intend to provide for prorationing as claimed is indicated by section 9652, supra. Also section 9653 is an exemption statute, and as such is subject to the rule that exemptions from taxation are to be strictly construed against the taxpayer. Cypress Lawn Cemetery Ass'n v. City and County of San Francisco, 211 Cal. 387, 390, 295 P. 813; Bay Cities Transp. Co. v. Johnson, 8 Cal.2d 706, 712, 68 P.2d 710; Miller v. McColgan, 17 Cal.2d 432, 441–442, 110 P.2d 419, 134 A.L.R. 1424; Robertson v. Johnson, 55 Cal.App.2d 610, 614, 131 P.2d 388." Plaintiff's argument that the court in the San Diego case was referring to the 1941 codification, rather than the 1939 amendment, is without merit. The court was referring specifically to the Bekins case as is apparent from its conclusion: "Therefore, our conclusion is that the decisions in In re Bush and Bekins Van Lines, Inc., supra, are applicable and controlling in this case." The 1941 codification of what is now section 9653 divided the section into two parts, changed a comma to a period and substituted the word "does" for the phrase "imposed hereunder shall."

It should be noted that while the trial court made findings which are in accord with the facts heretofore set forth, it concluded that defendant was not entitled to assess the tax because it was levied on "gross receipts from the transportation of goods in operations wholly within the limits of incorporated cities or between incorporated cities where no portion of the public highway outside the corporate limits of such cities was traversed. * * *"

[4] It appears to us that the wording of the statute is significant and that the Legislature undoubtedly intended that the exemption should apply only where entirely intra-city operations were concerned. It, of course, cannot be denied that in the California Motor case the pickup and delivery service while intra-city was incidental to the inter-city operations of the plaintiff there as it was in the Bekins case. There is, of course, in the Bekins case and the one under consideration an intermingling of operations which was not present in the California Motor case although the same company conducted both types of operations in all three cases. In view of the holding in the San Diego case heretofore set forth which involved intra- and extra-city transportation of passengers, the amendment to section 9653 by the addition of subsection (c) in 1955 is interesting. It is there provided that "If any incorporated city imposes any tax or any franchise or license fee measured by the gross receipts derived from the transportation of passengers and any operator engaged in the transportation of passengers partly within and partly without the city, the tax imposed by this part does not apply to the portion of the gross receipts attributable to operations within the city and included in the measure of the city tax or fee. The amount of gross receipts to which the tax does not apply under this subdivision shall not exceed the proportion of the operator's gross receipts that the mileage operated within the city bears to the entire mileage over which the operations extend." (Emphasis added.) By the addition of this subsection the Legislature provided for a prorationing of gross receipts where intra- and extra-city passenger service was involved. No similar provision has been enacted to take care of the intra- and extra-city transportation of property. In the absence of such legislation, and under the section as it now stands, we do not see how intra-city operations which are an inseparable part of inter-city operations can be considered exempt from the gross receipts tax.

The judgment is reversed.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate a default interlocutory judgment of divorce.

A complaint in divorce was filed by the plaintiff on April 8, 1957, wherein she charged the defendant with extreme cruelty, and also alleged the usual statutory requirements, and further set forth that there was certain described community property of the parties. She requested: a divorce; that the property be distributed pursuant to law; support and maintenance for herself; a reasonable attorney's fee; restoration of her former name and other customary demands.

The defendant engaged an attorney who represented him until after the interlocutory decree of divorce was granted. The attorney so engaged consulted with the defendant, prepared an answer wherein the defendant, among other things, set forth that the community property consisted solely of a trailer court business (which trailer court business was not mentioned in the plaintiff's complaint). The answer was filed on April 26, 1957.

On July 12, 1957, the attorney for the wife filed a "Memorandum for Setting Contested Action." On October 17, 1957, the cause was set for trial on February 14, 1958. A "Notice of Trial" dated October 24, 1957, was served upon the defendant and his attorney, and filed in the court on October 25, 1957.

On December 13, 1957, the parties and their attorneys each signed a "Stipulation for Default" in which it was set forth that the answer to the complaint theretofore filed be withdrawn and that the matter be heard as a default, and that each waived notice of all further proceedings. The stipulation was filed February 14, 1958.

On December 13, 1957, after negotiations between the parties and the attorneys, a property settlement agreement, which was prepared by the attorney for the defendant, was signed in his office by the parties, both attorneys being present.

On February 18, 1958, the defendant signed a substitution of attorneys, whereby he substituted his present attorney of record, in the place and stead of the attorney who had represented him up to that time. The consent to the substitution was signed by the former attorney on February 20, 1958, and the substitution was accepted by present counsel on February 21, 1958. The "Substitution of Attorneys" document was filed February 24, 1958.

The defendant's present counsel then filed, on March 7, 1958, what is denominated a "Notice of Motion to Vacate and Open Default and Default Judgment under section 473 C.C.P. because of surprise, inadvertence and excusable neglect." The motion was noticed for hearing on March 26, 1958. Various affidavits were filed, including those of J. B. Mandel (the present attorney for the defendant), Lauretta Boris (sister of the defendant), Susan Gaze and Albert M. Ostrow (friends of the defendant), a letter or unsworn statement of the defendant's brother from Chicago, and an affidavit of the defendant himself. The plaintiff wife filed an affidavit wherein, for all practical purposes, she denied the averments contained in the affidavits filed by the defendant, and set forth in detail in her own behalf just what did take place. The attorney for the wife also filed an affidavit which contradicted much of what was stated in the defendant's affidavits.

The general thought which seems to run throughout all of the statements filed by the defendant is to the effect that he, the defendant, had physically and mentally deteriorated during the past year and that he could not concentrate on what he was doing. A memorandum of points and authorities was filed, however, the application for relief was not accompanied by a copy of the answer or other pleading proposed to be filed.

The trial court heard the matter on March 26, 1958. At the hearing and during the course of argument, counsel for the defendant stated that he had a medical report (which had to do with the defendant) which he had recently received, however he did not offer the same into evidence and it was not so received. From the record before us it is extremely difficult to ascertain what counsel was attempting to establish at the hearing. The judge repeatedly asked him to point out wherein there had been any surprise, excusable neglect or inadvertence, and on each occasion counsel attempted to point out the inconsistencies or the contradictions in the various affidavits, and attempted to state why the judge should believe those persons who were interested in the defendant, and disbelieve the plaintiff and her attorneys. The judge denied the motion to vacate the default and the default judgment.

The defendant now contends, (1) that the court abused its discretion, and (2) that his proposed offer of impaired judgment was sufficient to raise the issue of incompetence on his part, and that the court erred in not allowing him the opportunity to satisfactorily establish such an issue.

The defendant relies heavily upon certain language set forth in the headnote in the case of Rehfuss v. Rehfuss, 169 Cal. 86, 145 P. 1020, as follows: "The failure of a wife to contest an action for divorce resulting in an interlocutory judgment against her, due to fear engendered in her by the representations made to her by her husband and her own attorney that if she did defend, her infant child would be taken from her and its father, and placed in some public institution, is excusable neglect, within the meaning of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

There was insufficient evidence in the Rehfuss case to show that undue influence was exerted upon the wife which justified her excusable neglect in failing to proceed as she otherwise would, or that there was a collusive agreement entered into between the parties. The trial court was of the opinion that there was no such showing made in the case before us, and the record convinces us that the trial court was correct.

The defendant also cites Garcia v. Garcia, 105 Cal.App.2d 289, 233 P.2d 23, in support of his position. In that case the moving party, the wife, had not been represented by an attorney. The plaintiff himself did not file a counter affidavit to the assertions by the wife. Further, in the Garcia case, the wife's affidavit set forth that she had gone to the office of the attorney for her husband and the husband's attorney had told her that it was unnecessary for her to engage counsel, that she would be given at least one-half of the community property, that their child would remain in her custody, and that the husband would support and maintain the child. The wife did not appear in that case, and the default judgment thereafter entered provided that the husband take practically all of the community property, and further he was to have the custody of the minor child. The trial court denied the wife's motion to vacate the default and the appellate court reversed the judgment, and ordered and permitted the wife to file an answer and cross-complaint. There are no facts of importance in the present case before us which are comparable to the facts of the Garcia case.

Counsel for the defendant has stated in his brief that he made an offer tending to show that the defendant was suffering from Parkinson's disease and that such disease affected the central nervous system and the activity of the brain. We have carefully read the transcripts and the records and we fail to find any such an offer, excepting such as might have been made in a very general way when counsel indicated that he needed some more time—that the defendant was to be referred to a neurologist and a psychiatrist and that an electroencephalogram should be taken. When counsel was asked by the court if he had any testimony to the effect that the defendant was impaired in his judgment and that there had been a deterioration in his mental processes, counsel's reply was that he believed that he could get such testimony. The court asked how, and counsel's only reply was to have the court talk to the defendant.

[1] As we view it, the defendant presented no evidence to show any incompetency on his part, and there is every indication that he, the defendant, followed the usual and proper course under the circumstances, namely, when he was served with a complaint in divorce he took the papers and documents to a competent lawyer of his own choosing, told his own lawyer what he wanted, advised the lawyer of his desires with respect to a property settlement agreement, had his lawyer draw the agreement, caused arrangements to be made whereby the proposals were submitted to the opposing party (the wife in this case), and ultimately convinced the wife and the attorney for the wife of the desirability of executing a property settlement agreement, which they did. The defendant apparently knew what he wanted and got it. The fact that he has changed his mind, engaged other counsel, and now wants something else, does not constitute sufficient grounds upon which to vacate the default and the judgment.

The defendant has cited Galper v. Galper, 162 Cal.App.2d 391, 328 P.2d 487, and Dei Tos v. Dei Tos, 105 Cal.App.2d 81, 232 P.2d 873, in support of his contentions. Neither case, on its facts, is in point and in our opinion neither case is of any assistance to the defendant.

Section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, provides in part as follows:

"[Relief from judgment taken by mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect.] The court may, upon such terms as may be just, relieve a party or his legal representative from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect. Application for such relief must be accompanied by a copy of the answer or other pleading proposed to be filed therein, otherwise the application shall not be granted, and must be made within a reasonable time, in no case exceeding six months, after such judgment, order or proceeding was taken." (Emphasis added.)

In this case the affidavits of the moving party did not set forth the reasons and the causes of the excuses for the inadvertence, if such there were.

[2] It is, of course, the duty of the trial court to resolve the conflicts in the various affidavits. The trial judge made the determination in this case and we see no reason why his determination should be disturbed.

Furthermore, as heretofore indicated, the moving party failed entirely to comply with the mandatory provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, in that no copy of the answer or other pleading proposed to be filed, accompanied the application for relief, nor was it ever filed or offered for filing. Bailiff v. Hildebrandt, 47 Cal.App. 564, 191 P. 42; La Bonte & Ransom Co., Inc. v. Scellars, 90 Cal.App. 183, 265 P. 550; County of Los Angeles v. Lewis, 179 Cal. 398, 400, 177 P. 154.

We find no abuse of discretion upon the part of the trial judge.

The order and the judgment are, and each is, affirmed.

v.

Herman H. KAYE, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 23043.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 5, 1959.

Suit to rescind partnership agreement and purchase of interest in defendant's business. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Edwin L. Jefferson, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that even though it was expressly declared therein that issuance of license for partnership was to be essence of agreement, and even though defendant predicated his claims of fraud, breach of agreement, unclean hands, and failure to do equity upon plaintiff's alleged lack of educational qualifications for license, it would be improper for court to judge how examining board might have ruled concerning plaintiff's eligibility to take examination, where there was no evidence that plaintiff had ever been informed by anyone in authority that he could not qualify to take examination; and held that defendant had not been denied due process or equal protection of laws when trial court sustained objection to his attempt to cross-examine plaintiff about his preparation for collection agency examination and his qualifications and eligibility to take examination.

Affirmed.

1. Constitutional Law ⇐249, 311

Even though it was expressly declared therein that issuance of license for partnership was to be essence of agreement, and even though defendant predicated his claims of fraud, breach of agreement, unclean hands, and failure to do equity upon plaintiff's alleged lack of educational qualifications for license, it would have been improper for court to judge how examining board might have ruled concerning plaintiff's eligibility to take examination, where there was no evidence that plaintiff had ever been informed by anyone in authority that he could not qualify to take examination; and defendant was not denied due process or equal protection of laws when trial court sustained objection to his attempt to cross-examine plaintiff about his preparation for collection agency examination and his qualifications and eligibility to take examination. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6887(a, b).

2. Partnership ⇐25

Evidence sustained finding that plaintiff had acted promptly after discovering falsity of defendant's representations and that he had not waived right to rescind partnership agreement and his purchase of one-half interest in defendant's firm. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 6850 et seq.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐991, 1010(1)

Whether plaintiff's acts had given rise to waiver of right to rescind partnership agreement and purchase of interest in defendant's business posed essentially a question of fact; and determination by trial court, supported by competent evidence, was binding upon reviewing court.

4. Partnership ⇐327(1)

Complaint for rescission of a partnership agreement and purchase of one-half interest in defendant's business, on ground of misrepresentations as to profits and value of business, was sufficient.

5. Partnership ⇐344

In action to rescind partnership agreement and purchase of interest in defendant's business, it was not, on record presented, error to decree that plaintiff was entitled to retain sum representing moneys previously paid to him for services rendered during continuance of partnership.

Bertram S. Harris, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joseph Stell and Herbert Murez, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from a final judgment for $10,250 plus interest in favor of Sidney Weltman, which sum represents the amount paid by Weltman to Herman H. Kaye for a one-half partnership interest in a collection agency known and operated as Superior Collectors, and decreeing that Weltman was entitled to retain the sum of $2,154.06, which sum represents monies previously paid to Weltman for services rendered during the continuance of the partnership.

The material allegations set forth in plaintiff's complaint consisting of six causes of action, are that prior to March, 1955, Kaye was the sole proprietor of a collection agency operated as Superior Collectors; that Kaye, knowing that Weltman had no previous experience in and was wholly unfamiliar with said collection agency business, solicited Weltman to purchase a one-half partnership interest in said collection agency; that Kaye represented to Weltman that he had earned net profits of $13,200 from the operation of said collection agency in the calendar year 1954, whereas the net profits earned in said business for said year were $680.38; that Kaye represented to Weltman that the value of said business was the sum of $23,000, whereas its value was substantially worthless; that in reliance on the aforesaid and other representations, Weltman was induced to enter into a partnership agreement with Kaye, to purchase a one-half partnership interest in said business from Kaye for the sum of $10,250, and to pay said sum to Kaye; that Weltman first discovered that Kaye's representations and each of them were false and untrue in August of 1955, and that promptly thereafter he served a notice of rescission upon Kaye and demanded the return of $10,250 from Kaye, none of which sum has been paid to Weltman; and that at the special instance and request of Kaye, Weltman performed work and rendered services to Kaye of the reasonable value of $2,500.

Kaye's answer consisted of a denial of the allegations, and, as affirmative defenses, Kaye alleged that his books and accounts at all times during the negotiations were open for inspection by Weltman and his accountant; that Weltman had knowledge of other offers received by Kaye for the purchase of a partnership interest in said business and that Weltman's attorney prepared the written partnership agreement which Kaye signed without legal advice; that on or about May, 1955, Kaye discovered the inability of Weltman to perform his duties as required under the partnership agreement and offered to cancel the partnership agreement, to pay Weltman the sum of $10,250, and to allow Weltman to retain his drawings to date, which offer Weltman refused to accept; that Weltman was paid from the partnership bank account a draw of $2,288.95 plus personal expenses of approximately $50; and that Weltman has failed to perform his duties as required under the partnership agreement and that on August 13, 1955, Kaye gave Weltman written notice of his intention to dissolve the partnership under the terms of the partnership agreement.

The trial court heard considerable testimony and received into evidence many exhibits, including books of original entry and various documents and copies of income tax returns prepared by certified public accountants.

[1] Appellant contends that Weltman perpetrated a fraud against appellant and committed a continuing breach of the partnership agreement; and that Weltman came into court with unclean hands seeking equity, but failing to do equity. Appellant contends Weltman knew he could not obtain a collection agency license because he did not have an education beyond the ninth grade, and that appellant had no such knowledge of Weltman's educational limitations.

The partnership agreement entered into by the parties on March 25, 1955, contains the following provisions:

"5. It is fully understood that Kaye has owned, operated and managed and had full responsibility in the conduct of the collection agency prior to the date hereof for a period of approximately six years and is familiar with the operation of the same, whereas Weltman has had no previous experience in either the operation or conduct of a collection agency or any similar business. Kaye shall do everything possible within working hours to acquaint Weltman with the problems attendant the operation of a collection agency and give him such assistance as is possible to prepare him for the taking of the written examination prerequisite to the obtaining of an individual license by Weltman to operate a collection agency as is required by the Business & Professions Code of the State of California, Division 3, Chapter 8.

"6. Immediately upon the execution of the within instrument Kaye shall take such steps as are necessary in conjunction with Weltman to make application for licenses with the State of California for said partnership to conduct a collection agency, in the place and stead of his individual license and shall make the necessary change in licenses with the City of Los Angeles. It is distinctly understood and agreed that as a condition subsequent to the purchase of the interest in said business by Weltman that if a license is refused said partnership for any reason whatsoever, and it therefore or for any other reason becomes impossible for the parties hereto to operate a collection agency as said partners, said partnership shall terminate as of the date hereof, and any sums of money that may have been paid shall be returned to the party making said payment.

"It is expressly declared to be the essence of this agreement that a license for said partnership shall be issued by the State of California and the City of Los Angeles within the time prescribed by law after the date hereof.

"7. Weltman agrees to make such preparation as he is able, and to take the examination as is provided by law to become individually licensed to become actively in charge of the business of a collection agency, and if he is not successful on the taking of the first examination shall take said examination from time to time until he shall be successful."

Section 6887 of the Business and Professions Code reads as follows: "The Secretary of State with the concurrence of the board, subject to the provisions of this chapter, may fix and determine by rule and regulation the qualifications of applicants.

"The rules and regulations shall require, among other things, both of the following:

"(a) That the educational qualifications of applicants shall be at least graduation from a four-year high school, or proof satisfactory to the board that applicants are possessed of the equivalent of a four-year high school education in point of intellectual competency and achievement.

"(b) Proof satisfactory to the board that applicants have diligently and in good faith studied the subjects specified as subjects for examination."

Appellant states "It is obvious from the record and from respondent's own testimony and conduct that he cannot conceivably possess the equivalent of a four-year high school education in point of intellectual competency and achievement."

The record before us is completely lacking in information as to the type of proof required by the examining board in making its determination that an applicant is or is not possessed of the equivalent of a four-year high school education in point of intellectual competency and achievement. Deficiency in formal educational requirements is capable of being remedied by the applicant and need not operate as a permanent barrier to eligibility for a license; and the possibility of some delay in obtaining a license was apparently foreseen by the parties because the partnership agreement provides that Weltman was to "take said examination from time to time until he shall be successful."

There is no evidence in the record before us that Weltman was ever informed by anyone in authority that he could not qualify to take the examination, and there is no evidence that he ever made an application to take the examination. Under the circumstances, we are of the opinion, that it would be improper for us to attempt to pre-judge how the examining board might have ruled concerning his eligibility to take the examination.

In his reply brief appellant contends that prejudicial error manifested itself and that a full and fair disposition of the matters in issue was prevented when the trial court sustained an objection to his attempt to cross-examine Weltman about his preparation for the collection agency examination and his qualifications and eligibility to take said examination; and, by reason thereof, appellant contends that he was denied due process and the equal protection of the law in contravention of Article 1, Section 13 of the Constitution of the State of California and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

In the absence of an official ruling as to Weltman's eligibility or ineligibility to take the examination, we fail to see wherein the aforesaid limitations on the right to cross-examine, as imposed by the trial court, related to any material issue before the court, or how appellant was prejudiced by reason of any ruling of the trial court pertaining thereto.

[2] Appellant contends that the findings are not supported by the evidence and the judgment is against law. The argument made by appellant in effect is that Weltman should have had notice that something was wrong, and that there was something suspicious about the representations of appellant as early as May 1, 1955. Appellant then argues that Weltman was under a duty at that time to complain about the situation and that Weltman, in having failed to act promptly, had waived his right to rescind. In his brief, appellant has set forth considerable testimony tending to show that Weltman was familiar with the manner in which appellant had conducted business prior to as well as during the operation of the partnership. We have carefully reviewed the entire transcript, which contains conflicting testimony on most of the issues before the trial court, and we are of the opinion that there was substantial evidence to support Finding 16, as made by the court: "That it is true that on or about August 22, 1955, Weltman discovered for the first time that Kaye's representations hereinbefore set forth and referred to, and each of them, were false and untrue, and that on or about August 25, 1955, Weltman caused a written Notice of Rescission to be mailed to Kaye, and said notice was duly received by Kaye on or about August 26, 1955. Said Notice of Rescission was introduced into evidence as plaintiff's Exhibit No. 22."

[3] Whether the acts of respondent gave rise to a waiver essentially poses a question of fact, and the determination made by the trial court, having been supported by competent evidence, is binding upon this court. Smith v. Bull, 50 Cal. 2d 294, 305, 306, 325 P.2d 463; Ambriz v. Petrolane Ltd., 49 Cal.2d 470, 319 P.2d 1.

In Long v. Newlin, 144 Cal.App.2d 509, at pages 512–513, 301 P.2d 271, at page 273, it was stated by Mr. Presiding Justice White: "* * * a contract of co-partnership can be rescinded in the same manner and for the same causes as other contracts. 68 C.J.S. Partnership § 13, page 422. The effect of a rescission is to void the contract ab initio. In other words, the effect of the election of plaintiff's assignor to avoid the contract of partnership for the fraud practiced upon him is, that, as between the parties there has never existed any co-partnrship, although of course, having held himself out as an apparent member of the partnership prior to rescission thereof, appellant is not excused from his liability to the creditors of the co-partnership. Under Corporations Code, Section 15039, Subdivision (c), the party entitled to rescind a partnership is also entitled to be indemnified by the person guilty of the fraud or misrepresentation against all debts and liabilities of the partnership."

[4] Appellant also argues "The complaint upon which respondent obtained relief did not state a cause of action; and for that reason it was error to find in his favor and enter judgment thereon." The rule was well stated in Domino v. Mobley, 144 Cal.App.2d 24, 26, 27, 28, 300 P.2d 324, 326 to be: "An objection to the introduction of any evidence on the ground the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is treated as a general demurrer to the complaint and all facts pleaded are deemed to be true. * * * All that is necessary as against a general demurrer is to plead facts entitling the plaintiff to some relief. The complaint is to be liberally construed. * * * An objection by a defendant to the introduction of any evidence on the ground the complaint fails to state a cause of action will lie only 'where the admitted averments of the complaint justify a judgment for the defendant, i. e., where no material issue is joined which it is necessary to prove. * * *'"

Suffice it to say with respect to this contention of appellant that in our opinion sufficient facts have been alleged to show the existence of an actionable wrong.

[5] Appellant also argues that "The trial court also entered judgment against appellant for the additional sum of $2,154.06, which was the amount respondent withdrew as a partner; there was no evidence whatever and there was no finding that this was a reasonable amount for services rendered during such period of time he was a partner."

The Supreme Court in Oliver v. Campbell, 43 Cal.2d 298, 306, 273 P.2d 15, with reference to an action for rescission, recently stated, "On the issue of the necessity of restoration or offer to restore the part payment for the services which Campbell had made, the rule applies that such estoration is not necessary where plaintiff would be entitled to it in any event. See Kales v. Houghton, 190 Cal. 294, 212 P. 21; Silvey v. Fink, 99 Cal.App. 528, 279 P. 202; Mitchell v. Samuels, 39 Cal. App. 134, 178 P. 336; Sime v. Malouf, 95 Cal.App.2d 82, 212 P.2d 946, 213 P.2d 788; Rest.Contracts, Sec. 349. It is clear that plaintiff was entitled to receive the $450 paid to him either under the contract or for the reasonable value of his services." (Emphasis added.)

With particular reference to the manner of establishing the value of legal services rendered, it was recently stated in Barlin v. Barlin, 156 Cal.App.2d 143, 149, 319 P.2d 87, 91, that "proof of the reasonable value of legal services by expert testimony, while admissible, is not indispensable in establishing the value thereof." A specific finding as to the value of the services rendered by respondent was made in this case: "That it is true that between March 25, 1955, and August 22, 1955, Weltman rendered valuable services to Kaye in the operation of said Collection Agency and that Kaye requested Weltman to perform said services and that the reasonable value of said services was and is the sum of $2,154.06. That said services were useful and valuable to Kaye in maintaining and carrying on said Collection Agency, and Kaye accepted said services and the benefits thereof. That said sum was heretofore paid by Kaye to Weltman in payment of said services."

With respect to this contention, as well as to other of the matters discussed hereinbefore, it is appropriate to quote the language of Mr. Justice Ashburn in the recent case of Grand v. Griesinger, 160 Cal.App.2d 397, 325 P.2d 475, 479: "'The rule is well established that a reviewing court must presume that the record contains evidence to support every finding of fact, and an appellant who contends that some particular finding is not supported is required to set forth in his brief a summary of the material evidence on that issue. Unless this is done, the error assigned is deemed to be waived. Kruckow v. Lesser, 111 Cal.App.2d 198, 200, 244 P.2d 19. It is incumbent upon appellants to state fully, with transcript references, the evidence which is claimed to be insufficient to support the findings. The reviewing court is not called upon to make an independent search of the record where this rule is ignored. Goldring v. Goldring, 94 Cal.App.2d 643, 645, 211 P.2d 342.' Mc-

Cosker v. McCosker, 122 Cal.App.2d 498, 500, 265 P.2d 21, 22. 'A claim of insufficiency of the evidence to justify findings, consisting of mere assertion without a fair statement of the evidence, is entitled to no consideration, when it is apparent, as it is here, that a substantial amount of evidence was received on behalf of the respondents. Instead of a fair and sincere effort to show that the trial court was wrong, appellant's brief is a mere challenge to respondents to prove that the court was right. And it is an attempt to place upon the court the burden of discovering without assistance from appellant any weakness in the arguments of the respondents. An appellant is not permitted to evade or shift his responsibility in this manner.' In re Estate of Palmer, 145 Cal.App.2d 428, 431, 302 P.2d 629, 631. The judgment is affirmed.

EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS, INC., a corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

COMMODORE PRODUCTIONS & ARTISTS, INC., a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 22975.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 30, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 18, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Action for declaratory relief. Defendant counterclaimed for amount of overpayments to plaintiff. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Wallace L. Ware, J., rendered judgment adverse to plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that since defendant's own books, which had been in its possession at all times, had disclosed fact that it had unilaterally overpaid plaintiff, defendant could be deemed to have had actual knowledge of such fact, for purposes of statute of limitations applicable to its counterclaim.

Affirmed in part and in part reversed with directions.

1. Declaratory Judgment ⇐347

In action for declaratory relief, brought by plaintiff contending that agreement giving plaintiff right to terminate contract in event of defendant's failure, for any continuous period of six months, to broadcast "a radio program released over three or more stations simultaneously" contemplated network broadcasts, evidence sustained verdict for defendant, which contended, inter alia, that it need only have three or more stations under contract to broadcast at one time.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐989, 1010(1)

Reviewing court cannot reweigh evidence favorable to respondent, and if that evidence is sufficient as a matter of law, conclusion arrived at by trial court cannot be rejected by reviewing court.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1010(1)

On appeal, supporting evidence may consist merely of a presumption. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 39; West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1614, 1615.

4. Contracts ⇐10(1)

Part performance by promisee furnishes a valid consideration and cures lack of mutuality, if any, that existed originally. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 39; West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1614, 1615.

5. Literary Property ⇐7

Properly construed, agreement between parties gave defendant right to use in its radio broadcasts all of plaintiff's published works featuring a named character, with provision that if defendant failed to broadcast over three or more stations simultaneously for any consecutive six-month period plaintiff could terminate agreement; and after defendant had engaged in broadcasting activities and had expended substantial sums of money over five-year period, and plaintiff had acquiesced and had received its share of profits from such activities, it would be inequitable to permit plaintiff to urge lack of either consideration or mutuality.

6. Copyrights ⇐48

Agreement by which producer granted Canadian distribution rights did not constitute an assignment or delegation of license which producer had received from copyright owner to use material for radio programs, even if producer's duties thereunder were of a personal nature; and producer satisfied its obligation to pay copyright owner 12½ percent of "net profits" when it paid over that percent of what it received from Canadian distributor rather than 12½ percent of total amount paid by Canadian radio stations.

7. Limitation of Actions ⇐182(5)

The statute of limitations is a special defense, personal in its nature, which may be waived or asserted, and party relying on it must affirmatively set it up in his pleadings either by demurrer or answer or it will be deemed to have been waived.

8. Limitation of Actions ⇐182(2)

Where answer sets up new matter constituting affirmative cause of action or counterclaim, such new matter is deemed controverted under provisions of Civil Procedure Code section; and adverse party may, without formal plea, show that attempted defense is barred by statute of limitations; that statute being deemed pleaded by operation of law. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 462.

9. Limitation of Actions ⇐95(1)

Where defendant's own books, which were in its possession at all times, disclosed fact that it had unilaterally overpaid plaintiff, defendant could be deemed to have had actual knowledge of such fact, for purposes of statute of limitations applicable to its counterclaim for amount of overpayment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 338, subd. 4.

Loeb & Loeb, John L. Cole, Alfred I. Rothman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Dryer, Hails, Burris & Lagerlof and H. Melvin Swift, Jr., Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from an adverse judgment in an action for declaratory relief, and in which defendant counterclaimed against plaintiff for the sum of $1,215.75.

On December 21, 1950, the parties hereto entered into a written contract wherein plaintiff granted to defendant the rights to use certain material featuring the character Tarzan "in live and/or transcribed radio broadcasts".

Included in the agreement was a provision that "In the event Commodore (defendant) shall for any continuous period of six (6) months during the term of this Agreement or any renewals thereof fail to broadcast a radio program released over three or more stations simultaneously then Burroughs (plaintiff) shall have the right to terminate this Agreement * * *".

It was in reliance upon this provision that plaintiff attempted to terminate the foregoing agreement. Plaintiff also alleged that the contract had been breached because of defendant's dealing with an organization known as S. W. Caldwell, Ltd., with relation to defendant's Canadian sales of the radio broadcasts, and because defendant allegedly had not fully accounted to plaintiff and paid to the latter the percentage required by the contract. By its amended complaint plaintiff set forth the additional allegation that the aforesaid contract of December 21, 1950 "is void for want of a sufficient cause and is void for want of consideration".

By its answer defendant denied the material allegations of plaintiff's pleadings, pleaded res adjudicata, and also counterclaimed for certain monies it had allegedly failed to deduct through mistake and inadvertence, as deductible costs under the aforesaid contract, and which resulted in overpayments to plaintiff.

The cause proceeded to trial before the court resulting in a judgment denying plaintiff any relief upon its pleadings and that defendant recover on its counterclaim from plaintiff the sum of $1,215.75. From such judgment plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] Appellant's main contention is that the agreement here in question contemplated network broadcasts of the Tarzan program. That since respondent did not have network broadcasts on the air appellant was entitled to terminate the agreement, and that the findings of the trial court to the contrary are unsupported by the evidence. With this contention we cannot agree. What the contract required was that "In the event Commodore (respondent) shall for any continuous period of six (6) months during the term of this agreement * * * fail to broadcast a radio program released over three or more stations simultaneously then Burroughs (appellant) shall have the right to terminate this agreement * * *".

It is true, as urged by appellant, that an expert witness produced by it testified that the phrase "a radio program released over three or more stations simultaneously" meant in the radio industry, "the draftsman of this document (the contract) was describing a network broadcast, three or more stations connected together by way of a network". But there was also testimony that at no time during the negotiations leading up to the contract was reference made at any time to a network, or to instantaneous broadcasts, and respondent's expert witness testified that with reference to transcriptions the word "simultaneous" meant the same broadcast within the week or within the month, and that the term "simultaneous" broadcasting "over three or more stations" means in effect that there were three or more stations under contract to broadcast at one time. There was also testimony that from approximately October, 1953 on, all radio stations broadcasting the Tarzan programs were located in Canada, and that the stations in Canada are not on a network. All of the Tarzan radio programs in Canada were transcribed on tapes. In its reply brief, appellant disavows respondent's claim that the former's position is that the language "released over three or more stations simultaneously" requires network broadcasts where there is an instantaneous release from three or more stations and asserts that its contention is that the contract requires network broadcasts. On the issue now under consideration, the court below was confronted with conflicting evidence. The trier of fact weighed this evidence and resolved the conflict in favor of respondent. Under well established rules we cannot reweigh the evidence favorable to respondent and if that evidence is sufficient as a matter of law, the conclusion arrived at by the trial court cannot be rejected by us (Scott v. Nevis, 120 Cal.App.2d 619, 621, 261 P.2d 797; 4 Cal.Jur.2d 487, Appeal and Error, sec. 606).

[3–5] It is next contended by appellant that since the agreement does not obligate respondent to do anything, it is lacking in mutuality of obligation and void for want of consideration. In this claim appellant cannot be sustained. It is well recognized that a written agreement should receive such an interpretation as will make it operative, reasonable and capable of being carried into effect, if that can be done without contravening the intention of the parties, and interpretation which gives effect to a contract is preferred to one which makes it void (Long Beach Drug Co. v. United Drug Co., 13 Cal.2d 158, 166, 88 P. 2d 698, 89 P.2d 386). We believe that taking the agreement now before us in its entirety, it was properly construed by the court as one in which appellant granted to respondent the exclusive right to use the Tarzan material with the provision that if respondent failed to broadcast over three or more stations simultaneously for any consecutive six-month period and did not give a written notice of election, not here pertinent, appellant could terminate the agreement. The evidence undisputably shows that upon execution of the contract, respondent proceeded to make and produce seventy-five Tarzan episodes at a cost to respondent of approximately $1,000 each (Ross v. Frank W. Dunne Co., 119 Cal. App.2d 690, 697, 698, 260 P.2d 104). What the contract in fact did was simply to give respondent the sole right to use the word "Tarzan" in stories to be broadcasted. We are not here confronted with any evidence to support appellant's theory that consideration was lacking for there was no such evidence. One of the disputable presumptions is that "there was a good and sufficient consideration for a written contract" (Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1963, subd. 39). And on appeal, supporting evidence may consist merely of a presumption (In re Estate of Brimhall, 62 Cal.App.2d 30, 34, 143 P.2d 981; Williams v. Reed, 48 Cal.2d 57, 62, 307 P.2d 353; Thom v. Stewart, 162 Cal. 413, 421, 122 P. 1069). Under section 1614 of the Civil Code, "A written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration", and, "The burden of showing a want of consideration sufficient to support an instrument lies with the party seeking to invalidate or avoid it" (Civ.Code, sec. 1615). Furthermore, even though we assume that the contract here in question was unilateral at its inception, there was part performance by the promisee and that furnishes a valid consideration and cures the lack of mutuality, if any, that existed originally. In Los Angeles Traction Co. v. Wilshire, 135 Cal. 654, at page 658, 67 P. 1086, at page 1088, in which case the contract on the date of its execution was unilateral, the court stated: "The promised consideration had then been partly performed, and the contract had taken on a bilateral character * * *." See also Wilck v. Herbert, 78 Cal.App.2d 392, 407, 178 P.2d 25. In the case at bar the broadcasting of these "Tarzan" programs commenced in the United States on January 4, 1951, and about October, 1953 broadcasting in Canada was commenced. To us it seems inequitable and unjust after some five years during which respondent engaged in these broadcasting activities expending substantial sums of money, in which appellant acquiesced and received its share of the profits therefrom, to say that appellant may now urge the lack of either consideration or mutuality.

[6] It is next urged by appellant that respondent breached the written contract of December 21, 1950 by delegating the duties of the latter to S. W. Caldwell, Ltd. This contention is based on the claim that the agreement herein involved duties of a personal nature which are non-delegable, and secondly, because, by reason of the claimed assignment to S. W. Caldwell, Ltd., respondent thereafter failed to remit to appellant the amounts to which it was entitled under the agreement. Appellant relies upon the rule announced in 2 Williston on Contracts, Rev.Ed., pp. 1172–1176; Coykendall v. Jackson, 17 Cal.App.2d 729, 62 P.2d 746; Sumner v. Nevin, 4 Cal.App. 347, 87 P. 1105; Fitch v. Brockmon, 3 Cal. 348; Bancroft v. Scribner, 9 Cir., 72 F. 988; and La Rue v. Groezinger, 84 Cal. 281, 24 P. 42, that a contract is not assignable and the duties thereunder are not delegable in either of the following situations: (1) where in the nature or circumstances of the case the skill, credit or other personal quality of the party was a distinctive characteristic of the thing stipulated for, namely, the personal nature of the contract itself, or (2) the personal quality of the party was a material inducement to the other party entering into the contract. In the instant case, the agreement recited that appellant was the sole owner of the basic rights and/or copyrights to all published works featuring "Tarzan" as the principal character, that appellant granted to respondent the sole and exclusive right for certain areas of the world, including Canada, "to use 'The material' as well as the name 'Tarzan' in live and/or transcribed radio broadcasts". "The material" was defined as the "basic rights and/or copyrights of all published material (including comic books and newspaper comic strips) featuring 'Tarzan' as the principal character". As respondent points out, there is no restriction in the contract on the manner of use of the material granted other than that respondent agrees that the character "Tarzan" shall be the principal character in all broadcasts and that he shall not be incorporated in a humorous or ridiculous fashion in such broadcasts nor shall he ever be maimed or killed.

Upon execution of the contract respondent proceeded to make and produce 75 Tarzan episodes at a cost of approximately $1,000 per episode. Appellant did not supply any of the story material for any of the episodes, and did not supply any other services or facilities in connection with the production of the stories other than the right to use the word "Tarzan".

The undisputed evidence is that a production company of the United States cannot sell its programs in Canada without an agent residing there. Respondent had been doing business in Canada with National Programs, Ltd., which in 1951 sold its distributing rights to S. W. Caldwell, Ltd. Thereafter, S. W. Caldwell, Ltd. acted as respondent's sales distributor or agent in Canada for a number of programs, including the Tarzan series. There is also evidence that respondent told appellant about going into distribution in Canada, and about the Caldwell organization, and that appellant did not object to that method of distribution. There was testimony that all the radio programs broadcast in Canada were transcribed on tape. That the radio tapes were under respondent's control, were within its knowledge and that the program belonged to respondent at all times. Respondent had no written agreement with Caldwell, but had an oral working arrangement. Respondent gave S. W. Caldwell, Ltd. instructions regarding the type of sponsor the program was required to have and helped stimulate sales efforts. We are satisfied that the situation as reflected by the foregoing factual narrative does not bring this case within the purview of the aforesaid cases cited by appellant. We fail to perceive wherein respondent assigned or delegated the license it received from appellant, namely, the right to use "The material" and the name "Tarzan" in radio broadcasts. Looking to the negotiations leading up to the signing of the contract, it seems apparent that appellant was aware that respondent's profits came in part from the sale of the radio broadcasts, and the method by which these sales were made was not encumbered or restricted in any manner by the terms of the contract. The contract specifies Canada as one of the areas in which respondent could use the name "Tarzan" in radio broadcasts. The evidence reflects that a production company in the United States cannot sell its programs in Canada except through an agent residing there. Furthermore, the programs at all times belonged to respondent who simply sold them in Canada through an agent. And we find an acquiescence by appellant in respondent's Canadian sales as evidenced by appellant's acceptance of its share of the profits in accordance with copies of statements rendered by the Caldwell organization, and which were sent to appellant.

As to appellant's claim that by reason of the so-called Caldwell arrangement it was deprived of benefits and profits which it would otherwise receive, it is contended that the agreement provides for respondent paying to appellant in full for all rights granted, 12½% of the net profits, if any, realized by respondent, whether from the sale or otherwise, of the radio broadcasts, and specifies that net profits shall mean the amounts actually received by respondent less certain expenses of production. That sales or distribution expense is not a deductible item of expense. The uncontradicted testimony, says appellant, is that defendant and S. W. Caldwell, Ltd. split the receipts from Canadian radio stations on a 60–40 basis, with S. W. Caldwell, Ltd. remitting to respondent 60% of such receipts and retaining 40% of its share. Respondent paid to appellant 12½% of said 60% which it received rather than 12½% of the total amount paid by the Canadian radio stations. That the result was that by reason of the sales activities being conducted by S. W. Caldwell, Ltd. rather than by respondent, appellant was deprived of a substantial share of profits to which it otherwise would have been entitled, to-wit, 12½% of the 40% retained by S. W. Caldwell, Ltd.

However, the contract provides that "net profits shall mean the amounts actually received by Commodore (respondent)" (emphasis added) less certain items which could be deducted from the amounts actually received. The evidence shows that respondent did actually pay to appellant 12½% of the net amount received by it; sent to appellant copies of statements rendered by S. W. Caldwell, Ltd. to respondent, and respondent also sent its own statements remitting to appellant 12½% of the net amount respondent had received. At the trial appellant's counsel stated: "* * * There is no question but what we got reports right along on the stationery of Commodore Productions and Artists Company, and that they paid us 12½% of whatever that income was. We don't dispute that." All of the foregoing statements and remittances were accepted and kept by appellant without objection. It is also revealed by the evidence that the "Tarzan" radio broadcasts made in South Africa were handled by an agent in Australia who used an accounting procedure similar to that utilized by the Caldwell organization; that appellant knew of this and made no objection. Such remittances from Australia on the South African broadcasts and which were introduced into evidence, show that respondent received a royalty only which was actually sent to appellant, which forwarded the money to respondent, which in turn paid appellant 12½% of that amount. Viewed in the light of appellant's acquiescent conduct as to the Canadian broadcasts, its complaint in regard thereto lacks substance here.

Finally, appellant earnestly insists that respondent's counterclaim is barred by the Statute of Limitations (Code Civ.Proc., sec. 338, subd. 4). In this regard the record reflects that in an earlier action between the parties herein as plaintiff and defendant, plaintiff (appellant herein) in the latter part of 1955 made an audit of defendant's (respondent herein) books. That appellant's auditor later stated to respondent's president that the latter had failed to retrieve approximately $9,000 worth of costs incurred in the production of Tarzan programs (defendant in said prior action being entitled to deduct such costs before accounting to plaintiff therein), and that respondent remitted 12½% of its receipts from a sponsor without deducting from these remittances the amount it was entitled to deduct, because of previously incurred costs, so that appellant received remittances calculated on a higher figure than should have been the case. Respondent did not discover this until the 1955 audit which revealed an overpayment of $1,215.75. This was the first time respondent's auditor, Mr. Mitchell, or anyone in its organization, knew of the overpayment. It is true, as contended by appellant herein, that Mr. Mitchell had been respondent's auditor since 1949 or 1950, and that the books in question from which the overpayments were discovered were at all times in the possession of respondent. Mr. Mitchell admitted that an audit as of January, 1953 might have disclosed the same information which was disclosed in 1955. The same information was in respondent's books and in its possession during the entire period of time and the books were never in the possession of appellant, to the witness' knowledge. The overpayment resulted from respondent's failure to carry forward certain costs from the Dr. Ross series of broadcasts to the new series.

There was introduced into evidence, as respondent's Exhibit A, a document prepared by its accountant, Mr. Mitchell. This exhibit shows that the unrecovered production costs were in existence as of March 31, 1952 and that the overpayment commenced on May 15, 1952, when respondent issued a check to appellant as payment of the latter's share of profit for the month of April, 1952.

The court found that, "It is true that the defendant, through mistake and inadvertence, failed to deduct the sum of $1215.75, as deductible costs, as defined and provided in said agreement of December 21, 1950. It is true that plaintiff's auditor discovered the error and overpayment while making an audit of defendant's books and records in September and October of 1955." and ordered judgment that respondent recover from appellant on the former's counterclaim the sum of $1,215.75.

Appellant's sole contention is that since action was not commenced within three years after its inception the same is barred by the provisions of subd. 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for a three-year limitation upon, "An action for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake. The cause of action in such case not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery, by the aggrieved party, of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake".

[7, 8] Respondent first contends that the record on appeal fails to show that the alleged bar of the statute of limitations to the counterclaim was ever raised by appellant and therefore, the latter must be deemed to have waived any such defense. That appellant failed to raise the issue by demurrer and that "no mention was made of this alleged defense at the time of trial either by motion to strike the counterclaim or by objection to the receipt of any evidence to support the counterclaim or in any manner whatsoever". We are not in accord with respondent's contention. Subsequent to the filing of respondent's brief, this court, pursuant to stipulation of the parties, ordered the record augmented by including therein the pre-trial order made in the trial court, which discloses the following:

"With reference to the counterclaim contained in the answer of the Defendant it is the contention of the Plaintiff * * * (e) that any cause of action for monies expended by Commodore Productions and Artists, Inc. under the Lewis contract is barred by the statute of limitations." Also, on March 26, 1957, prior to the trial, there was filed by respondent herein, a memorandum entitled, "Defendant's Points and Authorities" wherein appears the following: "5. Is the counterclaim barred by the Statute of Limitations?" together with a discussion of the law and citation of cases concerning the claimed bar of the counterclaim. We are satisfied that while, as contended by respondent, the statute of limitations is a special defense, personal in its nature, which may be waived or asserted, and that the party relying on it must affirmatively set it up in his pleading either by demurrer or answer, or it will be deemed to have been waived, there is however, another rule which is applicable with regard to the plea of the bar to counterclaims. This rule has developed because of Section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which as was said in Union Sugar Co. v. Hollister Estate Co., 3 Cal.2d 740, 745, 47 P.2d 273, 275, may be stated as follows: "Where the answer to a complaint sets up new matter constituting an affirmative cause of action or counterclaim, such new matter is deemed controverted under the provisions of section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the adverse party may, without formal plea, show that the attempted defense is barred by the statute of limitations, that statute being deemed pleaded by operation of law. (Citing cases.)" In the case at bar, it is manifest that appellant invoked the plea at the trial and the trial court made a finding on the plea thus presented. We therefore conclude that the statute was sufficiently pleaded, was relied upon by appellant as a defense to the counterclaim, was entertained by the trial court and a finding made thereon. See also Hermosa Beach Land & Water Co. v. Law Credit Co., 175 Cal. 493, 495, 166 P. 22; Pacific Improvement Co. v. Maxwell, 26 Cal.App. 265, 268–269, 146 P. 900; Jones v. Peck, 63 Cal.App. 397, 408, 218 P. 1030. The cases of California Employment Stabilization Commission v. MacGregor, 64 Cal.App.2d 691, 693, 149 P.2d 304, and Bliss v. Sneath, 119 Cal. 526, 527–529, 51 P. 848, relied upon by respondent are readily distinguishable from the situation presented by the record herein. Since no pleading to a counterclaim is required, appellant was entitled to raise the statute of limitations as a defense to respondent's counterclaim without formal plea, the statute being deemed pleaded as to a counterclaim by operation of law.

[9] We come now to a consideration of the reasons advanced by appellant why respondent's counterclaim herein is barred by the statute of limitations. It is the contention of appellant that since the overpayment which was the subject of the counterclaim occurred in 1952, and might have been discovered by respondent as early as 1953 and the counterclaim was not filed until September 11, 1956, respondent cannot avoid the statute. Appellant argues that the books and records of respondent which would have revealed the overpayment were at all times in the possession of respondent and therefore, respondent was at all times chargeable with actual knowledge of what its books would reveal. It is further urged by appellant that since respondent had the means of uncovering the true facts and, since in any event means of knowledge is equivalent to knowledge, the counterclaim is barred by the provisions of section 338, subd. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant relies heavily upon the case of Shain v. Sresovich, 104 Cal. 402, 38 P. 51, which involved an action to recover an overpayment made to defendant by plaintiff's assignors. Plaintiff's assignors and defendant were engaged in a joint venture for the importation and sale of oranges. On July 1, 1886, plaintiff presented to defendant a statement showing an indebtedness to defendant in excess of $2,000 and paid the same. These accounts were kept by plaintiff's assignors in one of their firm books, and the statement of account was prepared by them. The books were stored away until 1890, and in 1891 plaintiff's assignors discovered the error; that they had paid $630 too much. An action was brought on May 5, 1891.

The plaintiff maintained that he was not barred by the three-year period of limitations in an action for relief on grounds of mistake because section 338, subd. 4, Code of Civil Procedure, provided that the cause of action is not deemed to commence until discovery. In the cited case the court stated 104 Cal. at page 405, 38 P. at page 52, "The rule is well established that the means of knowledge is equivalent to knowledge, and that a party who has the opportunity of knowing the facts constituting the fraud of which he complains cannot be supine and inactive, and afterwards allege a want of knowledge that arose by reason of his own laches or negligence. * * *

"Applying the above rule to the present case, we are of the opinion that the plaintiff's assignors had at all times after the payment to the defendant such means of information with reference to the account between them and him, and of the mistake in the payment, that their failure to avail themselves of it charged them with the same result as though they had actual knowledge thereof. The accounts were kept under their supervision, or by their bookkeeper. The statement was made out by him. The book in which the account was kept, and from which the statement was presumably made, was retained by them, and was afterwards used by them, in which to place their own individual transactions, and was afterwards stored away by them. It is not claimed that the defendant ever saw the book, or took any part in the preparation of the statement, or that he sustained any relation to them which entitled them to rely upon any statement of his, or that he made any statement or did any act which induced them to make the payment. Under these circumstances they are not entitled to claim that the 'discovery' of the mistake was within three years of the commencement of the action." To the same effect is the case of Lady Washington Consol. Co. v. Wood, 113 Cal. 482, 487, 45 P. 809, and Merchants' Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Globe Brewing Co., 78 Cal.App.2d 618, 624, 625, 177 P.2d 963.

Respondent places great reliance upon the case of Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, at pages 437–439, 159 P.2d 958 at page 972, wherein the court stated: "It is not in every case, however, that a person is barred after three years by failure to pursue an available means of discovering possible fraud. The statute commences to run only after one has knowledge of facts sufficient to make a reasonably prudent person suspicious of fraud, thus putting him on inquiry. Section 19 of the Civil Code provides: 'Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which, by prosecuting such inquiry, he might have learned such fact.' (Italics added.) Under this section it was held in Tarke v. Bingham, 123 Cal. 163, 55 P. 759, that the plaintiff was not barred by subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, since nothing had occurred 'to excite his suspicion, or to put him upon inquiry.' 123 Cal. at page 166, 55 P. at page 760. The court said: 'Where no duty is imposed by law upon a person to make inquiry, and where, under the circumstances, "a prudent man" would not be put upon inquiry, the mere fact that means of knowledge are open to a plaintiff, and he has not availed himself of them, does not debar him from relief when thereafter he shall make actual discovery. The circumstances must be such that the inquiry becomes a duty, and the failure to make it a negligent omission.' (Italics added.) Many other decisions have adopted this view. (Citing cases.) In many cases it has been said that means of knowledge are equivalent to knowledge. (Citing cases.) This is true, however, only where there is a duty to inquire, as where plaintiff is aware of facts which would make a reasonably prudent person suspicious. In the Lady Washington case, the court said (113 Cal. at page 487, 45 P. at page 810) that 'as the means of knowledge are equivalent to knowledge, if it appears that the plaintiff had notice or information of circumstances which would put him on an inquiry which, if followed, would lead to knowledge, or that the facts were presumptively within his knowledge, he will be deemed to have had actual knowledge of these facts.' (Italics added.)"

It is noteworthy that in the Hobart case the court cited and quoted from Lady Washington Consol. Co. v. Wood, supra; Shain v. Sresovich, supra, and Tarke v. Bingham, 123 Cal. 163, 55 P. 759; relied upon by appellant herein, but nowhere in the Hobart case does the court criticize or disapprove the holding in Lady Washington Consol. Co. v. Wood, supra, 26 Cal.2d at page 487, 159 P.2d at page 973, that means of knowledge are equivalent to knowledge and that when "* * * the facts were presumptively within his knowledge, he will be deemed to have had actual knowledge of these facts", and 113 Cal. at page 488, 45 P. at page 811, "The plaintiff ought not now to be permitted to say that it did not discover the transactions when they were spread at large upon its records and books of account". As we view the Hobart case, supra, it simply holds that if the circumstances were such as to charge respondent herein with a duty to inquire by reason of its awareness of suspicious facts then it would be charged with actual knowledge. However, the Hobart case does not hold that where as here, the facts were presumptively within respondent's knowledge because its own books, in its possession at all times, disclosed the fact that it had unilaterally overpaid appellant in the sum of $1,215.75, respondent would not be deemed to have had actual knowledge of these facts. We therefore conclude that respondent had at all times after the overpayment to appellant such means of information with reference to the account between them, and of the mistake in the overpayment, that respondent's failure to avail itself of it charged respondent with the same result as though it had actual knowledge thereof. If respondent could prevail on its counterclaim under the facts here present there is no limit to the time in which an action for restitution might be commenced. As was said in Shain v. Sresovich, supra, 104 Cal. at page 406, 38 P. at page 52, "It would be a new proposition in mercantile life, as well as in law, if we should hold that if a merchant, many years after he had retired from business, on looking over his account books through curiosity, should find that his bookkeeper had made a mistake in the account of one of his customers, he could recover from the customer for the merchandise that had been omitted from his account through such mistake or get back from him the money which he had paid upon a settlement with him."

For the foregoing reasons, that portion of the judgment that defendant recover on its counterclaim from plaintiff the sum of $1,215.75 is reversed with directions to the court below to enter judgment that defendant take nothing on its counterclaim. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed. The parties will bear their respective costs on appeal.

Arthur Maxson SMITH, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

MUNICIPAL COURT OF GLENDALE JUDICIAL DISTRICT, COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, State of California, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 23349.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 3, 1959.

Proceeding on application for writ of prohibition and mandate to prohibit respondent court from proceeding to try plaintiff on complaint charging him with violation of Motor Vehicle Code and to compel court to enter order transferring action to municipal court in county seat. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Edward T. Bishop, J., entered judgment of dismissal and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that under statute providing whenever a person is arrested for a violation of Vehicle Code that is not declared to be a felony, place specified in notice to appear shall be either before magistrate in county who is at the nearest and most accessible place to where arrest is made or upon demand of person arrested before municipal court judge of county seat, upon demand of arrested person officer is required to specify in the notice or citation that the appearance be before the municipal court judge at the county seat of county in which offense was alleged to have been committed.

Reversed with directions.

1. Prohibition ⇐10(3)

Where petitioner arrested for violation of Motor Vehicle Code sought to prohibit court from proceeding to try him on complaint, petitioner was entitled to writ of prohibition if respondent court in seeking to try him was acting in excess of its jurisdiction even though it might have jurisdiction over petitioner's person and jurisdiction of cases involving misdemeanor charge. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 476 (c), par. 1, 739; West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1462, 1462.2.

2. Mandamus ⇐61

Where petitioner sought writ of mandate to compel respondent court to enter order transferring action to another court in the county, petitioner was entitled to writ of mandate if respondent court had abused its discretion and he had no speedy and adequate remedy at law.

3. Automobiles ⇐350

Under statute providing that whenever a person is arrested for a violation of Motor Vehicle Code that was not a felony, place of appearance specified in notice should be either before the nearest or accessible magistrate within county in which offense charged is alleged to have been committed or upon demand of person arrested, before municipal court judge in county seat of county in which such offense is alleged to have been committed, upon demand of arrested person officer was required to specify place of appearance as the municipal court judge at the county seat. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 739 and subd. (c).

4. Statutes ⇐212.4

In interpreting statute court must presume that legislature intended that all its provisions have meaning and perform a useful function.

5. Statutes ⇐219

While opinions of Attorney General are not controlling as to meaning of statute, fact that his opinions have not been challenged and he is an officer charged by law with advising officers charged with enforcement of law as to meaning of it entitle his opinions to great weight.

6. Automobiles ⇐350

Where party was charged with a violation of Motor Vehicle Code and demanded the municipal court at the county seat to be his place of trial but arresting officer refused and inserted as place of appearance the nearest most accessible magistrate, arrested party, unless he resisted arrest, had no means of asserting his right to appear before municipal court judge at county seat except by immediately demanding that hearing on charge against him be transferred to the county seat in accordance with his demand, and fact that party was taken into custody and did not sign a promise to appear could not prevent application of statute giving him right to demand county seat as place of appearance for trial. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 739; West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 1462.2.

7. Automobiles ⇐350
Mandamus ⇐61

Where party was arrested for a violation of Motor Vehicle Code in Los Angeles County and demanded that place of trial be before the Municipal Court Judge at Los Angeles rather than the nearest and most accessible judge, Municipal Court of Los Angeles Judicial District was proper place for trial and it was duty of other municipal court in Los Angeles County to transfer case to Municipal Court of Los Angeles Judicial District, and since there was no dispute as to the facts court was without discretion to deny motion to transfer and therefore party was entitled to a writ of mandate. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 476 (c), par. 1; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1462.2.

Robert A. Keller, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Donald K. Byrne, Deputy County Counsel, and Iver E. Skjeie, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

By his petition in this action plaintiff sought from the Superior Court of Los Angeles County writs of prohibition and mandate against the Municipal Court of Glendale Judicial District, County of Los Angeles. Demurrer to his petition having been sustained with leave to amend and petitioner having failed to amend, judgment of dismissal was entered and from this judgment petitioner appeals.

[1, 2] Petitioner seeks to prohibit the respondent court from proceeding to try him on a complaint charging him with the violation of section 476(c) par. 1 of the Vehicle Code and seeks writ of mandate to compel the respondent court to enter its order transferring the action to the Municipal Court of Los Angeles (the county seat). Petitioner is entitled to a writ of prohibition if the respondent court in seeking to try him is acting in excess of its jurisdiction even though it may have jurisdiction over petitioner's person and jurisdiction of cases involving the misdemeanor charged. Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 285–291, 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715; Caminetti v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 838, 848, 108 P.2d 911; State v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.App.2d 718, 58 P.2d 1322; Shell Oil Co. v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.App.2d 348, 37 P.2d 1078; Carter v. Superior Court, 176 Cal. 752, 169 P. 667. He is entitled to the writ of mandate if the respondent court has abused its discretion and he has no speedy and adequate remedy at law. Caminetti v. Superior Court, supra; Dowell v. Superior Court, 47 Cal.2d 483, 304 P.2d 1009; Marr v. Superior Court, 30 Cal.App.2d 275, 279, 86 P.2d 141; Simmons v. Superior Court, 96 Cal.App.2d 119, 132, 214 P.2d 844, 19 A.L.R.2d 288.

Whether the respondent court would be acting in excess of its jurisdiction should it proceed to try him and whether it has abused its discretion in refusing a transfer of the action to the municipal court of the county seat, is dependent upon the construction placed upon section 739 of the Vehicle Code and sections 1462 and 1462.2 of the Penal Code.

The facts as alleged by the petition and which are by the demurrer thereto admitted to be true are in substance as follows: On June 23, 1957, petitioner was placed under arrest in the city of Glendale by a police officer of that city. At the time of the arrest the officer prepared a citation charging petitioner with the violation of section 476(c), par. 1 of the Vehicle Code for allegedly having made a right turn against a red light in violation of that section. Petitioner then demanded that the arresting officer specify in the citation as the place for him to appear the municipal court at the county seat, namely, Los Angeles. This the arresting officer refused to do and specified in the citation the respondent court as the place at which petitioner would, by signing the citation, promise to appear. Petitioner refused to sign this citation and was thereupon taken into custody by the arresting officer and removed to the Glendale police station where he was booked, fingerprinted, photographed and released on bail.

On June 24, 1957, petitioner appeared in the respondent court, objected to the jurisdiction of that court and demanded that the cause be transferred to the Municipal Court of Los Angeles Judicial District. His motion was denied and he was thereupon arraigned upon a criminal complaint charging the violation of the section of the Vehicle Code above mentioned and July 16th was set as the date for plea. On that date petitioner appeared by his attorney and objected to the jurisdiction of the respondent court and filed a written motion to transfer the cause to the county seat and to stay proceedings. On July 22nd this motion was denied and the cause continued to September 3, 1957, for the purpose of plea, the petitioner having waived the time to plead. Thereupon petitioner filed his petition in the superior court.

> "Whenever a person is arrested for any violation of this code, not declared herein to be a felony, * * * and such person is not immediately taken before a magistrate as hereinbefore required or permitted, the arresting officer shall prepare in triplicate a written notice to appear in court or before a person authorized to receive a deposit of bail, containing * * * the time and place when and where such person shall appear.
>
> * * * * * *
>
> "(c) The place specified in said notice to appear shall be either:
>
> "(1) Before a magistrate within the county in which the offense charged is alleged to have been committed and who has jurisdiction of the offense and is nearest or most accessible with reference to the place where said arrest is made; or
>
> "(2) Upon demand of the person arrested, before a municipal court judge * * * at the county seat of the county in which such offense is alleged to have been committed or before a magistrate in the judicial district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed." (Emphasis added.)

Section 1462 of the Penal Code confers jurisdiction on each municipal court within a county of all misdemeanors committed within the county in which such municipal court is established with certain exceptions which are not pertinent here.

Section 1462.2 of the Penal Code so far as is pertinent here reads as follows:

"Except as otherwise provided in the Vehicle Code, the proper court for the trial of criminal cases amounting to misdemeanor shall be determined as follows: If there is a municipal * * court having jurisdiction of the subject matter of the case, established in the district within which the offense charged was committed, such court is the proper court for the trial of the case; * * * [Emphasis added.]

"If an action or proceeding is commenced in a court having jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof other than the court herein designated as the proper court for the trial, the action may, notwithstanding, be tried in the court where commenced, unless the defendant, at the time he pleads, requests an order transferring the action or proceeding to the proper court. If after such request it appears that the action or proceeding was not commenced in the proper court, the court shall order the action or proceeding transferred to the proper court." (Emphasis added.)

It is petitioner's contention that under section 739 of the Vehicle Code he had the right to select the court before which he would be obligated to appear and having made his demand that he be cited to appear at the county seat, the municipal court there was the proper court for the trial of the action and that the respondent court therefore acted in excess of its jurisdiction in proceeding to try him and abused its discretion in refusing to transfer the action to the municipal court at the county seat.

[3] We are of the opinion that it was the intent of the Legislature to permit the person arrested upon a charge such as that involved here to designate the place at which he should appear and be tried. The section requires the officer to specify in the notice or citation the place at which the person shall appear and provides that this place shall be either before the nearest or most accessible magistrate within the county with reference to the place where the arrest is made or upon demand of the person arrested, before a magistrate in the county seat or a magistrate in the judicial district in which the offense was alleged to have been committed. It is respondent's contention that by the use of the word "either" in paragraph (c) of section 739 of the Vehicle Code the Legislature evidenced its intent to give the arresting officer the right to specify in the citation the place at which the arrestee should appear. We do not so read the statute. It is apparent that while the statute requires the officer to specify in the notice one or the other of the two places for the appearance of the arrestee, it does not leave to his discretion which of the two places shall be named. If no demand is made by the arrestee the officer must specify the place of appearance as before a magistrate within the county which has jurisdiction of the offense and who is nearest and most accessible with reference to the place where the arrest is made. But if a demand therefor is made by the arrestee the officer must specify as the place of appearance a municipal court within the judicial district at the county seat or at the demand of the arrestee, before a magistrate in the judicial district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed.

Inasmuch as paragraph (c) (2) of the section provides for a demand on the part of the person arrested, we must assume that the Legislature intended the word "demand" to have its ordinary meaning and the import which that meaning gives to the statute. "Demand" is defined as: "An asking with authority, claiming or challenging as due." The clear import of the statute is therefore to give the right to the arrested person to specify the place of his appearance and trial. If he has a right to demand that as something due him, that right cannot be denied him at the discretion of the arresting officer.

[4] In interpreting this statute we must presume that the Legislature intended that all its provisions have meaning and perform a useful function. Clements v. T. R. Bechtel Co., 43 Cal.2d 227, 233, 273 P.2d 5; Dempsey v. Market Street Ry. Co., 23

Cal.2d 110, 113, 142 P.2d 929; Weber v. County of Santa Barbara, 15 Cal.2d 82, 86, 98 P.2d 492. Certainly it was the intent of the Legislature in enacting paragraph (c) (2) of section 739 that that section should have some efficacy, but if the construction placed upon it by the trial court and which is contended for by the respondent is placed upon it, the paragraph is purely surplusage, for if the arresting officer may disregard the demand of the arrestee the right to make the demand becomes meaningless. Had the Legislature intended that the officer might at his discretion fix the place at which the arrestee should appear, it would have been a simple matter to eliminate paragraphs (1) and (2) of paragraph (c) and change paragraph (c) to read: "The place specified in the notice shall be before any magistrate within the county in which the offense charged is alleged to have been committed and who has jurisdiction of the offense," thus leaving it to the arresting officer to give heed to or ignore the demand of the arrested person that he be cited to appear at the county seat or before a judge of the municipal court in the judicial district in which the offense was committed. It is to be noted that when the Legislature intended that the officer might exercise his discretion in the matter of either taking the arrestee into custody or issuing him a citation it gave this discretion to the officer in express terms. See sections 737 and 737.5, Vehicle Code.

[5] The construction which we have placed upon section 739 is the construction placed upon that section by the attorney general of this State in two opinions rendered to executive officers charged with the enforcement of the provisions of the Vehicle Code. See Opinions of the Attorney General, NS 2582 and NS 3076. Both of these opinions were rendered by the attorney general in 1940. So far as we are advised the construction placed by the attorney general upon the section has not, in the 18 years that have passed since he rendered his opinion, been challenged. While the opinions of the attorney general are not controlling as to the meaning of the statute the fact that his opinions have not been challenged and that he is the officer charged by law with advising the officers charged with the enforcement of the law as to the meaning of it, entitle his opinions to great weight. Carter v. Commission on Qualifications, etc., 14 Cal.2d 179, 93 P.2d 140; Mudd v. McColgan, 30 Cal.2d 463, at page 470, 183 P.2d 10, at page 14; Corey v. Knight, 150 Cal.App.2d 671, at page 678, 310 P.2d 673, at page 678. It is worthy of note that since the attorney general rendered the opinions above mentioned the Legislature has twice amended section 739 but has not made any change in the wording of those portions of the section which were construed by the attorney general in his opinions.

That section 739 of the Vehicle Code provides for a place of trial as well as a place for appearance of persons who have been cited and promised to appear on charges of violation of the provisions of the Vehicle Code other than those specified in sections 736–737 and grants jurisdiction to the judges of the municipal court at the county seat to try such cases seems self-evident. In the first place the provisions of 1462.2 of the Penal Code that "[e]xcept as otherwise provided in the Vehicle Code, the proper court for the trial of criminal cases amounting to misdemeanor shall be determined as follows:" clearly indicates the intent of the Legislature that the provisions of chapters 1 and 2, division 12 of the Vehicle Code should be construed as designating as the proper courts for the trial of cases involving the misdemeanors therein specified the courts before whom the person arrested for such misdemeanors might be cited. In the second place unless section 739 as well as section 736, 737 and 737.5 of the Vehicle Code be construed as giving the right to municipal courts other than the municipal court of the judicial district in which the offense is committed, to try offenses for which a person may be cited before them under those provisions of the Vehicle Code, those courts would not have the right over objection to try a person appearing before them upon a citation. This is true because under the provisions of section 1462.2 of the Penal Code, other than that part thereof which excepts from its provisions the provisions of the Vehicle Code, it is only the municipal court of the judicial district in which the offense is committed which is the proper court for the trial of the cause.

We hold therefore, that the arresting officer was upon the demand of petitioner required to specify the municipal court at the county seat as the place where petitioner should appear and that the Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District was the proper court for the trial of the cause.

[6] In arriving at this conclusion we have not overlooked the contention of the respondent that inasmuch as petitioner was taken into custody and did not sign a promise to appear that the provisions of section 739 cannot be applied. We find no merit in this contention, for to uphold it would permit the arresting officer to violate his duty to respect the demand of the person arrested as to the place of appearance and by his violation defeat the rights of the arrestee under the section. The arrested person, unless he resists arrest, has no means of asserting his rights under said section 739 except to do as petitioner did here, immediately demand that the hearing on the charge against him be transferred to the county seat in accordance with his demand to the arresting officer.

[7] The Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District being the proper place for the trial of the action against petitioner, section 1462.2 of the Penal Code made it the duty of the respondent court to transfer the case to the Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District. So far as pertinent to this question, section 1462.2 of the Penal Code reads: "If after such request [for transfer] it appears that the action or proceeding was not commenced in the proper court, the court shall order the action or proceeding transferred to the proper court." (Emphasis added.) There being no dispute as to the facts the court was without discretion to deny the motion to transfer and petitioner was entitled to the transfer as a matter of right. The order of the court denying the motion to transfer is not an appealable order and while the court's error might be reviewed upon an appeal from the final judgment, this in our opinion is not a speedy or adequate remedy. Petitioner is therefore entitled to a writ of mandate.

The judgment is reversed and the superior court is ordered to issue a peremptory writ of mandate commanding the respondent court to forthwith and without taking any other proceeding transfer the proceedings against the petitioner to the Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District at Los Angeles.

Civ. 18164.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 5, 1959.

Proceeding by father to have maternal grandmother removed as guardian of person and estate of his son toward whose support father had made no substantial contribution although requested to do so in a period of over two years following denial of an earlier petition for removal after which father had been convicted of disturbing the peace. From an order of the Superior Court, Santa Clara County, M. G. Del Mutolo, J., denying the petition, the father appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that evidence sustained finding that father was not a fit and proper person to have custody of his son.

Order affirmed.

1. Parent and Child ⇐2(1)

A father has a superior right to custody of his child over maternal grandmother if father is a fit and proper person to have such custody. West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 1580(8).

2. Guardian and Ward ⇐25

Petition filed by father to have maternal grandmother removed from position as guardian of person and estate of father's child put in issue father's fitness to have custody of his child, and burden was on father to establish his fitness in order to prove that guardianship was no longer necessary. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 1580(8).

3. Guardian and Ward ⇐25

In proceeding on father's petition to remove maternal grandmother as guardian of his son, father could not go behind an order entered on a prior petition denying father's request for removal of grandmother as guardian when he allowed such order to become final, and it was necessary that he establish that since such order he had rehabilitated himself and was presently a fit and proper person to have custody of his child. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 1580 (8).

4. Guardian and Ward ⇐25

In proceeding by father to have maternal grandmother removed as guardian of person and estate of his son toward whose support father had made no substantial contribution although requested to do so in a period of over two years following denial of an earlier petition for removal after which father had been convicted of disturbing the peace, evidence sustained finding that father was not a fit and proper person to have his son's custody. Malovos, Mager & Chasuk, Alfred P. Chasuk, Mountain View, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Appellant appeals from an order denying his petition to remove respondent, Cordie D. Holt, from her position as guardian of the person and estate of Melvin Ronnie Furr, a minor.

Appellant is the father of said minor, a boy born January 25, 1947, and his mother is dead. Respondent is the minor's maternal grandmother. The minor lived with his grandfather and grandmother from shortly after his birth. The grandfather died in 1953 and since then the minor has continued to live with the grandmother, respondent herein. After the grandfather's death the respondent was appointed guardian of the minor and qualified as such guardian on June 23, 1953. On January 13, 1955 appellant petitioned the court to remove respondent as guardian and that petition was denied on March 4, 1955. No appeal was taken from this order. On July 8, 1957 appellant filed another petition seeking the removal of such guardian and from the order denying that petition this appeal is taken.

[1, 2] The father has a superior right to custody of his child over the grandmother if he is a fit and proper person to have such custody. In re Guardianship of Smith, 42 Cal.2d 91, 93, 265 P.2d 888, 37 A.L.R.2d 867. However where a guardian has been appointed and the parent of the child seeks the removal of such guardian he must satisfy the court that "it is no longer necessary that the ward should be under guardianship." Prob.Code § 1580(8). This puts in issue the parent's fitness to have custody of his child and the burden is on him to establish his fitness in order to prove that the guardianship is no longer necessary. Guardianship of Brock, 154 Cal.App.2d 431, 433–434, 316 P.2d 3.

In this case the record shows that in 1950 appellant was convicted of burglary and served 18 months in San Quentin. He has also been twice convicted of battery, once of being drunk in a public place and once of disturbing the peace. He testified that all of his arrests were due to his drinking and that he has not drunk alcoholic liquors for two years. He is now married and has a home.

[3, 4] Appellant cannot go behind the order of 1955 denying his petition for removal of the guardian which he allowed to become final. That is a binding adjudication that at that time the guardianship was necessary. He must show that since that date he has so rehabilitated himself that he is now a fit and proper person to have the custody of his child. Guardianship of Brock, supra, 154 Cal.App.2d at pages 433–434, 316 P.2d at pages 5–6. In this connection while appellant testified that he is now married and living with his present wife in a suitable home and has not been drinking for two years, it was also proved that after the denial of his previous petition appellant was convicted of disturbing the peace and that although he was gainfully employed and had been requested to contribute to the support of his son he had made no substantial contributions to his support in the period of over two years following the denial of his earlier petition. The court could reasonably infer a lack of the normal parental concern from this continued failure to make any reasonable provision for his son's support, particularly in view of the fact that he and his grandmother have been dependent upon social security payments for their regular subsistence.

The court expressly found that appellant is not a fit and proper person to have his son's custody and we are satisfied that this finding is supported by the evidence.

No claim is made that the provision included in the present order for payments by appellant of $30 per month for his son's support is not reasonable.

The order is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 4, 1959.

Defendant was convicted of grand theft and one count of petit theft and from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that the evidence sustained conviction and that there were no reversible errors in ruling on instructions and evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1144(13)

The appellate court must assume in favor of the verdict every fact which the jury could reasonably have deduced from the evidence and refrain from drawing contrary inferences.

2. Criminal Law ⇐881(4)

The offense of grand theft includes the crimes of larceny by trick and device and obtaining money by false pretenses and a judgment of conviction of grand theft based on a general verdict of guilty, can be sustained if the evidence discloses the elements of one of the two consolidated offenses. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

3. Larceny ⇐14(1)

"Larceny by trick and device" is the appropriation of property, the possession of which was fraudulently acquired.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Larceny by Trick and Device".

4. Larceny ⇐14(1)

If a person with a preconceived design to appropriate property to his own use obtains possession of it by means of fraud or trickery, the taking is "larceny".

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Larceny".

5. Larceny ⇐65

Evidence that household appliances were delivered to defendant's residence upon the strength of credit fraudulently obtained from the vendor by virtue of a preconceived design to misrepresent the defendant's financial standing, and his occupation status, authorized a conviction of grand theft where vendor would not have parted with possession except for its reliance upon the fulfillment of a proper credit standing which, in defendant's case, was unobtainable. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

6. False Pretenses ⇐14

In prosecution for grand theft, that vendor of the merchandise did not sustain a loss in excess of $200 because the machines were repossessed did not preclude a conviction since financial loss was not a necessary element of the crime. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

7. False Pretenses ⇐20½

Where defendant sought credit from a store and filled out an application card and falsely told the interviewer the nature of his occupation and he was granted a temporary credit card, with a fifty dollar limitation, and in less than thirty days defendant charged items of merchandise worth over $637, and paid no part of the total sum thus charged, crime of theft by false pretenses was established, as against defendant's claim that the purchases should have been considered as individual offenses each being below the statutory minimum of $200. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

8. False Pretenses ⇐9

The false pretense must have materially influenced the owner to part with his property, but the false pretense need not be the sole inducing cause.

9. False Pretenses ⇐49(5)

Evidence that defendant charged some $2,100 worth of merchandise, and that the vendor relied upon the defendant's false representations, and that the merchandise was not paid for sustained conviction for grand theft. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

10. Criminal Law ⇐406(1)

In prosecution for grand theft, where more than a prima facie showing had been made by the prosecution prior to the testimony of arresting officers concerning certain admissions made by the defendant, the admissions were admissible as against the claim that the corpus delicti had not then been established. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

11. Criminal Law ⇐673(2)

In prosecution for grand theft for obtaining merchandise by fraudulently obtaining credit, admitting testimony from a credit representative was not error where the jury was advised that such evidence was received only to establish that no report was available on the defendant prior to a certain date. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

12. Criminal Law ⇐371(3)

In prosecution for grand theft, permitting prosecutor to question defendant concerning a $5,000 bracelet he had charged in New York earlier in 1956 and shortly thereafter pawned was not improper as imputing to the defendant a separate and distinct crime where defendant testified that he intended to pay for the merchandise when he made his numerous purchases so that the intent to defraud became a material and necessary element of the people's case. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

13. Criminal Law ⇐656(9)

In prosecution for grand theft, record did not establish that the trial judge during interrogation relating to a bracelet purchased by the defendant in New York in 1956 gave the jury the impression that the trial judge had formed an opinion of the defendant's guilt. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

14. False Pretenses ⇐42

In prosecution for grand theft, where intent to defraud was a necessary element of the theft and defendant testified that he intended to pay for the merchandise he had obtained on numerous charge accounts, testimony of the inability of the defendant to make such payments because of his general financial condition was admissible as tending to negative the effect of defendant's denial of any criminal intention. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

15. False Pretenses ⇐52

In prosecution for grand theft, instructions on grand theft were not error because of failure therein to advise the jury on all of the elements of theft by false pretenses. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

16. Criminal Law ⇐814(1)

In prosecution for grand theft, an instruction on the law of partnership was not required where the victims who extended credit on the defendant's numerous charge accounts based on his false representations of credit did not rely on the defendant's asserted partnership interest in a particular concern but upon his representation that he was the owner thereof. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

Randall Hunt Robertson, appellant, in pro. per.

Stanley Mosk, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment, after trial by jury, whereby he was convicted of three counts of grand theft (Sec. 487 (1), Penal Code) and one count of petit theft, being a lesser and included offense than that charged in the fourth count of the information. The trial court denied motion for new trial and his application for probation, and sentenced defendant to the state's prison for the term prescribed by law and to the county jail for six months, the terms to run concurrently.

The prosecution arose out of defendant's activities in securing fraudulent charge accounts at various business establishments. Count I involved the theft from Butler Brothers of household appliances and other merchandise valued in excess of $600; Count II charged the unlawful taking from May Company's Wilshire store of jewelry and other articles over the value of $200; Count III pertained to the theft of merchandise worth more than $1,000 from J. W. Robinson Co., and Count IV involved a similar unlawful transaction with I. Magnin and Company respecting articles valued in excess of $200.

Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to convict him on Counts I, II and III; the district attorney and trial judge were guilty of prejudicial misconduct; errors occurred in the admission of certain evidence and errors were committed in the giving and refusing of certain instructions.

Preliminarily, appellant's notice of appeal was tardily filed, being in the form of a telegram dispatched by appellant and received by the clerk on the third day following the expiration of the ten-day statutory period. The attorney general having raised the point in respondent's brief, appellant in his closing brief has set forth certain matters explanatory of the late filing, and we have entertained a countershowing by the respondent which tends to negative appellant's claims. Although appellant's showing falls short of the "clear and positive testimony" found in People v. Slobodion, 30 Cal.2d 362, 181 P.2d 868, 870, we are disposed to consider the appeal on its merits.

Appellant challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support his conviction on Counts I, II and III. The first of such counts, as heretofore noted, involved his transactions with Butler Brothers where, it appears, in December of 1956, he applied in writing for credit, and represented on the application form that he had a bank account with the Palm Springs office of Bank of America and was listed with Dunn and Bradstreet. Appellant told the credit interviewer he owned Spectrum Electronics at a given address and had been in that business for one year. A thirty-day charge account was opened, and appellant charged merchandise totalling more than $100 over a three-month period. On January 7, 1957, a washer and dryer, valued at $520.30 were delivered to the appellant at his residence address upon his representations in the credit application. This purchase was not, however, charged to appellant's account, but delivered with a conditional sales contract. Appellant did not sign the contract and the machines were subsequently repossessed by the seller upon receipt of information that the appellant was in custody. No loss was sustained by the store, although appellant paid no part of the merchandise charged under the thirty-day account.

It was established that appellant never had an account in any form during November and December of 1956 with the bank at Palm Springs, and his only connection with Spectrum Electronics consisted of a short period of employment, by the real owners, to obtain television sets for demonstration and to secure a Dunn & Bradstreet rating for the firm. A pending agreement by which appellant would become a partner never materialized. Prior to December 20, 1956, there was no record of any Dunn & Bradstreet report on appellant, individually.

Appellant took the stand in his defense and under cross-examination made the following admissions: That he had misrepresented certain facts in the Butler Brothers' credit application and credit applications at other stores; that his income for the entire year of 1956 was between three and four thousand dollars and that he had charged over three thousand dollars' worth of merchandise in the months of December, 1956, and January, 1957; that before such charges he had contracted other debts which were unpaid; that there were civil judgments outstanding against him; that earlier in 1956 he had charged a $5,000 bracelet for which he did not pay, but pawned for $950.

[1] The foregoing facts, pursuant to the recognized rule on appeal, have been summarized in a light most favorable to respondent. Thereunder, we are required to assume in favor of the verdict every fact which the jury could reasonably have deduced from the evidence and to refrain from drawing contrary inferences (People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778). Neither the law of this state nor these facts support appellant's claims concerning the insufficiency of the evidence to support his conviction.

[2–6] It is now well established that the offense of grand theft includes the crimes of larceny by trick and device and obtaining money by false pretenses (People v. Ashley, 42 Cal.2d 246, 258, 267 P.2d 271), and a judgment of conviction of grand theft based on a general verdict of guilty, as here, can be sustained if the evidence discloses the elements of one of the two consolidated offenses (People v. Massey, 151 Cal.App.2d 623, 658, 312 P.2d 365); "Larceny by trick and device is the appropriation of property, the possession of which was fraudulently acquired" (People v. Ashley, supra, 42 Cal.2d 258, 267 P.2d 279); stated otherwise, "(i)f a person, with a preconceived design to appropriate the property to his own use, obtains possession of it by means of fraud or trickery, the taking is larceny" (People v. Mills B. Sing, 42 Cal.App. 385, 391, 183 P. 865, 867), or "if the victim intends title to pass at some time later than the delivery, or upon the fulfillment of some condition not then performed, there may be a larceny." People v. Beilfuss, 59 Cal.App.2d 83, 89–90, 138 P.2d 332, 336. Here the household appliances were delivered to appellant's residence upon the strength of credit fraudulently obtained from the vendor by virtue of a palpably preconceived design to misrepresent his financial standing, his personal holdings and his occupation status. Also, though obliged to do so, appellant neither signed nor returned the contract which was delivered with the merchandise in question. The inference of larcenous intent was clearly deducible from the foregoing, as was the further inference that the vendor would not have parted with possession except for its reliance upon the fulfillment of a proper credit standing which, in appellant's case, was manifestly unobtainable in the light of his several admissions hereinbefore recounted. He cites to us the case of People v. Potter, 90 Cal.App. 94, 265 P. 365, where merchandise was obtained as the result of a representation that defendant had a deposit of $6,000 in a certain bank. This involved a different situation from that in the case at bar where the evidence established that appellant had no account of any kind with the bank of which he claimed to be a depositor. Nor is there any merit to appellant's implied suggestion that Butler Brothers did not sustain a loss in excess of $200 since the machines were repossessed. In cases of this kind financial loss is not a necessary element of the crime (People v. Talbott, 65 Cal.App.2d 654, 659, 151 P.2d 317).

[7] As to Count II, the record reveals that on December 12, 1956, appellant sought credit from May Company's Wilshire store and filled out an application card. He falsely told the interviewer that he was a doctor of osteopathy with offices on Santa Monica Boulevard. The credit department, on that representation, issued to him a temporary thirty-day credit card which, appellant admitted, had a $50 limitation. On six different dates between December 12 and December 23, 1956, he charged items of merchandise worth $637.04, the largest single charge being in the amount of $89.34 for jewelry. Appellant paid no part of the total sum thus charged.

Contrary to appellant's contentions, the facts under this count establish the crime of theft by false pretenses, both title and possession having been deceitfully and fraudulently obtained (People v. Ashley, 42 Cal.2d 246, 258, 267 P.2d 271). Appellant claims, however, that each of the numerous purchases should have been considered as individual offenses, each being below the statutory minimum of $200; and he relies on People v. Rabe, 202 Cal. 409, 413, 261 P. 303, to the effect that multiple takings accomplished by false pretenses constitute multiple offenses. In People v. Howes, 99 Cal.App.2d 808, 818, 222 P.2d 969, as well as Dawson v. Superior Court, 138 Cal.App. 2d 685, 689, 292 P.2d 574, the reasoning of the Rabe case is discussed and distinguished from factual situations more applicable to the one at bar. "From these cases, and others that could be cited, it can be said that the general test as to whether there are separate offenses or one offense is whether the evidence discloses one general intent or discloses separate and distinct intents. The particular facts * * * of each case determine the question. If there is but one intention, one general impulse, and one plan, even though there is a series of transactions, there is but one offense, and this is so whether the theft is accomplished by larceny or embezzlement." People v. Howes, supra, 99 Cal.App.2d 818–819, 222 P.2d 976. In Dawson v. Superior Court, 138 Cal.App. 2d 685, 689, 292 P.2d 574, 577, the court points out that by the 1927 amendment to section 484, Penal Code, the many technical niceties once existing between the various forms of larceny were abolished, and all are included under the term "theft." Consequently, "where a person intends by his false representations to initiate an act which will cause him to receive illegally various sums of money, it is far more reasonable to consider the whole plan rather than its component parts * * *"; as a result, the court concluded, a person may be guilty of grand theft by taking numerous benefit payments, all less than $200, from a county welfare department over a period of seven or eight months. The case here, of course, is much stronger, and the evidence justified the implied finding that appellant, discovering he could obtain merchandise on credit, proceeded during the initial monthly billing period to appropriate for himself as much as he could. Appellant's remaining contention as to Count II concerns the asserted inherent improbability of prosecution testimony relative to the extension of credit. The record does not bear out his claims in that respect, even though the store may not have used the best of business judgment on the occasion in question.

[8–11] The third count of the information related to some nine or ten transactions with J. W. Robinson Company between December 14, 1956, and January 22, 1957. On those occasions, he charged approximately $2,100 worth of merchandise, the largest single item being $197 for a camera. He renews the argument that the purchases constituted, at most, a series of petty thefts, which contention has heretofore been discussed and disposed of. Appellant also claims that, absent some reliance by the store upon the assertedly false representations, the crime of theft has not been established, pointing out that some credit check was made through Dunn & Bradstreet before credit was extended. The record, however, reveals that reliance was also placed upon other representations in appellant's application, including his statement that he was a doctor of osteopathy. The case of People v. Daniels, 64 Cal.App. 514, 517, 222 P. 387, cited by appellant, is thus distinguished; there, it appears, the victim made an independent investigation which was the sole inducement for his parting with his money. As declared in People v. Ashley, 42 Cal.2d 246, 259, 267 P.2d 271, 279: "The false pretense or representation must have materially influenced the owner to part with his property, but the false pretense need not be the sole inducing cause" (Emphasis added). Appellant further complains that it was error to admit the testimony of arresting officers concerning certain admissions made by him; this, because the corpus delicti had not then been established. The point is not well taken. More than a prima facie showing had been made by the prosecution prior thereto, and only "slight or prima facie proof is sufficient for such purpose" (People v. Mehaffey, 32 Cal.2d 535, 545, 197 P.2d 12, 17). Also, no error appears in the admission of testimony from the Dunn & Bradstreet representative, since the jury was advised that such evidence was received only to establish that no report was available on appellant prior to December 20, 1956. Finally, sufficient corroboration was forthcoming, the testimony of each victim being corroborative under the other counts.

[12, 13] Appellant next contends that prejudicial error occurred when the prosecutor was permitted, over objection, to question him concerning a $5,000 bracelet he had charged in New York earlier in 1956, and shortly thereafter pawned for $950. He claims that there was thus imputed to him a separate and distinct crime. In People v. Zerillo, 36 Cal.2d 222, 228, 223 P.2d 223, 227, the court said: "(I)f a defendant takes the stand and makes a general denial of the crime with which he is charged the permissible scope of cross-examination is very wide" to qualify the effect of such testimony. In the case at bar, appellant testified that he intended to pay for the merchandise when he made his numerous purchases, and thus the intent to defraud became a material and necessary element of the People's case. The admissibility of the New York transaction is thus apparent; as stated in People v. Weitz, 42 Cal.2d 338, 347, 267 P.2d 295, 300: "Inasmuch as the evidence related to transactions similar in material elements to the ones forming the basis of the indictment, it was admissible to show defendant's criminal intent

* * *" The suggested imputation to appellant of still another crime by the reception of evidence as to the source of his income is not borne out by the record. We have also examined the record carefully relative to appellant's claims that the trial judge, during the interrogation relating to the bracelet, gave the jury the impression that he had formed an opinion of appellant's guilt. To the contrary, it appears that court evidenced the proper solicitude for appellant's rights, occasionally sustaining objections on his own motion and otherwise refraining from creating the impression complained of. The isolated instance, to which appellant refers, seems to have stemmed from appellant's persistence in unresponsive and evasive answers.

[14] According to the appellant, the court also improperly permitted the introduction of evidence concerning past obligations, judgments and other debts, all unpaid. As heretofore observed, the intent to defraud is a necessary element of theft and appellant testified that he intended to pay for the merchandise. Certainly, testimony of his inability to make such payment because of his general financial position tends to negative the effect of appellant's denials of any criminal intention. People v. Zerillo, 36 Cal.2d 222, 228, 223 P.2d 223.

[15, 16] Appellant's final point concerns the court's instructions on the crime of grand theft, and the failure therein to advise the jury on all of the elements of theft by false pretenses. We have examined the charge, and the point is not tenable. Appellant also argues that the court on its own motion should have given an instruction on the law of partnership, since that matter was vital to a proper consideration of the evidence. People v. Buffum, 40 Cal.2d 709, 724, 256 P.2d 317. The contention is without merit, since the victims did not rely on appellant's asserted partnership interest in Spectrum Electronics, but upon his representation that he was the owner thereof.

There has been no miscarriage of justice in this case. The appellant was fairly tried and justly convicted and no error is apparent in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Carl CHRISTENSEN, Mie Christensen, Russell Davis and Betty Davis, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 9534.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 4, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 1, 1959.

Action against motel proprietors for injuries sustained by guest when at night she stepped into uncovered crawl or access hole in concrete slab along one side of motel building. The Superior Court, Yolo County, Ben R. Ragain, J., entered judgment on a verdict for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem., held that injured guest had been impliedly, if not expressly, invited to use gravel path beside concrete slab as a means of ingress and egress and that whether she was contributorily negligent in using unlighted path instead of well-lighted concrete sidewalks on other three sides of building was a question of fact for jury.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Innkeepers ⇐10.3

Motel guest was impliedly, if not expressly, invited to use gravel path, apparently intended for use as means of ingress and egress, by which she had been led by proprietor to motel office, and use of concrete slab beside path, which appeared to be a continuation of concrete sidewalks on other three sides of motel was within area of implied invitation as a guest at motel.

2. Innkeepers ⇐10.3

Uncovered crawl or access hole in concrete slab along one side of motel building beside gravel path, which motel guest had been impliedly, if not expressly, invited to use as means of ingress and egress, was not a patent defect at night, in absence of sufficient illumination to see hole.

3. Innkeepers ⇐10.3

Maintenance of uncovered crawl or access holes in concrete slab along one side of motel building beside gravel path, which motel guest had been impliedly, if not expressly, invited to use as means of ingress and egress, without warning her of danger or providing sufficient illumination to make holes visible at night, established failure of motel proprietors to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to guest, in that they negligently failed to keep premises in reasonably safe condition for those lawfully upon premises.

4. Innkeepers ⇐10.14

In action against motel proprietors for injuries sustained by guest when at night she stepped into uncovered crawl or access hole in concrete slab along unlighted side of building, whether guest was contributorily negligent in using unlighted gravel path beside slab, which she had been impliedly, if not expressly, invited to use as means of ingress and egress, instead of using well-lighted concrete sidewalks on other three sides of building, was a question of fact for jury.

5. Negligence ⇐136(9)

Contributory negligence is not established as a matter of law unless the only reasonable hypothesis is that such negligence exists and reasonable men could draw that conclusion and none other.

6. Negligence ⇐136(9)

Where different inferences may be drawn from the evidence, one for and one against contributory negligence, the one against will be followed, and before it can be held as a matter of law that contributory negligence exists, the evidence must point unerringly to that conclusion.

Robert M. Cole, Davis, for appellants.

Chalmers, Sans & Gardner, Woodland, for respondent.

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a money judgment entered upon a jury's verdict in a personal injury action.

It appears from the settled statement upon which this appeal is presented that the respondent sustained personal injuries when she stepped into an uncovered "crawl or access hole" on the premises of appellants' motel. The uncovered crawl or access hole is located in a concrete slab on the west side of the motel unit, which respondent had, on the day of the accident, rented from defendants. This slab is approximately 2 feet wide and extends the full length of the building on its west side. On the other three sides of the building are concrete sidewalks approximately 3 feet wide. These sidewalks join the concrete slab to form a continuous flat surface which gave an appearance of the sidewalk extending completely around the building. However, on the west side, and in the so-called slab, are three "crawl" or "access" holes, which were open at the top. The crawl hole which caused respondent's fall and resulting injury is only 25 inches south of the northwesterly corner of the building or approximately 5 feet south of the northerly edge of the sidewalk on the north side. This crawl or access hole apparently extends across the entire width of the slab and at its most westerly end is a little over 4 inches deep. It does not appear in the statement what its depth is at other points throughout its width. Extending along the entire length of the slab, and immediately adjacent thereto, is a well-packed gravel path leading from the motel unit in question to the motel courtyard. There was no direct illumination on the west side of the building. However, there was some light which came from the yellow lights above the unit doorways on each side of the building and white overhead lights at intervals along the driveway to the north.

Between three and four on the afternoon of the day of the accident respondent rented two units at appellants' motel, one for herself and one for an ill friend. After one of the appellants showed respondent the accommodations, they returned by foot from the unit which respondent rented for herself to the motel office by way of a gravel path adjacent to and on the westerly side of the building, said appellant leading the way. There were no signs or warnings prohibiting travel over the path by guests in the motel units or by the general public nor were there gates or other obstructions closing off the pathway from travel by guests, invitees or the general public nor had they been prevented from using the pathway.

At approximately 9:30 P.M. respondent left her apartment or motel unit with the intention of going to her friend's apartment by way of the gravel path, and as she took one or two steps around the northwest corner of the building she stepped into one of the uncovered access or crawl holes and fell to the ground, thereby receiving injury to her person. There is testimony that it was dark at the time of the accident, and that in order to see the hole one had to get down fairly close to it. On the other three sides of the building there are paved and lighted sidewalks.

Appellants contend that the respondent did not enjoy the status of an invitee on the path or portion of the premises where she fell and that as a matter of law respondent was guilty of contributory negligence in using the unlighted path rather than the illuminated sidewalk around the building. There is no merit in either contention.

[1–3] The occupancy and use of the portion of the premises where the plaintiff was injured was clearly within the area of plaintiff's implied invitation as a guest at the motel. It must be kept in mind that one of the appellants, after showing respondent the motel unit, on returning with respondent to the office used the very pathway which respondent decided to use at the time of her injury, thus impliedly, if not expressly, inviting plaintiff to use the walk. There was nothing to indicate that the respondent should not again use the path. To the contrary, the facts clearly indicate that the path was for the use of anyone lawfully upon the premises as a means of ingress and egress. The accident, however, occurred before respondent had actually set foot on the path. Respondent was still on what appeared to be a continuation of the sidewalk when she stepped into the uncovered crawl or access hole. Respondent had no warning of the existing dangerous condition nor was she aware of it. At the time of the accident the lighting conditions were such that it was not then a patent defect which one could ordinarily see. It was only illuminated by indirect light which came from the sides of the building and from certain lights over the driveway to the north. Under these conditions it is clear to us that the appellants failed to use ordinary care to avoid injury to the respondent by negligently failing to keep the premises in a condition reasonably safe for anyone lawfully upon the premises. Stowe v. Fritzie Hotels, Inc., 44 Cal.2d 416, 282 P.2d 890; 27 Cal.Jur.2d, sec. 28, page 279.

[4–6] As to appellants' contention that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, appellants argue that respondent was negligent because she decided to use the unlighted path rather than the paved and well-lighted route at the other end of the building. The question of contributory negligence, however, was one of fact for the jury and we cannot say that plaintiff was negligent as a matter of law. Under the evidence the jury could have found that since respondent was not aware of the hazard she did not act unreasonably in assuming that there was nothing of a dangerous character on the premises, especially in what appeared to be a continuation of the sidewalk. Hayes v. Richfield Oil Corp., 38 Cal.2d 375, 385, 240 P.2d 580. Further, as stated in Anthony v. Hobbie, 25 Cal.2d 814, 818, 155 P.2d 826, 829:

"* * * [C]ontributory negligence is not established as a matter of law unless the only reasonable hypothesis is that such negligence exists; that reasonable or sensible men could have drawn that conclusion and none other; that where there are different inferences that may be drawn, one for and one against, the one against will be followed; and that before it can be held as a matter of law that contributory negligence exists, the evidence must point unerringly to that conclusion."

The judgment is affirmed.

Action by automobile guest against host for injuries sustained in accident. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Daniel R. Shoemaker, J., rendered judgment for guest, and host appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that instruction that wilful misconduct must be something more than intentional was not deficient on ground that it did not tell jury that element of intent was an essential part of wilful misconduct.

Trial ⇐296(3)

In action by automobile guest against host for injuries sustained in accident, instruction equating wilful misconduct with negligence was erroneous, but in view of fact that it advised jury that wilful misconduct was more than negligence, even more than gross negligence, and that there could be no recovery for negligence unless negligence amounted to wilful misconduct as defined in instructions, and instructions properly defined wilful misconduct, error was not prejudicial to host. Bronson, Bronson & McKinnon, San Francisco, for appellant.

William L. Ferdon, San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment entered upon a verdict for personal injuries received by plaintiff while riding as a guest in defendant's automobile. It was not contended that defendant was intoxicated and the sole basis of liability presented to the jury was defendant's wilful misconduct. Vehicle Code § 403.

The evidence most favorable to plaintiff would support a finding that while driving southerly on Eleventh Street in San Francisco, and just after being asked by plaintiff: "Why don't you slow down?" defendant without slackening the speed of his car ignored an arterial stop sign, drove into the intersection of Folsom Street at a speed of 40 miles per hour and collided there with a car which had entered the same intersection on Folsom Street.

While defendant asserts that a finding that the defendant was guilty of wilful misconduct was a close question no claim is made that the evidence is insufficient as a matter of law to support such finding. The sole contentions are that the trial court gave one erroneous instruction, and refused one proper and necessary instruction proposed by defendant, both on the subject of wilful misconduct and that as a result the case was submitted to the jury in a prejudicially erroneous legal framework.

The instruction given by the court of which defendant complains is B.A.J.I. 209J:

"You will note from the foregoing that although wilful misconduct is a form of negligence, it is something more than negligence; more even than what might be called gross negligence. A guest may not recover against his [her] host-driver or against the owner of the vehicle in which he [she] was a guest for negligence, however it might be classified, unless that negligence amounted to wilful misconduct, as defined in these instructions."

This instruction was expressly disapproved in Lynch v. Birdwell, 44 Cal.2d 839, 285 P.2d 919, 923, a fact which is noted in 2 B.A.J.I., 4th Edition, page 697 in the note preceding this instruction. We are moved to the comment that B.A.J.I. is a form-book upon which courts and lawyers rely for correct instructions and, after the express disapproval of B.A.J.I. 209J, leaving that instruction in the form-book, even with a cautionary note (which may well not be read by counsel or judge in the pressure of the trial of a particular case) constitutes a trap for counsel and the courts which tends measurably to impair the value of B.A.J.I. for the very purpose which it is designed to serve. Criticism of particular court decisions is a proper function of a text-book and, if the criticism is sound, may and often does perform a very useful function in the long-range growth of the law. But what is proper in a text-book ceases to be proper in a form-book, whose function should be to provide forms which can be relied upon to state the law in a fashion which has met the approval of the courts.

It is to be noted of this instruction however that while stating that wilful misconduct is "a form of negligence," which statement was the subject of the court's criticism in Lynch v. Birdwell, supra, it then advises the jury that it is more than negligence, more even than gross negligence, and concludes that there can be no recovery for negligence, unless that negligence "amounted to wilful misconduct, as defined in these instructions."

[1] While academically, under Lynch v. Birdwell, supra, to equate wilful misconduct with negligence is erroneous, if the definition of wilful misconduct "defined in these instructions" was adequate we cannot see how defendant could be prejudiced by this instruction. Conceding that it was erroneous to describe wilful misconduct as a form of negligence how could the jury be prejudicially misled by this statement when they were explicitly told that they could not find defendant liable unless they found him guilty of wilful misconduct as defined in the instructions, if the instructions adequately stated the elements of wilful misconduct? Where the jury is properly instructed on the facts which they must find to hold the defendant liable the erroneous characterization of the sum of those facts as a form of negligence cannot mislead them. They must still find those facts before they can bring in a plaintiff's verdict under the instructions of the court. Sarafini v. City and County of San Francisco, 143 Cal.App.2d 570, 577, 300 P.2d 44. Any chance of confusion on the jury's part was further minimized in this case by the fact that no other instructions defining negligence were given.

Wilful misconduct was defined for the jury in this case substantially in the form set out in B.A.J.I. 209H:

"The words 'wilful misconduct' have a meaning in law additional to that which they have in common usage. If we were to use the words in their ordinary sense, they would mean simply the indulging in wrongful conduct by conscious choice. Such conduct might consist of doing something that ought not to be done or in failing to do something that ought to be done. But in order to be a basis for liability to a guest under our law, the misconduct must be something more than intentional and wrongful; it must be done under circumstances which show either knowledge that serious injury to the guest probably will result or a wanton and reckless disregard of the possible results."

[2] The accepted definition of wilful misconduct first announced by our Supreme Court in Meek v. Fowler, 3 Cal.2d 420, 426, 45 P.2d 194, in language quoted from Howard v. Howard, 132 Cal.App. 124, 129, 22 P.2d 279, is phrased as follows [3 Cal. 2d 420, 426, 45 P.2d 197]:

"Willful misconduct implies at least the intentional doing of something either with a knowledge that serious injury is a probable (as distinguished from a possible) result, or the intentional doing of an act with a wanton and reckless disregard of its possible result." (Emphasis in the opinion.) Emery v. Emery, 45 Cal.2d 421, 426, 289 P.2d 218.

[3] Defendant complains that the instruction as given is deficient in not telling the jury that the element of intent is an essential part of wilful misconduct. In this we believe defendant attempts to construe the instruction too narrowly. The jury was told that wilful misconduct must be something more than intentional which can only mean that it must be intentional and something more. The something more is then explained in language approved in Meek v. Fowler, supra, and reapproved at least as late as Emery v. Emery, supra, i. e. "it must be done under circumstances which show either knowledge that serious injury to the guest will probably result or a wanton and reckless disregard of the possible results."

We must accord to the jury ordinary intelligence and we cannot believe that they did not understand from the instruction given that to constitute wilful misconduct they must find: (1) that defendant intentionally did something wrongful and (2) that he did this either with knowledge that it would probably result in serious injury or with a wanton and reckless disregard of the possible result.

[4] Defendant also objects to the failure to give his proposed instruction, which included the statement that wilful misconduct "implies at least the intentional doing of something either with knowledge that serious injury is a probability as distinguished from a possible result, or the intentional doing of an action with a wanton and reckless disregard of its possible result."

[5] Reasonably construing the instruction quoted above, which was actually given by the court, the instruction refused added nothing to the definition of wilful misconduct contained in the instruction given. It is axiomatic that so long as the jury is correctly instructed a party cannot complain that the instructions were not couched in particular language. 24 Cal.Jur., Trial, § 79, pp. 808–810.

Judgment affirmed.

Margaret M. RIDDLE et al., Defendants, Valentine Hartman and Elsie M. Hartman, his wife, Defendants and Respondents.

No. 17907.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.
Feb. 4, 1959.

The Superior Court, Contra Costa County, Homer W. Patterson, J., entered an order quashing service of an alias summons and amended complaint on certain of the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that where original complaint was filed on June 21, 1950, and certain of the defendants were not served until May of 1954, and on June 14, 1954, order was made dismissing action as to them, and on March 9, 1957, and on March 28, 1957, an alias summons and amended complaint were served on them pursuant to order of June 18, 1954, directing that they be joined as necessary parties defendant, the June 14, 1954, order of dismissal made such defendants strangers to the action, so that when later they were ordered joined and were named as defendants in amended complaint, they came in as new parties and action commenced anew as to them, and service of summons and amended complaint in March of 1957 was within three years of second commencement of action as to them, and action should not have been dismissed as to them under section of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring service of summons within three years after commencement of action.

Order reversed.

1. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇐80

Section of Code of Civil Procedure requiring service of summons within three years after commencement of the action does not prevent the bringing of a new action against a defendant, who has been dismissed under that section, by filing a new complaint against him. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 581a.

2. Limitation of Actions ⇐124

For purpose of computing running of statute of limitations when new party is brought into action, action commences as to him when appropriate amended or supplemented complaint is filed.

3. Limitation of Actions ⇐130(11)

Where original complaint was filed on June 21, 1950, and certain of the defendants were not served until May of 1954, and on June 14, 1954, order was made dismissing action as to them, and on March 9, 1957, and on March 28, 1957, an alias summons and amended complaint were served on them pursuant to order of June 18, 1954, directing that they be joined as necessary parties defendant, the June 14, 1954, order of dismissal made such defendants strangers to the action, so that when later they were ordered joined and were named as defendants in amended complaint, they came in as new parties and action commenced anew as to them, and service of summons and amended complaint in March of 1957 was within three years of second commencement of action

4. Process ⇐158

Where District Court of Appeal on appeal from order quashing service of alias summons and amended complaint held that neither of the grounds specified in notice of motion to quash supported order appealed from, no other ground for that order was available, since notice of motion, other than for new trial, must state grounds on which it will be made. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1010.

Royal E. Handlos, San Francisco, for respondents.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from an order of April 1, 1957, which quashed service of an alias summons and amended complaint upon defendants Valentine K. and Elsie M. Hartman. These defendants had been served on March 9 and March 28, 1957, pursuant to an order of June 18, 1954, which directed the joining of the Hartmans as necessary parties defendant.

The notice of motion specified two grounds only: (1) On June 14, 1954, an order was made dismissing this action as to the Hartmans, and (2) they were not served within three years after the commencement of the action.

Neither of these grounds furnishes legal support for the order appealed from.

The dismissal of June 14, 1954, was made pursuant to the mandate of section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure which requires service of summons within three years after the commencement of the action.[1] The original complaint was filed on June 21, 1950. The Hartmans were served in May of 1954. That order of dismissal decided nothing on the merits and was not res judicata on the question whether the Hartmans are necessary parties. Gonsalves v. Bank of America, 16 Cal.2d 169, 172–173, 105 P.2d 118. It had the procedural effect of making them strangers to the action, so that when later they were ordered joined and were named as defendants in the amended complaint filed pursuant to that order, they came in as new parties and the action commenced anew as to them.

[1] Section 581a does not prevent the bringing of a new action against a dismissed defendant by filing a new complaint against him. We see no reason why a plaintiff cannot do the same, in legal effect, by suitably amending his complaint in the original action upon obtaining leave of court therefor. The reason for such a rule is especially cogent when, as here, the court directed that the new parties be joined as "necessary" parties. The provisions and purposes of section 389 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which sanctions and in some cases requires the bringing in of new parties, would frequently be completely thwarted if the one-year and the three-year limitation periods of section 581a were to commence on the day of the

1. Plaintiff makes an ineffectual collateral attack upon the dismissal order of 1954. It was not appealed from and long since became final. The record supports the order upon the theory that the Hartmans were served as fictitiously named defendants. As such they were defendants from the beginning and thus entitled to invoke the mandates of section 581a. See Brock v. Fouchy, 76 Cal.App.2d 363, 172 P.2d 945; dismissal, upon motion of a fictitiously named defendant, for failure to issue the original summons within one year.

An affidavit asserting that the judge who made the 1954 dismissal order was disqualified to act because of bias and prejudice, was filed on the day the order was made, but the record does not show whether the filing preceded the order, and the order recites that no one appeared in opposition to the motion for dismissal. This is an insufficient basis for a collateral attack upon the order.

filing of the original complaint when a new party is brought in.

[2] It is already established that for the purpose of computing the running of a statute of limitations when a new party is brought into an action, the action commences as to him when an appropriate amended or supplemental complaint is filed. Jackson v. Lacy, 37 Cal.App.2d 551, 558, 100 P.2d 313; Jeffers v. Cook, 58 Cal. 147, 150 (supplemental complaint); Spaulding v. Howard, 121 Cal. 194, 198, 53 P. 563 (supplemental complaint, but cause of action had accrued before filing of the original complaint); John Bollman Co. v. S. Bachman & Co., 16 Cal.App. 589, 591, 117 P. 690, 122 P. 835 (amended complaint). The same principle applies with equal logic to the computation of time "after the commencement of [the] action" under section 581a when a new party is brought in.

[3] It appears that the amended complaint for joinder of the Hartmans was filed June 24, 1954. That marks the date of commencement of the action anew as to the Hartmans. It follows that service of the alias summons and amended complaint in March of 1957 was within three years of the second commencement of the action as to them.

Accordingly, we hold that neither of the grounds specified in the notice of motion to quash supports the order appealed from.

[4] No other ground for that order is available. A notice of motion, other than for a new trial, "must state * * * the grounds upon which it will be made." Code Civ.Proc. § 1010. Only such grounds as are specified may be considered. Westphal v. Westphal, 61 Cal.App.2d 544, 550, 143 P.2d 405; Castagnoli v. Castagnoli, 124 Cal.App.2d 39, 41, 268 P.2d 37; Hernandez v. National Dairy Products Co., 126 Cal.App.2d 490, 493, 272 P.2d 799; and cases cited in each, in the absence of any element of waiver by the opposite party. No such element appears in the record before us.

It does appear that an alias summons which named the Hartmans as defendants and was used in effecting service upon them in March of 1957, was issued on March 8, 1957, more than one year after June 24, 1954, when the action was commenced anew as to them. This suggests the possibility of a failure of the plaintiff to meet the one-year requirement of section 581a and a consequent duty upon the part of the trial court to dismiss the action as to the Hartmans. However, that question was not before the trial court nor is it before us upon this appeal. Its subject matter was not indicated in the notice of motion to quash. Plaintiff would be entitled to an opportunity to explain the seemingly undue delay. For example, a stipulation extending time may have been filed.

The order appealed from is reversed.

PATROSS, Justice pro tem.

This is an original proceeding to review an order restoring probation following an order terminating probation. Upon filing of the petition we issued an order to show cause.

The petitioner having been found guilty of violating Penal Code, § 67, bribery, he was, on July 6, 1956, placed upon probation for a period of ten years upon various conditions including among others that his place of residence and employment be approved by the probation officer.

On November 27, 1956, petitioner gave notice of a motion for modification of probation which was supported by an affidavit wherein it was averred that defendant "lives in Los Angeles with his wife and child while all of his brothers reside in the Philippine Islands and operate a bus terminal in Manila running buses to the provinces and want defendant to enter the business with them. That defendant wishes to return to the Islands with his own family to live and would like permission to leave and would like permission of this Court to do so. That defendant is informed there is no compact between the United States and the Philippine Islands whereby supervision may be carried on in the Islands."

The motion came on for hearing on December 13, 1956, and in granting the same the court stated: "He [the defendant] will be permitted to leave the country and probation will be terminated when he leaves the United States to become a resident of the Philippine Islands. That means that you are not just to go over to the Philippine Islands and then come back to the United States, because if you do, we will reinstate probation." The order as it appears in the minutes reads as follows: "Probation is modified: Defendant is permitted to return to his home in the Philippine Islands upon payment of remainder of his fine. Probation to be terminated upon his leaving the United States. Released."

Following this order petitioner, during the latter part of March 1957, left the United States for Manila arriving there on March 28, 1957. In leaving the United States he applied for and was granted a passport and visa permitting him to enter the Philippine Islands as a temporary visitor. He left his wife and child in Los Angeles and he did not dispose of his furniture or any of his other possessions before leaving. He remained in Manila only from March 28, 1957, to April 14, 1957, returning to this country on April 15, 1957. Thereafter he was brought before the court for violating his probation and on October 20, 1958, the court restored probation upon the same terms and conditions as those previously imposed. Petitioner seeks annulment of this last order.

Petitioner contends that the trial court having terminated probation was without jurisdiction later to vacate such order and restore probation. While this is undoubtedly true as a general rule it is without application to the situation here.

Other considerations aside, the court was warranted in revoking its prior order terminating probation by reason of the fact that it had been procured by the petitioner by fraud and deceit practiced upon the court. It is clear that the court's action in modifying probation so as to permit petitioner to return to the Philippine Islands and providing that probation should terminate upon his leaving the United States was made upon the representation of petitioner (and his then counsel) that it was his purpose and intention to leave the United States and permanently establish his residence in the Philippines. In view of the evidence that petitioner applied only for a visitor's permit, representing in so doing that he would be absent from the United States for approximately two months; that he left his wife and child in Los Angeles, as well as his furniture and other possessions, and that he remained in the Philippines for only 17 days, the court was warranted in concluding, as it apparently did, that at the time the petitioner applied for a modification of probation he had no intention of permanently leaving the United States for the purpose of establishing residence in the Philippines and that his representations to this effect were made for the purpose of deceiving the court in order to induce it to grant petitioner's motion.

In People v. Sapienzo, 1923, 60 Cal.App. 626, 629, 213 P. 274, 275, the court in upholding an order revoking a former order granting probation which had been obtained by deceit said: "The case does not present a situation where the court without justification has arbitrarily revoked its order of probation. The evidence upon the hearing for the revocation showed that the court had been deceived and imposed upon in granting the order. To hold under such circumstances that the order could not be revoked would be to sacrifice reason, justice, and the public welfare to technical refinement."

The order to show cause heretofore issued is discharged and the petition is denied.

Feb. 6, 1959.

Action by corporation to enjoin former president and general manager from conducting a competing business and for an accounting and declaratory relief. The Superior Court, Alameda County, A. T. Shine, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that testimony of attorney, consulted by defendant and another in relation to joint venture and partnership ultimately incorporated by attorney, concerning such transactions and promises and undertakings made by defendant was not subject to exclusion on ground of attorney-client privilege under West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, and that exclusion of such testimony upon pivotal issues was prejudicial error.

Haradon M. Dillon, Oakland, for appellant.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff is a corporation engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling nailing machines. It brought this action against its former president and general manager to enjoin him from the conduct of a competing business upon which he has embarked, also for an accounting and for declaratory relief.

The parties are agreed upon the following facts as shown by certain allegations of the complaint which defendant by his answer has admitted:

In 1948 defendant and Dr. Warren E. Page orally agreed to work together, pooling their inventive ideas and funds in a joint venture to perfect and market nailing machines, sharing profits equally, each to own an undivided half interest in machines developed or produced, Page to furnish the funds required for such joint venture to the extent of his ability so to do. In 1949, defendant and Page entered into a partnership for the purpose of manufacturing and marketing nailing machines, all profits to be divided evenly between them. In 1952, defendant and Page incorporated the partnership, the corporation so formed being the plaintiff herein. Thereafter, until February 29, 1956, defendant was president and general manager of plaintiff.

On or about March 7, 1956, defendant resigned as general manager of plaintiff. On or about March 14, 1956, defendant established next door to plaintiff's principal office a business consisting of the manufacture, sale and repair of mechanical nailing machines and parts identical with the mechanical nailing machines and parts being manufactured, sold and repaired by plaintiff during the time defendant was employed by plaintiff.

The principal issue framed by the pleadings was whether the business of the joint venture, the partnership and the plaintiff corporation, embraced the production, manufacture and sale of all nailing machines, mechanical as well as magnetic, as alleged by the plaintiff, or merely one certain type of magnetic nailing machine, identified by a certain patent, as alleged by the defendant.

Another issue was whether or not the mechanical nailing machine now manufactured by the defendant constituted a trade secret of the plaintiff at the time defendant resigned as general manager, as alleged by the plaintiff and denied by the defendant.

Another issue was whether the mechanical machine which defendant is now manufacturing was developed by him at the expense of plaintiff and in the course of defendant's employment by the plaintiff, as alleged by the plaintiff and denied by the defendant.

The trial court found for defendant upon these issues. It concluded that plaintiff has no interest in the mechanical nailing machine now being independently manufactured by the defendant and that the defendant has violated no fiduciary relation between himself and plaintiff in the production and sale of this machine which is a copy of the theory of a certain machine patented by certain third parties, which patent has expired.

(1) Plaintiff claims prejudicial error in the exclusion of the testimony of Honorable Charles W. Fisher, Judge of the municipal court, Oakland.

Defendant and Page consulted Judge Fisher as attorney (prior to his becoming a judge) in relation to their joint venture and their partnership undertakings. Also, he organized the plaintiff corporation for them. Plaintiff called Judge Fisher as a witness to testify concerning those transactions and the promises and undertakings made by defendant during the course thereof. Upon defendant's objection the court excluded such testimony upon the ground of the attorney-client privilege accorded by section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1, 2] This exclusion was clearly erroneous. "Where two persons mutually employ the same attorney to represent them as their common agent and attorney in a particular transaction, the communications made by either of them in the presence of the other to the attorney are privileged as to strangers to the transaction, but are not privileged as between either of them and the attorney. [Citations.]" Petty v. Superior Court, 116 Cal.App.2d 20, 29, 253 P.2d 28, 33.

[3] Defendant concedes upon this appeal that the Petty case correctly states the law and that the exclusion of Judge Fisher's testimony was in error. He urges that the testimony excluded was merely cumulative in nature and, therefore, its omission was not prejudicial. We do not so view it. The scope and terms of the joint venture and of the partnership depended upon oral agreements and the incorporation was an incorporation of the partnership business. Defendant and Page differed radically as to those terms and Judge Fisher's testimony would have corroborated that of Page. Those issues depended upon the credibility, respectively, of defendant and Page. Judge Fisher was the only other witness who did not have an interest in the outcome of the litigation and who was called to testify upon the pivotal issues of the case. We conclude that the exclusion of his testimony was prejudicially erroneous.

[4] (2) Testimony by defendant that Dr. Page had treated him for epilepsy was erroneously admitted into evidence for the purpose of impeachment. Dr. Page had been asked, upon cross-examination, if he had not treated defendant for epilepsy. The doctor replied that he had not. That was a collateral matter. Accordingly, Page's answer was conclusive on the defendant and could not be contradicted by him. In re Estate of Gird, 157 Cal. 534, 548, 108 P. 499; People v. Pianezzi, 42 Cal.App.2d 270, 278, 108 P.2d 685.

(3) Other questions discussed by the parties involve, principally, the sufficiency of the evidence to support certain other findings.

No purpose would be served for us to discuss those questions in view of the need for a new trial which might develop a quite different set of facts, findings and conclusions.

[5] (4) Upon a new trial, if one is had, the parties and the court might want to consider the question whether the pleadings present an alleged usurpation of the corporate opportunity, even though not expressly so labelled. That doctrine we find well expressed in Hall v. Dekker, 45 Cal.App.2d 783, 786–787, 115 P.2d 15, 17:

"It is the established law that a director or officer of a corporation may not enter into a competing enterprise which cripples or injures the business of the corporation of which he is an officer or director (Red Top Cab Co. v. Hanchett, D.C., 48 F.2d 236, 238; Hussong Dyeing Mach. Co. v. Morris, N.J., ch. 89 A. 249, 250). Vice Chancellor Leaming thus accurately states the rule in Hussong Dyeing Mach. Co. v. Morris, supra, at page 250 of 89 A. '* * * It was not lawfully possible for the defendant, while a director and treasurer of complainant corporation, to enter into an opposition business in his own behalf of such a nature that it would cripple or injure the corporation that he represented, * * *.'" v.

Justin P. DOZIER, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 23265.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 9, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 1, 1959.

Proceeding on petition by mother for modification of child custody provision of divorce decree to permit her to take the child to live with her in Connecticut. From an order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Elmer D. Doyle, J., modifying the decree as requested, the father appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that where eight-year-old son's asthmatic and pneumonia attacks would be less frequent and less serious in California's drier climate than in Connecticut and boy was subject to recurrent attacks when he lived in New York and had undergone three serious attacks year before he came to California and son had greatly benefited from California's climate and all doctors agreed that it would be better for him to remain in California, and there was a close and friendly relationship between child and his father, and mother's reason for wanting to return to Connecticut was to live near her family and have her son share their affection, welfare of child would not be served by permitting his removal by mother from California.

Order reversed.

1. Divorce ⇐296, 312.6(5)

Trial court is given wide discretion in the fixing of custody of child in divorce proceeding and its determination will not be disturbed upon appeal in absence of a manifest showing of abuse, but in exercise of its discretion in custody proceedings, trial court must be guided primarily by welfare and interests of child.

2. Divorce ⇐300

Where eight-year-old son's asthmatic and pneumonia attacks would be less frequent and less serious in California's drier climate than in Connecticut and boy was subject to recurrent attacks when he lived in New York and had undergone three serious attacks year before he came to California and son had greatly benefited from California's climate and all doctors agreed that it would be better for him to remain in California, and there was a close and friendly relationship between child and his father, and mother's reason for wanting to return to Connecticut was to live near her family and have her son share their affection, welfare of child would not be served by permitting his removal by mother from California. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 213.

3. Divorce ⇐300

Under ordinary circumstances, a mother, who has been awarded custody of child in divorce proceeding, should be permitted to move about freely and any unnecessary or arbitrary restriction on her residence is unreasonable, and fact that by child's removal from state father may be deprived of his visitation rights is generally not alone sufficient to justify restraint on mother's free movement unless the latter is inconsistent with welfare of child. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 213.

4. Divorce ⇐303(2)

In proceeding on petition by mother for modification of child custody provision of divorce decree to permit her to take child out of state and move to Connecticut where her relatives lived, questions concerning reason husband and wife came to California from New York, who was responsible for separation, whether wife was properly supported before court order, and circumstances surrounding stipulation to an order prohibiting removal of son by one spouse from state without consent of other spouse, were immaterial.

5. Divorce ⇐303(1)

Trial court has continuing jurisdiction of matter of custody of the child in divorce proceeding.

Walter H. Young, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hahn, Ross & Saunders, Los Angeles, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

An interlocutory judgment of divorce was granted after a default hearing, entered March 8, 1957. The parties stipulated that plaintiff have custody of the eight-year-old boy, Nathan, with certain visitation rights reserved to defendant; and that a mutual restraining order preventing Nathan's removal from the state without prior court order or written consent of the other spouse be entered, all of which became a part of the interlocutory decree.

The undisputed facts disclose that plaintiff and defendant had lived with the child in New York and moved to California in September, 1954, where they separated in July, 1956. Since the separation, the child has lived with plaintiff in Los Angeles and is now being regularly supported by defendant, who pays $100 per month for that purpose.

Although plaintiff obtained the divorce, no provision for alimony appears in the decree. However, she is able to work, employable and has engaged in general office work. She desires to go to Connecticut to be near her family, where she believes she can obtain employment. She plans to live with her mother who will take care of the boy while she works.

Approximately five months after the entry of the interlocutory decree, plaintiff filed an Order to Show Cause asking the lower court to modify the interlocutory judgment of divorce by dissolving the restraining order preventing her from taking the child out of the state, on the ground: "(A)ffiant desires to move with said minor child to Stamford or Westport, Connecticut. That affiant's family resides in said State whereas affiant has no family in California." The matter was heard before a Commissioner, and pursuant to his findings of fact and recommendations that "the best interest of the child will be promoted by granting the relief sought by the plaintiff" the trial court entered its order permitting plaintiff to remove the child from California to live in Connecticut subject to certain medical examinations every four months, and physical possession of the child by defendant in July and August of each year. Exceptions to the findings and recommendation of the Commissioner were denied and it is from this order defendant appeals.

Appellant contends that the trial court abused its discretion in that it gave little or no consideration to the rights and welfare of the child but was primarily concerned with the desire of plaintiff to move to a state in which her mother and other relatives live.

[1] As pointed out by respondent, the lower court is given a wide discretion in matters of this kind, and its determination will not be disturbed upon appeal in the absence of a manifest showing of abuse. Gudelj v. Gudelj, 41 Cal.2d 202, 259 P.2d 656; Gantner v. Gantner, 39 Cal.2d 272, 246 P.2d 923; Taber v. Taber, 209 Cal. 755, 290 P. 36. However, in the exercise of its discretion in custody proceedings, it is likewise clear that the trial court must be guided primarily by the welfare and best interests of the child. Gudelj v. Gudelj, 41 Cal.2d 202, 259 P.2d 656; Ward v. Ward, 150 Cal.App.2d 438, 309 P.2d 965; Shea v. Shea, 100 Cal.App.2d 60, 223 P.2d 32.

[2] The record before us reveals, on the one hand, a plan of plaintiff to live with her relatives in Connecticut; and on the other, a child 8½ years old, subject to severe asthmatic attacks and pneumonia, whose health will be further endangered if taken to the eastern climate, and a close association between the boy and his father. The evidence shows no real compelling cause for plaintiff's anticipated move. She is as employable here as in Connecticut; defendant has monthly paid adequate support for the child; plaintiff is apparently in good health; she is in no financial stress and has no reason for making the move other than to be near her mother and relatives.

Plaintiff was the only witness in support of her application for modification. From her testimony, it is obvious that basically she wants to move to Connecticut because she is now alone, has no relatives in California and her mother, brothers and sisters live at or near Stamford. Her family is very close, all willing to help each other and she plans to live with her 72 year old mother who will care for the child while she works. The mother lives in a two-bedroom apartment with plaintiff's bachelor brother of 42, with whom the boy will sleep. Her two sisters will also be available to help care for the boy if necessary, and he will have the advantage of the companionship of cousins near his own age. Plaintiff has been in California since 1954 and has only a distant cousin here. At the time of the divorce plaintiff was doing general office work but the position she held was terminated. She believes she can obtain more lucrative employment of the same kind in Connecticut although she now has nothing more than the promise of an interview. When asked how the move to Connecticut would be for the best interest of the boy she answered that her relatives could provide a "very, very close family tie which I feel the boy is very much in need of." Defense counsel then asked the question, "And the main reason you want to make this move is so you can be near your family?" to which she responded: "To make it better for my son and myself, yes." In the following part of her deposition, which was read into evidence, she was again asked the same question to which she replied: "So I can be near my family and so the youngster will know the family. Q. Is there any other reason why you want to make that move? A. That is the main reason."

However, in opposition to plaintiff's application, the uncontradicted testimony of the boy's doctor and his father reveals a heretofore undisclosed serious circumstance concerning the child. Dr. John G. Thom, physician and M.D., familiar with winter conditions on the east coast, testified, without contradiction or impeachment, to the present state of the child's health and his opinion concerning the effect thereon of the anticipated move. The boy has been Dr. Thom's patient since March 10, 1955, at which time he was treated for bronchial asthma. To aid him in his treatment, the doctor requested and received reports from the child's doctors in New York. He last examined Nathan on February 1, 1957, and again on September 9, 1957, and found him still susceptible to bronchial pneumonia or infection and asthmatic attacks. He testified that each time the boy develops a respiratory infection it immediately goes to his lungs and he is much better off in the climate here than in the midwest or the east; and from "the history I have before me of all the repeated attacks he had there and the relative infrequency of the attacks he had here, it would be much better to have him here. I think it would be definitely detrimental to return to the east coast or the middle west." Dr. Thom was asked, "Do you have an opinion as to whether this child is susceptible to bronchial pneumonia or infection" to which he answered, "Yes, he is, still."

The history of the child's bronchial and lung condition obtained by Dr. Thom from Drs. Worthington and Blauner and the Presbyterian Hospital in New York reveals "(T)he respiratory infection and bronchial asthma would frequently end up with pneumonia and that is what was the condition in New York City." In January, 1956, Dr. Thom took out the boy's tonsils, but he testified they had nothing to do with bronchial asthma and he has been sick several times since. He further testified that now the child is in "pretty good health" and has been improving all along; that the last respiratory infection was in April, 1956. On September 13, 1957, Dr. Blauner, one of the boy's New York doctors, wrote to Dr. Thom as follows: "Nathan had recurrent bouts of pneumonia. I strongly recommend that Nathan stay in a warmer and drier climate. I would not recommend the New York climate for him." Counsel for plaintiff moved to strike this statement, but the record shows no disposition of the motion and it remains part of the evidence. The Commissioner then questioned Dr. Thom who testified the boy still has bronchial asthma and will always have it and, although it can be controlled, it cannot be cured; that the last two attacks kept Nathan out of school for a week or two at a time; that an asthmatic attack is brought on by respiratory infection and although antibiotics prevent pneumonia they do not prevent the attacks; that in California they were milder and fewer, those in the east having been more frequent, one the first year, two the second and three the year before he came to California, all having been followed by pneumonia; and that if the child is taken to the east coast there is a likelihood of a recurrence of pneumonia. To this last, an objection was interposed but again no ruling was made thereon.

Defendant, a teacher employed by the Los Angeles City School system, testified in connection with his son's health and his relationship with the boy. He said that in New York the boy's attacks were so frequent he was often unable to retain his strength between them; in February, 1954, he was out of school for two weeks, and in April, 1954, two or three weeks. In 1953 and 1954 he had repeated attacks of asthma and bronchial pneumonia, finally resulting in a bronchoscope examination. Drs. Blauner, Evans and Baker, who treated the boy and examined his X-rays, told defendant he should be taken to a drier climate; and since his move to California, Nathan has steadily improved in health. When plaintiff obtained the divorce, defendant insisted on the restraining order to prevent the boy's removal from California.

As to the close association with his son, defendant testified that he visited Nathan every other weekend and took him to dinner one night a week on alternate weeks, and when his son is with him they always spend their time together; that they have planned trips of an educational nature such as to Wilmington, Marineland, museums, etc., and in August took a trip to the redwoods. Nathan is enrolled in the Cub Scouts and participates in a swimming program he arranged for the boy; he is interested in machinery and is presently building a scooter. Defendant and his son enjoy a friendly relationship and are fond of each other and since he is approaching adolescence, the father believes it is important for the boy to have this close association with him.

Although plaintiff, in testifying on behalf of her application, did not mention her son's health, she did so on rebuttal and stated the boy has been very healthy and normal and that a change took place in his physical condition after the tonsillectomy, although he has had two colds last winter and had to remain home from school.

[3] Section 213, Civil Code, provides: "A parent entitled to the custody of a child has a right to change his residence, subject to the power of the proper Court to restrain a removal which would prejudice the rights or welfare of the child." Heinz v. Heinz, 68 Cal.App.2d 713, 157 P.2d 660; Luck v. Luck, 92 Cal. 653, 28 P. 787. Although plaintiff has always had physical custody of the child, at the divorce hearing she voluntarily agreed to be bound by the order preventing her from taking the boy out of California. There is a conflict in the evidence as to exactly what was said, but it is clear that the day after the divorce was granted, plaintiff called defendant and indicated she expected at some time in the future to take the child to live with her family in Connecticut. Under ordinary circumstances, a mother having custody of a child should be permitted to move about freely, and any unnecessary or arbitrary restriction on her residence is unreasonable. The fact that by the child's removal from the state the father may be deprived of his visitation rights is generally not alone sufficient to justify restraint on the mother's free movement unless the latter is inconsistent with the welfare of the child. Ward v. Ward, 150 Cal.App.2d 438, 309 P.2d 965; Shea v. Shea, 100 Cal.App.2d 60, 223 P.2d 32.

Considering first the cause of plaintiff's proposed move, the record is bare of a more compelling reason than that plaintiff wants to live near her family and have her son share their affection. The evidence shows no real financial, employment, educational, health, or housing consideration involved in plaintiff's proposed move; and indeed, had not the father advised the court of his son's serious health problem, we would not have known the probable danger involved in such a move. We are at a loss to understand the mother's failure to first mention this all-important consideration. We have thoroughly searched the record before us and cannot see how the extensive unimpeached and uncontradicted testimony of Dr. Thom, the boy's present doctor, can be ignored. Both he and the New York doctors claim the child's asthmatic and pneumonia attacks will be less frequent and less serious in California's drier climate. The boy was subject to recurrent attacks in New York, and the year before he came to California he had undergone three serious ones. It is apparent from all who testified, including plaintiff, that Nathan has greatly benefitted from California's climate, has gotten stronger and is now a fairly healthy boy. His improved health is no doubt due to the temperate climate and the fact he is growing older. All of the doctors agree it would be better for the boy to remain in California, and all recommend he should not be returned to the east. This consideration, together with the close and friendly relationship between the child and his father, as compared with the mere desire of plaintiff to live with her mother and to acquaint the boy with her mother's relatives, leads us to conclude that the substantial evidence in this case overwhelmingly supports the obvious fact that the welfare of the child would not be served by permitting his removal at this time from a climate in which he is now doing well physically.

In addition—the defendant is a father truly interested in the welfare of his son, faithful in supporting the boy and willing and able to spend as much time with him as the court order permits. Much could be said on the point of depriving a boy 8½ years of age of an affectionate and interested father in favor of his mother's relatives who have not seen the child for three years and who know little of him.

There is here no question of unfitness of either parent and unquestionably a child of Nathan's age should have the care of his mother. This no one seeks to alter. Also it must be recognized that ordinarily the one who has custody has the right to live with the child wherever he or she chooses, but the great weight of the evidence in the case at bar, including the uncontradicted testimony relating to the boy's health and his close relationship with his father, in the absence of a more compelling reason for plaintiff's move than her personal convenience and the boy's benefit of her family's association, far from justifies a modification of the order preventing Nathan's removal from California, to which order both parties agreed not six months before. The substantial evidence in this case supports the conclusion that the detriment to the child's health and welfare which is likely to result from his return to the east, and the deprivation of his father's association greatly outweighs any advantage to the boy or his mother of being near her family.

Any argument that a medical examination of the boy every four months to advise defendant whether his son's health is in danger would be of benefit to the child is unrealistic and of little real protection to him for the reason that, due to the inclement eastern weather, his age, his present susceptibility to both asthmatic attacks and bronchial pneumonia or infection, and the fact that each time he develops a respiratory infection it immediately goes to his lungs, there would be little advance notice of any illness; and if under such circumstances defendant must bring an application to modify the custody order to return the boy to California and wait the necessary time for hearing and possible appeal, the child's health could be severely damaged. We conclude that the trial court abused its discretion in modifying the interlocutory judgment.

[4] We agree with respondent that questions concerning the reason the parties came to California in 1954, who was responsible for the separation and whether plaintiff was properly supported before the court order, and the circumstances surrounding stipulation to the restraining order, are immaterial to the issues here on appeal.

[5] The trial court has continuing jurisdiction of the matter of custody and in the future, when the boy is older, stronger, and better able to withstand the eastern climate, if circumstances arise justifying the move, the court may, on proper application, permit his removal. Ward v. Ward, 150 Cal.App.2d 438, 309 P.2d 965; Shea v. Shea, 100 Cal.App.2d 60, 223 P.2d 32.

For the foregoing reasons the order is reversed.

v.

Guilford Vance WHITE, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6320.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 11, 1959.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Mark Brandler, J., of unlawfully possessing heroin, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that where police officers, after receipt of communication from informant that resident of house used and sold marijuana, knocked on door and announced they were police officers and there was no reply from within but they heard walking noises and opened unlocked screen door and remained outside and observed woman acting in such manner that the officers could reasonably believe before entering that she was retreating and acting furtively to try to conceal evidence of public offense, entering of house by officers and going to room which she entered and observing defendant there with the heroin was reasonable search, apart from communication from the informant and trial court properly refused to require the officers to disclose name of the informant at trial.

Affirmed.

1. Searches and Seizures ⇐7(1)

Where police officers knocked on door and announced they were police officers, and there was no reply from within but they heard walking noises, opening unlocked screen door and remaining outside was not unreasonable search.

2. Searches and Seizures ⇐7(20)

Where police officers, after receipt of communication from informant that resident of house used and sold marijuana, arrived at the house and knocked on unlocked screen door, announcing they were police officers, and there was no reply from within but the officers heard walking noises, and the officers opened the door but remained outside and observed woman acting in such manner that the officers could reasonably believe before entering that she was retreating and acting furtively to try to conceal evidence of public offense, entering of house by the officers and going to room which she entered and observing defendant there with heroin, was not unreasonable search.

3. Witnesses ⇐216

Where police officers, after receipt of communication from informant that resident of house used and sold marijuana, arrived at house and knocked, announcing they were police officers and upon receiving no answer, opened unlocked door and saw woman acting in such manner that they could reasonably conclude that she was trying to conceal evidence of public offense, and the officers followed her and observed defendant with heroin, the officers had sufficient reason to make the search apart from the informant's communication, and the trial court properly refused to require the officers to disclose the name of the informant at trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881.

Harry Weiss, Los Angeles, under appointment by the District Court of Appeal, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant White and one Wright were accused, in count 1, with unlawfully possessing heroin; and, in count 2, with unlawfully possessing marijuana. In a nonjury trial, White was convicted on count 1, and was acquitted on count 2. (Wright died prior to the trial.) White was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. No finding was made regarding an allegation in the information that White had been previously convicted of violating section 11721 of the Health and Safety Code, a misdemeanor (being addicted to unlawful use of narcotics). He appeals from the judgment and "the Court's order."

Appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to require the prosecution to disclose the name of an informant.

On October 18, 1957, about noon, Officers Cain and Campillo, received information from a confidential informant that one Wright, who resided at a certain address in Los Angeles, used and sold marijuana, that the marijuana would be in the house, and the screen doors were usually hooked with two or three latches. Officer Cain had known the informant about two years, had found on previous occasions that information furnished by the informant was reliable. For a period of time prior to the arrest herein, the officers observed the residence at said address. About 2:45 p. m. of said October 18, they went to the side door of the house and said, in a "medium" loud voice, "Police officers"; and they heard a "walking" noise inside the house. At that time the screen door, which was not latched or hooked, "was opened" [1] and they observed a female person, who was moving very fast —walking hurriedly, enter a doorway of a room in the house. At that time the officers entered the house and went to the bathroom. While the officers were standing in the doorway to the bathroom (the doorway between the dining area and the bathroom), another door to the bathroom (a door between a front bedroom and the bathroom) was opened, and appellant White was in that doorway, and in his hand there were several "balloons" of mixed colors. Officer Campillo told appellant to hand the "balloons" to him (officer). Thereupon appellant handed to him eight "balloons" which contained white powder. Then the officers took appellant and Wright into the front bedroom (adjoining the bathroom). In that bedroom, the officers found five other "balloons" and a measuring spoon on top of a dresser. The spoon contained white powder. Appellant and Wright were arrested. Officer Cain testified that, while the articles were being removed from the dresser, appellant said that he came to the address about thirty or forty minutes before the officers came there, that he brought the contents of the balloons to the house, and that it was heroin. The officers found a jar of marijuana on the porch at that place. Officer Cain testified that Wright said that the marijuana was his property.

The white powder in the "balloons" and the spoon was heroin.

Appellant testified that he arrived at the address (Wright's home) about five minutes before the arrest; he did not bring the "balloons" there; they did not belong to him; after he entered the house he went into the bedroom, and talked with Wright; suddenly Wright said, "Here, take these"; then Wright handed the "balloons" to him and told him to go toward the bathroom; he (appellant) was confused; the police were there immediately; appellant did not tell the officer that the heroin belonged to him (appellant); he did not tell them that he brought the "stuff" there; while he was at the police station, the officers said that he (White) had stated that the heroin belonged to him; he replied that they had him "mixed up" with Wright, who had said that it belonged to him (Wright).

Officer Campillo testified (on rebuttal) that, at the time of the arrest, the appellant was asked about the "balloons" which he had handed to Officer Cain; appellant replied, "[T]hat is all I have"; appellant also said he had been in the house about half an hour.

On cross-examination of Officer Cain, he was asked to state the name of the informant. He replied that he believed that the public interest would suffer if he disclosed the name, and he preferred to have the privilege, under section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure, not to answer the question. The objection was sustained.

1. The record does not disclose who opened the door, but it will be assumed that the officers opened it.

The arrest and search were made without a warrant.

When the heroin was offered in evidence, appellant objected to the offer on the ground that the heroin was obtained as a result of illegal search and seizure. The objection was overruled. Thereafter, appellant made a motion to suppress "the evidence" on the ground that there was no probable cause for entering the house and making the arrest and search. The motion was denied.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that since the court did not require the disclosure of the name of the informant, appellant was deprived of the opportunity of presenting impeaching testimony regarding the search and seizure. He asserts further that the heroin was improperly received in evidence in that it was obtained as a result of unlawful search and seizure. The officers went to the door of the house as a result of having received information from the informant. The informant did not accompany them. While they were outside the screen door, and immediately after they had announced they were police officers, they heard a "walking" noise inside the house. Then the officers opened the unlocked screen door and at that time, while they were outside the house, they observed a woman therein, who was walking hurriedly —moving very fast, go into another room. Then the officers entered the house and apprehended appellant while he, with "balloons" of heroin in his hand, was entering the bathroom. It thus appears that the informant did not participate in the acts of searching the house, and that the officers made an independent investigation. In Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, at page 818, 330 P.2d 39, 43, it was said that the effect of the requirement of disclosure of the name of the informer "is to compel independent investigations [by the prosecution] to verify information given by an informer or to uncover other facts that establish reasonable cause to make an arrest or search. Such a practice would ordinarily make it unnecessary to rely on the communications from the informer to establish reasonable cause." Under the circumstances in the present case, where there was no response to the announcement by the officers that they were police officers, and where immediately after the announcement they heard a "walking" noise within the house, the act of the officers in merely opening the unlocked screen door, and remaining outside, did not constitute an unreasonable search. While the screen door was open, and before the officers entered the house, they observed a woman therein who was acting in such a manner that the officers could reasonably have believed, before they entered the house, that the woman was retreating and acting furtively in an attempt to quickly conceal evidence of a public offense. Under the circumstances here, the acts of the officers in entering the house, going to the room which the woman had entered, and observing appellant therein with heroin in his hand, did not constitute an unreasonable search.

In People v. Maddox, 46 Cal.2d 301, at page 306, 294 P.2d 6, 9, it was said: "When, as in this case, he [officer] has reasonable grounds to believe a felony is being committed and hears retreating footsteps, the conclusion that his peril would be increased or that the felon would escape if he demanded entrance and explained his purpose, is not unreasonable."

In People v. Steinberg, 148 Cal.App.2d 855, 307 P.2d 634, the officer had received information from an informant that the defendant was engaged in bookmaking. In that case the officer, using field glasses, watched defendant use a telephone in a room. Then the officer went to the door of the room, looked through a glass door, and said: "Police officers." At that time the officer saw the defendant rise from a desk and move speedily away. Thereupon the officer forced entrance to the room. It was held therein that there was reasonable cause for the arrest and search.

[3] In Priestly v. Superior Court, supra, 50 Cal.2d 812, at pages 818–819, 330 P.2d 39, it was held that if the prosecution relies on communications from an informer to show reasonable cause, it is essential to a fair trial that the name of the informer be disclosed; and if the prosecution refuses to disclose the name, the court should, on proper motion of the defendant, strike the testimony as to communications from the informer. In the present case, the prosecution did not rely on communications from the informant to show reasonable cause for the search. There was sufficient evidence herein, apart from the informant's communication, to show reasonable cause. The court did not err in refusing to require disclosure of the name of the informant.

As above indicated, the notice of appeal states that the appeal is from the judgment and "the Court's order." It will be assumed that the order referred to is the order denying the motion for a new trial. (At the end of appellant's opening brief he refers to the judgment and the order denying a motion for a new trial.)

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

Action for damage suffered in traffic accident. From an order of the Superior Court, Yuba County, Warren Steel, J., granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial upon all statutory grounds, the defendant appealed and the plaintiffs cross-appealed from the judgment entered upon verdict for defendant. The Supreme Court, Van Dyke, P. J., held that minute order stating that court had taken motion for new trial under advisement and had duly considered the evidence sufficiently disclosed that basis of order granting a new trial included court's determination that it ought to be granted upon ground of insufficiency of the evidence.

Order affirmed and plaintiffs' appeal dismissed.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This action was brought by plaintiffs to recover for damage suffered in a traffic accident. Trial to a jury resulted in a defense verdict. Plaintiffs moved for a new trial upon all statutory grounds. A new trial was granted and defendant appeals.

Plaintiffs have cross-appealed from the judgment entered upon the verdict.

[1] After submission of the motion for a new trial, the court filed a document entitled "Memo on Motion for a New Trial" wherein the court stated:

> "Plaintiffs have filed herein their Motion for New Trial upon all of the statutory grounds and in particular have devoted much of their argument to claimed misconduct upon the part of defense counsel while arguing the case to the jury wherein reference was specifically made to the fact that the Defendants carried liability insurance in a specified amount. It is unfortunate that the subject of insurance crept into the case at all and no doubt it was due, to some extent at least, to the sparring back and forth between counsel in their arguments.
>
> "However, this injected issue, standing alone, would not appear to be too important although it could have had some effect with the jury, but entirely separate and apart therefrom arises in the Court's mind a more serious question as to the weight, sufficiency and probative force of the evidence, including the evidentiary value of the physical facts, to justify the verdict which the jury returned.
>
> "Under such circumstances, it becomes the duty of the Court to set aside such verdict and grant a new trial.
>
> "Therefore, the motion will be granted, and counsel may prepare an order accordingly."

On the day the foregoing document was filed, the clerk entered the following in his minutes:

> "Plaintiffs' motion for a new trial in the above entitled action having been heretofore argued, submitted and by the Court taken under advisement and now the Court having duly considered the evidence and being fully advised in the premises finds [files] its opinion and ordered that said motion for a new trial be, and the same hereby is granted."

Appellant contends, first, that under the provisions of Section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure it cannot be said the court granted the new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence and, second, that the record will not support the granting of a new trial upon any other ground.

Section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

> "When a new trial is granted, on all or part of the issues, upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict or decision, the order shall so specify this in writing and shall be filed with the clerk within ten days after the motion is granted; otherwise, on appeal from such order it will be conclusively presumed that the order was not based upon that ground."

We think the rule which must govern the decision on this appeal is well stated in Legg v. Mutual Benefit Health & Accident of Omaha, 136 Cal.App.2d 887, 891, 289 P.2d 550, 552, 290 P.2d 87:

> "It is well settled that when the order provides simply that a new trial is granted, such order is a general one and does not include insufficiency of the evidence * * * 'The statute,' however, 'does not require that the order specify insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict in any particular words or language. If the language used is susceptible of being interpreted as tantamount to granting a new trial on account of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, or if it may be inferred from the language used that such was the ground upon which the order was made, it is uniformly held to have been based upon that ground. Where the nature of the order itself necessarily implies that the trial court deemed it necessary to reexamine the facts, a statement in the order that the evidence is insufficient is not essential. When the order granting the motion goes beyond a mere general order (a new trial is granted) and uses any language that reasonably can be construed as including insufficiency of the evidence, the language will be interpreted as including that ground.'"

[2] The language used in the minute order sufficiently indicates that the new trial was granted upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence. It clearly recites that the court, in determining the motion, had considered the evidence. It went well beyond the general order and we think sufficiently disclosed that the basis of the order granting a new trial included the court's determination that it ought to be granted upon the ground of insufficiency of evidence. If there be any doubt as to the proper interpretation of the language of the minute order as entered by the clerk, the document signed and filed by the court and referred to in the minute order may be referred to for purpose of interpretation. See City of Daly City v. Smith, 110 Cal.App.2d 524, 529, 243 P.2d 46; People v. One 1951 Ford Sedan, 122 Cal.App.2d 680, 683, 265 P.2d 176. What is said in that document could hardly be more plain to the point that the trial court was ordering a new trial upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. Said the court in that document: "Entirely separate and apart therefrom arises in the Court's mind a more serious question as to the weight, sufficiency and probative force of the evidence, including the evidentiary value of the physical facts, to justify the verdict which the jury returned." This language is clearly the origin of the language used by the clerk in entering the minute order wherein he recites that the court has duly considered the evidence.

The record on appeal shows that the evidence was much in conflict. The record clearly affords support for an order granting a new trial upon the insufficiency of the evidence.

[3] For the reasons given the order appealed from is affirmed. Since the affirmance of the order granting a new trial will automatically vacate the judgment from which respondents have appealed, that appeal is dismissed. See Lee v. Cranford, 107 Cal.App.2d 677, 681–682, 237 P.2d 986.

v.

CITY OF SAN MATEO, a municipal corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 18104.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 5, 1959.

Action by automobile driver and passengers against city for personal injuries suffered in intersectional collision with truck. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, Aylett R. Cotton, J., granted city's motion for summary judgment and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that where suit was based upon assertion that corner stop sign, which would have required automobile driver to stop, was obscured by tree and thus constituted dangerous condition of public property and city, filed affidavit averring that at or before accident there was no tree growing in or forming part of public property and that only trees growing in the vicinity were situated on private property and plaintiffs' counter-affidavit alleged that stop sign was obscured by tree rooted not far from stop sign, affidavits did not negate the existence of triable issue of fact.

Judgment reversed.

1. Judgment ⇐186

Validity of summary judgment for city on ground that tree obscuring stop sign was situated on private property and that therefore obscured sign did not constitute defective condition of public property is to be determined by the sufficiency of affidavits considered upon such motion and deficiencies in affidavits could not be remedied by resort to controverted allegations of the pleadings. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 437c; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇐847

Stop signs are "public property" within statute providing that a local agency is liable for injuries resulting from the dangerous or defective conditions of public property. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Public Property".

3. Municipal Corporations ⇐723

City's liability may be based upon factors other than structural or mechanical defects.

4. Automobiles ⇐279

A municipality is not liable for failure to install a boulevard stop sign or to direct traffic at an intersection, but once a stop sign is installed, city's failure to maintain it properly, in absence of determination that the protected street is no longer a through or arterial highway, creates an actionable condition of public property.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇐857

Placing of a stop sign in a location so that private property wholly obscures it from the view of those it is intended to warn, presents a fact question as to whether a dangerous or defective condition of public property existed. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐863

On appeal from summary judgment the District Court of Appeal is limited to the facts shown by the affidavits and is to determine only whether the facts so shown give rise to a triable issue. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c; West's Ann. Gov.Code, § 53051.

7. Judgment ⇐181(4)

Summary judgment procedure is drastic and should be used with caution.

8. Judgment ⇐185.3(21)

Where automobile driver and passengers' suit against city for personal injuries as result of intersectional collision with truck was based upon assertion that corner stop sign, which would have required automobile driver to stop, was obscured by tree and thus dangerous condition of public property was created, and city, on motion for summary judgment, filed affidavit averring that on or before accident there was no tree growing in or forming part of any public property and that only trees growing in the vicinity were situated on private property and plaintiffs' counteraffidavit alleged that stop sign was obscured by tree rooted not far from stop sign, affidavits did not negate existence of triable issue of fact. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

Jack H. Werchick, San Francisco, for appellants.

Ropers & Majeski, Redwood City, for respondent.

DRAPER, Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from summary judgment (Code Civ.Proc. § 437c) in favor of defendant city. The action seeks damages for personal injuries allegedly suffered in the collision of an automobile driven by plaintiff Nicolas Dudum with a truck driven by defendant Goin and owned by him and other defendants. Plaintiff Nicolas, with the other plaintiffs as passengers, drove east on Second Avenue in San Mateo. The truck was travelling south on Delaware Street, and the vehicles collided in the intersection of these two streets. Plaintiffs' claim against defendant city is based upon the assertion that the stop sign at the southwest corner of the intersection—the sign which would require plaintiffs' car to stop—was obscured by a tree, thus constituting a dangerous or defective condition of public property (Government Code, § 53051), which, with the concurring negligence of defendant Goin, proximately caused the collision and the resulting injury to the three plaintiffs.

[1] Validity of the summary judgment is to be determined by the sufficiency of the affidavits considered upon the motion (McComsey v. Leaf, 36 Cal.App.2d 132, 133, 97 P.2d 242), and deficiencies in the affidavits cannot be remedied by resort to controverted allegations of the pleadings (Kimber v. Jones, 122 Cal.App.2d 914, 265 P.2d 922; Coyne v. Krempels, 36 Cal.2d 257, 223 P.2d 244).

Defendant city filed the affidavit of its city engineer averring that at or before the accident there was no tree growing in or forming any part of any public property at the southwest corner of this intersection, and that the only trees growing in the vicinity of the corner are situated on private property. Plaintiffs' counter-affidavit alleges that the stop sign "was obscured by the branches and foliage of a tree that was rooted not far from the stop sign." Looking to the omissions as well as the allegations of the two affidavits, we must conclude that the sign was in fact obscured by branches and foliage of a tree, but that the obscuring tree was located upon private property. Whether the branches of this privately-owned tree overhung public property cannot be determined.

[2] Stop signs are "public property" within the meaning of Government Code, § 53051. Irvin v. Padelford, 127 Cal.App. 2d 135, 273 P.2d 539; Ervin v. City of Los Angeles, 117 Cal.App.2d 303, 256 P. 2d 25; Rose v. County of Orange, 94 Cal. App.2d 688, 211 P.2d 45. Respondent, however, contends that the dangerous or defective condition must be found in the public property itself. It is true that in Ervin the stop sign fell and struck a pedestrian, in Rose it had fallen and had been lying on the ground for some days, and in other traffic signal cases (Silva v. County of Fresno, 63 Cal.App.2d 253, 146 P.2d 520; Bady v. Detwiler, 127 Cal.App. 2d 321, 273 P.2d 941; Hoel v. City of Los Angeles, 136 Cal.App.2d 295, 288 P.2d 989) the signal was itself defective.

[3] But the rule is clear that a city's liability under Government Code, § 53051 may be based upon factors other than structural or mechanical defects. "There can be no doubt that a dangerous or defective condition can be created by the use or general plan of operation of government operated property, as well as by a structural defect." Bauman v. City and County of San Francisco, 42 Cal.App.2d 144, 153, 108 P.2d 989, 994; see also Huff v. Compton City Grammar School Dist., 92 Cal.App. 44, 267 P. 918. In Teilhet v. County of Santa Clara, 149 Cal.App.2d 305, 308 P.2d 356, 358, this court rejected the contention that "the dangerous or defective condition contemplated by the statute must be a tangible defect and that smoke in the atmosphere over a public highway cannot constitute such a condition," and affirmed judgment against the county in favor of a driver whose automobile collided with another on the smoke-obscured highway.

[4] The rule is clear that a municipality is not liable for failure to install a boulevard stop sign (Perry v. City of Santa Monica, 130 Cal.App.2d 370, 279 P.2d 92), or to direct traffic at an intersection (Goodman v. Raposa, 151 Cal.App. 2d 830, 835, 312 P.2d 65). But once a stop sign is installed, the city's failure to maintain it properly (in the absence of determination that the protected street is no longer a through or arterial highway) creates an actionable condition of public property. Irvin v. Padelford, supra, 127 Cal.App.2d 135, 273 P.2d 539; Rose v. County of Orange, supra, 94 Cal.App.2d 688, 211 P.2d 45. In the latter case the fact that the stop sign had been lying on the ground for some days before the accident might be deemed to indicate a defective condition of its supporting standard, which of course was public property. But in Irvin, the stop sign was wholly removed because the street light pole to which it was affixed had been taken down by city employees to repair wiring. There was no showing of any defect in the stop sign. Liability was based on the fact that its total absence, when a driver on the through street was entitled to rely on its protective presence, created a dangerous condition of public property. We are unable to distinguish a sign which is wholly absent from one which is physically present but cannot be seen by those whose vehicles it is designed to stop.

[5] Respondent, however, stands upon the fact that the tree which obscured plaintiff's view of the sign grew upon private property. Even if it be conceded that concealment of the sign by public property would create a dangerous condition within the meaning of Bauman v. City and County of San Francisco, supra, 42 Cal.App.2d 144, 108 P.2d 989, the city argues that the dangerous condition resulted solely from the privately owned tree. But the affidavits may be construed to show that the tree obscures the sign only because of the location chosen for the sign by the city. The position of public property in relation to other public property, as in the juxtaposition of the sand box and the baseball area in Bauman v. City and County of San Francisco, supra, may create a dangerous condition of public property. Clearly the placing of a stop sign in a location where view of it was blocked by another item of public property, whether a light standard, another sign, or a public building, would present a like fact question as to whether a dangerous or defective condition of public property existed. Indistinguishable is a situation wherein a stop sign is so placed that private property wholly obscures it from the view of those it is intended to warn. In such situation, the placing of the stop sign in the obscured position, rather than the mere existence of the obscuring property, causes the dangerous or defective condition of the sign. The affidavits before us do not show the relative positions of sign and tree. It may well be that the choice of a slightly different location for the sign would have made it fully visible and yet have met all other requirements for the placing of a stop sign.

[6–8] We are limited to the facts shown by the affidavits (Kimber v. Jones, supra, 122 Cal.App.2d 914, 265 P.2d 922), and are to determine only whether the facts so shown give rise to a triable issue (Coyne v. Krempels, supra, 36 Cal.2d 257, 223 P.2d 244). The summary judgment procedure is drastic and should be used with caution. Eagle Oil & Refining Co. v. Prentice, 19 Cal.2d 553, 556, 122 P.2d 264. We conclude that, under the rules applicable to summary judgments, the affidavits here do not negate the existence of a triable issue of fact, and that the case must be tried rather than determined on a motion for summary judgment.

Respondent's brief suggests that there is no showing of proximate cause since plaintiff driver was not on the arterial street where, as in Irvin v. Padelford, supra, 127 Cal.App.2d 135, 273 P.2d 539, he could have relied on the assumption that he was protected by stop signs on the side streets. The issue of proximate cause is not raised by the affidavits and is therefore not before us at this time. We note, however, that concealment of the stop sign could be a proximate cause of the collision if it be shown that defendant truck driver knew of the stop sign, relied on its protection to him as a driver on the arterial street, and so acted in such reliance that his conduct and plaintiff's failure to stop, if excused by the claimed concealment of the sign, concurred as proximate causes of the collision.

In consideration of this case, we have been limited to an inquiry whether the ultimate facts which might be found from the allegations of the affidavits show the existence of any triable issue. The evidence adduced at trial may support none of the possible fact conclusions suggested in this opinion, or may warrant findings not suggested here. Our decision in no way limits the trier of the facts, but merely determines that the case cannot be disposed of on motion for summary judgment.

v.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, a municipal corporation, and Joseph Brown, Defendants and Appellants.

No. 17887.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 30, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Action for death of pedestrian struck by city's streetcar. From a judgment of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, William F. Traverso, J., defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held, inter alia, that issue of competency of streetcar operator was injected in the case by defendants and hence ordinances prohibiting inexperienced person from acting as "motorman, gripman or conductor" and defining such terms were properly admitted, and instruction concerning them was proper.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐232(2)

In action for death of plaintiffs' daughter who was struck by city's streetcar wherein when plaintiffs offered in evidence ordinance prohibiting operation of streetcar by inexperienced person, defendants' counsel stated, "that's the section we discussed, to which we object as being applicable to this case", and there had been a discussion during noon recess concerning ordinances involved, and record failed to show that judge was present at the discussion or what the discussion was, the objection that ordinance was "inapplicable" was sufficient notwithstanding grounds of objection were not clear.

2. Street Railroads ⇐113(2), 118(2)

In action for death of pedestrian struck by city's streetcar, issue of competency of streetcar operator was injected in the case by defendants and hence ordinances prohibiting inexperienced person from acting as "motorman, gripman or conductor" and defining such terms were properly admitted, and instruction concerning them was proper.

3. Street Railroads ⇐113(5)

In action for death of pedestrian struck by city's streetcar, wherein streetcar operator testified that at time of accident his speed was approximately 5 miles per hour, and that at such speed if he took his foot off deadman's control streetcar would stop in about six to eight feet and with brake application only it would stop in 8–10 feet, and streetcar went 18 feet after hitting deceased, while complaint did not allege negligence in selection of operator, jury under issue presented in determining whether operator was negligent in operation of car, was entitled to know that because of lack of training required by ordinance, operator was presumed to be incompetent.

4. Statutes ⇐233

The rule that general language in a statute shall not be construed to apply to the government or its agencies, unless expressly included by name, does not apply if application of statute would not infringe upon sovereign governmental powers.

5. Street Railroads ⇐67

Ordinances relating to operation of street railroad were not inapplicable to municipal railway because it was not specifically mentioned in the ordinances, since interpreting ordinances to apply to city in its proprietary capacity would in nowise infringe its sovereign governmental powers, and fact that since 1944 when privately owned street railway went out of business, municipal railway had been the only one to which ordinances could apply, and ordinances had never been repealed, was strong evidence that ordinances were intended to apply to the municipal railway.

6. Street Railroads ⇐118(3)

In action for death of pedestrian struck by city's streetcar, evidence justified instruction giving provision of ordinance that motorman must always, by ringing bell or striking the gong on such car, give timely warning of approach to pedestrians and others notwithstanding no persons other than deceased were in immediate vicinity of crosswalk where accident occurred, where it was a reasonable assumption that had gong been seasonably sounded deceased would not have been struck.

7. Street Railroads ⇐73

The contention that fender on streetcar required by ordinance was archaic was a matter for board of supervisors to consider, not for the courts.

8. Street Railroads ⇐118(13)

In action for death of pedestrian struck by city's streetcar, instruction incorporating the "stop, look and listen rule" applicable to railroads that tracks were a warning of danger was properly rejected.

9. Death ⇐104(2)

In action for death of pedestrian struck by city's streetcar, court properly gave instruction to effect that there was a presumption that deceased used due care and was obeying the law.

10. Street Railroads ⇐117(17)

In action for death of pedestrian struck by city's streetcar, presumption that pedestrian exercised due care was itself evidence sufficient to create a conflict with evidence produced by city, so that issue of contributory negligence was properly submitted to jury.

11. Appeal and Error ⇐1004(1)
Death ⇐97

In wrongful death cases the awarding of damages is a matter committed to the discretion and sound judgment of jury, whose conclusion will not be disturbed on appeal unless sum is so disproportionate to injury proved as to justify view that it was given under influence of passion and prejudice, or so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest at first blush passion, prejudice or corruption, or so disproportionate to injuries suffered that result reached may be said to shock the conscience.

12. Death ⇐99(1)

In determining whether amount awarded for death is excessive, although each case must be determined on its own facts, a reviewing court may consider amounts awarded in similar cases.

13. Death ⇐99(3)

Award of $26,000 for death of 17-year-old girl who was killed on her second day at college, was not excessive.

Dion R. Holm, City Atty., Donald J. Kropp, Deputy City Atty., San Francisco, for appellants.

Appel, Liebermann & Leonard, Vladimir Vucinich, San Francisco, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

Defendants appeal from a judgment entered after jury verdict, awarding plaintiffs $26,000 for the wrongful death of their daughter as a result of being struck by defendants' streetcar.

Questions Presented

1. Admissibility of sections 51, 52, 21 and 62, Municipal Code.

2. Rejection of defendants' proposed instruction on tracks as a warning of danger.

3. Was deceased contributorily negligent as a matter of law?

4. Was the verdict excessive?

Facts

The accident occurred at the "K" line terminal owned by the San Francisco Municipal Railway adjacent to San Francisco City College. There the tracks form a loop of several hundred feet. There is a waiting station located there. The westerly section of the tracks parallel the college campus and is separated therefrom by a fence, 10 feet from the nearest rail. An asphalt pathway approximately 6 feet wide extends from the campus through a gate in the fence across the streetcar tracks to the terminal. Painted on the pathway is the word "Danger." The pathway is used for access to the terminal and on through to Ocean Avenue. The car was a one-man operated streetcar known as a streamliner. It overhangs the rails on each side 18–20 inches. The operator sits up front on the left hand side.

Lenore Dropo, the deceased, was in her second day at the college. Mrs. Edna Scholz testified that she was sitting in the right front seat of the car, that she saw Lenore outside the campus gate walking on the pathway looking straight ahead. "[S]he walked and walked and I hollered and that's it." Lenore took 7 or 8 steps before she was hit. No one else saw her until she was about a step and a half from clearing the tracks, where she was struck by the left front portion of the streetcar, which was then going 4–5 miles per hour. She was thrown 20 feet forward. Her body was found approximately one foot beyond the far rail. The car traveled 18 feet after the brakes were applied. The operator estimated that at 5 miles per hour the streetcar would stop within 8–10 feet after the application of the brakes. He testified that as he approached the pathway he saw no one in the vicinity; that he applied his brakes when he was a slight distance from the gate because he was approaching the gateway. He did not sound his gong. He looked both to his right and left within a few feet of the pathway. He first saw Lenore when "she just popped up" about 1½ feet from the right rail at which time the streetcar was already in the pathway. She was walking towards the tracks but looking away from the oncoming car. He put his brakes down to the floorboard. She was struck by the left front of the streetcar when she was a few inches from the far rail.

1. Municipal Code

During World War II the operator worked for the Market Street Railway for 2 years as an operator of a one-man streetcar. He had then received 7 days training for its operation. Since 1944 when the city took over that railway he worked as a conductor until two weeks before the accident. The "K" car and the cars of the Market Street Railway had different operating mechanisms, particularly different types of braking equipment. He had received three days of training with the Municipal Railway and had operated "K" cars for two weeks. Admitted in evidence were sections 51 and 52 of the Municipal Code. Section 51 provides: "Inexperienced platform men prohibited. It shall be unlawful for any person not having had previous experience to act as motorman, gripman or conductor on street railroad cars within the City and County of San Francisco, unless said person shall have had at least seven days' experience in such capacity in this City and County, under the instruction and guidance of a competent and experienced motorman, gripman or conductor, as the case may be * * *" Section 52 provides: "'Experienced' motormen, gripmen and conductor, defined. The term 'competent and experienced motorman, gripman, or conductor' shall be defined to mean one who has had seven days' experience as expressed in Section 51 of this article, and any person not having had such experience shall be deemed to be incompetent and inexperienced."

In its instructions the court read to the jury said sections 51 and 52 (as well as section 21 (requiring motormen to ring bell or sound gong) and section 62 (requiring cars to be equipped with fenders).) The court then said: "Conduct which is in violation of the ordinances of the City and County of San Francisco respecting the ringing of streetcar bells or gongs, just read to you, constitutes in itself negligence. * * * In this connection, you may assume that a person of ordinary prudence will reasonably endeavor to obey the law * * To prove that a violation of an ordinance, such as that charged in this case, was excusable and justifiable to overcome the presumption of negligence, the evidence must support a finding that the violation resulted from causes or things beyond the control of the person charged with the violation. * * * However, in this action a violation of law or of an ordinance or of any of the ordinances or sections is of no consequence unless it was a proximate cause of or contributed as a proximate cause to an injury found by you to have been sustained or suffered by the decedent." (Emphasis added.)

It is true that in these instructions the court, strictly speaking, only stated that a violation of the ordinance concerning bells and gongs would constitute negligence. However, a reading of them, particularly the italicized portions, would give the jury the impression that the court was referring to all the sections of the ordinance which it had read. Certainly violations of sections 51 and 52 were "charged in this case." At least, the court told the jury that to prove that the violations of sections 51 and 52 were justified defendant would have to show that the violations were due to causes beyond defendant's control. Therefore, we are required to determine whether the court erred in instructing concerning these sections.

[1, 2] Defendants objected to the introduction of these sections. The grounds of the objection, however, are not clear. When plaintiffs offered section 51 defendants' counsel stated, "that's the section we discussed, to which we object as being applicable to this case." When section 52 was offered defendants' counsel stated, "We have the objection, because that refers to 51." There had been a discussion during the noon recess concerning these sections. The record fails to show whether the judge was present at the discussion or what the discussion was. As defendants contend that under the rule of statutory construction general language in an ordinance does not apply to government or its agencies unless expressly included therein by name, the ordinance could not be held to apply to defendant city, the objection that the ordinance was "inapplicable" may have been meant to cover that contention or that the ordinance was not material to the question of negligent operation or both. We are inclined to the view that in the view of both court and counsel it covered both and therefore that it was sufficient. Pipoly v. Benson, 1942, 20 Cal.2d 366, 369, 125 P.2d 482, 147 A.L.R. 515, held that the failure to object to the admission of an invalid ordinance in evidence did not preclude objection upon appeal to an instruction based upon it. In Nosbonne v. Brill, 53 Cal.App.2d 436, 438–439, 128 P.2d 57, 58, the court stated, "each party is allowed, as a matter of law, an exception to every instruction. This last factor was also emphasized in Pipoly v. Benson, supra." However, in Hearn v. Gunther, 57 Cal.App.2d 82, 134 P.2d 3, the court held that failure to object to the admission in evidence of an ordinance did not bar the appellant from raising the invalidity of the ordinance on appeal, saying (57 Cal. App.2d at page 85, 134 P.2d at page 5): "* * * we are not precluded on appeal from reviewing the order of the court which erroneously construed the validity of the ordinance when it granted the nonsuit, where such order (granting a nonsuit) is deemed excepted to under section 647, supra. This was the effect of a portion of the decision in Pipoly v. Benson, supra."

It is very doubtful if the rule of the Pipoly case would apply to a valid ordinance, to the introduction of which in evidence no objection was made. However, we deem it unnecessary to determine that question in view of the facts (1) that we find the objection to the introduction sufficient in this case and (2) we further find that under the peculiar circumstances of this case, sections 51 and 52 were admissible for the reason that the issue of the competency of the operator was injected in the case by defendants. In the opening statement defendants' counsel stated: "* * * that Mr. Brown was a capable operator, a very capable street car man; that he had received some of his training with the old Market Street Railway, and when the City and County of San Francisco took over the Market Street Railway, he went with the Muni." The operator was called under section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, as the first witness. No objection was made to the examination by plaintiffs concerning his competency to drive defendant city's streetcar including the time of his training with defendant city. On direct examination defendants' counsel asked him how long he had operated Market Street Railway cars and his training period with that company. These facts bring the introduction of sections 51 and 52 and the instruction concerning them under the rule set forth in Megee v. Fasulis, 65 Cal.App.2d 94, at page 101, 150 P.2d 281 at page 285, where the court said concerning an instruction on intoxication: "This element of the case was placed in issue first by counsel for the defendant in his opening statement to the jury, and later was again alluded to by both parties. Defendant cannot complain of an issue which he assisted in placing in evidence. By so doing he made it a part of his defense of contributory negligence."

The competency of the motorman having been made an issue, sections 51 and 52 became relevant.

[3] The operator testified that at the time of the accident his speed was approximately 5 miles per hour as he started down the straight-a-way upon which the path is located; that at that speed if he took his foot off the deadman's control the streetcar would stop in "About six or seven or eight feet" and with brake application only it would stop in 8–10 feet. The streetcar went 18 feet after hitting the deceased. While the complaint did not allege negligence in the selection of the operator, the jury under the issue presented in determining whether the operator was negligent in the operation of the car, was entitled to know that because of lack of the training required by the ordinance, the operator was presumed to be incompetent. While, of course, there must be a causal connection between the violation and the injury (the court so instructed the jury), such connection is found here, in explanation of why the operator failed to see deceased before he did, to sound the gong, to approach a well used pathway under complete control and to stop the car in the distance he said he could stop it.

Inasmuch as the issue of the competency of the motorman was raised in the case by defendants and evidence on it introduced without objection, we deem it unnecessary to discuss cases like Corsetto v. Pacific Electric Ry., 136 Cal.App.2d 631, 289 P.2d 116, and Langford v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 729, 164 P. 398, which holds, as did the Corsetto case (136 Cal.App.2d at pages 634–635, 289 P.2d at page 118) that where the complaint contains no allegation as to negligence of the streetcar company in the training or employment of the motorman, "The great weight of authority supports the rule that in actions of this kind the competency of the person claimed to have acted negligently, or his reputation for care, is not a subject of inquiry." In none of those cases was such issue raised by the defendant nor evidence admitted without objection by the defendant. For the same reason, cases like Strandt v. Cannon, 1938, 29 Cal.App.2d 509, 85 P.2d 160 which hold erroneous instructions that the failure of an automobile driver to have a driver's license is prima facie evidence of incompetence, are not applicable here.

[4, 5] Defendants' contention that sections 51, 52, 21 and 62 do not apply to the Municipal Railway because it is not specifically mentioned in them is without merit. Defendants rely upon the rule expressed in Balthasar v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 187 Cal. 302, 305, 202 P. 37, 19 A.L.R. 452, to the effect that a fundamental rule of construction requires that general language in a statute shall not be construed to apply to the government or its agencies unless expressly included by name. However, that rule does not apply if application of the statute in question would not infringe upon sovereign governmental powers. The statutory construction rule "is founded upon the principle that statutory language should not be interpreted to apply to agencies of government, in the absence of a specific expression of legislative intent, where the result of such a construction would be to infringe sovereign governmental powers. [Citations.] Where, however, no impairment of sovereign powers would result, the reason underlying this rule of construction ceases to exist and the Legislature may properly be held to have intended that the statute apply to governmental bodies even though it used general statutory language only." (Hoyt v. Board of Civil Service Com'rs, 21 Cal.2d 399, 402, 132 P.2d 804, 806; see also 45 Cal.Jur.2d p. 550 et seq., § 25, and 82 C.J.S. Statutes § 317, p. 554.) Obviously interpreting the ordinance to apply to defendant in its proprietary capacity in this particular respect, in nowise infringes its sovereign governmental powers. Moreover, the fact that since 1944 when the Market Street Railway went out of business the Municipal Railway has been the only one to which the ordinance could apply and the ordinance has never been repealed, is strong evidence that the ordinance was intended to apply to the Municipal Railway. In Nutter v. City of Santa Monica, 74 Cal.App.2d 292, 168 P.2d 741, the construction rule was applied to the construction of the Labor Code, §§ 921–923, in a decision holding that because governmental bodies were not expressly mentioned in the Labor Code, its provisions requiring bargaining between employers and trade unions did not apply to the defendant city in its operating of local and intercity motor coach lines. Obviously, applying such a requirement to a municipality, even though it was acting in a proprietary capacity, would interfere with sovereign governmental powers. It was so held in that case. In stating the rule of construction the Nutter case said (74 Cal.App.2d at page 300, 168 P.2d at page 741) "general terms of a statute will not be construed as including government if the statute would operate to trench upon sovereign rights, injuriously affect the capacity to perform state functions or establish a right of action against the state." The construction we give the ordinance in nowise does any of these things (the right to sue the municipality for negligent operation of its streetcars is provided by statute). We have been cited to no case, and have found none, holding that the rule of construction applies to a municipality acting in its proprietary capacity where an ordinance, as here, is enacted for the safety of the public.

[6] Defendants' contention that the evidence did not justify the instruction giving section 21, "The motorman * * * must always, by ringing the bell or striking the gong on such car, give timely warning of the approach of such car to pedestrians * * * and others who may happen to be on or about to cross the track in front of such car" is likewise without merit. While it is true that no persons other than Lenore were in the immediate vicinity of the crosswalk, Lenore was. It is a reasonable assumption that had the gong been seasonably sounded Lenore would not have been struck.

[7] Defendants' contention that the fender required by section 62 is archaic is a matter for the board of supervisors to consider, not for the courts.

2. Instruction That Tracks Are a Warning of Danger

[8] Defendants took BAJI No. 203 which applies to railroads and not to street railroads and, as they say, "adapted it." They cite no authority to support their instruction. As adapted to street railroads it is erroneous. The stop, look and listen rule embodied in the instruction has been held not to apply to streetcar tracks. Carey v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 1925, 75 Cal. App. 129, 242 P. 97; Aungst v. Central California Trac. Co., 1931, 115 Cal.App. 113, 1 P.2d 56. The court properly rejected it.

3. Contributory Negligence as a Matter of Law

[9, 10] The court properly gave an instruction to the effect that there was a presumption that deceased used due care and was obeying the law. No contention is made that the presumption was not applicable. "This presumption is itself evidence sufficient to create a conflict with the evidence produced by defendant, and requires that the issue of contributory negligence be submitted to the jury." Simon v. City & County of San Francisco, 1947, 79 Cal.App.2d 590, 598, 180 P.2d 393, 398. Thus, regardless of the state of the other evidence, there was a conflict on the issue of contributory negligence for the jury to resolve. Therefore we cannot say as a matter of law that Lenore was contributorily negligent.

4. Verdict

[11–13] Lenore was 17 years old. The jury awarded $26,000 for her wrongful death. Defendant contends that that amount is excessive. In wrongful death cases the awarding of damages is a matter committed to the discretion and sound judgment of the jury, whose conclusion will not be disturbed on appeal unless the sum is so disproportionate to the injury proved as to justify the view that it was given under the influence of passion and prejudice (Bechtold v. Bishop & Co., Inc., 1939, 16 Cal.2d 285, 294, 105 P.2d 984; "'"* * * so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest at first blush passion, prejudice or corruption * * *"'" (Arellano v. City of Burbank, 13 Cal.2d 248, 258, 89 P.2d 113, 119); "so disproportionate to the injuries suffered that the result reached may be said to shock the conscience * * *." (Daggett v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry., 48 Cal.2d 655, 666, 313 P.2d 557, 564). The Daggett case states, although each case must be determined on its own facts, a reviewing court may consider amounts awarded in similar cases. There it was held that it could not be said as a matter of law that a verdict of $50,000 for the loss of two minor children (ages 3 and 10) was so greatly excessive as to shock the conscience. Moreover, defendants do not contend that the instructions on damages were incorrect, nor do defendants contend that the verdict was so disproportionate as to shock the conscience or to show passion or prejudice. We cannot say that under the present day value of the dollar the verdict was excessive.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Richard A. CHRISTENBERY, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 3530.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 10, 1959.

Prosecution for grand theft. The Superior Court, Marin County, Jordan L. Martinelli, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that evidence that defendant, while employed by an automobile dealer, accepted money and automobile from complaining witness and that defendant represented to complaining witness that he would obtain and deliver new automobile with knowledge that he could not procure new automobile when viewed with evidence of similar fraudulent transaction with another, established fraudulent intention not to procure automobile, but that crime of interstate transportation of stolen and falsely made securities would not have been a felony if committed in California and was not an offense similar to crime of receiving property knowing it to be stolen and transporting it into California and therefore defendant had not been convicted of two previous felonies and was entitled to probation.

Judgment reversed solely to permit action upon application for probation.

1. False Pretenses ⇐7(5)

Proof of the elements of obtaining money or property by false pretenses will support a conviction of grand theft, and proof of the making of a promise without the present intent to perform it is sufficient to establish such false pretenses.

2. False Pretenses ⇐5, 49(2), 51

Intent to defraud, as element of obtaining property by false pretense, must be proved and mere failure to perform promise standing alone is not sufficient, and intent to defraud is a question of fact to be determined from all of the circumstances of the case.

3. False Pretenses ⇐49(2)

In prosecution for grand theft, evidence that defendant, while employed by an automobile dealer, accepted money and automobile from complaining witness and that defendant represented that he would obtain and deliver new automobile to witness with knowledge that he could not procure one, when viewed with evidence of similar fraudulent transaction with another, established fraudulent intention not to procure new automobile. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 1110.

4. False Pretenses ⇐49(3)

In prosecution for grand theft, wherein complaining witness alleged that defendant, while employed by an automobile dealer, accepted her money and automobile and represented that he would obtain and deliver new automobile to her with knowledge that he could not procure new one, evidence of similar fraudulent transaction involving owner of another automobile was sufficient corroboration of complaining witness' testimony. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1110.

5. Criminal Law ⇐254, 553

In prosecution for grand theft on ground that defendant allegedly accepted money and automobile from complaining witness representing that he would obtain and deliver new automobile to witness with knowledge that he could not procure new automobile, wherein defendant produced receipt signed by witness allegedly acknowledging receipt of money, function of trial court was to resolve conflict between defendant's testimony and report of questioned-documents expert and fact that expert was employed by bureau of criminal investigation or office of Attorney General did not bind state or require the court to find in accordance with his opinion. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1110.

6. Receiving Stolen Goods ⇐1

Federal statute providing that whoever transports in interstate commerce any goods, or money of value of $5,000 or more, knowing the same to have been stolen, or taken by fraud shall be fined by not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years does not state an offense similar to the offense stated under state statute providing that every person who, in another state or country, steals or embezzles property of another or receives such property knowing it to have been stolen, and brings same into California, may be convicted and punished in the same manner as if such larceny or embezzlement had been committed in California. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2314; West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 497, 1203.

7. Larceny ⇐22

Under statute providing that every person who, in another state or country, steals or embezzles property of another, or receives such property knowing it to have been stolen or embezzled and brings same into California, may be convicted and punished in the same manner as if such larceny or embezzlement had been committed in California, offense defined is committed only when defendant receives property knowing it to have been stolen and thereafter transports same into California. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 497.

8. Criminal Law ⇐982.4(2)

Statute prohibiting probation where defendants have been twice convicted of a felony is not to be extended to include conviction of offenses in other jurisdictions which do not include all the elements of some felony known to California law. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1203.

9. Criminal Law ⇐982.4(2)

Where defendant had been convicted of grand theft and at trial thereof had admitted previous conviction of felony in California and had testified that he had been convicted in a federal court of interstate transportation of stolen securities, crime of interstate transportation of stolen securities would not have been a felony if committed in California and was not an offense similar to crime of receiving property knowing it to be stolen and transporting it into Cailifornia and therefore defendant had not been convicted of two previous felonies and was entitled to probation. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2314; West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 497, 1110, 1203.

Robert P. Praetzel, San Anselmo, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., Raymond M. Momboisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., William O. Weissich, Dist. Atty. of Marin County, Bruce B. Bales, Deputy Dist. Atty., San Rafael, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Appellant was convicted by the court sitting without a jury of grand theft.

The prosecution's evidence showed that appellant, who was then using the name of Taylor, was in 1957 employed by a San Rafael automobile dealer. The complaining witness, Marianne Muglia, met appellant and told him that she was interested in buying a new car. Appellant represented to her that he would obtain for her a 1957 Rambler sedan in exchange for her 1956 Rambler and $392 in cash. Appellant represented that he was obtaining the new car directly from the Wisconsin factory. On July 22, 1957, Miss Muglia gave appellant her check for $392 which he cashed the same day. Miss Muglia was leaving California for a vacation in New York State on August 4, 1957 and before leaving she inquired of appellant about the new car and appellant told her that it would be delivered to her in New York City on August 6. The car was not delivered in New York City and Miss Muglia went from New York City to Carthage, New York. While in Carthage she received by mail from her room-mate in California a power of attorney and bill of sale and the "pink slip" of her 1956 Rambler with a letter informing her that the execution of these papers was necessary to enable appellant to transfer her title to her 1956 Rambler in order to complete the deal. The same day that she received these papers appellant telephoned to her from California and told her that he needed these papers immediately. He stated in this conversation that he would have the new car delivered to her at the agency closest to Carthage in about two weeks. He explained his failure to have the 1957 Rambler delivered to her in New York City by saying that he had not finished negotiating the deal because he had not had the proper papers.

Before leaving for New York Miss Muglia had left her 1956 car with her room-mate in California with instructions not to deliver it to appellant until she instructed her to do so. Miss Muglia executed the documents sent to her, had them acknowledged by a notary and mailed them to her room-mate. Appellant obtained the executed documents and the 1956 Rambler from the room-mate. When the room-mate told appellant that Miss Muglia had instructed her not to deliver the old car to him until Miss Muglia had told her to do so, appellant told the room-mate that he had talked to Miss Muglia and that she understood that he had to have the old car and sell it in order to buy the new one. He further stated to the room-mate that he was going to New York City and that he would get the new car and drive it himself to Carthage and deliver it to Miss Muglia.

Appellant sold the old car for $1,200 to a dealer in San Francisco to whom he represented that he was selling it for his sister-in-law but requested that the check be drawn in his name. Appellant never delivered a new car to Miss Muglia, nor did he ever return to her any of the money that he received as a result of the transaction.

Appellant denied that he had ever promised to secure a 1957 Rambler for Miss Muglia on the terms to which she testified. His testimony was that he had only said that he would try to get her such a car and that it proved impossible to do so. He explained the receipt of the $392 check by testifying that a San Francisco dealer had told him that he probably could get a 1957 Rambler of the type desired by Miss Muglia and that he had gotten $450 from Miss Muglia ($392 by check and $58 in cash) to use as a deposit if the dealer did locate such a car. He further testified that in his telephone conversation with Miss Muglia in Carthage he had told her that he had found it impossible to find a 1957 Rambler of the type which she desired and that she had then authorized him to sell her 1956 Rambler for her. He testified further that he had, after Miss Muglia's return to California, repaid her $1,350 and promised to pay the balance by October 31, 1957. He produced an undated, typewritten receipt signed by Miss Muglia which acknowledged the receipt of $1,350 on account of $1,650, the purchase price of her 1956 Rambler, and recited that the balance was to be paid on October 31, 1957. She admitted her signature on this document but denied that the typewritten receipt was on it when she signed it, denied the receipt of $1,350 or any other sum and denied the other testimony of appellant inconsistent with her testimony. The written report of an expert on questioned documents was introduced by stipulation. It was his opinion that the receipt was prepared in its entirety before Miss Muglia signed it.

Evidence of a similar crime was introduced showing that in 1956 appellant had promised to procure a new automobile for a Mrs. Davidson in exchange for her 1953 Plymouth convertible. She delivered her Plymouth with power of attorney and signed pink slip to appellant and he sold it and thereafter failed to deliver either a new car as promised or the money from the sale of the old one.

[1] Proof of the elements of obtaining money or property by false pretences will support a conviction of grand theft, and proof of the making of a promise without the present intent to perform it is sufficient to establish such false pretences. People v. Ashley, 42 Cal.2d 246, 267 P.2d 271.

Appellant, through counsel appointed by the court, argues however that several elements of this crime were not established in this case.

[2, 3] The intent to defraud must be proved and the mere failure to perform the promise standing alone is not sufficient. People v. Ashley, supra, 42 Cal.2d at page 263, 267 P.2d at page 282. However the intent to defraud, i.e. in this case the intention not to perform the promise at the time it was made, is a question of fact to be determined from all of the circumstances of the case. People v. Frankfort, 114 Cal. App.2d 680, 697, 251 P.2d 401. The whole course of conduct indulged in by appellant as testified by Miss Muglia and her room-mate could be looked to by the trial court in determining whether he made his original promise with the fraudulent intent not to perform it. He promised both Miss Muglia and her room-mate that he would deliver a car to Miss Muglia after, according to his own testimony, he knew that he could not procure one. The evidence of the similar fraudulent transaction with another is also evidence from which his fraudulent intent in this transaction could be inferred. Taking the evidence as a whole it amply supports the implied finding that when appellant first promised Miss Muglia to get her a new car he had no intention of doing so.

Her reliance upon his false promise in parting with her $392 check is equally supported, as is his intent to induce her to part with it as a result of his false promise.

Whether or not appellant could in fact have obtained a new Rambler is not determinative of the fraudulent nature of his original promise. If, as the court found, at the time he made the promise he had the fraudulent intent not to perform it, the possibility or impossibility of actual performance could not alter the fraudulent intent in making the promise with the present intent that it would not be performed. Nor is the fact that Miss Muglia first suggested the transaction inconsistent with the finding that appellant took advantage of her proposal to secure her money by a false promise.

[4] The complaining witness' testimony was sufficiently corroborated as required by section 1110, Penal Code. Apart from the other testimony the evidence of a similar fraudulent transaction involving the owner of another automobile in 1956 is sufficient for that purpose. People v. Ashley, supra, 42 Cal.2d at page 268, 267 P.2d at page 285.

[5] The trial court chose to believe Miss Muglia's testimony concerning the receipt which bore her signature and her testimony that appellant did not repay her $1,350. In this respect appellant's testimony and the report of the questioned-documents expert produced only a conflict of testimony which it was the court's function to resolve. The fact that this expert was employed in the Bureau of Criminal Investigation or the office of the Attorney General did not bind the people by his testimony or require the court to find in accordance with his opinion.

Appellant applied to the court for probation and the record makes it clear that while the judge was inclined to the view that the case was a proper one for probation he concluded that he had no power to grant probation because appellant had been twice convicted of a felony. Penal Code, § 1203. This section prohibits the granting of probation "to any defendant unless the court shall be satisfied that he has not been twice previously convicted of felony in this State nor twice previously convicted in any other place or places of public offenses which would have been felonies if committed in this State."

The previous conviction of one felony in this State is admitted. The appellant testified that in 1952 in Texas he was convicted in a Federal Court "of interstate transportation of stolen, forged, counterfeit and falsely made stocks, bonds and securities."

The question presented is whether this crime would have been a felony if committed in this State.

The Federal statute apparently involved reads in part as follows:

> "Whoever transports in interstate or foreign commerce any goods, wares, merchandise, securities or money, of the value of $5,000 or more, knowing the same to have been stolen, converted or taken by fraud; or * * *
>
> "Whoever, with unlawful or fraudulent intent, transports in interstate or foreign commerce any falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited securities, knowing the same to have been falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited; * * *
>
> "Shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both." U.S.C., Title 18, § 2314.

Respondent submits that this code section is comparable to section 497 of our Penal Code:

> "Every person who, in another state or country steals or embezzles the property of another, or receives such property knowing it to have been stolen or embezzled, and brings the same into this state, may be convicted and punished in the same manner as if such larceny, or embezzlement, or receiving, had been committed in this State."

It is plain that that portion of the Federal statute embraced in the second paragraph above quoted, i. e., dealing with the transportation of "falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited securities" by no stretch of the imagination could be held to find a counterpart in section 497, Penal Code.

[6–9] If the appellant may be said to have admitted a conviction of violating the first paragraph (transporting goods, wares, merchandise, securities or money "knowing the same to have been stolen, converted or taken by fraud"), we are still satisfied that that paragraph does not state an offense similar to the offense stated in section 497 of our Penal Code.

The gist of the Federal offense is the transportation of goods, etc., "knowing the same to have been stolen." The gist of the offense described in section 497 is the receiving of property "knowing it to have been stolen" and the subsequent transportation of such property into this State, in which event the defendant "may be convicted and punished in the same manner as if such * * * receiving, had been committed in this State."

The Federal offense is committed if a person transports the property knowing it to be stolen even though he may have originally received it without knowing that it was stolen. But the offense defined in section 497 of our code is only committed if the defendant who afterwards transported it into this State first "receives such property knowing it to have been stolen."

Statutes of the character of the provision of section 1203, Penal Code, here under discussion are not to be extended to include conviction of offenses in other jurisdictions which do not include all of the elements of some felony known to our law. In re McVickers, 29 Cal.2d 264, 267, 176 P.2d 40 and cases cited.

The judgment is reversed solely to permit the trial court to act upon appellant's application for probation on its merits.

MERCANTILE ACCEPTANCE CORPORATION OF CALIFORNIA, a Delaware Corporation, Plaintiff, Cross-Defendant and Respondent,

v.

LILES BROTHERS MOTOR CO., INC., an Arkansas Corporation, et al., Defendants and Cross-Complainants,

Liles Brothers Motor Co., Inc., an Arkansas Corporation, Appellant.

Civ. 9501.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 10, 1959.

Finance company brought action against Arkansas used automobile dealer to compel Arkansas dealer to endorse certificates of ownership of used automobiles which Arkansas dealer had sold to California dealer, and to deliver certificates of title to finance company, which had discounted conditional sales contracts for California dealer, and for declaratory relief. The Arkansas dealer filed a cross-complaint seeking to quiet title to the automobiles. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, John Quincy Brown, J., entered judgment adverse to the Arkansas dealer, and the Arkansas dealer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence sustained Superior Court's finding that Arkansas dealer was estopped by its conduct from asserting any title to the automobiles.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1)

On appeal by appellant contending that findings of trial court were not supported by the evidence, District Court of Appeal was required to view evidence in light most favorable to respondent and was required to draw every inference, which could reasonably be drawn from the evidence, in respondent's favor.

2. Estoppel ⇐73

Owner, who clothes another with apparent title to property, and power of disposition thereof is estopped from afterward asserting his title against innocent third party, who has thereby been induced to deal with apparent owner in reference to such property.

3. Estoppel ⇐72

Statutory rule that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by act of third person, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer applies even though there has been no compliance with section of the Vehicle Code dealing with prerequisites to transfer of title or interest in motor vehicle. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 186; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3543.

4. Estoppel ⇐52

Generally, four things are essential to application of doctrine of equitable estoppel: first, party to be estopped must be apprised of facts, second, he must intend that his conduct shall be acted on, or must so act that party asserting estoppel had right to believe it was so intended, third, other party must be ignorant of true state of facts, and fourth, he must rely upon conduct to his injury.

5. Estoppel ⇐53

Estoppel may arise although there was no designed fraud on part of person sought to be estopped.

6. Estoppel ⇐96

Negligence, that is careless and culpable conduct, is, as a matter of law, equivalent to an intent to deceive and will satisfy element of fraud necessary to an estoppel.

7. Estoppel ⇐72

In action by finance company against Arkansas used automobile dealer to compel Arkansas dealer to endorse certificates of ownership of used automobiles which Arkansas dealer had sold to California dealer, and to deliver certificates of title to finance company, which had discounted conditional sales contracts for California dealer, evidence sustained trial court's finding that Arkansas dealer was estopped by its conduct from asserting any title to the automobiles. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 186; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3543.

Albert L. Wagner, Sacramento, for appellant.

Oscar A. Kistle, Sacramento, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Plaintiff above-named filed an action for declaratory relief and to compel defendant Liles Brothers Motor Co., Inc. to endorse the certificates of ownership of certain automobiles and to deliver said certificates to plaintiff. Defendant Liles Brothers filed a cross complaint seeking to quiet title to said automobiles. After a trial the court determined that Liles Brothers was estopped to assert its interest in said automobiles and found generally in accordance with the allegations of the complaint. Judgment was entered as prayed for, and Liles Brothers has appealed from said judgment.

Appellant's sole contention is that the findings are not supported by the evidence. Before discussing this contention, we shall give a brief summary of the evidence as shown by the record.

Liles Brothers operates a wholesale used-car lot in Memphis, Tennessee. In 1955, Barney Liles, an officer of Liles Brothers, met Lloyd A. Warn who was an official of Sacto Auto Wholesalers, Inc., hereinafter referred to as Sacto. Thereafter, during the year 1955 and the early part of 1956, Liles Brothers sold some fifteen automobiles to Sacto. In December, 1955, Warn purchased some ten automobiles from Liles Brothers in Memphis. Liles Brothers procured drivers to deliver the automobiles to Sacto at its lot in Sacramento. If at the time the cars left Tennessee, or shortly thereafter, Liles did not have the certificate of title, Liles Brothers sent the certificate of title with bills of sale and invoices with a sight draft to a bank in Sacramento with instructions that the documents be delivered upon payment of the draft. Barney Liles testified, however, that when the cars left the lot they belonged to the purchaser.

Sacto conducted a retail and wholesale automobile sales business in Sacramento. Mercantile Acceptance Corporation discounted conditional sales contracts and floored new and used automobiles for Sacto. The relationship between the two concerns had been satisfactory until January, 1956.

Of the ten cars sold by Liles Brothers to Sacto five were sold by Sacto to various purchasers. Four of the purchasers executed conditional sales contracts. In the fifth instance, the purchaser agreed to pay the balance due on the automobile he purchased at the rate of $91.52 per month. These contracts were assigned to Mercantile. In four instances Sacto received the amount due them, and in the fifth case three existing debts of Sacto to Mercantile were cancelled. Mercantile did not receive any certificate of title to any of the cars at the time it discounted the contracts. The practice in the trade is to accept an assignment of a conditional sales contract without examining evidence of title. Mercantile did not have actual knowledge that Sacto did not have title to the automobiles. Other facts appearing in the record will be set forth in the course of this opinion.

There were five causes of action, similar in nature, and each relating to a different automobile. There were similar findings as to each of the causes of action. As to each cause of action, the court concluded that respondent was entitled to judgment declaring it to be the legal owner of the automobile involved, subject to the rights of the purchaser, and that appellant was estopped from asserting any right or title to said automobile and should be ordered to endorse and deliver to respondent the certificate of ownership of said automobile.

Appellant attacks the following finding as being without support in the evidence:

"[A]nd it is true that, at the time of said sale and said delivery, the defendant and cross-complainant Liles Brothers Motor Co. Inc. was informed that said automobile was being purchased by said defendants Sacto Auto Wholesalers Inc., Fred C. Parks, Lloyd A. Warn, and Mrs. Lloyd A. Warn for display and resale on premises of said defendants at 1958 Fulton Avenue, Sacramento, Sacramento County, California. That it is not true that it was agreed and understood that draft drawn by Liles Brothers Motor Co. Inc. upon Sacto Auto Wholesalers Inc. in connection with said sale and delivery was to be paid forthwith; that it is true that it was agreed that said draft was to be paid in the City of Sacramento, State of California, upon presentation or when said automobile was sold at the discretion of said Sacto Auto Wholesalers Inc., Fred C. Parks, Lloyd A. Warn and Mrs. Lloyd A. Warn;"

Appellant admits that it knew that Sacto was a used-car dealer and intended to sell the cars bought from appellant, but appellant denies that there was any evidence that appellant knew the cars were "being purchased * * * for display and resale on premises of said defendants at 1958 Fulton Avenue, Sacramento, Sacramento County, California." Appellant contends also that the only evidence given as to when the draft was to be paid was by appellant to the effect that the draft was to be paid forthwith upon presentation and that no evidence was adduced that there was to be any delay in payment. Appellant contends further that the record discloses no testimony or evidence that the draft was to be paid when the automobile was sold and no evidence that the discretion of the buyers was to be exercised concerning time of payment of the draft. He asserts that the testimony of Barney Liles is directly to the contrary and stands uncontradicted.

Appellant concedes that the general rule is that an owner of property who clothes another with apparent title is estopped from thereafter asserting his title against an innocent third party who has dealt with the apparent owner in reference to such property, but appellant contends that respondent was not an innocent purchaser from an apparent owner and that respondent did not rely upon the fact that the automobiles were placed upon the lot of the used-car dealer. Appellant asserts that respondent relied upon the used-car dealers and not upon the fact that the automobiles were upon the used-car lot of Sacto. Appellant then contends that the evidence does not support the findings or the conclusion of the court that appellant is estopped from asserting title to said automobiles.

[1] There would be much merit in these contentions of appellant if the only construction that could be placed on the evidence was the one placed upon it by appellant. But unfortunately for appellant the evidence was conflicting, and we must view the evidence in the light most favorable to respondent and must draw every inference in its favor which can reasonably be drawn from the evidence.

The automobiles here involved were sold by appellant Liles Brothers to Sacto in Memphis. Appellant knew they were purchased for resale to the general public on the used-car lot of Sacto. Appellant selected drivers who were to deliver the automobiles to the used-car lot of Sacto, and Sacto secured insurance of the automobiles before they left Memphis. At one point in his testimony Barney Liles stated: "Q. Would you state generally in your own words what your means of operating is when you make these wholesale sales into California respectively? How do you transfer title? A. By draft. For instance I sold a guy five cars over the telephone in California yesterday and they are his cars when they leave here. The minute a car leaves I draw a draft on him and usually the draft beats the car there. I do that the day the car leaves the lot and they are his cars when they leave and he insured or insures them and I have nothing to do with that."

There were no instructions to the drivers not to deliver the automobiles to Sacto until the drafts were paid; in fact the drivers had no instructions except to deliver them to Sacto at its used-car lot. The drafts and accompanying papers were sent direct to the bank. The record shows that they frequently remained in the bank for several weeks before being paid, and in the meantime some of the cars would be sold to purchasers under conditional sales contracts which were purchased by respondent.

We believe that the following portion of the memorandum opinion of the trial judge is supported by the evidence and the law.

"* * * These automobiles were placed by Liles with Sacto., knowing that they were to be displayed by Sacto. and sold from the lot to the general public. The cars were delivered by a driver selected by Liles in Memphis. The drivers were to deliver the automobiles and no mention was made of any reservations or special instructions regarding the withholding of any such deliveries. Sometimes the necessary papers were forwarded by Liles to the Bank of America in Sacramento and sometimes the papers would arrive later, if Liles did not happen to have them at the time of delivery. The Bank was instructed to deliver the documents upon payment of the drafts. The drafts in the instant matters were in the Bank for some five or six weeks. The usual conditional sales contracts were made out by the buyers to cover unpaid balances. The plaintiff, Mercantile Acceptance Corporation, is in the business of financing automobile paper and did so in this case. As the contracts were assigned to the plaintiff, in all but one instance, the plaintiff paid Sacto. the unpaid balance to be financed. In the Teal contract, the plaintiff cancelled a pre-existing debt and paid the Motor Vehicle Department certain fees in addition.

"Plaintiff's opening brief sets out the general custom of financing of automobiles and points out that it has been the custom of the trade to accept the assignment of such conditional sales contracts without the certificate of title necessarily being presented at the same time. As will be pointed out in the authorities, this Court does not feel that that is a compelling point.

[2] "It is a well settled law of this State that the owner of property who clothes another with the apparent title to it and the power of disposition thereof is estopped from afterward asserting his title against an innocent third party, who has thereby been induced to deal with the apparent owner in reference to such property. (See Pacific Finance Co[rp]. v. Hendley, 103 Cal.App. 335 [284 P. 736, 285 P. 1048; Id.] 119 Cal.App. 697 [7 P.2d 391]. See also Meadows v. Hampton, 55 Cal.App.2d 634, 636 [131 P.2d 591].)

"Section 3543 of the Civil Code provides: 'Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer.'

[3] "This rule applies even though there has been no compliance with section 186 of the California Vehicle Code, since estoppel may even in that type of case still prevail against the seller. (Wargin v. Wargin, 29 Cal.2d 843, 845 [180 P.2d 349].)

"The titles retained by Liles in this case were for security purposes only and as is pointed out by plaintiff, this can be likened somewhat to the situation where trust receipts are used.

"There is no question but in the instant matter, Liles knew that Sacto. was to sell these cars to the general public. That was the business of Sacto. Liles, of course, knew that with the sale of an automobile, financing is generally required. Here financing was done by the plaintiff and Sacto. received full payment for the cars.

"The defendant, Liles, bases its defense upon the theory that the plaintiff corporation was negligent in dealing with Sacto.; that plaintiff should have known the precarious condition of Sacto. and should have had some foreknowledge of the defalcation of Parks and Warn. The testimony shows that plaintiff had done business with Sacto. for sometime and that up to January, 1956, no problem had arisen. Other matters were brought out concerning the conduct of Parks and Warn, but the Court sees little merit to that evidence.

"Liles places a great deal of emphasis upon the case of Metropolitan Finance Corp. [of California] v. Morf, 42 Cal. App.2d 756 [109 P.2d 969]. This case, however, can be distinguished easily from the case at bar, by reason of the fact that in the Morf case there was a certain reservation that the parties did not intend property in the cars to pass until the approval by Woods (who would be in the same position as Sacto. here) of the mechanical condition of the cars and the delivery of a properly endorsed certificate of ownership. In the instant matter there were no such reservations; the delivery was made with the authority to sell and an understanding that the cars would be sold at the first opportunity."

[4–8] As stated in Safway Steel Products, Inc. v. Lefever, 117 Cal.App.2d 489, at page 491, 256 P.2d 32, at page 33:

"* * * 'In general, four things are essential to the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel: first, the party to be estopped must be apprised of the facts; second, he must intend that his conduct shall be acted upon, or must so act that the party asserting the estoppel had a right to believe it was so intended; third, the other party must be ignorant of the true state of facts; and fourth, he must rely upon the conduct to his injury.' 10 Cal.Jur. 627, sec. 14. An estoppel may arise although there was no designed fraud on the part of the person sought to be estopped. Benner v. Industrial Acc. Com. 26 Cal.2d 346, 349, 159 P.2d 24. Negligence, that is careless and culpable conduct, is, as a matter of law, equivalent to an intent to deceive and will satisfy the element of fraud necessary to an estoppel. Parke v. Franciscus, 194 Cal. 284, 297, 228 P. 435. Where one of two innocent parties must suffer, he who committed the mistake must bear the loss. McGee v. Stone, 9 Cal. 600, 607. The existence of an estoppel is a question of fact. Pike v. Rhinehart, 112 Cal.App.2d 530, 533, 246 P.2d 963."

[9] We are convinced that the evidence supports the findings of the court and that its conclusions of law that appellant is estopped from asserting any title to said automobiles is supported by the applicable law.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

William J. FREED and Bertell F. Freed, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 9432.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 9, 1959.

Hearing Granted April 8, 1959.

Action by owner of northern parcel of land received on dissolution of partnership to determine extent of right of way over northern parcel granted to former partner who received the southern parcel and to enjoin the former partner from allowing deer hunters to pass over the right of way to hunt on the southern parcel. The Superior Court, Colusa County, Wright L. Callender, J., gave judgment that the right of way was for sole purpose of moving livestock, hay, and farming equipment, and enjoined the owner of the southern parcel from allowing deer hunters to use the right of way to hunt on the southern parcel and the owner of the southern parcel appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, Acting P. J., held that parol evidence to show intent and purpose of the grant of right of way was properly admitted.

Affirmed.

1. Easements ⇐37

Extent of right of way is question of fact for jury. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1856, 1860.

2. Easements ⇐12(1)

Extent of right and duty of respective owners toward each other is to be determined by language of grant, right-of-way easement, and all circumstances existing at time grant was made. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1856, 1860.

3. Easements ⇐38

Nothing passes as incident to grant of right-of-way easement but that which is necessary for its reasonable and proper enjoyment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1856, 1860.

4. Easements ⇐38

What is necessary for reasonable and proper enjoyment of right-of-way easement granted and limitations imposed on use of land by proprietor depends on terms of grant and purposes for which it was made, nature and situation of land subject to the right of way, and manner in which the land has been used or occupied. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1856, 1860.

5. Evidence ⇐461(2)

In action by owner of northern parcel of land received on dissolution of partnership to determine extent of right of way granted over northern parcel to southern parcel, and to enjoin former partner who received the southern parcel from allowing deer hunters to pass over the right of way to reach the southern parcel and hunt, parol evidence to show purpose and intent of grant of the right of way when the owners dissolved partnership and divided land was properly admitted. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1856, 1860.

6. Easements ⇐61(9)

In action by owner of northern parcel of land received on dissolution of partnership, to determine extent of right of way granted over northern parcel to southern parcel when the owners of land dissolved partnership and divided land into the two parcels, and to enjoin owner of southern parcel from allowing deer hunters to pass over the right of way to hunt on southern parcel, evidence supported finding that use of the right of way by the hunters to reach the southern parcel was unreasonable and not within contemplation of the grant.

Ralph W. Rutledge and Richard E. Patton, Colusa, for appellants.

Florence J. Westfall and Donald W. Littlejohn, Colusa, for respondents.

PEEK, Acting Presiding Justice.

Defendants appeal from that portion of the judgment which determined the extent of a grant of right of way by a deed to them from the plaintiffs, and which enjoined the use of the right of way other than as provided by the decree.

Plaintiff, Adolph D. Laux, and defendant, William J. Freed, operated the property involved as partners from 1943 until 1952. In 1952 the partnership was dissolved and the land divided into two parcels. A flip of a coin determined the parcel each partner would receive. Laux won the toss and chose the northerly portion, Freed taking the remaining or southerly half. As a part of the dissolution Freed was granted a right of way over a private road which crossed the parcel of Laux. The grant read:

> "For value received Adolph D. Laux and Joyce H. Laux, his wife, Grant to William J. Freed and Bertell F. Freed, his wife, as Joint Tenants, all that real property situate in the County of Colusa, State of California, described as follows: A right of way over a road as presently constructed along the East Branch of Sand Creek, in the East half of Section 18, and the Northeast quarter of Section 19, Township 13 North, Range 3 West, Mount Diablo Base and Meridian."

The trial court found that the right of way was granted for the sole purpose of moving livestock, hay, machinery and other farming equipment; that the leasing by defendants of their land for the use of deer hunters, with specific instructions to use the right of way and no other, had unreasonably increased the burden on the servient tenement and was a use not contemplated at the time the grant was made; that such use was an unauthorized change in the burden of said easement; and that access to defendants' property was not limited to the roadway but also could be gained by a county road. From such findings the court concluded that plaintiffs were entitled to judgment against defendants; that defendants should be enjoined and restrained from using or permitting the right of way granted to be used for commercial hunters; and that the use of the road should be limited to the purposes for which it was granted. Defendants now appeal from the judgment which was entered pursuant thereto.

The evidence shows that from the time plaintiffs and defendants acquired the property as partners they and their guests hunted both parcels. During the 1949 or 1950 deer season the parties as partners leased the hunting rights to one Lawrence. Although there is no direct evidence that the lessee used the premises for so-called "commercial hunting," the evidence is reasonably susceptible of such an inference; in other words, the testimony shows that when Laux was asked on cross-examination how many permits were sold by Lawrence, he replied he didn't know. The lease with Lawrence was not exclusive, and the partners and their friends continued to hunt both parcels. During the course of the trial the attorney for defendants sought to show that the number of hunters presently using the right of way was no greater than when the range was being operated by the partnership. Objections by plaintiffs' counsel that such evidence was immaterial were sustained by the trial court.

In 1952 the parties partitioned the property, and the right of way in question was granted. In 1956 both parties leased their respective lands for commercial hunting. The defendants leased theirs to one Steidlmayer who sold memberships entitling the holders to hunt defendants' land. The lessee specifically instructed the holders to use the road over plaintiffs' land.

Laux testified that prior to the execution of the grant there was a discussion in which it was stated that whoever got the back half of the range should have the right of way over the roadway in question for the purpose of caring for his cattle in winter, or for whatever was needed to care for his cattle and property; that defendants agreed to such an arrangement, and that this fact was mentioned by Laux to Freed on several occasions; that Freed said he wished the road for deer hunters; that Laux said it was not for that purpose; that he would not grant it for such a purpose; that after the agreement was made, Laux asked Freed if he could cross defendants' property to hunt on the range south of defendants' land; that Freed refused the request, stating: "You stay off of my place with your hunters and I will stay off of your place." These conversations were categorically denied by Freed, but he did testify that conversations concerning the right of way had taken place prior to the execution of the grant therefor.

The primary question raised by defendants is whether or not parol evidence may be introduced to show the intent and purpose of the parties in granting the right of way. Their argument is that oral testimony was improperly admitted since it varied the terms of the grant (citing Lewis v. Brown, 22 Cal.App. 38, 133 P. 331). In reply plaintiffs rely upon section 1856 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides in part that "* * * circumstances under which the agreement was made or to which it relates, * * *" should not be excluded since under the section referred to therein, Code of Civil Procedure, section 1860, it is provided: "For the proper construction of an instrument, the circumstances under which it was made, including the situation of the subject of the instrument, and of the parties to it, may also be shown, so that the Judge be placed in the position of those whose language he is to interpret."

[1–4] In accordance with such statutory mandate, our courts have held that "* * * the question [as to the extent of a right of way] has been uniformly regarded by the courts as one of fact, for the jury. The extent of the right and duty of the respective owners towards each other is to be determined by the language of the grant, and all the circumstances existing at the time the grant was made. 'Nothing passes as incident to such a grant but that which is necessary for its reasonable and proper enjoyment.' [Citation.] 'What is necessary for such reasonable and proper enjoyment of the way granted, and the limitations thereby imposed on the use of the land by the proprietor, depends upon the terms of the grant and the purposes for which it was made, the nature and situation of the property subject to the easement, and the manner in which it has been used and occupied.' [Citing cases.]" Smith v. Worn, 93 Cal. 206, 214–215, 28 P. 944, 946.

[5, 6] It would seem to follow that since the trial court, in order to understand the purposes and intent of the grant, properly admitted evidence for that purpose, and since such evidence was amply sufficient to support the determination of the court, such evidence was likewise sufficient to support the findings that defendants' use was unreasonable and not within the contemplation of the parties, and hence the remaining contentions which raise the same questions are, for the same reasons, invalid and need no further discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 1, 1959.

Mandamus proceedings directed to county auditor-controller of the County of Los Angeles. The District Court of Appeal held, inter alia, that where a portion of Malibu judicial district was annexed to Los Angeles judicial district, and the elected judge of justice court of the Malibu judicial district elected to succeed to existing vacancy in municipal court of Los Angeles judicial district, such judge was the lawful holder of the office of judge of municipal court under statute relating to succession of judges on annexation to city or district having municipal court, and hence no vacancy existed in office of judge of municipal court of Los Angeles judicial district, so that Governor had no power to appoint another as judge of such court.

Judgment in accordance with opinion.

1. Mandamus ⇐77(1), 172

While ordinarily mandate is not the appropriate remedy to determine title to public office, where two persons are purporting to hold the office, mandamus lies to determine which is the de facto officer, and, while legal title is not adjudicated, court examines the question of legal title, and person who has the best claim to legal title is held to be the de facto officer.

2. Judges ⇐8

The statute relating to succession of judges on annexation to city or district having municipal court implicitly recognizes that annexation of territory from a judicial district to another judicial district having a municipal court operates in whole or in part to supersede the court in judicial district from which the territory is annexed dependent upon whether the whole or only a part of such district is so annexed, and a court is partly superseded only in two instances: (1) where a portion of its jurisdiction over particular classes of cases theretofore vested in it is withdrawn and conferred upon another court and (2) where a portion of territory over which it previously exercised jurisdiction is taken from it and annexed to another judicial district in which there is an existing court having jurisdiction over the matters formerly within its jurisdiction. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 71083.

3. Statutes ⇐206

If possible, effect should be given to statute as a whole and to its every word and clause so that no part will be useless or meaningless, and all parts should be construed together and harmonized so far as possible without doing violence to language or spirit.

4. Statutes ⇐212.4

In construing a statute, it will be presumed that every word, phrase and provision was intended to have some meaning and perform some useful office, and a construction implying that words were used in vain, or that they are surplusage will be avoided.

5. Judges ⇐8

Where amendment of statute relating to succession of judges on annexation to city or district having municipal court eliminated the condition to right to automatic succession, amendment suggested that Legislature intended to provide that right of automatic succession should obtain irrespective of extent of territory annexed and that it should not be limited, as formerly, to a situation where annexation was so substantial in territorial extent or population as to require creation of a new judgeship in municipal court judicial district. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 71083.

6. Statutes ⇐181(2), 190

While the rule is that where a statute is susceptible of two constructions, one consistent with reason and the other leading to absurd consequences, the former is to be adopted, it is equally true that where meaning of a statute is clear courts must follow the language used and give to it its plain meaning, whatever may be thought of wisdom, expediency or policy of the act, even if it appears probable that a different object was in the mind of Legislature.

7. Statutes ⇐205

Where the language permits only one construction, legislative intent must be gathered from the words and language employed, read as a whole, and intent not expressed in words of statute cannot be found to exist.

8. Statutes ⇐176, 212.6

Courts cannot speculate that Legislature meant something other than what it said, nor may courts rewrite a statute to make it express an intent not expressed therein.

9. Constitutional Law ⇐70(3)

It was not within province of appellate court to pass upon wisdom or expediency of statute relating to succession of judges on annexation to city or district having municipal court since that was a matter reserved to judgment of Legislature. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 71083.

10. Constitutional Law ⇐70(1)

While it was within competency of Legislature to provide that right of a judge whose court had been partly superseded by annexation of a portion of his judicial district to a municipal court judicial district to succeed to a vacancy in the latter court only under those circumstances where territory annexed comprised a specified percentage of total area or of the population of judicial district from which the annexed portion was taken, it did not do so, and court could not, under guise of construction, read into the statute something which Legislature did not insert therein. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 71083.

11. Officers ⇐56

Under constitutional provision that when any office shall become vacant and no mode is provided by the "constitution and law" for filling such vacancy, Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy, the quoted words mean "constitution or law" and the provision is without application to filling of a vacancy, the mode of filling which is provided by law, and hence when mode of filling a vacancy in office is provided by law other than by the appointment of the Governor the latter is without power to fill such vacancy by appointment. West's Ann.Const. art. 5, § 8.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Constitution and Law".

12. Officers ⇐49

The statute relating to succession of judges on annexation to city or district having municipal court, as construed to automatically entitle a judge of justice court of Malibu judicial district part of which was annexed to Los Angeles judicial district to succeed to vacancy existing in municipal court of Los Angeles district occasioned by resignation of judge by virtue of such annexation, is not violative of constitutional provision authorizing Governor to fill vacancies since the Governor has no power to fill vacancy by appointment when mode of filling vacancy is provided by law. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 71083; West's Ann.Const. art. 5, § 8; art. 6, § 11.

13. Judges ⇐8

Inasmuch as statute provides for automatic succession by judge of a court whose court has been partly superseded by annexation to a municipal court judicial district, and judge of justice court of Malibu judicial district, part of which was annexed to Los Angeles judicial district, having declared his election under statute to succeed to then existing vacancy in the municipal court, no vacancy existed in the municipal court when the Governor thereafter undertook to appoint another as judge of such municipal court. West's Ann.Gov. Code, §§ 71081, 71083; West's Ann.Const. art. 5, § 8; art. 6, § 11.

14. Statutes ⇐223.2(1), 223.4

The statute relating to Governor's power to fill vacancies in office of judge of municipal court, and statute relating to succession of judges on annexation to city or district having a municipal court, must be considered together, and if it may be said that there is any conflict between the two, the latter statute being a specific one dealing with a particular situation must control the general. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 71083, 71180.

15. Judges ⇐8

Where a portion of Malibu judicial district was annexed to Los Angeles judicial district and the elected judge of justice court of the Malibu judicial district elected to succeed to existing vacancy in municipal court of Los Angeles judicial district, such judge was the lawful holder of office of judge of municipal court under statute relating to succession of judges on annexation to city or district having municipal court, and hence no vacancy existed in office of judge of municipal court of Los Angeles judicial district, so that Governor had no power to appoint another as judge of such court. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 71081, 71083; West's Ann.Const. art. 5, § 8; art. 6, § 11.

A. J. Blackman, Los Angeles, for petitioner Woodmansee.

Frank B. Belcher, Los Angeles, for petitioner Erbsen.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Wm. E. Lamoreaux, Asst. County Counsel, and Donald K. Byrne, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Each of the petitioners in the above entitled proceedings seeks a writ of mandate directed to the respondent county auditor-controller of the county of Los Angeles directing him to draw and pay the salary warrant of each of said petitioners as judge of the Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District, each claiming to be the lawful incumbent of the same judicial office in said court.

On and prior to the 28th day of October 1958 the petitioner Woodmansee was the duly qualified, elected and acting judge of the Justice Court of the Malibu Judicial District. On that date there was annexed to the Los Angeles Judicial District a portion of the territory formerly included in the Malibu Judicial District. The area of the Malibu Judicial District prior to the annexation comprised 106,993.90 acres while the portion thereof annexed to the city of Los Angeles consists of 38.95 acres. On October 29, 1958, a vacancy existed in the office of Judge of the Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District due to the resignation of Judge Clarke Stephens, and the petitioner Woodmansee, who is admittedly otherwise qualified to hold the office of judge of the municipal court, purporting to act pursuant to the provisions of section 71081 of the Government Code, elected to succeed to the then existing vacancy in said court by filing with the County Clerk of Los Angeles County his written statement of election so to do and taking the prescribed oath of office, following which he entered upon the discharge of his duties as judge of said municipal court. On November 28, 1958, Governor Knight issued to the petitioner Erbsen his commission as Judge of the Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District to the office formerly held by Judge Stephens, following which the petitioner Erbsen took the required oath of office and entered upon his duties as a judge of said municipal court.

[1] While ordinarily mandate is not the appropriate remedy to determine title to public office, where as here two persons are purporting to hold the office, mandamus lies to determine which is the de facto officer; and, while legal title is not adjudicated, the court examines the question of legal title, and the person who has the best claim to legal title is held to be the de facto officer. Klose v. Superior Court, 1950, 96 Cal.App.2d 913, 921, 217 P.2d 97.

The question presented is whether the petitioner Woodmansee was automatically entitled to succeed to the vacancy existing in the Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District occasioned by the resignation of Judge Stephens by virtue of the annexation to said judicial district of a portion of the territory formerly within the Malibu Judicial District. If so, no vacancy existed in the office of judge of the Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District on November 28, when Governor Knight undertook to appoint the petitioner Erbsen as a judge of said court.

The answer to our problem depends in the main upon the proper interpretation to be accorded to Government Code, section 71083 [1], which since its amendment in 1955 reads as follows:

"Whenever territory is annexed to a judicial district theretofore having a municipal court, a judge of a court partly or wholly superseded thereby shall, if eligible, succeed to the first vacant judgeship on such municipal court, whether such vacancy then exists or occurs within two years thereafter through the creation of a new judgeship or otherwise.

"Whenever the number of judges entitled to succeed as above provided exceeds the number of vacant judgeships on such municipal court, the order of their succession shall be determined as follows: by seniority as a judge within the territory annexed, and, in the case of successive annexations, within the territory annexed at the earlier date; and, in any remaining case, by lot between them."

[2] While somewhat awkwardly worded, the meaning of the above enactment is fairly apparent and in our view susceptible of only one interpretation. Implicitly, it recognizes, if it does not expressly so declare, that the annexation of territory from a judicial district to another judicial district having a municipal court operates in whole or in part to supersede the court in the judicial district from which the territory is annexed dependent upon whether the whole or only a part of such district is so annexed. A court may be said to be partly superseded only in two instances: (1) where a portion of its jurisdiction over particular classes of cases theretofore vested in it is withdrawn and conferred upon another court and (2) where a portion of the territory over which it previously exercised jurisdiction is taken from it and annexed to another judicial district in which there is an existing court having jurisdiction over the matters formerly within its jurisdiction. As the section deals only with the effect of the annexation of territory from one judicial district to another it is clear that when it speaks of a court being "partly superseded thereby" it can only refer to the latter. As applied to the case at hand it is clear that it involves the precise situation with which the Legislature undertook to deal, namely, the annexation of a part of the Malibu Judicial District to the city of Los Angeles which is a judicial district having a municipal court. The section then proceeds to provide in clear and unmistakable terms that in such event the judge of the court of the judicial district from which the territory was annexed "shall, if eligible, succeed to the first vacant judgeship on such municipal court, whether such vacancy then exists or occurs within two years thereafter through the creation of a new judgeship or otherwise."

While petitioner Erbsen concedes that section 71083 is susceptible of this construction, he argues that it is equally susceptible of the meaning "[t]hat the quantum of territory annexed must be such as to deprive the remaining territory in the judicial district of a court, and so, in turn, deprive the existing incumbent of such office" and leave him "a courtless Judge." The argument is not convincing. In the first place, in order to deprive an existing judicial district of a court by annexation of territory it is necessary to annex the entire judicial district for if any less than the whole of the judicial district is annexed the court continues to exist in the remaining territory and the only result is that its boundaries are changed so as to exclude the territory annexed.[2] Likewise, an incumbent judge of a judicial district from which territory is annexed may be deprived of his office by reason of the withdrawal of territory from his district by annexation only in the case where the entire territory of the judicial district is annexed to another, for otherwise he remains a judge of the court of the judicial district with boundaries limited to the remaining territory therein. Thus, petitioner Erbsen's argument is, in effect, that section 71083 has application only in those situations where an entire judicial district is annexed to a judicial district having a municipal court. Such a construction, however, does violence to the plain meaning of the language used for it gives no effect whatever to the word "partly."

[3, 4] It is a cardinal rule of statutory construction that "[w]henever possible, effect should be given to the statute as a whole, and to its every word and clause, so that no part or provision will be useless or meaningless. All the parts should be construed together and harmonized so far as possible without doing violence to the language or spirit. It will be presumed that every word, phrase, and provision was intended to have some meaning and perform some useful office, and a construction implying that words were used in vain, or that they are surplusage, will be avoided." (45 Cal.Jur.2d, p. 626, § 117.)

If the Legislature had intended, as petitioner Erbsen's argument suggests, that the section should have application only to those cases where the effect of annexation was to deprive the incumbent judge of a judicial district of his office, it is only reasonable to assume that it would have used appropriate language to this effect.

Webster's International Dictionary defines the word "supersede" variously as: "To take over"; "to take the place of, to supplant." There seems to be no room for argument that when a portion of a judicial district is annexed to another district the court in the latter takes the place of and supplants the court which formerly exercised jurisdiction over the annexed territory prior to the annexation. The fact that the court in the judicial district from which the annexed territory is taken continues to exist does not detract from the fact that it has been effectively superseded or supplanted in such annexed territory by the court of the judicial district to which it is annexed. In other words it has been "partly" superseded by another court.

Furthermore, petitioner Erbsen's argument in this regard is negatived when reference is had to the language of section 71083 prior to its amendment in 1955 at which time it read in part as follows:

"If there is annexed to a district or city in which a municipal court is established and functioning, territory in which another court inferior to the superior court is established, upon the annexation such other court ceases to exist in the territory annexed. If an additional judicial office has been provided by law for the municipal court by reason of annexation of territory or increase in population, the incumbent judge of the court partly or wholly superseded shall, if qualified, automatically succeed to the additional judicial position in

2. "If territory is annexed to a city or city and county pursuant to law, the boundaries of the judicial district which includes such city or city and county shall be, upon the effective date of the annexation, automatically changed to include the territory so annexed, and the boundaries of any judicial district which includes such annexed territory prior to the effective date of the annexation shall be, on such date, automatically changed to exclude such annexed territory." Gov. Code, § 71040.1.

the municipal court until the election or appointment and qualification of his successor." (Italics ours.)

[5] The italicized language makes clear that as originally enacted the right of a judge whose court was partly superseded by annexation of territory to an existing municipal court judicial district to automatically succeed to the office of judge of the municipal court did not arise except where "an additional judicial office has been provided by law for the municipal court by reason of annexation of territory or increase in population." (Italics ours.) As amended in 1955, this condition to the right to automatic succession was eliminated which suggests that by the amendment the Legislature intended to provide that the right of automatic succession should obtain irrespective of the extent of the territory annexed and that it should not be limited as formerly to a situation where the annexation was so substantial in territorial extent or population as to require the creation of a new judgeship in the municipal court judicial district. Moreover, by the amendment the right of automatic succession was extended "to the first vacant judgeship on such municipal court, whether such vacancy then exists or occurs within two years thereafter through the creation of a new judgeship or otherwise." (Italics ours.)

[6–10] Petitioner Erbsen also contends that to construe the statute as we have is to render it absurd and unreasonable because the extent of the territory annexed represents such a small portion of the territory of the Malibu judicial district. While it is true that where a statute is susceptible to two constructions, one consistent with reason and the other leading to absurd consequences, the former is to be adopted, it is equally true that where the meaning of a statute is clear courts "must follow the language used and give to it its plain meaning, whatever may be thought of the wisdom, expediency, or policy of the act, even if it appears probable that a different object was in the mind of the legislature." (45 Cal.Jur.2d, p. 621, § 108.) Where "the language permits only one construction, the intent of the legislature in enacting a statute is to be gathered from the words and language employed, read as a whole. An intent that finds no expression in the words of the statute cannot be found to exist. The courts may not speculate that the legislature meant something other than what it said. Nor may they rewrite a statute to make it express an intent not expressed therein." (Id. p. 636, § 128.) Thus it is not within our province to pass upon the wisdom or expediency of the legislation here concerned as this is a matter reserved to the judgment of the legislative branch of the government. While it was undoubtedly within the competency of the Legislature to provide that the right of a judge whose court had been partly superseded by the annexation of a portion of his judicial district to a municipal court judicial district to succeed to a vacancy in the latter court only under those circumstances where the territory annexed comprised a specified percentage of the total area or of the population of the judicial district from which the annexed portion was taken it did not do so and we may not under the guise of construction read into the statute something which the Legislature did not insert therein.

Petitioner Erbsen further contends that section 71083, if construed as we have, is violative of article V, section 8, of the California Constitution which reads as follows:

[11–13] "When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and law for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the Legislature, or at the next election by the people."

We find no merit in this contention. The words "constitution and law" as used in the foregoing provision mean "constitution or law." People ex rel. Mattison v. Nye, 1908, 9 Cal.App. 148, 159, 98 P. 241, 244.

And the section is without application to the filling of a vacancy the mode of filling which is provided by law. People ex rel. Wetherbee v. Cazneau, 1862, 20 Cal. 503, 508.[3] When the mode of filling a vacancy in an office is provided by law other than by the appointment of the governor the latter is without power to fill such vacancy by appointment. People ex rel. Madden v. Stratton, 1865, 28 Cal. 382, 390.[3]

Article VI, section 11, of our constitution relating to municipal courts, reads as follows:

"Except as such matters are otherwise provided in this article, the Legislature shall prescribe the manner in which, the time at which, and the terms for which the judges, officers and attaches of municipal courts and of justice courts shall be elected or appointed, the number, qualifications and compensation of the judges, officers and attaches of municipal courts, and provide for the manner in which the number, qualifications and compensation of the judges, officers and attaches of justice courts shall be fixed."

Pursuant to the power vested in it by the foregoing provision the Legislature enacted section 71083 providing for the manner of filling a vacancy in the office of judge of a municipal court under the circumstances therein set forth. Having so provided, the governor was without power under article V, section 8, to appoint to the vacancy. Moreover, inasmuch as section 71083 provides for automatic succession by the judge of a court whose court has been partly superseded by annexation to a municipal court judicial district, and petitioner having declared his election under section 71081, no vacancy existed in the municipal court when the governor undertook to appoint the petitioner Erbsen.

In People ex rel. Ryder v. Mizner, 1857, 7 Cal. 519, 523, the court said: "The only provision of the Constitution which seems to bear upon this case, is the eighth section of article fifth, 'When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and laws for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the Legislature, or at the next election by the people.'

"Before this section can apply to this case, two things must be shown: First, that a vacancy existed. Second, that no mode of filling it was provided."

[14] What has just been said also serves to dispose, at least in part, of petitioner Erbsen's contention that the governor was entitled to appoint by reason of the provisions of section 71180, the pertinent parts of which are set forth in the margin.[4] Aside from the fact that this section by its terms appears to except from its operation the specific situation covered by section 71083, both sections are in any event to be considered together, and if it may be said that there is any conflict between the two, section 71083 being a specific statute dealing with a particular situation must control the general. (45 Cal.Jur.2d, p. 629, §§ 120, 121.)

[15] We, therefore, conclude that the petitioner Woodmansee is the lawful holder of the judicial office in question and that the petitioner Erbsen is without right thereto.

3. While these cases were decided under article V, section 8, of the Constitution of 1849, the language thereof is identical with the language of article V, section 8, as it appears in the present constitution.

4. "Any vacancy in the office of judge of a municipal court shall be filled by appointment by the Governor and any vacancy in the office of judge of a justice court shall be filled by appointment by the board of supervisors of the county in which the justice court is situated, but no vacancy shall be deemed to exist in any such office before the time fixed in Sections 71080, 71082, and 71083 for the selection of the judges of such court and the time fixed by law for their qualification." Gov.Code, § 71180.

The petition of the petitioner Erbsen is, therefore, denied.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate be issued as prayed for by the petitioner Woodmansee.

David VACCARO, Jr., David B. Vaccaro, David Vaccaro, T. Robert Vaccaro, Joseph B. Vaccaro and James M. Vaccaro, Mira Loma Turkey Ranch, Doe One, Doe Two, Doe Three, Doe Company, a corporation, and Doe and Roe, a partnership, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 23264.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 11, 1959.

Rehearing Denied March 6, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 8, 1959.

Action was brought against those operating turkey ranch by customers for injuries resulting from dog bites. The customers were nonsuited on their causes of action under the Dog Bite Statute, but jury returned verdict for damages on causes of action alleging liability at common law. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Eugene P. Fay, J., entered judgment, and those operating the turkey ranch appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that those who operated turkey ranch were not liable at common law for injuries inflicted on customers by three dogs kept on the premises, on ground that the dogs were vicious, where one of the dogs about five years before bit newspaper delivery boy on the leg as he rode by on his bicycle while that dog was nursing a litter of newly born pups, and thereafter two of the dogs sometimes chased newspaper delivery boy on his motorcycle and snapped at his rear tire, where dog which bit newspaper delivery boy was not nursing a litter of newly born pups at the time dogs attacked customers, and over a period of five years after one of the dogs bit newspaper delivery boy the dogs displayed no animosity toward people, although the dogs had mingled with thousands of people during that time.

Judgment reversed.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Action against David B. Vaccaro, James M. Vaccaro and Thomas R. Vaccaro to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from dog bite. Trial was to a jury. Although plaintiffs were nonsuited on their causes of action under the dog bite statute (Civil Code, § 3342), the jury awarded $7,500 damages to Mrs. Chandler and $750 damages to Mrs. Reynolds on their causes of action alleging liability at common law, based upon the responsibility of one who harbors a known vicious dog for injuries suffered by one who is on the premises as an invitee. Judgment was entered on the verdict and the Vaccaros appeal.

Appellants operated the Mira Loma Turkey Ranch as a partnership business on a 5-acre tract owned by their father, David Vaccaro, Jr. The elder Vaccaro resided on the premises and permitted his sons to use the remainder of the tract in return for the payment of property taxes; he was named as a defendant in the action but was not served with process.

On April 11, 1955, plaintiffs made an appointment to purchase a turkey at the ranch. The ladies drove to the premises around noon and parked in the parking lot. They walked up a pathway to the building where turkeys were sold, but as no one was present they returned to their automobile and waited. A few minutes later, Mrs. Reynolds left the car and proceeded to walk up the pathway toward the store. One dog was lying on the ground about 15 feet away from the path. This one suddenly ran toward her, snarling and barking; it jumped up on her, whereupon the other two dogs came from somewhere and joined in the attack. Mrs. Chandler rushed to the rescue of Mrs. Reynolds, who was screaming and trying to protect herself with her handbag. Mrs. Chandler was also attacked by the dogs. Upon hearing the commotion, appellants' father ran from the house and warded the dogs off. The ladies were taken to a physician for treatment; their clothes were torn and they were in an hysterical condition. Mrs. Chandler's injuries consisted of painful bites on her left arm and right breast, while her companion's back had been severely scratched.

The participants in the attack upon plaintiffs were three large animals, unclassified as to breed, named Poochie, Blackie and Brownie, who lived on the premises. Poochie was the female parent of the other two dogs; at the time of the assault she was between 12 and 14 years old. Appellants' father testified that he was the owner of the dogs and that he kept them as pets. They were not used as watchdogs. He and Mrs. Vaccaro fed them, looked after them and paid for their licenses. The dogs were kept around the house but they had the free run of the premises except for the turkey pens. Appellants gave similar testimony. The dogs belonged to their father and they neither cared for them nor used them as watchdogs.

The only previous incident which indicated that one of the dogs might be vicious was described by young Otto Barr. He started delivering papers to the elder Vaccaro in 1949 and made deliveries thereafter six days a week. He usually rode a motorcycle up a driveway to the front of the house. One evening at dusk, or a little later, his motorcycle being out of order, he came on a bicycle through the rear of the premises. Poochie was nursing a litter of newly born pups at a location some 400 or 450 feet to the rear of the house. As the boy came by on his bicycle Poochie ran out and bit him on the leg. The incident was known to the father and mother of appellants and also to James Vaccaro. After that occurrence the boy rode in on his motorcycle regularly and encountered the dogs. As he would ride away two of the dogs would sometimes run behind him and snap at the rear tire. They never attempted to bite him.

Poochie had had 8 or 9 litters, which were given away as soon as they were weaned. While they were with her she guarded them against strangers. There was no expression of hostility toward anyone after the pups were taken away, nor did she make any objection to their being taken. Some two months before the injuries to plaintiffs, Poochie had given birth to another litter. All had been given away except Brownie. Blackie was from an earlier litter. During the five years between the Barr incident and plaintiffs' encounter with the dogs large numbers of customers came to buy turkeys. At holiday times there would be 1,500 and 2,000 customers, and Mrs. Chandler and Mrs. Reynolds had purchased turkeys at the ranch on numerous occasions without incident. At these times and at all other times the dogs would walk among the customers and visitors in friendly fashion, disturbing no one. And after the Barr incident, while Poochie was nursing her numerous litters, she had attacked no one. As described by David Vaccaro, she was regarded as "just a general dog."

To hold upon the evidence that prior to the attack upon plaintiffs Poochie had been a vicious animal and known to be vicious would not only be without precedent in law but contrary to common experience and good sense. It would impose a liability upon those who harbor dogs for any harm they do, upon the theory that the instinct of a female animal to guard her young from harm renders her a vicious and dangerous animal and imparts notice to the owner of her vicious character. It is not the desire to harm intruders that causes the animal to threaten or attack them; it is merely fear for the safety of her young and the desire to be let alone. Even the most gentle animals may suffer from such fear. And who with a mature mind and a mere scintilla of understanding of dogs or other animals would agree with the statement "This is a vicious dog; she would not let me handle her pups." The Vaccaro dogs suddenly became vicious; why no one knows. There was no provocation. Dogs, like humans, are unpredictable. Either, for no apparent reason, may suddenly go berserk.

The common-law liability did not extend to injuries inflicted by dogs that had previously been gentle and friendly. It was a common remark that the law allowed every dog his first bite, which was true of dogs of previous gentle disposition. But the injustice of this rule was recognized by our legislature when, by statutes 1931, p. 1095, ch. 503, liability was imposed upon owners for injuries inflicted by dogs that had previously exhibited no vicious tendencies. This law became section 3342, Civil Code in 1953.

[1, 2] The conditions which impose common-law liability upon those who own or harbor dogs must be such as to reasonably indicate the probability of injury, due to the disposition of the dogs. If a dog has been gentle and friendly in the past there is no duty to fear that he may suddenly become vicious. If, in the past, he has bitten a human the owner must anticipate that he will do the same thing again under the same or similar conditions. The question is one of the duty of the person who is responsible for the dog's actions. If a bitch is likely to attack intruders when she is nursing pups there is a duty at those times to take precautions to avoid injury to humans. Restatement Torts, section 518, comment g. It was a wise precaution to put Poochie and her pups 400 or more feet behind the house, where visitors would not disturb them. But when the pups had been weaned and sent away and Poochie had no further responsibility (and she had borne more than a fair share of responsibility as a parent), defendants had a right to anticipate that she and the young dogs would be as friendly with visitors as they had been in the past. An exhaustive search of the authorities which we have made has unearthed no case in which it was even contended, much less held, that a bitch may be proven to be vicious solely by evidence that in chasing an intruder away from her nursing pups she bit him. The fact that young Barr was bitten under the circumstances related was wholly insufficient to prove that Poochie was vicious or to reasonably indicate that she was likely to resent the presence of visitors under different conditions.

[3] It is well-known that some dogs, untutored in behavior, make a sport of chasing cars or motorcycles with no intention of doing injury. Until the dog has bitten or attempted to bite someone his actions must be regarded as playful and not vicious. Otherwise, as the court stated in Melicker v. Sedlacek, 189 Iowa 946, 179 N.W. 197, 203, 11 A.L.R. 259, "nearly every farmer in Iowa owning a shepherd dog would be liable several times a year."

[4] The fact that two of the dogs sometimes chased Barr as he left on his motorcycle and snapped at the rear tire did not prove that they were vicious. He explained that the motor "would have a tendency to pop when I would lean on the hand throttle." If defendants had knowledge of these occurrences they were bound to know that two of the dogs would chase popping motorcycles. Whatever the game may have been, it evidently did not cause the boy to fear the dogs. They could have bitten him if they had wanted to. The fact that they didn't bite him is the best evidence that they were not interested in biting him. Motorcycles evidently excited them but that had nothing to do with their attitude toward people. Over a period of five years after the Barr incident the dogs displayed no animosity toward people, although they had mingled with thousands, including the plaintiffs. They behaved normally. They gave the defendants no reason to fear they might injure anyone. The uncontroverted evidence failed to establish that prior to plaintiffs' encounter with the dogs any of them had been vicious. Other contentions of appellants need not be considered.

The judgment is reversed.

Orae Cornell FIELDS, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6331.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 10, 1959.

Defendant was convicted of unlawfully possessing heroin and from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Walter R. Evans, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that the evidence established that defendant gave his consent to search and seizure of heroin and hence was not entitled to complain thereof.

Judgment affirmed.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction on a charge of possessing heroin.

In an information filed in Los Angeles county the defendant was charged with violating section 11500, Health and Safety Code, in that on or about November 16, 1957, he possessed heroin. It was also alleged in the information that the defendant had previously been convicted of a violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code on February 23, 1951, and had served a term in prison therefor, and that he had also been convicted of the crime of forgery on April 9, 1953, and had served a term in prison therefor.

The defendant pleaded not guilty and denied the prior convictions. A jury trial was waived and, by stipulation, the matter was submitted upon the testimony contained in the transcript of the proceedings at the preliminary hearing; each side reserving the right to present additional evidence.

The court found the defendant guilty and made no finding as to the prior convictions.

A résumé of the facts is as follows: Officers Hawkins and Miller of the Oxnard police department came to an office of the Los Angeles police department and requested assistance in picking up four or five suspects who were wanted for burglary in Oxnard. One of the suspects was the defendant, however, the officers from Oxnard had no warrant for his arrest. The Oxnard officers inquired of members of the Los Angeles police department if the defendant was known to the Los Angeles police department, or if the Los Angeles police knew him. Sergeant Stephenson of the Los Angeles police department gave officer Lucarelli, of the same department, the defendant's address. Also, a "mug" of the defendant was pulled from the Los Angeles police department files. The Oxnard policeman told officer Lucarelli that the men they were seeking had been identified in a series of "till taps" and that they wanted the defendant upon a charge of burglary, and for questioning and investigation. Officer Lucarelli testified, "My understanding of a till tap is that when two or three people are at the checkstand, one of them preoccupies the clerk after she has the drawer open and the other will grab whatever money there is and the other will take off.") There was another man with the Oxnard policemen, a civilian, who was not known to officer Lucarelli but was known to other officers in the Los Angeles police department. The man made some statements with reference to the burglary in Oxnard while he was in the presence of officer Lucarelli. Officer Lucarelli talked with the man and asked him if he knew about the defendant and whether the defendant was a user of narcotics, and the man stated that the defendant was a user of narcotics.

Lucarelli and Miller went to the house of the defendant about 2:00 o'clock a. m. on November 16, 1957. Officer Hawkins and the man above mentioned stayed in the car which was parked on the street. Lucarelli directed Miller to go to the back door of the house, and he, Lucarelli, then went to the front door. He did not turn the door knob or handle but knocked rather loudly, and in so knocking the door came open a small distance. The door was then pushed all the way open and officer Lucarelli said "Orae C. Fields, police officers." No one answered at first and the officer knocked and "hollered" out again. A male voice then answered, "Who is it?", and Lucarelli answered, "Police officers. Where are you at?" The male voice answered, "I am here in the bedroom." Officer Lucarelli turned on his flashlight and then entered the house and went to the bedroom, identified himself, and told the defendant that he was wanted for burglary and arrested him. The defendant was also asked "if he had any stuff." Officer Miller, previous to the occasion just described, had come around from the back of the house and was in the bedroom with officer Lucarelli and the defendant. The defendant was in bed with his wife.

The defendant was asked "if he had any stuff in the house," and he answered, "No, go ahead and look." Officer Lucarelli told defendant, in effect, that if they "found stuff in the house" when the defendant had stated he did not have anything there, that the officers would have to arrest the people in the house as it would belong to somebody in that facility.

Officer Lucarelli, in the presence of the defendant then started to make a search of the bureau drawers and of the defendant's pants in the bedroom. There was a wallet in one of the dresser drawers containing a paper bindle enclosing a white powder, later identified and found to be heroin. The officer also found a medicine dropper and a hypodermic needle in the dresser, wrapped in white paper. The defendant was asked whether the heroin belonged to him and he said that it did, and he further stated that he had bought it earlier on Saturday for $10 and that his wife knew nothing about it. The defendant did not take the witness stand and testify in his own behalf, nor did he, through other witnesses, offer any explanation of the presence of the heroin or the hypodermic needle.

The defendant asserts that the evidence was obtained by an unlawful search and seizure.

[1] In our opinion the search of the defendant's bedroom, under the circumstances, was lawful. The defendant gave his consent. See People v. Michael, 45 Cal.2d 751, at page 754, 290 P.2d 852, at page 854, wherein the court said, with reference to a similar situation: "Under these circumstances, to hold as a matter of law that the evidence was produced in response to an unlawful assertion of authority would seriously hamper officers in the reasonable performance of their duties. Thus, it is not unreasonable for officers to seek interviews with suspects or witnesses or to call upon them at their homes for such purposes. Such inquiries, although courteously made and not accompanied with any assertion of a right to enter or search or secure answers, would permit the criminal to defeat his prosecution by voluntarily revealing all of the evidence against him and then contending that he acted only in response to an implied assertion of unlawful authority."

As heretofore indicated, the defendant did not take the witness stand to deny any of the statements of the officers; nor did he call his wife as a witness, although she was present and seemingly heard most of what was said in the bedroom. It is clear from the record, in our opinion, that consent to the search was given. The prosecution supplied the proof of the consent to the satisfaction of the trial court. People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 782, 291 P.2d 469; People v. Roberts, 47 Cal.2d 374, 377, 303 P.2d 721.

[2] In the first place, it is the province of the trial court to determine the fact as to whether or not consent was given. The trial judge determined in effect that in the light of all the circumstances, the consent was voluntary and was not in submission to an express or implied assertion of authority. See, People v. Michael, supra. As said in People v. Garnett, 148 Cal.App. 2d 280, at page 284, 306 P.2d 571, at page 574: "The fact that the officer having defendant in custody inquired for permission to search does not destroy its significance as a voluntary consent. (Citing case.) The officer premised appellant's consent upon the latter's assertion that he had done nothing unlawful." See also, People v. Lujan, 141 Cal.App.2d 143, 147, 296 P.2d 93; People v. Robinson, 149 Cal.App.2d 282, 284, 308 P.2d 461; People v. Galle, 153 Cal.App.2d 88, 90, 314 P.2d 58.

It was succinctly stated in People v. White, 159 Cal.App.2d 586, at page 592, 324 P.2d 296, at page 300:

"In urging this point defendant ignores the clear evidence in the record showing a free and voluntary consent on the part of the defendant to search his room; and the well-known rule that it is not necessary for the People to show that the search and seizure were reasonable as incident to a proper arrest when the search is made with defendant's consent. In People v. Burke [47 Cal.2d 45, 301 P.2d 241], supra, the defendant urged a similar point and the Supreme Court at page 49 of 47 Cal.2d, at page 243 of 301 P.2d, stated: 'It is not necessary here, however, for the People to show that the search and seizure were reasonable as incident to proper arrest, for they showed that defendant freely consented to the search of his apartment which disclosed the evidence which defendant has since claimed was illegally obtained.' In that case, the officer said to the defendant, 'You don't mind then if we search your apartment do you?' and the defendant answered, 'No, go ahead.' Whether in a particular case consent was voluntarily given is a question of fact to be determined in the light of all the circumstances (People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 291 P.2d 469; People v. Michael, 45 Cal.2d 751, 290 P.2d 852)."

"A search of a house with the express, free and voluntary consent of a householder suspected of possessing narcotics is neither unreasonable nor unlawful. It follows that contraband found and seized in the course of such a search may lawfully and properly be received in evidence against the accused. (Citing cases.) It is true as pointed out in People v. Michael, supra, that one need not forcibly resist an officer's assertion of authority to search, but if he freely consents to a search, then neither the search nor the seizure of evidence found in the course thereof is unreasonable. As the court there stated (45 Cal.2d at page 753, 290 P.2d at page 854), 'Whether in a particular case an apparent consent was in fact voluntarily given or was in submission to an express or implied assertion of authority, is a question of fact to be determined in the light of all the circumstances.' To the same effect are People v. Lujan, 141 Cal.App.2d 143, 296 P.2d 93 and People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 291 P.2d 469. Since the question is one of fact primarily for the trial court's determination, the finding of that court, supported by substantial evidence, is binding upon an appellate court. (Citing cases.)"

In this case the prosecution introduced sufficient and proper evidence to establish without question that the defendant had previously been convicted of the two felonies charged as prior convictions in the information. The judge was fully informed of the facts with reference to the defendant's background, because at the time of hearing the defendant's application for probation (for which he was wholly ineligible) the judge remarked, "I've gotten word parole has been suspended and there has been an order to return this man to the State Prison at this time;" and further the judge said, "There doesn't seem to be much that can be done with this man, from the past record, counsel."

The defendant was then sentenced as a first offender. Had he been properly and legally sentenced, his minimum term under section 11712 of the Health and Safety Code would be not less than two years nor more than twenty years. In other words, the defendant in this case is now, by reason of the judge's failure to find as to the prior convictions (pursuant to Penal Code section 1158), permitted to serve a sentence which can be considerably less than that required and set forth in the statutes.

The judgment is affirmed.

P. D. SMITH et al., Defendants, Respondents and Cross-Appellants.

Civ. 23232.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 5, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 1, 1959.

Action wherein the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., rendered judgment which, inter alia, denied relief to plaintiffs under their third cause of action for damages resulting from an alleged breach of contract by defendants, and plaintiffs appealed from that portion of judgment. Defendants appealed from that portion of judgment granting plaintiffs relief under their second cause of action. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that, read in conjunction with lease paragraph providing for adjustment on account of number of airframe hours since last major airframe overhaul and reciting agreement of parties that airframe had had 42 hours service since last major airframe overhaul, quoted phrase, in subsequent paragraph, requiring lessors (defendants) to furnish lessees (plaintiffs) with all of aircraft records and providing that such records should be "accurate and complete", could be construed either as having reference to actuality or as having been understood to be synonymous with or equivalent to 42 hours; and held that it had been prejudicial error to exclude lessees' offer to prove by parol evidence what parties had meant by what they said.

That portion of judgment challenged on plaintiffs' appeal reversed, and that portion of judgment appealed by defendants affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐1056(1)
Evidence ⇐455

Read in conjunction with lease paragraph providing for adjustment of number of airframe hours since last major airframe overhaul and reciting agreement of parties that airframe had had 42 hours service since last major airframe overhaul, quoted phrase, in subsequent paragraph, requiring lessors to furnish lessees with all of aircraft records and providing that such records should be "accurate and complete", could be construed as having reference to actuality or as having been understood to be synonymous with or equivalent to 42 hours; and in lessees' action for breach of contract, it was prejudicial error to exclude lessees' offer to prove by parol evidence what parties had meant by what they said. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1641.

2. Sales ⇐416(1)

In buyers' action for breach of contract requiring sellers to furnish buyers with all records required to be kept by Civil Aeronautics Administration, buyers should have been permitted to show that sellers had failed to furnish available records with regard to airframe overhaul which took place outside of country and that because of their inability to prove that such overhaul had been made buyers had been required by Civil Aeronautics Administration rules to perform a major airframe overhaul sooner than would otherwise have been necessary. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1638.

3. Frauds, Statute of ⇐95(2)

Where provision relative to aircraft's presence was not part of option provision of lease, lessees' attorney did not enter into or modify contract when he waived such requirement; but even if he had, statute of frauds did not require his authority to be in writing, in view of provision that rent paid was to be applied toward purchase price in event of exercise of purchase option. Plaintiffs [1] appeal from that portion of the judgment which denied relief to them under their third cause of action for damages resulting from an alleged breach of contract by defendants. The defendants appeal from that portion of the judgment granting plaintiffs relief under their second cause of action.

1. As Great Lakes Airlines, Inc., is not a party to this appeal, the term "plaintiffs" as used in the opinion refers to Irving E. Hermann and Ida Mae Hermann, co-partners doing business under the firm name and style of Nevada Aero Trades Company, a Nevada copartnership.

On September 13, 1955, defendants leased a Douglas C–54B aircraft to the plaintiffs with an option to purchase the aircraft at any time after seven months from date of said lease, to and including September 12, 1959, for $630,000 on an installment basis. The court found that this option was exercised on April 14, 1956. Pursuant to applicable rules of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, plaintiffs were required to perform a major airframe overhaul on the subject aircraft during July and August of 1956, at an alleged expense of $56,514.59. Plaintiffs' third cause of action sought to recover by way of damages the funds expended in performing the above overhaul.

The pertinent provisions of paragraph 4 of the lease provide:

"Upon the termination of this lease or any extension thereof and the return of said aircraft to Lessor, there shall be an adjustment between Lessor and Lessee on account * * * of the number of airframe hours on said aircraft since last major airframe overhaul (major airframe overhaul to mean the ten-thousand (10,000) hour overhaul as now appearing in the United States Civil Aeronautics Administration Approved Master Copy of Great Lakes Airlines, Inc. DC–4 Maintenance Manual). In this connection it is agreed by and between Lessor and Lessee that as of the date hereof * * said airframe has forty-two (42) hours since last major airframe overhaul."

Paragraph 16(d) of the lease provides:

"At the time of the delivery of said aircraft to Lessee, Lessor shall furnish Lessee with all of the aircraft records pertaining to said aircraft as required to be kept by the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and said records shall be accurate and complete and shall contain all entries necessary to make said records accurate and complete as of the date and time of the delivery of said aircraft to Lessee."

In their third cause of action, as amended and supplemented, plaintiffs in substance alleged that defendant P. D. Smith had orally represented to plaintiffs that the subject aircraft had undergone a major airframe overhaul in Japan during 1955 and had been flown but 42 hours since that overhaul and that defendant Smith would deliver to plaintiffs all of the aircraft and maintenance records pertaining to said major airframe overhaul necessary to substantiate that a major overhaul had been performed and that the airframe had been "zeroed" and "zero-timed" in Japan during 1955. That defendants refused to deliver said records and that, pursuant to Civil Aeronautics Administration rules, plaintiffs were required to perform a major airframe overhaul on the aircraft some 6,648 hours sooner than would have been necessary had defendants furnished records as they were obligated to do pursuant to paragraph 16(d) of the lease and in accordance with the oral representations of Smith.

As grounds for a reversal, plaintiffs argue that the trial court erred in holding the parol evidence rule a bar to the introduction into evidence of certain offers of proof made by plaintiffs. An examination of the record and of applicable authorities fully supports plaintiffs' contentions.

A careful reading of the record reveals that plaintiffs were apparently predicating liability upon two different theories: One theory was that in truth and in fact the airframe had in excess of 42 hours, that defendant Smith represented it had but 42 and would deliver records to that effect, and 16(d) should be read to require defendants to deliver documents reflecting "represented" rather than "actual" maintenance records. In support of this theory, plaintiffs offered testimony to the effect that Smith made certain representations to plaintiffs' agents. The court held this testimony inadmissible by virtue of the parol evidence rule. The rationale for this ruling was that the trial judge took the position that the parties, in paragraph 4, had "stipulated" that the airframe had only 42 hours and parol evidence could not be received to vary this stipulation. The court stated: "That is an agreement right in the contract, a stipulation, so I think we cannot have evidence that varies it. It is for that reason I am of the opinion that granted all statements that you expect * * * to show were made, the court can, nevertheless, not consider them. So, under those circumstances * * * you had better make an offer of proof unless you want to offer it on the theory of an ambiguity."

Plaintiffs thereupon offered to prove (1) that Smith made representations to plaintiffs and their agents, servants and employees, in the course of negotiations leading up to and preceding the execution of the lease, that the airframe had only 42 hours since its last major airframe overhaul and that it had been zeroed while in Tokyo a short time prior to that and was zero-timed; (2) that Smith represented he had or would obtain and deliver to plaintiffs records substantiating the above representations; (3) that the airframe actually had 8,148 hours and not 42; and (4) that as a result of the fact that this airframe had at that time 8,148 hours of use after its last major overhaul, the plaintiffs in this action were required to major overhaul the airframe during the months of July and August of 1956, and that the total cost of such major overhaul of the airframe alone amounted to $56,514.59.

Defendants' objections to the above offer of proof on the basis of incompetency, irrelevancy, immateriality, and the parol evidence rule were sustained, particularly on the ground of the parol evidence rule, even though the court had previously indicated the offers would be accepted on the basis of ambiguity.

[1] We are of the opinion that the contract, or at least paragraph 16(d) thereof, is ambiguous and that parol evidence should have been received by the court to ascertain exactly what the parties meant by what they said.

If paragraph 16(d) were to be read in a vacuum, it is reasonably clear that the reference therein to "accurate and complete" records pertains to records acceptable to and in conformity with Civil Aeronautics Administration standards and requirements, records which reflect actual hours on the airframe. However, this is not necessarily the case when paragraph 16(d) is read in conjunction with paragraph 4, and it is well established that the sense and meaning of a written contract is to be gathered from the whole of the instrument and individual provisions should not be read in isolation. (See Civil Code, § 1641.)

The 42 hour provision in paragraph 4, by its terms, become operative if the option to purchase was not exercised by the plaintiffs and, as the option was in fact exercised, this provision would appear to have no direct application to the case at bar. However, this provision does furnish a key to the factual foundation upon which the parties, or at least the plaintiffs, believed they were dealing.

It is reasonable to assume that plaintiffs believed that the 42 hour provision was related factually to the number of hours since the last major overhaul and that it was not just an arbitrary figure. That this is a reasonable assumption is readily apparent from the substantial amount of money which might be involved in the event the option was not exercised and the plaintiffs had to pay defendants $7.50 for each hour on the airframe in excess of 42 hours since its last major airframe overhaul as is provided for in paragraph 4. It is apparent from the length and detail of the lease that the parties were conscious of the large amount of money involved and were attempting to protect their own financial interests, and it would be unrealistic to believe that the parties would stipulate to a fictitious or arbitrary figure without some relationship to reality, or at least what the parties or one of them believed represented the actual situation at the time the lease was executed. The fact that the Civil Aeronautics Administration's requirements for overhauls are based on actual hours lends further support to the idea that the reference to 42 hours had a basis in fact.

This being the case, the intention of the parties as expressed in 16(d) is not free from doubt. Two reasonable interpretations present themselves: first, that "accurate and complete" refers to actuality, whatever that may prove to be; or, secondly, that "accurate and complete" was understood to be synonymous with or equivalent to 42 hours, in view of the foregoing discussion relative to paragraph 4. While it is true that the language of a contract is to govern its interpretation (Civ.Code, § 1638), our Supreme Court has held parol evidence admissible to aid in the interpretation of an ambiguous contract or writing. Chastain v. Belmont, 43 Cal.2d 45, 51, 271 P.2d 498. In Beneficial Fire & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Kurt Hitke & Co., 46 Cal.2d 517, 524, 297 P.2d 428, 431, the court quoted from Barham v. Barham, 33 Cal.2d 416, at page 422, 202 P.2d 289, at page 293, as follows: "When the language used is fairly susceptible to one of two constructions, extrinsic evidence may be considered, not to vary or modify the terms of the agreement but to aid the court in ascertaining the true intent of the parties (citation), not to show that 'the parties meant something other than what they said' but to show 'what they meant by what they said,' (citation)." In addition, the Beneficial case, supra, 46 Cal.2d at page 527, 297 P.2d at page 433, specifically stated that in such a situation evidence of the preliminary negotiations was admissible.

On the basis of the foregoing analysis of the lease and the authorities to which reference has been made, prejudicial error resulted from the exclusion of plaintiffs' offers of proof as to the true meaning of 16(d).

Defendants argue that the plaintiffs refused to offer evidence on the theory of ambiguity and, therefore, they are in no position to raise the question on appeal. The record, however, discloses without doubt that plaintiffs made an offer on the basis of ambiguity. The following abstract from the record is illustrative:

"The Court: * * * So, under those circumstances * * * you had better make an offer of proof unless you want to offer it on the theory of any ambiguity.

"Counsel: Well, of course, I am not limiting the nature of my offer at all, your Honor, I am offering it in general.

"The Court: Then I will state you are offering it on the basis of ambiguity, I will receive it on that basis but not otherwise.

"Counsel: Then, your Honor, I will offer it on the basis of ambiguity.

"The Court: All right, then."

At this juncture the plaintiffs made the offers of proof to which previous reference has been made and, as already noted, the court nevertheless sustained defendants' objections thereto.

[2] Plaintiffs' other theory apparently was that the airframe was overhauled in Tokyo in 1955, records made thereof, and that had defendants furnished plaintiffs with those records as they were required to do by paragraph 16(d), plaintiffs would not have had to overhaul the airplane when they were required to do so by the Civil Aeronautics Administration. In this regard, plaintiffs' counsel stated to the court: "We have already offered to prove that the defendant Smith did not, prior to the time that we majored this aircraft, furnish us the records which he undertook to furnish us by paragraph 16(d). I offer to prove—I believe at one time he did furnish us certain records on October 17, 1956 after the major overhaul was performed—but as part of my offer of proof I at this time offer in evidence and ask that it be marked for identification, a letter from P. D. Smith, Inc. by P. D. Smith, President, addressed to Nevada Aero Trades Company bearing date October 17, 1956, reading as follows: 'Re Lease of Aircraft No. N37473. Dear Sir, this letter is to notify you that on October 12, 1956, at 2:45 p. m. P. D. Smith, Inc. in accordance with the authority contained in your letter of September 25, 1956, delivered to Mr. H. S. Richards, who is Vice President, Great Lakes Airlines, Inc., at Burbank, California, certain aircraft records pertaining to that certain Douglas C-54B type aircraft, manufacturer's Serial 10513, Civil Aeronautics Administration N37473 as follows: (1) Document entitled "Air-frame periodic inspection" (JAM Co, Tokyo) consisting of 19 pages and certified by Frank L. McClasky, A&E No. 9684; (2) Document entitled "11,000-hour overhaul" consisting of 14 pages including the cover page, and certified by Frank L. McClasky A&E No. 9684. These records have just recently become available to the undersigned and those have been delivered to your representative. Very truly yours, P. D. Smith, Inc. by P. D. Smith.'

"As a part of the same offer of proof, and I would like to have it marked for identification at this time, I offer the two documents which are referred to in the letter as being transmitted with it. In addition, your Honor, I yesterday offered to prove that we had performed this major overhaul during the months of July and August, 1956, at a total cost of $56,514.59. I now want to supplement that offer of proof by an additional offer of proof to the effect that had the records which were supplied to us on October 17, 1956, after our major overhaul was complete, had those records been supplied to us in accordance with the requirements of 16(d) at the time the plane was delivered to us, we would have saved all of the cost of this overhaul with the exception of approximately $1500.00, or, in other words, that had these records been supplied to us we could have eliminated all of this major overhaul at the time it was performed except for a portion relating to one of the landing gears, the cost of which would have been approximately $1500.00, and that as part of our offer of proof, the plaintiffs in the absence of these records were required to perform the overhaul at the time they did and could not further defer it." The above documents were marked for identification but not received in evidence, the trial judge again sustaining defendants' objection based on the parol evidence rule.

It is difficult to conceive how the above in any manner tended to add to, vary or contradict paragraph 16(d). As noted, 16(d) required defendants to furnish to plaintiffs (when the aircraft was delivered) all aircraft records pertaining to the aircraft as required to be kept by the Civil Aeronautics Administration. These Tokyo records were not furnished to plaintiffs when the aircraft was delivered to them, and under sections 18.20 and 18.21 of Part 18 of the Civil Air Regulations such records were required to be maintained. Therefore, a failure to deliver these records clearly constituted a breach of 16(d) and they should have been admitted in evidence. The parol evidence rule was in no way applicable. Whether they would have actually shown the number of air hours or other data pertinent to establishing damages by the breach is not involved in this appeal. Paragraph 16(d) warranted lessor would furnish these records, and paragraph 16(g) provided that lessor would pay lessee any and all damages, costs, and expenses suffered by lessee as a result of a breach of any warranty. Plaintiffs certainly should have been permitted to establish the breach of warranty contained in 16(d).

By their second cause of action, plaintiffs sought a declaration that they validly exercised the option to purchase the aircraft either on April 14 or 18, 1956, and that certain moneys paid to the defendants should be applied toward the purchase price of the airplane. The trial court found that the option was properly exercised on April 14, 1956, and the defendants appeal.

Paragraph 15 of the lease provides:

"Option: Lessor hereby expressly grants to Lessee an absolute option to purchase said aircraft at any time after seven (7) months following the date of this agreement, and said option shall continue to and including September 12, 1959, on the following terms: Purchase price to be the sum of Six Hundred Thousand Dollars ($600,000.00) in cash with the first seven months' rent hereunder to apply against the purchase price, or the sum of Six Hundred Thirty Thousand Dollars ($630,000.00) with the first seven months' rent hereunder to apply against the purchase price and the balance payable in thirty-five (35) equal monthly installments commencing on the date said option is exercised. If said option to purchase is exercised and Lessee elects to pay on the aforesaid installment method, then the sale of said aircraft hall be effected by means of a Conditional Sales Agreement, a copy of which is marked Appendix "C", is attached hereto and made a part hereof, and the execution and delivery by Lessee to Lessor of a promissory note for the balance of the purchase price after applying the first seven (7) months' rent to the purchase price, a copy of which note is marked Appendix "D" and attached hereto and made a part hereof. Lessee shall give to Lessor at least ten (10) days' written notice of its intention to exercise said option.

"In the event Lessee elects to exercise its option to purchase said aircraft under the provisions of this paragraph fifteen (15) and elects to pay on the aforesaid installment method, Lessee shall concurrently with the giving of said written notice to Lessor of Lessee's election to exercise said option, deliver to Lessor two (2) copies of the Conditional Sale Agreement and two (2) copies of the Promissory Note attached hereto as Appendices "C" and "D" signed by Lessee. Lessor shall, at the time of delivery of said documents to him, deliver to Lessee two (2) copies of said Conditional Sale Agreement signed by Lessor. Both Lessee's and Lessor's copies of the Conditional Sale Agreement shall be duly executed and acknowledged by said parties in a form acceptable to the United States Civil Aeronautics Administration for recording purposes. If Lessor fails to deliver to Lessee the copies of said Conditional Sale Agreement as specified above, Lessee may retain possession of said aircraft in accordance with Lessee's rights under said option and Lessee shall be relieved of the obligation of making any payments to Lessor as provided hereunder or as provided in said Conditional Sale Agreement, until Lessor has delivered to Lessee the signed and acknowledged copies of said Conditional Sale Agreement.

"Lessee shall have the right to exercise the option to purchase granted herein and to execute said Conditional Sale Agreement and Promissory Note at any place desired by Lessee. Delivery of said aircraft hereunder shall be made from Lessor to Lessee at any place in the continental United States designated by Lessee, and the cost of delivery of said aircraft to such designated place of delivery shall be borne by Lessee."

On or about March 31, 1956, plaintiffs notified defendants that they intended to exercise the above option and would take delivery at Cape May County Airport, Wildwood, N. J., on April 13, 1956. Accompanying the above notice were four copies of a Conditional Sale Agreement in the form provided for in the lease, together with a promissory note in the principal amount of $507,500. The notice also provided that "the Conditional Sale of said aircraft and the delivery of such Conditional Sale Agreement and said Promissory Note to you shall be effective upon but not before the delivery of said aircraft to Nevada Aero Trades Company at Wildwood, New Jersey, on April 13, pursuant to the terms of said Conditional Sale Agreement."

On April 12, 1956, Charles Older, attorney for plaintiffs, informed defendants that the aircraft had been delayed and would not arrive at Wildwood until April 14. On April 14, Richard Keatinge, another attorney for plaintiffs, met the defendants' representative Smith at Wildwood. Due to weather conditions, the aircraft was not then present, but Keatinge nevertheless tendered to Smith a check for $14,500 and the lease and receipt, and demanded from Smith the two executed copies of the Conditional Sale Agreement. Keatinge told Smith that the condition requiring the aircraft to be present was waived. Keatinge's authority to waive this provision was not in writing. Smith refused the tender and remarked that he would do nothing until the aircraft arrived. Plaintiffs' agent, Senko, and Smith met at Wildwood on April 18, at which time the aircraft had arrived and the tender renewed, yet Smith again refused the tender without stating any particular objections thereto. Senko had written authority to act for plaintiffs.

It is defendants' position that the presence of the aircraft was a condition precedent to the operation and effectiveness of the exercise of option, and that as personal property in excess of $500 was involved, the agreement was within the statute of frauds and plaintiffs' agent's authority to make same must have been in writing and, as it was not, the defendants were justified in refusing to accept the agent's waiver for the plaintiffs would not be bound by it.

[3] Section 2309 of the Civil Code only requires an agent's authority to be in writing when the contract itself is required to be in writing. We are of the opinion that Keatinge did not purport to enter into or modify a contract. The provision relative to the aircraft's presence was not part of the option provision of the lease. Furthermore, assuming, arguendo, that he did enter into or modify a contract, it is clear under the provisions of section 1973a, Code of Civil Procedure, and sections 1624a and 1724 of the Civil Code, that the instant transaction relative to the purchase of the aircraft was not required to be in writing. These sections are identical and provide that a contract for the sale of goods of the value of five hundred dollars or more must be in writing. It is further provided, however, that a writing is not required if the buyer shall make part payment. In the instant case, plaintiffs not only executed and delivered the promissory note to the defendants, but the rent that actually had been paid for the first seven months was to be applied toward the purchase price, under the terms of the lease and option agreement, and this is sufficient part payment to take this phase of the transaction out of the statute of frauds. It therefore follows that the delivery aspect here in question was not within the statute of frauds. Hence, the agent's authority relative thereto need not have been in writing.

That portion of the judgment from which plaintiffs appeal is reversed; that portion of the judgment from which defendants appeal is affirmed.

Vaughn A. TURNER, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Clifford H. TURNER, and Marcella E. Turner, formerly known as Marcella E. Gilbert, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 23403.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 5, 1959.

Suit to have written consent of parent to marriage of minor under age of 18 years cancelled on ground of fraud and to have marriage annulled. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Beach Vasey, J., denying the relief sought, an appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that since false representations, that plaintiff's son and the other defendant had already been married in Mexico and that plaintiff's son was the father of the other defendant's unborn child, had been made with intent to induce plaintiff to sign consent to marriage and had been relied upon by him in giving his consent and since he had been ignorant of falsity of such representations and reasonably believed them to be true, he was entitled to have consent canceled, on ground of fraud, and to have marriage annulled.

Reversed.

1. Marriage ⇐58(7)

Where false representations, that plaintiff's son and the other defendant had already been married in Mexico and that plaintiff's son was the father of the other defendant's unborn child, were made with intent to induce plaintiff to sign consent to marriage and were relied upon by him in giving his consent, and he had been ignorant of falsity of such representations and had reasonably believed them to be true, he was entitled to have consent canceled, on ground of fraud, and to have marriage annulled. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 56, 69.

2. Contracts ⇐94(1)

Fraud vitiates all transactions into which it enters.

3. Contracts ⇐94(1)

Free consent is an indispensable element of every transaction, and there is no real or free consent when it is obtained through fraud. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1567.

4. Marriage ⇐19

Free consent of parent to marriage of male under age of 18 years is essential to very existence of nonvoidable marriage. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 56, 69.

5. Marriage ⇐19

Where parent's consent to marriage was obtained by fraud, consent was not absolutely void, but was voidable; and marriage was likewise voidable. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 56, 69.

6. Cancellation of Instruments ⇐4, 47

Remedy afforded by Civil Code section, authorizing adjudication of invalidity and order for cancellation of written instrument, includes fraud; and if facts are proved, a case is established. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 1566, 3412.

7. Cancellation of Instruments ⇐8

The "injury" referred to in Civil Code section, providing for adjudications of invalidity and for ordering cancellation of written instruments, is not limited to pecuniary loss, and it may be alteration of one's position to his prejudice; and to be entitled to relief under that section, it is not necessary to allege or prove any pecuniary loss so long as record indicates there was injury or prejudice resulting from fraud. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1566, 3412.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Injury".

8. Marriage ⇐25(2)

Purpose of statute providing that the marriage license shall not be issued to a person under age without consent of parent is to permit parent to exercise control and discipline over child until marriage, and to that end prevent him, if possible, from contracting an ill-advised marriage. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 56, 69.

9. Parent and Child ⇐2(1)

The right of a fit and proper parent to his child's custody is somewhat in the nature of a property right, and is paramount, in a sense, to the child's theoretical welfare and best interests. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 197, 204, 213.

10. Guardian and Ward ⇐4

Parents are natural guardians of their child and are responsible to the state for child's well-being.

11. Parent and Child ⇐2(1)

Parent has authority to control child, and to administer restraint and punishment in order to compel obedience to reasonable and necessary directions.

12. Marriage ⇐58(1)

A marriage entered into by a male under age of 18 years without written consent of one of his parents is subject to annulment at instance of parents. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 82, subd. 1; § 83, subd. 1.

13. Marriage ⇐19, 56

Civil Code section requiring written consent of parent to marriage of male under age of 18 years and Civil Code sections providing for annulment of marriages express policy strong enough to overcome any public interest there may be in upholding validity of marriages. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 56, 82–85.

14. Bastards ⇐1

Annulment of marriage, even on ground that husband's father's consent had been obtained by false representation that husband was father of wife's unborn child, would not bastardize child born to wife. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 56, 82–85.

15. Marriage ⇐60(2)

Where fraud was consummated on October 8, 1957, complaint, to cancel written consent of parent to marriage of minor and to have marriage annulled, was timely filed on January 23, 1958.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiff from an adverse judgment in a suit to have the written consent of the parent to the marriage of a minor under the age of 18 years canceled on the ground of fraud and to have the marriage annulled.

The facts are undisputed. Plaintiff Vaughn A. Turner is the father of defendant Clifford H. Turner. Clifford was born on December 29, 1939. Clifford and Marcella E. Gilbert sought the consent of plaintiff to their marriage. They represented to him that they had "got" married in Tijuana, that they had to get married because Marcella was pregnant, and that "Clifford was the father." On October 8, 1957 plaintiff gave his written consent to the marriage of Clifford to Marcella. The representation that Clifford and Marcella had been married in Tijuana was false. Marcella was pregnant. The representation that Clifford was the father of the unborn child was false. Marcella had been pregnant about 7 months at the time Clifford first met her. He did not have intercourse with her prior to the marriage. Clifford knew at the time he made the representations to his father that they were not true. Plaintiff relied on the false representations in giving his consent to the marriage. He would not have given his consent had he known the representations were false. The written consent was filed with the county clerk of the County of Los Angeles and he issued a license.

Clifford and Marcella were married on October 15, 1957. Thus Clifford was under the age of 18 years at the time of the marriage. A child was born to Marcella on December 23, 1957. The birth certificate gives the name of the child as "Kathleen Martha Belden," the name of the father as "James Taylor Belden," Marcella's name as "Marcella E. Belden," and it was signed "Marcella E. Belden."

The complaint prayed for judgment declaring: that Clifford is not the father of the child born December 23, 1957; that the written consent of plaintiff to the marriage is null and void; and that the marriage is null and void. The defendants Clifford and Marcella defaulted. The court found that the consent of the father should not be canceled and that plaintiff is not entitled to an annulment of the marriage. The judgment was merely that plaintiff is not entitled to annul the marriage of defendants and that a decree of annulment is denied. Plaintiff appeals.

[1] Plaintiff contends that on the undisputed facts he was entitled to the relief prayed for. We have concluded his contention must be sustained.

A male under the age of 18 years is incapable of contracting a binding marriage without the written consent of one of his parents and court approval. Civil Code, section 56, provides that any male under the age of 18 years, with the consent in writing of one of his parents, where such written consent is filed with the clerk issuing the license, "and where, after such showing as the superior court may require an order of said superior court is made, granting permission to said person to marry, is capable of consenting to and consummating marriage." (Emphasis ours.) Civil Code, section 69, provides that the license to marry must show the ages of the parties and "If the male is under the age of 21 years, or the female is under the age of 18 years, and such person has not been previously married, no license may be issued by the county clerk unless both parties are capable of consenting to and consummating marriage as provided for in Section 56 of this code and such consent or consents must be filed by the clerk, and he must state such facts in the license."

We have a clear case of fraud: the representations were as to material facts; they were false and known to be false by the parties making them; they were made with the intent to induce plaintiff to sign the consent to the marriage; they were relied on by plaintiff; plaintiff was misled and deceived and induced to act by them; in acting, plaintiff was ignorant of the falsity of the representations and reasonably believed them to be true. 23 Cal.Jur.2d 27, § 11.

[2–4] Fraud vitiates all transactions into which it enters. Atchison T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. West, 176 Cal. 148, 152, 167 P. 868; Millar v. Millar, 175 Cal. 797, 801–804, 167 P. 394, L.R.A.1918B. Free consent is an indispensable element of every transaction. There is no real or free consent when it is obtained through fraud; consent, clouded by fraud, is not legal consent. Civ.Code, § 1567; Butler v. Collins, 12 Cal. 457, 463. Free consent of a parent to the marriage of a male under the age of 18 years is essential to the very existence of a nonvoidable marriage.

In re Barents, 99 Cal.App.2d 748, at page 750, 222 P.2d 488, at page 490, says:

> "Responsive to the need for legislative action our Legislature has from the earliest years of statehood provided a statutory plan whereunder adoptions could be carried out. A fundamental requisite has always been the consent of the parent or parents entitled to the custody of the child and charged with the duties of caring for it. As was said by the Supreme Court in Matter of Cozza, 163 Cal. 514, 522, 126 P. 161, 164, Ann.Cas.1914A, 214: '* * * Consent lies at the foundation of statutes of adoption, and under our law this consent is made absolutely essential to confer jurisdiction on the superior court to make an order of adoption, unless the conditions or exceptions exist specially provided by the statute itself and which render such consent of the parents unnecessary. Unless such consent is given, or, for the exceptional causes expressly enumerated is dispensed with, the court has no jurisdiction in the matter.'
>
> "The state in its position of parens patriae is of course charged with a continuing interest in the welfare of children within its borders and our State has surrounded the matter of their custody and care, including their adoption, with many protective statutory laws. With regard to adoption, the statutory scheme is complete and detailed and the requisite of consent has been carefully preserved and is general, except where statutorily defined exceptions exist."

(Also see Arnold v. Howell, 98 Cal.App.2d 202, 206, 219 P.2d 854.) The same reasoning applies to the statutory requirement of the written consent of one of the parents to the marriage of a minor. It follows that the consent given by plaintiff was not free and voluntary; it was not the consent required by section 56. Consequently, Clifford was married without the consent of his parent.

[5] A consent which is not free is nevertheless not absolutely void; it is voidable and may be rescinded by the party giving the consent. Civ.Code, § 1566. Since the consent to the marriage was obtained by fraud, the marriage is voidable. Estate of Gregorson, 160 Cal. 21, 25–26, 116 P. 60,

L.R.A.1916C, 697; Easterly v. Cook, 140 Cal.App. 115, 121, 35 P.2d 164; People v. Souleotes, 26 Cal.App. 309, 310–311, 146 P. 903.

[6, 7] The written consent given by plaintiff may be canceled. Civil Code, section 3412, provides:

> "A written instrument, in respect to which there is a reasonable apprehension that if left outstanding it may cause serious injury to a person against whom it is void or voidable, may, upon his application, be so adjudged, and ordered to be delivered up or canceled."

The remedy thus afforded manifestly includes fraud; and if the facts are proved, a case is established. Hironymous v. Hiatt, 52 Cal.App. 727, 731, 199 P. 850. The injury referred to in section 3412 is not limited to pecuniary loss; it may be the alteration of one's position to his prejudice. It is not necessary to allege or prove any pecuniary loss so long as the record indicates there was injury or prejudice resulting from the fraud. 9 Cal.Jur.2d 545, § 15. It is sufficient to show that the plaintiff is in a worse position than he otherwise would have been. Costello v. Roer, 77 Cal.App.2d 174, 179, 175 P.2d 65. In Vulcan Fire Ins. Co. v. Jorgensen, 33 Cal.App. 763, 767, 166 P. 835, 837, it was held that misrepresentations that a certain bank president was to be connected with plaintiff company "are sufficient to entitle the subscriber to rescind, without proof of pecuniary damage suffered." The court observed that this rule "is well settled." This language was quoted with approval in Munson v. Fishburn, 183 Cal. 206, 218, 190 P. 808.

[8–11] That plaintiff altered his position to his prejudice by giving his consent to the marriage is patent. The purpose of a statute providing that a marriage license shall not be issued to a person under age without the consent of a parent is to permit the parent to exercise control and discipline over a child until marriage and to that end prevent him, if possible, from contracting an ill-advised marriage. Lundstrom v. Mample, 205 Minn. 91, 285 N.W. 83, 84. The father and mother of a legitimate unmarried minor child are entitled to its custody, services, and earnings. Civ.Code, § 197. The right of a fit and proper parent to his child's custody is somewhat in the nature of a property right, and is paramount, in a sense, to the child's theoretical welfare and best interests. Shea v. Shea, 100 Cal.App.2d 60, 65, 223 P.2d 32. A parent entitled to the custody of a child has a right to change his residence. Civ.Code, § 213. The parents are the natural guardians of their child, and are responsible to the state for the child's well-being. 37 Cal.Jur.2d 145, § 7. The parent has authority to control the child, and to administer restraint and punishment, in order to compel obedience to reasonable and necessary directions. People v. Curtiss, 116 Cal.App.Supp. 771, 300 P. 801. The authority of a parent ceases on the marriage of a child. Civ.Code, § 204.

> "A marriage may be annulled for any of the following causes, existing at the time of the marriage:
>
> "One. That the party in whose behalf it is sought to have the marriage annulled was without the capability of consenting thereto as provided for in Section 56 of this code; unless, after attaining the age of consent, such party for any time freely cohabited with the other as husband or wife."

The facts do not bring the case within this exception. Subdivision One of section 82 obviously was designed for the protection of parents. Section 83 provides:

> "An action to obtain a decree of nullity of marriage, for causes mentioned in the preceding section, must be commenced within the periods and by the parties, as follows:

"One. For causes mentioned in subdivision one: by the party to the marriage who was married under the age of legal consent, within four years after arriving at the age of consent; or by a parent, guardian, or other person having charge of such non-aged male or female, at any time before such married minor has arrived at the age of legal consent."

Vaughan v. Gideon, 56 Cal.App.2d 158, 132 P.2d 529, is squarely in point. It was an action for annulment of a marriage brought by the father of a minor. The minor, 15 years of age, was married without the knowledge or consent of her parents. A child was born of the union about seven months after the marriage. The court stated (56 Cal.App.2d at page 161, 132 P.2d at page 531):

"Section 82 of our Civil Code, so far as material here, provides that a marriage may be annulled when the party in whose behalf it is sought was under the age of legal consent and when it was contracted without the consent of the parents. Section 83 of that code gives a parent the right to commence such an action when it is based upon that ground. The right to commence and maintain such an action would seem to carry with it a right to the relief thus provided for where the complaint is sufficient and the necessary facts are established without conflict. That is the precise situation here. * * * [56 Cal.App.2d at page 162, 132 P.2d at page 531.] When the facts contemplated by these statutes are established without contradiction, and when the evidence woud not sustain a finding of other or different material facts, if one was made, there would appear to be little room for the exercise of discretion upon the part of the trial court. Under the circumstances which here appear, it was an abuse of any possible discretion to deny all relief.

"It would appear from the record that the trial court denied any relief to the appellant largely, if not entirely, because the minor in question had sworn falsely in securing the marriage license in Arizona. * * * In the amicus curiae brief this circumstance is relied on as showing that this minor did not come into court with clean hands, which is urged as a sufficient reason for denying any relief in this case. However, this action is one brought by the father of the minor, as permitted by the statute, and while this minor admitted on the stand that she had sworn falsely in securing the marriage license this fact neither reflects upon the appellant nor affects his separate and distinct right to ask for and receive the remedy given him by these statutes.

"Every material fact required by these statutes was alleged and established by the evidence, there was absolutely no evidence to the contrary, and no valid reason appears for refusing the relief prayed for." (Emphasis ours.)

[13, 14] Sections 56, 82, and 83 define and establish the rights of the parties. The policy they express is strong enough to overcome any public interest there may be in upholding the validity of marriages. Sirois v. Sirois, 94 N.H. 215, 50 A.2d 88, 89. To permit a parent to be defrauded into giving his consent would be to deprive him of the control of the marital status of his child which the law has specifically given to him. The annulment of the marriage will not bastardize the child born to Marcella. A judgment of nullity of marriage does not affect the legitimacy of a child born before the judgment. Civ.Code, §§ 84, 85.

[15] There is no question of laches involved. The fraud was consummated on October 8, 1957; the complaint was filed January 23, 1958.

It was error for the trial court to arbitrarily refuse on the undisputed facts to grant the relief prayed for. Putman v.

Putman, 116 Cal.App.2d 841, 842, 254 P.2d 589; Dobson v. Dobson, 86 Cal.App.2d 13, 14, 193 P.2d 794.

v.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF COUNTY OF ORANGE et al., Respondents.*

Civ. 5917.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 6, 1959.

Rehearing Granted March 6, 1959.

Action by property owners for writ of mandate requiring county board of supervisors to vacate and set aside order granting conditional permit for building of school allegedly contrary to applicable zoning ordinance. From adverse judgment of Superior Court of Orange County, Raymond Thompson, J., property owners appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Stone, J. pro tem., held that under county zoning ordinance permitting issuances of conditional use permits for certain buildings including schools and colleges upon approval of plans by planning commission and under ordinance authorizing board of supervisors to grant variances, such ordinances could not be said to be interdependent and ordinance respecting granting of variance could not be held applicable to ordinance respecting issuance of conditional use permits.

Reversed.

1. Counties ⇐21½, 55

County zoning ordinance permitting the issuance of conditional permits by board of supervisors for certain buildings including schools after the plans have been approved by planning commission, standing alone, required approval of planning commission as to particular uses covered and such ordinance could not be construed with another ordinance authorizing the granting of variance permits by board of supervisors since ordinances did not complement each other and were not interchangeable, and hence could not be construed together to permit granting of conditional use permits by board of supervisors without approval of plans by planning commission.

2. Counties ⇐21½

Where county zoning ordinance provided for granting of conditional permits by board of supervisors for construction of schools when plans had been approved by planning commission and application for construction of school had been submitted to planning commission which recommended to board of supervisors that they deny permit, and board subsequently authorized applicant to amend application without referring same to planning commission, and another county zoning ordinance provided that applications for conditional permits or variance permits were to be made to planning commission, board of supervisors was required to refer matter again to planning commission.

3. Constitutional Law ⇐84
Counties ⇐21½

County zoning ordinance allowing issuance of conditional permits for construction of schools after plans have been approved by the planning commission is not unconstitutional as constituting an interference with the right to free exercise of religion and education. STONE, Justice pro tem.

The respondent Board of Supervisors enacted a land use plan for Orange County entitled "The Districting Ordinance". The respondent, The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles, petitioned the Orange County Planning Commission to permit the establishment of a church and elementary parochial school in the 100–E4 Small Estates District. After hearings, the Planning Commission recommended denial of the application on the grounds that (1) the site was not large enough to take care of students under customary state standards and also provide adequate parking space; (2) that "Material detriment or injury to the neighborhood will result from issuance of this permit."

After disapproval by the Planning Commission, the matter was submitted to the Board of Supervisors, and the Board held a hearing on May 22, 1957. On that date the Board of Supervisors heard the evidence submitted and closed the hearing with a motion to reach a decision on the application on Wednesday, May 29, 1957.

On May 29, 1957, the Board of Supervisors met, and without reopening the hearings the applicant proposed to amend the application by changing the location and number of the access roads, the size, type, number and location of the buildings, the size and location of the parking area, the size and location of the playground area and by the addition of a second parcel of real property. No formal amended application was filed either with the Planning Commission or the Board of Supervisors. The matter was continued to June 5, 1957, on which date the Board of Supervisors, without reopening the hearing, allowed the respondent applicant to file an amended plot plan and verbally amend the original application to conform to the amended plot plan. Neither the amended plot plan nor the amended application was referred to the Planning Commission. The Board of Supervisors authorized the issuance of the conditional permit on the basis of the proposed amended application and the amended plot plan.

The petitioners, T. Cecil Ostrander and F. N. Clark, are residents and property owners residing in the County of Orange and in the immediate vicinity of the property to which the conditional permit in controversy applies. Both of said petitioners, T. Cecil Ostrander and F. N. Clark, are members of the Board of Directors of petitioner, Tustin Heights Association, which is an unincorporated association. Its members are residents and property owners in the area in which the property in question is located, which is within the 100–E4 Small Estates District. Petitioners filed their petition on the basis of a representative suit on behalf of the members of the Association. They sought a writ of mandate requiring the Board of Supervisors, collectively and individually, to vacate and set aside the order of the Board of Supervisors granting the conditional permit. The petition further requested that a writ of mandate issue against C. W. Donohue, Orange County Building Superintendent of Building and Safety, to refrain from in any manner issuing a construction permit for the construction of the church and school requested in the conditional permit, and if a permit had been issued that it be revoked and rendered null and void.

This is an appeal by the petitioners, Tustin Heights Association, by Cecil Ostrander and F. N. Clark, individually and on behalf of the members of said association, from the judgment on demurrer after the demurrer of the respondents to the second amended petition was sustained without leave to amend.

This action is concerned with four sections of the zoning ordinance pertaining to the area in which the respondent, The Roman Catholic Bishop of Los Angeles, proposed to establish a church and an elementary parochial school. Section 9.2 E4 entitled "Small Estates" District Regulations, provides, insofar as pertinent, as follows:

"A. Uses Permitted: * * *

"7. The following additional uses, subject to the issuance of Conditional Permits therefor, as prescribed in Section 19: * * *

"b. Churches, museums and libraries.

"c. Schools and colleges."

Thus conditional permits for the use of churches and schools may be issued pursuant to the ordinance, but only under the conditions provided by section 19. The applicable subsections of section 19 provide:

"Section 19. Conditional Permits and Variance Permits.

"A. Conditional Permits:

"The Board of Supervisors, after receipt of the report and the recommendation of the Planning Commission as hereinafter in this section provided shall have the power to authorize the issuance of conditional permits by the Building Inspector for specified types of uses and building in the foregoing Districts, as provided in the use regulations of such districts, under conditions which will preserve the integrity and character of the district, the utility and value of adjacent property and the general welfare of the neighborhood. Minimum conditions therefor are specifically as follows, * *.

"7. Churches, museums and libraries, upon condition that the location and building and plot plans be approved by the Planning Commission.

"8. Schools, colleges, public playgrounds and athletic fields upon the following conditions:

"a. An area adequate in the judgment of the Planning Commission be provided to reduce possibility of injury to adjoining residential properties.

"b. Building and plot plans be approved by the Planning Commission.

"c. The location of the school site be approved by the Planning Commission."

This section standing alone requires the approval of the Planning Commission as to the particular uses covered by subdivisions 7 and 8 of section 19–A. Such approval is specifically made a "minimum condition" by the wording of division A of section 19. The trial court held that subdivision 19–A should not be interpreted independently but should be construed with section 19–B in determining whether the Board of Supervisors has the authority to grant a conditional permit without the approval of the Planning Commission as required by subdivisions 7 and 8 of section 19–A. Section 19–B, which the trial court held to be controlling, reads as follows:

"B. Variance permits:

"The Board of Supervisors, after receipt of the report and recommendation of the Planning Commission as hereinafter in this section provided, shall have the power to grant variances to the height, yard, area and use regulations of this ordinance and authorize the issuance of Variance Permits therefor by the Building Inspector, in cases where practical difficulty, unnecessary hardships or results inconsistent with the general purpose and intent of this ordinance occur through strict application of such regulations and under such conditions as said Board may deem necessary to assure that the General purpose and intent of this ordinance will be observed, public safety and welfare secured, and substantial justice done."

Subsection B clearly vests in the Board of Supervisors the authority to grant a variance when the conditions enumerated therein are shown to exist. There is nothing in Section 19–B requiring a favorable recommendation by the Planning Commission as a prerequisite to granting a variance.

[1] If section 19–B can be said to be applicable to section 19–A then the recommendation of the Planning Commission referred to in 19–A is unnecessary. However, section 19–A concerns Conditional Permits and 19–B concerns Variances and they do not complement one another nor are they interchangeable. The regulations and restrictions concerning each type of zoning are separately stated in the ordinance. No provision of the ordinance has been pointed out by either party specifically making sections 19–A and 19–B interdependent and our review of the ordinance has disclosed none. From our examination of the whole ordinance these sections do not appear to be interdependent. The distinction between a conditional permit and a variance is noted in Essick v. City of Los Angeles, 34 Cal.2d 614, at page 623, 213 P.2d 492, at page 498, wherein the court said:

"Aside from the difference in language between the variance provisions of the charter and the conditional use provisions of the Zoning Plan, which indicates the difference in character of the purposes sought to be accomplished, the case of Johnston v. Board of Supervisors (1947), supra, 31 Cal. 2d 66, 73, 187 P.2d 686, recognizes that a 'use permit' and a 'variance' are not the same and at least suggests that the granting of the latter involves a 'broader power' than does the granting of a use permit. Also, Wheeler v. Gregg (1949), supra, 90 Cal.App.2d 348 [363], 203 P.2d 37, makes the distinction with respect to the same Los Angeles ordinance which we are considering here. (See also, Thomson v. Tafel (1949), 309 Ky. 753, 218 S.W. 2d 977, 981; Illinois Bell Telephone Co. v. Fox (1949), 402 Ill. 617, 85 N. E.2d 43, 50.)"

The respondents argue that the Board of Supervisors has the power to issue a conditional permit regardless of the recommendation of the Planning Commission and without referring the amended petition back to the Planning Commission because ultimate authority rests in the Board. In essence their argument is that the powers delegated to the Planning Commission are advisory in nature and simply amount to a delegation of authority to an inferior body by a superior body, and that the superior body is the final repository of power in that area of government. Thus they contend the board is not limited to the power to approve or refuse to approve the recommendation of the Planning Commission but has the power to make an independent decision. This proposition was advanced cogently and forcefully in the dissenting opinion in Johnston v. Board of Supervisors, supra, but that theory was rejected by the majority of the court.

[2] Even though Section 19–A concerning conditional permits and 19–B concerning variances were to be construed together, the demurrer in this case should not have been sustained without leave to amend. The Planning Commission recommended to the Board of Supervisors that they deny the permit. Thereafter, on May 22, 1957, the Board of Supervisors held a public meeting and the matter was taken under submission. On May 29, 1957, respondent church amended the application by changing the locations of roads, adding additional property to the site, changing the number and locations of the buildings and the size and location of the parking area and of the playground area. The matter was continued to June 5, 1957, at which time the board made its minute order approving the granting of the permit in accordance with the amended application. The amended application was not referred to the Planning Commission after the amendments were made. Section 19–C of the ordinance specifies the procedure to be followed when an application for either a conditional permit or a variance is amended and reads as follows:

"C. Procedure—Conditional Permits and Variance Permits:

"Application for a Conditional Permit or a Variance Permit shall be made to the Planning Commission. The Planning Commission shall prescribe the form, content and manner of preparing and submitting any application provided for in this section * * *.

"9. The Board of Supervisors after receipt of the report and recommendation of the Planning Commission may grant amendment of any Conditional Permit or Variance Permit and authorize the issuance of an Amended Conditional Permit or Amended Variance Permit by the County Building Inspector under the following provisions: * * *.

"e. That the application for such amendment shall be subject to the same requirements as to filing of plot plans and related information as was required in filing application for the original permit."

Thus when an application, whether it be for a conditional permit or a variance, is amended, the application as amended must be referred to the Planning Commission in accordance with 19–C 9–e. An allegation raising the question of procedure as an issue is properly pleaded in the petition. Thus the question of whether or not the board complied with the procedure specified in the ordinance is an issue regardless of whether or not the Board of Supervisors has the authority to grant either a conditional permit or a variance contrary to the recommendation of the Planning Commission. The Board of Supervisors is bound by the provisions of its own ordinance (Johnston v. Board of Supervisors, 31 Cal. 2d 66, at page 76, 187 P.2d 686, at page 692).

[3] Counsel for the respondent, The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles, argues that the zoning ordinance violates Article I, Section 4 of the California Constitution and the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution in that it is an interference with the right to the free exercise of religion and education. These arguments were presented in the case of Corporation of Presiding Bishop of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. City of Porterville, 90 Cal.App.2d 656, 203 P.2d 823, construing a zoning ordinance which prohibited the building of a church in an area zoned for single family dwellings. In answer to the contention that the zoning ordinance interfered with religious worship the court held that the enactment of zoning ordinances is a valid exercise of the police power of the state, the purpose of which is to promote the public health, safety, morals and general welfare. The court specifically held that zoning ordinances do not offend the constitutional right of freedom of religious worship in the following language at page 660 of 90 Cal.App.2d, at page 825 of 203 P.2d:

"We find no merit in plaintiff's contention that the application of the ordinance to the plaintiff results in an unwarranted restriction of religious worship. The petitioner is not a congregation, but holds its property as a corporation sole, the existence of which depends upon the laws of the State. Having such right from the State, the enjoyment of the property is subject to reasonable regulations. The denial of a building permit did not prohibit anyone from religious worship and there is nothing in the record before us to indicate that the church building could not be erected if located in the area zoned for that purpose."

The judgment is reversed.

v.

NORTH WHITTIER HIGHLANDS, INC., and Herbert Shapiro, Doe Corporation, Roe Corporation, Doe One, Doe Two, Doe Three, Doe Four and Doe Five, Defendants.

North Whittier Highlands, Inc., Respondent.

Civ. 23410.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 10, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 8, 1959.

Action by broker against corporate landowner and its president to recover commissions under oral contract whereby broker was employed to obtain certain grocery store as tenant for market to be constructed on corporation's property on terms and conditions satisfactory to corporation. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joseph L. Call, J., broker appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that there was substantial evidence to sustain finding that there had been no meeting of the minds between corporation and grocery store which had negotiated for construction of a grocery store that was admittedly beyond the financial capacity of corporation, and that corporation had not done anything to frustrate or prevent performance of contract by broker.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1)

On appeal, evidence would be construed most strongly in favor of respondent.

2. Brokers ⇐40

Right of broker to recover commission must be measured by terms of his contract and broker may by special agreement make his commission dependent upon a contingency or happening of a condition precedent, and unless such contingency occurs or such condition happens, he has no right of recovery.

3. Brokers ⇐49(1)

For broker to recover commission, there must be a substantial observance of the terms of the contract.

4. Brokers ⇐86(1)

In action to recover broker's commission based on oral contract by which landowners employed broker to obtain certain grocery store as tenant for a market to be constructed on owner's property, on terms and conditions satisfactory to owner, where testimony disclosed that broker conducted negotiations between owner and grocery store relative to terms and conditions of lease, and grocery store submitted a counterproposal conditioned on owner's acceptance of its terms which modified owner's prior proposal, but owner refused to accept such terms, broker failed to sustain burden of showing that it had obtained grocery store as a tenant on terms or conditions satisfactory to owner.

5. Brokers ⇐52

Before broker is entitled to compensation, negotiations which he is authorized to make must be concluded or conducted to state where, as to all material or essential terms of sale, there is a meeting of minds or an agreement between principal and customer produced by him, but if principal and customer are unable to come to terms, broker cannot recover.

6. Brokers ⇐49(2)

Acceptance of owner's offer to lease must be unconditional in order that broker be entitled to a commission for procuring a tenant.

7. Brokers ⇐84(1)

Where broker sought to recover commission based upon oral contract with landowner to obtain grocery store as tenant for market to be constructed on owner's property on terms and conditions satisfactory to owner, in order to recover, broker had burden of proving he fully executed contract and nothing remained to be done but to pay the commission or in absence of such showing, that complete performance was prevented by owner.

8. Brokers ⇐86(1)

In action to recover brokerage commission from landowner based upon oral contract whereby broker was employed by landowner to obtain designated grocery store as tenant for a market to be constructed on owner's property on terms and conditions satisfactory to owner, where testimony showed that the financial ability of owner prevented construction of market as desired by grocery store, there was substantial evidence to support finding that owner did not frustrate and prevent broker's performance of contract.

9. Appeal and Error ⇐989, 1010(1), 1011(1)

In reviewing evidence on appeal, it is not function of court to weigh it, determine credibility of witnesses or to resolve factual conflicts, and if there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support conclusion reached by trial court, appellate court is bound thereby.

10. Appeal and Error ⇐927(3), 989

In reviewing contention that trial court erred in granting defendant's motion for nonsuit, appellate court views evidence in light most favorable to plaintiff, disregards that which is unfavorable and draws every reasonable inference therefrom in plaintiff's favor.

11. Brokers ⇐84(1)

Where broker sued president of corporation individually for commission allegedly due on contract to procure tenant for building contemplated to be erected on corporation's property, burden was upon broker to prove that president acted in his individual capacity.

12. Brokers ⇐86(1)

In broker's action to recover commissions from corporate landowner and its president under oral contract between broker and president by which broker was employed to obtain tenant for market to be constructed on corporation's property on terms and conditions satisfactory to corporation, there was substantial evidence to support finding that corporate president acted as officer of corporation and not individually in negotiations with broker and in his discussions on behalf of corporation.

Max Fink, Cyrus Levinthal, Emmet G. Lavery, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellants.

Fleming, Robbins & Tinsman, C. S. Tinsman, Clay Robbins, Los Angeles, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in defendant's favor arising out of an action to recover a broker's commission based upon full performance of an oral contract; or, in the alternative, the reasonable value of services rendered on the theory that full performance was prevented by defendants.

On pre-trial, the parties entered into a written stipulation wherein they agreed, among other things, that plaintiff Burke (a licensed real estate broker) was employed in March, 1955, by defendant North Whittier Highlands, Inc. to obtain Shopping Bag Food Stores as a lessee for a market to be constructed on defendant's property "on terms and conditions satisfactory to the defendant, North Whittier Highlands, Inc."; that defendant Shapiro, its president (a licensed contractor), handled the negotiations and discussions on behalf of the corporation; that it was understood between the corporation and Burke that if a lease with Shopping Bag Food Stores was obtained "on terms and conditions satisfactory to North Whittier Highlands, Inc." it would be obligated to pay a broker's commission for securing the same.

At the conclusion of plaintiffs' case, the trial court granted a nonsuit as to defendant Shapiro and, after further admission of evidence, rendered judgment for North Whittier Highlands, Inc. It found there was no meeting of the minds on the terms of a lease or type of building to be constructed; no lease was entered into or executed between defendant and Shopping Bag Food Stores; plaintiffs did not perform their undertaking to procure Shopping Bag Food Stores as a lessee for the market to be constructed on terms and conditions satisfactory to defendant; plaintiffs earned no commission; and defendant did not prevent or frustrate performance by plaintiffs and did not, without cause, fail to consummate and withdraw from the lease arrangement.

[1] Although there is sharp conflict on many points raised in the testimony, in construing the evidence most strongly in favor of respondent (Crisci v. Sorci, 115 Cal.App.2d 76, 251 P.2d 383; Monastero v. Los Angeles Transit Co., 131 Cal.App.2d 156, 280 P.2d 187), the following is a fair summary of the facts pertinent to the issues raised herein.

In March, 1955, North Whittier Highlands, Inc., (hereinafter referred to as defendant) under an oral contract, employed Burke, now deceased, to obtain Shopping Bag Food Stores as a lessee for a market to be constructed by defendant on certain of its real property on "terms and conditions satisfactory to the defendant, North Whittier Highlands, Inc.," on a lease on "terms and conditions satisfactory" to defendant. Shortly thereafter, with defendant's consent, and at the insistence of Mr. Hayden, President of Shopping Bag, Burke associated plaintiff Uhlmann to assist him in the negotiations. Uhlmann was familiar with Shopping Bag's needs, having already conferred with Hayden and taken him to inspect the location, and having discussed the "kind of deal" Shopping Bag would make with defendant. Hayden offered $26,400 minimum rental on a building to be constructed by defendant and told Uhlmann this was "absolute top."

Following negotiations between plaintiffs and Hayden, defendant, on March 30, 1955, submitted to Shopping Bag a written offer (Exhibit 5) for the lease of a building to be constructed by defendant, which offer referred to defendant's pending zoning application. Hayden rejected it as wholly unsatisfactory and admonished Uhlmann for bringing it to him.

On April 14, 1955, defendant submitted a second written offer of lease (Exhibit 2) based on its proposal to construct a market costing an estimated $275,000. This, too, was unsatisfactory to Shopping Bag.

However, on April 18, 1955, Shopping Bag, by letter, submitted to defendant its proposal (Exhibit 3) consisting of a counteroffer, setting forth the terms and conditions upon which it would be willing to enter into a lease, and proposing that defendant either accept it according to "the terms and conditions" therein, reducing the same to a formal lease within 60 days, or use the letter as Shopping Bag's acceptance of defendant's offer of April 14 "as modified" by its terms and conditions. Defendant protested the terms as not acceptable and, in an attempt to resolve defendant's objections, Uhlmann arranged a conference at Shopping Bag's offices on May 5, 1955, at which Burke, Uhlmann, Shapiro, Hayden and a Mr. Holland were present.

The evidence is in conflict as to what occurred at this meeting, but viewing it in the light most favorable to respondent, it is clear that a discussion of defendant's finances took place. Hayden insisted that defendant build a market, similar to Shopping Bag's new Palmdale store, of brick construction with a unit for refrigeration, air-conditioning and heat, and other features not in the contemplation of defendant's plans. Shapiro advised those present that defendant had only $50,000 or $60,000 of its own cash to invest in a building. Based on the $26,400 minimum rental previously fixed by Shopping Bag, Hayden told him defendant could expect a loan of between $210,000 and $215,000, but that a larger loan was not possible. Knowing that the $26,400 was the most he could expect as minimum rental from Shopping Bag, Shapiro made it clear that the maximum of $60,000 cash, together with the $215,000 loan, making a total of $275,000, was defendant's limit for construction of the market. He stated he believed the cost of the building on which Hayden insisted would exceed the $275,000 limit and defendant could go no further with the deal until the cost of such building could be obtained. Hayden said he would authorize Shopping Bag's contractor, Mr. Hahn, to disclose the cost figures to defendant.

On May 11, 1955, Hahn advised Shapiro that the building would cost in excess of $300,000, of which Shapiro shortly thereafter informed Uhlmann. Defendant, before March 30, and on May 5, having fully presented the facts concerning its financial ability, plaintiffs then knew defendant could not execute a lease which would bind it to construct a building at such a cost.

At this point, the record is silent concerning any effort on the part of plaintiffs to influence Shopping Bag to reduce its demands or waive any of its requirements; nor does the evidence disclose that plaintiffs in any way sought to aid their principal by requesting Shopping Bag to increase the minimum rental or by working out a new proposal.

Negotiations having failed to materialize an agreement, defendant opened them with Fitzsimmons Thriftimart Markets, and on June 16, 1955, executed a formal lease on a building to be constructed by defendant on the same property.

Appellants contend there is no substantial evidence to support the trial court's finding that there was never a meeting of minds between defendant and Shopping Bag, and the counteroffer of April 18 was not accepted. They argue that although a formal lease was not executed, an agreement to lease and construct a building arose out of defendant's use of a copy of Shopping Bag's counteroffer of April 18 for zoning purposes.

[2–4] Considering for the moment plaintiffs' oral contract of employment, before any obligation to pay a commission could arise, plaintiffs must obtain Shopping Bag as a lessee on "terms and conditions satisfactory" to defendant, for a market to be constructed on "terms and conditions satisfactory" to defendant. (Statement on Pre-Trial.) As stated in Ridgway v. Chase, 122 Cal.App.2d 840, at page 847, 265 P.2d 603, at page 607: "(t)he right of a broker to recover a commission must be measured by the terms of his contract. (Citations.) A broker may, by special agreement, make his commission dependent upon a contingency or the happening of a condition precedent, and unless such contingency occurs or such condition happens, he has no right of recovery. Denbo v. Weston Investment Co., 112 Cal.App.2d 153, 157, 245 P.2d 650." As to performance, the courts require substantial observance of the terms of the contract (Cochran v. Ellsworth, 126 Cal.App.2d 429, 272 P.2d 904). Said the court therein at page 439 of 126 Cal.App. 2d, at page 910 of 272 P.2d: "(W)hen a condition precedent is adopted by the parties to a contract, the court will exact a substantial if not a strict observance of the provisions before finding liability. Peterson v. Montgomery Holding Co., 89 Cal. App.2d 890, 894, 202 P.2d 365." McKenzie v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 112 Cal. 548, 556, 44 P. 922. Therefore, before plaintiffs can recover a commission they must prove they obtained Shopping Bag as a lessee on terms and conditions satisfactory to defendant, for a market to be constructed on terms and conditions satisfactory to defendant. That plaintiffs have failed to sustain their burden of proving these contingencies occurred to entitle them to a lease commission, is clear from the record before us.

Shopping Bag's proposal of April 18 constituted a counteroffer. It was conditional on defendant's acceptance of its terms and did not constitute Shopping Bag's unqualified acceptance of defendant's offer of April 14, which it had already rejected. For any agreement to arise out of the counteroffer, by its very terms, either defendant had to accept the terms and conditions set forth therein, or use it as Shopping Bag's acceptance of defendant's offer of April 14 "as modified" by the terms of the counteroffer. In any event, defendant had to agree to Shopping Bag's conditions.

[5] It is generally recognized that "(B)efore a broker is entitled to compensation, the negotiations which he is authorized to make must be concluded or conducted to the state where, as to all material or essential terms of the sale, there is a meeting of the minds or an agreement between the principal and the customer produced by him; but if the principal and the customer are unable to come to terms, the broker cannot recover. (Citations.)" Lawrence Block Co. v. Palston, 123 Cal.App.2d 300, 307, 266 P.2d 856, 861.

[6] The record amply supports the finding that the parties were unable to and did not come to terms. Negotiations were never concluded or conducted to a point where any of the essential terms of the counteroffer, which varied materially from those proposed by defendant on April 14, were agreed upon. These terms were basic, going to the very foundation of Shopping Bag's proposed agreement, relating to the proposed building, its rental, cost, construction, specifications, and so on. Certainly those proposed by defendant, based upon a $275,000 building were never unconditionally accepted by Shopping Bag; nor were those proposed by Shopping Bag accepted by defendant. "The acceptance of the owner's offer to lease must be unconditional to entitle a broker to a commission." Jacobs v. Schneider, 152 Cal.App.2d 452, 457, 313 P.2d 142, 145; Edwards v. Billow, 31 Cal.2d 350, 188 P.2d 748.

In consideration of the terms of the employment contract, it is obvious that the cases holding that where a broker produces a person who is ready, willing and able to consummate a lease, he has earned his commission, are not in point. Nor is Mann v. Mueller, 140 Cal.App.2d 481, 295 P.2d 421, relied upon by plaintiffs, where the essential provisions had been agreed to and only the formal lease had to be prepared.

Conceding that no formal written lease was ever executed, plaintiffs claim that in presenting to the Planning Commission a letter written by defendant, dated May 5, 1955, enclosing a photostatic copy of the counteroffer of April 18, and advising the Commission it had entered into a lease with Shopping Bag, defendant "used" the counteroffer in a manner constituting an acceptance of its terms. We find no substantial support for this contention either in the record before us or in the law of this state.

The evidence shows that for some time defendant had pending before the Planning Commission its request for additional C–4 zoning. In its original offer of March 30, defendant sought Shopping Bag's cooperation in the matter, which it rejected. On May 5, after the conference, "in an effort to get additional zoning for parking" (Appellants' Opening Brief, page 4) and for the purpose of showing a demand for a shopping center in the area so additional commercial zoning could be obtained, defendant wrote a letter directed to Robert Groman, Chairman (Exhibit 7), informing the Commission that since its case was originally heard by it "an agreement has been reached with Shopping Bag Market Stores, on the terms of a lease * * *" and enclosing a photostatic copy of Shopping Bag's "letter of acceptance to our proposal to lease."

In arguing that the letter not only declares an agreement to lease was entered into, but that defendant's use of the photostatic copy of the counteroffer constituted its acceptance thereof, appellants lose sight of the substantial evidence in the record showing defendant's lack of intention and ability to be bound by the terms of the counteroffer. Plaintiff Burke, himself, personally presented defendant's letter to the Commission. He could not have helped but know the sole reason for its presentation—to favorably influence the Commission's action; and that the negotiating parties were nowhere near a meeting of the minds, having immediately before, on the same day, attended the conference of May 5. Plaintiffs were familiar with Shopping Bag's operations and long before April 14 knew what "kind of a deal" it would make with defendant. They knew their principal's financial ability—its source and limits under the $26,400 minimum rental Shopping Bag had offered. If any doubt existed in this matter, it was made abundantly clear to all parties at the May 5 conference that defendant simply could not accede to Shopping Bag's demand to build a market in excess of $275,000. Defendant having already declared its financial position and limitation to a $275,000 construction, it is a reasonable inference from this, and other evidence, that both plaintiffs and defendant knew from Hayden's conversation the cost would be in excess of $275,000 and defendant could not and would not be able to meet his terms; yet it delayed rejecting them until it was certain the costs were not around the $275,000 figure. Between May 5 and May 11, when defendant finally determined the cost would exceed $300,000, all parties knew the terms were still under discussion.

As to the "use" contemplated by Shopping Bag to constitute an acceptance, the counteroffer provided: "* * * that the terms and conditions proposed herein be reduced to a formal lease within 60 days from the date of this letter. Otherwise, you may use this letter as our acceptance of your proposal of April 14, 1955, as modified herein." It is clear from this writing that the "use" as an acceptance was intended to apply only between the parties, not between defendant and a stranger; that the "use" for zoning purposes was not within the consideration of Shopping Bag since zoning was a collateral matter to the counteroffer, Shopping Bag having already rejected defendant's request to aid it in its zoning program; that defendant could, if it so desired, consider the letter as Shopping Bag's acceptance of defendant's April 14 offer as modified therein and not, as contended by plaintiffs, defendant's acceptance of the counteroffer; that however the term "use" might be construed, and the ultimate agreement might arise, the only "deal" Shopping Bag would make was one incorporating its own terms. Defendant's dissatisfaction with, refusal to accept, and inability to comply with Shopping Bag's terms are supported by substantial evidence. Nor have plaintiffs pointed out any place in the record wherein Hayden, or anyone else, on behalf of Shopping Bag, seeks to be bound by any "acceptance" of defendant. The "use" was never communicated by defendant to Shopping Bag and the parties at no time conducted themselves toward each other as ever having agreed. As between the two corporations, there is no claim that any agreement to lease or lease exists. Certainly no one on behalf of Shopping Bag so testified.

On May 25, 1955, defendant wrote another letter to Groman (Exhibit 9) in part stating: "We want to affirm that this is not a speculative deal in any manner whatever. We have a lease with a national super mar ket, a chain, for a 30,000 square foot market. We will invest $300,000 in this market. * * *" The trial court obviously believed the testimony of Shapiro that the "lease with a major super market" referred not to one with Shopping Bag, but with Thriftimart, with which defendant then had "a complete meeting of the minds on all terms and conditions." Nothing in the letter refers to Shopping Bag, and in view of his testimony and other evidence in the record, we cannot accept the plaintiffs' construction of the word "affirm" as a reaffirmation that an agreement had been reached with Shopping Bag. It means no more than that defendant wanted to positively state to the Commission that the deal it had (with Thriftimart) was not speculative. It could not refer to a nonexistent lease with Shopping Bag on a building to be constructed at a cost of $343,000. There is no more in the record to infer Shopping Bag reduced its demand to $300,000, than that it reduced it to the $275,000 defendant could afford. This letter, too, was written, as admitted by appellants "as a part of the defendant's continued program to obtain zoning for additional parking facilities."

Appellants claim that the only evidence Shopping Bag's proposed market would cost in excess of $300,000 came into the record by way of Shapiro's testimony concerning a conversation with Hahn, which constituted inadmissible hearsay. They argue Hahn was not called as a witness and the evidence of cost rested solely upon his veracity and competency. In the first place, it was Hayden, President of Shopping Bag, who on May 5, in the presence of both plaintiffs, authorized Hahn, its contractor, to talk to Shapiro concerning the cost, after which Shapiro related it to Uhlmann. Secondly, whether Hahn was correct in his estimate of over $300,000, and the figure is factually true, is not the important factor here involved—but that the figure, accurately or not, was actually given. This goes to the question of defendant's intent and good faith which has been repeatedly questioned by plaintiffs. Hahn was present in Los Angeles at the time of trial and if plaintiffs doubted that a conversation took place, or that the $300,000 plus figure was given, plaintiffs could have called him as a witness since he was as available to them as to the defendant. They chose not to do so.

Plaintiffs cite Hobbs v. Massasoit Whip Co., 158 Mass. 194, 33 N.E. 495 and Standard Iron Works v. Globe Jewelry & Loan Inc., 164 Cal.App.2d 108, 330 P.2d 271, for the proposition that the conduct of an offeree may constitute an acceptance of an offer resulting in a binding contract. In the case at bar we are faced not only with circumstances entirely incompatible with conduct of acceptance, but with an action between one party and a third in which the original negotiating parties themselves do not seek to be bound.

[7] The trial court's finding that there was no meeting of the minds and the counteroffer was not accepted is amply supported by substantial evidence in the record before us. Plaintiffs had the burden of proving they fully executed their contract and that nothing remained to be done but to pay the commission; or in the absence of such showing, that complete performance was prevented by defendant. Plaintiffs did not sustain their burden of proof on the issue of full performance and having failed to perform their undertaking to procure Shopping Bag as a lessee under the terms of their contract, they are not entitled to a commission (Jacobs v. Schneider, 152 Cal.App.2d 452, 313 P.2d 142).

This brings us to appellants' second contention that plaintiffs' complete performance of the contract was prevented by defendant and that the trial court's finding to the contrary is without evidentiary support. They refer to the rule and cases in support thereof, that even though a broker's commission is absolutely dependent upon the consummation of a transaction, the principal may not defeat the broker's right thereto by acting in bad faith and preventing the completion of the transaction.

[8] In the instant case, this issue is primarily factual and we are concerned only with the question whether the court's finding that defendant did not frustrate and prevent plaintiffs' performance of the contract is supported by substantial evidence. We hold that it is.

Plaintiffs argue that under the counteroffer of April 18, 1955, Shopping Bag gave defendant 60 days within which to accept its terms, and before the 60-day period expired, defendant negotiated with Thriftimart and executed a lease on the same property on June 16, 1955, without the knowledge of plaintiffs or Shopping Bag, thereby preventing plaintiffs' negotiation of the lease.

Of course, the 60-day period mentioned could not concern defendant unless it intended to accept the counteroffer, and, since it did not, it could not prevent defendant's negotiations with someone else. Free to deal with another, defendant had no duty to inform plaintiffs who, as defendant's agents, and closely associated with Shopping Bag, must have known nothing further was pending between them. Nowhere in the record is there any showing that had defendant not executed a lease with Thriftimart, Shopping Bag would have acceded to the terms of defendant's offer resulting in a lease, or that plaintiffs could have presented, or did offer, to defendant a Shopping Bag lease which would have been satisfactory to it.

The evidence shows that negotiations between Shopping Bag and defendant failed, not because of any wilful fault or prevention on the part of defendant, but because Shopping Bag's proposed lease and market were not on "terms and conditions satisfactory" to defendant. Because of the counteroffer, defendant was no longer under any obligation to proceed further under its offer of April 14, nor was it obliged to continue discussion with Shopping Bag under its counteroffer after it was obvious to all it could not, and would not, accept its terms.

Unless it can be said that defendant wilfully prevented plaintiffs' performance of the contract merely by failing to come to terms and by being unable to meet Shopping Bag's demands to construct, through an outside contractor, a brick building with special heating and cooling unit and other features, in excess of $78,000 over the amount to which all parties knew defendant was limited, we fail to perceive in what way defendant could be guilty of any fault actionable under the law. Failure of negotiations in which there is merely an inability to agree on terms, cannot constitute the kind of "fault" or "bad faith" or "unfair and dishonest dealing" expressed by our courts in the cases cited by appellants. We briefly list appellants "illustrations of bad faith" on the part of defendant: (1) after using the counteroffer for zoning purposes, defendant now contends it never accepted Shopping Bag's counteroffer and no negotiations were pending after their meeting of May 5; (2) by letter of May 12, Uhlmann submitted to defendant a form of lease used by Shopping Bag for its consideration; that neither defendant nor its counsel examined it and Shapiro led him, after "repeated inquiries" to believe otherwise; (3) following May 5, plaintiffs continued to act for defendant by attempting to secure ice cream concessions and a coffee shop for the balance of defendant's proposed shopping center and continued their efforts to obtain additional zoning; and (4) defendant did not attempt to withdraw from Shopping Bag's negotiations until its letter of June 27, 1955.

[9] We again refer to the rule that in reviewing the evidence on appeal, it is not the function of this court to weigh it, determine the credibility of the witnesses or resolve factual conflicts. If there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the trial court, we are bound thereby (Juchert v. California Water Service Co., 16 Cal.2d 500, 503, 106 P.2d 886.)

Although plaintiffs claim they continued to act for defendant in connection with its shopping center and zoning application, nothing in the record discloses that plaintiffs ever did anything after May 11 in furtherance of the proposed lease. Plaintiff, with knowledge that the $26,400 minimum rental fixed by Shopping Bag prevented defendant from obtaining a loan in excess of $215,000, made no effort to influence Shopping Bag to increase the amount in order to expedite a larger loan, to approve the terms proposed by defendant, or to waive the conditions demanded by it in its counteroffer; nor is there any evidence plaintiffs thereafter attempted to obtain Shopping Bag's consent to accept the type of building defendant could afford to construct, or advised defendant that they could negotiate a satisfactory lease with Shopping Bag. If plaintiffs knew they could negotiate a lease with Shopping Bag on terms and conditions favorable to defendant after May 11, they did not communicate such fact to their principal. Plaintiffs' alleged activities in attempting to secure ice cream concessions and a coffee shop for defendant's proposed shopping center, and additional zoning, do not appear to have been in furtherance of the lease negotiations with Shopping Bag, particularly in view of the basic reason for their failure to agree.

As to the lease plaintiffs submitted to defendant on May 12, the trial court was justified in believing the testimony of Shapiro, who denied Uhlmann made inquiries of him concerning it during May, 1955. Reasonable inferences from Uhl-mann's letter of June 13, 1955, would seem to bear this out. In any event, we fail to see the materiality of this matter for the lease was no more than an incompleted "Standard Form" generally used by Shopping Bag. It contained none of the terms and conditions discussed by either party. As to the June 27 letter to Shopping Bag, from all of the circumstances it could constitute little more than an act of courtesy. We are convinced that defendant's negotiations ended May 11 only because the parties could not come to terms, and no further efforts, particularly on the part of plaintiffs were made toward renewing the same.

Appellants repeatedly charge defendant with bad faith, misdealing and surreptitious conduct. We note from the record that plaintiff Uhlmann, who was familiar with Shopping Bag's operations and dealt with it considerably before March 30, 1955, and who was associated with Burke at the request of Shopping Bag, is now employed by Shopping Bag Food Stores as the officer in charge of real estate. At all times, Uhlmann knew the "kind of deal" Shopping Bag would make and that the cost of the building it demanded would exceed $300,000, yet in preparing the draft of its offer of April 14 for defendant, he omitted entirely any reference to his principal $275,000 limitation, which he well knew was the basis of the offer. Despite Uhlmann's failure to include it, defendant did so and Shopping Bag refused to accept the offer. It is apparent that plaintiffs, with full knowledge their principal could not meet such demands, were willing to obligate it to a contract in excess of its ability to perform. Prior to March 30, Uhlmann and Hayden had conferred considerably concerning the terms of a lease Shopping Bag would offer defendant—in fact, when Uhlmann submitted defendant's offer of March 30, Hayden admonished him for bothering him with it when he (Uhlmann) knew he was "not going to accept it," and had already been told the only "kind of deal" Shopping Bag would make. Facts as to defendant's financial ability were fully presented to both plaintiffs prior to March 30 and during the May 5 conference. In any event, it is unrealistic to even suggest that having undertaken to represent defendant they would not have known the financial position of their principal at all times. In view of Uhlmann's connection and prior dealings with Shopping Bag, it is inconceivable to us that he did not at all times know exactly what it demanded, and how much the building it wanted would cost. Perhaps he realized long before the negotiating parties that they would never be able to agree. The trial court undoubtedly took the matter of the relationship of the parties, as well as plaintiff Uhlmann's good faith, into consideration in determining the credibility of the witnesses and weighing the evidence.

[10] Appellants finally contend that the trial court erred in granting Shapiro's motion for nonsuit. In this connection we view the evidence in a light most favorable to plaintiffs, disregard that which is unfavorable and draw every reasonable inference therefrom in plaintiffs' favor. Having done so, we find no error.

[11, 12] Plaintiffs argue that Burke, having been hired by Shapiro pursuant to an oral contract and no proof having been offered that he was not acting on his own behalf, as well as on behalf of the corporate defendant, it may reasonably be inferred the agreement was with Shapiro individually. Since Herbert Shapiro was sued individually, the burden was upon plaintiffs to prove he acted in that capacity. This they did not do. Plaintiffs stipulated on pretrial "that Herbert Shapiro is the president of North Whittier Highlands, Inc., and handled the negotiations and discussions on behalf of said corporation." This, of course, would not preclude proof he also acted individually, but we are unable to find in the record any evidence offered in support of their allegation. Nor have appellants pointed out any evidence to substantiate their claim of error. In fact, their own Statement of Facts points to the contrary. It mentions no employment by

Shapiro, but declares that plaintiff Burke was employed by North Whittier Highlands, Inc., as does their stipulation of facts on pre-trial "(T)hat plaintiff Burke was employed during the month of March, 1955, by defendant North Whittier Highlands, Inc. * * *" and "it was understood between the corporation and said broker * * * it would be obligated. * * *" (Emphasis added.) The so-called lease plaintiffs claim they sent to Shapiro as an individual on May 12, and which he did not submit to the corporation, was merely the "Standard Form" of lease generally used by Shopping Bag, unsigned, containing none of the terms and conditions discussed between defendant and Shopping Bag; and addressed to Shapiro, not individually, but as president of the corporation.

Although plaintiffs declare the judgment of dismissal on motion for nonsuit was "wholly unsupported by the evidence" they have failed to demonstrate in what way the evidence would sustain a judgment against Herbert Shapiro individually.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Robert JUSTICE, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6103.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 5, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 1, 1959.

Defendant was convicted on two counts of selling heroin. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that where defendant failed to point out the alleged conflict between testimony of sheriff's undercover operator and that given at preliminary hearing, and in what manner evidence was not substantial to support the judgment, and what particular evidence was insufficient to sustain verdict, it would be assumed that there was sufficient substantial evidence to support conviction.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1144(13)

Where appellant contended that reporter's transcript of trial court proceeding was replete with contradictions, changed testimony and explanations thereof and that state's witness' testimony varied considerably from that given at preliminary hearing but neither appellant's statement of facts nor his argument made specific references to record either by page or line, and appellant failed to point out alleged conflict in testimony, or in what manner evidence was not substantial to support judgment or insufficient to sustain verdict, it would be assumed that there was sufficient substantial evidence to support conviction. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 15(a).

2. Poisons ⇐9

Evidence sustained conviction of selling heroin. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1141(2)

Appellant is under an affirmative duty to show error, and it is not proper to attempt to shift burden upon court or respondent who is under no duty to assume burden of demonstrating that judgment is supported, in absence of proper attack upon it. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 15(a).

4. Poisons ⇐9

In prosecution for selling heroin to a sheriff's undercover operator, undercover operator's testimony with respect to transactions was not inherently improbable or apparently false and was competent. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

5. Criminal Law ⇐260(11)

It is function of trial court, not reviewing court, to resolve inconsistencies and contradictions in testimony, and trier of fact may believe and accept portion of testimony of witness and disbelieve remainder, but on appeal that portion which supports judgment must be accepted, not that portion which would defeat or tend to defeat the judgment.

6. Criminal Law ⇐1115(1)

Where appellant contended that refusal of sheriff's undercover operator to name his informant at preliminary hearing deprived appellant of his constitutional rights, but record of proceedings of preliminary hearing was not before reviewing court, alleged error in preliminary hearing could not be considered.

7. Criminal Law ⇐1115(1)

Where transcript of testimony received at preliminary hearing is not made part of record in Superior Court, any alleged error in preliminary hearing cannot be considered on appeal.

8. Criminal Law ⇐1114(1)

Fact that defendant interjected point not represented by record into appeal by way of opening brief did not change rule that such matters could not be considered by reviewing court on suggestion of counsel in their briefs.

9. Criminal Law ⇐1166(1)

Where name of informant was disclosed by people at defendant's trial and defendant himself voluntarily revealed in his own testimony that he knew informant and was with him on date on which defendant allegedly sold heroin and there was no showing that defendant planned or wanted to call informant as a witness or tried or was unable to locate him, alleged refusal of sheriff's undercover operator to name informant at preliminary hearing was not prejudicial. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

10. Criminal Law ⇐1166½(4)

Where it was obvious that the first of two off-the-record discussions held by court and counsel involved defendant's own counsel's request to exclude from courtroom all witnesses who would testify and second referred to court's suggestion that a recess be taken, fact that defendant was not present during discussions did not require reversal.

11. Criminal Law ⇐1035(3)

Where two off-the-record discussions between court and counsel were held so that jury did not hear them, defendant's attorney was present at all times and participated in both conversations, neither defendant nor his counsel at any time objected to them in trial court, and conversations did not relate to issue of guilt, conversations were not prejudicial to defendant.

12. Criminal Law ⇐1163(2)

It was for defendant to show any prejudice resulting to him from off-the-record discussions held between court and counsel.

Claude Vibart Worrell, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Defendant was convicted of two counts of selling heroin to Joseph A. Brown in violation of Section 11500, Health and Safety Code, and sentenced to the state prison. He appeals therefrom, contending that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment; Brown's testimony was "untrustworthy" and "perjurious" and therefore "not competent"; at the preliminary hearing the court denied him the right to learn the name of the informant; and two unreported conferences at the bench deprived him of due process of law.

[1] Although, in connection with the first two contentions, he declares the reporter's transcript to be "replete with contradictions, changed testimony and explanations thereof" and that Brown's testimony varied considerably from that given at the preliminary hearing, appellant seeks to avoid his responsibility of supporting his allegations with references to the record, by stating without further argument "(t)hese instances are so numerous that only a complete reading of Brown's testimony would satisfy the appellant (sic) contentions, hence no referrals to specific pages of the Reporter's Transcript." Of course, such a method of proceeding on appeal is wholly inadequate for not only has appellant failed to comply with Rule 15(a), Rules on Appeal, requiring "(T)he statement of any matter in the record shall be supported by appropriate reference to the record," but he has ignored the general rule that the burden is upon appellant to point out any alleged error. As stated by the court in People v. Goodall, 104 Cal.App.2d 242, at page 249, 231 P.2d 119, at page 123: "It is the duty of the defendants to show error, and that means defendants are under an affirmative duty in that respect. It is not proper to attempt to shift that burden upon the court or respondent. People v. Shafer, 101 Cal.App. 2d 54, [60] 224 P.2d 778; People v. Daniels, 85 Cal.App.2d 182, 185, 192 P.2d 788." In neither his so-called "Statement of Fact," nor his argument supporting his first two contentions has appellant made any specific reference to the record either by page or line. He has failed to point out the alleged conflict in the testimony upon which he relies; in what manner the evidence was not substantial to support the judgment; and in what particular the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict. In the absence of any such showing, we must assume there is sufficient substantial evidence to support the conviction on both counts. "His failure to specify the prejudicial feature of the evidence must be taken to mean that there is none. (People v. Britton, 6 Cal.2d 10, 13 (56 P.2d 491); People v. Hermes, 73 Cal.App.2d 947, 950 (168 P.2d 44).)" People v. Shafer, 101 Cal.App.2d 54, 61, 224 P.2d 778, 782.

[2] Although it would appear from appellant's own "Statement of Fact" that there is ample evidence to sustain the conviction, we nevertheless have carefully examined the record and, in particular, the testimony of Joseph A. Brown, and viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to respondent, we find more than sufficient substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict.

In connection with Count 1, on September 26, 1956, Joseph A. Brown, a sheriff's undercover operator, had a conversation concerning a narcotics purchase with one Hattie Jackson in the vicinity of a cafe on 103rd street. Thereafter, he left the location and returned 3½ hours later where he saw Hattie and the defendant drive by in an automobile driven by the latter. Defendant stopped the car and Hattie walked over to Brown, who was standing on the sidewalk, where they again discussed a purchase of narcotics. Brown gave her $14 to give to defendant for a $15 paper of heroin. During this time defendant drove around the block and when he returned, Hattie got back into the car and drove away with him, leaving Brown standing on the corner. Less than ten minutes later, they returned in the car and stopped near Brown, who walked over to the driver's side. Hattie introduced him to the defendant saying, "This is Robert, he is a connection." Defendant then, saying he would sell Brown this time but in the future it would cost him $15, handed a paper of white powder, later identified by a forensic chemist to be heroin, to Hattie, who handed it to Brown. Hattie then got out of the car and stood with Brown in the street where they again engaged in a conversation. Defendant drove away.

Sheriff's deputy Stameisen kept Brown under surveillance on that day and saw him with Hattie. Fifteen minutes later he saw them standing next to an old model brown Chevrolet talking to defendant who was seated in the car.

As to Count 2, on December 11, 1956, Brown and an informant, Willis Tucker, were seated in an automobile. At 3:30 p. m., Brown saw defendant on foot. They got out of their car and walked over to him. Defendant asked him who he was and Brown responded that his name was "Buba." Defendant admonished Tucker he should know better than to bring strangers to him for he did not do business with strangers. Defendant told Brown to give his money to Tucker, and he gave him $20. Then defendant and Tucker walked down the street alone and Brown saw Tucker hand defendant the money. They stopped walking, talked, and then defendant made a motion to his mouth and passed an object therefrom to Tucker, who made a motion toward his mouth, and left the defendant. He walked back to Brown and took from his mouth two balloons, containing what was later identified as heroin, and handed them to him.

Sheriff's deputy Caraway, who kept Brown under surveillance on this day, watched him in the company of defendant and another male negro.

On December 13, 1956, by prearrangement with defendant, Brown met him and a third party. Defendant drove them in his car around Watts for about 5 minutes during which defendant asked Brown his identity, where he lived, whom he knew who sold narcotics, and to show him the needle marks he was supposed to have. Brown was evasive and defendant told him he believed him to be the "heat" (police), and pushing an open knife blade, 3 or 4 inches long, against his side, threatened that if he was, he would "cut him damn guts out." Brown convinced him he was not the "heat" and after telling him that all he wanted to do was buy dope and not get killed, he got out of defendant's automobile and walked away.

On his defense, defendant testified he managed an auto wrecking yard and had owned no brown Chevrolet. He denied knowing Hattie, seeing Brown on September 26, 1956, or that he handled narcotics at any time. He admitted knowing Willis Tucker since Jr. High School, and said he saw him on December 11 with Brown. At one time in his testimony he said he had not seen Tucker for two or three years prior, but at another place therein, he said he had seen him 7 or 8 weeks before. He admitted Tucker asked him where he could buy some dope, but he said he did not know; and that he walked down the street with him but did not receive money from him, or sell or give him narcotics. Defendant testified he saw Brown on December 13 and rode with him and one Price, but not through prearrangement; that they talked about narcotics, but he told them he had no connection with them; that he pulled the knife because, after swearing and arguing, Brown put his hands in his pocket, and he was afraid that he, like all narcotic addicts, was desperate.

[3–5] As the alleged incompetency of Brown's testimony, appellant's contention that it "could be considered perjurious and appellant so contends that it is. This testimony so taints the trail (sic) as to render the same void," constitutes his entire argument on that point, with the exception of the citation of "Alcorta v. Texas (1957) 354 U.S. —"* which has no application. No so-called contradictions, inconsistencies or variations in Brown's testimony have been called to our attention. We again refer appellant to the general rule set forth in People v. Daniels, 85 Cal.App.2d 182, at page 185, 192 P.2d 788, at page 789: "* * * it is the duty of the appellant to show error, and that means he is under an affirmative duty in that respect. It is not proper to attempt to shift the burden upon the respondent, and the latter is under no duty to assume the burden of demonstrating that the judgments are supported in the absence of a proper attack upon them. * * *" However, having carefully examined Joseph Brown's testimony, we find nothing inherently improbable or apparently false about it and perceive no reason why it was not competent. As was said in People v. Thomas, 103 Cal.App.2d 669, at page 672, 229 P.2d 836, at page 838: "It was the function of the trial court, not this court, to resolve inconsistencies and contradictions, if any, in the testimony of Bennett. The trier of fact may believe and accept a portion of the testimony of a witness and disbelieve the remainder. On appeal that portion which supports the judgment must be accepted, not that portion which would defeat, or tend to defeat, the judgment." To the same effect is People v. Shaheen, 120 Cal.App.2d 629, 261 P.2d 752.

* Correct citation is 355 U.S. 28, 78 S.Ct. 103, 2 L.Ed.2d 9.

[6, 7] It is further contended "that the refusal of witness Brown to name his informant at the preliminary hearing * * * deprived the appellant of his constitutional rights." In support of this claim, appellant cites extensively from the District Court of Appeal opinion in Priestly v. Superior Court, Cal.App., 319 P.2d 796, since affirmed by the Supreme Court in 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39, and for the first time makes reference to a page and line of a reporter's transcript. However, the reporter's transcript to which he now refers is not a part of the record before this court. None of the proceedings on the preliminary hearing is before us and in the absence of a reporter's transcript thereof, we find no support for his contention in the record on appeal. We do not know whether defendant requested the name of the informant at the preliminary hearing; whether it was disclosed; if not, for what reason; what, if anything, was the court's ruling thereon if a request was made, or how or in what manner prejudice resulted. It is obvious, therefore, De Losa v. Superior Court, 166 Cal.App.2d 1, 332 P.2d 390, cited by appellant, is not in point. It is well settled that where the transcript of the testimony received at the preliminary hearing is not made a part of the record in the Superior Court, any alleged error in the preliminary hearing cannot be considered on appeal. In People v. McKinney, 152 Cal.App.2d 332, at page 335, 313 P.2d 163, at page 165, the court stated: "However, neither the check stubs nor preliminary transcript was made part of the record in the trial court and, therefore, may not be considered by this court. People v. Gormley, 64 Cal.App.2d 336, 338, 148 P.2d 687."

[8] The fact that defendant now injects the point, not represented by the record, into this appeal by way of an opening brief, does not change the rule that such matters cannot be considered by this court on the suggestion of counsel in their briefs. In People v. Hernandez, 150 Cal.App.2d 398, 309 P.2d 969, the appellant set forth in his brief certain portions of the proceedings taken before the grand jury, not a part of the appeal record, to show that an interpreter was not necessary and one was sworn. Said the court at page 400 of 150 Cal.App.2d, at page 970 of 309 P.2d: "Of course, this would not be a proper or sufficient record or showing in respect to the points raised. (Citations.)" And again at page 402 of 150 Cal.App.2d, at page 972 of 309 P.2d: "Matters not presented by the record cannot be considered on the suggestion of counsel in the briefs."

[9] As to any claimed prejudice resulting to defendant, it is interesting to note from the record before us that not only was informant's name, Willis Tucker, disclosed by the People at the trial, but defendant himself voluntarily revealed in his own testimony that he well knew Tucker, had gone to Jr. High School with him, had kept up this acquaintance since, had seen him 7 or 8 weeks before his arrest and was with him on December 11. Nor is there any showing in the record that defendant planned or wanted to call Tucker as a witness or tried or was unable to locate him. Under these circumstances, we fail to see how any such alleged error could be prejudicial. People v. Lazzara, 131 Cal.App.2d 663, 281 P.2d 4.

Appellant's last contention "(T)hat 'in the course' of the Superior Court trial proceedings two stages of the procedures was (sic) held off the record, therefore, the petitioner or petit jury does not know what was said between the judge, district attorney, and defense counsel, which deprived him of a fair and impartial trial in violation of rights guaranteed to him by the due process and equal protection of the laws clauses of Section I of the Fourteenth Amendment and Article 6 Section 2 [sic], both of the Constitution of the United States," citing in support thereof People v. Southack, 109 A.C.A. 745, 241 P.2d 558, and People v. Berling, 115 Cal. App.2d 255, 251 P.2d 1017, is likewise without merit. He argues that when the "two violations occurred the Superior Court 'Lost Jurisdiction'" and "was without authority or power of any law to accept the verdict of the Petit Jury or to render the void Judgment or to issue the invalid commitment under which the petitioner is illegally imprisoned."

The defendant's reference to the opinion in People v. Southack, supra, appears to have been taken from 109 A.C.A. 745 at page 747, 241 P.2d 558. This opinion is no longer the law, having been superseded by one of the Supreme Court (39 Cal.2d 578, 248 P.2d 12). The Supreme Court therein did not consider the point which resulted in that portion of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal cited by appellant in his brief. It is not controlling here; nor is People v. Berling, 115 Cal. App.2d 255, 251 P.2d 1017, which relates to an entirely different factual situation.

[10] The two discussions in question, not having been reported, are not a part of the record before us, but having reviewed the transcript at the points at which these conversations took place, it is obvious from the court's remarks following them that the first, after the opening statements to the jury and before any evidence was taken, wherein defendant's own counsel sought to approach the bench, involved his request to exclude from the courtroom all witnesses who would testify, which request was granted. The second discussion, wherein the trial judge himself asked counsel to approach the bench, obviously referred to the court's suggestion that a recess be taken. Any argument that because of these discussions at the bench defendant was not present during all steps of the trial, is wholly without merit. In People v. Baker, 164 Cal.App.2d 99, 330 P.2d 240, a similar contention was made and rejected. The conversation at the bench in that case involved the right of a witness to refuse to answer a question. Said the court at page 104 of 164 Cal.App.2d, at page 243 of 330 P.2d: "No objection was made by appellant or his counsel at the time that anything was being said out of the hearing of appellant. His own counsel took part in the conversation at the bench. Therefore, this record does not disclose a situation where in any practical sense appellant was not present at all times during the trial."

[11, 12] As to any prejudice arising out of these two off-the-record discussions, the jury did not hear them, therefore it could not possibly have been influenced by them; defendant's attorney who was at all times present asked for one conference and participated in both conversations; and neither defendant nor his counsel at any time objected to them in the trial court. In addition, the conversations did not relate to the issue of guilt. Furthermore, it is for the appellant to show any prejudice resulting to him. People v. Isby, 30 Cal.2d 879, 186 P.2d 405; People v. Baker, 164 Cal.App.2d 99, 330 P.2d 240. This he has failed to do.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 9496.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 6, 1959.

Action by assignee of creditors of a partnership to recover, among other things, for items of indebtedness incurred in transaction after dissolution of partnership. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Merced County, R. R. Sischo, J., retiring partner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence supported implied finding that the firm had previously extended credit to partnership and did not have knowledge of dissolution of partnership.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Partnership ⇐236

Where partnership was dissolved on September 20 and sum paid to a creditor on November 17 did not cover charges for demurrage on oxygen or acetylene cylinders furnished by creditor or charges for cylinders which were either lost or not returned, items of demurrage represented a continuing liability which originated prior to dissolution and retiring partner was not relieved of liability for such items without consent of creditor.

2. Partnership ⇐292

Where charge for repairs for partnership was incurred after date of dissolution of partnership, retiring partner would not be liable if creditor had notice of dissolution.

3. Partnership ⇐296(3)

In action by assignee of creditors of partnership, which was dissolved on September 20, to recover for repairs made on November 3, evidence was sufficient to support finding that company making repairs did not have notice of dissolution of partnership at time repairs were made.

4. Partnership ⇐296(3)

Burden is on retiring partner relying on dissolution of a partnership to avoid liability to prove notice of such dissolution.

5. Partnership ⇐292

In action by assignee of creditors of partnership to recover certain sums allegedly owing to creditors, retiring partner could not rely upon statute providing for publication of notice of dissolution of partnership to avoid liability to firms having prior credit dealings with partnership. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 15035.5.

6. Partnership ⇐290

Actual notice of dissolution of partnership is necessary as to firms having prior credit dealings with partnership in order to enable a retiring partner to escape liability for obligations incurred after dissolution of partnership. West's Ann.Corp Code, § 15035.5.

7. Partnership ⇐292

While publication of notice of dissolution of partnership may be evidence from which actual knowledge on part of a creditor can be inferred, publication alone does not compel a finding of actual knowledge, and a retiring partner is not justified in placing sole reliance upon publication of notice of dissolution to avoid liability for debts incurred after dissolution of partnership. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 15035.5.

8. Appeal and Error ⇐1011(1)

In action by assignee of creditors of partnership to recover for items of indebtedness incurred after dissolution of partnership in transaction with a firm having prior credit dealings with partnership, reviewing court was bound by trial court's finding based on conflicting evidence that firm doing business with partnership did not have notice of dissolution of partnership. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15035, 15036(2).

9. Partnership ⇐296(3)

In action by assignee of creditors of a partnership to recover, among other things, for items of indebtedness incurred by a firm in transaction after dissolution of partnership, evidence supported implied finding that firm had previously extended credit to partnership and did not have knowledge of dissolution of partnership. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15035, 15036(2).

10. Novation ⇐13

In action by assignee of creditors of partnership to recover unpaid balance due on a calculator on which entity succeeding partnership had made payments by check, whether there was a novation presented a question of fact.

11. Partnership ⇐289

Where payments on balance owing on a calculator purchased by partnership were made by check by succeeding entity after dissolution of partnership, checks themselves did not compel a finding of actual knowledge on part of creditor that partnership had been dissolved. West's Ann. Corp.Code, § 15036(2, 3).

12. Partnership ⇐236

Fact that creditor of partnership accepted delayed payments on balance owing on calculator sold to partnership, which was subsequently dissolved, did not compel a finding that creditor had consented to a material alteration in nature or time of payment of obligation such as to relieve a retiring partner from any liability to creditor. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 15036(3).

13. Partnership ⇐296(1)

In action by assignee of creditors of partnership to recover for certain items of indebtedness allegedly owing by partnership, which had a contract with one creditor providing for attorney's fees if suit was brought, allowance of an attorney's fee of $100 was not excessive.

14. Appeal and Error ⇐984(5)

Reviewing court will not disturb award of attorney's fees in absence of a manifest abuse of discretion.

Thomas J. Kane, Jr., Merced, for appellant.

Samuel K. Brantley, Jr., Merced, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Donald E. Davis has appealed from the judgment entered in the above-entitled actions which were consolidated for trial. By the judgment Davis was held liable for a debt incurred by a partnership of which he was a member and attorney's fees, and for two other debts, one of which was incurred in the name of the partnership after the entity was dissolved.

[1] Donald Davis and Russell Shipman formed a partnership in 1954 under the name of Shipman & Davis Lumber Company. On September 20, 1955, the partnership was dissolved by written agreement. A notice of dissolution was published in a newspaper of general circulation in the county where the business was conducted, and an affidavit of publication was filed with the county clerk. No actual notice of dissolution was given to firms which had extended credit to the partnership at the time of dissolution. By the agreement Shipman, who was to continue the business, was to pay all the debts of the entity. Shipman continued the business as a sole proprietorship for a short time until a successor corporation, Shipman Lumber Servaes Co., was formed. In March, 1955, the partnership had purchased a calculator from the Valley Typewriter Company. The contract of sale provided that the unpaid balance of $457.20 would be paid in twelve installments of $38.10. At the time of dissolution the sum of $255.40 was owing to the Laird Welding & Manufacturing Company. The sum of $255.40 was paid to Laird Welding & Manufacturing Works on November 17, 1955, but this amount did not include the item of $54.48 for repairs made on November 3, 1955, but which was not entered on the books of the Laird Welding & Manufacturing Works until after the payment on November 17th, nor did it cover charges for demurrage on oxygen or acetylene cylinders furnished by Laird Welding & Manufacturing Works, or charges for cylinders which were either lost or not returned, said charges amounting to $135.33.

Commencing in 1956, Merced Hardware & Implement Company, a firm which had previously done business with the partnership, sold merchandise on credit to the successors. The charge for this merchandise, amounting to $538.38, was entered on the books of Merced Hardware & Implement Company in the name of Shipman & Davis Lumber Company.

At the time of dissolution eight payments were due on the calculator. Five were made prior to the institution of this suit. A check in the amount of $76.20 drawn by Shipman Lumber Servaes Co. on June 20, 1956, was accepted by Valley Typewriter Company as was a check of $38.10 dated October 26, 1956, which was also drawn by Shipman Lumber Servaes Co.

The accounts were assigned to the above-named plaintiff, and two separate actions were brought against Davis and Shipman and the partnership. Shipman failed to answer and a default was entered against him. Davis filed an answer denying any indebtedness to plaintiff. The two actions were consolidated for trial; and the court found that plaintiff was entitled to recover from defendant Davis the sum of $189.81 on the Laird account, the sum of $538.38 on the Merced Hardware account, and the sum of $114.30 plus $100 attorney's fees on the Valley Typewriter account. The court also found that neither plaintiff nor plaintiff's assignors had notice of dissolution of said partnership until after their accounts had been incurred, and that neither plaintiff nor plaintiff's assignors agreed to discharge any of the defendants named herein from liability. In accordance with said findings, judgment for $842.49 principal and attorney's fees in the sum of $100 was entered in favor of plaintiff and defendant has appealed from said judgment.

Appellant makes a vigorous attack upon the judgment. He contends (1) that he has no legal responsibility as to any existing liabilities on the date of dissolution of the partnership; (2) that he is not liable on any obligations which were obligations incurred after the date of dissolution by defendant and appellant's ex-partner or any other successor entity; and (3) that the allowance of any attorney's fees was error and that the amount of attorney's fees allowed was an abuse of discretion.

[2–7] Appellant argues first that at the time of the suit he was not liable for the debts sued upon. He contends that no liability exists as to Laird Welding & Manufacturing Works because the amount which was due at the time of dissolution was subsequently paid, and, therefore, no liability existed at the time of suit. However, as hereinbefore noted, the payment of $255.40 to Laird Welding & Manufacturing Works on November 17, 1955, did not include the item of $54.48 for repairs made on November 3, 1955, nor the charge for demurrage. The items of demurrage represented a continuing liability which originated prior to the dissolution, and appellant as the retiring partner would not be relieved from liability for them unless the creditor consented. As to the repair item incurred on November 3, 1955, which was after the date of the dissolution, appellant would not be liable therefor if Laird Welding & Manufacturing Works had notice of the dissolution. While the evidence is conflicting as to whether the Welding Works had notice of the dissolution at the time the repairs were made, it is sufficient to support the finding of the court that the company did not have notice. The burden is on a defendant relying on dissolution to prove notice of dissolution. Epley v. Hiller, 128 Cal.App.2d 100, 274 P.2d 696. Appellant cannot rely on the provisions of section 15035.5 of the Corporations Code to show actual knowledge. This section provides for publication of notice of dissolution of a partnership. However, as to firms having prior credit dealings with the partnership, actual notice of dissolution is necessary. While publication may be evidence from which actual knowledge could be inferred, publication alone would not compel a finding of actual knowledge. A retiring partner is not justified in placing sole reliance upon the publication of notice of dissolution, but should assure himself that existing creditors who have extended credit to the partnership receive actual notice of such dissolution.

[8, 9] As to the Merced Hardware account it is clear that the debt for the items sued upon were all incurred after February, 1956. Appellant contends that he is not liable for these items of debt because they were incurred after the dissolution of the partnership. Respondent in reply points out that section 15035 of the Corporations Code provides that after a dissolution a partner can bind the partnership "By any transaction which would bind the partnership if dissolution had not taken place, provided, the other party to the transaction: I. Had extended credit to the partnership prior to dissolution and had no knowledge or notice of the dissolution." Here again the evidence is conflicting as to whether Merced Hardware & Implement Company had notice of dissolution of the partnership, and we are bound by the court's finding that it did not. There is also evidence that Merced Hardware & Implement Company had previously extended credit to the partnership. The credit reference on the contract of the Shipman & Davis Lumber Company with Valley Typewriter Company, dated March 15, 1955, and signed by Russell C. Shipman, lists Merced Hardware Company; and the items in dispute were charged to Shipman & Davis Lumber Company on the books of Merced Hardware & Implement Company. The evidence supports the implied finding that Merced Hardware & Implement Company had previously extended credit to Shipman & Davis Lumber Company.

[10, 11] As to the Valley Typewriter Company account, the record shows that five payments were made on this account after the date of the dissolution of the partnership. Two checks in favor of Valley Typewriter Company, both signed by Shipman Lumber Servaes Co., one dated June 20, 1956, for $76.20 and one dated October 26, 1956, for $38.10. Appellant contends that this is overwhelming evidence of a novation and conclusive proof that he was discharged from the obligation under subdivision 2 of section 15036 of the Corporations Code which reads: "(2) A partner is discharged from any existing liability upon dissolution of the partnership by an agreement to that effect between himself, the partnership creditor and the person or partnership continuing the business; and such agreement may be inferred from the course of dealing between the creditor having knowledge of the dissolution and the person or partnership continuing the business." We are unable to agree with this contention. Whether or not there was a novation was a question of fact and conflicting inferences can be drawn from the evidence. The manager of Valley Typewriter Company testified that he had no actual knowledge of the dissolution of the partnership. The checks themselves would not necessarily compel a finding of actual knowledge since the inference appellant seeks to draw is dispelled by the testimony that the creditor had no knowledge. There can be no novation where the creditor testified he had no knowledge of dissolution and such testimony is believed by the trier of the fact.

[12] Appellant also argues that he is entitled to a reversal of the judgment as to the Valley Typewriter account under the following provision of section 15036 of the Corporations Code: "(3) Where a person agrees to assume the existing obligations of a dissolved partnership, the partners whose obligations have been assumed shall be discharged from any liability to any creditor of the partnership who, knowing of the agreement, consents to a material alteration in the nature or time of payment of such obligations." But here again knowledge of the dissolution of the partnership is required, and the court found upon sufficient evidence that none of the creditors here involved had notice or knowledge of the dissolution of the partnership. Furthermore, the fact that the Valley Typewriter Company accepted delayed payments under the contract does not compel a finding in accordance with appellant's argument that the creditor had consented to a material alteration in the nature or time of payment of the obligation.

[13, 14] Appellant also contends that the allowance of any attorney's fee of $100 was improper, and if proper, the allowance was excessive. The Valley Typewriter Company contract provided for attorney's fees if suit was brought. In this case the action was vigorously contested. An appellate court will not disturb an award of attorney's fees of a trial court in the absence of a manifest abuse of discretion. Biaggi v. Sawyer, 75 Cal.App.2d 105, 170 P.2d 678; State ex rel. State Public Works Board v. Westover Co., 140 Cal. App.2d 447, 295 P.2d 96. In view of the record in the instant case, we cannot say the amount allowed by the court was excessive.

No other points require discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

Wiley Wilson BALTHROP, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY, a corporation; Coast Santa Fe Lines; Thomas H. Archibald; J. M. Smith; E. H. Baxter; G. H. Nunn and Robert T. Cyr, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 9482.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 29, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 24, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 25, 1959.

Action by automobile driver against railroad for injuries sustained in railroad crossing collision. The Superior Court, Stanislaus County, David F. Bush, J., rendered judgment for automobile driver, and railroad appealed. The Third District of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that admission of letters from public utilities commission to railroad containing recitations to effect that crossing was deemed dangerous and that there should be an automatic signal installed at crossing was improper where there was no evidence in record to indicate what the traffic conditions at the crossing were.

Reversed.

1. Negligence ⇐136(9)

Contributory negligence is not established as a matter of law unless only reasonable hypothesis is that such negligence exists and that reasonable men could have drawn that conclusion and none other, and where there are different inferences that may be drawn, one for and one against, the one against will be followed.

2. Railroads ⇐350(16)

In action arising out of railroad crossing collision in which train struck automobile of plaintiff, who testified that he looked and listened before crossing track on foggy night, question whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence was for jury.

3. Railroads ⇐347(6)

In action arising out of railroad crossing collision of automobile and train, letters of Public Utilities Commission to railroad stating that there should be an automatic signal installed at crossing was not admissible to show that railroad had notice of increased traffic conditions in absence of showing as to traffic conditions at crossing.

4. Trial ⇐252(1)

Generally, it is error for trial court to instruct upon matters which have no support in evidence.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐1066

Ordinarily it is not prejudicial or reversible error for trial court to instruct upon matters which have no support in evidence.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐1066

In action arising out of railroad crossing collision of automobile and train, wherein there was strong evidence upon which a finding of contributory negligence on part of automobile driver could be based, instruction that railroad's duty to warn was not necessarily fulfilled by complying with Public Utilities Commission's regulations which had been read required reversal where in fact no regulations of Commission were received in evidence or read to jury at any time.

7. Negligence ⇐71, 72

One who is without negligence on his part and who is suddenly confronted with unexpected imminent danger is not required to exercise same amount of care as one who acts after careful deliberation, and where one is confronted with an immediate choice between alternative courses of conduct, he is not necessarily negligent if he makes what turns out to be a wrong choice if he took one of courses a reasonable man would have taken.

8. Railroads ⇐351(2)

In action by automobile driver for injuries sustained in railroad crossing accident, wherein there was testimony that automobile driver either could have accelerated and passed in front of train if he had not slowed automobile by applying his brakes or that he could have stopped before he would have been on track, but that because of low visibility he misjudged his position in relation to tracks and applied his brakes and then tried to accelerate but could not clear tracks in time to prevent collision, instruction on doctrine of imminent peril was proper.

9. Railroads ⇐351(4)
Trial ⇐243

In action by automobile driver against railroad for injuries sustained in railroad crossing collision, instruction that railroad did not have exclusive right to travel over portion of public road covered by its tracks and instruction that railroad train had right of way were not inconsistent and were not improper.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment in the sum of $75,000 entered upon a jury verdict in an action which arose out of a railroad crossing accident in which plaintiff's car was struck by defendants' train. The first trial of this action resulted in a verdict in favor of defendants, but a new trial was granted by the trial court, and this court affirmed the order granting a new trial. 142 Cal.App. 2d 823, 299 P.2d 341.

As grounds for a reversal of the judgment appellants urge: (1) that the evidence establishes that respondent was contributorily negligent as a matter of law, (2) that the court committed prejudicial error in admitting certain evidence, (3) that the court committed prejudicial error in giving certain instructions to the jury, and (4) that the court committed prejudicial error in refusing to give certain instructions.

The accident here involved occurred in Stanislaus County about 12:55 a. m., February 3, 1953, at a point where Claus Road crosses the tracks of the railroad. Claus Road runs in a generally northeast and southwest direction. The railroad line runs in a northwest to southeast direction, or in railroad language west and east. The track is on an embankment. The crossing is unobstructed. The southern approach to the crossing was protected at the time of the accident by a standard cross-arm sign at the track, an advance disc type sign along the right-hand or easterly side of the road, and a pavement warning sign some 390 feet south of the crossing. The night was foggy according to all the witnesses. Visibility was estimated to be from zero to 40 or 50 feet for unlighted objects and 25 to 200 feet for lighted objects. Balthrop, the respondent herein, attended an evening class at Modesto Junior College. At the conclusion of the class he offered to drive a Mrs. Barringer, a co-worker at the Norris-Thermador plant, home. The two stopped for a hamburger and coffee and finally at about 11:55 p. m. Mrs. Barringer arrived at her home. Balthrop then proceeded to drive toward his home. He was familiar with the Claus Road crossing, and he knew that he would have to cross it on his way home. Several hundred feet south of the crossing Balthrop stopped and got out of his car. He noticed the pavement warning sign when he reentered his car. He also noticed the disc shaped warning sign at this time. He estimated that visibility was about 15 feet. He drove toward the crossing. He passed a vehicle coming in the opposite direction about 30 feet south of the crossing. The window on the driver's side was down. He listened for, but did not hear, a whistle. He looked for a light but did not see one. Momentarily, before the accident, he saw something and the next thing he knew "was 20 days later." He estimated that his speed at the time of the accident was 10 or 15 miles per hour. He also estimated that he could stop in 4 or 5 feet. He did not stop before crossing the track. On cross-examination he testified that the first time he looked up and down the track was when he was 10 or 12 feet from it. As he said, this was the first time he could see it.

The train was proceeding northwest, or in railroad terms west. It consisted of a diesel engine with a power unit and eight cars. The engine was equipped with a stationary and an oscillating light, an automatic bell and a two-way horn or whistle. The fireman and the engineer both asserted that the bell was working. They both testified that the whistle was sounded about 1 mile south of the crossing and continuously thereafter until the collision occurred.

There was some testimony, though contradicted, that Balthrop was intoxicated. There was testimony from a witness that he had passed Balthrop's car some 30 feet after he had crossed the tracks. This witness testified that when he had stopped at the tracks he saw no lights and heard no whistle. Other facts appearing in the record will be set forth in the course of this opinion.

[1] Appellants' first contention is that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. We do not agree with this contention. As was stated in Anthony v. Hobbie, 25 Cal.2d 814, at page 848, 155 P.2d 826, at page 829:

> "* * * The rule has been stated in various ways in a legion of cases, that contributory negligence is not established as a matter of law unless the only reasonable hypothesis is that such negligence exists; that reasonable or sensible men could have drawn that conclusion and none other; that where there are different inferences that may be drawn, one for and one against, the one against will be followed; and that before it can be held as a matter of law that contributory negligence exists, the evidence must point unerringly to that conclusion."

And as stated in Startup v. Pacific Electric Railway Co., 29 Cal.2d 866, at page 871, 180 P.2d 896, at page 899:

> "There was evidence that the driver of the automobile in which plaintiffs were riding took some precautions before crossing the tracks, and 'where it is shown that a [driver] has exercised some care, the question whether or not the care actually exercised was due and sufficient will always be a matter for determination by the jury.' Koch v. Southern California Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 677, 680, 84 P. 176, 177, 4 L.R.A.,N.S., 521, 113 Am.St.Rep. 332, 7 Ann.Cas. 795. It was therefore error for the court to instruct the jury that the driver of the automobile was guilty of negligence as a matter of law."

[2] We believe that the record in the instant case show that respondent driver exercised some care and that the question of "whether or not the care actually exercised was due and sufficient" was a question for the determination of the jury. It was a foggy night; visibility was obscured. Balthrop was driving slowly. He testified that he looked and listened. This is certainly evidence of some care and on the rule of the cited case the question would be a matter for the jury to determine. Appellants contend that one must look and listen and stop if necessary. Appellants particularly rely on Lazzarotto v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 157 Cal.App.2d 455, 321 P.2d 29, in which plaintiff was found guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. In that case the plaintiff was driving home about 1:00 a. m. He was familiar with the railroad crossing which was unguarded. He did not look for warning signs. All the windows on his car were closed. He saw the train some 250 feet away and he could have stopped when he first saw it, but he did not for some reason. He was not listening for a warning or expecting one. However, the facts in the instant case are different. First of all visibility was obscured. Balthrop testified he was listening and looking. The fact that he may not have looked until he was 10 or 12 feet away from the track is not indicative of no care, considering visibility was practically nil. As stated in 42 Cal.Jur.2d, Railroads, sec. 169, "* * * if there is any evidence in the record that he [the plaintiff] exercised some care contributory negligence is a question, not of law, but of fact." See also Toschi v. Christian, 24 Cal.2d 354, 149 P.2d 848.

Appellants' second contention is that the court erred in admitting in evidence over appellants' objections certain letters from the Public Utilities Commission to appellant railroad, which letters contained recitations to the effect that the crossing was deemed dangerous and that there should be an automatic signal installed at the crossing. The letters were offered for the limited purpose of showing that appellant railroad had notice that the crossing was hazardous because of increased traffic conditions; and after they were read to the jury, the court instructed the jury as follows:

> "The Court. Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I want at this time to admonish you again that the documents which Mr. McCormick has read to you have been admitted in evidence, not to prove the truth of any fact or facts therein contained, but solely and only to show that the Defendant Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company had been put upon its inquiry concerning the potentially hazardous character of this particular crossing and traffic conditions at the crossing."

In the instant case two theories of negligence were pleaded. One was that the company was negligent in its maintenance of the crossing. The standard of care required by the railroad would depend on the conditions at the crossing. No contention was made that the construction of the crossing itself was dangerous. Rather it was the theory of the respondent that the increased traffic conditions at the crossing because of the reopening of the Norris-Thermador plant necessitated the installation of some type of warning device other than those maintained. The letters would have been properly admissible to show that the appellant railroad had notice of the increased traffic conditions even though the letters contained hearsay and opinion matter, for as stated in Jensen v. Southern Pacific Co., 129 Cal.App.2d 67, at page 75, 276 P.2d 703 at page 709 (hearing denied):

> "The applications of the city of Burlingame to the Utilities Commission for an order requiring the railway company to install and maintain gates at this crossing, including Broadway, were, as stated by the court 'not offered for the truth of the statements contained therein, only to show that the city of Burlingame had notified the railroad that they deemed the crossing to be dangerous.' Thus limited, they tended to show that the defendant company had been put upon its inquiry concerning the potentially hazardous character of this particular crossing. As such, they seem relevant.

"The company says that it was chargeable with such knowledge; hence, this evidence was unnecessary, and therefore irrelevant, citing Martindale v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 89 Cal.App.2d 400, 412, 201 P.2d 48. In that case the defendant had admitted knowledge of previous accidents mentioned in the proffered letters. In the instant case, there was no similar admission on the part of the defendant. Indeed, it denied the existence of any unusual hazard at the Broadway crossing. Moreover, while the defendant was probably chargeable with knowledge of the physical character and condition of its property, it was not necessarily chargeable, to the same degree at least, with knowledge of traffic conditions, including the volume and congestion of traffic at this crossing, which contributed materially to the hazardous condition in question. Thus, it has been held that when the existence of danger is due to causes other than the activity of the defendant, it is necessary to prove that he had actual or constructive notice of that danger. Hatfield v. Levy Brothers, 18 Cal.2d 798, 806, 117 P. 2d 841. The degree of care necessary to constitute ordinary care is measured by reference to the circumstances of danger and risk known to the obligor; hence 'it is usually * * * permissible to prove any fact, known to such person at the time, which would have a reasonable tendency to increase or decrease the risk and danger of a particular course of action.' Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 136, 85 P. 152, 5 L.R.A.,N.S., 1059; (emphasis added.) In Marchetti v. Southern Pac. Co., supra, 204 Cal. 679, 684, 269 P. 529, the court attached significance to the fact that the city authorities had requested the railway company to install an automatic crossing signal. Moreover, a party is not limited to making out a mere prima facie case. People v. McMonigle, 29 Cal.2d 730, 742–743, 177 P.2d 745.

"Under the circumstances, we see no sound reason why plaintiffs should be precluded from showing that defendant had in fact been put upon its inquiry concerning such hazardous condition."

[3] However, the relevance of the notice evidence which the letters were introduced to show depended first on a showing of what the traffic conditions at the crossing were. There was no evidence in the record to indicate whether ten or a thousand cars a day used the crossing. The trial court instructed the jury after the letters were read to them that they were admitted to show that the defendant railroad "had been put on its inquiry concerning the potentially hazardous character of this particular crossing and traffic conditions at the crossing." Without a showing of the traffic conditions, the letters were irrelevant on the issue. It is permissible to show that a person has notice of a fact, but before notice can be shown there must be evidence of the fact itself. Therefore the court erred in admitting the letters in evidence.

The error was compounded because the court also gave the following instruction.

"It is the duty of a railroad company to exercise reasonable care in warning and for the safety of travelers on a public highway that crosses the tracks of the company.

"That duty is not necessarily fulfilled by complying with regulations issued by the Public Utilities Commission which have been read to you.

"Such regulations prescribe only the minimum measure of care that will satisfy the Commission.

"Whether or not compliance with such regulation at the crossing here in question amounted to reasonable care is a question that you must decide according to the following principle:

"Any measure that would have been taken by reasonably prudent railroad management to protect travelers on the highway in question, and at the time in question, from the dangers of the crossing, were measures required of the defendant railroad company."

No regulations of the Public Utilities Commission were received in evidence, nor were any regulations read to the jury at any time. Later in the instructions section 7604 of the Public Utilities Code which required the ringing of a bell or whistle prior to the time a train proceeds through a crossing was read.

Appellants cite Staggs v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 135 Cal.App.2d 492, 503, 287 P.2d 817, 823, where the court said: "* * * The instruction * * * is inapplicable * * * The jury had a right to assume that the court deemed it to be applicable to the issues being tried or the court would not have so instructed them. The giving of that instruction may have misled and confused the jury * * * It was therefore prejudicial error."

[4] The general rule is that it is error for the trial court to instruct upon matters which have no support in the evidence. As stated in Rodenberger v. Frederickson, 111 Cal.App.2d 139, at page 142, 244 P.2d 107, at page 109: "Unless instructions find support in the evidence they should not be given, and where there are no supporting facts they may mislead the jury."

In the case of People v. Okada, 14 Cal. App.2d 660, 58 P.2d 967, 969 cited by appellants, the trial court instructed the jury as to the speed limits in business and residential districts. Upon appeal, this instruction was held to be error since there was no evidence in the record as to whether the area in question had been signposted as to the speed limits applicable in a business or residential district. At page 664 of 14 Cal.App.2d at page 969 of 58 P.2d, the court said: "Instructions as to speed in a business district were therefore improper herein without proof from which the jurors might infer that the district where the accident occurred was in fact a business district." See also Clark v. Pamplin, 147 Cal.App.2d 676, 305 P.2d 950.

Appellants argue that the error in giving the instruction was prejudicial because of the fact "that in the evidence were Plaintiff's Exhibits 23–A, 23–B and 23–E—all of which were letters written on the official stationery of the Public Utilities Commission—and since they 'had been read' to the jury it is very probable that the jury understood from the giving of this instruction that the statements and directions contained in said Exhibits were 'regulations' of the Public Utilities Commission and that, accordingly, under this instruction the minimum duty of care required to be exercised by the Santa Fe was complied with only by the installation of automatic signals—as requested by the Commission in said Exhibits." Appellants quote the statement in Staggs v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co., supra, that the jury had a right to assume that the court deemed it to be applicable to the issues or the court would not so have instructed them.

Respondent in reply argues that the instruction was applicable and not misleading; that "the reference to 'regulations' in the instruction obviously had reference to section 7604 of the Public Utilities Code which was read to the jury and which did apply and which did prescribe a minimum standard of care."

We are unable to agree with respondent as we believe that the jury, having been instructed that it was the duty of appellants to comply with the regulations of the Public Utilities Commission "which have been read to you," would be more likely to regard the instruction as referring to the statement of the Commission in the letter that had been read to them to the effect that automatic signals were warranted at the crossing as a regulation of the Commission, than they would to regard it as referring to the provisions of section 7604 of the Public Utilities Code which was not read to them until later. We, therefore, conclude that the giving of the instruction was error.

[5, 6] Ordinarily it is not prejudicial or reversible error for a trial court to instruct upon matters which have no support in the evidence. But in a case which is extremely close and where, as in the instant case, there is strong evidence upon which a finding of contributory negligence on the part of respondent could be based, we believe that the giving of the instruction requires a reversal of the judgment.

We are fortified in this conclusion by the fact that in the former trial in which the letters were not introduced and no such instruction was given, and where the evidence as to the negligence and contributory negligence was substantially the same as in the instant case, the jury returned a verdict in favor of appellants.

[7, 8] Appellants next contend that the court erred in instructing on the doctrine of imminent peril. The rule is that one who is without negligence on his part, who is suddenly confronted with an unexpected imminent danger is not required to exercise the same amount of care as one who acts after a careful deliberation. Where a person is confronted with an immediate choice between alternative courses of conduct he is not necessarily negligent if he makes what turns out to be a wrong choice if he took one of the courses a reasonable man would have taken. Harper & James, The Law of Torts, sec. 16.11; Gamalia v. Badillo, 53 Cal.App.2d 375, 128 P.2d 184. In the deposition of the fireman Cyr, the statement is made that he was watching Balthrop's vehicle until just before the collision. He said that the car got down pretty slow and it never entered his head that he could have gotten hit. From this testimony one could infer that Balthrop could have stopped before he would have been on the track. If so, and if we also consider the evidence contained in the report of the Highway Patrol Officer who investigated the accident that Balthrop said that he saw the train, applied his brakes and then realized he was on the tracks, and then tried to accelerate but could not clear the tracks in time to prevent the collision, there is sufficient evidence in the record to support the instruction. Either Balthrop could have accelerated and passed in front of the train if he had not slowed by applying his brakes, or he could have stopped; but because of the low visibility he misjudged his position in relation to the tracks and by failing to realize that he could have stopped took the wrong course of action.

[9] Appellants next contend that the court erred in instructing the jury that the railroad did not have an exclusive right to travel over the portion of the public road covered by its tracks and also instructed that the railroad train had the right of way. Appellants contend that the instructions are inconsistent. We do not agree. The first instruction is a statement of a mere commonplace proposition within the general knowledge of the jurors that the public has a right to travel over a railroad crossing and does not contradict or conflict with the second instruction that a train has the right of way at a railroad crossing.

Appellants contend further that the court erred in not giving certain instructions offered by them. There is no merit in this contention. We have examined all of the instructions and are satisfied that with the exceptions hereinbefore noted the jury was fully and correctly instructed.

No other points raised require discussion.

The judgment is reversed.

ALAMEDA COUNTY FLOOD CONTROL AND WATER CONSERVATION DISTRICT, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 17915.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 5, 1959.

Rehearing Denied March 6, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 1, 1959.

Action by landowners against county flood control and water conservation district for damages to land, buildings and their contents as result of flood waters carried onto land after break in levee constructed by district. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, Donald K. Quayle, J., entered judgment in favor of district and landowners appealed. The District Court of Appeals, Peters, P. J., held that complaint alleging that district had been notified by plaintiffs of break in levee near plaintiffs' land but that district failed to repair same and both on the 10th and 21st days after notification flood waters flowed through break and onto land causing damage to buildings and contents, was sufficient to state a cause of action in tort against district but was insufficient to state a cause of action for inverse condemnation.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs brought this action against the defendant District and others setting forth two causes of action, one alleging negligence, and one purporting to set forth an action in the nature of inverse condemnation. The demurrer to the third amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiffs appeal.

The allegations of the complaint can be briefly summarized as follows: The plaintiffs own certain property in Alameda County upon which they operate their greenhouse and plant growing business. The defendant Flood Control District owns and operates Alameda Creek as part of its operations. Plaintiffs' property is located about 300 yards north of the channel of Alameda Creek, and is within the geographical boundaries of the District. The District owns and operates 8-foot levees along those portions of Alameda Creek here involved. On December 23, 1955, there occurred a 60-foot break in the levee about 300 yards from plaintiffs' property caused by water accumulating in such quantities in the watershed as to run against the levees with great force. At the same time large quantities of debris such as logs, stumps and brush collected in the stream near the break obstructing its flow. Thereafter on numerous occasions and particularly on January 5, 1956, the plaintiffs warned the defendant District of the break and of the obstructions, and informed this defendant that to protect the adjoining property the debris should be removed and the levee repaired. No repairs were made, and on January 15, 1956, and again on January 26, 1956 "as the direct and proximate result of the neglect of the defendants" large quantities of water carrying debris flowed through the break and onto plaintiffs' land, causing damage to plants and greenhouses in the amount of $77,000.

In a second cause of action plaintiffs purported to state a cause of action in inverse condemnation. In addition to the facts alleged in the first cause of action it is averred that, after notice, the defendants continued to operate and maintain the structures in a defective condition, and while these structures were being so maintained and operated the water and debris flowed on plaintiffs' land, causing the damage above alleged.

Within the time required by law a claim for such damages was properly served and filed.

Defendant District demurred to both causes of action. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and judgment was entered accordingly in favor of the District. From this judgment plaintiffs appeal.

The first cause of action sounds in tort, that is, it charges negligence against the District. As to this cause of action the basic question presented is whether defendant District is subject to such tort liability. The respondent District concedes that, in a proper case, it is liable in tort. At page 6 of Respondents' Brief appears the statement "We have no quarrel with the argument that the legislature has waived the sovereign immunity of the District in proper cases." This concession is in accord with the law.

[1] Article 20, section 6 of the California Constitution provides that "Suits may be brought against the State in such manner and in such courts as shall be directed by law." This section, of course, does not create liability. It is permissive, in that it permits the Legislature to prescribe how and when suits may be brought against the State and its political subdivisions. Rose v. State of California, 19 Cal. 2d 713, 123 P.2d 505.

[2, 3] It is true that such a District, being a governmental agency, is not liable for tort unless the Legislature has seen fit to impose such liability by statute. Whiteman v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irrigation District, 60 Cal.App. 234, 212 P. 706. If it be assumed that the Public Liability Act (Gov.Code, § 53051) in imposing tort liability on "local" agencies, does not include flood control districts (see Barlow v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 96 Cal.App.2d 979, 216 P.2d 903; Brandenburg v. Los Angeles Flood Control Dist., 45 Cal.App.2d 306, 114 P.2d 14), the legislative intent to impose such liability can be found in another statute, that is, in the basic statute creating the District. That statute is the Alameda County Flood Control and Water Conservation District Act. Stats. of 1949, p. 2241, Chap. 1275, as amended; West's Ann.Water Code–Appendix–§ 55–1 et seq., p. 340. Section 5 of that statute grants the power to the District "To sue and be sued in the name of said district," and section 29 consents to liability for tort in the following language: "Claims against the district whether arising out of contract, tort, or the taking or damaging of property without compensation must be made in writing and filed with the board within six months after the cause of action arises. Claims shall be presented in the general form and manner prescribed by general law relating to the making and filing of claims against counties. Such claims may be amended within said six months to correct defects in form or statement of facts. No action against the district shall be commenced or maintained unless such claim relating thereto has been filed as hereinabove prescribed and action thereon commenced within one year after the cause of action arose."

This section clearly makes the District amenable to a suit in tort. The section necessarily implies that if the claim filing procedure is followed, a suit in contract or in tort may be filed against the District so long as the one-year limitation provision is observed. This conclusion is not contrary to the cases holding that the Los Angeles Flood Control District is not liable in tort. Janssen v. County of Los Angeles, 50 Cal.App.2d 45, 123 P.2d 122; Brandenburg v. Los Angeles Flood Control Dist., 45 Cal.App.2d 306, 114 P.2d 14; Barlow v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 96 Cal.App.2d 979, 216 P.2d 903. Those cases held that the Los Angeles Flood Control District was not liable in tort, either under the then provisions of the Public Liability Act or of any other statute. These holdings were quite correct. An examination of the statute creating the Los Angeles District discloses that there is no section in it comparable to section 29 found in the Alameda Act. See Stats. of 1915, p. 1502, Chap. 755, as amended; West's Annotated Water Code, Appendix § 28–1 et seq., p. 335. Thus the concession of the respondent District to the effect that it "in a proper case" is liable for tort is in accordance with the law.

It is the contention of the District, however, that this is not "a proper case" for the imposition of such liability. Its theory is somewhat difficult to follow. It states that to allege a "proper case" of tort liability the complaint must allege "that respondent District had a legally imposed duty which it failed to perform and that such failure was the proximate cause of appellants' damages." Res. Br. p. 5. It is claimed that the complaint contains no such allegations. We agree that such allegations are necessary, but believe that the complaint is sufficient in this respect. Essentially the complaint alleges that an unusually heavy flow of water caused a break in the District's levee; that this fact and the danger therefrom were called to the attention of the District; that 10 days after this notice and again 21 days after the notice, water flowed upon plaintiffs' property causing damage, partly because debris had collected in the vicinity of the break; that in spite of the notice the District did nothing to remove the debris or to repair the levee.

[4] Respondent District argues that such allegations do not allege the existence of any duty owed to appellants and its violation. It correctly points out that the District is not an insurer. Curci v. Palo Verde Irr. Dist., 69 Cal.App.2d 583, 159 P.2d 674; Stone v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 81 Cal.App.2d 902, 185 P.2d 396. But those cases, while recognizing that no insurer's liability exists, also recognized that the districts involved did owe the landowners a duty not to injure their lands or property through any act of neglect on their part that it was under a duty to perform. Thus, the real question is whether the District was under a duty to repair after notice—if so, a cause of action has been pleaded.

[5, 6] The District urges that it was under no duty to take any steps to repair the levee or to protect the lands of plaintiffs because these waters were flood waters, and such waters constitute a "common enemy" which may be repulsed without liability. Under the "common enemy" doctrine it is undoubtedly the law that an owner, in a period of peril from floods, may erect structures on his land to protect his land from the flood waters without liability, even though such structures result in the diversion of water upon a neighbor's land. Weinberg Co. v. Bixby, 185 Cal. 87, 196 P. 25; see 3 Stanf.L.Rev. 361. But it is equally true that, after the erection of such a structure, the party erecting it is under a duty to maintain it in such a condition as not to cause injury because of negligent maintenance. In the instant case the District undoubtedly had authority to build the levee. But that levee was not constructed at a time of peril. It was not a temporary defensive measure, but a permanent installation. Therefore, contrary to respondent's contention, the construction of the levee does not fall within the "common enemy" doctrine.

But, the District argues, under the terms of the statute creating it, it was under no obligation to protect people from floods, and so had no duty to construct the levee. Based on this premise it is argued that the District owed no duty to appellants. Weck v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 80 Cal.App.2d 182, 181 P.2d 935, is cited in support of that contention. That case states (80 Cal.App.2d at page 203, 181 P. 2d at page 948): "There is no evidence that the protective structures were inherently defective. No duty rested on the District to keep the water out of plaintiffs' lands, as contended by plaintiffs. The statute creating the District contained no mandatory direction to build public improvements of any particular character or design, or any improvement at all. Its failure to construct an impervious and indestructible wall along the Wash was not an act constituting the taking or damaging of private property."

Under this case, and others that could be cited, it is probably the law that a flood district is under no enforceable obligation to build levees or other public improvements to keep out floods. But that is not the problem. Here the levee was constructed. The question is, after the public improvement is constructed, is the District, after notice, under an obligation to maintain it in such a manner so as not to injure the adjoining property as the result of negligent maintenance? The fact that the District may not have been under a duty to construct the levee, does not answer this question. Whether such a duty exists is dependent on general common law principles.

[7] Under the general common law there can be no doubt that a landowner is responsible for damages caused by the negligent disrepair of an artificial structure. The applicable principle is thus stated in section 365 of the Restatement of Torts:

> "A possessor of land is subject to liability for bodily harm caused to others outside the land by the disrepair of a structure or other artificial condition thereon, if the exercise of reasonable care by the possessor or by any person to whom he entrusts the maintenance and repair thereof
>
> "(a) would have disclosed the disrepair and the unreasonable risk involved therein, and
>
> "(b) would have made it reasonably safe by repair or otherwise."

The comments to this section are quite significant. They read as follows:

> "a. Meaning of 'disrepair.' The word 'disrepair' indicates that the condition of the structure has deteriorated since its creation. It includes dilapidations caused by the usual force of nature, by wear and tear, or by a sudden and previously unexpectable change caused by an unusual and unexpectable natural force, such as a cyclone or flood, by a fire or by the innocent, intentional or negligent acts of the possessor or third persons acting with or against his consent.
>
> "b. If a structure suddenly and without the fault of the possessor becomes dangerously dilapidated the possessor is not subject to liability for any harm done thereby to persons outside the land until he has had an opportunity by the exercise of reasonable care to make the structure safe."

[8] This section of the Restatement has been referred to with approval by the California Supreme Court. Lenahan v. Poole, 38 Cal.2d 392, 394, 240 P.2d 276, 34 A.L.R. 2d 481. Moreover, the California cases have definitely held that a landowner is liable for property damage to those outside his premises caused by the negligent maintenance of structures upon his land. Wiedekind v. Tuolumne County Water Co., 83 Cal. 198, 23 P. 311; Bacon v. Kearney Vineyard Syndicate, 1 Cal.App. 275, 82 P. 84.

[9] This principle is decisive of the present appeal. The District, whether required to do so or not, erected a structure, a levee, on its property. A break occurred in the levee because of heavy floods. The District is not being charged with liability for that break. Thereafter, there existed a state of disrepair of a structure on the District's land which it knew or should have known constituted a danger to those in the vicinity of the break. The District was notified of the break and of the danger. Thus, under the allegations, there is no doubt of respondent's knowledge of the defective condition. On this phase of the case see Armstrong v. Luco, 102 Cal. 272, 36 P. 674. The complaint alleges that respondents, after notice, had 10 to 21 days to repair the levee and did not do so. The damage to appellants' property then occurred during a heavy rainstorm. Certainly 10 to 21 days cannot be held, as a matter of law, to be such a short time that the District could not reasonably have repaired. It should be mentioned that section 22 of the Alameda Act specifically gives the District the power to contract for day labor without the necessity of publishing bids for "channel protection" or for "emergency work when necessary in order to protect life and property from impending flood damage."

[10] It seems to be the basic thought of the District that it was under no affirmative duty to act even after notice of the defective condition of the levee and of the danger to the adjoining landowners. This is the basic fallacy of its case. Under the Restatement, which sets forth in succinct form the common law rule, there is such a duty. After having constructed the levee the District was under the same duty to maintain it in a reasonable manner as a private landowner would be, at least after notice. Thus the plaintiffs have stated a good cause of action for negligence.

[11] The plaintiffs also contend that the other count of the complaint states a cause of action for inverse condemnation under Article I, section 14 of the California Constitution. It is their theory that they have stated a good cause of action for the taking or damaging of their property for a public use.

We think that this count does not state a cause of action and that the demurrer was properly sustained as to it. The most recent cases have made a distinction between negligence which occurs when a public agency is carrying out a deliberate plan with regard to the construction of public works, and negligence resulting in damage growing out of the operation and maintenance of public works. These cases hold that the damage resulting from the former type of negligence is compensable under Article I, section 14, whereas damages resulting from the second type of negligence are not recoverable in an inverse condemnation proceeding, but are recoverable, if at all, only in a negligence action. Bauer v. County of Ventura, 45 Cal.2d 276, 289 P.2d 1; Ward Concrete Products Co. v. Los Angeles Flood etc. Dist., 149 Cal.App.2d 840, 309 P.2d 546; Youngblood v. City of Los Angeles, 160 Cal.App.2d 481, 325 P.2d 587. It has been definitely held that a property owner may not recover in an inverse condemnation proceeding for damages caused by acts of carelessness or neglect on the part of a public agency. Neff v. Imperial Irrigation Dist., 142 Cal.App.2d 755, 299 P.2d 359. In the present case the District did not cause the original break in the levee, nor is it charged that such occurred by reason of negligence. Negligent design or construction is not charged, nor did the District deliberately divert the water onto the plaintiffs' lands. It is charged with negligent failure to act thereafter, that is, with negligence in the operation and maintenance of its property. In our opinion that does not charge a taking of property for public use under the Constitution.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, with instructions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer to the first cause of action.

Hearing Denied April 8, 1959.

Action against power company seeking declaratory relief with a respect to right of residential lot owners to construct fences across right-of-way easement. From portions of judgment of the Superior Court, Orange County, Ronald Crookshank, J., determining that owners had right to construct fences across right-of-way, the power company appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Stone, J. pro tem., held that under right-of-way easement for construction, maintenance, and servicing of power lines providing that grantee should have right to install and to use gates in any fences which might be constructed on lands of grantor for purpose of permitting convenient entry to right-of-way strip, purchasers of servient land, which was subsequently subdivided into residential lots, did not have right to construct fences across right-of-way without consent of power company.

STONE, Justice pro tem.

[1] During the year 1931 the defendant and appellant Southern California Edison Company, a corporation, obtained right of way easements over three parcels of real property in Orange County for the purpose of constructing and maintaining power lines over and across the land described therein. At that time the property consisted of three separately owned parcels all being used for agricultural purposes. During the intervening years the property was sold and subdivided into residential lots.

The plaintiffs, who own lots in the subdivision, filed an action in declaratory relief contending that they had the right to construct fences, clothes lines, patios, fish ponds, swimming pools, swings, and gymnasiums, and to plant trees on the right of way. The defendant denied plaintiffs' right to erect or place any of the enumerated improvements on the right of way and contended that it had the right of full, complete, unobstructed and unrestricted use of the strip of land 90 feet in width covered by the easement.

The court found and by its judgment decreed as follows:

> "That the plaintiffs as owners of the servient tenement may not place, construct or install any building or other structure upon the real property included within the description of the easement owned by the defendant, Southern California Edison Company, or in any way obstruct the necessary and convenient use of said easement and right of way by said defendant without the written consent of the said defendant."

The court also found,

> "That the right to construct fences by the plaintiffs upon or over the real property included within the description of the easement owned by the defendant Southern California Edison Company is given by the terms of the easement with the right to the said defendant to install and use gates."

Plaintiffs did not appeal from the portion of the judgment prohibiting them from building any sort of structure other than a fence upon the easements but the defendant has appealed from that portion of the judgment which permits the construction of fences subject to the right to install and use gates.

Looking first at the two agreements granting the Edison Company a right of way, we find them identical insofar as the language pertinent to this case is concerned. The clauses which define the purposes of the easement and the rights of the grantee are as follows:

"* * * the Grantor hereby gives and grants to the Grantee, its successors and assigns, the right, privilege and authority to construct, erect, alter, enlarge, improve, repair, remove, replace, operate and maintain electric transmission lines consisting of steel or wooden towers or steel or wooden poles, with necessary guys, foundations and anchors, together with overhead and/or underground electric transmission wires, ground cables, telephone and telegraph wires, with insulators and cross-arms placed on said towers or poles, and other necessary or convenient appurtenances connected therewith, across, over, under and upon a strip of land, * * *

"1. That the Grantee, its successors and assigns, shall at all times have ingress to, and egress from, said land for the purpose of constructing, repairing, renewing, altering, changing, enlarging, removing, replacing, patrolling and operating said transmission lines. (Said right of entry may be by trucks, automobiles, or other vehicles, or by foot, as may suit the convenience of the Grantee.) * * *

"6. That the Grantor, his heirs or assigns, will not allow or permit any building or other structure to be erected or placed within the boundaries of said land and/or right-of-way strip, except such as shall be approved in writing by the Grantee, its successors or assigns, or allow or permit any accumulation of explosive or inflammable material within the lines of said land and/or right-of-way strip or so near thereto as to constitute, in the opinion of the Grantee, its successors or assigns, a menace or danger to said transmission lines * * *

"8. That the Grantor, his heirs or assigns, shall have the right to use the lands affected by this easement in any way not inconsistent herewith; but it is understood and agreed that it is the intention of the parties hereto to grant to the Grantee, its successors and assigns, the fullest rights necessary or convenient to enable them to use the same without interference for the purposes hereinbefore set out. This easement shall include any and all rights necessary or convenient over, under and upon said land which the Grantee shall desire to exercise in connection with the construction, maintenance and operation of said transmission lines, whether specifically mentioned herein or not * * *"

The clause concerning gates in fences which the trial court construed as modifying the foregoing grant reads:

"The Grantee shall have the right to install and use gates in any fence or fences which shall now or hereafter be constructed across any portion of said land and/or right of way strip * * *

The third easement with which this appeal is concerned was acquired by deed rather than by agreement but the question on appeal is essentially the same. The clauses of the deed expressing the nature of the easement and the rights of the grantee are as follows:

"* * * those permanent and exclusive easements and rights of way to construct, reconstruct, maintain, operate, enlarge, improve, remove, repair and renew an electric transmission line consisting of a line of steel towers, poles, and/or other structures, wires, cables, including ground wires, both overhead and underground, and communication circuits, with necessary and convenient foundations, guy wires and anchors, insulators and cross-arms placed on said structures, and other appurtenances connected therewith, convenient and necessary for the con> struction, maintenance, operation, regulation, control and grounding of electric transmission lines for the purpose of transmitting, distributing, regulating, using and controlling electric energy, together with the right and easement for roads, ingress, egress, and other convenient purposes needed or desired at any time by the grantee, and the right and easement to construct, reconstruct, maintain and operate the same, and the right to clear and keep clear said easements and the real property affected thereby, free from explosives, buildings, structures, trees, brush and inflammable materials, for the protection from fire and other hazards; in, under, on, over and across a strip of land * * *

Then follows the clause regarding fences and gates which provides:

> "Grantee shall have the right to install and to use gates in any fences which are now or may be hereafter constructed on said lands of the Grantor, for the purpose of permitting convenient entry to said right of way strip. Any gates which are installed by Grantee on said lands shall be locked with Grantee's locks, and also, if the Grantor so desires, may be locked with the Grantor's locks, in such a manner that either can lock or unlock the gates. Any gates which are installed and locked by the Grantor and used by the Grantee shall be locked also by the Grantee's locks so that either can lock or unlock the gates."

The legal question presented by this appeal is identical as to all three easements as the clauses to be construed are substantially the same in each instrument. The trial court recognized the restriction of the servient tenement as to the construction of any building or structure on the right of way but found that the owners of the servient tenement could construct fences across the right of way and that the owner of the dominant tenement had the right to install gates in any fence constructed. There appears to be no doubt that a fence is a structure. Mendoza v. Central Forest Co., 37 Cal.App. 289, 174 P. 359; Western Electric Co., Inc. v. Colley, 79 Cal. App. 770, 774, 251 P. 331; 36 C.J.S. Fences § 1, P. 636. Hence the sole question is whether the words "The Grantee shall have the right to install and use gates in any fence or fences which shall now or hereafter be constructed across any portion of said land and/or right-of-way strip" modify and qualify the provision forbidding the erection of any structure on the right of way without the consent of the grantee. The right to place a gate in a fence granted to one party is not tantamount to a grant of authority to the other party to build a fence. If the clause pertaining to gates in fences were to have the meaning contended for by respondents the wording would have to be in substance: "The grantors shall have the right to construct fences across any portion of the right of way, subject to the right of the grantee to install and use gates". The wording used in the documents falls short of such a reservation in the grantor.

[2] If it be conceded for the purpose of argument that the clause in each instrument relating to fences and gates, when considered separate and apart from the rest of the document, does cause an ambiguity or a conflict, none the less, such a manner of interpretation would be contrary to the rules of construction of documents. The entire agreement must be construed as a whole and each clause considered in the light of all of the other clauses. Civil Code section 1650 provides: "Particular clauses of a contract are subordinate to its general intent." This rule of law has been amplified and stated in general terms by many decisions, a typical expression being that of the court in Hunt v. United Bank & Trust Co., 210 Cal. 108, 115, 291 P. 184, 187:

> "It is a primary rule of interpretation that contracts must be construed as a whole, that is, from their four corners, and the intention of the parties is to be collected from the entire instrument and not detached portions thereof, it being necessary to consider all of the parts to determine the meaning of any particular part as well as of the whole. Individual clauses and particular words must be considered in connection with the rest of the agreement, and all of the writing and every word of it will, if possible, be given effect. 13 Corpus Juris, 525." See also 12 Cal.Jur.2d p. 369; Perry v. Gross, 172 Cal. 468, 469, 156 P. 1031; Moore v. Wood, 26 Cal.2d 621, 630, 160 P.2d 772.

The grants of easement which are set forth quite fully hereinbefore reflect that the grantee was granted, among other rights, the right, privilege and authority to construct, erect, reconstruct, alter, enlarge, operate and maintain electric transmission lines consisting of steel or wooden towers overhead and underground. Paragraph 8 of the two agreements is particluarly significant and bears repeating. It provides:

"8. That the Grantor, his heirs and assigns, shall have the right to use the lands affected by this easement in any way not inconsistent herewith; but it is understood and agreed that it is the intention of the parties hereto to grant to the Grantee, its successors and assigns, the fullest rights necessary or convenient to enable them to use the same without interference for the purposes hereinbefore set out. This easement shall include any and all rights necessary or convenient over, under and upon said land which the Grantee shall desire to exercise in connection with the construction, maintenance and operation of said transmission lines, whether specifically mentioned herein or not."

It is clear that the parties to the original grants of easement contemplated a free and unhindered use of the right of way for the purpose of constructing, maintaining and servicing power lines. Considering the entire agreement it is evident that the parties did not intend that fences should be built across the easement at will without the consent of the owner of the dominant tenement.

The evidence disclosed that the right of way carries two 66,000 volt circuits, one known as the Barre-Trask Ocean View Circuit, and the other known as the Barre-Sullivan-Ellis Circuit. These circuits service approximately 100,000 residences. They also carry a responsible part of the service to various industrial users. In order to maintain the circuits and lines in good operating condition, they have to be patrolled approximately every ninety days. This patrol consists of two men in a truck, carrying tools and equipment to make necessary repairs. This patrol is conducted by riding along the lines to look at the structures to determine whether there is a frayed wire, hanging limbs, fallen structures, or any other obstructions. In addition, if a flashover occurs, that is a short in the circuit, the system is put out of service and it is necessary to patrol the line to determine the cause and repair it. Depending upon the degree of damage, in the event of a flashover, as many as three trucks and a holedigger need to get through and upon the easement and right of way for the purpose of repair. The trucks used in repair are four-wheel drive line trucks approximately twenty to twenty-five feet long, with a standard truck width. If a new pole were required, it would also involve a pole dolly, which is a two-wheel dolly, to which a pole is fastened, and the pole in turn fastened to the truck, forming a type of trailer. With the poles in question, it would be a trailer approximately seventy-five feet in length. In order to prevent a flashover between the structure and the wire, the insulators need to be cleaned. The cleaning process occurs at least once a year and under the present trend will occur more often. What is called an insulator washing machine is used to carry on the cleaning operation. This is a heavy piece of equipment, consisting of a boom, a water tank, and a high pressure pump with nozzle, all mounted on a truck, with a total weight of approximately twenty-three tons. This truck is driven down the right of way from pole to pole for cleaning purposes. If the right of way is not kept clear to allow the truck to be driven down the right of way, it is necessary that the cleaning process be performed by hand. In the hand-cleaning process the lines are taken out of service and deenergized, and a man climbs the pole and wipes the insulators with steel wool. This process requires one day to clean one circuit on six structures, compared to twenty structures a day on both circuits if the washing equipment is used. In the event it became necessary to restring the wire, each pole structure would have to be reached and the wire would have to be protected from obstructions on the ground to prevent damage.

[3] Fences at the property lines of every building lot in the subdivisions even with gates, would materially interfere with the purposes of the easements and prevent the appellant, a public utility, from performing its duty of supplying electric energy to the public by means of the power lines along the easement. An interpretation of an instrument which would thwart the fulfillment of the purposes of an easement and impede its use will not be favored where a reasonable interpretation consonant with the purposes of the easement as expressed in the document is tenable.

The judgment is reversed.

Rev. Charles W. HASSELBACH, Petitioner and Appellant,

v.

DEPARTMENT OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL, Russell S. Munro, Director, Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board, Coleman E. Stewart, Roe One and Roe Two, its members; Von's Grocery Company, a Corporation, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 23001.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 6, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 1, 1959.

Mandamus proceeding brought for review of an order of the alcoholic beverage control appeals board affirming an order of the department of alcoholic beverage control granting an on-sale liquor license. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., rendered judgment denying the relief sought, and the petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that question as to what is contrary to public welfare and morals is not a static one and that resolution of that question may change with lapse of time or change in physical conditions; and held that even if alcoholic beverage control department's former order might have constituted an estoppel to again litigate question as to whether granting of license would be contrary to public welfare and morals if there had been no change in circumstances, it would not have that effect where traffic on boulevard had increased by 30 per cent, number of customers patronizing market for which license was sought had increased by approximately 18 per cent and at least three new commercial enterprises had commenced operation in neighborhood since denial of prior application.

Affirmed.

In exercising its discretion in on-sale liquor license case, it was duty of department to take into consideration welfare of public as a whole and to exercise its discretion in light of conditions that existed at time of hearing as those conditions were shown by evidence; and it was not province of court reviewing case to substitute its judgment for that of department as to whether license should issue or as to whether there had been, since prior hearing and order denying application for license, change in circumstances which justified change in decision, providing that there was substantial evidence of change. Irving Sulmeyer, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Edward M. Belasco, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent State.

Johnson, Bates & Sheffield, Los Angeles, for respondent Von's Grocery Co.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

By his petition filed in the superior court, appellant sought to review an order of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board, hereinafter called "appeals board," affirming an order of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, hereinafter called the "Department" granting an on-sale liquor license to Von's Grocery Company, hereinafter called "Von's" and sought a writ of mandate to compel the appeals board to reverse its decision and the Department to annul its order and to deny a license to Von's. The superior court having entered judgment denying the relief sought, appellant, hereinafter called "petitioner" appeals.

Von's having filed its application with the board for a license and the board having given the statutory notice of such application, the petitioner on behalf of himself and the church of which he is the pastor, filed a protest with the board; the grounds of the protest being stated as follows: "That said 'Von's' are situated within the immediate vicinity of our church and Christian Elementary School, and that the issuance of this license would be contrary to public welfare and morals." After a hearing in which evidence was introduced by the Department, by the petitioner and by Von's, the hearing officer made findings of fact and from those determined that "[a]lthough the proposed premises are located within the immediate vicinity of a church and a school, issuance of the license would not be contrary to public welfare or morals," and recommended that the protest filed by petitioner be overruled. Thereafter the Department adopted the proposed decision of the hearing officer as its decision. Petitioner then prosecuted an appeal to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board and that board affirmed the order of the Department.

By his petition filed in the superior court, petitioner alleged that Von's had made three previous applications for a license; that petitioner and the church had opposed each of these applications and that the protests had been sustained. He set forth as an exhibit to his petition a copy of the decision of the Department sustaining the protest of Von's third application.[1] This third application was filed in August of 1955 and the decision of the Department sustaining appellant's protest thereto was made on November 25th of that year. The present application for a license was filed in October of 1956.

The only question involved on this appeal as stated by appellant is as follows: "Does the Doctrine of Res Judicata Apply to the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control in its Determinations of Whether or not to Grant the Issuance of a License to Sell Alcoholic Beverages?" In presenting this question appellant necessarily asserts that the former order of the board estops Von's, by its present application, from again litigating the fact as to whether the granting of a license to it would be contrary to the public welfare and morals. In other words, appellant relies upon the former order as an estoppel and not upon it as a judgment which bars the prosecution of the present application.

"'The estoppel of a judgment extends only to the facts in issue as they existed at the time the judgment was rendered, and does not prevent a reexamination of the same questions between the same parties where in the interval the facts have changed or new facts have occurred which may alter the legal rights'" of the parties affected by the order. Matcovich, 74 Cal.App.2d 398, at page 404, 168 P.2d 702, at page 706; 29 Cal.Jur.2d § 230.

[1] The Department is a constitution-created tribunal with fact finding power and is given the exclusive right to, in its discretion, grant or deny a license to sell intoxicating liquors. Article XX, § 22 of the Constitution of the State of California. In acting as a quasi-judicial tribunal the Department may not exercise its discretion arbitrarily but only in accordance with law and its decision as to what is contrary to the public welfare and morals must be based upon sufficient evidence. Stoumen v. Reilly, 37 Cal.2d 713, at page 717, 234 P.2d 969, at page 971.

In the present proceeding before the Department the evidence established that Von's market was opened at the location in question in the latter part of 1955; that prior to that time and in 1949 and 1950 a grocery store at the same site had held a beer and wine license; that Von's premises consist of a large market building situated in a shopping center at the corners of Riverside Drive and Fulton Avenue; that the same shopping center contains a drug-store, department store and off-street parking facilities; that Riverside Drive is a heavily traveled thoroughfare and that the traffic thereon had increased 30 per cent duing the year preceding the hearing; that the area near the market is predominately commercial; that the church of which appellant here is pastor is situated across Riverside Drive from the market and that the distance from the church to the market is 210 feet. It was erected in 1950; that there is a retail liquor store situated on Riverside Drive, 475 feet from the church; that during the year immediately preceding the hearing upon the present application the people patronizing the market had increased in number by approximately 3,000 per week; that in the same year a medical building which contained professional offices and a pharmacy and a building housing a hardware store and laundry had been erected; that the church has a congregation of approximately 700 and conducts an elementary school which has an enrollment of 130 students ranging in age from 5 to 12 years of age.

Appellant does not contend that these facts were not sufficient to uphold the finding of the Department that the issuance of the license would not be "contrary to public welfare and morals." Its sole contention is that the Department having in November of 1955 made a contrary finding, that finding was conclusive of the fact that the granting of the license was contrary to public welfare and morals and that the Department was precluded thereby from making a finding to the contrary and granting a license to Von's.

[2, 3] The question as to what is or is not contrary to the public welfare and morals is not a static one and the resolution of that question may change with the lapse of time or a change in physical conditions. We are not called upon to decide whether the Department's former order would have constituted an estoppel to again litigate the question as to whether the granting of a license would or would not be contrary to the public welfare and morals had there been no change in circumstances, for even assuming that res adjudicata would have applied to those circumstances, there was a change here and it was not therefore applicable.[2] The traffic on the boulevard had increased by 30 per cent, the number of customers patronizing the market had increased by approximately 18 per cent and at least three new commercial enterprises had commenced operation in that neighborhood. In exercising its discretion as to whether a license should be granted upon the present application of Von's, it was for the Department to determine whether the changes we have noted affected the ultimate fact as to whether the granting of the license would be contrary to the public welfare and morals and justify a different conclusion from the one it had theretofore reached as to the issuance of a license to Von's at the subject property.

[4] In reaching its conclusion and exercising its discretion it was the duty of the Department to take into consideration the welfare of the public as a whole and to exercise its discretion in the light of the conditions that existed at the time of the hearing as those conditions were shown by the evidence. It is not the province of a court reviewing the proceedings of the Department to substitute its judgment for that of the Department as to whether a license should issue or as to whether there had been, since the prior hearing and order, a change in circumstances which justifies a change in decision, providing that there was substantial evidence of the change. To hold otherwise would be to vest in the court the discretion which by the Constitution is vested exclusively in the Department.

Appellant directs our attention, however, to the fact that in its written opinion affirm-

2. Counsel for the respondent, by their briefs, earnestly contend that a decision of an administrative body cannot operate as a collateral estoppel under the doctrine of res adjudicata. They rely upon Altadena Community Church v. State Bd. of Equalization, 109 Cal.App. 2d 99, 240 P.2d 322 and Steiger v. Board of Supervisors, 143 Cal.App.2d 352, at page 358, 300 P.2d 210, at page 215 to uphold their contention. While some of the language used by the court in the cases just cited is so broad as to preclude a decision of a constitutionally constituted administrative board operating as a collateral estoppel under the doctrine of res adjudicata, we do not believe that when those cases are read in the light of the question before the court they may be so understood. It is unquestionable that the orders of an administrative body such as the Department have in proper cases the same effect and finality as judgments of a court. People v. Lang Transportation Co., 217 Cal. 166, at page 170, 17 P.2d 721, at page 723; People ex rel. Skelton v. City of Los Angeles, 133 Cal. 338, at page 342, 65 P. 749, at page 750; Mogan v. Board of Police Com'rs, 100 Cal.App. 270, at page 273, 279 P. 1080, at page 1081; see also Davis' "Administrative Law Treatise," Vol. 2 pp. 545–628; 1942 Wisconsin Law Review, pp. 1–42 and pp. 198–235; 40 Illinois Law Review, pp. 56–83; 27 Michigan Law Review, pp. 677–683; 46 Yale Law Review, pp. 1320 et seq.

ing the order of the Department, the Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board stated that the changes which were made were not substantial and placed its affirmance of the Department's findings and decision upon the basis that res adjudicata did not apply but that the Department had the right to reverse its former rulings without change in conditions.

[5] The statement made in the opinion of the appeals board was not a finding of fact for that board is without power to make findings of fact. Its power is limited to determining the following questions: (a) whether the Department had proceeded without or in excess of its jurisdiction, (b) whether the Department had proceeded in the manner required by law, (c) whether its decision is supported by the findings, (d) whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record and (e) whether there was relevant evidence which in the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have been produced or which was improperly excluded at the hearing before the Department. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 23084; art. XX, § 22 of the Constitution.

While in his notice of appeal to the appeals board appellant stated several grounds for the appeal, they in reality only presented the question as to whether the findings made by the Department supported its decision. Appellant, by his notice of appeal to the appeals board, did not assert as a ground of reversal that the findings were not supported by substantial evidence but only that the findings were capricious and arbitrary because contrary to the former decision of the board.

[6] By its findings the Department found all of the changes and conditions which we have heretofore noted other than the increase in the patronage of the market and further found that it was not true that the issuance of the license to Von's would adversely affect the functions of the church or school or create any appreciable hazard to the morals or welfare of the children in the church school and that "in view of the nature of the business sought to be licensed and the increasingly commercial character of the neighborhood * * * issuance of the license would not be contrary to public welfare or morals." (Emphasis added.) Upon the appeal to it the appeals board had but two alternatives: it might affirm the order of the Department or if it found that the Department's findings did not support its decision it might reverse and remand the matter to the Department for further consideration. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 23085. The board did affirm the decision of the Department and thus ruled that the findings did support the Department's decision and order. The fact that in arriving at its decision affirming the decision of the Department the appeals board erroneously held (if its holding was erroneous) that res adjudicata was under no circumstance applicable in a proceeding such as the one in question here, in nowise affected the validity of its decision, for as we have pointed out, there was a change in conditions and it was for the Department to determine whether those changes were of such a character as to justify the conclusion that the granting of a license would not to be contrary to public welfare and morals. The decision of the appeals board was therefore correct and it matters not that the reasons given by it were erroneous. Sears v. Rule, 27 Cal.2d 131, 140, 163 P.2d 443; Difani v. Riverside County Oil Co., 201 Cal. 210, 217, 256 P. 210; Lincoln v. Superior Court, 22 Cal.2d 304, 315, 139 P. 2d 13.

To sum up, it is our opinion that the evidence before the Department supported its findings of fact, that its findings of fact supported its decision, and that while it was within the province of the appeals board to reverse the Department's decision and remand the matter to the Department, it having affirmed and its affirmance being supported by the record, the lower court was correct in denying the writ prayed for by appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

In the Matter of the ESTATE OF Edgar Laurence DOW, also known as E. L. Dow, Deceased.

Maxine B. DOW, Administratrix with the Will Annexed, Petitioner and Respondent,

v.

Maxine Patricia HUTCHINSON, Respondent and Appellant.

Civ. 18108.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 9, 1959.

Rehearing Denied March 11, 1959.

Hearing Denied April 1, 1959.

Appeal from an order of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Thomas M. Foley, J., settling supplemental accounts covering periods from 1955 decree of distribution, granting ordinary and extraordinary compensation to administratrix and her attorney, etc. and from a minute order authorizing sale of shares of stock retained by estate. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that where Probate Court ordered payment to attorney of $3,250 and such amount was later reduced to $2,500 under a compromise acceptable to attorney, restoration of reduction by probate court through efforts of administratrix was improper.

Minute order reversed and portions of order directing payment of reduced sum to attorney and payment of costs in prohibition proceeding reversed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇐181

Allowance of $500 per month to widow during progress of settlement of estate and during pendency of appeal from a decree of distribution or until further order of court was not payable only out of widow's half of estate but was payable out of entire estate, and probate court had jurisdiction to assess any charges against estate after such decree.

2. Executors and Administrators ⇐500

Where daughter's appeal from 1955 decree of distribution compelled continuance of administration and delay in administration was not due to administratrix' whim or wrongdoing in any sense, allowance of ordinary and extraordinary compensation to administratrix and her attorneys was proper.

3. Executors and Administrators ⇐497, 501

Occasion for and amount of extraordinary compensation to an administratrix is a matter for discretion of trial court and reviewing court will interfere only for abuse.

4. Executors and Administrators ⇐216(2)

Ordinary and extraordinary compensation may be allowed an attorney for defending administratrix' account.

5. Executors and Administrators ⇐316

Probate court did not abuse its discretion in directing administratrix to withhold assets worth approximately $50,000 to take care of charges due or to become due, when principal item so withheld was corporate stock upon which substantial taxable capital gains would be realized when reduced to cash.

6. Executors and Administrators ⇐197

Where Supreme Court directed that order for family allowance should continue until approximate time when widow might come into possession of her distributive share, and portions of estate were distributed on May 28, and on June 26, and on July 17, which was day after Supreme Court's affirmance of family allowance became final, probate court entered its order terminating allowance, election of July 2, as the date for determination of family allowance was not error.

7. Executors and Administrators ⇐256(8)

Where probate court ordered payment to attorney of $3,250 and such amount was later reduced to $2,500 under a compromise which attorney was willing to accept and reduction was affirmed on appeal by administratrix, restoration of reduction by probate court through efforts of administratrix was improper.

8. Costs ⇐73

Where administratrix secured a writ of prohibition concerning an order directing administratrix to deliver certain assets of estate within ten days to a beneficiary and no costs were awarded by district court in that original proceeding, such costs were not recoverable by administratrix from such beneficiary in settlement of estate.

9. Costs ⇐32(1), 73

In an original proceeding, costs are not awarded to prevailing party as of course, and, in absence of specific order therefor by reviewing court, they are not recoverable.

10. Executors and Administrators ⇐337

Where notice of hearing of petition by administratrix for order authorizing sale of shares of stock retained by estate was neither given to a beneficiary nor dispensed with by court order, order authorizing sale of shares of stock was improper. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 771.

DRAPER, Justice.

This is one more appeal in the prolonged and bitter dispute between mother and daughter over distribution of the estate of the husband and father. Testator died in 1930. The intervening years have not cooled the acrimony of his survivors. The case has often been before the appellate courts. In re Estate of Dow, 91 Cal.App.2d 420, 205 P.2d 698 [hearing denied by Supreme Court]; In re Estate of Dow, 120 Cal.App. 2d 296, 260 P.2d 970; Dow v. Superior Court, 140 Cal.App.2d 399, 297 P.2d 30 [hearing denied]; In re Estate of Dow, 149 Cal.App.2d 47, 308 P.2d 475 [hearing denied]; In re Estate of Dow, 149 Cal.App.2d 67, 308 P.2d 488; In re Estate of Dow, 149 Cal.App.2d 69, 308 P.2d 489; Hutchinson v. Superior Court, 149 Cal.App.2d 73, 308 P. 2d 492; In re Estate of Dow, 48 Cal.2d 649, 312 P.2d 1. Thus it is not surprising that the present appeal turns largely upon the interpretation and application of previous decisions.

[1] On February 2, 1955, the probate court entered its order settling third and fourth accounts of respondent as administratrix with the will annexed and its decree of distribution. The present appellant appealed from that order and decree, later restricting her appeal from the decree to those portions directing distribution to Mrs. Dow. April 13, 1955, the probate court ordered payment of an allowance of $500 per month to respondent "during the progress of the settlement of the Estate, and the Appeal now pending * * *, or until the further Order of this Court." The present appellant appealed from that order. On September 7, 1955, the probate court ordered respondent administratrix to deliver to Mrs. Hutchinson, within 10 days, certain of the assets described in the decree of distribution. Respondent administratrix appealed from that order. The appellate court modified and affirmed the order settling accounts and the decree of distribution (149 Cal.App.2d 47, 66, 308 P.2d 475) and the order of September 7, 1955 (149 Cal.App.2d 69, 308 P.2d 489). Thereafter the order granting family allowance was affirmed (48 Cal.2d 649, 312 P.2d 1). By order filed July 17, 1957 the probate court settled supplemental accounts which covered the period after the 1955 decree, terminated the family allowance, granted ordinary and extraordinary compensation to administratrix and her attorneys, directed retention in the estate of cash and 758½ shares of River Farms Company, and directed distribution of the remaining assets in equal shares to the parties hereto. The daughter now appeals from portions of this latest order.

Appellant's basic argument is that the decree of distribution filed February 2, 1955 determined the rights of the parties. Since she appealed only from the portions directing distribution to respondent, she contends that the decree became final as to appellant's distributive share on respondent's failure to appeal therefrom. Thus, she asserts, the court in 1957 had no jurisdiction to charge her distributive share with any part of the family allowance and other expenses of administration arising after February 2, 1955.

But this issue has been determined against appellant's contention. The Supreme Court (48 Cal.2d 649, 653, 312 P.2d 1, 4) held that under "[t]he particular circumstances of this case" the family allowance after decree of distribution was a proper charge against the estate. Appellant suggests that this decision must be construed to award respondent a family allowance only from respondent's own half of the estate. This view is clearly contrary to the holding implicit in the Supreme Court decision, as appellant recognized in petitioning for rehearing in that case. In that petition, she described as "incontestable" the fact that "50 cents of every dollar paid under this order is abstracted from appellant's distribution." Similarly, the estate as a whole is chargeable with proper expenses incurred while the appeals from the 1955 orders necessarily extended the period of administration. The Supreme Court specifically noted that when the daughter appealed from the decree of distribution the "estate was therefore no longer in a condition to be 'immediately' closed" (48 Cal. 2d at page 652, 312 P.2d at page 3) and that "the decree, while denominated a decree of final distribution, specifically provides * * * for further proceedings, including the payment of all obligations of the estate * * *" (48 Cal.2d at page 653, 312 P.2d at page 4). The District Court of Appeal recognized that the decree of distribution "did not fully take into account the fact that it might be followed by an appeal" (149 Cal.App.2d at page 71, 308 P.2d at page 491), specifically contemplated "payment of all charges and claims not provided for in the decree of distribution" (149 Cal.App.2d at page 71, 308 P.2d at page 491) and modified the order to require withholding of additional assets to meet "the foreseeable contingencies during the final determination of all estate matters" (149 Cal.App.2d at pages 71–72, 308 P.2d at page 491). The probate court was directed to "determine at once what assets of the estate, money or stock or both, are required to be withheld to meet all foreseeable contingencies" (149 Cal.App.2d at pages 72, 308 P.2d at page 491; 149 Cal. App.2d at page 66, 308 P.2d at page 487). This language completely disposes of appellant's claim that the probate court lacked jurisdiction to assess any charges against the estate after the 1955 decree. However, she attacks individual items upon other grounds.

[2–4] Appellant argues that the allowance of ordinary and extraordinary compensation to administratrix and her attorneys is improper. As suggested above, the appeal of the present appellant from the 1955 decree compelled continuance of administration. We do not seek to apportion responsibility for the delay in administration over its whole period. It is implicit, however, in the appellate decisions of 1957 that the delay since February 2, 1955 has not been due to respondent's whim or wrongdoing in any sense which should deprive her or her counsel of reasonable compensation. The occasion for and the amount of extraordinary compensation is a matter for the discretion of the trial court, to be interfered with on appeal only for abuse. In re Estate of Scherer, 58 Cal.App.2d 133, 142, 136 P.2d 103. Such compensation may be allowed an attorney for defending the administrator's account. In re Estate of Raphael, 128 Cal.App.2d 92, 97, 274 P.2d 880. We have reviewed the allowances made to the administratrix and her attorneys, and find no reason to disturb them.

[5] Appellant asserts that the probate court abused its discretion in directing administratrix to withhold assets worth approximately $50,000 to pay "charges due or to become due." While this amount seems somewhat large, we must note that the principal item so withheld is corporate stock upon which substantial taxable capital gains will be realized when it is reduced to cash. This fact, and the long history of this case, which the probate court might well fear would be still further lengthened, lead us to feel that there has been no abuse of discretion.

[6] Appellant complains that the family allowance should have terminated at an earlier date than July 2, 1957. Decision modifying and affirming decree of distribution was filed March 11, 1957 (149 Cal.App. 2d 47, 308 P.2d 475), hearing by the Supreme Court was denied May 8, 1957 and remittitur was issued May 13, 1957. The Supreme Court decision affirming order for family allowance (48 Cal.2d 649, 312 P.2d 1, 4) pointed out that the allowance was to continue "until the approximate time when the widow might come into possession of her distributive share." Portions of the estate were distributed May 28, 1957 and on June 26, in accordance with the order of the District Court of Appeal, respondent filed her second supplemental account and sought determination of the amount to be withheld from distribution for closing costs. On July 17, the day after the Supreme Court's affirmance of the family allowance became final, the probate court entered its orders fixing the amount to be withheld and terminating the family allowance after payment of $500 which had become due July 2. Full distribution could not be had at an earlier date because of the several appeals. In fact, the present appeal has still further delayed the date when the widow may come into possession of her distributive share. We find no error in selection of the termination date.

[7] In 1955, the probate court had ordered payment to attorney Caubu of $3,250, and had later reduced this amount to $2,500, a compromise which the attorney was said to be willing to accept. The administratrix appealed from the order reducing the allowance, and the reduction was affirmed, the court noting that the criticisms by the administratrix "are captious and unfounded" (149 Cal.App.2d 72, 308 P.2d 489, 491). Undaunted, respondent again sought payment of the same sum of $750 to attorney Caubu, and it was granted by the probate court. We find no reason for this restoration of the previous deduction, and it is not sought by the attorney involved. This allowance must be reversed.

[8, 9] The order now appealed from also directs payment by appellant to respondent of $338.61 as costs in a proceeding in which respondent secured a writ of prohibition concerning the order of September 7, 1955. No costs were awarded by the District Court of Appeal in that original proceeding. Dow v. Superior Court, 140 Cal.App.2d 399, 297 P.2d 30. In an original proceeding, costs are not awarded to the prevailing party as of course, and, in the absence of specific order therefor by the appellate court, they are not recoverable. (3 Witkin, California Procedure, 2564 and cases there cited.)

Appellant complains of reduction of the bond of administratrix to $10,000. But the record does not negative application of Probate Code, § 541.1. Thus there is no basis for reversal or modification of the order here. The remaining detailed attacks are based principally upon the claim that distribution to appellant was final with the decree of February 2, 1955, and that the court had no jurisdiction thereafter. This contention has been fully discussed, and cannot be sustained.

[10] Appellant also has appealed from minute order of September 12, 1957, authorizing sale of 300 shares of stock retained by the estate. The two appeals are consolidated. The record before us indicates that notice of hearing of the petition for the latter order was neither given to appellant nor dispensed with by court order. But the personal representative can secure such an order only on notice, unless the court makes its order dispensing with notice. Prob. Code, § 771. Thus this order must be reversed.

The minute order of September 12, 1957 is reversed. The portions of the order of July 17, 1957 directing payment of $750 to attorney Caubu, and payment to respondent by appellant of $338.61 for costs in the prohibition proceeding are reversed. In all other respects that order is affirmed. Costs are awarded to respondent, Maxine B. Dow.

BUILDERS CONCRETE, INC., a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. A. 58.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Fresno County, California.

Feb. 2, 1959.

Action to recover a certain sum as liquidated damages for breach of contract, under which defendant waived its appeal from decree, enjoining its plant operation as a nuisance, in consideration for plaintiffs' agreement to permit continuance of operations for a limited period. The Municipal Court rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, Popovich, J., held that evidence sustained finding that provision in contract for payment of $50 per day in event of operation of plant after extension date was fair compensation for plaintiffs' loss and that provision should be construed as one for liquidated damages rather than as a provision for a penalty.

Affirmed.

1. Damages ⇐83

Whether damages would be impracticable or extremely difficult of precise appraisal, for purposes of Civil Code section invalidating contract provision fixing amount of damages in anticipation of breach except when it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix actual damages, is largely a question of fact. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

2. Damages ⇐157(3)

In order to recover on contract providing for liquidated damages, plaintiff must plead and prove that at time contract was entered into damages in event of breach would have been impracticable or extremely difficult of ascertainment and that sum agreed upon represented a reasonable endeavor to ascertain what such damages would be and that a breach of contract has occurred. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

3. Damages ⇐80(1)

To satisfy statute invalidating contract provision attempting to fix amount of damages in anticipation of breach of obligation except when it is impracticable or extremely difficult to fix actual damages, amount agreed upon must have resulted from a reasonable endeavor by parties to estimate fair compensation for any loss that might be sustained because of breach. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

4. Damages ⇐78(2)

Stipulation that amount was agreed upon as liquidated damages and not as a penalty is not conclusive, but is entitled to some weight in determining validity of contract provision under statute invalidating provision attempting to fix amount of damages in anticipation of breach except when it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix actual damages. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 1670, 1671.

5. Damages ⇐189

In action to recover a certain sum as liquidated damages for breach of contract, under which defendant waived its appeal, from decree enjoining its plant operation as a nuisance, in consideration for plaintiffs' agreement to permit continuance of operations for a limited period, evidence sustained finding that provision in contract

Savage & Shepard, Fresno, for plaintiffs and respondents.

Rowell, Lamberson & Thomas, Fresno, for defendant and appellant.

POPOVICH, Judge.

The defendant and appellant appeals from a judgment of the Municipal Court, awarding plaintiffs and respondents $2,750 as liquidated damages for breach of contract.

Appellant operated a transit mix concrete plant in the City of Clovis on property adjacent to the poultry ranch and residence of respondents. On the basis that the operation of this plant constituted a nuisance, respondents had secured a judgment in the Superior Court of Fresno County, permanently enjoining appellant from continuing the operation of its plant, effective July 18, 1956, together with damages in the sum of $6,600. Subsequent to the entry of the judgment, the parties entered into the contract upon which this suit is brought extending the effective date of the injunction to October 17, 1956, to enable appellant to continue its concrete business while it was establishing a new plant at a new location. The contract provided that, in consideration for the extension, appellant waived its appeal, agreed to keep the nuisance of its operation to a minimum, and in the event it operated past the extension date, it would pay to respondents the sum of $50 per day as liquidated damages for each of certain defined acts of operation, including loading or unloading of a transit mix truck or bulk cement truck with either sand or gravel. It also recited that said sum was "in lieu of monetary damages and as liquidated damages for the violation hereof," and the parties "agree to this specified amount of damages per day since the effect of the injury and damage by continued operation of the plant on first parties is difficult and impracticable to ascertain."

Respondents alleged that appellant breached this contract by continuing its operation after October 17, 1956, until December 2, 1956. Appellant admitted this breach. Respondents further alleged and the evidence shows that dust, noise, etc., from the operation of the plant affected the peaceful and quiet enjoyment of their residence, impaired their sleep, soiled their laundry, caused their chickens to become frightened and run and break their wings, causing loss of chickens and egg production, and the cement dust injured their fruit trees causing some of them to die.

The evidence further showed that all negotiations leading to the execution of said contract was through the attorneys who had handled the injunction suit. Mr. Underdown, President of the appellant company, admitted on cross-examination that the litigation had been long and involved and he had, therefore, left to his attorney the matter of the negotiations. He conceded that he sought the time for extension and was willing to waive his right of appeal therefor and had concluded the amount of $50 per day as liquidated damages after such negotiation.

Appellant contends that the judgment of the lower court should be reversed because respondents failed to plead and prove that the contract sued upon is within the exception set forth in Civil Code, § 1671; that the sum of $2,750, awarded, was by way of penalty rather than of liquidated damages; that as a matter of law the court could not have properly found that it was impracticable or extremely difficult to fix actual damages.

[1] In this state, a contract which attempts to fix the amount of damages in anticipation of a breach of an obligation is void to that extent (Civil Code, § 1670), except when from the nature of the case it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage. Whether or not the damage would be impracticable or extremely difficult of precise appraisal is largely a question of fact. Dyer Bros. Golden West Iron Works v. Central Iron Works, 182 Cal. 588, at page 593, 189 P. 445.

[2, 3] In order to recover on a contract providing for liquidated damages, a plaintiff must plead and prove that at the time the contract was entered into, damages in the event of a breach would be impracticable or extremely difficult of ascertainment and that the sum agreed upon represented a reasonable endeavor to ascertain what such damages would be, and that a breach of the contract had occurred. The amount agreed must result from a reasonable endeavor by the parties to estimate a fair compensation for any loss that may be sustained because of a breach. McCarthy v. Talley, 46 Cal. 2d 577, at page 587, 297 P.2d 981.

[4] The parties did stipulate that they agreed upon an amount as liquidated damages and not as a penalty. While not conclusive, such a stipulation is entitled to some weight. Atkinson v. Pacific Fire Extinguisher Co., 40 Cal.2d 192, 253 P.2d 18.

[5] From the evidence adduced before the trial judge, it would appear that in view of the circumstances which existed at the time the contract was executed, considering the nature of the damages suffered by the respondents, its cause, the effect upon the poultry, the difficulty of evaluating the loss of production, the extent of tree and fruit damages, the variations from day to day of the operations of the appellant's plant, the number of trucks used and the other factors which were obviously experienced in the trial by both the parties and their counsel, that the parties deliberated carefully through their attorneys in the negotiations of the contract in question, it would appear that there was sufficient difficulty encountered by the parties in estimating the damages, and it was, therefore, reasonable for them to agree upon the amount stated in their contract.

The record amply supports the Court's Findings, both as a matter of fact and law, that the provision in the contract for $50 per day to respondents, under the circumstances, was a fair compensation for respondents' loss, and said provision should be construed as a valid enforceable provision for liquidated damages.

It is, therefore, ordered the judgment of the lower court be, and it hereby is, affirmed.

v.

CITY OF OAKLAND, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. A. No. 268.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Alameda County, California.

Feb. 2, 1959.

Action was brought to recover charge or fee alleged to have been wrongfully exacted from plaintiff by defendant-city. The Municipal Court of the Oakland-Piedmont Judicial District, Frederick M. Van Sicklen, J., entered judgment adverse to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, Richard H. Chamberlain, J., held that charge or fee exacted from plaintiff by defendant-city for issuance of annual permit pursuant to city ordinance requiring payment of annual license tax or fee by any person carrying on any business within the city was a "tax" within meaning of statute defining original jurisdiction of municipal courts and providing that municipal courts shall not have jurisdiction of cases involving legality of any "tax", impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and that therefore municipal court did not have jurisdiction of the action.

Judgment reversed, and action remanded to municipal court with direction to transfer action to Superior Court for Alameda County.

1. Courts ⇐190(6)

Appellate Department of the Superior Court would be justified in dismissing contention of respondent that appellant should not be heard to allege that judgment was erroneous because appellant had allegedly requested rendition of the judgment, where the appellate record disclosed no such "request" by appellant, since the Appellate Department of the Superior Court was required to decide the case on the appellate record.

2. Courts ⇐190(8)

Where plaintiff, a layman, appeared in his own behalf without an attorney, and was obviously desirous of attaining from municipal court a ruling from which he could appeal to Appellate Department of the Superior Court, and application of doctrine of invited error, because plaintiff allegedly requested municipal court to enter the judgment, would not be fair or equitable to plaintiff, Appellate Department of the Superior Court, in exercise of its discretion, would not apply the doctrine on appeal by plaintiff.

3. Courts ⇐188(2)

Charge or fee exacted from plaintiff by defendant city for issuance of annual permit pursuant to city ordinance requiring payment of annual license tax or fee by any person carrying on any business within the city was a "tax" within meaning of statute defining original jurisdiction of municipal courts and providing that municipal courts shall not have jurisdiction of cases involving legality of any "tax", impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and therefore municipal court did not have jurisdiction of action to recover back from city the charge or fee exacted from him by city. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 89, subd. 1(a).

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Tax".

4. Courts ⇐483

Where municipal court did not have original jurisdiction of action to recover charge or fee which defendant city had exacted from plaintiff, because the action involved a "tax," municipal court should have transferred the action to the superior court, instead of rendering judgment that plaintiff take nothing. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 89, subd. 1(a), 396.

5. Courts ⇐190(9)

Where municipal court, which did not have original jurisdiction of action, improperly rendered judgment that plaintiff take nothing from defendant, instead of transferring the action to superior court, it was not proper for Appellate Department of Superior Court on appeal by plaintiff to order a transfer to superior court for exercise of superior court's original jurisdiction, but judgment should be reversed, and action should be remanded to municipal court with direction to transfer action to superior court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 89, subd. 1(a), 396.

Paul W. Cowles, in pro. per.

John W. Collier, City Atty., and Frederick M. Cunningham, Deputy City Atty., Oakland, for respondent.

RICHARD H. CHAMBERLAIN, Judge.

This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendant, rendered after the Municipal Court had sustained defendant's demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend.

By the complaint and an amendment thereto, neither of which is a model of pleading, the plaintiff seeks to recover from the defendant the sum of $12 which he alleges he paid to the City License Fee Collector "under duress and fear of criminal prosecution" for the issuance of an annual "Municipal Permit" in October, 1957, pursuant to the provisions of a 1932 City Ordinance.

The further allegations of the complaint and amendment may be summarized as follows: In 1932 the City enacted an ordinance (sections 5–1.02 et seq. of the Oakland Municipal Code) requiring the payment of an annual "license tax" or fee by any person carrying on any business within the city, the amount of the tax or fee being computed upon the number of persons employed in the business. Although the ordinance expressly provided—and still provides—that the payment required was "a tax for revenue purposes and are not regulatory permit fees," the true primary purpose of the ordinance "is for regulation and not revenue." Since 1933 plaintiff has been and is carrying on a printing business in the city and has each year paid for and obtained a license as required by the ordinance. Since 1940 plaintiff has had a State Sales Tax License, issued pursuant to the Sales and Use Tax Law (Rev. & Tax. Code, § 6001 et seq.). In 1946 the City enacted an ordinance levying a city sales tax and requiring that every person selling tangible personal property at retail within the city obtain a city permit upon the payment of a fee. In 1946 the City Treasurer issued to plaintiff, pursuant to the 1946 ordinance, Business Permit No. 439, which has never been revoked or cancelled. After plaintiff had under protest paid the $12 and received a license under the 1932 ordinance, he returned the license to the City and filed a claim for the return of the $12. On August 19, 1958, his claim was denied when the City Council adopted Resolution No. 37392, reciting that "said fee was not a tax, percentage or cost erroneously or illegally collected."

In its essence, plaintiff's action to recover the $12 fee is based upon two theories: (1) that, since he already had the 1946 permit, the City was without power to exact from him a fee for the 1957 permit; and (2) that the 1932 Ordinance levying a business tax was "for regulation and not for revenue" and the $12 paid by the plaintiff was "a permit fee and not a tax fee," and therefore the City was without power to require the plaintiff to purchase the "Seller's Permit" because, by enacting the Sales and Use Tax Law the State had entered and occupied the field of regulating business to the exclusion of municipal power to do so.

The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the complaint as amended, without leave to further amend, on the ground that it appeared from the complaint that the action involved the legality of a "tax, impost, assessment, toll or municipal fine," as those words are used in Section 89, subd. 1(a), of the Code of Civil Procedure defining the original jurisdiction of municipal courts, and therefore the Municipal Court did "not have jurisdiction over the proceedings and for the relief sought in the Complaint."

[1, 2] At the outset it is appropriate to discuss a preliminary contention made by the City on this appeal: In the City's brief it is asserted that, after the Municipal Court had sustained the City's demurrer without leave to amend, plaintiff "orally advised said court he wished judgment entered thereon so that he might commence this appeal." Nowhere does it appear in the record on appeal that plaintiff-appellant made any such request, but the statement in defendant's brief is not controverted. Based on the assumption that such an oral request was made by the plaintiff-appellant, the City invokes the doctrine of "invited error" and, because plaintiff requested the rendition of the judgment from which this appeal is taken, contends he should not now be heard to allege that the judgment was erroneous. Since no such "request" is disclosed by the appellate record upon which we must decide this case, this Court would be justified in dismissing the defendant's contention without further discussion, but in our opinion the contention should not be sustained for the additional reason that throughout the proceedings in this action plaintiff, a layman, has appeared in his own behalf without an attorney and was obviously desirous of obtaining a ruling from the Municipal Court from which he could appeal, and an application of the doctrine of invited error would not be fair or equitable to him. As was said in Pete v. Henderson, 1954, 124 Cal.App. 2d 487, at page 491, 269 P.2d 78, at page 80, 45 A.L.R.2d 58, "While the fact that a layman litigant elects to represent himself does not relieve him of the duty of observing legal rules, * * * that fact should be considered in determining whether, in a situation where the trial court has discretion to act to relieve the lay litigant from his default, that discretion should be exercised." A similar discretion should, we believe, be exercised by the appellate court in this case.

Plaintiff contends on appeal that the Municipal Court did have jurisdiction of the action because the controversy does not involve the validity of a "tax," but rather the validity of a "permit fee." In other words, plaintiff construes the words "tax," "impost," "toll," and "municipal fine" as they appear in C.C.P. § 89, subd. 1(a) to exclude the fee paid by him under protest because—he says—said fee was a "permit fee" exacted by a regulatory measure rather than by a true tax-raising ordinance.

The appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is described in Section 4 of Article VI of the Constitution as including "all cases at law which involve * * * the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine * * *." The words just quoted are exactly the same language as is used in C.C.P. § 89, subd. 1(a) to exclude such cases from the original jurisdiction of municipal courts. That language has received the attention of the appellate courts of this State in a number of cases.

In City of Madera v. Black, 1919, 181 Cal. 306, 184 P. 397, the plaintiff city was seeking to recover $23 as monthly sewage rates due from a property owner under a municipal ordinance requiring the payment of rates for connecting a city sewer system with private dwellings; the defendant resisted the action on the ground that the ordinance was invalid and that the rates or charges were extravagant and exorbitant and were imposed for the purpose of raising revenue to defray general municipal expenses rather than to pay for the actual cost and maintenance of the sewer system. The complaint in that case was filed in a Recorder's Court, a court of limited jurisdiction just as is the Municipal Court in the case at bar. In considering the jurisditional question whether the case involved the validity of a "tax, impost, assessment, toll or municipal fine," the Supreme Court said (181 Cal. at page 310, 184 P. at page 400):

> "A 'tax,' in the general sense of the word, includes every charge upon persons or property, imposed by or under the authority of the Legislature, for public purposes. Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. [318] 350; People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. [432] 454. The word 'impost,' in its broader sense, means 'any tax or tribute imposed by authority, and applies as well to a tax on persons as to a tax on [property].' * * * The money for which the plaintiff sued was a charge upon persons; it was imposed by the legislative authority of the city of Madera for public purposes, and under these definitions it was a tax; also, it was a tribute or contribution required by legislative authority and to be used for public purposes, and so comes within the definition of the word 'impost.' * * *
> "The general purpose of that provision obviously is to give to the sovereign power of the state, whether exercised generally or locally, the protection of having the legality of any exaction of money for public uses or needs cognizable in the first instance in the superior courts alone. In view of this purpose, it is apparent that the words used should be applied in their broadest sense with respect to moneys raised for public purposes or needs. The conclusion necessarily follows that the particular charge here involved comes within the constitutional provision and that any case in which the legality of such a charge is involved is within the exclusive original jurisdiction of the superior court. Upon the filing of the answer it fully appeared that the legality of the charge was involved in the action. The recorder should thereupon have certified the papers and transferred the cause to the superior court."

The Madera case was cited and quoted with approval in Unemployment Reserves Commission v. St. Francis Homes Association, 1943, 58 Cal.App.2d 271, 281, 137 P.2d 64, 69. In the latter case, in which the Supreme Court denied a hearing, the District Court of Appeal said:

"The 'legality' of a 'tax' is involved when the taxpayer contends that the tax is illegally assessed or levied against him. It is the essence of the contention of the taxpayer in such a situation that the tax is illegal. To say that such a case does not involve the 'legality' of a 'tax,' is to fail to give effect to the language used in the statute.

"Practical considerations lead to the same conclusion. The provision was inserted in the Municipal Court Act for the same reason that the Supreme Court is given, by art. VI, sec. 4, of the Constitution, appellate jurisdiction of such cases. The intent was that municipal courts should not decide such cases because there would then be no appeal to the higher appellate courts. Most tax cases are test cases. Few involve the validity of the statute. Most tax cases involve the interpretation of the taxing statute and the legality of a levy against a particular taxpayer. It is in the public interest that the Supreme Court should decide such cases in order that such questions can be finally determined for the entire state. If it should be held that municipal courts have jurisdiction of such cases with appeal to the appellate department of the superior court there would be no way of securing a decision that would be binding authority in the state. On close questions there would always be the possibility of conflicting decisions with consequent confusion in the enforcement of tax statutes. It was undoubtedly for these reasons that the Legislature saw fit to deny jurisdiction of such cases to municipal courts."

Comm., 1922, 187 Cal. 774, 783, 204 P. 226, 20 A.L.R. 994; 13 Cal. Jur.(2d) Courts § 69; and Witkin's California Procedure, Vol. I, pp. 303–305.

[3] In our opinion the narrow construction of the words "tax, impost, assessment, toll or municipal fine" contended for by plaintiff is not correct. "Tax," as used in C.C.P. § 89, subd. 1(a), must be held to include the charge or fee which the plaintiff alleges was unlawfully exacted from him by the City, and the complaint must be held to disclose on its face that this case involves the legality of a tax and was therefore outside the original jurisdiction of the Municipal Court.

Plaintiff places great reliance on the cases of Davis v. City of San Diego, 1939, 33 Cal.App.2d 190, 91 P.2d 640; County of Plumas v. Wheeler, 1906, 149 Cal. 758, 87 P. 909; and City and County of San Francisco v. Boss, 1948, 83 Cal.App.2d 445, 189 P.2d 32. In each of those cases, however, the question discussed was whether a complaint seeking either the payment or the recovery of a fee or charge, stated a cause of action, not whether the trial court had jurisdiction over the action. Since we conclude that the defendant's demurrer in this case was properly sustained on the ground that the Municipal Court did not have jurisdiction of the action, we do not reach the question whether the complaint herein stated a cause of action; as we said at the outset, neither the complaint nor the amendment thereto is a model of pleading.

[4] The question remains, whether the Municipal Court here properly rendered judgment "that plaintiff, Paul W. Cowles, take nothing from the defendant" and that the defendant recover costs. At the oral argument defendant's counsel conceded that the Municipal Court should have transferred this action to the Superior Court pursuant to C.C.P. § 396 when it appeared that the Court lacked "jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof, as determined by the complaint." We concur in that view. That code section provides that in such a situation the action "shall, on the application of either party, or on the court's own motion, be transferred to a court having jurisdiction * * *." (Emphasis added.)

[5] However, it would not be proper for this Appellate Department to order a transfer to the Superior Court for the exercise of the latter court's original jurisdiction. Rather, we believe, the judgment should be reversed and the action remanded to the Municipal Court, with direction to transfer this action to the Superior Court of Alameda County under the provisions of C.C.P. § 396, and it is so ordered.

William H. THOMPSON, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Vincent Chew QUAN, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. A. 9616.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

Jan. 12, 1959.

Action was brought for damages in amount of $371.31 resulting from automobile collision. The Municipal Court of Los Angeles Judicial District, Arthur S. Guerin, J., entered judgment adverse to the plaintiff because plaintiff did not counterclaim for such damages in small claims court action, and the plaintiff appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, David, J., held that statute providing that at, or before trial of small claims court action, one having cross-demand exceeding $100 may commence action against small claims plaintiff in court of competent jurisdiction, file affidavit to that effect, and secure transfer of small claims action to such court, for consolidation with that which he had commenced, does not operate to bar cross-claims not asserted in manner therein permitted, particularly since statute makes mandatory only such counterclaims as are within jurisdictional $150 limit in small claims court, thus limiting, as applied to small claims court, statute providing that if defendant omits to set out counterclaim on cause arising out of transaction set forth in complaint as foundation of plaintiff's claim, neither he nor his assignee can afterwards maintain action against plaintiff therefor.

Judgment reversed.

1. Statutes ⇐227

Ordinarily, word "may" in a statute is permissive and not compulsive.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "May".

2. Action ⇐55

Word "may" as used in statute providing that at or before trial of small claims court action, one having cross demand exceeding $100 "may" commence action against small claims plaintiff in court of competent jurisdiction, file affidavit to that effect, and secure transfer of small claims action to such court, for consolidation with that which he had commenced, is permissive and is not to be construed as "must." 3. Judgment ⇐585(4)

Statute providing that at or before trial of small claims court action, one having cross demand exceeding $100 may commence action against small claims plaintiff in court of competent jurisdiction, file affidavit to that effect, and secure transfer of small claims action to such court, for consolidation with that which he had commenced, does not operate to bar cross-claims not asserted in manner therein permitted, particularly since statute makes mandatory only such counterclaims as are within jurisdictional $150 limit in small claims court, thus limiting, as applied to small claims court, statute providing that if defendant omits to set out counterclaim on cause arising out of transaction set forth in complaint as foundation of plaintiff's claim, neither he nor his assignee can afterwards maintain action against plaintiff therefor. DAVID, Judge.

Quan unsuccessfully sued plaintiff Thompson for damages arising from an automobile collision in the small claims court. The plaintiff Thompson later sued Quan in the municipal court for his damages from the collision, amounting to $191.-31 for property damage and an additional $180 for loss of use of his automobile. Plaintiff was denied recovery upon the sole ground that he had not counterclaimed for such items in the small claims court action, and appeals.

If by Code Civ.Proc. § 117h, the operation of C.C.P. § 439 bars counterclaims not asserted in the small claims courts, it is limited to counterclaims "within their jurisdiction." Plaintiff's claim exceeds the $150 jurisdiction of that court. Thus it was not mandatory under C.C.P. § 439 that he counterclaim. While plaintiff's claim arises out of the same transaction, it constitutes a separate cause of action, upon which he may bring a separate action. Todhunter v. Smith, 1934, 219 Cal. 690, 694, 28 P.2d 916, 918. In that case, involving the jurisdictional relationships between the municipal and the superior court, it was stated, the one having the cross-demand "may permit the action in the inferior court to go to judgment. If he adopts this course, the final judgment of the inferior court, although not a complete bar to subsequent prosecution in the superior court of his cause of action arising from the same accident is nevertheless conclusive and binding upon him in so far as the subsequent action involves issues adjudged and determined in the prior action."

This rule of res judicata, while applied in reference to proceedings in all other courts and some administrative bodies, was later expressly negatived in reference to small claims court proceedings. In Sanderson v. Niemann, 1941, 17 Cal.2d 563, 573, 110 P.2d 1025, applying C.C.P. § 117j, it was recognized that as to a plaintiff, a small claims court judgment is final and res judicata. But it was held that the small claims court judgment was neither an estoppel nor res judicata on the issues of negligence or contributory negligence upon trial of a cross-demand prosecuted in another court.

In Todhunter v. Smith, supra, 219 Cal. 690, 28 P.2d 916, it was indicated that one having a cross-demand to a claim prosecuted in the small claims court in an amount exceeding its jurisdiction, could enjoin the proceeding, or separately litigate the claim. This perhaps contemplated the filing of the action on the claim in a court which could issue a restraining order, pendente lite, rather than institution of a formal injunction proceeding. Following this case, C. C.P. § 117r was added to the code in 1933, providing that at, or before trial of the small claims court action the one having a cross-demand exceeding $100 "may commence an action against said [small claims] plaintiff in a court of competent jurisdiction", file an affidavit to that effect, and secure transfer of the small claims action to such court, for consolidation with that which he had commenced.

[1, 2] Ordinarily, the word "may" is permissive and not compulsive. In re Williamson, 1954, 43 Cal.2d 651, 655–656, 276 P.2d 593; Realty Construction & Mortgage Co. v. Superior Court, 1913, 165 Cal. 543, 546, 132 P. 1048; Ostrander v. City of Richmond, 1909, 155 Cal. 468, 470, 101 P. 452; Marshall v. Foote, 1927, 81 Cal.App. 98, 102–103, 252 P. 1075; Chaney v. Los Angeles County Peace Officers' Retirement Board, 1943, 59 Cal.App.2d 413, 415, 138 P.2d 735. In view of the judicial and legislative history, we find nothing in the code provisions nor the situation to impel the construction of "may" as "must." Had any other construction been thought controlling, it most assuredly would have been considered in Sanderson v. Niemann, supra, 17 Cal.2d 563, 110 P.2d 1025.

There is a policy, on the one hand, that all causes of action arising from one transaction be tried in a single action in a single court. On the other hand, there is a definite public policy to maintain and operate an informal court for small claims, (Sanderson v. Niemann, supra, 17 Cal.2d 563, 110 P.2d 1025), and it is for the legislature to balance such policies where they conflict, as they do here.

[3] We conclude that C.C.P. § 117r does not operate to bar cross-claims not asserted in the manner therein permitted, particularly as C.C.P. § 117h makes mandatory only such counterclaims as are within the jurisdictional $150 limit in the small claims court, thus limiting C.C.P. § 439 as applied to such inferior court.

The judgment is reversed.
